Raps were recorded by the theologian Philipp Melanchthon in 1520 at Oppenheim, Germany. Montalambert, chaplain to the Drummer of Tedworth (1915), quoted a similar experience with a medium about 1521. According to a manuscript from 1610 at the University of Glasgow, Scotland, Mr. Welsh, a clergyman in Ayr, conversed with spirits by taps and observed movements of objects without contact.

The first detailed account of the phenomenon is in Joseph Glanvill’s Sadaecius Triumphatus (1681). It described the disturbances of the so-called Drummer of Tedworth in the home of Magistrate Mompesson in 1661. It was discovered that an invisible entity would answer in drumming anything that was beaten or called for. But no further progress was made.
cure was effected in a few months by the administration of bromide of potassium."

In speaking of the curious "thrilling" of the table in the presence of the great medium D. D. Home, Mrs. Augustus de Morgan wrote in From Matter to Spirit (1865):

"The last time I witnessed this phenomenon, an acute surgeon present said that this thrilling, the genuineness of which was unmistakable, was exactly like what takes place in that affection of the muscles called salsallicus tendinus. When it ceased the table rose more than two feet from the floor."

In the closing years of the medium Henry Slade, loud raps were heard on a streetcar that was traveling by his residence, and furniture was knocked over and curtains tugged as well.

The Varieties of Rapping Experience

Simple as the phenomenon appears to be, various important accounts reflect an astounding variety of manifestation. John Worth Edmonds heard raps on his own person. The Rev. Samuel Watson, a nineteenth-century British Methodist preacher, had similar experiences. "The noise made on my shirt bosom," he wrote, "resembled more the telegraph machine than anything else." Abby Warner, of Massillon, Ohio, was prosecuted in 1851 for disturbing the Christmas service in St. Timothy's Church by raps which sounded in her presence. Considerable excitement was caused in New York in 1871 in the prominent Brooklyn, New York, congregation of Henry Ward Beecher. In front of the rostrum at the reporter's table, raps were heard for a succession of Sabbaths, and slow and deliberate motion of the table was witnessed. Eugene Crowell reported that it kept time with the preacher's words and assented to Beecher's demands for reform with great pushes and movements of the table.

Ward Beecher. In front of the rostrum at the reporter's table, raps were heard for a succession of Sabbaths, and slow and deliberate motion of the table was witnessed. Eugene Crowell reported that it kept time with the preacher's words and assented to Beecher's demands for reform with great pushes and movement of the table to the opposite side of the sanctuary as if to say: "That's the truth."

Leah Underhill, the eldest of the Fox Sisters, wrote in her book The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism (1885) that during the funeral of Calvin Brown, her second husband, raps were heard while the room was dark. Eugene Crowell delivered the funeral sermon and Edmonds the eulogy.

Robert Dale Owen recorded some very curious experiments in raps with Underhill in 1861. He heard raps on the seashore in a ledge of rock. "Placing my hand on the ledge, a few steps from Mrs. Underhill and asking for raps, when this came audibly I felt, simultaneously with each rap, a slight but unmistakably distinct vibration or concussion of the rock." Owen heard raps onboard an excursion boat and later in a sailing boat sounding from underneath. He also obtained them in the open air on the ground. "A dull sound, as of blows struck on the earth; then I asked Mrs. Underhill to touch one of the trees with the tips of her fingers and applying my ear to the tree I heard the raps from beneath the bark." In an account of a séance on February 22, 1860, in which psychic lights were seen, Henry Slade, in the air; sharp, metallic taps; a cracking like that heard when a frictional machine is at work; sounds like scraping; the twittering of a bird, &c.

"We have been present with Kate Fox," wrote J. J. Morse in The Two Worlds newspaper (vol. 19) "when the raps were heard on a sheet of paper, held between the thumb and forefinger of another person standing beside the medium, the paper visibly shook as from the violence of the raps produced upon its surface."

Lord Adare's father, in experiments with D. D. Home, heard raps upon the medium's hand when he placed it upon his head. Raps came on a sheet of paper which they held by the corners. Adare heard raps under her feet and distinctly felt the jar while the raps were taking place. He saw a table leg rap. The spirits by raps joined into their conversation and signified approval in a most emphatic way. Adare was told to understand that by remaining in the earth's atmosphere, spirits get so charged that it is a positive relief to make sounds. Sometimes they cannot help rapping, and cannot control them. They discharge their electricity by a whole volley of taps.

The sounds may be single or combined knockings. "It was the most singular noise," wrote William Stainton Moses on December 5, 1873, "that the combined knockings made. The room seemed to be full of intelligences manifesting their presence."

"The sounds had distinct individuality. They had characteristics as permanent as the voice, and the communicator could often be recognized by his rapping style."

Dr. J. Garth Wilkinson wrote of an inward thrill going through the table and chairs and found the sensation best conveyed by the exclamation of his daughter: "Oh, papa, there is a heart in my chair."

"The departure of the spirits," wrote J. H. Powell in Spiritualism; Its Facts and Phases (1864), "was preceded by an indistinguishable number of raps, loud at first, then gradually faint and fainter until, like echoes on a hill, they faded away in the echoing distance."

In volume, the sounds may grow from a tiny tick to a loud crash. But the crashing blows leave no mark, although normally such force would be expected to smash the table. The tonality of the raps differs according to the object upon which they reound. They may resemble the tapping of a fretsaw, or the scratching of a fingernail on wood or cloth, and their rhythm is as varied as their tonality.

They often sound like detonations. There are instances in which the impression is borne out by effect. Archdeacon Thomas Colley, in a slate-writing experiment with the medium Francis W. Monck, placed his foot on the slate and felt a sensation of throbbing in the enclosed space—a heaving as when the confined steam lifts the lid of a kettle—and in a moment, an explosion took place that scattered the slate in fragments over the carpet, like spray from a fountain. Such explosions and shatterings of the slate were frequently reported in séances with the medium Henry Slade.

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, the co-founder of the Theosophical Society, was a powerful rapping medium in her teens. While later accused of reproducing Spiritualist tricks, she was said to have caused raps inside the spectacles of a skeptical professor with such force that they were sent flying from his nose. In reply to a somewhat frivolous woman who asked what was the best conductor for raps, the table spelt out “gold,” and the next moment the lady in question rushed out of the room with her hand clapped on her mouth, as she had felt the raps on the gold in her hand and arm.

Joseph Maxwell obtained raps in restaurants and railway refreshment rooms which were loud enough to attract public attention. In his book Metapsychical Phenomena (1905), he described experiences of “Doctor X.” with the medium Meurice:

“This was not expected but it was worth trying, and I thereupon gave up one of the umbrellas—of the medium’s personal-ly. The sounds soon ceased and never returned. As each rap passed, the medium remarked that the sound was of depletion, after a good séance, a feeling perceptible to observers. One of the mediums reported a cramp-like feeling in various parts of the body. The distance to which the sound of raps carry may be considered. In Southend, England, metallic raps produced on the rail in the presence of Moses and Dr. Stanhope T. Speer were audible to both of them when they were seventy yards apart. The raps were apparently made in the space between them.

An interesting non-psychic method of procuring raps was described in Psychical Research (February 1930) by John E. Sprunger, a attorney from Palo Alto, California:

“In one face of a small cardboard box I cut an aperture the size and shape of my ear. When fitted to the ear the box sticks on securely and becomes a sort of sounding board. Upon reti-ring the box to the ear which is not used the box is placed at the base of the ear, and I will as strongly as possible that as I fall asleep I shall be awakened by a given series of raps upon the cardboard. It frequently—but not always—happens that when I reach the stage of drowsiness where unconsciousness is about to supervene, loud and clear raps upon the box in the predetermined series bring me back to wakefulness with a start. The raps may be subjective, but it is difficult for one who experiences them to escape from the conviction that they are objective psychic raps.”

The medium Eusapia Palladino frequently rapped a certain number of times on the table with her fingers.
hands about eighteen inches above the table the faint echoes of the raps were heard in the wood about two seconds later. She produced the same phenomenon with scratching sounds.

In the séances with Mina A. Crandon ("Margery"), the first raps were faint but definite, sounding like something soft inside a wooden box. Dr. Crandon listened to them through a stethoscope applied to the table. They were so magnified as to be unlike anything in his experience. Later they developed to such a degree that the control "Walter" could render tunes or rhythmic phrases with a marked syncopation upon the cabinet, the table, the arm of "Margery," the hands of the sitters, and even on the limited surface of a ring. Once he rapped out a popular tune unknown in his day and answered in explanation that they (the spirits) go everywhere, to our theaters and other places.

There are some rare cases on record in which raps were produced in the distance. The Seeress of Prevost (Frederica Hausfe) could cause raps in the houses of others. There were similar testimonies in the mediumship of D. D. Home. Cromwell Fleetwood Varley stated before the London Dialectical Society that he heard raps in his home after his arrival from a séance with D. D. Home. The next morning he received a letter from Home which disclosed that the medium knew of the occurrence.

Countess Panaigai wrote in a letter to Human Nature (vol. 11) that in a sitting with Home the name of her deceased child was rapped out and that Home predicted the hearing of raps in her own house. The prediction not only came true, but when a friend called her attention to it she found the little boot of her child (kept in a locked box in a bureau) from which the raps appeared to proceed, imprinted by a perfect star with a letter at each of the six points forming the name "Stella," as the deceased was called. Not even the family of the Countess knew anything of the box and Home, to whom she was an utter stranger, was never in her house.

Interconnection of Psychic Phenomena

According to the hypothesis of spirit communication, raps represent the most primitive form of such communication. They may be manifest independently or through the faculties of a psychic individual. They may be obtained collectively through table-tipping or table-turning, in which a group sits round a table with their hands resting on it, and the raps indicate a letter of the alphabet, or a simple "yes" or "no" by one rap or two. This is a slow and tedious procedure.

Much more rapid communication is established through such simple devices as the ouija board or the planchette. Much swifter and more direct is automatic writing, in which the communicating entity operates the hand of the psychic.

In the presence of specially gifted mediums, direct writing by spirit hands has been reported. More direct still are the messages received vocally through a medium and, in rare instances, direct voice independent of the vocal apparatus of the medium.

It is not always clear if claimed spirit messages are the product of the subconscious mentation of the medium or the sitters, since fictitious entities can be created in séances (see "Philip"). Evaluation depends upon the detail and overall paranormal quality of the evidence in individual cases.

Sources:

- Abbott, David P. Behind the Scenes With the Mediums. LaSalle, Ill.: Open Court, 1907.
- Rochester Knockings! Discovery and Explanation of the Source of the Phenomena Generally Known as the Rochester Knockings. Buffalo, N.Y., 1851.
- "A Searcher After Truth." The Rappers; or, the Mysteries, Fallacies, and Absurdities of Spirit Rapping, Table-Tipping and Entrancement. Long, N.Y. 1854.

Rasmussen, Anna (Melloni) (1898–?)

Danish medium for physical and intellectual phenomena. Her mediumship was first manifested at the age of twelve, when a table moved both with and without contact. Poltergeist phenomena developed, then died out to give place to a range of phenomena: telekinesis, raps, slate-writing, automatic writing, luminous phenomena and trance speech under the control of an entity "Dr. Lasaruz.

In October and November 1921, the mediumship was examined at Fritz Grünwald's laboratory at Berlin. The results were placed before the second International Congress for Psychical Research at Warsaw, Poland, in 1923. The electrical condition of the séance room was a particularly noticeable phenomenon.

In September 1922, Christian Winther, of the Polytechnic Academy of Copenhagen, commenced a series of scientific experiments in which a Professor Bondorff, of the Danish Agricultural High School, the Laboratory Director R. Dons, and Dr. A. Marner, a practicing physician also participated. According to Winther's detailed account in Psychic Research (1928) among 116 séances which he had with the medium not a single one was completely negative.

There appeared a steady outpouring of psychical energy and if a séance was not organized the medium became restless and felt ill. In many cases she gave two, three, or even four sittings in a single day. All the sittings took place in actual daylight or in very strong artificial light. The medium sat quietly in the circle at the table, took her share of the conversation, took refreshments, read a newspaper and had apparently no connection with what was going on. France, however, was always a great fatigue, and it was only employed when this was the special subject of study.

Some of the automatic scripts came in English. A unique feature of her mediumship was that raps emanated from her left shoulder and answered questions. The British psychical researcher Harry Price placed his ear against the medium's shoulder and distinctly heard decided thumps from her body (Psychic Research, 1928, p. 377).

Rasputin, Gregory Efimovitch (1869–1916)

Charismatic Russian monk, who became a powerful figure in the court of Czar Nicholas II, before the Romanov dynasty was swept aside by the Russian Revolution of 1917. The son of a peasant, Rasputin joined a monastery as a novice at the age of sixteen. As the Orthodox Church established hegemony in Russia, various dissenting sect groups emerged, among them the Khlysty. The Khlysty were supposedly founded in the seventeenth century by Daniel Filippov. They deviated from Orthodoxy in numerous ways. Several different splinter groups developed through the nineteenth century and by the beginning of the twentieth century the Khlysty numbered approximately 65,000 people.

Rasputin came into early contact with the Khlysty, though it is unclear just how dedicated a member he had been. Rasputin married around 1890, but his first son died when only six months old. The tragedy sent Rasputin to a strange hermit named Makary, and subsequently Rasputin became absorbed in scriptures, prayer, and meditation. One day he saw an image of the Virgin in the sky, and Makary told him, “God has chosen you for a great achievement. In Order to strengthen your spiritual power, you should go and pray to the Virgin in the convent of Alon.”

The convent was at Mount Athos, in Greece, two thousand miles away, but in 1891, Rasputin made the pilgrimage on foot. Later he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, traveling across Turkey. For the next few years he became a wandering staretz (lay priest). He treated the cure with curamina with complete familiarity, and they welcomed Rasputin because of the healing powers he supposedly possessed; he seemed to be able to treat the couple’s only son, Alexis, who was a hemophiliac. In 1911, tiring of court life, he undertook another pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and during his absence his enemies intrigued against him. In the fall of 1915, when the czar left to take command of the Russian army, Rasputin took on more power as the czar’s chief aide. Rasputin forced many of the cabinet ministers to resign, and he replaced them with his cronies. His enemies, headed by Prince Yusupov, felt he had taken on too much political power and planned his murder.

The day before Rasputin was killed, Czar Nicholas requested his blessing and with curious presence, Rasputin said, “This time it is for you to bless me.” Yusupov invited Rasputin to his palace and persuaded him to eat poisoned food and drink poisoned wine. The poison was ineffectual. Thereupon the treacherous Yusupov sang gypsy songs and played the guitar before leaving the room and returning with a loaded revolver, shooting his victim in the back. Other conspirators rushed in clumsily, accidentally switching off the room light. When the light was switched on again, Rasputin appeared dead, but was still alive. Another conspirator shot Rasputin again; the body was dragged from the house and battered with a steel press. But Rasputin was still alive when he was pushed through a hole in the ice on the River Neva. And although his wrists had been bound, he had still managed to free his right hand and make the sign of the cross before drowning. He died December 31, 1916.

Sources:

Ratte, Rena J. (1928–1987)
Instructor in philosophy who has experimented in the field of parapsychology. She was born on September 7, 1928, at Waterville, Maine. She studied at the University of Maine (B.A., 1951) and Duke University, (M.A., 1958; Ph.D., 1959). After receiving her doctorate, Ratte was a research fellow at the Parapsychology Laboratory, (1959–60), and joined the faculty in philosophy at Lewis and Clark College, Portland, Oregon, from 1960 onward.
She joined the Parapsychology Association. In her parapsychological work she focused on psychokinesis and experimented in the use of game techniques in PK to ascertain whether the PK effect would be enhanced by a game atmosphere.

Sources:

Raudive, Konstantin (1909–1974)
Latvian psychologist and parapsychologist who spent many years investigating electronic voice phenomenon, involving electronic tape recordings of voices allegedly belonging to dead individuals, which has been popularly known as Raudive voices. His surname is pronounced “Row-dee-vee.” Born in Uppsala, Sweden, on April 14, 1909, he studied psychology in Switzerland, Germany, and England. For some time he was a teacher at the University of Riga and also edited a Latvian newspaper. In Switzerland he had studied psychology under Carl Jung and was also a pupil of the Spanish philosopher Ortega y Gasset. He left Latvia when the Soviet Army invaded the Baltic and absorbed Latvia in 1945. With his wife, Dr. Zenta Maurina, he lived for a time in Sweden, later moving to Bad Kromingen, Germany, near the border with Switzerland. It was during his period in Sweden in 1965 that Raudive met Friedrich Jürgenson who had pioneered the study of paranormal voice recordings. In 1959, Jürgenson tape-recorded a Swedish finch, and on playback he heard what appeared to be a human voice in addition to the bird. He thought there must be some fault in the apparatus, but subsequent recordings contained a message which seemed to be recognizable from his dead mother. Jürgenson described his experiments in his book Röster från Rymden (Voices From Space), published in Sweden in 1964. Prior to Jürgenson, Raymond Bayless had reported such phenomena. Raudive published an account of his research in 1968.
Starting in 1965, Raudive and his wife devoted themselves to investigating this phenomenon of paranormal voices manifesting on tape recordings, later assisted by Swiss physicist Alex Schneider and various engineers. Other scientists and parapsychologists who investigated the electronic voice phenomenon included Professor Hans Bender of the University of Freiburg, Germany, and Dr. Friedebert Karger of the Max Planck Institute in Munich. After 1969, differences of opinion arose between Jürgenson and Raudive, and thereafter they conducted their research independently.
Essentially the electronic voice phenomenon consists of paranormal voice communications (apparently from dead individuals) manifesting on recordings made on a standard tape recorder (sometimes enhanced by a simple diode circuit). The voices are also apparent on the “white noise” of certain radio bands.

The communications are usually fragmentary and ambiguous, rather like those produced by a ouija board, and need considerable amplification. The voices are sometimes in a mixture of different languages, rather like scrambled radio bands, but in many cases they appear to be recognizable from persons known to the experimenters during their lifetimes. They comment on the experimenters or convey cryptic messages in a kind of terse, disjointed telegram style. So far no communications appear to indicate high intelligence and seem relatively trivial.

Various explanations of the voices have been suggested. They may be sounds relayed back to earth from other planets by some unknown natural phenomenon or a potpourri of ordinary radio communications. Some skeptics think the voices may be imaginary, since listening to amplified electronics static and hum may suggest voices that do not really exist. Another theory is that the voices come from the subconscious of the experimenters, impressed on the tapes like the thought-forms of psychic photography.

Against such theories and criticisms, a number of highly qualified researchers have conducted and analyzed thousands of careful experiments which lead them to suggest that some of these recordings are of paranormal voices, and voice prints of communications purporting to be from the same source show matching patterns.

In June 1970, David Ellis, a Cambridge graduate, had been elected to the Perrott-Warrick Studentship which grants aid to conduct psychic research. He studied a selection of Raudive tapes in 1970. In his 1978 book, his findings were largely skeptical, and he believed that on occasion Raudive may have mistaken fragments of foreign language broadcasts for paranormal voice communications. However, Ellis was inclined to believe some of the voices might be paranormal, but their faintness and the background noise prevented positive identification.

Raudive died September 2, 1974, and his widow Dr. Zenta Maurina-Raudive published a tribute to his work. After his death, controversy arose on the question of archive storage and the distribution of these recordings are of paranormal voices, and voice prints of communications purporting to be from the same source show matching patterns.

Raudive died September 2, 1974, and his widow Dr. Zenta Maurina-Raudive published a tribute to his work. After his death, controversy arose on the question of archive storage and the distribution of these recordings are of paranormal voices, and voice prints of communications purporting to be from the same source show matching patterns.

sources:

Raudive Voices

Popular term for the electronic voice phenomenon first reported by Raymond Bayless, but rediscovered by Friedrich Jürgenson in 1959. Voices, apparently from deceased individuals, are found to be electronically impressed on tape recordings made on standard apparatus (sometimes enhanced by a simple diode circuit). The voices are also apparent on the “white noise” of certain radio bands. The suggestion that they are communications from the dead is based on many thousands of experimental recordings made by Jürgenson and later Konstantin Raudive, and later replicated by various parapsychologists, including Hans Bender.

Konstantin Raudive (1909–1974), a Latvian psychologist, conducted joint experiments with Jürgenson from 1964 and 1969 after reading a reference to the paranormal voice phenomenon in Jürgenson’s book. Subsequently the two men had some differences of opinion and conducted their further researches independently.

Raudive’s researches were very extensive and included collection and study of over 100,000 recordings. After the publicity given to his book Unhörbares Wird Höher, translated into English in an enlarged edition as Breakthrough: An Amazing Experiment in Electronic Communication (1971), the phenomenon became generally known and discussed as “Raudive voices.” The book was translated by Peter Bander, a British psychologist who subsequently appeared on a number of television and radio programs to discuss the subject. His own book reviewed replication experiments in Britain and the Irish Republic, the attitudes of religious authorities, the experiments carried out by the electronic experts, and the alternative theories to explain the phenomenon.

Bender, working at Freiburg University in Germany, suggested that electronic impulses might be transmitted by the subconscious mind and impressed on tapes, rather like psychic photographs. However, there is some evidence tending to suggest that the communications are mainly from dead individuals.

A later development of Raudive’s researches into paranormal voices was his investigation of a budgerigar (a bird) named Putzi, owned by Editha von Damaros in Germany. In March 1972, von Damaros wrote to Raudive stating that a few weeks after the death of her daughter Barbara at the age of fourteen, her pet budgerigar started giving extraordinary messages suggestive of spirit communications; one of these advised contacting “the Latvian doctor.” Raudive made a careful investigation of the budgerigar and took a number of recordings. It concluded that possibly the bird was being used as an energy field for the direct transmission of paranormal voices.

This investigation has led to some confusion, since Jürgenson’s original researches into paranormal voices on tape recordings were stimulated by attempts to record bird song. “Bird voices,” however, remain a quite separate phenomenon from “Raudive Voices.”

sources:

Ray, P(ramode) C(handra) (1916— )

Psychologist who carried out research in the field of parapsychology. He was born on January 1, 1916, in East Bengal, India. He studied at the University of Calcutta (M.Sc. psychology, 1940) and did graduate work in clinical psychology at the Institute of Psychiatry, Maudsley Hospital, London, England. After graduation he joined the staff of the Anthropological Survey of India of the Government of India and rose from lab assis-
Rayleigh, Lord (1842–1919)

World-famous as experimental physicist, the discoverer of argon, and president of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London (1919). He was born John William Strutt on November 12, 1842. He inherited the title as the 3rd Baron Rayleigh from his father. He attended Trinity College, Cambridge (Senior Wrangler and Smith’s Prizeman 1865, Fellow 1866). He was the Cavendish professor of experimental physics at Cambridge (1879–84) and a professor of natural philosophy at the Royal Institution (1887–1905). He was secretary of the Royal Society (1884–1896) and was awarded the Nobel Prize for physics in 1904 for his discovery of argon. He published many scientific papers and one important book Theory of Sound (2 vols., 1894–96).

One of several members of royalty interested in psychical research, Lord Rayleigh married Evelyn Balfour, the sister of Arthur James Balfour, one of the presidents of the SPR in the 1890s. Evelyn Balfour’s elder sibling was Eleanor Sidgwick, wife of SPR founder Henry Sidgwick. In 1876 in the discussion of William F. Barrett’s paper on Spiritualism before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, he declared that his own interest in the subject dated from 1874. He was first attracted to it by the investigations of Sir William Crookes. “Although,” he stated, “my opportunities have not been so good as those enjoyed by Professor Barrett, I have seen enough to convince me that those are wrong who wish to prevent investigation by casting ridicule on those who may feel inclined to engage in it.”

Physical phenomena impressed him more than mental phenomena. He had many sittings with Kate Fox-Jencken, one of the Fox sisters, and with Eusapia Palladino. He was non-plussed by the result. Yet he never felt sufficiently convinced to declare himself in public. He paid little attention to automatic writing and trance phenomena. He did not think the evidence for telepathy conclusive, but he declared that, given irrefragable evidence for telepathy between living persons, he would have no difficulty in extending it to telepathy from the dead. Speaking of Kate Fox-Jencken and the famous medium D. D. Home in his presidential address before the Society for Psychical Research, London, in 1919 (see pp. 275–290) he said: “I repudiate altogether the idea of hallucination as an explanation. The incidents were almost always unexpected, and our impressions of them agreed” (Rayleigh, pp. 275–90). He died June 30, 1919.

Sources:

Rays from the Rose Cross (Magazine)

Monthly publication of the Rosicrucian Fellowship founded by Max Heindel (1865–1919). It may be ordered from the fellowship’s headquarters at 2222 Mission Ave., Oceanside, CA 92054-2399. The magazine is also available on the society’s homepage at http://www.rosicrucian.com/rays.htm.

Sources:

Reality Change (Magazine)

Quarterly magazine “for people who want to change their lives,” discussed the Seth Material channeled through medium Jane Roberts (1929–1984). The magazine contained news of Seth conferences and local groups, as well as contributions reporting personal experiences in relation to the Seth teachings. Last known address: Austin Seth Center, P.O. Box 7786, Austin, TX 78713-7786.

“Rebazar Tarzs”

Claimed to be the Tibetan lama guide of Paul Twitchell, founder of the religious organization ECKANKAR promoting “the ancient science of soul travel,” a kind of out-of-the-body travel or astral projection to other planes. Researcher David Christopher Lane raised serious questions about the existence of “Rebazar Tarzs.”

Sources:

Rebus (Newspaper)

The first Spiritualist periodical in Russia, founded in 1881, that, owing to the antagonism of the authorities to Spiritualism, was professedly devoted to rebuses and charades. It was commenced by Captain (later Admiral) Victor Ivanovitch Pribytkoff, and it was largely financed by Alexander Aksakov.

Reclaiming

The Reclaiming tradition of contemporary American witchcraft developed from a working collective in San Francisco in the summer of 1980 when Diane Baker and Starhawk decided to co-teach a basic class in Witchcraft. The initial class became so popular that a series of three classes were created which became known as the original Core Classes—The Elements of Magic, the Pentacle of Iron, and Rites of Passage. Classes were team-taught within a sacred space. This group of teachers and their students shared what they learned and eventually coalesced into a Reclaiming Collective. Soon classes were offered in groups consisting of all women, all men, or mixed genders; many of these classes evolved into future covens.

During the 1980s, many Collective members and people from the larger Reclaiming community were active in anti-nuclear civil disobedience. The Collective’s activities, from designing classes to dealing with domestic concerns to public political protests, stemmed from the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers). These concepts and method of decision-making fostered close bonds among participants.

Concurrently, Reclaiming Collective began four public sabbat rituals at the Cross-Quarters and four issues of a small newsletter at the Solstices and Equinoxes. The Collective wrote a statement which appeared in each issue of the Reclaiming Newsletter:

“Reclaiming is a community of San Francisco Bay Area women and men working to unify spirit and politics. Our vision is rooted in the religion and magic of the Goddess—the Immanent Life Force. We see our work as teaching and making magic—the art of empowering ourselves and each other. In our classes, workshops, and public rituals, we train our voices, bodies, energy, intuition, and minds. We use the skills we learn to deepen our strength, both as individuals and as community, to voice our concerns about the world in which we live, and bring to birth a vision of a new culture.”

So unlike most other Craft traditions, Reclaiming espouses a connection between spirituality and political action.
The Core Classes of the Reclaiming Tradition

The development of the core classes derived from Starhawk’s and Diane Baker’s basic classes in Witchcraft. The first class, known as the Elements of Magic, teaches basic ritual, concepts and correspondences, energy sensing and projecting, shifting consciousness, spellwork, and theology. The second, or Iron Pentacle class, based upon a Faery Witchcraft concept, focuses on trance work and the discovery of the healing powers of the human body through meditations on the five-pointed star. The points represent love, self, passion, pride, and power. Its opposite is the Pentacle of Pearl whose points represent love, law, wisdom, knowledge, and power. Both pentacles have correspondences with the head, hands and feet, going round and transversing the human body touching the points of a five-pointed star.

The third, or Rites of Passage, is the most adaptable class; it is usually redesigned, or created anew, by different teachers. Besides the three classes, Reclaiming developed a concept in the 1990s known as the Three Souls—a concept sharing Faery Tradition Witchcraft, Hawaiian, Jewish, and Celtic cultures. Starhawk’s own adaptation of this concept is called the Three Selves: The Spiral Dance, which represents the Younger Self; the Talking Self, or unconscious mind, which gives verbal and conscious expression; and Deep Self or God Self, which deals with the Divine within oneself.

Rituals Roles of Reclaiming

The leading of public rituals teach new ways of doing magic in large groups with participants of all degrees of magical expertise and inspire the creation of methods and roles to meet these changing circumstances. Among those roles are “Crows,” who oversee everything from an individual ritual to teaching plans to overall Collective activities. Snakes view things from the ground, the “little, down-to-Earth things.” “Dragons” guard the perimeters of circles in public outdoor spaces such as beaches so that participants can work undistracted by curious passersby; they do not directly participate in the work of a ritual because they are providing a buffer between the public and the inner circle. In this role, Dragons are similar to what are called in other traditions Guardians, the Summoner or the Man in Black. “Graces” act as assistant priest or priestesses; they welcome people, guide them, keep aisles clear, get people standing, sitting, chanting, dancing, assembled for a spiral dance, all in different and appropriate parts of the ritual. Graces could be compared, in some sense, to Maidens in other Craft traditions.

In recent years Reclaiming employed “Anchors” in large public rituals. Anchors are individuals who help focus and contain the energy of the circle in settings where it might be prone to fragmentation and dissolution. They act to contain the energy until it’s time to release and direct it. It’s important that the anchor not try to control the energy of the ritual or to ground it through their body.

Currently, some Reclaiming Witches are trained in aspecting—a technique which closely corresponds to what in traditional British Craft traditions more commonly known as Drawing Down the Moon. Not all Reclaiming Witches practice all these techniques. Many full-fledged and respected Reclaiming Witches were trained and proceeded in their personal and coven practices before some of these techniques were commonly used.

Distinguishing Features of Reclaiming

In The Pagan Book of Living and Dying, Starhawk describes Reclaiming’s style of ritual as EIEIO—Ecstatic, Improvisational, Ensemble, Inspired, and Organic. Practices are constantly growing, being “extended, refined, renewed and changed as the spirit moves us and need arises, rather than . . . learned and repeated in a formulaic manner.” Distinguishing features of Reclaiming Tradition Witchcraft are:

- (1) non-hierarchical covens and group priest- or priestess-hoods;
- (2) no specific pantheon;
- (3) no requirement of initiation, and when initiations are undertaken, customized ones;
- (4) strong emphasis on political involvement and social and ecological responsibility/consciousness;
- (5) no set liturgy (except in certain large, rehearsed or semi-rehearsed public sabbat rituals) but rather training in principles of magic and the structure of ritual, and how to “speak as the spirit moves you” within that structure;
- (6) cultivation of ecstatic states (customarily without the use of entheogens or psychotropics) and divine colloquy—more shamanic than ceremonial;
- (7) cultivation of self-empowerment, self-discovery, and creativity;
- (8) extensive use of chanting and breathwork in magical rites;
- (9) intense “energy-raising,” often using our trademark spiral dance (or even double helix/DNA molecule dance);
- (10) magical use of the Pentacle of Iron construct and its inverse, the Pentacle of Pearl;
- (11) concept of Three Souls;
- (13) encouragement of the creation of new ritual forms by anyone.

Reclaiming rituals are typically loose in structure, high in energy, and ecstatic in nature.

Deities

Reclaiming has no specific pantheon, rather, invokes Goddess into circles and often, but not always, God. Collective classes, covens, and community usually have had more women than men. Eventually, two particular deities seemed to have adopted the Bay Area Reclaiming community—Brigit and Lugh.

Initiation, or Not

Initiation—though not required to perform rituals—is performed by “committees” of teachers selected by the candidate who must ask for initiation; it is not offered, or even suggested. Just asking for an initiation does not guarantee that the request is granted; one or more teachers may refuse. It may take some years before all on the ‘committee’ agree that the candidate is ready. If the candidate works in a coven, they usually are simultaneously initiated into the Craft and that coven, and any initiates within the coven are invited to be part of the initiation whether they were the candidate’s teachers or not.

Reclaiming initiations are customized to the individual seeker. First, the initiators give challenges to the candidate. The candidate must accept the challenges from each initiators and fulfill them to everyone’s satisfaction before the actual ceremony takes place. Each initiator creates these challenges according to what that priest or priestess feels the candidate needs to improve upon. The initiators’ challenge is a task, which they have already done, or would and could do. They can also require the candidate to complete a challenge if they determine it would foster the candidate’s development. It must be a task the person is actually capable of completing. A challenge is never given if it poses a danger to the candidate’s health or welfare.

Reclaiming Collective Today

Over the years, Reclaiming Collective expanded from teaching Craft and providing public sabbat rituals to recording chants, publishing books, and maintaining an internet presence with website and listserver. The Reclaiming Newsletter developed into Reclaiming Quarterly, a magazine of articles, poetry, and photos.

After years of discussion, the Collective (which varied in size from about 10 to 20 or more at its largest) dissolved itself as a collective in 1999 and turned over its authority to the Wheel—a representative body comprised of spokespersons from all the many different witchcraft groups. About 52 people had, over the years, been members of Reclaiming Collective, for greater or lesser periods of time.

With the dissolution of Reclaiming Collective and its evolution into a more inclusive complex, the Collective wrote Principles of Unity.

Reclaiming Principles of Unity

The values of the Reclaiming tradition stem from the understanding that the Earth is alive and all life is sacred and interconnected. The Goddess is seen as immanent in the Earth’s cycles of birth, growth, death, decay, and regeneration. This practice comes from a deep, spiritual commitment to the Earth, to healing and to the linking of magic with political action.

Each of the members embodies the Divine. The ultimate spiritual authority is within oneself, and no other person is needed to explain its interpretation. A member’s questions are welcomed, as well as, intellectual, spiritual, and creative freedoms.

Reclaiming is an evolving tradition honoring both Goddess and God. Members work with female and male images of divinity, but remember their essence is a mystery which goes beyond form. The community rituals celebrate the cycles of the seasons and their lives, and raise energy for personal, collective and earth healing.

It is known that everyone can do the life-changing, world-renewing work of magic and change one’s consciousness at will. Reclaiming strives to teach and practice in ways that foster personal and collective empowerment, to model shared power and to open leadership roles to everyone. It makes decisions by consensus, and balance individual autonomy with social responsibility.

The tradition of Reclaiming honors the Wild, and calls for service to the Earth and the community. Its members value peace and practice non-violence, in keeping with the Rede, “Harm none, and do what you will.” They also work for all forms of justice: environmental, social, political, racial, gender, and economic. Their feminist views include a radical analysis of power, seeing all systems of oppression as interrelated, rooted in structures of domination and control.

The organization welcomed all genders, races, ages, and sexual orientations before its disbandment. It strived to make public rituals and events accessible and safe. Members tried to balance the need for compensated labor with a commitment to make their work available to people of all economic levels.

The Reclaiming Tradition believed all living beings are worthy of respect and that the sacred Elements of Air, Fire, Water, and Earth support everything. The group worked to create and sustain communities and cultures that embody their values, that can help to heal the wounds of the earth and her peoples, and that can sustain and nurture future generations.

In the San Francisco Bay Area today Reclaiming, the entity, is the Wheel and many specialized cells or smaller groups. Several “daughter” collectives are spread over a widespread geographic area. Reclaiming Tradition Witchcraft has its birthplace in 1985, and is still conducted in the United States, Canada, and Europe. The camps are a series of intensive lessons held in a retreat-like setting. The people trained in these camps, in turn, train others in their communities. They are connected to Reclaiming’s representative body called the Wheel through their Witch Camp spokesperson called the Web.

Sources

---

Records and Cassette: A Selected Guide (Catalog)

Comprehensive mail order catalog issued by the Yes! Bookshop founded by Cris Popenoe. It lists records and cassette tapes of New Age music, non-Western music, choral music, instrumental music, and spoken tapes on health, healing and to the linking of magic with political action.

---

ReCreation

ReCreation is an organization founded out of the response to the three-volume set of the metaphorical best-seller Conversations with God, received over a three-year period (1992–1995) by Neal Donald Walsch. Walsch was a radio talk show host in Ashland, Oregon, who in 1992 vented his frustration over his lot in life in a letter to God. To his surprise God answered back, and thus began his three-year dialogue. The messages from God were received by a process generally termed automatic writing. The three volumes of Conversations with God appeared in 1995, 1997, and 1998 respectively. They each became best-sellers, and Walsch was faced with a massive response by people who were positively affected by his writing. He founded ReCreation to channel that response into action.

ReCreation is based upon the notion that deep within our memory, each human carries the awareness that there once existed a race of beings who had a deep acceptance of love as the only reality and thus lived without anger, fear, struggle, and war. Bonded by love, these people lived by three rules: Love is all there is; Do harm to no one; and We are all One. They had a code of ethics based on three imperatives: Awareness, honesty, and responsibility. Having once existed, a society of such people of love can be rebuilt, and that is the goal of ReCreation.

To that end, ReCreation now sponsors a full schedule of programs (seminars, workshops, and lectures) at various locations across North America and overseas. A Conversations with God in Action program seeks to mobilize people to create centers to actualize the ideals of Conversations with God in their own community. These centers will be able to offer many of the same programs heretofore only available in Oregon. CWG in Action also has a “Little Masters” program for children. Walsch leads an annual Empowerment Week at which interested people may learn to be CWG leaders, both those who wish to work at the local level and those who wish to train other leaders. ReCreation certifies those who complete the training as Message senders.

ReCreation publishes a newsletter and study materials for people reading Conversations with God. It is headquartered at PMB #1150, 1257 Siskiyou Blvd., Ashland, OR 97520. Its Internet site is at http://www.conversationswithgod.org/.

---

Sources

Varble, Bill. “Former Rogue Valley Radio Host Finds Success in Conversations with God.” Mail Tribune (Ashland, Ore.) (September 14, 1997).

“Rector”

One of the spirit controls of William Stainton Moses, said to have been Hippolytus, pupil of Irenaeus, who was Bishop of Portus, the harbor of Rome opposite to Ostia. He was banished in 235 C.E., when Maximin succeeded Alexander Severus. “Recto” first manifested on January 4, 1873. His distinctive sign was his heavy tread, which shook the room. His main duty was to act as amanuensis for “Imperator” and the other spirits. After the earlier books, almost all the writing was done by him. He had the power of reading books paranormally. The experiments which were conducted to test this ability proved highly successful. When the “Imperator” group took control of the séances of the medium Leonore E. Piper, “Recto” manifested in his old role as amanuensis and spiritual adviser again.

Recurrent Spontaneous Psychokinesis (RSP)
A term suggested by parapsychologist W. G. Roll to denote poltergeist phenomena.

Red Cap (of Witches)
The witches of Ireland used to put on a magical red cap before flying through the air to their meeting-place. It has been suggested that witches in various countries may have experienced the illusion of traveling through the air after ingesting the “red cap” hallucinatory mushroom amanita muscaria (fly-agaric).

In Scotland the red caps were bloodthirsty elves who were said to live in the castles in the Lowlands. They dyed their caps red with human blood.

Redfield, James (1950– )
James Redfield, the author of the post-New Age spiritual classic The Celestine Prophecy, was born on March 19, 1950, in rural Alabama. He grew up near Birmingham, Alabama, and attended Auburn University, where he majored in sociology. After receiving his bachelor’s degree, he continued at Auburn and received a master’s degree in counseling. In 1974 he began work as a therapist for abused adolescents. During his college years and subsequent period as a counselor, he became a student of Eastern religions and the human potentials movement. He increasingly turned to theories of psychic phenomena and intuition as resources to assist his clients.

In 1989, Redfield quit his job to write and to synthesize his intuitions, the results of his initial effort, which included a trip to the New Age sacred sites in Sedona, Arizona, were compiled in 1991 as his first book, The Celestine Prophecy. He self-published the book in 1992 and within a year over 100,000 copies had been printed. Eventually Warner Books bought the rights to the title and in 1994 brought out the first hardback edition. The book soon became number one on the New York Times nonfiction best-seller list. It remained on the list for three years, was translated into several languages, and was soon joined by its sequel, The Tenth Insight (1996).

The Celestine Prophecy appeared as it became evident that the vision of a New Age that had so transformed the metaphysical community through the 1980s had died. Many who had identified themselves with the New Age sought new understanding of what had been occurring. Redfield’s book appeared to provide that new direction. The Celestine Prophecy described nine insights that Redfield felt were emerging in prominence among those who chose to be aware of them. The insights suggested that since the 1960s people had become more attuned to their intuitive self and the coincidences that filled their lives. As a result of the attunement to these insights, a new vision of the transformation of human consciousness would emerge in the next century. The Tenth Insight explored the results of working with these insights.

People not only read The Celestine Prophecy, but study groups formed to work with the insights. For these people, Redfield authored “experiential guides” for both The Celestine Prophecy and The Tenth Insight. He began a newsletter, The Celestine Journal, in 1994 that in 1998 became a monthly Internet newsletter on his website at http://www.celestinevision.com. More recently he continued to develop his perspectives in additional books, The Celestine Vision (1997) and The Secret of Shambhala (1999). He has been aided in his endeavors by his wife, Salle Merrill Redfield, who has authored several related books and who lectures with Redfield on their speaking tours around the world.

Beyond supplying material for study of the nine insights, Redfield has done little toward organizing any movement out of the response to his writings. However, some readers of his works have formed the New Civilization Network, a loose association operating primarily through the Internet.

Sources:

Red Man
The demon of the tempests. He was supposed to be furious when the rash voyager intruded on his solitude and would show his anger in the winds and storms. The French peasants believed that a mysterious little red man appeared to Napoleon to announce coming military reverses.

Red Pigs
It was formerly believed that Irish witches could turn wisps of straw or hay into red pigs, which they sold at the market. But when the pigs were driven homeward by the buyers, they resumed their original shape on crossing running water.

Reese, Bert (1851–1926)
American-Polish medium with whom remarkable experiments in clairvoyance were conducted by Baron von Schrenck-Notzing, Thomas A. Edison, Hereward Carrington, and Felix Hollaender. Reese was said to have manifested extraordinary psychic faculties at the age of six. According to Felix Hollaender, writing in the Annals of Psychic Science (September 1913), these abilities so terrified the people of the little town where he was born that he was housed in the only hotel and with a guard. By the time of his death, he had sold miscellaneous goods, and to avoid ruin he had to send his son away to Posen. The people of the country town were filled with horror. They considered the child a wizard and possessed by the devil.

In America, Reese was arrested and condemned for disorderly conduct. Appealing against his sentence he appeared before Judge Rosalsky and proved his powers to him. He asked the Judge to write something on three different pieces of paper, to fold them up and place them in three different pockets, mixing them in such a way that they could not be recognized.

Then Judge Rosalsky took one of the pellets and pressed it against Reese’s forehead. He immediately answered: “You have fifteen dollars in the bank mentioned in your question.” He continued by reading the second paper, which contained the name of a Miss O’Connor, a former governess to Judge Rosalsky’s children. He also read the third paper, whereupon Judge Rosalsky acquitted him.

Schrenck-Notzing considered him one of the most extraordinary men of the time. Though reading could not sufficiently account for his performances as the experimenters mostly took care that they themselves should not know which piece of paper contained which question. In certain performances, “X-ray clairvoyance” also fell short as an explanation; his success must have been due to psychometry. According to the account of Felix Hollaender, he indicated to a commercial firm the pages on which there was a fraudulent entry. He was given five percent of the amount of the fraud.

However, Harry Houdini claimed Reese was a fraud, and that he knew his methods. In a letter to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Houdini wrote: “I have no hesitancy in telling you that I set a snare at the séance I had with Reese, and caught him cold-blooded. He was startled when it was over, as he knew that I had bowled him over. So much so that he claimed I was the only one that had ever detected him.”

Reese was at one time an assistant to Thomas A. Edison, who held séances with him. In his later years, Edison worked on apparatus to communicate with the dead. Reese also had a reputation for dowsing and was said to have discovered valuable oil deposits for the Rockefeller company.

Sources:

Reeves, M.

London restaurant proprietor who, in association with F. M. Parkes, gained renown in 1877 as one of the earliest practitioners of spirit photography in England. He was said to have contributed a considerable part of the team’s power, as without him Parkes could not obtain recognizable spirit “extras” on his photographic plates. The association was dissolved when Reeves emigrated to Canada. Many of the psychic pictures that appeared on their plates were symbolic. (See also psychic photography)

Reflectograph

An instrument for mechanical communication with spirits, invented by George Jobson and B. K. Kirkby. It consisted of a large typewriter, the key-contacts of which were so sensitive that by merely blowing upon them they could be depressed, closing an electric circuit and making an illuminated letter appear. The machine, however, was by no means independent of human action. The presence of the medium L. E. Singleton was necessary. When she was entranced, a hand (suggestive of fraud) appeared out of the cabinet, or “the medium’s hands.” The person who used them was then flashed in luminous letters on a six-foot indicator. (See also Ashkir-Jobson Trianion; communigraph)

Re-formed Congregation of the Goddess-International

The Re-formed Congregation of the Goddess-International is one expression of feminist Wicca that has emerged in stages throughout the 1980s and 1990s. Wicca emerged as a religion built around the worship of the Goddess. It elevated the role of the priestesses as a means of balancing the more traditional all-male leadership role in Western religion. Many women found Wicca and magic to be a means of empowerment. In the early 1970s Dianic Wicca took the notion of the feminine role in the religion one step further and began to speak of Wicca as “wimen’s” religion. Feminist leaders began to organize all-female covens with a range of opinion from all-lesbian separatist groups to those groups that merely supplied women with a place for religious self-expression without male interference.

Feminist consciousness emerged within the strongest of the Wisconsin-based Wiccan groups, Circle, but generally manifested as all-female events during gatherings in which males otherwise participated. A more separatist format of feminist Wicca emerged in 1983 with the first issue of Of a Like Mind, a periodical that became the focus of a network of goddess-worshipping women. Of a Like Mind covered such areas as women’s spirituality, Goddess religions around the world, nature-centered spirituality, and feminism. Each issue centered upon a particular Goddess and a singular theme, the subjects of feature articles, and included a number of columns that facilitated networking.

Over the years the Re-formed Congregation emerged as a network of groups (called circles) and then in the 1990s as a formal corporate structure that chartered member organizations and trained and ordained leaders. The congregation organized its own publishing house, Triple Crescent Press, and a school, the Women’s Theological Institute. The Grove is a retreat center near Madison, Wisconsin. It sponsors a number of celebrative and training events through the year.

The Re-formed Congregation is headquartered at Box 6677, Madison, WI 53726. Of a Like Mind is issued quarterly. It has an Internet presence at http://www.cae.wisc.edu:80/~cashd/pathways/reg.html.

Sources:

REG See Random Event Generator

Regang

Malay system of astrology. (See MALAYSIA)

Regardie, (Francis) Israel (1907–1985)

Ritual magician, student of Aleister Crowley, and later a chiropractor who utilized the thought of Wilhelm Reich in his work. He was born in England on November 17, 1907, but emigrated to the United States with his family at age 15. He discovered the theosophical writings of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, which provided him an entrée into the occult. Then through the writings of Charles Stansfield Jones, he became more aware of the occult tradition and fascinated by Crowley’s outlook and exploits.

Beginning in 1928 he traveled through Europe as Crowley’s secretary and student. Although he later parted company with Crowley, he defended him from those who disliked his exploits in magic and sexual liberties, and spoke of his “real genius and grandeur.” Regardie was well aware of Crowley’s more controversial exploits, but was willing to overlook much that might be objectionable because of what he recognized as Crowley’s true magical genius. Regardie began to write in the early 1930s, his first books being The Tree of Life (1932) and The Garden of Pomegranates (1935). In 1934, after parting with Crowley, he joined the Stel-la Matutina, an offshoot of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. He despaired of the corrupt nature of the order’s leadership and saw no hope of reform. Enthused with the rituals, he broke his oath of secrecy and revealed all he had learned in a book, My Rosicrucian Adventure (1935). Several years later he published the complete rituals in a four-volume set, The Golden Dawn: An Encyclopedia of Practical Occultism (1957–40). (While angering his fellow magicians, these published rituals interested only a few until the renewal of the occult revival in the 1960s, when Regardie’s compendium was reprinted in a revised and enlarged edition in 1969.)

Regardie later became a chiropractor and, following the outbreak of hostilities with Japan, served in the U.S. Army. After the war he settled in southern California, where he practiced chiropractic and psychoanalysis. He had studied with Nandor Fodor in the mid-1930s in New York City and later became an enthusiastic supporter of Wilhelm Reich and his theories of orgone energy. In his highly individual linking of the Golden Dawn teachings with Reich's psychophysical therapy, Regardie created a unique synthesis of mysticism, occultism, and psychotherapy. In his introduction to the second edition of The Golden Dawn (1980), Regardie notes that, "Reich has succeeded in building a bridge between the modern psychologies and occultism. What he had to say, and the therapeutic method he developed and called vegetotherapy, have been found of inestimable value in my life, and the two hundred hours of therapy I had years ago comprise an experience that today, in retrospect, I would not be without."

Regardie retained his respect for the Golden Dawn teachings, and during the last years of his life he accepted a few magic students and nurtured the birth of several new organizations that drew inspiration from both the Golden Dawn and Crowley. In 1983 he visited New Zealand, where a Stella Matutina lodge had been founded by R. W. Felkin in 1912 and continued to function.

Regardie died March 10, 1985, at age 77, in Sedona, Arizona, where he lived for several years after he retired from some 30 years in practice as a Reichian therapist in Los Angeles. The forename "Francis" was adopted by Regardie in the 1950s at the suggestion of Winifred Burke (wife of the famous novelist Thomas Burke), who thought that his spiritual direction was reminiscent of St. Francis of Assisi, noted for his faith, humility, and love.

Sources:
———. March 24, 1939, After Exposing What He Considered the Sham Socialism and Perverse Character of the Hitler Regime.

Reich, Wilhelm (1897–1957)

Austrian psychoanalyst, whose later ideas on life energy had analogies with occult and mystical concepts. Reich was a brilliant if eccentric thinker who continually ran up against intense social and government forces. Many of his ideas, especially those concerning sexuality, would be quite acceptable today. His championing of the importance of sexual expression in Freudianism was rejected by most psychoanalysts, although they used many of his therapeutic insights. His reconciliation of psychic and somatic aspects of psychoanalysis, long desired by Freud, was regarded with suspicion and mistrust by Freud himself. Reich's teachings on "sexual revolution," as opposed to authoritarian repression, were grossly misrepresented after his death by cranks, pornographers, and hippies on one hand, and by a humorless orthodoxy of authoritarian Reichian physiocrats on the other.

Reich died in the federal penitentiary in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania, November 3, 1957.
Reichenbach, Baron Karl von

Sources:
Reichenbach, Baron Karl von (1788–1869)

Nineteenth-century German chemist, expert on meteorites, and discoverer of kerosene, paraffin, and creosote. He also spent over two decades experimenting with the mysterious force which he named "od" (also known as odic force or odyle in various translations). This claimed force, which has its intellectual roots in mesmerism, had particular relevance to concepts of the human aura.

Reichenbach was born on February 12, 1788, at Württemberg and died at Leipzig on January 22, 1869. He was educated at the gymnasmum (high school) in Württemberg and afterward at the State University of Tübingen, where he studied natural science, political economy, and law. During Reichenbach's student days, Germany was under the military control of Napoleon's France, and at the age of sixteen Reichenbach founded a secret society to set up a German state in the South Sea Islands. However, he was arrested by the Napoleonic police and detained for some months as a political prisoner. After his release he continued his studies and obtained his Ph.D.

He later traveled in France and Germany investigating the construction and operation of ironworks, and in 1815 he set up his own plant at Villigen in Baden. He later built a large charcoal furnace at Hausach in Baden. He established a beet-sugar factory, steelworks, and blast furnaces and devoted much time to experimental research. He discovered paraffin in 1850 and other coal-tar products such as eupion, creosote, and pittacal (pitch) in the following years. Between 1835 and 1860, he also published a long series of scientific papers on meteorites. His many contributions earned him a well-deserved reputation as a brilliant scientist and industrialist.

Meanwhile his experiments in human sensitivity from 1839 onward were not as well received by his colleagues; in fact, he was harshly criticized. These experiments involved attempts to demonstrate a mysterious vital force which he named "od," for the Norse deity Odin, indicating a power, like the animal magnetism described by Franz A. Mesmer, which permeates the whole of nature.

Detection and demonstration of this force depended upon sensitives—specially gifted individuals rather like psychics, although Reichenbach's sensitives were ordinary people from all walks of life. These individuals experienced specific reactions to other people's aura visible. In this century, Wilhelm Reich's theories of "orgone energy" seem to be about the same energy Reichenbach explored under the label "od."

Sources:

---

Reiki

A Japanese healing system built around the use of ki, the universal life energy, analogous to the Hindu prana and the od force described in the research of Baron von Reichenbach. Reiki can be traced to the discoveries of Mikao Usui, a Christian minister working in Kyoto in the 1880s. Challenged by his contemporaries concerning the Christian claims of biblical miracles, he began a search that led him to the United States to study at the University of Chicago, where he worked toward a Ph.D. However, he did not find answers to his questing until he investigated Buddhism.

Unable to find any Buddhists practicing healing, he learned Chinese and Sanskrit in order to read the early Buddhist sutras in their original languages. There he found a discussion of the healing power, and during a 21-day retreat he welcomed the power into himself. Soon afterward he was able to be the facilitator for several spectacular healings and he settled down in Kyoto to learn about this new power he had discovered and to perfect the techniques for using it. He eventually passed his knowledge to Chijuro Hayashi.

An event of great importance to the spread of reiki occurred in the 1930s when a young Japanese American, Hayowo Takata, ill and believing herself soon to die, returned to her native land. There she met several reiki healers and they facilitated her complete recovery. As a result she became the first woman, and first American, reiki master. She returned to Hawaii and taught quietly for many years. Then in the late 1970s she moved to the Midwest, where she began to share reiki healing with a larger audience of metaphysically-oriented Americans. Virginia Samdall of Chicago became the first of a new generation of reiki masters. In 1978 Takata initiated Barbara Ray of Atlanta, Georgia, and went on to teach her the secrets of initiating other reiki masters. She had previously taught the secrets to her granddaughter, Phillis Lei Furamoto.

Takata died in 1980. Both Ray and Furamoto, as reiki grand masters, assumed leadership for the development of the movement built around what Takata had taught them. Ray founded the American Reiki Association (later renamed the Radiance Technique Association International) and Furamoto founded the Reiki Alliance. Both have initiated further masters who formed different lineages of reiki practice.

Reiki is taught in three degrees. Students having mastered the first degree are equipped to use the reiki technique to heal others. The second degree provides a deeper knowledge of the reiki work. The third degree must be taught by a reiki grand master and allows one to become a reiki master and a teacher of reiki at the first and second levels. Today, an individual may learn reiki through classes or workshops at any number of special institutes or centers designed to teach reiki healing energy and educate the public. Each institute may teach its own unique system or interpretation of reiki based on traditional teachings. Completion of a reiki class usually leads to a certificate.

There are certain procedures and guidelines that are recommended with reiki treatments and therapy, although some reiki masters claim that reiki cannot cause harm or be performed incorrectly (it is possible to perform reiki illegally if there is inappropriate touching). Some masters also claim that it makes no difference if the person receiving treatment has Eastern or Western beliefs. Several styles of reiki are practiced around the world. Different reiki styles apply different methods to conduct the flow of energy during a treatment or therapy session. Methods or tools may include meditation, prayer, use of colors or sounds, chants, mantras, applying hot and cold sensations, elements or healing rays (fire, air, water, earth), use of crystals, astrology, tantric healing, karmic body education, chakras, breathing exercises, and attunement openings.

Sources:

Reincarnation

The return to a new corporeal life of a soul (the incorporeal true self) that had previously been embodied and passed through bodily death. The idea of reincarnation—that the soul passes through a series of embodiments—stands in contrast to the dominant Western Christian idea of a single corporeal embodiment followed by resurrection (reunion of the soul with a spiritual body) and life with God in heaven. Reincarnation is often associated with, but is not necessarily connected with, transmigration, the idea that at death the soul might pass into the body of an animal, a plant, or even an inanimate object such as a stone. The belief in reincarnation was tied to moral categories in ancient religions, especially the concept of karma, which viewed the present life as the working out of consequences from previous lives. Future embodiments will also be determined by the consequences of this present life. One must remove oneself from the realm of consequences through spiritual activity or be stuck in the endless cycle of reincarnation forever. The belief in a form of reincarnation is fundamental to both Hinduism and Buddhism and had some popularity in the ancient Mediterranean basin. Pythagoras, for example, claimed that he was Euphorbus in a previous existence. In modern times, reincarnation has spread in the West through the efforts of French Spiritism and Theosophy.

Reincarnation in the East

The idea of reincarnation is usually associated with India. It is found in most of the forms of Hinduism; there are hundreds, with some variation in the different theologies and schools of thought. Basically, the soul is an immortal entity that has continuity through eternity, but falls into material existence and is trapped in the illusion that this physical world is ultimately real. Through multiple lives the soul becomes subject to karma, or consequences. Good karma leads to noble birth; bad karma to a lower birth, even to rebirth as an animal. The idea of karma and reincarnation was integral to social organization in the caste system and thus had practical application in everyday life. The caste system in turn dictated proper action that was sanctioned by the rewards and punishments of karma.
In the mainstream of Hindu thought—which found truth in the timeless eternal world beyond this world of illusion—while a favorable reincarnation was desirable, the ultimate goal was to escape the wheel of reincarnation totally. The means of such escape was spiritual discipline encased within a renunciation of the world. By withdrawing and concentrating on the spiritual realm, one ceased to create karma and dissolved old karma. Eventually, one could rid oneself of karma entirely and escape.

The essential soul is said to be pure and impersonal, part of a universal soul, but overlaid by illusions of individual egoism relating to desires and fears of the body and senses. The classic statements relating to reincarnation are to be found in the Hindu scripture Bhagavad-Gita, which stresses: “The soul is never born nor dies, nor does it exist on coming into being. For it is unborn, eternal, and primeval. Even although the body is destroyed, the soul is not.” (2:20)

Buddhism emerged as a reform movement in Hinduism. It challenged the traditional Hindu system at a number of points, including its understanding of human life. In particular, Buddhists challenged the idea of a substantial soul that existed in and of itself apart from the body. The rather sophisticated understanding of the self in Buddhism is often likened to a candle flame. Obviously, as the candle burns down the flame will eventually die out. It has no existence apart from its burning. Buddhists suggest that reincarnation is as if, just as the flame is about to go out, it finds a new candle wick—a new body within which to burn.

In the nineteenth century, during the height of British rule in India, Christianity challenged Hinduism, especially as it existed in village temple worship. Christian leaders denounced animal sacrifice and the sexual promiscuity of some tantric groups, while slowly discovering the sophistication of Hindu philosophy. One of the responses to Christianity’s invasion of the country, with the backing of colonial authorities, however, was a revival of philosophical Hinduism in light of new nineteenth-century Western notions of progress, evolution, and moral striving.

In this new Hinduism of the nineteenth century, the succession of lives of the soul in different bodies is regarded as one indivisible life. The soul uses the experience of each incarnation as an opportunity for expiating sins in former lives, of balancing good karma with bad, and of perfecting the soul through the experience of each incarnation. The scheme of the whole course of reincarnation and is truly a denizen of the indwelling, indivisible life. The soul uses the experience of each incarnation as a means of expiating sins in former lives.

The major conduit of reincarnationist teachings in the West during the twentieth century has been the Theosophical Society. According to Theosophy, the various manifestations in the flesh are merely small portions of one whole. The monad, the divine spark, or individuality, remains the same throughout the whole course of reincarnation and is truly a denizen of the three higher worlds—the spiritual, the intellectual, and the higher mental. In order to further its growth and the widening of its experience and knowledge, however, it is necessary for the monad to descend into the worlds of denser matter—the lower mental, the astral, and the physical—and take back with it to the higher worlds what it learns there. Since it is impossible to progress far during one manifestation, the monad must return again and again to the lower worlds.

The laws of progress, the laws that govern reincarnation, are those of evolution and of karma. The scheme of the evolution of life decrees that all shall sooner or later attain, by developing to the utmost their latent powers and qualities, and each manifestation in the lower worlds is but one short journey nearer to the goal. Those who realize this law shorten the journey by their own efforts while those who do not realize it, of course, lengthen the journey.

Karma decrees that both good and bad effects follow whoever caused them. Hence, what an individual has done in one manifestation he will benefit or suffer for in another. It may be impossible that actions should be immediately effective, but each is stored up and sooner or later will bear fruit.
Reincarnation

It may be asked why one long life in the lower worlds should not suffice in place of a multitude of manifestations, but this is explained by the fact that the dense matter that is the vehicle of these bodies becomes, after a time of progress, incapable of further alteration to suit the developing monad’s needs and must accordingly be laid aside for a new body.

After physical death, the individual passes first to the astral world, then to the heavenly portion of the mental world. Most time is spent in the latter, except when descending into the denser worlds to garner fresh experience and knowledge for further development in preparation for passage into a higher sphere.

In the heaven world these experiences and this knowledge are woven together into the texture of the individual’s nature. In those who have not progressed far on the journey of evolution, the manifestations in the lower worlds are comparatively frequent, but with passage of time and development, these manifestations become rarer and more time is spent in the heaven world, until at last, the great process of reincarnation draws to an end, and the pilgrims enter the path that leads to perfection.

Reincarnation and Spiritism

In France reincarnation was advocated before the time of Allan Kardec by several philosophers and mystics, such as Henri de St. Simon, Prosper Enfantin, Charles Fourier, Pieter Leroux, and Jean Reynaud. From an article by Alexander Askakov in the London Spiritualist during 1875, it appears that Kardec adopted the doctrine of reincarnation from spirit communications that were received by the medium Celina Japhet. Japhet’s mediumship was developed by one M. Roustan, a mesmerist who believed in reincarnation.

If the medium disclosed the doctrine under the effect of the mesmerist’s belief, it is easy to understand how Kardec and his school could receive ample confirmation through automatists of his tenet that spiritual progress is achieved through a series of incarnations, always in the human race, that successive corporeal existences are the necessary steps to perfection and that the soul retains its individuality and memory after separation from the body.

The influence of the Kardec school was powerful and, by the appeal of its reconciliation with the apparent injustices of life, it became more popular than the teachings of the Spiritualist Z. J. Pireart and his followers, who denied reincarnation and relied on the same kind of evidence as that which the Kardecists produced. Indeed, Alphonse Cahagnet, who kept the earliest trance records in France, was the first to whom the communicators emphatically denied reincarnation, but admitted the existence of the soul anterior to its appearance on Earth.

Outside France, the doctrine of Allan Kardec was denounced by many Spiritualists. In the United States, Andrew Jackson Davis declared it to be “a magnificent mansion built on sand.” But he also believed in preexistence and taught that “all souls existed from the beginning in the divine soul; all individuality which is, has been, or will be, had its pre-existence, has its present existence in creative being.”

In England, William Howitt was the chief antagonist. He said that the doctrine was pitiable and repellant, and argued that if it were true there must have been millions of spirits who, on entering the other world, have sought in vain their kindred, children, and friends.

A very pertinent remark may be quoted from a published letter of the great medium D. D. Home: “I have had the pleasure of meeting at least twelve Marie Antoinettes, six or seven Marys of Scotland, a whole host of Louis and other kings, about twenty Great Alexandras, but never a plain John Smith. I, indeed, would like to cage the latter curiosity.”

For its psychological import, it is also interesting to note that at the exact time of Kardec’s death, Home claimed to have received the following communication: “I regret having taught the Spiritist doctrine. Allan Kardec.” (See Home’s book Lights and Shadows of Spiritualism, 1877.)

Among Spiritualists, those who favored reincarnation countered Home. His argument was no argument; reincarnation, if true, may not necessarily be a universal fact. It may not take place at once. In The Road to Immortality, by Geraldine Cummins (1952), the spirit of F. W. H. Myers, communicating from “the other side,” admits reincarnation “as an integral and as a necessity for “animal men,” but not through a series of existences, and counters Theosophical notions of karma by a fascinating theory of group souls.

Regarding Howitt’s objection it may be claimed that the double, in sleep, may establish meetings without recollecting them on awakening. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle pointed out that since reincarnation for the spirits is a question of their own future, they may not be more enlightened on it than we are on our own fate.

Reincarnation could be optional; it could be punitive. It could be imposed for the purposes of retribution or it could be undertaken for the fulfillment of a mission.

Reincarnation could be optional; it could be punitive. It could be imposed for the purposes of retribution or it could be undertaken for the fulfillment of a mission.

The opposition to Kardec’s philosophy in England was not universal; he had some followers. Theosophist Anna Kingsford translated many of his books. She believed herself to be the reincarnation of the Virgin Mary, while her follower Edward Maitland believed that he had been St. John the Divine.

Reincarnation and Spiritualism

Outside France, Spiritualist experience offered little to support the theory of reincarnation. "John King," the famous control of the medium Eusapia Palladino, claimed to have been Palladino’s father in a previous existence. “John King” claimed manifestation through many different mediums at different times, however.

The experiences of Carl A. Wickland and his wife in obsession cases did not bear out the theory. They were told by earthbound spirits, brought into their rescue circles, that on passing over they had entered the auras of young children and obsessed them. The children, however, never ceased to struggle against these invaders. In those cases in which the Wickland rescue circle enlightened the obsessors of their error, the sanity of the patient quickly returned as the obsessing influence was relieved.

In the nineteenth century, however, hints of support for reincarnation began to emerge. Charles Richet gives one illustrative case from Les Miracles de la Volonté, by E. Duchatel and R. Warcollier: “A distinguished physician of Palermo, M. Carmelo Samona, well acquainted with metapsychic science, lost his little daughter, Alexandrina, aged five, in 1910. Mme. Samona was wild with grief. Three days after she saw the child in a dream who said to her: ‘I have not left you; I have become tiny like that,’ designating some very small object. A fresh pregnancy was the more unlikely in that Mme. Samona had undergone a serious ovarian operation a year previously. On April 10, however, she became aware that she was pregnant. On May 4th it was predicted by Alexandrina, communicating by means of the table, that Mme. Samona would be delivered of a boy, the child of whom would entirely resemble Alexandrina. This came to pass. One of the twins had a mark on the left eye and another mark on the right ear with a symmetry of the face, precisely like that of the deceased child.”

Among various automatic writing scripts, Frederick Bligh Bond, whose famous discovery of Edgar Chapel, Glastonbury Abbey, is described in his book The Gate of Remembrance (1918), noticed reincarnation claims in the communications he received through “Miss X.” The old monks who communicated asserted that Miss X was one of the early Glastonbury monks.
and addressed her as "Brother Simon." Neither Miss X nor Bond believed in reincarnation when the script came through. The incident is referred to in Bond’s book The Company of Avalon (1954).

Spiritualist J. Arthur Hill presented his reflections on scripts received by a Mrs. Cary (pseudonym), a British working woman of about 50. The scripts detailed episodes involving reincarnation of "Some Reincarnationist Automatic Scripts," in the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 38), was weak, however, since no attempt had been made to verify the historic accuracy of the names. It was also noted that Cary was a Theosophist.

The Strange Experiments of Eugene Rochas

The feeling of déjà vu has often been cited as an argument for reincarnation. However, this phenomenon yields to a variety of explanations. More interesting than the rather vague feelings of déjà vu are claimed memories of past incarnations. Eugene Rochas was among the first to explore such memories. Rochas claimed that certain subjects, if put into hypnotic sleep by means of longitudinal passes, could be made to retrace the previous phases of their existence down to their birth and beyond "into the grey" and then into an even earlier state of incarnation. By means of transversal passes the subject was brought back to his normal state by going through the same phases in order of their time. If the transversal passes were continued, the subject was led into the future.

Marie Mayo, the daughter of a French engineer, was one of Rochas’s subjects. She passed through various stages of hypnotic sleep into the first stage of lethargy, in which she was suggestible for brief moment, into the first state of somnambulism, in which she was not at all suggestible and retained the memory of her preceding state and in her waking life. She then passed into the state of rapport, in which she heard no one but the hypnotizer.

In this state she began to exteriorize herself, a half phantom formed at the left and a half at the right, the colors red and blue. In a successive state, the phantom halves united; the exteriorization of the astral body became complete but was attached to the body by a fluidic cord. In this state of exteriorization, the astral body assumed shapes in accord with the age in which the subject saw herself going through the stages of her life.

At age eight, she wrote her name in Arabic. At that age she had attended a school in Beirut. Beyond that birth she called herself Lina, the daughter of a fisherman in Brittany. She married at age 20. Her husband was also a fisherman; his name was Yvon, but she did not remember his family name. She had one child, who died at the age of two; her husband perished in a shipwreck. In a fit of despair she had thrown herself into the sea from the top of a precipice. Her body was eaten by fish.

All this information was successively elicited. She first passed through the convulsions of drowning and then went back to her life as Lina, through the childbirth to girlhood, infancy, the life as Lina, the daughter of a fisherman in Brittany. She married at age 20. Her husband was also a fisherman; his name was Yvon, but she did not remember his family name. She had one child, who died at the age of two; her husband perished in a shipwreck. In a fit of despair she had thrown herself into the sea from the top of a precipice. Her body was eaten by fish.

This information was successively elicited. She first passed through the convulsions of drowning and then went back to her life as Lina, through the childbirth to girlhood, infancy, and the state of "grey" and then spoke in a previous incarnation as a man, named Charles Mauville, who lived in the time of Louis XVIII. He was a clerk in a ministerial office in Paris, a bad man, a murderer who died at age 50.

Still further back, she was a lady whose husband was a gentleman attached to the court. Her name was Madeleine de Saint-Marc. Being brought back to the present by transversal passes Mayo successively reached her real age of 18 and then was pushed, by a continuation of the passes, two years into the future. Beyond this she could not go. She saw herself in a strange country with Africans, in a house far away from a railway station, the name of which she could not read. She could not give any precise information that could be used for identification.

Rochas was also possibly the first to explore the fact that similar visions occur if a hypnotized subject is moved into the future instead of into the past. He pushed Juliette Durand, a girl of 16, ahead nine years up to age 25, when she reported dying at Nice. After a time, she reportedly was reincarnated in the future as Emile Chaumette in a family of easy circumstances, studied for the ministry, and was appointed vicar at Havre in 1940.

Rochas’s research soon reached the same dead end as did most of those to follow. It could never be proved that the past personalities enacted by the subjects had really lived, even though they were often very plausible. In some cases, the places and the families spoken of existed, but the individuals could never be traced in parish registers or family documents and the reincarnations swarmed with improbabilities.

Rochas rejected the idea that the accounts were the result of suggestion:

"They certainly do not come from me, for I have not only avoided everything that could lead the subject into any determined path, but I have often tried in vain to lead her astray by different suggestions; and the same has been the case with the experimenters who have devoted themselves to this study. . . . Are we to assimilate these phenomena to mere dreams? Certainly not. There is in them a constancy, a regularity, which we do not find in ordinary dreams. . . . And besides, how are we to explain why physical causes, such as longitudinal and transversal passes should have absolutely certain effects on the memory of the subjects between the moments of their birth and that of their present life, and they produce phenomena which do not rest on any basis of fact. I believe that we must compare these manifestations with those which have been studied in the case of Mlle. Hélène Smith, and generally with all those which are provisionally attributed to spirits, and in which we see the true and the false intermingled in a way calculated to drive to despair those who do not reflect upon the darkness in which all observers have to struggle at the beginning of every new science."

Psychical Researchers and Reincarnation

When Allan Kardec died, Leon Denis and Gabriel Delanne became the main pillars of the reincarnationist school in France. The general evidence they relied on was fourfold: (1) infant prodigies, (2) spontaneous recollection of past lives, (3) exploration of memory under hypnosis, and (4) the claims announced of coming reincarnation.

They found a powerful supporter in psychical researcher Gustav Geley. His book From the Unconscious to the Conscious (1920) was described as a veritable Bible for reincarnation by Innocinzo Calderone, founder and director of the Italian review Filosofia della Scienza, which made a widespread international inquiry on reincarnation in 1913. Geley asserted, "I am a reincarnationist for three reasons: (1) because the doctrine seems to me from the moral point of view fully satisfactory, (2) from the philosophic point of view absolutely rational, and (3) from the scientific point of view likely, or—better still—probably true."

Reminding all that French thought was by no means unanimous on the subject, another distinguished representative of French psychical thinking, René Sudre, ranked himself definitely in the opposite camp, declaring in an article in Psychic Research (May 1930), "Even as I can admit the faith in survival from the religious point of view, I should in like measure reject as absurd the doctrine of reincarnation and I well understand how it is that the common-sense of the Anglo-Saxon refuses to bow to this teaching."

Modern Experiments in Hypnotic Regression

Through the twentieth century, reincarnation garnered its supporters with little fanfare. Then in 1954 the subject of reincarnation became the subject of a public controversy following the serialization of the story of Bridey Murphy in the Denver Post and the subsequent publication of Mory Bernstein’s bestselling book The Search for Bridey Murphy in 1956.
Bernstein was a businessman in Pueblo, Colorado, who had hypnotized a housewife, Ruth Simmons (the pseudonym of Virginia Tighe). In those sessions Bernstein probed Tighe's memories back to childhood and then, as it seemed, to an earlier life as Bridey Murphy, an Irish girl. The book stimulated "come as you were" social parties, pop songs, and a spate of amateur hypnotic sessions. More important, it launched attempts to find remaining traces of Bridey Murphy. As the controversy seemed to be reaching a dead end, the Chicago American published a series of articles that effectively disproved the claim that Tighe was really Bridey Murphy in a former existence. Not only had the evidence for a Bridey Murphy been lacking, but an Irish woman turned up from Tighe's early life who proved the likely model from which the past life could have been constructed. Today most people consider Bridey Murphy to have been a case of cryptonesia.

A few other experimenters in hypnotic regression techniques produced more convincing results. Among these is the British hypnotist Arnall Bloxham, who spent more than 20 years tape recording hypnotic subjects. These sessions convinced many that they presented actual memories of former incarnations.

Reincarnation and Parapsychology

Renewed popular interest in reincarnation also led to serious research by parapsychologists, most notably that of Ian Stevenson of the Department of Neurology and Psychiatry, School of Medicine, University of Virginia. Stevenson collected cases from around the world of people, primarily children, who remembered an immediately previous life, and was able to provide some convincing evidence when confronted with the actual locations and people in those former lives. His book Twenty Cases Suggestive of Reincarnation was initially published by the American Society for Psychical Research as the society's Proceedings for September 1966. It presented similar cases, each investigated personally by Stevenson on field trips to Alaska, Brazil, Ceylon, India, and Lebanon. Additional cases were documented in subsequent volumes.

Stevenson's research received mixed reactions. Many of his parapsychologist colleagues, having given up on the possibility of doing survival research, had moved away from that whole area of research. A few actively attacked his cases as representative of biased sources and the imposition of Stevenson's own well-known prior commitment to a belief in reincarnation. However, they remain the best contemporary attempt of psychical research to compile evidence on so complex a subject. (See also Glastonbury Scripts)

Sources:

The Religio-Philosophical Journal

Prominent American Spiritualistic weekly founded in 1865 in Chicago. Its founder and publisher, Stevens J. Jones, was murdered in 1877. His son-in-law, Col. J. C. Bundy, assumed charge. Successive editors were M. E. Bundy, B. F. Underwood, and T. G. Newan. In the 1890s the journal moved to San Francisco and a new series (vols. 34–42) began. The publication of this long-running periodical ceased on April 22, 1905. It was superseded briefly by The Mountain Pine (1906–1908).

Religious Experience Research Centre

Originally founded in 1969 as the Religious Experience Research Unit at Manchester College, Oxford, England, by Professor Sir Alister Hardy after his retirement from the chair of zoology at Oxford University. In 1985, shortly before he died, Sir Alister was named before a group of eminent churchmen and scientists at the Church Centre of the United Nations as the winner of the Templeton Prize, awarded annually for progress in religion. Following Hardy's death in 1985, the name of the unit was briefly changed to the Alister Hardy Research Centre. In 1991 the name of the organization was renamed the Religious Experience Research Centre when it moved to Westminster College.

The purpose of the Religious Experience Research Centre is “to make a disciplined study of the frequency of report of first hand religious or transcendent experience in contemporary members of human species and to investigate the nature and function of such experiences.” The centre explores such questions as: How many people in the modern world report religious or transcendent experiences? What do people mean when they say they have had one of these experiences? What sort of things do they describe? How do they interpret them? What effects do they have on their lives? Are the sorts of people who report them more likely to be: Well or poorly educated; impoverished or well provided for; happy or unhappy; mentally unbalanced or stable; socially responsible or self-preoccupied; members of religious institutions or not?

Since its foundation, the centre has built up a unique body of research data consisting of more than 5,000 case histories of individuals who have had some form of such experience. Although these case histories have come mainly from Britain, and, to a lesser degree, from other English-speaking countries, many other cultural and religious traditions are represented.
The centre has also conducted a number of large scale and in-depth surveys of reports of religious experiences in Britain and the United States. Repeated national polls indicate that between a third and a half of the adult populations in Britain and the United States claim to have been "aware of or influenced by a presence or a power, whether they call it God or not, which is different from their everyday selves." Parallel studies in the United States and Australia (e.g., by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, the Survey Research Center of the University of California at Berkeley, and Gallup International) have produced similarly high figures. The centre has now completed a number of in-depth studies in Britain, in which random samples of particular social groups (e.g., adult members of the population of an industrial city, a sample of postgraduate students, and a sample of nurses in a large hospital) have been interviewed personally and at length about their experiences. In all these groups the positive response rate has been over 60 percent.

Remy believes that such research is particularly important "in view of the crisis through which Western culture (and hence the world affected by it) is now passing, in part the result of an intellectually restricted perspective which appeared at the time of the European Enlightenment, especially during the eighteenth century." The centre claims that modern analyses of the alienation, meaninglessness, and violence increasingly endemic to society have been limited by the proscriptions enforced by this dominant (and materially successful) thought pattern, particularly in failing to comprehend or dismissing the religious or transcendent dimension of human experience.

The mailing address of the Religious Experience Research Centre is Westminster College, Oxford, OX2 8AT England.

REM

Initialism for "rapid eye movement," a physical phenomenon during which the most active, visually rich, and bizarre dreaming occurs.

Remy, Nicolas (1530–1612)

Nicolas Remy, a French demonologist, was the author of the frequently reprinted Demonology (1595), a standard reference for witchcraft in the next centuries. He was born around 1530 at Charmes, Vosges Department, in Lorraine. His father, Gérard Remy, was provost of Charmes and his uncle held a prominent position in the department. Following their lead, he also became a lawyer. He studied at the University of Toulouse, where fellow demonologist Jean Bodin (1529–1596) also studied and later taught. He married Anne Marchand with whom he had seven children. In 1563 Remy relocated to Paris where his career blossomed. In 1570 he was appointed lieutenant general of Vosges, succeeding his retiring uncle. Five years later he was also named privy councilor to the Duke Charles III of Lorraine. In 1591 he became attorney general of Lorraine.

Remy traced his interest in witchcraft to his childhood, when he first witnessed a trial of an accused witch. Once placed in a position of power in Lorraine, he persecuted them mercilessly, and bragged that he had been responsible for the condemnation of over 900. In 1582 he personally prosecuted one woman on charges of working malevolent magic after his eldest son had died, believing she was responsible for his death. In 1592 the plague hit Nancy, and he retired to the country to raise his seven children. In 1591 Remy relocated to Paris where his career blossomed. In 1570 he was appointed lieutenant general of Vosges, succeeding his retiring uncle. Five years later he was also named privy councilor to the Duke Charles III of Lorraine. In 1591 he became attorney general of Lorraine.

Remy remained at his post until his death in April of 1612. As attorney general he was able to prioritize witchcraft cases and alter decisions in instances where local magistrates had, in his opinion, been too lenient on witches. It was noted that he retained his hatred and fear of witches to the very end.

Sources:

Renier, Noreen

Contemporary professional psychic with ten years’ experience as a teacher, investigator, and lecturer. Originally from Massachusetts, Noreen lived in Florida for eighteen years, working in advertising and public relations. In 1976, she was introduced to meditation and discovered a psychic ability. She submitted her gift to scientific testing and research, working with the Psychical Research Foundation in Durham, North Carolina, and the Department of Personality Studies at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville. Her experiments in archaeology and anthropology with Dr. David Jones at the University of Central Florida were reported in his book Visions of Time (1979).

Noreen became a consultant to law enforcement agencies, and she claims to have worked on more than a hundred cases. She briefly had a weekly call-in radio program “In Touch with Noreen” (1980–82). In 1984, she began work on a book about her experiences, returning to Orlando in 1985 to continue teaching, consultation, and lecturing.

During 1985, John D. Merrell of Beaverton, Oregon, published an article in the Newsletter of the Northwest Skeptics (a group of which Merrell was co-founder) questioning Noreen’s background credentials and what he claimed were “fraudulent claims” of psychic ability. Northwest Skeptics is a group dedicated to combating pseudoscience and uncovering false claims of paranormal phenomena, with loose ties to the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal. The Newsletter was mailed to newspapers, broadcast media, and police departments.

Noreen filed a defamation suit against Merrell, claiming that the Newsletter had damaged her reputation as a practicing psychic. The case was heard in September 1986, when Noreen testified that she lost at least one lecturing job with Oregon State Police trainees because of Merrell’s article. The suit claimed that Merrell’s statements “held the plaintiff up to public ridicule, humiliation, embarrassment, and loss of reputation causing her to suffer loss of self-esteem, mental anguish, humiliation, and loss of reputation regarding her occupation.” The jury’s verdict was that Merrell knew that at least some of his story was false or written with a reckless disregard for the truth. Noreen was awarded $25,000 damages.

The case was something of a landmark in the present battle between skeptics and psychics. Militant skeptics claim that belief in paranormal phenomena is unscientific and socially irresponsible and must be exposed as pseudoscience or fraud.
Some skeptics have performed a useful service in joining with psychical researchers in exposing a variety of fraudulent claims; others have been irresponsible in attempting to use guilt by association to brand all psychics and all claims of the paranormal as frauds.

Sources:

Res Bureaux Bulletin
A Canadian bulletin about Fortean type phenomena (scientific anomalies), published in the 1970s by a person known only as Mr. X of Kingston, Ontario, Canada. It circulated among serious students of unusual and obscure events in exchange for reciprocity on cuttings and articles.

Reschith Hajalalim
The name of the ministering spirit of the angelic hierarchies in Jewish rabbinical legend. To this angel, the pure and simple essence of the divinity flows through Hajoth Hakakos, he guides the primum mobile, and bestows the gift of life on all.

Rescue Circles
Groups formed by Spiritualists for the purpose of "waking up" the dead and freeing them from their earthbound state. These spirits exist closer to the material plane than to the spiritual world and in many cases they do not realize that they are dead at all, and live in a state of bewilderment. If they are enlightened as to their true condition and if prayers are offered for them, they will progress to a higher existence. The origin of rescue circles may be traced to the Shaker communities of America.

The first such circles were held by the wife of a Col. Danskin of Baltimore and her other female acquaintances. The most renowned work was performed by a circle in Buffalo between 1875 and 1900 and by Carl Wickland and his wife.

The mediums in the Buffalo circle were Marcia M. Swain and Leander Fischer (a professor of music). The circle consisted of Daniel E. Bailey and his wife, Fischer's mother, and Aline M. Eggleston, the stenographer. The identity of the spirit brought to be "woken" was often verified but as the search for such proof entailed considerable labor and time it was, after a while, given up. The circle's work was described by D. E. Bailey in his book Thoughts from the Inner Life (1886). Twelve impressive records of these rescue séances were published in an appendix in Admiral Usborne Moore's Glimpses of the Next State (1911). Similar mission work was carried on by E. C. Randall, also in Buffalo. The medium was Emily S. French.

Carl Wickland and his wife worked on literally hundreds of cases and kept detailed records which were published in his 1924 book Thirty Years Among The Dead. The work of the Tozer rescue circle in Melbourne is described by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle in Wonders of a Spiritualist (1921).

Sources:

Research Institute for Psi and Psychics
The Research Institute for Psi and Psychics was founded in 1989 by Dutch parapsychologist Dick Bierman and others as a research organization to conduct theoretical speculation and laboratory experiments highlighting the relationship of psychic phenomena to biology, psychology, and physics. Last known address: Alexanderkade 1, NL-1018 Amsterdam, Netherlands.

Research Institute for Supersensonic Healing Energies (RISHE)
Branch of University of the Trees, founded by Christopher Hills in 1973 at Boulder Creek, California. RISHE is devoted to practical, applied research in subtle energy therapeutics. This includes such subject areas as radionics, radionics, homeopathy, Bach flower remedies, negative ionization, and healing with crystals and gemstones. Last known address: P.O. Box 644, 13151 Pine St., Boulder Creek, CA 95006.

Resurrection
The central claim of Christianity, that the pre-existent Son of God was incarnated in the man Jesus, that Jesus was the Christ (or Anointed One), and that Jesus died an agonizing death and three days later came back to life in the flesh. Underlying Christianity is a belief in the goodness of material creation and the necessity of a body for a human individual to be a complete person. Future existence will be in a "spiritual body," though there is some disagreement as to what the Apostle Paul means by that term (1 Cor. 15:44). Jesus in his resurrected body, as recorded in the gospel accounts and the books of Acts, had what appeared to be a physical body. He ate food and invited Thomas to touch his body. Again, he did extraordinary things such as suddenly appear in a closed room.

Many Spiritualists' and Christians' acceptance of Spiritualist claims have argued for "resurrection" in what might be termed an astral or light body, a non-corporeal body suitable for life in an existence analogous to earthly life but quite distinct from the material world.

As the theory of reincarnation has become the dominant belief within the New Age community, there has been an attempt to confuse the two terms both out of ignorance of Christian belief and in an attempt to lessen the tension in a society in which the majority believe in "resurrection" in a Christian sense.

Retrocognition
Term used in psychical research and parapsychology to indicate a form of extrasensory perception in which the subject obtains knowledge of some event in the past by paranormal cognition. This amounts to a kind of backward precognition. F. W. H. Myers combined retrocognition with his theory of "psychorrhagic diathesis" to explain the phenomena of haunting. It was also suggested that apparitions of the dead and visions of the future, owing to a curious inversion of time, may be amenable to retrocognition.

Retropsychokinesis
Retropsychokinesis (RPK) refers to the possibility of someone in the present affecting an event that occurred in the past. The study of possible RPK events grew out of the studies on psychokinesis (mind over matter) conducted by J. B. Rhine at Duke University. Rhine explored the possibility that human subjects could affect the roll of dice or the toss of coins. Rhine's experiments raised a variety of methodological issues involving assumptions about, for example, the behavior of a pair of dice tossed numerous times under "normal" conditions and what might constitute paranormal alteration of those conditions. They also raised questions about the nature of probability. More recently, Helmut Schmidt conducted similar experiments using an electronic random number generator, which ensured the randomness of the events being altered. The use of the random number generator greatly increased the sophistication of the experiments, and while laying to rest some of the questions concerning the Rhine experiments, it raised others, especially about the nature of time.

In the case of the random number generator, a series of numbers were generated and recorded, and the experiment was actually run at a later time. Subjects were then asked to force the choice which the random generation had already selected. After a series of experiments, and a variety of philosophical discussions about the nature of reality, causation, and the possibility of quantum indeterminacy, Schmidt concluded that his subjects seemed to be able to influence selected events in the past.

In the later 1990s, Matthew R. Watkins and Peter Moore of Cambridge University launched the RetroPsychoKinesis Project with the idea of continuing the work that Schmidt, now retired, had initiated. It is their understanding that the existence of the Internet has created a new possibility for testing Schmidt’s assertions that developed out of his two decades of work. It is Watkins’ belief that the use of the Internet can overcome a host of problems previously inherent in laboratory-based research and can eliminate many of the charges brought against parapsychology by the skeptics.

The use of the computer will allow a large number of subjects to be tested and unaltered ones to be screened out. By having the computer handle the numbers, the opportunity for fraud will largely disappear. A major problem will, however, be the distinguishing of RPK from precognition, the most obvious alternative explanation for any positive results once fraud is eliminated. It is yet to be seen if the project can produce any positive results and deal satisfactorily with the multitudinous methodological problems. Those wishing to participate in the experiments may contact the project at its Internet site at http://www.fourmilab.ch/rpkp/.

Sources:

Reuss, Theodor (1855–1023)

German occultist who recruited Aleister Crowley to the OTO (Ordo Templi Orientis). Reuss was a mysterious and controversial man. He was born on June 28, 1855 and lived in Britain during the 1880s and earned a living as a music-hall singer under the name Charles Theodore. He sang at fundraising concerts organized by the British Social League (of which he was an executive member) while acting as an undercover agent for the German Secret Service, spying on the Karl Marx family. Eleanor Marx considered him a vulgar and dirty man, and he was expelled from the league when his spying was discovered.

In 1902 Reuss was one of the three people named on the charter given by John Yarker for the establishment of a German Masonic lodge, which later emerged as the OTO. Reuss, then residing in England, most likely served as liaison between Yarker and Karl Keller, the German founder and leader of the order. Reuss became head of the OTO in 1905 after the death of Karl Keller and was from then on known by his occult name, Frater Merlin.

The most closely guarded secret of the OTO was that of sex magic, the use of sexual energy for occult purposes. In 1912 Crowley published The Book of Lies, which Reuss read and from one passage inferred that Crowley had discovered and was writing about this secret. Soon thereafter Reuss visited Crowley in London and begged him to conceal the secret, inviting him to enter the OTO as head of a British branch. The British lodge was duly launched under the name Mysteria Mystica Maxima.

In 1916 Reuss chartered a North American branch, which was organized as the Ancient Mystical Order of the Rosicrucians (AMORC), headed by H. Spencer Lewis. In the legal battles between the several American Rosicrucian groups, the connection with the OTO became a matter of great embarrassment to AMORC, but while denying any connection with Crowley or sex magic, it has continued to publish its charter from Reuss.

After World War II Reuss resided in Switzerland, where he claimed to be a grand master of a Masonic order. He became friendly with Heinrich Tränker, a member of a Rosicrucian society, who had links with other German occult groups such as the Fraternitas Saturni. Reuss retired as outer head of the order in 1922, a year before his death, and nominated Crowley as his successor.

Sources:

Reuter, Florizel von (1893—?)

Professor and director of the Master School for Violin at the Vienna State Academy of Music. His mother developed automatic writing, receiving messages in seventeen languages, many of them being evidential in character and often coming in mirror writing. In The Psychic Experiences of a Musician (1928), von Reuter gave a full analytical account of these phenomena.

His second book The Consulting Angel (1930), narrated the receipt of automatic-writing messages from a school friend of his mother’s, including over three hundred proofs of identity, all dealing with matters totally unknown to von Reuter and his mother. Ernesto Bozzano considered the book to be one of the most evidential publications of the time.

A third book, A Musician’s Talks with Unseen Friends (1931), is a record of automatic scripts received by von Reuter alone, dealing with ethical and philosophical matters, and given (as in the case of William Stainton Moses) by a band of communicators. Later von Reuter and his mother also developed direct voice and received apport phenomena in their own circle. Von Reuter lectured on psychic matters all over Germany and the British Isles. He was associated with Baron von Schrenck-Notzing in a series of experiments with the Schneider brothers.

Sources:

Review of Indian Spirituality

Indian monthly publication issued from 39 S.R. das Road, Calcutta 700026, India.

ReVision: A Journal of Consciousness and Transformation

Quarterly journal devoted to scholarly articles on consciousness and change in modern society. Typical subjects include interdisciplinary studies on Eastern and Western meditation and philosophy, mysticism, religion in contemporary transpersonal experiences, and research on higher consciousness. The journal is published by Heldref Publications (division of the Helen Dwight Reid Educational Foundation) in cooperation with the International Transpersonal Association. The editorial staff has included such distinguished individuals as Stanislav Grof, Stanley Krippner, Ralph Metzner, and Dr. Karan Singh. Heldref Publications is located at 1519 18th St. NW, Washington, DC 20036-1802. Online subscriptions to the magazine are available at http://www.heldref.org/.

Sources:

Revista de Parapsicologia (Brazil)
Bimonthly Brazilian publication (in Spanish or Portuguese) of Centro Latino Americano de Parapsicologia. Illustrated articles covered parapsychological phenomena and research. Last known address: Caixa Postal H.387, 05.000, Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Revista de Parapsicologia (Chile)
Annual publication of Laboratorio de Investigaciones Parapsicologicas in Chile. It gave national and internal news in the field of parapsychology; reviews of experiments, books and journals; and critical and bibliographical surveys. Last known address: Centro de Investigaciones Parapsicologia J. B. Rhine, Constitution 187, Santiago, Chile.

Revivals
Outbreaks of religious mass enthusiasm, often inspired by a new wave of spiritual fervor and/or in reaction to persecution. They have often been accompanied by a variety of paranormal manifestations, such as luminous phenomena, aerial music, miraculous healing, speaking in tongues, and prophecy. From June 1688 to February 19, 1689, five to six hundred prophets emerged in France (in Dauphiny and in the Vivaraz) as a result of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV and the consequent persecution of Protestants. Under its effect, eight thousand seers were counted in Languedoc in the first year. There hardly was a house that did not have its inspired orators. Even children prophesied in tongues unknown to them. Heavenly music was heard day and night in the air, tongues of fire were observed and, in at least one case, the ordeal of the pyre was harmlessly undergone by the entranced leader Claris. Cavalier, Roland, and Marion, the organizers of the insurrection, were all inspired orators. The army which they assembled chose its own chief by their gifts of the spirit.

The great Irish revival in 1859 and the Welsh revival in 1904 were accompanied by similar phenomena, especially the sound of unearthly music and the sight of inexplicable lights. The Reverend John Crapsey of Brookfield, Tioga County, was quoting the words of Jesus on the cross when: “a mighty invisible power seemed suddenly to possess him, and a luminous appearance scintillated upon and around his hand, shining with brilliant effulgence in the eyes of all beholders. Under an impulse which I could not resist, I sprang from the desk out upon the middle of the floor into the midst of the congregation. Fire and pillars of smoke and luminous light rose up bodily in our midst; men, women and even stammering children were seized, speaking with new tongues, and uttering prophecies. Prayers and exhortations were poured forth in abundance, and many of the congregation broke out into the most marvelous and heavenly singing.”

McLoughlin, in Modern Revivalism (1959) cites three great revival periods in the United States history, each lasting about a generation, each spurred on by national periods of intellectual and cultural conflict and change. The First Great Awakening (1725–1750) followed a period of colonial growth prior to the Revolution, featuring the immigration of the religiously persecuted. The Second Great Awakening (1797–1835), emerged as the new United States sought to establish its identity, expanding its political boundaries through western expansion.

The Second Great Awakening, in particular, emerged out of the rural camp meetings of Tennessee and Kentucky, on the western borders of the burgeoning United States. One of the most famous of these camps took place over five successive days in August of 1801. As many as 10,000 to 30,000 traveled to east of Paris, Kentucky from parts throughout the East and Midwest, to listen to ministers from the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist churches preach adherence to fundamental Christian ideals.

“. . . from rotting stumps, fallen tree trunks, horse-drawn wagons, and makeshift platforms, they sermonized and admonished, cajoled and exhorted, often all at the very same time. . . As many as 3000 to 5000 made their confessions of faith right there, many displaying involuntary physical convulsions as evidence of their heart-felt conversions: they jerked and twitched, barked and bayed, sang and chanted, cried like babies, and fainted dead away, often remaining unconscious for hours on end.”

The Third Great Awakening (1875–1915) followed the Reconstruction Period after the Civil War, as the country attempted to redefine itself as it moved toward the Industrial Revolution. Each of these Awakening periods swept through the growing nation, creating new sects, reviving old ones, and inspiring an infectious spiritual fervor. Among the most famous evangelists of the Great Awakenings included Charles Finney, Dwight Moody, and Billy Sunday, each paving the way for revivalists of future generations.

A peculiar form of revivalism is said to have arisen by the late twentieth century, culminating with the explosion of television evangelists in the politically conservative 1980s. Televangelists such as Oral Roberts, Jimmy Swaggert, Jerry Falwell, and Jim and Tammy Bakker reached huge audiences through broadcast and cable television, virtually recreating the Great Awakenings’ revivalist meetings in the American living room. These televangelists reflected much of the same fervor, fundamentalism, and showmanship of 19th century preachers. Scandals erupted among some of them in 1987, but by then the phenomenon of the televised revival had affixed itself to the modern cultural landscape. (See also Convulsionaries of St. Mâder; Pentecostalism; snake-handling; Tremblers of the Gevannes)

Sources:

Revue des Études Psychiques
French edition of the Revista de Studi Psihici, founded by Count Cesar Baudi de Vesme in 1899, after the death of G. B. Ermacora whom he succeeded in the editorial chair of the Revista de S.P. In 1905 it was amalgamated with the Annales des Sciences Psychiques, which ceased publication in 1924.
Revue Métapsychique

Official organ of the Institut Métapsychique Internationale (IMI). It was founded in 1920, with the IMI president Eugen Osty as editor. The review, which published parapsychological research in France and elsewhere, was discontinued in 1981. Back issues from the 1930s onwards are available from the Institut Métapsychique, 1 Place Wagram, Paris 75017, France.

Revue Scientifique et Morale du Spiritisme

Revue Spiritiste

Monthly journal founded by Allan Kardec in 1858, and for many years the official journal of the Spiritism, published in Paris. After Allan Kardec’s death, P. G. Ley-marie succeeded to the editorial chair. In the 1920s, it was directed by Jean Meyer and edited by Pascal Forthuny.

Rhabdic Force

Name given to the force which causes muscular contractions in the hands of sensitive while divising. The force can violently bend a hazel switch being used as a divining-rod, or oscillate a pendulum. Sometimes called “telluric force.”

Rhabdomancy

Term for divination by divining-rods. Deriving from Greek words meaning “a rod” and “divination,” it was thus alluded to by Sir Thomas Browne (1605–82): “As for the divination or decision from the staff, it is an augurial relic, and the practice thereof is accused by God himself: ‘My people ask counsel of their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them.’ Of this kind thereof is accused by God himself: ‘My people ask counsel of their stocks, and their staff declareth unto them.’ Of this kind was that practised by Nabuchadonosor in that Caldean miscellany delivered by Ezekiel.”

John Brand’s Observations on Poplar Antiquities (1777) cited a manuscript, John Bell’s Discourse on Witchcraft (1705): “They set up two staffs, and having whispered some verses and incantations, the staffs fell by the operation of demons. Then they considered which way each of them fell, forward or backward, to the right or left hand, and agreeably gave responses, having made use of the fall of their staffs for their signs.”

The practice is said to have passed from the Chaldeans and Scythians to the German tribes, who used pieces from the branches of a fruit tree, which they marked with certain characters and threw at hazard upon a white cloth. Something like this, according to one of the rabbis, was the practice of the Hebrews, only instead of characters, they peeled their rods on one side and drew the presage from their manner of falling. The Scythians and the Alani used rods of the myrtle and sallow, and as the latter chose “fine straight wands” according to Herodotus, it may be inferred that their method was that of the Hebrews, or some modification of it. (See also Aaron’s rod)

Rhampodomaney

Divination by means of opening the works of a poet at hazard and reading the verse which first presents itself. This is similar to bibliomancy, the well-known divination technique of opening a Bible at random and reading the verse on which the finger or other indicator lights as an oracular statement relative to the inquirer’s problem.

Rhisus (or Rhazes) (ca. 825–925)

Name given to the famous Arabian physician, chemist, and alchemist Abu Bekr Muhammed Ben Zakerrjah er-Rasi. His popular name “Al-Rhasus” (Man of Ray) derives from his birthplace of Ray, near Teheran, on the frontiers of Khorassan. He first studied philosophy, logic, metaphysics, poetry, and music, and became a skilled player on the lute. At the age of thirty, he began to study medicine and soon became one of the most famous physicians of his time. He was director of the famous hospital of Bhagdad, and a great many books on medicine, chemistry, and philosophy are ascribed to him.

He also wrote treatises on alchemy and the transmutation of metals. Some commentators have compared his intellectual attainments with those of Galileo and Robert Boyle. He had a great reputation for his insistence upon the importance of practical experiment over theory. He was one of the first experimenters to mention borax, orpiment, realgar, and other chemical compounds.

There is a probably apocryphal story that he dedicated an alchemical work to the Emir El Mansur, prince of Khorassan, who rewarded him with a thousand pieces of gold, but desired to witness a transmutation. Rhasis was by now an elderly man and his experiment was unfortunately unsuccessful.

El Mansur was enraged, and struck him with a whip, saying “I have rewarded you richly for your trouble, and now I must punish you for your affirmation of lies!” As a result, Rhasis was blinded. However, other explanations have been offered for his failing eyesight, including the claim that it resulted from an indigestion appetite for eating beans.

In his studies in chemistry he left some results of real value, notwithstanding the time and trouble he spent in the pursuit of the philosophers’ stone. Another theory which he held in common with Geber and others was that the planets influenced metallic formation under the earth’s surface.

Sources:

Rhine, J(oseph) B(anks) (1895–1980)

One of the pioneers of parapsychology and co-founder with William McDougall of the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University, Durham, North Carolina. He was born on September 29, 1895, in Juniata County, Pennsylvania. He studied at the University of Chicago (B.S., 1922; M.S., 1923; Ph.D., 1925) where he majored in botany. In 1920 he married Louisa Ella Weckesser, who as Louisa Rhine, also became a noted parapsychologist. After graduation Rhine became an instructor in plant physiology at West Virginia University (1924–26) before moving to Duke University where he would remain for the rest of his active career with the department of psychology.

Rhine’s interest in parapsychology grew out of his investigations of mediumship with Dr. Walter Franklin Prince at Harvard University in 1926. Rhine went on to Duke University the following year and studied psychic phenomena with William McDougall, head of the psychology department. It was Rhine’s training in plant physiology which gave him the idea that psychic faculties might be tested with scientific disciplines.

With the encouragement of McDougall, Rhine commenced a program for statistical validation of ESP (extra-sensory perception), a term he invented, working in collaboration with colleagues on the psychology faculty, with students as subjects.
The emphasis was first on clairvoyance and telepathy, transmitting images from sender to receiver, and the now familiar Zener cards, the simple symbols of cross, star, circle, square and waves assisting statistical evaluation of tests. Later work included experiments in psychokinesis using dice to test the ability of the human mind to affect movement of objects at a distance. Psychokinesis or “PK” has since largely displaced the term “telekinesis” formerly used in psychical research. The publication of Rhine’s monograph Experiential Perception by the Boston Society for Psychic Research in 1954 was a key point in the development of parapsychology as a scientific study, and opinion sharply divided on the validity of the work. Duke, like the rest of the academic world, was home to strong opposition to parapsychology. Thus Rhine and MacDougall were obliged to open a separate Parapsychology Laboratory in 1935 and seek outside financial sponsorship for research.

From 1937, Rhine launched the Journal of Parapsychology at Duke and settled down to create the basic foundational methodology and to generate the body of knowledge upon which laboratory parapsychology would build. In 1957 he led in the creation of the Parapsychology Association. He retired from Duke in 1965 and lost the power base that allowed him to operate the Parapsychology Laboratory. Three years before, in anticipation of the lack of support for parapsychology, he began the reorganization of the endeavor he had managed for the last three decades. He founded the Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man, an organization to continue his parapsychological work. The foundation established a new research facility, the Institute for Parapsychology.

Through the years Rhine authored a set of basic texts in parapsychology, still necessary reading for any one interested in the field. Though he published many impressive reports, he was repeatedly dogged by criticism that he ignored much of the negative data he had gathered and reported only the positive. Because of these flaws, Rhine’s work was not often taken seriously. He died February 20, 1980, at the age of 84. Shortly before his death he had been elected president of the Society for Psychical Research, a recognition of his monumental contributions to the field.

Financial support for the work at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University owed much to the generosity of Charles E. Ozanne who made regular financial gifts to support research. In 1960 he helped establish the Psychical Research Foundation at Duke Station, Durham, N.C., as an independent research center to investigate phenomena relating to survival of human personality after death as well as other aspects of parapsychology. Another generous donor in the field of parapsychology was the late Chester F. Carlson, inventor of xerography, whose financial support assisted the establishment of the Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man. Situated at Durham, N.C., this foundation made possible the transition from the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University to an independent world center for the study of parapsychology and related fields.

Sources:

Rhine, Louisa Ella Weckesser (1891–1983)

Pioneer worker in the field of parapsychology. She was born on November 9, 1891, at Sanborn, New York. She studied at the University of Chicago (B.S., 1919; M.S., 1921; Ph.D., biology, 1925). In 1920 she married Joseph Banks Rhine. Like her husband, she found parapsychology a much more intriguing field than biology, and began to work in the area from the 1930s. She became a staff member of the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University (1948–62) and then research director of the Institute for Parapsychology which superseded it as the research branch of the Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man. She was a charter member of the Parapsychology Association and co-edited the Journal of Parapsychology. She is known for her work on spontaneous psi cases, reports of which flooded into Duke University as the work of the Parapsychology Laboratory became known across the country. She studied the reports using categories and data coming out of the laboratory’s work. In this endeavor she in effect provided the laboratory’s transition from the older psychical research and the newer parapsychology that J. B. Rhine was developing. She authored a number of articles and books. She died March 17, 1983, at the age of 91.

In addition to substantial joint contributions to parapsychology, she and her husband also raised four children. Although committed to scientific disciplines in their parapsychology work, both the Rhines shared a humane and religious view of the implications of the subject.

Sources:

Rhine Research Center

The Rhine Research Center is a nonprofit organization devoted to parapsychological research and education. Established as the Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man in 1962 by J. B. Rhine and renamed in 1995, the RRC comprises two subsidiaries: The Institute for Parapsychology and Parapsychology Press. The institute is the research arm of the RRC, and its staff conducts experimental research into the apparently psychic (psi) functions of extrasensory perception (ESP) and psychokinesis (PK). As the designated successor to Rhine’s famous Duke University Parapsychology Laboratory, the institute maintains access to all records and other properties acquired by that laboratory during its three decades at Duke. The Parapsychology Press publishes the Journal of Parapsychology, a professional quarterly.
wide as a cornerstone of the professional parapsychological community, the RRC serves the lay public as a reliable resource of authoritative information on psi research. The center is supported through private funding and is sustained in part by memberships. It is currently directed by Richard S. Broughton, 402 N. Buchanan Blvd., Durham, NC 27701-1728. Website: http://www.rhine.org.

Ricerca Psichica (Journal)

The title which Luce e Ombra, the oldest Italian Spiritualist monthly, assumed in 1932.

Richet, Charles (1850–1935)

Pioneer psychical researcher, honored professor of physiology at the Faculty of Medicine in Paris, and winner of the 1913 Nobel Prize in Physiology and Medicine. He was also the honorary president of La Société Universelle d'études Psychiques, president of the Institut Métapsychique Internationale, and president of the Society for Psychical Research, London (1905).

Richet was born on August 26, 1850, and educated at the University of Paris. He had an initial personal experience in lucidity (paranormal knowledge) in 1872. He confessed that although it had tremendous effect on him, he lacked the requisite intellectual courage to draw conclusions. In 1875, while yet a student, he demonstrated that the hypnotic state was a purely physiological phenomenon which had nothing to do with magnetic fluids. "Following my article," he wrote of the result, "many experiments were widely made, and animal magnetism ceased to be an occult science."

A few years later, he published his studies in multiple personality. He sat with various mediums, including William Eglinton and Elizabeth d'Esperance, and in 1886–87 conducted many experiments in cryptesthesia with four subjects—Alice, Claire, Eugenie, and Leontine. Some were in a hypnotic, some in a waking state. They reproduced drawings enclosed in sealed envelopes. As a result of these experiments Richet formulated the theory of cryptesthesia in these words: "In certain persons, at certain times, there exists a faculty of cognition which has no relation to our normal means of knowledge."

He founded with Dr. Dariex the Annales des Sciences Psychiques in 1890, and two years later he took part in the investigation conducted by the Milan Commission with the medium Eusapia Palladino. The report admitted the reality of puzzling phenomena, expressing also the conviction that the results obtained in light, and many of those obtained in darkness, could not have been produced by trickery of any kind.

Richet did not sign the report and in his notes on it in the Annales des Sciences Psychiques carefully stated his conclusions as follows:

"Abundant and unsatisfactory though they were, it seems to me very difficult to attribute the phenomena produced to deception, conscious or unconscious, or to a series of deceptions. Nevertheless, conclusive and indisputable proof that there was no fraud on Eusapia's part, or illusion on our part, is wanting; we must therefore renew our efforts to obtain such proof."

He became convinced of the reality of materialization phenomena by his experiments with the medium Marthe Béraud (better known as Eva C.) at the Villa Carmen, Algiers, in General Noel's house. His report, published in the Annales des Sciences Psychiques (April 1906) aroused wide attention. He confirmed his experiments in later sittings at the house of Juliette Bisson and at the Institut Métapsychique of which, after the resignation of Professor Santoliquido, he was elected president. He was unable to detect Eva C.'s fraud which was conclusively revealed only in the 1950s. He conducted experiments with a number of different mediums including Franek Kluski, Jan Guzyk, and Stephen Osowiecki, both in Paris and Warsaw.

His book Traité de Métapsychique (1922; translated as Thirty Years of Psychical Research, 1923) summed up the experiences of a lifetime. The book was dedicated to Sir William Crookes and F. W. H. Myers. It became an article of a lifetime for his earlier skepticism. He stated in his work:

"The idolatry of current ideas was so dominant at that time that no pains were taken either to verify or to refute Crookes' statements. Men were content to ridicule them, and I avow with shame that I was among the wilfully blind. Instead of adorning the heroism of a recognized man of science who dared then, in 1872, to say that there really are phantoms that can be photographed and whose heart beats can be heard, I laughed."

He accepted cryptesthesia, telekinesis, ectoplasm, materializations, and premonitions as abundantly proved. On the other hand, he considered doubtful apports, levitations, and the phenomena of the double, which he had no opportunity to examine thoroughly. He was most emphatic in stating: "The fact that intelligent forces are projected from an organism that can act mechanically, can move objects and make sounds, is a phenomenon as certainly established as any fact in physics." As if to leave a loophole for more definite proofs on psychic photography, direct writing, apports, psychic music, and luminous phenomena he added, somewhat naively: "No one would have thought of simulating them if they had never really occurred. I do not hesitate to think them fairly probable, but they are not proven."

His struggle with the problem of survival was very interesting. He stated: "I admit that there are some very puzzling cases that tend to make one advocate a sign of survival of human personality—the cases of Leonora E. Piper's George Pelham, of Raymond Lodge and some others."

His basis for disbelief in survival was twofold: first, the human mind has mysterious faculties of cognition; second, these mysterious cognitions have an intimate relation to group themselves around a new personality. He explained:

"The doctrine of survival seems to me to involve so many impossibilities, while that of an intensive cryptesthesia is (relatively) so easy to admit that I do not hesitate at all. I go so far as to claim—at the risk of being confounded by some new and unforeseen discovery—that subjective metapsychics will always be radically incapable of proving survival. Even if a new case even more astounding than that of George Pelham were to appear, I should prefer to suppose an extreme perfection of transcendent cognitions giving a great multiplicity of notions grouping themselves round the imaginary centre of a factitious personality, than to suppose that this centre is a real personality—the surviving soul, the will and consciousness of a self that has disappeared, a self which depended on a brain now reduced to dust. . . ."

"But except in a few rare cases, the inconsistency between the past and the present mentality is so great that in the immense majority of spiritist experiences it is impossible to admit survival, even as a very tentative hypothesis. I could more easily admit a non-human intelligence, distinct from both medium and discarnate, than the mental survival of the latter." Treating of the so-called death bed meeting cases he stated: "Among all the facts adduced to prove survival, these even seem to me to be the most disquieting."

He did not accept the facts of materialization as proof of survival.

"The case of George Pelham, though there was no materialization, is vastly more evidential for survival than all the materializations yet known. I do not even see how decisive proof could be given. Even if (which is not the case) a form identical with that of a deceased person could be photographed I should not understand how an individual two hundred years dead, whose body has become a skeleton, could live again with this vanished body any more than with any other material form."

He called the phenomena of materialization absurd, yet true, and explained:
"Spiritualists have blamed me for using this word 'absurd'; and have not been able to understand that to admit the reality of these phenomena was to me an actual pain; but to ask a physiologist, a physicist, or a chemist to admit that a form that has a circulation of blood, warmth, and muscles, that exhales carbonic acid, has weight, speaks, and thinks, can issue from a human body is to ask of him an intellectual effort that is really painful."

In concluding his weighty Thirty Years of Psychical Research, he was assailed by doubts:

"Truth to tell—and one must be as cautious in denial as in assertion—some facts tend to make us believe strongly in the survival of vanished personalities. Why should mediums, even when they have read no spiritualist books, and are unacquainted with spiritualist doctrines, proceed at once to personify some deceased person or other? Why does the new personality affirm itself so persistently, so energetically, and sometimes with so much verisimilitude? Why does it separate itself so sharply from the personality of the medium? All the words of powerful mediums are pregnant, so to say, with the theory of survival: these are semblances, perhaps, but why should the semblances be there?" Then, again, as if repenting his doubts, he explained:

"Mysterious beings, angels or demons, existences devoid of form, or spirits, which now and then seek to intervene in our lives, who can by means, entirely unknown, mould matter at will, who direct some of our thoughts and participate in some of our destinies, and who, to make themselves known (which they could not otherwise do) assume the bodily and psychological aspect of vanished human personalities—all this is a simple manner of expressing and understanding the greater part of the metaphysical phenomena."

His next book, Notre Sixième Sens (1927; translated as Our Sixth Sense, 1929), was a courageous attempt to grapple with the problem of cryptesthesia. He conceived it physiologically as a new sixth sense which is sensitive to what he called the vibrations of reality. It is a sweeping theory that, in its implications, is nearly as far-reaching as the spirit theory.

In La Grande Esperance (1933), following an important monograph, L'Avenir et la Premonition (1931), he himself admitted that this vibratory theory is far from being sufficient for "there are cases in which il vaigerue one could suppose the intervention of a foreign intelligence."

"There were the cases of veridical hallucinations. Even there he could be preferred to fall back on the vibratory explanation but for the puzzle of collective veridical hallucinations in which "one is almost compelled to admit the objective reality of the phantom." That admission did not allow him to doubt that "in cases of simple veridical hallucinations there is an objective reality as well." Pursuing this line of reasoning, he stated: "It appears that in certain cases phantoms are also inhabiting a house. I hesitate to write this down. It is so extraordinary that my pen almost refuses to write but just the same it is true."

Still, after having analyzed the purely psychological phenomena, if the choice was between the spirit hypothesis and a prodigious lucidity he would lean towards the second. For that explained all cases, whereas the former, although it is the better one in a small number of cases, was inadmissible in many others.

The grand hope of humanity lay in psychical research, in that immense incertitude which we feel in face of its extraordinary, truly absurd phenomena.

"The more I reflect and weigh in my mind these materializations, hauntings, marvelous lucidity, apports, xenoglossia, apparitions and, above all, premonitions, the more I am persuaded that we know absolutely nothing of the universe which surrounds us. We live in a sort of dream and have not yet understood anything of the agitations and tumults of this dream.

"Everything came down to this:

"Either the human intelligence is capable of working miracles. I call miracles the phantoms, ectoplasm, lucidity, premonitions. Or assisting in our doings, controlling our thoughts, writing by our hand, or speaking by our voice there are, inter-blending with our life, mysterious, invisible entities, angels or demons, perhaps, the souls of the dead, as the spiritualists are convinced. Death would not be death but the entrance into a new life. In each case we hurl ourselves against monstrous improbabilities (inversesemblances), we float in the habitual, the miraculous, the prodigious."

Richet died December 3, 1935.

Sources:

Richmond, Cora L(inn) V(ictoria) (1840–1923)

The most famous American Spiritualist inspirational speaker and healer, variously known under her married names as Cora Scott, Cora Hatch, Cora L. V. Tappan, and Cora L. V. Tappan-Richmond. She was born April 21, 1840, a noteworthy event in that she had a veil (membrane) covering her face, an event often seen as portending a psychically aware life. She was named Cora, a seeress. Her family was attracted to Spiritualism and in 1851, as a child of eleven, she resided some months in the Spiritualist community headed by Adin Ballou at Hopevale and at the ranch community at Waterloo, Wisconsin. Passing into a trance while at Waterloo, she was controlled by the spirit of young Ballou. Two years later, she was appearing as a public speaker. At the age of sixteen she was famous, had traveled throughout the United States, often lecturing with great eloquence before scientists on randomly-selected subjects.

She married while still a teen, but soon got a divorce because of spousal abuse. She worked out of Baltimore for many years prior to moving to England in 1873. While in England, she delivered some three thousand lectures. Frank Podmore wrote of her in his book Modern Spiritualism (2 vols., 1902).

"That the flow of verbiage never fails is a small matter; Mrs. Tappan’s trance-utterances surpass those of almost every other automatist in that there is a fairly coherent argument throughout. Two at least of the subjects sent to her in 1874, ‘The Origin of Man’ and ‘The Comparative Influence of Science and Morality on the Rise and Progress of Nations,’ may be presumed to have been little familiar. But the speaker is never at a loss... Again, we find none of the literary arifices by which ordinary speakers are wont to give relief—there is no antithesis, no climax, no irony or humour in any form. And the dead level of style reflects a dead level of sentiment: there is no scorn or indignation, no recognition of human effort and pain, no sense of the mystery of things. The style is clear, as jelly is clear; it is the proto-plasm of human speech; and it is flavoured throughout with mild, cosmic emotions.

"Frequently at the close of an address Mrs. Tappan would recite an impromptu poem, again on a subject chosen at the moment by the audience. Some of these poems are strikingly melodious, and it is interesting to note how the melody continually overpowers the sense."

After her return to America, Richmond married William Richmond and settled in Chicago. She pastored the First Society of Spiritualists and he operated as her publisher and book agent. From her platform in Chicago she became one of the movement’s most famous leaders. In 1892, she officiated at the funeral of Nettie Colburn Maynard (also known as Henrietta S. Maynard), the medium who had worked with Abraham Lincoln. The next year she assisted in the founding of the National Spiritual Association of Churches and became its first vice president and a national lecturer through the first decades of the new century.

1311

She was equally renowned for her healing power and for her trance utterances. Of her excursions into the spirit world in trance she brought back recollections of an absorbing interest. She died January 2, 1923.

Sources:

Richmond, Kenneth Forbes (1888–1945)
Scottish writer and educational psychologist who assisted the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London, during the crucial years of World War II. He edited the Journal of the SPR (1939–45) and served as the Society’s part-time secretary (1944–45). Richmond was born on August 8, 1882, at Glenarmond, Scotland, and was educated at Glenarmond School. His wife, Zoe Richmond, was a sensitive who was tested by the SPR. His interest in psychical research was stimulated by the book Raymond: Or Life After Death by Sir Oliver Lodge (1916), which Richmond reviewed. He became a member of the SPR and investigated the phenomena of mediumship, especially the medium Gladys Osborne Leonard and her control, "Feda." He wrote a number of popular articles which appeared in newspapers and magazines, one book, Evidence of Identity (1939), and several articles in the Proceedings of the SPR. He died November 30, 1945.

Sources:

Richmond, Thomas (1796– ?)
United States Senator, a leading man of Chicago, and also a medium. He was author of the book God Dealing with Slavery (1870), which told the story of his psychic influence which, along with that of Henrietta S. Maynard, prevailed upon Abraham Lincoln to abolish slavery.

Richmond, Zoe Blanche Russell (1888–1986)
She joined the Society for Psychical Research in 1922. Subsequently she developed the faculty of automatic writing and was herself the subject of SPR experiments. She contributed a number of articles to Light (published by the London Spiritualist Alliance), and published Evidence of Purpose (1958), in which she reviewed purposive messages through mediums from deceased individuals.

Sources:

Ridley, Hazel (Hurd) (ca. 1900– )
American direct voice medium of Buffalo, New York. Her psychic development began at the age of 18. “Grey Wolf,” an American Indian control, manifested in trance and declared that the medium would develop voices. She did. The voices were of a curious, whispering quality, coming from her larynx alone with no function of her mouth, lips, or tongue.
Wilson G. Bailey, a physician of Camden, New Jersey, wrote in his book No, Not Dead; They Live (1923): “I filled her mouth with water and then with salt, and still the voice came through without interruption or impediment and I also punctured her arm when in trance, and though I drew blood she did not feel any pain.”
Ridley toured the American continent and paid three visits to England, the first in 1926, the second in 1931, and the third in 1952. While hailed by some, she also encountered strong opposition to her performances. Spiritualist author H. Dennis Bradley, not known for his critical appraisals, caustically condemned her performance as fraudulent rubbish in his book... And After (1951). Against Bradley’s comments stands the testimony of Will Goldston, one of the renowned professional magicians in Europe, that she had genuine powers. In Death Unveiled, Mrs. D. U. Fletcher, wife of a senator from Florida, described how through Ridley’s mediumship a violin was restored to its owner after thirty-seven years.

Sources:
Bailey, Wilson G. No, Not Dead; They Live. N.p., 1923.

Rinaldo des Trois-Echelles du Mayne (d. ca. 1571)
A much-dreaded French sorcerer of the reign of Charles IX, who, at his execution, boasted before the king that he had in France three hundred thousand confederates, whom they could not burn—meaning, perhaps, the demons of the witches sabbat. Trois-Echelles is cited in Jean Bodin’s De la démonomanie des Sorciers.

Sources:
Ringger, Peter (1923–)
Swiss author who has written on parapsychological subjects. He was born on February 1, 1923, in Zürich, Switzerland, and he studied at Zürich University (Ph.D., 1948). In 1950 he became editor of the journal Neue Wissenschaft, in which he published a number of his own articles. In 1951 he founded and became the director of the Swiss Society for Parapsychology (Schweizer Parapsychologische Gesellschaft). Ringer is cited for having contributed his financial resources to the building of Swiss parapsychology.

Sources:

Ring of Thoth
The Ring of Thoth is a contemporary Norse Pagan association founded shortly after the disbanding of the Asatru Free Assembly in 1987. The Asatru Free Assembly had been the first and most prominent organization attempting to revive the acknowledgment of the pre-Christian deities once generally worshipped throughout Germany and the Scandinavian countries. The Ring of Thoth was founded by Edred Thorsson (Stephen Edred Flowers) and James Chisholm as an explicitly non-racist organization dedicated to the promotion of the religion of the Germanic peoples. (During the 1980s racism was a persistent charge leveled against groups promoting Norse Paganism.) It sees itself as taking a more liberal and scholarly approach than that taken by the other major group formed somewhat simultaneously, the Asatru Alliance. In other respects it continues the beliefs and practices of the former Asatru Free Assembly. The Ring allows considerable variation in belief and practice but is united by a common loyalty to, or “Troth” with, the Norse gods and goddesses; a respect for the religious, cultural, and historical heritage of the Northern Europeans; and a commitment to the virtues of Courage, Truth, Honor, Loyalty, Discipline, Hospitality, Industriousness, Self-reliance, and Steadfastness. Membership is open to all regardless of racial or ethnic background or sexual orientation, and the Ring is opposed to racist definitions of the Germanic Heathen people. The Asatru religion emerged from the experiences of the pre-Christian Germanic peoples of pre-Christian Northern Europe. While universalist in orientation, it would be impossible to understand without an appreciation of the cultural context that gave it birth.

The Ring of Thoth may be contacted at P.O. Box 25637, Tempe, Arizona, 85285. Its webpage can be found at http://asatru.knotwork.com/truth/index.html. Thorsson has authored several books on the Asatru traditions, especially on the magical practices associated with runes.

Sources:

Rinpoche
An honorific used in Tibetan Buddhism meaning “precious master,” now commonly encountered among Tibetan groups operating in the West.

Ripley, George (ca. 1415–1490)
British alchemist born in Ripley, Yorkshire, England, where his kinsfolk appear to have been powerful and numerous. He entered the Roman Catholic Church, became an Augustinian monk, and was subsequently appointed Canon of Bridlington in his native Yorkshire, a priory which had been founded in the time of Henry I by Walter de Ghent. Ripley’s priestly office did not prevent him from traveling, and he studied physical science and alchemy in France, Germany, and Italy, even voyaging as far as the island of Rhodes, where he is said to have made a large quantity of gold for the knights of St. John of Jerusalem.

Afterward he went to Rome, where he was dignified by the Pope, the result being that when he returned to Bridlington, he found his friends there intensely jealous of him. It was reported that he even resigned his position and retired to a priory at Boston, in Lincolnshire, but this story is probably unfounded, the likelihood being that Ripley the alchemist was confused with George Ripley, a Carmelite friar, who lived at Boston in the thirteenth century and wrote a biography of St. Botolph.

Ripley died in England in 1490, but his fame did not die with him; his name continued to be familiar for many years after his death. He was among the first to popularize the alchemical writings attributed to Raymond Lully, which first became known in England about 1445. An interest in alchemy was increasing steadily among English scholars at this time—the more so because the law against multiplying gold had lately been repealed.

Ripley wrote a number of learned treatises himself, notably Medulla Alchimiae, The Treatise of Mercury and The Compound of Alchemie (first printed 1591), the latter work dedicated to King Edward IV. A collected edition of his writings was issued at Kassel, Germany in 1649.

Sources:

RISHE See Research Institute for Supersensonic Healing Energies

“Rita”
Pseudonym of British novelist and Spiritualist Eliza M. Y. Humphreys, who died in 1938.

Rita, A.
British private medium, who only sat with friends, in darkness, without passing into trance, and kept up a running conversation throughout with apparitions who apparently brought their own light. In 1878, in a séance in Amsterdam, Holland, he impersonated the spirit entity “John King” and was exposed as a fraud and accomplice of the medium Charles Williams. Masks, false beard, and white muslin were found secreted on him.

Sources:

Rivers, Olivia Burnett (Mrs. Doris Wilmer Rivers) (1919– )
Assistant professor of psychology and a parapsychologist. She was born on June 16, 1919, at Booneville, Mississippi. She studied at Blue Mountain College, Mississippi (B.A., 1941), and Peabody College, Nashville, Tennessee (M.A., 1942). After graduation she taught at Southwestern Louisiana Institute, Lafayette (1942–44), the Woman's College, University of North Carolina, Greensboro (1944–47), and Mississippi State University (1947–49). In 1950 she joined the staff of the Parapsychology Laboratory, at Duke University.

Sources:

Rivista Di Studi Psychici (Journal)
The first Italian psychical research periodical, founded by Dr. G. B. Ermacora with Georgio Finzi in January 1895. The journal was carefully and critically conducted on principles analogous to those of the Proceedings of the Society of Psychical Research. After the death of Ermacora in 1898, Count Cesar Baudì de Vesme became its editor, publishing a simultaneous French edition (Revue des Etudes Psychiques) until 1905, when the journal was amalgamated with the Annales des Sciences Psychiques.

Robbins, Shawn (1945– )
Shawn Robbins, a popular psychic best known for her many prophecies, was born and raised in the Queens section of New York City, the daughter of a businessman. As a child, her clairvoyant and precognitive powers began to manifest. She recalls that on her 16th birthday her mother tested her abilities by hiding all of her presents around the house. She found them quickly by simply walking around the room and pointing to where they were. As a teenager she read widely in the available literature trying to understand her gift.

She did not complete high school, and after dropping out she joined a band. For the next five years she attempted to establish herself as a musician in an all-female band. She grew bored with the grind, however, and in the early 1970s settled in New York as a professional psychic. Her first job was as a consultant to a large cosmetics company, but eventually she opened an office and began to offer psychic readings to the general public. Her career took an upward swing after she opened an office and began to offer psychic readings to the general public. Her career took an upward swing after she began doing call-in talk shows answering questions and giving brief readings to the audience. Her appearances led to her being featured in the pages of the popular tabloid, The National Enquirer, which regularly ran features on psychic predictions. While largely dismissed by many in the psychic community, the coverage in the Enquirer made her a national celebrity. That celebrity status was confirmed by several outstanding successes. Then, while in Boston to do a talk show, she was contacted by the local police who used her in the pursuit of some money that had been hidden by several robbers. Her success in assisting with the find created another area in which she could apply her skills.

Many of the stories of her early adventures, including her prediction of Patty Hearst’s arrest in 1975, were recounted in her autobiographical volume, Ahead of Myself, in 1980. During the 1990s, Robbins expanded her occasional prophecies and focused her attention on the new millennium. The effort resulted in two books filled with prophecies for the twenty-first century. It is yet to be determined how accurate she is, but by the end of her life the record she has produced will provide a wealth of material for evaluation.

Sources:

One of the more famous British Spiritualist mediums of the mid-twentieth century. Born May 10, 1889, she claimed to have first seen a spirit at the age of ten. At school, she constantly heard voices and saw apparitions. Her parents scolded her for having a too-vivid imagination. At the age of fifteen, she was employed as a nursemaid, but the visions and voices followed her wherever she went. She married at the age of seventeen and later foretold her husband’s untimely death. After that she had a hard struggle to support her three children, and she took a job as a waitress, working from 7 a.m. until late at night.

One day a neighbor persuaded her to attend a Spiritualist service, where the clairvoyant said: “You are a born medium. You have great work to do in the world.” In due course, she became a medium, controlled by the spirit guide “Red Cloud.” She operated in complete darkness and manifested clairvoyance, clairaudience, direct voice, materialization, psychometry, psychic healing, trance oratory, automatic writing, and production of apports.

While hailed by Spiritualists, she would never allow trained observers to examine her work. She even gave a demonstration of Spiritualism in the August surroundings of the House of Commons in Britain, but she turned down a formal offer from the Society for Psychical Research to investigate her physical mediumship.

Estelle Roberts died in 1970.

Sources:

Roberts, Etta
American materialization medium. After being accused of fraud she held a remarkable test séance at Onset Grove, Onset Bay, Massachusetts, on September 3, 1891, before sixty people. She was enclosed in a wire cage. Phantoms not only appeared, but the medium herself was mysteriously brought out of the cage without disturbing the seals.

Many of the phantoms were seen to build up before the cage and also to transform into other shapes. The full account of the séance, signed by twelve people present, was published in the Banner of Light (September 1891). Paul Joire wrote a brief description of this test séance in Psychical and Supernormal Phenomena (1916).
Roberts, Jane (1929–1984)

Public name of Jane Butts, an American psychic who became the medium for communications from an entity named “Seth” who claimed to be a minor pope of the fourth century. In 1963, Roberts and her husband, Robert Butts, experimented with a ouija board and received the first “Seth” messages. Later, she started going into trance, and when “Seth” spoke through her, Roberts’s voice and features changed character. In her autobiographical work Adventures in Consciousness: An Introduction to Aspect Psychology (1975), Roberts gives the background and development of the “Seth” communications and discusses what she calls “aspect psychology,” based on the concept that human consciousness is mobile.

The “Seth” communications developed in various levels of awareness (Seth I, II, and III). They were tape recorded, and have been transcribed and published in a series of books, notably Seth Speaks: The Eternal Validity of the Soul (1972) and The Nature of Personal Reality: A Seth Book (1974). The popularity of the volumes led to the production of a series of texts through the 1970s and have been credited with generating a renewed interest in channeling so evident in the New Age movement of the 1980s. These communications cover a whole range of topics of concern to religious and metaphorical belief, from personal belief and development to mental and physical health, illumination, good and evil, sexuality, art, creativity, spiritual grace, and modern problems.

An early book by Roberts titled How to Develop Your ESP Power (1966) was reissued under the title The Coming of Seth (1976). It describes the day-to-day emergence of the personality of “Seth” and the experiments involved, with suggestions for experiments that readers can attempt. Roberts subsequently regarded this early book as occasionally naïve, reflecting her own inexperience at the time. It was supplemented by The God of Jane: A Psychic Manifesto (1981), discussing her early life, psychic experiences, and outook. Other “Seth” books include: The “Unknown” Reality (1977), The Nature of the Psyche: Its Human Expression (1979), and The Individual and the Nature of Mass Events (1981). Some of the “Seth” titles have been reprinted by Bantam in paperback. Roberts lived a quiet life in spite of the demands of a growing readership. She rarely spoke in public and refused all suggestions that she head a “Seth” organization. She died September 5, 1984, in her home town, Elmira, New York. The Austin Seth Center was formed to spread the ideas of the “Seth” Material; it also publishes the quarterly magazine Reality Change.

In Roberts’s posthumously published book Seth, Dreams and Projection of Consciousness (1986), her husband Robert Butts stated: “I think that I’ve had a number of waking and dreaming experiences in which Jane and I have communicated with each other since her physical death. So have others.”

Sources:

Robertson, Olivia (1917– )

Irish neo-pagan writer and painter who founded the Fellowship of Isis to revive worship and communication with the feminine principle in deity. She was born in London on April 13, 1917, and later worked as a play leader in Dublin Corporation playgrounds, Eire (1941–45). Her book St. Mulachy’s Court (1946) is based on these experiences. Other publications include Field of the Stranger (1948, a Book Society choice and also published in a Braille edition); The Golden Eye (1949); Miranda Speaks (1950); It’s an Old Irish Custom (1954); and Dublin Phoenix (1957). She has exhibited her paintings in Dublin.

Robertson founded the Fellowship of Isis at Clonegal Castle, Enniscorthy, Eire, in 1976, and subsequently has used her literary skills in service to the Fellowship.

Sources:

“Robert the Devil”

A popular thirteenth-century romance legend, known in France in both prose and verse forms as Robert le Diable. The story was printed in England ca. 1362 by Wynken de Worde (Caxton’s assistant) as Lyfe of Robert the Deuyll. According to the story, Robert was the son of a duke and duchess of Normandy. He was endowed with marvelous physical strength, which he used only for evil. Explaining to him the cause of his wicked impulses, his mother told him that he had been born in answer to prayers addressed to the devil. He sought religious advice and was directed by the Pope to a hermit, who ordered him to maintain complete silence, to take his food from the mouths of dogs, to feign madness, and to provoke abuse from common people without attempting to retaliate.

He became court fool to the Roman emperor, and three times delivered the city from Saracen invasions, having, in each case, been prompted to fight by a heavenly message. The emperor’s dumb daughter was given speech in order to identify the savior of the city with the court fool, but he refused his due reward, as well as her hand in marriage, and went back to the hermit, his former confessor.

Rocail

According to ancient Oriental legend, Rocail was the younger brother of Seth, the son of the biblical Adam. The circumstances of his history were picturesque and unique. A dive, or giant, of Mount Caucasus, finding himself in difficulties, applied for aid to the human race. Rocail offered his services to the giant, and these proved so acceptable that the dive made his benefactor his grand vizier.

For a long period Rocail successfully governed the giant’s realm and reached a position of dignity and honor. However, when he felt himself growing old, he desired to leave behind him a more lasting monument than public respect, so he built a magnificent palace and sepulcher. The palace he peopled with statues, which, by the power of magic, he made to walk and talk.

Sources:

Rochas d’Aiglun, Lt.-Col. Eugene Auguste-Albert de (1837–1914)

Prominent French psychical investigator, famous for his researches in human emanations, hypnotism, reincarnation, and physical phenomena. He served as attaché to the French General Staff during the Franco-Prussian War and was administrator of the École Polytechnique of Paris, but owing to his interest in occult investigations was forced to resign.

Rochas was the first writer to acquaint the French public with the claims concerning the od made by Baron von Reichenbach. His own experiments in the exteriorization of sensibility were preceded by those of Paul Joire, but he had unique observations to his credit.

He contributed new perspectives on the theoretical elucidation of the mystery of physical phenomena—the exteriorization of motricity. Rochas’s book of the same title, in which his theory is expounded, summed up his experiments with the medium Eusapia Palladino, who was his guest in his country house at l’Agnelas, near Voiron, and sat in the presence of a large committee of scientists. Much of this work, of course, has been discarded as psychical research discounted physical phenomena as largely the product of fraud.

The interest of Rochas extended to every branch of psychical research. As an investigator he was keen and competent. Charles Victor Miller, the San Francisco materialization medium, came to Europe at his request, although he did not sit for Rochas. Nor did Rochas succeed in witnessing full materialization of the medium. The second visit of Charles Bailey, the Australian apport medium, was arranged by him. Bailey came to Grenoble in 1910 and, as it turned out, was exposed as a fraud amid much excitement.

Sources:

Rochester Rappings

The outbreak of rapping that occurred in Hydesville, near Rochester, New York, in 1848, and which became popularly known as the "Rochester Rappings," was of peculiar importance, not because of its intrinsic superiority to any other poltergeist disturbance, but because it inaugurated the movement of modern Spiritualism.

Hydesville is a small village in Arcadia, Wayne County, New York, and there, in 1848, lived John D. Fox with his wife and two young daughters, Margaretta, aged fifteen, and Kate, aged twelve. Their house was a small wooden structure previously tenanted by Michael Weekman, who afterward claimed that he had frequently been disturbed by knockings and other strange sounds in the Hydesville house.

Toward the end of March 1848, the Fox family was disturbed by mysterious rappings, and on the evening of the 31st, they went to bed early, hoping to get some undisturbed sleep. But the rappings broke out even more vigorously than they had on previous occasions, and Mrs. Fox, much alarmed and excited when the raps manifested themselves, decided to call in her neighbors to witness the phenomenon.

The neighbors heard the raps distinctly and it was decided to try to communicate with the unseen forces. Questions were asked by the "sitters" of this informal séance—if the answer was in the affirmative, raps were heard, if in the negative, there was silence. By this means the knocker indicated that he was a ghost, the spirit of a peddler who had been murdered for his money by a former resident of the house.

The raps also answered correctly other questions relating to the ages of those present and other particulars concerning persons who lived in the neighborhood. In the few days immediately following, hundreds of people made their way to Hydesville to witness the marvel.

Fox’s married son, David, who lived about two miles from his father’s house, recorded a statement to the effect that the Fox family, following the directions of the raps, which indicated that the peddler was buried in the cellar, had begun to dig early in April, but were stopped by water.

Later, however, hair, bones, and teeth were found in the cellar. Vague rumors were abroad that a peddler had visited the village one winter, had been seen in the kitchen of the house afterward inhabited by the Foxes, and had mysteriously disappeared without fulfilling his promise to the villagers to return the next day. There was not a scrap of real evidence, whether for the murder or for the existence of the peddler, particulars of whose life were furnished by the raps.

Soon after these happenings, Kate Fox went to Auburn, and Margaretta to Rochester, New York, where her married sister Leah lived, and at both places outbreaks of rapping subsequently occurred. New mediums sprang up, circles were formed, and soon Spiritualism started.

Sources:

Rock Music

Soon after rock music began making an impact on youth during the 1950s it was denounced by parents, clergymen, educators, and others in positions of authority. The new music was antitraditional, antiauthoritarian, and disparaging of adult influence over teenagers. Pastors denounced it as evil—the product of Satan.

Rock music of the 1950s, however, did not prepare people for the upheaval of the 1960s and the open defiance against societal mores. In particular, the Rolling Stones’ image as a “bad boy” band continued the identification of rock music with anti-establishment values in contrast to the “tamer” persona exemplified by the Beatles. In 1967 the Rolling Stones released Their Satanic Majesties Request. This was a harbinger of future events—two years later on December 6, 1969, some 500,000 young people gathered for a free pop music festival at Altamont Raceway, California, featuring the band. The crowd heard Mick Jagger singing “Sympathy for the Devil” while Hell’s Angels, who had been engaged as bodyguards, beat up spectators and clubbed and kicked a man to death. After the event, no one was willing to take responsibility for the debacle.

Some rock bands turned up the power on their electric instruments and created the sound known as heavy metal, a name that seems to have been derived from a line in the 1968 Step- penwolf song, “Born to Be Wild.” One performer, Alice Cooper, moved into shock entertainment by integrating the occult, sadomasochism, and animal abuse in his act. The shock element developed from an unplanned event in 1969. During a concert in Detroit, Michigan, Cooper released some chickens into the audience at the close of his act. The audience killed them and tore them to pieces, a fact subsequently noted in the press.

A new connection between rock music and the occult was made in the late 1960s by another British band, Led Zeppelin. Formed in 1968, their first album went gold the next year. Guitarist Jimmy Page had a strong interest in magic and the occult and upon attaining fame and fortune purchased the house on Loch Ness once owned by Aleister Crowley. Crowley’s advocacy of drugs and sex magic had already earned him a reputation as a supporter of black magic and Satanism (though he was not into neither), and that image began to follow Page, Led Zeppelin, and the bands that followed their lead.

In 1970 Black Sabbath followed on the heels of the Rolling Stones and Led Zeppelin. In spite of lack of interest from radio stations and the music press, their first album hit the charts and remained there for 15 weeks. Other albums followed that kept the band popular for the next two decades. While its predecessors had some ties to the occult, Black Sabbath actively cultivated an image of evil and darkness—its image suggestive of a satanic mass and its use of black in their stage clothing and album covers. Lyrics explored mystical fantasy themes. Among the early members of the band was Ozzie Osbourne who would leave in 1979 and cultivate a more graphic satanic image.

Through the 1970s and 1980s, heavy metal was on the edge of the larger rock community as music expressing teenage rebellion in both England and the United States. As such, it was music enjoyed for a relatively few years before its followers reached adulthood. The music survived because there was always a new crop of teenagers entering the market each year. However, due to the rapidly changing audiences it was difficult for many bands to survive on top for more than five to seven years. In order to capture the attention of an audience with an increasingly short attention span, some bands moved into the most graphic portrayals of sex, sadism, and Satanism, themes that played predominantly to male teenagers.

Satanist themes dominated heavy metal lyrics and images, horrifying pastors and parents (even those raised on Elvis Presley and the Rolling Stones). These people saw heavy metal music as both a direct attack upon the mind and morals of their children and a new low in cultural degeneracy. Performers such as Ozzy Osbourne were singled out for particular criticism. After leaving Black Sabbath, Osbourne formed a new band that later released the albums Talk of the Devil (1982), Bark at the Moon (1983) with Osbourne as a werewolf on the cover, and Ultimate Sin (1984). Incidents in which teen delinquency was tied to listening to heavy metal rock received wide publicity and Osbourne was accused of instigating crimes and murder.

Another band drawn into the Satanism/anti-Satanism controversy was Judas Priest. They were accused of releasing albums that contained subliminal messages encoded into the songs via a process known as backward masking. A Reno, Nevada, couple charged that their son attempted suicide after listening to their Stained Glass (1978) album, which they argued contained subliminal messages ordering the suicide. The courts dismissed the case but not before rock music received a significant amount of negative publicity.

More contemporary groups that actively cultivated the satanic image include Slayer, a relatively unknown band on the rock scene whose albums covers include an inverted satanic pentagram as their logo and other satanic symbols (such as an inverted cross) and whose lyrics cultivate satanic and black magic themes. Slayer was considered extreme, but other bands such as the obscure Possessed to the more widely recognized Motley Crue (Shout at the Devil, 1983) also drew on satanic symbolism.

Contemporary rock has been criticized especially for the values it incorporates. However, to date, no valid evidence has been produced to link even the more objectionable form of heavy metal music as a causal agent to specific patterns of antisocial behavior or to long-term negative effects among devoted fans.

Sources:

Roerich, Gosta (1912– )

Swedish physician with special interest in psychical research. Born on May 11, 1912, at Kristianstad, Sweden, he later studied at Caroline Medical School, Stockholm (M.D., 1939). Before becoming the chief medical officer of the (Swedish) National Board of Education in 1959, he had been a practicing pediatri- cian (1948–53), a child psychiatrist, and school psychiatrist (1948–59). He was president of the Swedish Society for Psychi- cal Research for many years.

Sources:

Roerich, Helena (1879–1949)

Author and channeler, born in Russia on February 13, 1879. Roerich was not formally educated but early developed a love of reading that included serious works in philosophy. She married artist Nicholas Roerich in 1901. Both she and her husband had a leaning toward Theosophy, and soon after their marriage she came into contact with Master Morya, the teacher whom Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, the co-founder of the Theosophical Society, had heralded as the primary source of theosophical teachings.

In 1915 the Roerichs left Russia for England, but moved on to New York in 1920. Through the early 1920s Helena Roerich received the messages that would constitute her first book, Leaves of Morya’s Garden (a second volume appeared in 1925). Over the rest of her life she operated quietly as a channel and produced a host of books from Morya, including New Era Com- munity (1920); Infinity (2 vols., 1930); Hierarch (1931); and The Fiery World (2 vols., 1935–34). During these years her own work, which constituted the teachings of the Agni Yoga Society, founded in the mid-1920s, was overshadowed by that of her husband and his very public activities as an artist and peace advocate.

In 1929 she and her husband moved to the Punjab and lived near the Urauswati, the Himalayan Research Institute of the Roerich Museum. Through the 1930s she wrote letters on theological themes, which were assembled and published as Letters of Helena Roerich.

Sources:

---

Roerich, Nicholas Konstantin (1874–1947)

Versatile Russian-born painter, poet, writer, and mystic, and founder of the Agni Yoga Society. He was born in St. Petersburg on September 27, 1874, and educated at the University of St. Petersburg, becoming a graduate of the law school. He studied drawing and painting at the Academy of Fine Arts, St. Petersburg, and in Paris, France. In 1901, he married Helena Ivanov Shaposhnikov; they had two children. Both Nicholas and Helena Roerich were initially influenced by the theosophical writings of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, the co-founder of Theosophy, and later by Rudolf Steiner, founder of Anthroposophy, and Alice A. Bailey.

Between 1901 and 1904, Roerich made a pilgrimage through Russia during which he produced some 75 paintings, exhibited at La Purchase Exposition, St. Louis. From 1906 to 1910, he was director of the School for Encouragement of Fine Arts, Russia, president of the Museum of Russian Arts, first president of Aria Jacobs, and a leader in Moscow Art Theatre Diagilev Ballet.

The Roerichs escaped Russia at the time of the revolution and in 1920 migrated to the United States under the auspices of the Art Institute of Chicago. Roerich established a number of institutions with the aim of bringing humanity together through education, art, and culture. He traveled extensively and spent much time in Eastern countries, which strongly influenced his philosophy.

He exhibited his paintings in New York in December 1920. In 1921, he showed his work at the Institute of United Arts in New York. He took an active part in the foundation of Cor Arbus (Flaming Heart) by a group of artists in Chicago, and in September 1929, he associated himself with an international cultural center named Corona Mundi (Crown of the World), promoting cooperation among scientists and cultural workers in different countries.

In 1923, the Roerich Museum was inaugurated in New York, an occasion marked by President Calvin Coolidge with a greeting to the founders. Roerich was also concerned with the American-Russian Cultural Association. Although the Roerichs had left Russia after the revolution, they devoted much time to attempting to bring about friendly cultural relations between the newly-established Soviet Union and the United States. Their efforts were appreciated by the Soviet authorities. Georgi Chkikrin, a People’s Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, once described Roerich as “a half-Communist and a half-Buddhist.”

Roerich spent five years in Central Asia as head of an expedition, making 500 paintings. He took a great interest in United States agriculture at a time when soil erosion threatened the holdings of American farmers during the thirties. Roerich had established an institute at Uruuswati, in Kulu, India, and sent specimens of drought-resistant plants collected in Central Asia to botanical research agencies in the United States. At the suggestion of the U.S. Department of Agriculture he headed an expedition to collect seeds of plants that prevented the destruction of fertile layers of soil. He also headed a further expedition to Japan in May 1934 and later continued these studies in Manchuria.

Roerich was internationally accepted at a time when his mysticism and artistic talents ranked equally with his efforts to improve agriculture and to bring about world peace. He was honored by many counties, and awards included: Commander, 1st class, Royal Swedish Order of North Star; Grand Cross, Legion of Honor (France); Order of Saint Sava, 1st class (Yugoslavia); Commander of Order of Imperial Russians of St. Stanislas, St. Anne and St. Vladimir; medal of city of Brussels, Belgium (for plan of Roerich Pact and Banner of Peace). His Roerich Pact and Banner of Peace was signed by twenty-two Pan-American countries at the White House, Washington, D.C., in 1935.

Among his many artistic activities, he was responsible for a number of works for the Chicago Opera Company, for the Russian Ballet (scenario in Prince Igor), and for Konstantin Stanislavsky’s “setting of Peer Gynt.” He wrote libretto, and designed scenery and costumes for Sacre du Printemps, for which Stravinsky composed music. Ten Roerich Halls were established, in Paris, Belgrade, Riga, Benares, Bruges, Allahabad, Zagreb, Buenos Aires, Kyoto, and Praha. Roerich authored books on all of the artistic and social activities which he sponsored.

In all these activities, he was assisted by his wife Helena, who had in the meantime become a channel for Master Morya, one of the masters first brought forth by Blavatsky. Her channelled materials became the basis of what became known as Agni Yoga, a variation on theosophical teachings very much like those of Alice Bailey.

Roerich died December 12, 1947. The books of the Roerichs are kept in print by the Agni Yoga Society and the Roerich Museum, 519 W. 107 St., New York, NY 10025.

Sources:

---

Roessling, Bernhardt Emil (1892–1961)

Teacher who wrote on parapsychology. He was born on November 27, 1892, in Brussels, Belgium. He completed his doctorate at Louvain University, Belgium (1914), moved to the United States and became a language teacher at St. Joseph’s College, Philadelphia (1919–29), and was later an assistant to an agronomy professor at the University of Florida (1924–27) and a high school teacher in the Florida and Georgia public school systems (1929–52).

While in Florida he was executive secretary of the Florida Society for Psychical Research. During his retirement years, beginning in 1955, Roessling investigated mental and physical mediumship and contributed articles on psychical research to the Spiritualist periodical, Psychic Observer and Chimes.

Sources:
- Rofé, Fevzi Husein (1922– ).

  Author, teacher, orientalist, and advocate of Subud, an Indonesian mystical movement closely associated with the work of George I. Gurdjieff. He was born May 3, 1922, in Manchester, England and studied at the University of London. He traveled widely as a lecturer and teacher, particularly in Eastern countries, and became a fellow of the Royal Asiatic Society, London.

  During World War II Rofé served in the Royal Air Force (1940–45) and afterward became a teacher at the London School of Languages (1945–46). He moved to Morocco in 1947 as an interpreter for the British Consulate (1947–49) and was successively a teacher in government secondary schools, Djokjakarta, Indonesia (1950–54); a Turkish lycée, Nicosia, Cyprus (1955–56); a language tutor, University of Hong Kong (1956–60) and head of the translation service for the Asian Development Bank, Manila, Philippines, through the 1970s.

  He took special interest in spiritual healing and during his stay in Indonesia associated with the Subud movement, on which he published two books: Path of Subud (1959) and Reflections on Subud (1961). He also authored several other books out of his Asian wanderings and frequently contributed articles on psychical research and related topics to popular journals around the world.

Sources:

Rogo, David Scott (1950–1990)

Parapsychologist and writer on psychological, scientific, and psychic subjects. Rogo was born February 1, 1950, in Los Angeles and studied at the University of Cincinnati for a year before finishing his degree at San Fernando Valley State College (B.A., 1971). Originally a musician, he became a student of parapsychology and in 1968–69 coordinated an experimental course in parapsychology at the University of California, Los Angeles. He joined the American Society for Psychological Research and the Society for Psychological Research, London. Over the years he educated himself in parapsychology and became one of the important interpreters of its findings to the public.

As a professional writer, he regularly contributed to various psychic and New Age periodicals such as Fate and Psychic (renamed New Realities), for whom he became a review editor. He authored several papers for parapsychology journals, but is most remembered for his many thoughtfull books. He was tragically killed during a break-in at his apartment in Northridge, California on August 14, 1990. The Parapsychology Foundation has established the “D. Scott Rogo Award for Parapsychology Literature” in his memory.

Sources:

“Rohmer, Sax”

Pseudonym of British author Arthur Henry (Sarsfield) Ward, creator of the celebrated fictional character Dr. Fu-Manchu, and a student of the occult.

Roll, William George, Jr. (1926– )

Roll, a prominent parapsychologist, was born on July 3, 1926, in Bremen, Germany. He grew up in Denmark and studied at the University of California, Berkeley (B.A., 1949) and with Henry Habberley Price at Oxford University, England (B.Litt, 1960; M.Litt., 1961). While in England, he was president of the Oxford University Society for Psychical Research (1952–57). His Oxford researches covered the effects of hypnosis and the correlation of ESP with personality traits. With the help of the Parapsychology Foundation he was able to establish a laboratory and reading room for psi experiments at the university.

In 1957 he became Louis K. Anspacher Visiting Research Fellow at Duke University, Durham, North Carolina, and stayed on as a research associate at the Parapsychology Laboratory (1958–60). While at Duke he directed a research project on incorporeal personal agency concerned with survival (1960) and was a member of the editorial staff of the Journal of Parapsychology (1958–60). In 1958 he first investigated a poltergeist and launched himself upon the area of research with which he has become most identified.

While at Duke he also became a member of the founding council of the Parapsychology Association (1957) and was later the association’s treasurer (1958), secretary (1959–60), vice president (1965), and president.

In 1960 Charles Eugene Ozanne chose Roll to become the new project director of the Psychological Research Foundation. In 1986 the foundation moved from Durham, North Carolina, to the campus of West Georgia College, Carrollton, Georgia.

Beginning in 1963 Roll edited Theta, a quarterly journal for research on the problem of survival after bodily death; this publication ceased in 1991. He also authored more than 100 scholarly papers on parapsychological topics, edited eleven volumes of research in parapsychology for the Parapsychology Association, and authored thirteen books.

Sources:
Romains, Jules (1885–1972)
Famous French author who first studied the phenomenon of eyeless sight. Born Louis Farigoule on August 26, 1885, at Saint-Julien, Chapteuil in Velay, in the Haute-Loire district of France, he grew up in Paris. He was a talented scholar and received his bachelor’s degree by 1903. In that year Romains also had a sudden mystical experience of universalism, which he embodied in a philosophy he called “Unanism” and expressed in his book of poems La Vie Unanime (1908).
In 1909, he received his degree in philosophy and science, and became a professor of philosophy at the Lycée of Brest. He published more poems, a play, and a novel before World War I shattered his universalist hopes of human society. After the war he devoted much time to travel and writing. His book on eyeless sight is his only scientific work. First published in France in the early 1920s, it deals with his research in developing vision in blind people through a little-known faculty of perception usually associated with psychics. The book was ridiculed by his colleagues and he was refused access to subjects for experiments. He abandoned his scientific research, and under the name “Jules Romains” became a universally acclaimed poet, dramatist, and novelist. He is best known for his vast series of novels surveying the world scene from the beginning of the twentieth century, published in English as Men of Good Will in 27 volumes (1952–48). Romains died August 14, 1972.
The subject of eyeless sight was revived in the 1960s with the Soviet experiments in “fingertip vision” with Rosa Kuleshova, and Romains lived to see his own research taken up again by Dr. Yvonne Duplessis in France.

Sources:

Rome (Ancient Religion & Magic)
Magical practice was widespread among the ancient Romans. Magic was integral to their worship and operated as an organized system of magical rites for communal ends. Magic formed a foundation for thought and outlook upon the world, entered daily life, and directly affected many laws and customs. This ingrained tendency eventually developed into a broad polytheistic system, which led during bad times, especially in the later years of the Empire, to a frenzied search for new gods, borrowed from various countries Rome had conquered. In times of misfortune and disaster, the Romans were always ready to utilize a non-Roman deity if his or her favors promised more than those of their own deities. Although there was a strong conservative element in the popular, and the “custom of the elders” was strongly upheld by the priestly fraternity, this usually gave way before the momentary impulses of the people. Thus, as a rock shows its geological history by its differing strata, so the theogony of the Roman gods tells its tale of the race that conceived it. There are prehistoric nature deities, borrowed from indigenous tribes; gods of the Sabines, from whom the young colony stole its wives; gods of the Etruscans, and of the Egyptians, Greeks, and Persians. The temple of Jupiter on the capitol contained the altar of an ancient deity, a stone-god, Terminus, the spirit of boundaries. In the temple of Diana of the Grove, a fountain nymph was worshiped. Additional instances of this kind abound.

Belief in Spirits
In addition to the gods, the spirits needed to be propitiated. Indeed the objects offered to the Roman for veneration were seemingly numberless. Apuleius gave a description of popular supernaturalism when he told of a country road where one might meet an altar wreathed with flowers, a cave hung with garlands, an oak tree laden with horns of cattle, a hill marked by fences as sacred, a log rough-hewn into shape, an altar of turf smoking with libations, or a stone anointed with oil. Every single action of man’s daily life had a presiding spirit, as did commerce and husbandry. Edna was concerned with eating and Potina with drinking. Other spirits oversaw departures, travel, approaching adverse coming, in another country. Mercurius reigned as the spirit of gain and Pecunia of money. Farmers had to pay attention to the spirits of cutting, grinding, sowing, and bee-keeping. A deity presided over streets and highways. Cloacina served as goddess of the sewers, while the lowly Mephitis was the spirit of bad smells. Spirits of evil, such as Robigo, the spirit of mildew, also had to be propitiated by pacificatory rites. In Rome there was an altar to fever and bad fortune.
From the country came Silvanus, god of farms and woods, and his fauns and nymphs with Pitus, the woodpecker god who fed the twins Romulus and Remus with berries. Each deity or spirit possessed some influence, and had to be approached in a proper rite. The names of these spirits were inscribed on tablets, insidigintata, which were in the charge of the pontiffs (priests), who thus knew which spirit to evoke according to need. Most of these spirits were animistic in origin.

Rites and Worship
Worship in ancient Rome consisted largely of magical rites destined to propitiate the powers controlling human beings, to bring people into touch with those powers, to renew life and the land that supported it, and to stop that process of degeneration constantly set in motion by evil influences. Everything connected with worship typified this restoration. The priests, who represented the life of the community, were therefore bound by strict observances from endangering it in any way. Rules as to attire, eating, and touch were numerous. Sacrifices were systematized according to the end desired and the deity invoked.
Worship instructions designated the age and gender of all animal sacrifices; oxen were to be offered to Jupiter and Mars, and swine to Juno, Ceres the corn-goddess, and Silvanus. At one shrine, a pregnant cow was sacrificed and the ashes of the unborn young were considered to be of special magical efficacy. Even human sacrifice existed within historical times. After the battle of Cannae, the Romans sought to divert misfortune by burying two Greeks alive in the cattle-market, while in the time of Julius Caesar, two men were put to death with sacrificial solemnities by the pontiff and flamen of Mars. Again, in the time of Cicero and Horace, boys were killed for magical purposes. Fire possessed great virtue and was held sacred in the worship of Vesta, in early belief Vesta being the fire itself; it presided over the family hearth; it restored purity and conferred protection. Blood had the same quality and, smeared on the face of the god, symbolized and brought about the oneness of the deity with the community. On great occasions the statue of Jupiter was treated thus: the priests of Bellona made incisions in their shoulders and sprinkled the blood upon the image. The face of a triumphant general was painted with vermilion to represent blood.
Kneeling and prostration brought one into direct contact with the earth of the sacred place.
Music was also used as a means of incantation, probably deriving its origin in sounds made to drive away evil spirits. Dancing too was of magical efficacy. In Rome there were colleges of dancers for the purposes of religion, youths who danced in solemn measure about the altars, who, in the sacred month of Mars, took part in the festivals and were sent throughout the city dancing and singing. One authority stated that there were four kinds of “holy solemnity”—sacrifice, sacred banquets, public festivals, and games. Theatrical performances also belonged to this category, in one instance being used as a means of diverting a pestilence.
Sacred banquets were often decreed by the Senate as thanksgiving to the gods. Tables were spread with a sumptuous repast in the public places and were first offered to the statues of the gods seated around. The festivals were numerous, all of a magical and symbolic nature. In the spring there was the Parilia, when fires of straw were lighted, through which persons passed to be purified, and the Cenabalia, celebrated with sacrifice and offerings to Ceres, the corn-goddess, and followed by banquets. The Lupercalia, the festival of Faunus, was held in February and symbolized the wakening of spring and growth. Goats were slain as sacrifice and with their blood the Luperci, youths clad in skins, smeared their faces. They took thongs made of the goatskin and, laughing wildly, rushed through the city striking the crowd, Roman matrons believing that the blows thus received rendered them prolific.

Juno, the goddess of marriage and childbirth, also had her festival, the Matronalia, celebrated by the women of Rome. During festivals of the dead, the door leading to the other world was opened, the stone removed from its entrance in the Comitium, and the dark spirits who came forth were appeased with offerings. On these days, three times in the year, when the gods of gloom were abroad, complete cessation from all work was decreed. No battle could be fought nor ship set sail, neither could a man and woman marry. To the sacred games were taken the statues of the gods in gorgeous procession, chariots of silver, companies of priests, and youths singing and dancing. The gods viewed the games reclining on couches.

The chariot races also partook of the nature of rites. After the races, in the Field of Mars, came one of the most important Roman rites, the sacrifice of the October Horse. The right-hand horse of the victorious team was sacrificed to Mars, and the tail of the animal, running with blood, carried to the Altar of the Regia. The blood was stored in the temple of Vesta until the following spring and used in the sacrifice of the festival of Parilia. The sacrifice was essentially magical, all citizens present being purified by the blood-sprinkling and bonfire.

The Roman outlook upon life was largely colored by magic. Bodily foes had their counterpart in the unseen world—wandering spirits of the dead, spirits of oil, the anger of innocently offended deities, and the menace of the evil eye. Portents and prodigies were everywhere. In the heavens, strange things might be seen. The sun had been known to double, even treble itself, its light turn to blood, or a magical halo to appear round the orb. Thunder and lightning were always fraught with presage. Jove was angered when he opened the heavens and hurled his bolts to earth.

Phantoms, too, hovered amid the clouds. Upon the Campagna, the gods were observed in conflict, and afterward tracks of the combatants were visible across the plain. Unearthly voices were heard amid the mountains and groves and cries of portent sounded within the temples.

Blood haunted the Roman imagination. Sometimes it was said to have covered the land as a mantle, the standing corn dyed with blood, the rivers and fountains flowing with it, while walls and statues were covered with a bloody sweat.

The flight and song of birds might foretell the decrees of Fate; unappeased spirits of the dead were known to lurk near and steal away the souls of men, who then died. All these happenings were attributable to the gods and spirits, who, if the portent was one of menace, must be propitiated, if one of good fortune, thanked with offerings.

Down to later times, this deep belief in the occurrence of prodigies persisted. When Otho set out for Italy in 69 C.E., Rome rang with reports of a gigantic phantom rushing forth from the Temple of Juno and of the statue of Julius turning from east to west.

Divination and Augury

Divination was connected with Roman worship. There was a spot on the Capitol from which the augur, with veiled head, read the auspices in the flight of birds. Augurs also accompanied armies and ships and read the tidings of engagement entered upon. Divination was also practiced by reading the intestines of animals, by dreams, by divine possession, as in the case of the Oracles, when prophecies were uttered. These had been gathered together in the Sibylline Books and were consulted as oracles by the state. When the worship of fortune was connected the Lots of Praœneste. The questions put to the goddesses were answered by means of oaken lots a boy drew from a case made of sacred wood. The fortune-tellers also used a narrow-necked urn that, filled with water, only allowed one lot at a time to rise. Astrologers from Chaldea were also much sought after and were attached to the kingly and noble houses.

Familiar things of everyday life took on magical import. Words and numbers, especially odd ones, were of special significance. The Kalends, Nones, and Ides were so arranged as to fall upon odd days. Touch was binding, and so recognized in the law of Rome, as the grasp of a thing sold, from a slave to a turf of distant estate. Knotting and twisting of thread was injurious, so that women must never pass by cornfields twisting their spindles.

A strange sympathy existed between the trees and human-kind, and great honor was paid to the sacred trees of Rome. On the oak tree of Jupiter, the triumphant general hung the shield and arms of his fallen foe, while the hedges about the Temple of Diana at Nemi were covered with votive offerings. The trees also harbored the spirits of the dead who came forth as dreams to the souls of men. Pliny the Elder stated in this matter:

“Trees have a soul since nothing on earth lives without one. They are the temples of spirits and the simple countryside dedicates still a noble tree to some god. The various kinds of trees are sacred to their protecting spirits: the oak to Jupiter, laurel to Apollo, olive to Minerva, myrtle to Venus, white poplar to Hercules.”

These trees therefore partook of the nature of their presiding spirits and it was desirable to bring about communion with their magical influence, as in the spring, when laurel boughs were hung at the doors of the flamens and pontiffs, and in the temple of Vesta, where they remained hanging until the following year. Trees and their leaves were also possessed of healing and purifying value. Laurel was used for the latter quality after triumphs, when the spears and javelins of legionnaires were wreathed with their branches to purify them from the blood of the enemy.

Man himself had a presiding spirit, his genius, each woman her “Juno” and the Saturnalia was really a holiday for this “other self.” The Roman kept his birthday in honor of his genius. He would offer frankincense, cakes, and un mixed wine on an altar garlanded with flowers while making solemn prayers for the coming year. Cities and villages had their genii.

Beliefs About Death

Death was believed to be the life and soul enticed away by revengeful ghosts, hence death would never occur save by such agencies. The dead therefore must be appeased with offerings. Or else they wandered abroad working evil among the living.

One manifestation of this belief appeared in Ovid’s lines, “Once upon a time the great feast of the dead was not observed and the manes failed to receive the customary gifts, the fruit, the salt, the corn steeped in unmixed wine, the violets. The injured spirits revenged themselves on the living and the city was encircled with the funeral fires of their victims. The townsmen heard their grinds in complaining in the quiet hours of the night, and told each other how the unsubstantial troop of monstrous specters rising from their tombs, shrieked along the city streets and up and down the fields.”
Beans were used in the funeral feasts. They were supposed to harbor the souls of the dead, and the bean-blossom to be the souls of human beings visiting others in their sleep or the souls of the dead returning to earth. In Virgil much may be found on this subject. Lucretius tried to find a scientific reason for dreams; Cicero, although writing in a slightly manner of the prevalent belief in these manifestations of sleep, recorded dreams of his own.

Sorcery & Witchcraft

Sorcery in all its forms, from love-magic to death-magic, was rife among all classes, as were necromantic practices. There were charms and spells for everything under the sun. The rain-charm of the pontiffs consisted of the throwing of puppets into the Tiber. The charm against thunderbolts was compounded of onions, hair, and sprats. The charm against an epidemic required the matrons of Rome to sweep the temple-floors with their hair. There were many more charms, including the simple love-charm strung around the neck of the country maiden.

Witches were prevalent. The poets often chose these sinister figures for their subjects, as when Horace described the ghastly rites of two witches in the cemetery of the Esquiline. Under the light of the new moon they crawled about looking for poisonous herbs and bones. They called the specters to a banquet consisting of a black lamb torn to pieces with their teeth, and afterward these phantoms had to answer the questions of the sorceresses.

Witches made images of their victims and prayed to the infernal powers for help; hounds and snakes glided over the ground, the moon turned to blood, and as the images were melted so the lives of the victims ebbed away.

Virgil gives a picture of a sorceress performing love-magic by means of a waxen image of the youth whose love she desired. Lucan, in his Pharsalia, discusses Thessaaly, notorious in all ages for sorcery, and drew a terrific figure of Erichtho, a sorceress of illimitable powers, one whom even the gods obeyed, and to whom the forces of earth and heaven were bond-slaves.

Both Nero and his mother Agrippina were reported to have had recourse to the infamous arts of sorcery, while in the New Testament may be found testimony as to these practices in Rome.

The attitude of the cultured class towards magic is illustrated by an illuminating passage to be found in the writings of Pliny the Elder. He states, “The art of magic has prevailed in most ages and in most parts of the globe. Let no one wonder that it has wielded very great authority inasmuch as it embraces three other sources of influence. No one doubts that it took its rise in medicine and sought to cloak itself in the garb of a science more profound and holy than the common run. It added to its tempting promises the force of religion, after which the human race is groping, especially at this time. Further it has brought in the arts of astrology and divination. For everyone desires to know what is to come to him and believes that certainty can be gained by consulting the stars. Having in this way taken captive the feelings of man by a triple chain, it has reached such a pitch that it rules over all the world and in the East, governs the King of Kings.”

Roosevelt Spiritual Memorial Benevolent Association

The Roosevelt Spiritual Memorial Benevolent Association was founded in 1949 among independent Spiritualists as a corporation to hold church charters and ministerial credentials for otherwise autonomous congregations and mediums. The association promoted Spiritualism but held a minimum of beliefs, including the idea that Spiritualist communication with the deceased is taught by the Bible. It provided a study course in Spiritualism. Last known address: P.O. Box 68-313, Miami, FL 33138.

Rose

In ancient Rome, the rose, the flower of Venus, was the badge of the sacred prostitutes. The rose additionally symbolized silence. Eros, in Greek mythology, presents a rose to the god of silence. Things spoken under the rose or sub rosa were the secrets of Venus' sexual mysteries, later generalized to refer to keeping any secret. The use of red and white roses symbolized the sexually active and virginal goddess respectively and set the stage for the later Christian sexual symbolism possessed by the rose. That symbolism survives today in the predominating use of roses at weddings and as gifts for Valentine’s Day.

In Christian Rome it was the custom to bless the rose on a certain Sunday, called Rose Sunday. The custom of blessing the golden rose came into vogue about the eleventh century. The golden rose thus consecrated was given to princes as a mark of the Roman pontiffs’ favor. The Christian use of the older rose symbolism achieved its most artistic expression in the rose windows of the medieval cathedrals.

In the East, it was believed that the first rose was generated by a tear of the prophet Mohammed, and it was further believed that on a certain day in the year the rose had a heart of gold.

In the west of Scotland, if a white rose bloomed in autumn it was a token of an early marriage. The red rose, it was said, would not bloom over a grave. If a young girl had several lovers and wished to know which of them would be her husband, she would take a rose leaf for each of her sweethearts, and, naming each leaf after one of her lovers, she would watch them until one after another they sank, and the last to sink would be her future husband.

Rose leaves thrown upon a fire gave good luck. If a rose bush was pruned on St. John’s Eve, it would bloom again in the autumn. Superstitions respecting the rose are more numerous in England than in Scotland. The rose became a prominent symbol in occultism at the beginning of the modern age. It appeared on the family crest of Martin Luther, seemingly the ultimate source of the Rosicrucians’ juxtaposition of the rose and cross. Earlier it had been used in the symbolism of alchemy. Both pagan and Christian folklore cites the rose as a symbol of regeneration and love.

Sources:

Rose, Ronald K(riess) H(ume) (1920– )

Australian author who has investigated parapsychology and written extensively on the subject. He was born on March 9, 1920, at Lakenha, New South Wales, Australia. After many years of employment in public relations for the New South Wales Railways (1953–49) he returned to school and earned his degree at the University of Queensland (B.A., 1953). In 1957 he became an information officer of the Department of Territories, Commonwealth of Australia.

His special interest involved investigating parapsychology among the original peoples of Australia, New Zealand, and Samoa, about whom he wrote extensively. He and his wife appeared to have been the first to conduct ESP and PK tests with them.
Rosener's delusions were soon eclipsed by the infamous and sustained hoaxes of Gabriel Jogand-Pagès, who, under the name "Léo Taxil," claimed to have exposed Satanism in Freemasonry. This plot was double-edged, since it was also designed to embarrass and compromise the Catholic Church.

Rosetree, Rose

Rose Rosetree is an innovative teacher of physiognomy, the art of face reading, who has named her own system Face Reading Secrets. Following her graduation from Brandeis University, she became initially a student and then a teacher of transcendental meditation (TM). Among the highlights of her 15-year career was her pioneering the introduction of the TM program into the high school system of Miami, Florida, in the early 1970s. In 1974–75 she authored a syndicated column on meditation for newspapers in Massachusetts, and in 1981–82 she worked with the Environmental Protection Agency to develop a meditation program for its employees. This later program coincided with the challenge in the courts of TM's role in government agencies and its eventual banishment because of its religious nature. In 1986, Rosetree left the TM movement and began teaching independently.

During this time she began the study of physiognomy. She published her first book on the subject, I Can Read Your Face, in 1989. She continued to read widely in both the Chinese Siang Men and Western texts, only a handful of which had been written over the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Based upon her study and her own experiments in reading people's faces, she created her new system. This was also developed along with her abilities in reading the human aura, and greatly expanded the average person's ability to utilize aura reading skills.

Although teaching both physiognomy and aura reading, Rosetree, who resides in suburban Washington, D.C., has focused on teacher training, a key to spreading the practice of face reading, and upon application in the business world. The first book based upon her new system, The Power of Face Reading for Sales, Self-Esteem, and Better Relationships, appeared in 1998.

Sources:

Roscher, Grace (d. 1980)

Noted British exponent of automatic writing. She was an artist who exhibited miniature paintings in the Royal Academy, London. Her psychic talent became manifest after the loss of her fiancé Gordon E. Burdick, whom she had known for many years. In June 1956, he was serving in the Canadian Navy, stationed at Vancouver, and intended to come to London to marry Roscher. A week before sailing, he died.

Fifteen months later, Grace Roscher had written a letter concerning an aunt and was wondering if she had time to write another letter before tea-time when she had a strong urge to keep her hand on the writing pad. The pen began to move without her conscious volition, and she discovered to her astonishment that it had written a letter in the handwriting of her dead fiancé. In the course of time, many other such automatic letters followed, stating that this phenomenon would be the means of bringing other people to realize that life continues after death. Roscher was not a Spiritualist, and sought guidance from the Rev. G. Maurice Elliot, then secretary of the Churches’ Fel-
Rosicrucian Anthroposophical League

Rosicrucian Anthroposophical League

The Rosicrucian Anthroposophical League was founded in 1932 by Samuel Richard Parchment (b. 1881), an astrologer and occultist who trained with Max Heindel. During the 1920s, Parchment became a leader in the Rosicrucian Fellowship, founded by Heindel, which published his early writings. However, he broke away from the fellowship after Heindel’s death and formed an independent organization out of the former fellowship center in San Francisco. Parchment is best remembered as the author of a classic textbook, Astrology, Mundane and Spiritual, which was used by many astrologers not affiliated with the league and later reprinted by the American Federation of Astrologers. He also wrote a number of booklets that became league texts: The Just Law of Compensation; The Middle Path, the Safeguard of the Operative Masonry; and Steps to Self-Mastery.

The league strove to investigate occult laws, to practice the brotherhood of man, to disseminate spiritual truth, and to facilitate the attainment of self-conscious immortality by its members. During Parchment’s lifetime, league centers developed on both coasts, but in recent years little has been heard of it. Its present status is unknown. In the 1970s the New York League became the independent Auras Auset Society.

Sources:

Rosicrucian Digest

The Rosicrucian Digest, the outer organ of the Ancient and Mystical Order Rosae Crucis (AMORC), is one of the oldest occult magazines being published in the Western world, having been established in the early 1920s. The Digest continues The Rosicrucian Fellowship

An occult organization founded in 1907 by Carl Louis van Grashoff who used the pseudonym Max Heindel. Born in Germany in 1865, he came to America in 1895 and in 1904 was vice president of a Theosophical Society lodge in Los Angeles.

He claimed that during a visit to Europe in 1907 he met a mysterious occult Rosicrucian who took him to a Rose Cross temple on the borders of Germany and Bohemia, where he was initiated. Heindel expounded his version of Rosicrucian teachings, with obvious roots in Theosophy, in his book The Rosicrucian Cosmo-Conception (1909) and established various Fellowship Centers. He also founded the fellowship’s magazine Rays from the Rose Cross.

In 1911, the fellowship was established at Mt. Ecclesia, a plot of land in Oceanside, California, to disseminate Rosicrucian philosophy through books, magazines, lectures, and correspondence courses. The Oceanside headquarters now cover a vast estate with stucco temples, a healing department, and a vegetarian restaurant at nearby El Toro Marine base.

Much of Heindel’s teachings seem to derive from the lectures he attended of Anthroposophist Rudolf Steiner (1861–1925) in Germany during the 1900s, and Steiner, who saw himself standing in the Rosicrucian tradition, may have been Heindel’s mysterious Rosicrucian.

Heindel died in 1919, and his widow Augusta Foss Heindel became leader and director of the Fellowship until her own death in 1938. Another prominent official of the Fellowship during this later period was Manly Palmer Hall.

In 1995 the fellowship reported 8,000 members worldwide with 700 in the United States. Address: 2222 Mission Ave., Oceanside, CA 92054-0713. Website: http://www.rosecrucian.com/
Rosicrucians

The idea of a Rosicrucian brotherhood arose in the early seventeenth century and through the succeeding decades aroused considerable interest among those with occult leanings. In the absence of an organization to coincide with the early documents that presented the basic Rosicrucian myth, numerous occultists filled the vacuum and invented a new mystical life. Over the next centuries, books appeared to present the true Rosicrucian teachings; Rosicrucian degrees appeared in speculative masonry; and different Rosicrucian orders emerged. During the nineteenth century, fiction writers found the idea of Rosicrucianism a suitable topic for romantic novels, such as Bulwar Lytton’s Zanor, Percy Shelley’s St. Izyrne the Rosicrucian, and Harrison Amworth’s Aurul.

The name Rosicrucian is derived from rosa (a rose) and crux (a cross); the general symbol of the supposed order was a rose placed on the center of a cross. In a Rosicrucian book of the nineteenth century, there is a symbol of a red cross-marked heart in the center of an open rose, which the writer Arthur E. Waite believed to be a development of the monogram of Martin Luther, which was a cross-crowned heart rising from the center of an open rose.

History of the Brotherhood

Little was known concerning the Rosicrucians before the publication of Waite’s work The Real History of the Rosicrucians in 1887 (later revised and enlarged as The Brotherhood of the Rosy Cross, 1924). Waite’s writing on the Rosicrucians laid the groundwork for serious study of the subject. Prior to that, a great deal had been written concerning Rosicrucianism by people attempting to be Rosicrucians or representatives of the brotherhood, including the most questionable volume by Hargrave Jennings, The Rosicrucians: Their Rites and Mysteries (1870). It was typical of many writings regarding the fraternity of the Rosy Cross, as well as the Western Esoteric orders in general, in its notice of the volume, it dealt with practically everything under the sun except the Rosicrucians. In contrast, working as a critical historian, Waite gathered all that could be known regarding the Rosicrucians at that time. Assembling all the relevant manuscripts, some of which he discovered, he was the first to put together a believable account of the origins of this branch of the occult world.

The name Rosicrucian appears to have been unknown before the year 1598. The movement originated in Germany, where, in the town of Cassel in the year 1614, the public was surprised by the publication of a pamphlet bearing the title The Fama of the Fraternity of the Meritorious Order of the Rosy Cross Addressed to the Learned in General and the Governors of Europe.

It purported to be a message from certain anonymous adepts who were deeply concerned for the condition of mankind and who earnestly desired its moral renewal and perfection. It proposed that all men of learning throughout the world should join forces for the establishment of a synthesis of science, through which would be discovered the perfect method for all the arts. The squabbling and quarreling of the literati of the period were to be ignored, and the antiquated authorities of the old world to be discredited. It pointed out that a reformation had taken place in religion, that the church had been cleansed, and that a similar new career was now open to science. All this was to be brought about by the assistance of the illuminated Brotherhood, the children of light who had been initiated in the mysteries of the Grand Orient and would lead the age of perfection.

The fraternity supplied what purported to be an account of its history. The head and front of the movement was one C. R. C., a hierarch of the highest rank, who at age five had been placed in a convent where he studied the humanities. At age 15, he had accompanied one Frater (brother) P. A. L. on his travels to the Holy Land. To the great grief of C. R. C., Frater P. A. L. died at Cyprus, but C. R. C. resolved to continue the arduous journey himself.

Arriving at Damascus, he obtained knowledge of a secret circle of mystics, experts in all magic arts, who lived in an unknown city of Arabia called Damcar. Turning aside from his quest for the Holy Sepulcher, the lad made up his mind to trace these initiates and sought out certain Arabians, who took him to the city of Damcar. He arrived there at age 16 and was graciously welcomed by the magi, who told him they had long been expecting him, and related to him several occurrences from his past.

They proceeded to initiate him into the mysteries of occult science, and he quickly became acquainted with Arabic, from which he translated the divine book M into Latin. After three years of mystic instruction, he departed from the mysterious city for Fez, as the wise men of Damcar had instructed him to do. There he fell in with other masters who taught him how to evoke the elemental spirits.

After a further two years’ sojourn at Fez, his period of initiation was over, and he proceeded to Spain to confer with the wisest of that country and convince its professors of the errors of their ways. The scholars of Spain, however, turned their backs upon him with loud laughter and intimated to him that they had learned the principles and practice of magic from a much higher authority, namely, Satan himself, who had unsealed to them the secrets of necromancy within the walls of the University of Salamanca.

With noble indignation, the young man shook the dust of Spain from his feet and turned his face to other countries, only to find the same treatment within their boundaries. At last he sought his native land of Germany, where he pored over the great truths he had learned in solitude and seclusion and reduced his universal philosophy to writing. Five years of a hermit’s life, however, only served to strengthen him in his opinions and he continued to feel that one who had mastered the arts of alchemy, had achieved the transmutation of metals, and had manufactured the food of life was designed for a nobler purpose than rumination in solitude.

Slowly and carefully he began to gather assistants, who became the nucleus of the Rosicrucian fraternity. When he had gathered four of these into the brotherhood, they invented among them a magic language, a cipher writing of equal magic potency, and a large dictionary replete with occult wisdom. They erected a House of the Holy Ghost, healed the sick, and initiated further members, then, calling themselves missionaries, went to the various countries of Europe to disseminate their wisdom.

In course of time, C. R. C. died, and for 120 years the secret of his burial place was concealed. The original members also died one by one, and it was not until the third generation of adepts had arisen that the tomb of their illustrious founder was unearthed during the rebuilding of one of their secret dwellings. The vault in which this tomb was found was illuminated by the sun of the magi, and inscribed with magic characters. The body of the illustrious founder was discovered in perfect preservation, and a number of marvels were discovered buried beside him, which convinced the existing members of the fraternity that it was their duty to make these known to the world.

It was this discovery that immediately inspired the brotherhood to make its existence public in the aforementioned circular, and they invited all worthy persons to apply to them for initiation into their order. They refused, however, to supply their names and addresses, and asked those who wished for initiation to signify their intention by the publication of printed letters, which they would be certain to notice. In conclusion they assumed the public that they were believers in the reformed Church of Christ (i.e., Lutheranism) and denounced in the most solemn manner all pseudo-occultists and alchemists.

The Fama created tremendous excitement among the occultists of Europe, and a large number of pamphlets were published criticizing or defending the society and its manifestos, in which it was pointed out there were a number of discrepancies. To begin with, no such city as Damcar existed in Arabia. Where, it was asked, was the House of the Holy Ghost, which the Rosicrucians stated had been seen by 100,000 persons but was concealed from the world? C. R. C., the founder, as a boy of 15 must have achieved great occult skill to have astonished the magi of Damcar, skeptics said.

However, considerable credit was given to the Rosicrucian publication. The Confession of the Rosicrucian Fraternity, addressed to the learned in Europe, appeared one year later. This offered initiation by gradual stages to selected applicants, and revealed its ultra-Protestant character by what an old Scottish minister used to call "a dig at the Pope," whom it publicly excoriated, expressing the hope that his "asinine braying" would finally be put a stop to by tearing him to pieces with nails! This impassioned plea raised the Rosicrucian reputation among Roman Catholics.

A year later, in 1616, The Chemical Nuptials of Christian Rosencreutz was published, purporting to recount incidents in the life of a mysterious founder of the Brotherhood of the Rosy Cross. But the "chemical marriage" makes Christian Rosencreutz an old man when he achieves initiation, and this hardly squared with the original account of his life as given in the Fama. By that time a number of persons had applied for initiation but had received no answer to their applications. Since many believed themselves to be alchemical and magical adepts, great irritation arose with the brotherhood, and it was generally considered that the whole business was a hoax. By 1620 the Rosicrucians and their publication had lapsed into obscurity.

Numerous theories were advanced as to the probable authorship of these manifestos, and it is now known that these documents were written by Johann Valentin Andrae (1586–1654), a Lutheran pastor who had absorbed both occult and magical teachings as well as a desire for social change in Germany. His aim in producing the books seems to have derived from a plan to attempt the formation of a secret society that could encourage the reformation of values among the public, but it is not impossible that the documents were simply a hoax. It is most unlikely that they describe an actual organization existing in Germany in the early seventeenth century or that C. R. C. ever existed.

Rosicrucian Groups

So far as can be gleaned from their publications, the Rosicrucians (or the person in whose imagination they existed) were believers in the doctrines of Paracelsus. They believed in alchemy, astrology, and occult forces in nature, and their belief in these is identical to the doctrines of that great master of occult philosophy and medicine. They were thus essentially modern in their occult beliefs, just as they were modern in their religious ideas.

Waite thought it possible that in Nuremberg, in the year 1614, a society was founded by a mystic named Simon Studion, under the name Militia Crucifera Evangelica, which held periodic meetings in that city. Its proceedings were reported in an unprinted work of Studion's, and in opposition to many objects it was identical with the supposed Rosicrucian Society. "Evidently," stated Waite, "the Rosicrucian Society of 1614 was a transfiguration or development of the sect established by Simon Studion." But Waite's idea remains unsupported speculation.

In 1618 Heinrich Neuhaus published a Latin pamphlet that stated the Rosicruian adepts had migrated to India.

This pamphlet received little response until the nineteenth century, when some Theosophists proposed the notion that Rosicrucians still existed in the tablelands of Tibet. It was even alleged that the Rosicrucians developed into a Tibetan brotherhood, and exchanged their Protestant Christianity for esoteric Buddhism.

On a more serious level, in England the Rosicrucian idea was taken up by Robert Fludd (1574–1657), who wrote a spirited defense of the brotherhood; by the alchemist Thomas Vaughan (1622–1666), who wrote as Eugenius Philalethes and translated the Fama and the Confession; and by John Heydon (ca. 1629–1648), who furnished a succinct account of the meeting of the Rosicrucians in The Wise Man's Crown; or, The Glory of the Rose-Cross (1646). Heydon also wrote a variety of other treatises regarding alchemical skill and medical ability in By Persuasion; or, The English Physician's Tutor (1645), and A New Method of Rose Crucian Physick (1658). In France, Rosicrucianism was also widely discussed. It has been stated that there was a strong connection between Rosicrucians and Freemasons.

In Germany, Rosicrucianism became identified with various Pietist movements, movements that attempted to revive spiritual life above and beyond that to be found in the many parish churches. One Pietist leader was Johann Jacob Zimmerman, a theologian and occultist who emerged in the 1680s. Zimmerman also believed that Christ would return at some point in the 1690s. He found an apt pupil in Johannes Kelpius, whom he brought into the Pietist movement and with whom he organized a small disciplined brotherhood ready to accept William Penn's offer of a home in the American colonies. Zimmerman died before this small group of Rosicrucians could migrate, which they finally did in 1694. They arrived in Philadelphia on June 23, just in time to celebrate St. John's Eve.

The group settled on Wissahickon Creek in what is today the Germantown section of Philadelphia and there erected a cubic house with 40 foot sides and America's first astrological observatory on its roof. They believed that by observation of the heavens, they would be able to discern the first signs of Christ's anticipated arrival. Kelpius died in 1708, and soon thereafter, Christ having not returned, the group disintegrated. It became the basis of the continuing magic (or powwow) tradition in southeastern Pennsylvania.

Early in the eighteenth century another Rosicrucian impulse appeared in Germany. In 1710 a certain Sincerus Racatus, or Sigismund Richter, published A Perfect and True Preparation of the Philosophical Stone according to the Secret Methods of the Brotherhood of the Golden and Rosy Cross, and annexed to this treatise were the rules of the Rosicrucian Society for the initiation of new members.

Waite considered these rules additional indication of the society's existence at the period, and he believed that Richter's group continued the Nuremberg group originally established by Studion. In 1783 the publication of The Secret Symbols of the Rosicrucians of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries took place at Altona, showing, in Waite's opinion, that the mysterious brotherhood still existed, but this was their last manifesto. These bits of evidence are so scanty that any reasonable and workable hypothesis that such a society ever existed can scarcely be founded upon them.

Waite humorously stated that he was not able to trace the eastern progress of the brotherhood further than the Isle of Mauritius, where it is related and alchemist named Simon Studion, under the name Militia Crucifera Evangelica, which held periodic meetings in that city. Its proceedings were reported in an unprinted work of Studion's, and in opposition to many objects it was identical with the supposed Rosicrucian Society. "Evidently," stated Waite, "the Rosicrucian Society of 1614 was a transfiguration or development of the sect established by Simon Studion." But Waite's ideas remain unsupported speculation.
Rosicrucian Theories

Rosicrucianism fit into the stream of Gnosticism that emerged in the Mediterranean basin in the second century and coexisted with Christianity through the centuries. At times, as Manicheanism or as the Cathari, it attained a significant popular following, and in the late middle ages undergirded alchemy. From the Fama and Confession, it is possible to glean some definite ideas of the occult concept of the Rosicrucians. In these documents is included the doctrine of the microcosm, which teaches that man contains the potential of the universe. This is a distinctly Paracelsian belief. There is also the belief of the doctrine of elementary spirits, which many people wrongly think originated with the Rosicrucians, but which was probably reintroduced by Paracelsus.

The manifestos contain the doctrine of the Signatura Rerum, which is also of Paracelsian origin. This is the magic writing referred to in the Fama and the mystical characters of a book of nature, which, according to the Confession, stands open for all eyes but can be read or understood by only a very few. These characters, it is written, are the seal of God imprinted on the wonderful work of creation, on the heavens and Earth, and on all beasts.

It would appear, too, that some form of practical magic was known to the brotherhood. They were also, they said, alchemists, and claimed to have achieved the transmutation of metals and the manufacture of the elixir of life.

Modern Rosicrucianism

The flurry of interest in Rosicrucianism in the century following the initial announcement of the existence of a Rosicrucian Brotherhood was followed in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries by the development of speculative masonry, especially in Scotland, and the inclusion of Rosicrucian degrees amid the mass of others. Such Rosicrucian degrees survive to the present in the eighteenth degree, “the Rose-Croix,” of the Ancient and Accepted Rite and the RSYS degree of the Royal Order of Scotland. However, the first of the modern Rosicrucian organizations was founded around 1861 by Paschal Beverly Randolph (1825–1875). Randolph claimed that in the 1850s he traveled to France, made contact with the Rosicrucian Fraternity, and was named grand master for the Americas of the organization. Unfortunately, no independent record of the Rosicrucians with whom he met was available, and some doubt exists as to from whom he received his commission. What is known is that it is his founding the First Supreme Grand Lodge of the Rosicrucian Fraternity in San Francisco on November 5, 1861, just as the Civil War was beginning. Shortly thereafter, however, he left on a trip around the world, and then settled in Boston, Massachusetts.

Randolph’s travel required at least two reorganizations of the fraternity during his lifetime, the second in 1874 in Toledo, Ohio. Following Randolph’s death in 1875, he was succeeded by Freeman B. Dowd (1873–1907) and Edward H. Brown (1907–1922). In 1922 Reuben Swinburne Clymer, under whose leadership the order found a stabilized existence, established the present headquarters in rural Pennsylvania near Quakertown. Clymer was eventually succeeded by his son Emerson Clymer. The Rosicrucian Fraternity differs from other Rosicrucian groups in its refusal to advertise or engage in self-promotional activities.

In England the idea of Rosicrucianism was passed through the masonic orders and thereby came to Frederick Hockley. In 1865 a small group of masons founded the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (RSA; the Rosicrucian Society of England). (There is some hint of a “Rosicrucian” society having been founded in the 1830s, but its existence is somewhat shadowy.) The RSA published a small quarterly magazine, beginning in 1868 and continuing through the end of the 1870s, in which an early number stated that the society was “calculated to meet the requirements of those worthy masons who wished to study the science and antiquities of the craft, and trace it through its successive developments to the present time; also to coll the information from all the records extant from those mysterious societies which had their existence in the dark ages of the world, when might meant right.”

To join, it was necessary to be a mason. The officers of the society consisted of three magi, a master-general for the first and second orders, a deputy master-general, a treasurer, a secretary, and seven ancients. The assisting officers numbered a preceptor, organs, torchbearer, herald, and so forth. The society was composed of nine grades or classes. These objects were, however, fulfilled in a very perfunctory manner, if the magazine of the association is any criterion of its work. On this publication was filled with occult serial stories, reports of masonic meetings, and verse. Waite observed (though he seemed to be speaking in heightened hyperbole) that the most notable circumstance connected with this society was the complete ignorance that seemed to have prevailed among its members concerning everything connected with Rosicrucianism.

The prime movers of the association were Robert Wentworth Little (1840–1878); its first supreme master, Frederick Hockley; Kenneth Mackenzie, author of The Royal Masonic Cyclopædia (1877); and Hargrave Jennings, author of the famous text, The Rosicrucians: Their Rites and Mysteries (1870). A Metropolitan College was founded in London in 1866, and the Sec. Ros. in Scotia about the same time. Other colleges were later formed in the provinces. W. R. Woodman succeeded Little as grand magus in 1878. Mackenzie was named honorary magus, and gained many lectures to the society.

In 1891 William Wynn Westcott succeeded Woodman as supreme magus. Three years earlier, Westcott had become one of the founders of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn occult society, whose grade system and rituals drew heavily on Rosicrucian concepts. S. L. MacGregor Mathers, another of the Golden Dawn chiefs, founded a second order known as R.R. et A.C. (Rose of Ruby and Cross of Gold), supposed to be a British branch of a German occult order known as Ordo Rosae Rubae et Aureae Crucis. The Golden Dawn was regarded as the probationary order of the R.R. et A.C. and the initiation rite dramatized the Rosicrucian legend of Christian Rosenkreutz in his tomb. When executive disension arose in the Golden Dawn in 1901, member W. B. Yeats privately published a pamphlet titled Is the Order of R.R. & A.C. to Remain a Magus Order?

Meanwhile, in the United States, a set of Rosicrucian orders began to emerge. The first was the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, through the college in York. Like its British counterpart, one had to be a mason to join. Out of it grew the Societas Rosicruciana in America, founded in 1907, which opened its doors to non-masons. Founder Sylvester Gould was succeeded by George Winslow Plummer (1876–1944), under whose leadership the society flourished up to World War II. Plummer was succeeded by Stanislaus Wadowski (or de Witow). He was succeeded by Gladys Plummer de Witow and more recently, Lucia L. Grosch.

Also based in the Western occult tradition is the Ancient and Mystic Order of the Rosicrucians, popularly known by its acronym, AMORC. AMORC was founded in 1915 by H. Spencer Lewis, and after locating the headquarters in San Jose, California, in the mid-1920s, Lewis built the order into the largest Rosicrucian organization in the world with an aggressive program of advertising and recruitment and a popular correspondence course for members.

Several Rosicrucian groups grew out of the Theosophical Society and the teachings of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Rudolf Steiner, an early theosophical leader in German-speaking Europe. Steiner was the leading champion of a Christ-centered approach to Theosophy and integrated Rosicrucian ideals. In 1907 Louis van Grashof, known under his public name, Max Heindel, founded the Rosicrucian Fellowship. Heindel had attended Steiner’s lectures, and he incorporated Steiner’s ideas in his many books. The Rosicrucian Fellowship became an important force in reestablishing astrology in the West in this century. The Rosicrucian Fellowship became the source of several other Rosicrucian groups, including the Lectorium Rosricrucianum, the Rosicrucian Anthroposophical League, and the Ausar Auset Society, unique for its adaptation of Rosicrucian teachings to the needs of the African American community.

Sources:
Dickson, Donald R. The Teserean of Antida: Utopian Brother-Gardener, F. Leigh. A Catalogue Raisonnes of Works on the Oc-Mcintosh, Christopher. The Rosy Cross Unveiled. The History, Mythology, and Rituals of an Oc-now reprinted in facsimile together with an Introduction, Notes and a Translation of the letter of Adam Haselmeier. Societas Rosicru-ciana in Anglia, 1923.
Silberer, Herbert. The Hidden Symbolism of Alchemy and the Ocliam Rider & Son, 1924. Reprint, New Hyde Park, N.Y.: Un-

Rosma, Charles B.

Rosma, Charles B.

Claimed as the murdered peddler of Hydesville, New York, in 1848, when spirit rappings were heard in the Fox household.
The supposed source of the Rochester Rappings produced by the Fox sisters.

Rossetti, Dante Gabriel (1828–1882)

English author and painter Charles Dante Rossetti, commonly known as Dante Gabriel Rossetti, was born in London, May 12, 1828. His father was an Italian who had settled in England.

While yet a boy, Rossetti manifested artistic talent, and accordingly was sent to study drawing under John Sell Cotman.
Shortly afterward he entered the Royal Academy Schools. In 1848, he commenced working in the studio of Ford Madox Brown, during which time he began to show himself a painter of distinct individuality, while simultaneously he made his first essays in translating Italian literature into English and became known among his friends as a poet of rare promise.

Meanwhile, however, Rossetti was really more interested in painting rather than writing, and soon after leaving Brown’s studio he brought about a memorable event in the history of English painting by founding the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, a body consisting of seven members, whose central aim was to render precisely and literally every separate object figured in their pictures. Leaving his father’s house in 1849, Rossetti went to live at Chatham Place, Blackfriars Bridge, London, and during the next ten years his activity as a painter was enormous.

The year 1860 was a notable one in his career, as it marked his marriage to Eleanor Siddal. The love between the pair was of an exceptionally passionate order, and from it sprang Rossetti’s later sonnet sequence called The House of Life, published in 1881. However, Eleanor died in 1862. The loss of his wife preyed upon him persistently; he was tortured by insomnia and, in consequence, began to take occasional doses of the drug chloral. Gradually this practice developed into a habit, and it soon became evident that his death was imminent unless he gave up his addiction to the drug. He died April 9, 1882, at Bir-ching, near Margate, and his remains were interred in the cemtery there.

Rossetti had a marked bias for mysticism in various forms.
William Bell Scott, in his Autobiographical Notes (2 vols., 1892), told how the poet became at one time much enamored of table-turning. His temperament was unusually sensitive and poetic, and, once toward the close of his life he declared that he had “seen and heard those that died long ago.”

A belief in the possibility of communicating with the dead may have induced him on his wife’s death to have some of his love poems enclosed in her coffin. Whatever the truth of his poems, it is by his painting rather than by his poetry that Rossetti holds a place as a great mystic, for despite his fondness for precise handling, most of his pictures are essentially of a mystical nature. They embody the scenes and incidents beheld in dreams in a manner similar to the work of William Blake.

Rothe, Frau Anna (1850–1907)

German working woman who, after the death of her daughter’s fiancé in about 1892, developed mediumship. She constantly saw the deceased seated on the sofa in his accustomed attitude. She saw visions as a child, too, but soon physical phenomena also developed and Rothe soon specialized in apports of flowers and fruits in quantity. Her mediumistic career, however, was a stormy one and finally her fraud led to a sensational trial and a prison sentence.

Camille Flammarion held a séance with Rothe in May 1901, at his own apartment. He wrote:
“During its continuance, bouquets of flowers of all sizes did, truth, make their appearance, but always from a quarter in the room opposite to that to which our attention was drawn by Frau Rothe and her manager, Max Jentsch.

“Being well-nigh convinced that all was fraud, but not having the time to devote to such sittings, I begged M. Call to be present, as often as he could, at the meetings which were to be held in different Parisian salons. He gladly consented, and got invited to a séance at the Clément Marot house. Having taken his station a little in the rear of the flower-scattering medium, saw her adroitly slip one hand beneath her skirt and draw out branches which she tossed into the air.”

He also saw her take oranges from her corsage, and ascertained that they were warm.

“The imposture was a glaring one, and he immediately unmasked her, to the great scandal of the assistants, who heaped insults upon him. A final séance had been planned, to be held in my salon on the following Tuesday. But Frau Rothe and her two accomplices took the train at the Eastern Railway station that very morning and we saw them no more.”

Charles Richet stated in his book Thirty Years of Psychical Research (1929):
“The first time that I saw the surprising performances of Anna Roth, The ‘Blumen-medium,’ I was dazzled; at a second sitting I was perplexed; at the third I was convinced that the thing was a fraud. I asked Anna Roth to allow a more complete control which would have settled the question. She refused.”

The fact on which Richet based his belief in the imposture of Rothe was that he weighed her before the séance and after.
The difference was two pounds, exactly the weight of the ‘apported’ flowers. Therefore, he concludes, they must have been secreted about her person.
A serious exposure took place in Germany in 1902, as a result of which Rothe was kept in prison for over a year before the trial and was afterward sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment and a fine of 500 marks. Detectives posing as inquirers found 150 flowers and several oranges and apples in a series of bag-like folds in her petticoat.

At the trial, Judge Georges Sulzer, President of the Zurich High Court of Appeal, stated on oath that Rothe put him in communication with the spirits of his wife and father, who gave information unknown to any mortal. He also declared that the medium produced flowers in quantity in a room flooded with light. They came down slowly from above, and he saw four nebulous points on the hand of the medium condense into bonbons. Altogether forty witnesses, mostly doctors and professors, gave evidence on behalf of the medium. But the presiding judge concluded in the sentence:

"The Court cannot allow itself to criticize the spiritualistic theory, for it must be acknowledged that science, with the generality of men of culture, declares supernatural manifestations to be impossible."

In Die Zukunft (April 4, 1903), journalist Maximilian Harden criticized the sentence:

"Before the conclusion of the testimony one could not but ask: Does this Rothe case, taken as a whole, show the proofmarks of fraud? This question was answered by us in the negative; but the court answered it affirmatively after a short deliberation. The flower medium was condemned to imprisonment for a year and half—a strange transaction in an incomprehensible sentence. The court summons witnesses for the defence—dozens—although the proof-notes show that almost all testify to the same effect. They come, are sworn, and declare almost without exception ‘we feel ourselves in no way injured.’ The most say ‘we are convinced that no false representations were worked off on us by the Rothe woman.’ . . . But the sentence has been pronounced on Frau Rothe in the name of justice."

Sources:
Bohn, Erich. Der Fall Rothe. Breslau, 1901.

Roy, William (1911–1977)

Pseudonym of William George Holroyd Plowright, a notorious mediumistic fraud in British Spiritualist history. He boasted that he had earned £50,000 by cheating the bereaved and others who attended his fraudulent séances. He even made money out of publishing his own confessions. It is to the credit of the British Spiritualist movement that its members took the matter so seriously.

Roy's ingenious apparatus for fake mediumship is now in the register of births, deaths, and marriages in order to obtain detailed information about their relatives. When they visited his house for a sitting, they would be asked to leave their bags and coats outside the séance room. These were searched by a confederate for letters, tickets, balls, or other scraps of personal information. All the facts concerning sitters were recorded in a detailed card index system, and cleverly worked into Roy’s “psychic” messages during séances.

During the 1930s, his wife died and Roy married again. He had rich clients and lived in style, with expensive motorcars. He separated from his third wife in 1956.

Meanwhile in August 1955, after almost 20 years of mediumistic trickery, his activity was first exposed by veteran Spiritualist Maurice Barbanell (editor of Psychic News in an article in the journal Two Worlds). The exposure did not occur until after the widow quarreled with his accomplice, who left him and supplied evidence of fraud. Roy instituted libel proceedings, but withdrew the action in 1958.

In 1958, Roy unblushingly published his own confessions in the Sunday Pictorial newspaper. But he continued operating as a fake medium, using a new name “Bill Silver.” At the age of 58, Roy bigamously married Ann Clements. He finally died at Hastings, Sussex, suffering from cancer, leaving three children from his various alliances.

Roy’s ingenious apparatus for fake mediumship is now in the care of Scotland Yard, in a museum at the Metropolitan Police Detective Training School. After Roy’s death and twenty years after his original exposure, Barbanell devoted a whole front page of Psychic News (August 13, 1977) to the story of Roy’s frauds, illustrated by photographs of the apparatus and techniques used for fake mediumship.

Royal Priest Research

Royal Priest Research is an Arizona-based company that facilitates the channeling work of Lyssa Royal, one of the more prominent New Age channels to arise in the 1980s. During her college years in the late 1970s, Royal studied self-hypnosis and learned to enter altered states of consciousness for purposes of stress management. In the early 1980s, having completed her degree in psychology, she had a dream in which she was told that she would become a channel. She developed her skills over the next few years and began channeling professionally in 1985. She was one of the first and most successful of the New Age channels to rely primarily on information claimed to be from extraterrestrial sources.

Priest’s early work focused on the contactee and abduction phenomena and resulted in three books, The Prism of Lyra (1989), Visitors from Without? (1992), and Preparing for Contact: A Metamorphosis of Consciousness (1995), all written with Keith Priest, a musician, alternative health therapist, and independent researcher who works with Royal. These books explored the possibilities of human contact with space visitors through telepathic means and were among the first to suggest that the abduction experience was not necessarily negative, but could be used for personal and planetary evolution. Through the 1990s, Royal has become identified with the post-New Age channels operating out of Sedona, Arizona, and her work has frequently appeared in Sedona Journal of Emergence. Also working with Royal Priest Research is Ron Holt, Lyssa’s husband, who has been a leader in the Flower of Life organization headed by Drunvalo Melchizedek.

During the 1990s, Royal and Priest have continued to produce books based upon her channeling work. In 1997 Royal released a book, Millennium, in preparation for the changes she saw coming as the new century began. She offered a more mundane view of the changing times, noting that the millennium was a manmade marker that designates the collective recognition of a milestone of human life. However, she also believes in the post-New Age vision of coming human transformation. She views this as a movement from the third density state to the fourth density state. In the new state, humans will have a higher vibratory rate, will radiate more light, and the illusion of separation from the Divine will come to an end.

Royal Priests Research can be reached at P.O. Box 30973, Phoenix, AZ 85046. It has a website at http://www.royalpriest.com. Royal’s books have now been translated into many languages.

Sources:

Royce, Josiah (1855–1916)
Philosopher and a founding member of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was born on November 20, 1855, at Grass Valley, California. He studied at University of California (B.A., 1875) and later did graduate work at Johns Hopkins University (Ph.D., 1878) and in Germany at the universities of Leipzig and Gottingen. In 1880 he married Katharine Head. After his return from Germany he became an instructor in English literature and logic at the University of California. Then in 1882 he joined the Harvard faculty where in 1914 he was named Alford Professor of Religion, Moral Philosophy, and Civil Polity. He authored a number of books and professional papers.

As a prominent modern American philosopher, Royce investigated the problem of the individual self as part of the world mind. In part due to his friendship with William James, he became a founding member of the ASPR in 1884 and served as chairman and vice president of the Committee on Apparitions and Haunting Houses. The committee’s name was changed later to Committee on Phantasms and Presentiments; it classified cases sent in from individuals all over the United States and published his report in the first volume of the Proceedings of the ASPR. Royce died September 14, 1916, at Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Sources:
Royce, Josiah. “Report of the Committee on Phantasms and Presentiments.” Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research 1, 3 (December 1877); 1, 4 (March 1889).

RSP See Recurrent Spontaneous Psychokinesis

Rudhyar, Dane (1895–1985)
Musician, painter, poet, novelist, and one of the most important voices redirecting astrology in the twentieth century.

Rudhyar was born in Paris, on March 23, 1895. At age 12 a severe illness and surgery disabled him and he turned to music and intellectual development to compensate for his lack of physical agility. He studied at the Sorbonne, University of Paris (graduating at age 16) and at the Paris Conservatoire. His early ventures into philosophy and association with the artistic community in Paris led to his conviction that all existence is cyclical in character.

His music led him to New York in 1916, where he composed some of the first polytonal music performed in the United States. He also met Sasaki Roshi, one of the early Japanese Zen teachers in America, who led him into the study of Oriental philosophy and occultism. His interest was further stimulated by his association with Thesosophy, which began when he was asked to compose music for a production at the society’s headquarters in Los Angeles in 1929. Rudhyar became a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1926. He stayed in California (often commuting to New York) through the 1920s and in 1930 married Marla Contento, secretary to independent Theosophist Will Levington Comfort. Comfort introduced Rudhyar to Marc Edmund Jones, who in turn introduced him to astrology.

Rudhyar learned astrology during a period when he was also studying the psychological writings of Carl G. Jung, and he began to think in terms of bringing astrology and Jungian psychology together. The marriage overcame some basic problems of astrology, including its deterministic approach to life and the trouble of designating an agreeable agent to produce the astrological effects. Rudhyar postulated that the stars did not cause the effects seen in human life but were pictures synchronistically aligned to human beings. They detailed psychological forces working in individuals, but did not override human freedom in responding to those forces, he said. At first he called his new interpretation “humanistic astrology,” and at the ideas matured renamed it “humanistic astrology,” the subject of his monumental volume, The Astrology of Personality, published in 1936. A friend, Alice A. Bailey, encouraged the development of his thought and published his book.

Over the next two decades Rudhyar continued to write and lecture on astrology, but while he was honored within the astrological community he was little known outside of it. It was not until the 1970s, as the New Age movement emerged, that major publishing houses discovered him and began to publish his writings: among the first was The Practice of Astrology, published in 1970 by Penguin Books.

In 1969 Rudhyar founded the International Committee for Humanistic Astrology, a small professional society that would work on the development of his perspective. He began one of the most fruitful periods of his life, turning out several books a year for the next decade. He began to absorb the insights of transpersonal astrology, which concentrated on exploring altered and exalted states of perception, and by the mid-1970s had moved beyond humanistic astrology to what he termed “transpersonal astrology.” He also began to reflect upon the New Age movement and wrote several of the more sophisticated volumes on planetary consciousness and New Age philosophy.

He died September 15, 1985, in California.

Sources:
———. From Humanistic to Transpersonal Astrology. Palo Alto, Calif.: Seed Center, 1975.
Ruh Ve Madde (Journal)

Monthly journal (in Turkish language) of the Metaphysical Research Society of Turkey that covered Spiritualism, healing, astrology, UFOs, and parapsychology. Last known address: P.O. Box 1157, Istanbul, Turkey.

Rumi, Jalal al-Din (1207–1273)

A Sufi poet born in 1207 in Balkh (now Afghanistan). He taught the Sufi doctrine that the chief end of life is to emancipate oneself from human thoughts and wishes, human needs, and the outward impressions of the senses, so that one may become a mere mirror for the Deity. So refined an essence does one’s mind become that it is as nearly as possible nothing, yet while in this state it can, by a union with the Divine Essence, mysteriously become the All.

In his teachings, Rumi declared that names and words must not be taken for the things they represent:

"Names thou mayest know; go, seek the truth they name Search not the brook, but heaven, for the moon."

Nature figured largely in the imagery of Rumi’s poems. He also used the image of the reed-pipe, which figures largely in the symbolism of the Mevlevi order Sufism, popularly known as the whirling derwishes, which his followers bounded after his death in 1273.

Sources:

Runes

An ancient alphabet found in inscriptions on stone in Scandinavian countries. The runic alphabet belongs to the Germanic group of languages, but is related to Greek and Latin alphabets. The earliest inscriptions were pictured in the hands of the goddess Idun, the keeper of the gods’ magic apples of immortality. Dating from the 3rd century C.E., runic inscriptions have been found in areas between the Black Sea and the Baltic territories occupied by Goths as well as throughout Scandinavia.

At one point, Odin dies to acquire the runes for humankind, and, as men were expected to imitate his sacrifice, high praise was given to one who died in battle. In place of dying in battle, a Norse warrior might carve the runes on his body and bleed to death, that day thus being marked as a “red-letter day.”

Runes were inscribed on stone monuments to commemorate events and individuals as well as for magical purposes. They were also used on objects like brooches. Typical of runic inscriptions is the writing on an ancient Danish monument which reads: “Rolf raised this stone, priest and chieftain of the Helmaes dwellers, in memory of his brother’s son, Godmund. The men were drowned at sea. Aveir wrote (the runes).” A Norwegian monument indicates that runes were believed to give magical protection: “This is the secret meaning of the runes; I hid here power-runes, undisturbed by evil witchcraft. In exile shall he die by means of magic art who destroys this monument.”

The use of runic inscriptions has been revived in both the modern magical and New Age ideas and activities, and created a vast contemporary literature. Among the most popular, Ralph Blum has adapted runes for divination purposes. His publications The Book of Runes (1984) and Rune Play (1985) are issued in conjunction with a package of twenty-five runic letters on ceramic counters. These counters are “cast,” rather in the manner of a simplified I Ching system, to give oracular guidance on personal questions and decisions.

The concept of “casting the runes” also occurs in Western magical practice, where spells are inscribed on a slip of paper in runic letters, to be unobtrusively delivered to and accepted by the victim of the spell. This is brilliantly described in the short story Casting the Runes by M. R. James (included in More Ghost Stories of an Antiquary, 1911) in which one character takes a ticket-case belonging to the victim and places the slip of paper with the runic spell on it inside the case. He then hands it to the victim, implying casually that he must have dropped it. The victim recognizes the ticket-case as his own, and gratefully accepts it, so the runes are cast.

Sources:

Rupa

In theosophical teachings, rupa denotes form, appearance, or the physical body, the most gross of the seven principles of which personality consists. It is a term originating in Hindu philosophy denoting the subtle essence of form. (See also Mayavi-rupa.)

Rusalki

The lovely river nymph of southern Russian legend endowed with human beauty and the gentle characteristics of the Mermaids of northern European nations. Shy and benevolent, she lived on the small alluvial islands that stud the rivers or in the detached coppices of their banks. Her pastime and occupation was to aid in secret the poor fishermen in their laborious and precarious calling.

The rusalki (also spelled "rusalky" or "rusalka") were believed to have originated with young women who met an untimely death either by suicide, drowning, or murder by strangling or were not buried in holy ground. At times the rusalki would turn on people and kill them, especially young men who would go bathing in the streams without wearing a cross around their necks.

Little is known of these beautiful creatures, Thomas Kightley, a knowledgeable source in the lore of Fairies, says little of rusalki in his book The Fairy Mythology (1850) and gives only this brief notice: "They are of a beautiful form, with long green hair; they swim and balance themselves on the branches of trees, bathe in the lakes and rivers, play on the surface of the water, and wring theirlocks on the green meads at the water's edge. It is chiefly at Whitsuntide that they appear; and the people then, singing and dancing, weave garlands for them, which they cast into the stream."

Sources:

Rush, J(oseph) H(arold) (1911— )

Physicist and science writer who also studied aspects of parapsychology. He was born on April 17, 1911, at Mount Calm, Texas. He studied at the University of Texas (B.A., 1940; M.A., 1941) and Duke University (Ph.D., 1950). He worked as a physicist and teacher of physics through the 1940s, including work on the development of the atomic bomb during World War II, his acceptance of parapsychology came in part because of his early experiences of clairvoyance and precognition. He became a charter member of the Parapsychology Association. In the field of parapsychology, he has studied and written about the associative aspects of psi phenomena and the functioning of psi with ordinary sensorimotor activities. He has emerged as a sympathetic critic of the field and claimed that much of parapsychology had been wasted by scientists using incorrect methodologies.

Sources:

Rushton, William Albert (Hugh) (1901–1980)

Distinguished British physiologist who also took an active interest in parapsychology, becoming president of the Society for Psychical Research, London, (1969–71). Rushton was born on December 5, 1901. He was educated at Gresham's, Bolt; Emmanuel College, Cambridge and University College Hospital, London. He joined the faculty at Cambridge University in physiology and taught until 1968 when he moved to Florida State University as the Distinguished Research Professor in Psychobiology. Following his retirement in 1977 he was named emeritus professor of physiology.

He contributed to the Journal of Physiology and took a special interest in nerve excitation and vision. In the field of psychical research, his expert physiological knowledge stimulated inquiry into the possible mechanisms of ESP. He was critical about false assumptions or unscientific thinking in study of the paranormal, but maintained a keen interest in the subject and believed in the reality of some phenomena. He died June 21, 1980.

Ruskin, John (1819–1900)

Famous British author and critic born in London on February 8, 1819, who owed his belief in survival to Spiritualism. In Pre-Raphaelism and the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood by W. Holman Hunt (2 vols., 1913) there occurs the following conversation:

"When we last met," said Holman Hunt to Ruskin, "you declared you had given up all belief in immortality." "I remember well," Ruskin replied, "but what has mainly caused the change in my views is the unanswerable evidence of spiritualism. I know there is much vulgar fraud and stupidity connected with it, but underneath there is, I am sure, enough to convince us that there is personal life independent of the body, but with this once proved, I have no further interest in spiritualism."

Also during one summer in Switzerland Ruskin had a startling experience with a child who saw a ghost that had long been known to haunt a particular spot in the valley of Chamoix. He described the female spirit as having no eyes, but only holes where they were supposed to be.

Ruskin died January 20, 1900.

Sources:

Russell, Eric Frank (1905–1978)

Prolific science-fiction writer, who based some of his stories on the ideas and data of Charles Fort: British representative of the Fortean Society. Russell was born on January 6, 1905, at Sandhurst, Surrey, England. He spent his early years at military bases abroad before returning to England, where he had... a scientific and technical education. In the 1930s he published science-fiction stories, later serving in the Royal Air Force during World War II. He was active in promoting Fortean ideas at a time when Fort's books were little known in Britain and difficult to obtain.

His first major novel Sinister Barrier (1943), published serially in 1939, was built around the Fortean theme “I think we’re property,” suggesting that the inhabitants of Earth may be controlled by alien entities. His story Three to Conquer (1956) is a science-fiction treatment of the theme of psi powers.

With the decline of the Fortean Society, his enthusiasm waned and during the 1960s he also stopped writing.

Although never officially dissolved, the work of the Fortean Society was later taken over by the International Fortean Organization in North America and the Fortean Times in Great Britain. Russell died February 28, 1978.

Sources:

Russell, George W(illiam) (1867–1935)

Irish poet, essayist, and mystic, who wrote under the pseudonym “AE.” Born April 10, 1867, at Lurgan, County Armagh, Northern Ireland, his family moved to Dublin when he was ten, where he was able to attend Rathmines School. He had a natural talent for painting and attended the Metropolitan School of Art in Dublin, where he met William Butler Yeats, who introduced him to Theosophy. At that time, Russell earned his living by working as a clerk and soon began contributing poems and articles to The Irish Theosophist.

Theosophical teachings and the literature of Hindu philosophy opened his mind to heightened consciousness of Celtic myth and nature spirits. He painted visionary pictures of the Irish landscape.

He felt a strange impulse to call one of his paintings “The Birth of Aeon,” a Gnostic concept, and signed one of his articles “AEON.” A proof reader rendered this as “AE-?” and thereafter Russell used the initials for his poems. In 1894 he allowed some of his poems to be published as a book, Homeward: Songs of the Way, and the response thrust him to the fore of Ireland’s literary community. In 1913 the first edition of his collected poems was published.

He also wrote many political articles and became organizer for the Irish Agriculture Organization, successfully combining his mystical visions with everyday practical tasks, in the spirit of the ancient Hindu scripture, the Bhagavad Gita, a work which greatly impressed him. He edited the Irish Homestead for the Organization from 1906 to 1923. In 1923 he became the editor of the Irish Statesman in which he tried to steer a moderate course for the newly founded Irish Free States. He gave expression to his political idealism in two novels, The Interpreters (1922) and The Avatars (1932).

His major mystical book was The Candle of Vision (1918). His book Song and Its Foundations (1932) developed the mystical meditations of Candle of Vision and spoke of poetry as “oracles breathed from inner to outer being.” The Avatars: A Futurist Fantasy (1935) indicated his debt to Hindu philosophy. Russell died July 17, 1935.

Sources:

RUSSIA

Spiritualism was first introduced in Russia by people who had been introduced to the subject abroad, witnessing manifestations of psychic phenomena and acquaintance with the works of Allan Kardec, the French exponent of Spiritualism.

The new doctrine found its followers chiefly among the members of the professions and the aristocracy, finally including the reigning monarch of that time, Alexander II. Members of his family and entourage also became devoted adherents. Because of the immense influence of such converts, the progress of Spiritualism in Russia was made smoother.

Much of the spiritualist propaganda, manifestations, and publications were conducted under various ruses and deceptions such as the circulation of a paper entitled “The Rebus,” professedly devoted to innocent rebuses and charades and only incidentally mentioning Spiritualism, the real object of its being.

Among the distinguished devotees of the subject was Prince Wittgenstein, aide-de-camp and trusted friend of Alexander II, who not only avowed his beliefs openly but arranged for various mediums, including D. D. Home, to give séances before the emperor. The Czar was impressed, and, from that time onward he consulted mediums and their prophetic powers as to the advisability of any contemplated change or step in his life.

Another Russian of high position socially and officially was Alexander N. Aksakof, who interested himself in Spiritualism, arranging séances to which he invited the scientific men of the university, editing a paper Psychische Studien, translating into Russian the works of Emanuel Swedenborg and various French, American, and English writers of the same subject, thus becoming a leader in the movement.

Later, with his friends Boutlerof and Wagner, professors respectively of chemistry and zoology at the University of St. Petersburg, he specially commenced a series of séances for the investigation of the phenomena in an experimental manner and a scientific committee was formed under the leadership of Professor Mendeleef, who afterward issued an adverse report on the matter. This accused the mediums of trickery and their followers of easy credulity and the usual warfare proceeded between the scientific investigators and spiritual enthusiasts.

At the other extreme of the social scale, among the peasants and uneducated classes generally, the grossest superstition existed, a profound belief in supernatural agencies and cases were often reported in the columns of Russian papers. Stories abounded of wonder-working, obsession and various miraculous happenings, all ascribed to demoniac or angelic influence, or in districts where the inhabitants were still pagan to local deities and witchcraft.

The final years of the Romanov dynasty were dominated by the strange charismatic figure of the monk Rasputin, murdered shortly before the outbreak of the Russian Revolution of 1917. Grigory Yefimovich, a Siberian peasant who had entered a monastery at 18, but left, married and had 4 children. He became absorbed in a peculiar sect that promoted licentious behavior—"Rasputin" was the nickname he was given because it means, "debauched one." Rasputin entered the royal family in 1903 in the height of the popularity of the occult among the socially elite. He did not meet the royal family until 1905, but quickly gained favor particularly with the Czarina because he was able to help control the young Alexander’s bleeding due to his hemophilia. Evidence suggests that Rasputin engaged his hypnotic prowess to calm the child which resulted in easing the bleeding.

During the same period, Russian philosopher and mystic, Peter Demianovich Ouspensky, (1878–1947) who was a disciple of Georgei Ivanovitch Gurdjieff in connection with the Theosophy movement of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky began to rise to prominence in small elite circles of Europe. According to Peter Washington in his 1993 book, Madame Blavatsky's Bab- boon, the secret thought Ouspensky was tempted more by Luciferian visions of self-transcendence, dreaming of a humanity remade in the image of gods by its own strenuous efforts." Ouspensky was never officially a member of the Theosophical Society, which was banned in Russia until 1908. By 1914 who World War I began and the revolution in Russia became imminent, Ouspensky moved away from Theosophy. He was in an ongoing search to raise consciousness—his own and others—in order to understand why it was his belief, humans continued to relive past lives, and past mistakes.

In the modern era, especially during the 1960s, there was widespread modern interest in parapsychology in the USSR. Its property emerged again after the ultraconservative sciences of the Stalin era. One of the pioneers in this psychic renaissance was Leonid L. Vasiliev (1891–1966), who helped to establish the first parapsychology laboratory in the Soviet Union, at Leningrad. His book Mysterious Manifestations of the Human Psyche (1959) was published in the United States under the title Mysterious Phenomena of the Human Psyche (University Books, 1965).

One possible stimulus for Soviet interest in extrasensory perception (ESP) was the belief that ESP might have military significance. In 1959, a story was leaked in the French press that the United States Navy had experimented with telepathic communication between the atomic submarine Nautilus and a shore base.

Another surprising Soviet interest was disclosed in the readiness of the authorities to permit lectures and demonstrations by Hindu hatha yogis. This had nothing to do with prerevolutionary bourgeois cults of mysticism, but rather indicated willingness to learn about the alleged paranormal physical feats claimed for yoga. Russians have always placed great importance on physical training and sport. In addition, any system of physical culture that promised unusual feats of endurance or control of automatic nervous functions might also have relevance to the physical stresses involved in space travel.

By 1966 the Soviet Union was financing more than twenty centers for the scientific study of the paranormal, involving an annual budget of around 12 to 20 million rubles ($13 to $21 million). Soviet parapsychologists studied reports of such American psychics as Edgar Cayce, Jeanne Dixon, and Ted Serios, as well as the parapsychological research of J. B. Rhine and his colleagues.

Throughout the 1960s, Soviet parapsychologists investigated the phenomena of their own sensitives in such fields as dowings, psychokinesis, telepathy, psychic healing, and eyeless sight, such as Nina Kulagina in psychokinesis and Rosa Kuleshova who claimed abilities such as fingertip vision (eyeless sight) became widely known and discussed even outside the Soviet Union.

Perhaps because of such international publicity, Soviet authorities sporadically suppressed information on parapsychological research, while a backlash of dogmatic conservatism impeded parapsychology studies. The essentially practical investigations into paranormal faculties by Soviet scientists did hold out hope through the 1970s that they might achieve a real breakthrough in such fields of study.

In his book Psychic Warfare: Threat or Illusion? (1983), Martin Ebon claims that in the early 1970s the KGB took over extensive parapsychological research to attempt to identify psi particles in order to discover unknown communication channels in living cells for the transfer of information and to conduct follow-up studies on such subjects as hypnosis at a distance. On a popular level, interest has grown in such areas as thought-graphics and UFOs.

In the book Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain (1970), Sheila Ostrander and Lynn Schroeder revealed the wide range of Soviet research in parapsychology. Much of their book was based on firsthand interviews and observations during visits to the Soviet Union and other Eastern European countries. The book is useful as a record of information on individuals and organizations at the peak of Communist psychic research.

Eyeless Sight and Psychokinesis

Rosa Kuleshova, exponent of fingertip vision or eyeless sight, reportedly suffered from overexposure of her talent and for a time was accused of cheating before her strange abilities were reassured. Meanwhile, Abram Novemsky at the Nizhning Tagil Pedagogical Institute in the Urals experimented with graphic arts students; he claimed that one in six individuals could distinguish between two colors by fingertip vision. Yakov Fishelev of the Sverdlovsk Pedagogical Institute confirmed such findings and also experimented with subjects at the Pyshma school for the blind, starting with fingertip color recognition and then developing the ability to distinguish shapes of letters. S. N. Dobronravov of Sverdlovsk reported that he had found "skin sight" potential in 72 percent of children, mostly between the ages of 7 and 12.

At the Filatov Institute Laboratory of the Physiology of Vision, in Odessa, an experiment was conducted by Dr. Andrei Shevalev. His subject was Vania Dubrovich, an eight-year-old boy blind from early childhood, whose eyes and optical nerves had been removed. Shevalev attached a lens to Vania's forehead, and the boy learned to distinguish degrees of light through the lens. This experiment claimed to open up new possibilities of "skin glasses."

In the field of psychokinesis (PK), the unusual ability of Nina Kulagina to move small objects at a distance without contact was first discovered by L. L. Vasiliev, after Kulagina had demonstrated a talent for "skin vision." Vasiliev found that she could influence a compass needle by holding her hands over it. In further PK tests it was discovered that she could disturb or move objects at a distance. Film records were made demonstrating her PK ability. Among other feats Kulagina apparently changed the hourglass and made letters appear on photographic paper by mental force. In early reports, her identity was at first hidden under the pseudonym Nelya Mikhailovna.

In March 1988 Kulagina won a libel action against the magazine Man and Law, published by the Soviet Justice Ministry. Two articles by Vyacheslav Strelov published in the magazine described her as "a swindler and a crook." The Moscow court ruled that Strelov had no firm evidence on which to base his allegations, and the magazine was ordered to publish an apology. In a subsequent appeal to the Moscow city court, the district court's ruling was upheld: "the articles published by Man and Law besmirch the honor and dignity of Nina Kulagina and . . . it must publish an apology."

Recent Developments

In the freer atmosphere of public debate and expression of opinion arising from the Mikhail Gorbachev policy of glasnost, public support and discussion of psychic matters increased. Psychic healing received much attention, and the healer Barbara Ivanova treated many prominent officials. She has also undertaken distant healing through the telephone.

In the field of dowings and radiesthesia, Soviet scientists like G. Bogomolov and Nikolai Sochevanov have collected data... to support the reality of such phenomena. With recently developed techniques and apparatus, dowsers have been used to locate damaged cables, water pipes, and electrical lines, as well as underground minerals and water. One series of dowser tests suggested that women dowsers have a higher ability than men. Dowsing and radiesthetic work is now reported as the "biophysical effect."

Soviet experiments in telepathy are well advanced. Vasiliy studied spontaneous telepathy for nearly 40 years and collected hundreds of circumstantial accounts. In 1967 Yuri Kamensky in Moscow claimed to successfully relay a telepathic message to Karl Nikolaev in Leningrad; the message was in a form of Morse code. Other telepathy experiments involved the transmission of emotions, monitored by EEG records. A number of experiments were conducted to ascertain optimum conditions for telepathic transmission, involving a complex of touch, visualization, and thought.

Sometimes a biological sympathy between sender and receiver (heartbeat, brain wave, and similar synchronism) was found to facilitate transmission. Even the influence of high-frequency electromagnetic waves on telepathy was studied, while the biologist Vladimir Bekhterev experimented with telepathy between human beings and animals.

Development in Soviet parapsychology claiming a significant amount of attention in the 1970s was Kirlian photography, developed by Semyon D. Kirlian and Valentina C. Kirlian, as a method of photographing a corona discharge in human beings and other objects both living and inanimate. It was hoped that an auralike phenomena had been discovered, but the effects reported early in experimentation were later shown to be an effect of differential pressure placed on the film by objects being photographed.

In 1960 the Soviet Academy of Sciences declared that the search for UFOs was "unscientific." However it seems that reports of UFOs were closely studied, a matter of control of Soviet air space, and some Soviet researchers were prepared to consider the possibility of extraterrestrial intelligences.

Over the past two or three decades, there have been many reports of UFO phenomena from the USSR. On October 9, 1989, the Soviet news agency, TASS, astonished the world by reporting claims that a UFO had landed on the evening of September 27, 1989, in a park at Voronezh, a city of 900,000 inhabitants some three hundred miles southeast of Moscow, and that the UFO occupants had walked about and been seen by many people. The event is described in detail in Flying Saucer Review, vol. 34, no. 4, 1989.

The practical and scientific investigations of Soviet scientists into every major aspect of the paranormal was in sharp contrast to the more romantic interest of Western countries, where psychics demonstrate for entertainment. The down-to-earth Soviet approach into the how and why of the paranormal appeared to be yielding results with clearly practical applications.

The strong, and long-held folk traditions of the Russian people continue to emerge as the country re-shapes its identity. In his book, The Russian Challenge and the Year 2000, Russian ex-patriate Alexander Yanov, living in the United States since 1975, discussed the issues facing the country since the end of the Soviet Empire. He noted that, "Orthodox marxism has been exhausted as an ideological resource for the system, just as the ideology of tsarism was exhausted at the beginning of the twentieth century. Alternative ideological resources are not yet available to enable the empire to survive a 'systemic' crisis."

Published two years before the fall of the Berlin Wall, Yanov's book offered an interesting perspective while reform was being anticipated. As Russians continue to pursue a free, elective government, political reform will begin to shape other aspects of Russian life, as well. The curiosity that they still preserves its identity. Ruysbroek and his teaching gave rise to many voluminous commentaries throughout the Middle Ages, and he has attracted a number of great writers.
Ryerson, Kevin (1953– )

Kevin Ryerson is a contemporary channel who became nationally known due to his association with actress Shirley MacLaine, who wrote about her interaction with him in her international best-seller Out on a Limb (1983). Born in 1953, Ryerson’s childhood consisted of a number of psychic experiences, which he came to understand during his teen years in light of his study of occult literature. He joined a study group sponsored by the Association of Research and Enlightenment (ARE), through which he studied the Edgar Cayce materials and learned to meditate. One evening, during a meeting of his ARE study group, Ryerson slipped into a trance, and a voice claiming to be a spirit guide, “John,” began to speak through him.

The study group members became fascinated with “John” and with Ryerson’s channeling and began to tape the sessions. “John” identified himself as the biblical apostle John and said that he had returned to assist people in the transformational process and make them aware of the Christ within. Ryerson later sought out Richard Ireland, a Spiritualist medium from Phoenix, Arizona, and was eventually licensed as a minister by Ireland’s University of Life Church. In 1976 Ryerson became a full-time professional channel.

Ryerson’s career has encompassed several projects. In 1979 he met Gurudas, an herbalist and natural healing practitioner. Gurudas taped a number of channeling sessions at which “John” spoke of natural healing processes and substances, which became the basis of a series of books. Early in the 1980s Ryerson met Shirley MacLaine and conducted several channeling sessions with her. The convincing nature of these sessions was quite important to her development, and Ryerson subsequently recreated their meetings for the film version of Out on a Limb (book, 1983; movie, 1987). He has also made several other media appearances, in Poltergeist II, The Magic Boat, and Poloha. Ryerson’s character is also featured in MacLaine’s books Dancing in the Light (1985) and It’s All in the Playing (1987). He allowed himself to be studied by Dr. Jeffrey Mishlove and William Krautz at the Center for Applied Intuition. Ryerson has his own website at http://www.kevinryerson.com.

Sources:

Ryzl, Milan (1928– )

Czech biochemist who experimented in the field of parapsychology. Born May 22, 1928, at Prague, Czechoslovakia, he studied at Charles University, Prague (D.Sc., 1952). He became a biochemist at the Institute of Biology of the Czechoslovak Academy of Science, was a charter associate of the Parapsychology Association, and the winner of the 1962 McDougall Award for parapsychology research. He is considered one of the leading authorities on parapsychology in the West. Ryzl took a special interest in paranormal cognition of subjects under hypnosis, and developed a method by which the ESP of such subjects may be brought under voluntary control. He organized a parapsychology study group in Prague, but later defected from Czechoslovakia and obtained a position as a biochemist at San José College, California. He worked for a time at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University and in 1965 wrote a series of papers with J. G. Pratt. He is credited as being the first person to write on parapsychology in Communist Europe.

Sources:

S.I.

Initialism for Space Intelligence.

Saba

In ancient Irish legend, the wife of Finn Mac Cummal and mother of Oisin. Finn captured her in the form of a fawn while hunting, but noticing that his hounds would not hurt her, he gave her shelter. The next morning he found her transformed into a beautiful woman. She told him that an enchanter had compelled her to take the shape of a fawn, but that her original form would be restored when she reached Dun Allen, where she had just spent the night. Finn made her his wife and ceased for a while from battle and hunting. Hearing one day that the Northmen’s warships were in the Bay of Dublin, he mustered his men and went to fight them. He returned victorious, but found Saba gone. The enchanter, taking advantage of Finn’s absence, had appeared to her in the likeness of Finn with his hounds and lured her from the dun. Away from the dun, she became a fawn again.

Sabbaths

In modern Neo-Paganism, the sabbaths are the eight great festivals of the sacred year. The sabbats follow the ancient festival days that were common throughout Europe, though different cultures poured variant meanings into their celebrations. Over the centuries, as Christianity became the dominant form in the West, ancient pagan worship sites were replaced with churches and the festival days integrated into the Christian liturgical calendar. Many of these older pagan festivals survived in secularized form and many of the practices were reinterpreted by Christians, especially the Yule (winter solstice) practices that became part of the celebration of Christmas.

The eight sabbats are defined by the principal points in the changing relationship of the Sun and the Earth over the year. These points are measured by the easily observable point of the sun’s daily emergence on the eastern horizon. Through the spring, as the days grow longer, the sun appears to rise at a point slightly further north each day and then as the days reach their longest, it appears to pause and then start moving south. As the shortest day of the year is reached, it again pauses and starts north. The points of the pauses (the solstices), and half way between them, when the length of the day and night are equal (the equinoxes, formed four easily marked points in the years. They, and the four additional points halfway between them that mark points in the planting and harvest process, became the eight evenly spaced holidays of the ancient world.

During the Middle Ages, the ancient Pagan practices were invoked to supply content with the new understanding of Witchcraft as Satanism advocated by the Inquisition. The sabbats were identified as a time for Witches to gather to worship His Infernal Majesty. That mythology survived in the secularized celebration of Halloween.

In the 1950s, Gerald B. Gardner introduced his modern reconstruction of Witchcraft which drew on ancient Pagan practices mixed with elements of Asian beliefs and practices. It was a nature oriented religion in which the worship of the Goddess was central. Integral to the new Witchcraft were the ancient eight festivals that became times of gathering for the emerging Pagan community. In the Wiccan faith, the years begin on the evening of October 31, Samhein. This day culminated the harvest season, and heralds the coming of winter, a period of waiting until the planting can begin a new food production cycle. It is also a night in which the veil between the living and the dead is thin and communication with spirits is facilitated. It is time to remember the dead and complete relationships with them.

Seven other sabbaths follow:

- Yule (December 21)
- Imbok or Candlesmas (Feb 1)
- Spring equinox
- Beltane (May 1)
- Summer solstice
- Lamas (August 1)
- Fall Equinox

These festivals marked important events in agricultural communities, though most modern Pagans are urban dwellers. In the rituals, while some recognition of their past significance is still noted, the sabbats have been reinterpreted as occasions for personal magic and reformation and the veneration of the deities.

As distinct from the eight major Sabbats, witchcraft covens also hold a bi-monthly esbat at each new and full moon. These are the coven’s regular meetings for its ongoing magical work and group worship. (See also litanies of the sabbat)

Sources:

Sabbathi

This angel, in the Jewish rabbinical legend of the celestial hierarchies, is assigned the sphere of Saturn. He receives the divine light of the Holy Spirit and communicates it to the dwellers in his kingdom.

Sabellicus, Georgius (ca. 1490)

A magician who lived about the same time as the legendary necromancer Faust, at the end of the fifteenth century. Sabellicus’s chief claim to fame as a sorcerer rests on his own wide and arrogant advertisement of his skill in necromancy. He styled himself: “The most accomplished Georgius Sabellicus, a second Faustus, the spring and centre of necromantic art, an astrologer, a magician, consummate in chiromancy, and in gromancy, pyromancy and hydromancy inferior to none that ever lived.” However, no proof is forthcoming that he ever substantiated these claims.

Sabian Assembly

Founded in Los Angeles, California, in 1923 by Marc Edmund Jones, the Sabian Assembly is dedicated to the “mastery of self and the world.” The object of the assembly was the restoration of the Solar Mysteries.

Jones was a writer and exponent of astrology, and for many years students of the assembly requested him to give spontaneous interpretations of charts without study or prior knowledge of them. Five hundred of these horoscope sessions were tape-recorded and transcribed, and the first volume of The Marc Edmund Jones 500 was published in 1972 by ASI Publishers, Inc.
Address: P.O. Box 417, 1 Faurie Rd., Lakehills, TX 78063.
Website: http://www.sabian.org.

Author, historian and writer on parapsychological subjects. He was born on April 2, 1903, in Birkenhead, England. He was educated in private schools and emigrated to the United States in 1947. Before leaving England, Sabine taught at schools in Middlesex and London. In the United States he worked as an author, editor, and book dealer from 1947 onward, and he completed a number of books on American and European history. He had a number of spontaneous psi experiences, mainly of a precognitive kind, some of which he recorded in his book Second Sight in Daily Life (1949).
He died on July 15, 1994.

Sources:
———. “Is There a Case for Retro-

———. A Prophecy Concerning the Swedish Monarchy. N.p., 1968.
Strommenburg, Aaders Gabriel. A Prophecy Concerning the Swedish Monarchy As It was Related in 1809. New York: Colburn & Tegg, 1968.
———. Second Sight in Daily Life. New York: Coward-McCann, 1949.

SAC See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness

SAC See Spiritual Advisory Council

Sach Runa

Sach Runa is the name of a section of the Amazonian Rain Forest at the upper reaches of the Madeira River in northern Bolivia. It is an area where shamans still function as religious functionaries for the residents. The Sacha Runa people describe themselves as the people who know how to live on the Earth and who are descended from ancestors in ancient times.

Stepping into this ancient culture is Bolivian spiritual seek-ger-guide Miguel A. Kavlin. Kavlin grew up in Bolivia but moved to the United States when he was 17, where he resided for a time amid the ancient Anazazi site in the Southwest. At a gathering of Sun Dance followers he met Beautiful Painted Arrow,
"Venkusa." Even these details are uncertain, however, since there was a profound symbolism attached to all the utterances of Sai Baba. It is known that in 1872 he appeared as a lad of 16 in the village of Shirdi, in the Ahmadnagar district of Bombay. He first attempted to settle at a small Hindu temple but was asked to go to a half-ruined mosque nearby.

He made his home at the mud-walled mosque, where he kept an oil lamp burning and occasionally smoked a clay pipe. He muttered to himself and performed such strange secret rites as emptying and refilling water pots, regarded by devotees as symbolic gestures relating to divine grace. His actions and instructions were unconventional and erratic but often culminated in a great many extraordinary miracles and an outpouring of divine grace. His following grew among both Hindus and Muslims.

In 1886, almost as a rehearsal for death, he told a devotee that he was going to Allah and that his body should be preserved carefully for three days against a possible return. His heart stopped beating, his breathing ceased, and local authorities pronounced him dead. On the third day he opened his eyes and started breathing again.

Sai Baba died October 15, 1918, and was buried in a Hindu shrine. Since his death, the miracle-working guru Sai Satya Sai Baba has been regarded by many devotees as a reincarnation of Sai Baba.

Sources:

Saintes Maries de la Mer

A small village in the Camargue, France, on the shores of the Mediterranean, where every year, about the 24th and 25th of May, gypsies congregate to celebrate the feast day of their patron saint Sara. Sara, seemingly a survival of the Indian deity Kali, has been tied to Christian folklore in a story of the three Marys of the Christian New Testament traveling to France. Upon their arrival they were met and assisted by Sara, like Kali, Sara is pictured with black skin. The Gypsies gather to keep a vigil before the statue that has been set up in the basement of the church.

Sources:

Saint Germain, Comte de

(Ca. 1710–ca. 1780)

One of the most celebrated mystic adventurers in history. Like Cagliostro and others of his kind, little is known concerning Saint Germain’s origin, but there is reason to believe that he was a Portuguese Jew. There were claims that he was of royal birth, but these have never been substantiated.

It is fairly certain that he was an accomplished spy, for he resided at many European courts, spoke and wrote various languages, including Greek, Latin, Spanish, Arabic, Chinese, French, German, English, Italian, Portuguese, and Spanish, and was even sent upon diplomatic missions by Louis XV. Horace Walpole mentioned him being in London about 1745 and being arrested as a Jacobite spy, but later being released. Walpole wrote: "He is called an Italian, a Spaniard, a Pole, a somebody who married a great fortune in Mexico and ran away with her jewels to Constantinople, a priest, a fiddler, a vast nobleman. The Prince of Wales has had unsatisfied curiosity about him, but in vain. However, nothing has been made out against him; he is released, and, what convinces me he is not a gentleman, stays here, and talks of his being taken up as a spy."

Saint Germain claimed to have lived for centuries and to have known Solomon, the Queen of Sheba, and many other persons of antiquity. Although regarded as a charlatan, the accomplishments upon which he based his reputation were in many ways real and considerable. He was alluded to by Baron Friedrich Melchior Grimm as the most capable and able man he had ever known. He was a composer of music and a capable performer on the violin.

This was especially the case regarding chemistry (or alchemy), a science in which he was certainly adept. He claimed to have a secret for removing the flaws from diamonds, to be able to transmute metals, and to possess the secret of the elixir of life.

Five years after this London experience, Saint Germain attached himself to the court of Louis XV, where he exercised considerable influence over the monarch and was employed on several secret missions. He was much sought after and discussed, since at this time Europe was fascinated with the Rosicrucians and Saint Germain combined mystical conversation with a pleasing, flippant character, he was extremely popular. But he ruined his chances at the French court by interfering in a dispute between Austria and France, and he was forced to leave for England.

He resided in London for one or two years, but in 1762 was in St. Petersburg, where he is said to have assisted in the conspiracy that placed Catherine II on the Russian throne. After this he traveled in Germany, where he was reported in the Memoirs of Cagliostro to have become the founder of Freemasonry, and to have initiated Cagliostro into that rite. If Cagliostro's account can be credited, Saint Germain set about the business with remarkable splendor and bombast, posing as a "deity" and behaving in a manner calculated to delight pseudo-mystics of the age.

Saint Germain died at Schleswig, Germany, somewhere between the years 1780 and 1785, but the exact date of his death and its circumstances are unknown.

Assessing Saint Germain’s Career

It would be difficult to say whether Saint Germain really possessed genuine occult power. A great many people of his own time thoroughly believed in him, but we must also remember the credulous nature of the age in which he flourished. It has been said that eighteenth-century Europe was skeptical regarding everything except occultism and its professors.

Saint Germain possessed a magnificent collection of precious stones, which some considered to be artificial, but others believed to be genuine. He presented Louis XV with a diamond worth 10,000 livres (a livre is an old French monetary unit). All sorts of stories were in circulation concerning Saint Germain. One old lady professed to have encountered him at Venice fifty years before, posing as a man of sixty, and even his valet was supposed to have discovered the secret of immortality. On one occasion a visitor teased this man, asking if he had been present at the marriage of Cana in Galilee. "You forget, sir," was the reply, "I have only been in the Comte's service a century."

Legend has it that Saint Germain made various appearances after his death. He is said to have appeared to Marie Antoinette and to other individuals during the French Revolution. He is also believed to have been one of the Rosicrucians, from whom he obtained his occult knowledge.

The deathless count was also resurrected in modern times by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky as one of the masters of the Great White Brotherhood, and he thus became an important figure in all of the more than a hundred theosophical splinter groups now active. Guy W. Ballard claimed that Saint Germain had appeared to him at Mt. Shasta, California, and from Saint Germain’s teachings, Ballard built the I Am Movement. The centrality of Saint Germain has been common to all "I Am"- related groups such as the Bridge to Spiritual Freedom and the Church Universal and Triumphant. Within the New Age movement, a number of psychics have emerged channeling an entity called Saint Germain. In the 1970s, author Chelsea Quinn Yarbro drew on the Saint Germain story to begin production of a series of novels and short stories that describe the mysterious count as a vampire. The novels helped begin the current popular interest in the vampire as hero.

Sources:

Saint-Jacques, R. P. de

A monk of the seventeenth century, who published a book entitled Lumière aux croyants par l'expérience des morts, ou diverses apparitions des âmes du Purgatoire (Light to the living by the experiences of the dead, or divers apparitions of souls from purgatory) in Lyons in 1675.

Saint-Martin, Louis Claude de (1743–1803)

French mystic and philosopher, commonly known as "le philosophe incompris" (the unknown philosopher), the pseudonym under which his books were published. The name of Louis de Saint-Martin is a familiar one, which is partly due to his having been a voluminous author, and partly due to his being virtually the founder of a sect, the Martinists. Literary critics have said that Saint-Martin wrote about him in his Conferences du Lundi. Saint-Martin was born on January 18, 1743, at Amboise. He came from a family of some wealth, but his mother died while he was a child. Fortunately his stepmother, besides lavishing a wealth of affection on him, early discerned his rare intellectual gifts and made every effort to nurture them.

The boy was educated at the Collège de Pontlevoy, where he read with interest numerous books of a mystical order. One that impressed him particularly was Jacques Abbadie’s Art de se connaître soi-même (1692). At first he intended to make law his profession, but he soon decided on a military career instead and accordingly entered the army. A little before taking this step, he affiliated himself with the Freemasons, and when his regiment was sent to the garrison at Bordeaux, he became intimate with certain mystical rites that Martinists of Pasqualy who became his teacher, and the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg alienated him from regimental life, and thus, in 1771, he resigned his commission, determined to devote the rest of his life to philosophical speculations.

He then began writing a book Des Éveuves et de la Vérité, ou les Hommes vappelés au Prose de la Science, which was published in 1775 at Edinburgh, Scotland, at this time a center of literary activity. This initial work by Saint-Martin was brought to the notice of Voltaire, the old cynic observing shrewdly that half a dozen folio volumes might well be devoted to the topic of évêues, but that a page would suffice for the treatment of vérité! The next years were spent in travel to England, Italy, and Germany (where an interest in the teachings of the mystic Jakob Boehme would eventually lead to his translating a number of the German mystic’s writings into French). He never married, but he appears to have exercised a most extraordinary fascination over women, and in fact various scandalous stories were told, some of them implicating various courtly women of the French nobility.

Upon returning to France, he found his outlook suddenly changed. The revolution had broken out in 1789, and a reign of terror had set in. No one was safe. Saint-Martin was arrested in Paris simply because he was a gentleman by birth, but he was saved by his affiliation with the Freemasons. He resumed writing, and in 1792 he issued a new book, Le Nouvel Homme. Two years later he was commissioned to go to his native Amboise, inspect the archives and libraries of the monasteries in that region, and draw up occasional reports on the subject.

Shortly afterward, he was appointed an élève professeur at the École Normale in Paris, in consequence of which he now made his home in that city. He became acquainted there with Chauntebrandi, of whose writing Saint-Martin was an enthusiastic devotee, who but appears to have received the mystic with his usual haughty coldness.

Saint-Martin had a large circle of admirers, and he continued to work hard, publishing in 1795 one of his most important books, Lettres à un Ami, ou Considérations politiques, philosophiques et religieuses sur la Révolution, which was succeeded in 1800 by two speculative treatises: Éveuves and L’Esprit des Choses. What proved to be his final volume appeared in 1802 as Misanthère de L’Homme Évus. In the following year his labors were brought to an abrupt close, for while staying at Annay, not far from Paris, with a friend, he succumbed to an apoplectic seizure, and died October 23, 1803. After his death it was found that he had left a considerable mass of manuscripts, and some of these were issued by his executors in 1807. In 1862 a collection of his letters appeared.

Martinism

As a philosopher, Saint-Martin found a host of disciples among his contemporaries, who gradually formed themselves into a cult and took the name of their teacher. His teachings are best summarized in his latter volumes L’Homme du Dieu (1790) and Tableau naturel des Rapports qui existent entre Dieu, et L’Homme et l’Univers (1782).

He suggests that human beings are divine, despite the fall recounted in the Hebrew/Christian scriptures. Dormant within lies a lofty quality of which we are too often scarcely conscious, and it is incumbent on us to develop this quality, striving without ceasing and avoiding the snares of materialism. This life-style is exemplified by a life of occult striving. This basic perspective is common to the Gnostic writings of the Rosicrucians, past and contemporary theosophists, and ritual magicians. In writing in this vein, Saint-Martin owed a good deal to Freemasonry, Swedenborg, and Boehme. Saint-Martin also developed a system of numerical correspondences that are easily adapted to gematria.

Saint-Martin’s teaching found their greatest response, as might be expected, in French-speaking areas and the lack of English translations of his works limited his influence in a large part of the world. Martinist themes, however, permeated the occult revival of the nineteenth century and can be seen in both the writings of Éliphas Lévi and the teachings of the Gnostic churches that began to appear toward the end of the century. Gérard Encausa, who authored numerous occult texts, emerged as the primary Martinist interpreter to the next generation. In England, Arthur E. Waite developed a great appreciation for Saint-Martin and tried to make his work known to his contemporaries in the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. Waite wrote three separate titles about Saint-Martin, and for the first he received an honorary doctorate from the École Hermetique, an indication of esteem from Encausa and the French Martinists. Saint-Martin’s ideas spread to Haiti and from there entered the United States, where a new Martinist thrust emerged in the late twentieth century in the person of Michael Berteaux, a thelemic magician residing in Chicago.

Sources:

Salagrama
A stone credited with possessing magical properties and worn in parts of India as an amulet. This stone is black in color, about the size of a billiard ball, and pierced with holes. It is actually a fossilized ammonite, and it is valued according to the number of its spirals and holes. It is said that it is found in the Gandaki, a river in Nepal, which some, depending upon their theological perspective, believe rises at either the foot of Vishnu or the head of Siva. The stone is kept in a clean cloth and often washed and perfumed by its fortunate owner.
The water in which it has been dipped is supposed to gain the power to expel evil and is therefore drunk and greatly valued. This water possesses other occult powers, and it is a necessary ingredient of the preparations for those about to die. The departing Hindu holds it in his hand and, believing in its powers, has hope for the future and dies peacefully.

Salaman德’s Feather
Another name for asbestos. It is an incombustible mineral that resembles flax, being of fine fibrous texture. It was used by pagans in their temples.

Saleh, Wadih (1910– )
Attorney and parapsychologist born on October 31, 1910, at Mansura, Egypt. He was educated in Egypt, Lebanon, and at the University of Lyon in France. He served for two years as a research associate of the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University (1958–60). He became a charter associate of the Parapsychological Association and has taken special interest in the question of the psychological conditions favoring psi phenomena.

Sources:

Saller, Karl Felix (1902–1969)
German professor of anthropology and genetics who has also studied parapsychology. He was born on September 3, 1902, at Kempten, Germany and did his college work at the University of Münich (Ph.D., 1924; M.D., 1926). He was a lecturer in anthropology and anatomy at the Universities of Kiel and Göttingen but was dismissed in 1935 for opposing Nazi racial doctrines. He entered private medical practice and became the sanatorium physician at Badenweiler (1936–39) and served in the German Army during World War II. After the war he became director of the Robert Bosch Hospital, Stuttgart (1945–48), but was able to return to teaching as a professor of anthropology and genetics at the University of Münich in 1948. In 1949 he became the director of the Institute of Anthropology and Human Genetics at Münich.
Saller died on October 15, 1969.

Sources:
Saller, K. F. “Die Parapsychologie vom Standpunkt des Anthropologen” (Parapsychology from the anthropologist’s point of view). Die Heilkunst 68, no. 7 (1955).

Sallow
A willow tree or shrub. Rods made from this particular wood were much in use among the ancient Scythians and the Alani for purposes of augural divination. The magician chose fine straight wands, wrote certain characters on them, and threw them on a white cloth. From the way in which they fell the magician gained the desired information.

Salter, Helen Woolligar de Gaudron Verrall (1883–1959)
Daughter of medium Margaret Verrall. Salter developed the faculty of automatic writing and was a prominent member of the Society for Psychical Research, London. She was an associate research officer (1910–16), research officer (1916–21), a member of the council (1921–57), vice president (1955–57), editor of the journal of the SPR (1921–29), and for many years editor of the Proceedings (1921–46, 1948–54). She was born July 4, 1883, in Cambridge, England, and was educated at Newnham College, Cambridge University (M.A., 1906). In 1915 she married William Henry Salter, president of the SPR.
Some of her automatic writing scripts form part of the important “cross-correspondence” project, which involved piecing together a number of scripts from different communicators that were meaningful only as a whole. Salter also participated in various telepathy experiments. She wrote a number of articles for the SPR’s publications and interpreted the SPR for American colleagues. She died April 22, 1959.

Sources:

Salter, William Henry (1880–1970)
British lawyer who was president of the Society for Psychical Research. London. He was born on March 19, 1880, in London, England. He was educated at St. Paul’s School, London and Trinity College, Cambridge University (M.A., LL.B.). In 1913 he married Helen Woolligar de Gaudron Verrall, the daughter of medium Margaret Verrall. Helen Salter, who actually introduced her husband to psychical research, became an... important officer at the SPR and even served a term as vice president.

Salter served with the Ministry of Munitions during World War II (1916–21) and was awarded the Member of the British Empire in 1918. He joined the SPR in 1916, and was honorary treasurer (1920–31), honorary secretary (1924–48), and president (1967–68). Salter participated in a number of experiments and became an authority on the subject of automatic writing. He was also interested in telepathy, apparitions, mediums, and the evidence for survival. Helen Salter, above and beyond her work for the society, was well-known for her automatic writing and took part in the famous "cross-correspondence" tests. After his death in 1970, William Salter left a series of papers concerned with these correspondences and his reminiscences of life at the SPR at Trinity College, Cambridge, with instructions that they were not to be opened until 1995 and 1996 respectively.

Sources:

Saltmarsh, H. F. (1881–1943)

Shipping agent who became a prominent member of the Society for Psychical Research, London. He was born in London on July 16, 1881. His business career was interrupted by ill health, and in his early retirement he became interested in theosophical literature and philosophy, which eventually led him to psychological research. He joined the SPR in 1921 and served on the council for more than a decade (1931–43). Saltmarsh organized sittings with the medium Mrs. Warren Elliot, which were reported in the Proceedings of the SPR (vol. 39, parts 112, 114; 1930) and made a special study of "cross-correspondence" tests. He also classified evidence for precognition and survival. He died February 24, 1943.

Sources:

Sambor, S. F. (d. 1902)

A Russian telegraph operator who was discovered and promoted as a powerful materialization and telekinesis medium. A series of his sittings between 1896 and 1902 was recorded in the Russian Spiritist journal Rebus. Phantoms materialized from luminous vapor before the sitters and were seen together with the medium. Telekinetic phenomena were produced in abundance. Many of the experiments were conducted by Count Perovsky-Petrovo-Solovovo. However, the count’s belief in Sambor’s phenomena was considerably shaken when he discovered that one of the sitters, an accomplice, intentionally released Sambor’s hand when he was supposed to be holding it. This discovery of fraud offered a convenient general explanation for the movement of objects although not for the action of a white mandolin (as reported by Mme. Youdenitch in the Annales des Sciences Psychiques, vol. 14, 1904, p. 193), which began to play in the adjoining room and, visible in the faint light, was seen to come in and settle on the table in the séance room.

Neither Perovsky-Petrovo-Solovovo nor Youdenitch (who were far from trained observers) could explain the phenomena of a white column rising from the floor and turning into a human form in good light. Some other phenomena, for instance, the threading of a chair on the medium’s or on a sitter’s arm while all hands were held in a chain, were also difficult to explain. Such events were observed on several occasions, in conditions which caused Perovsky-Petrovo-Solovovo to observe in the Annales des Sciences Psychique "... if they do not absolutely eliminate all possibility of error, render it improbable to a degree which almost amounts to absolute certainty." Perovsky-Petrovo-Solovovo also heard sounds from a piano after the lid had been locked with a key that remained on the table in the midst of the experimenters. Sambor died a few months after the séances in 1902.

Sanders, Alex(ander) (1926–1988)

Known as the "King of the Witches," a title he gave himself during the early years of the Gardnerian Neo-Pagan Revival in the 1960s, Alexander Sanders became a central figure in the development of witchcraft covens that in acknowledgment of his leadership called themselves Alexandrian. In light of the revelations concerning the origins of modern Wicca, few Alexandrian covens now remain.

Sanders was born in Manchester, England, the son of a music hall entertainer. According to a story he told in the 1970s, when he was seven years old he discovered his grandmother in the kitchen performing a magic ritual. She was completely naked. She confided in him that she was a witch, and she initiated the young Alex then and there. She subsequently gave him a Book of Shadows, which he copied and from which he learned his magic rites. He held a number of jobs over his young adult years and became involved in ritual magic and even Satanism. In the 1960s he formed his first coven and began to initiate people into witchcraft.

In fact, Sanders encountered one of the covens of Gerald B. Gardner in the 1960s. From it he attained an initiation into the craft and a copy of Gardner’s rituals. He eventually left that coven and began his own group independently. His version of witchcraft differed little from that of Gardner and included all of his distinctive techniques.

About this same time he met Maxine Morris, a young woman some twenty years his junior. He married her and made her his high priestess. They were discovered by the media in 1969, the same year June John's fictionalized biography of Sanders appeared. Over the next decade he, Maxine, and their coven were the subject of numerous magazine and newspaper articles, most frequently appearing in the nude and occasionally while engaged in symbolic sexual acts.

In 1971 Sanders and Maxine separated, and he largely retired. Interestingly, that same year, a book, What Witches Do, by Stewart Farrar, a close associate of Sanders, appeared and gave Sanders his most lasting fame as a Wiccan leader. Farrar and his wife Janet moved to Ireland where they became Wiccan leaders in their own right and together wrote a number of authoritative books on Wicca.

Sanders died April 30, 1988, from lung cancer. His movement spread around the English-speaking world during the 1970s, but following the revelations of his unacknowledged use of Gardner's rituals and his plagiarizing of material from Éliphas Lévi and Franz Bardon, most of the covens that had identified themselves as Alexandrian dropped any relationship with him.

Sources:

Sanders, C. B. (1831–?)
A Presbyterian minister of Alabama, a sleeping preacher, who became subject to attacks over a 22 year period (1854–1876), during which a secondary personality, assuming the title of “X + Y = Z,” developed and exhibited startling powers of telepathy and clairvoyance. His story is told in the book X + Y = Z; or the Sleeping Preacher of North Alabama (1876). It appears that the secondary personality had command over the memories of the normal self whereas the primary consciousness remained ignorant of the doings of “X + Y = Z.” There are twelve cases on record in which this mysterious secondary personality found lost objects, money, or jewelry; he could shoot ducks at night that were invisible to his companions; and he could write letters and sermons with his hand completely concealed under the bedcloth. A review of the case was published by Walter Franklin Prince in the Bulletin of the Boston Society for Psychical Research.

Sources:

Sanders, Celestine G.
Noted American trance medium. Reports on her trance phenomena were published by James H. Hyslop in Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research (vol. 15, 1921) and by Walter Franklin Prince in Proceedings of American Society for Psychical Research (vol. 18, 1924).

Sanderson, Ivan T(erence) (1911–1973)
Scottish-born naturalist, traveler, collector and exhibitor of rare animals, radio and television commentator, and author. In addition to his many books on nature, travel, and zoology, Sanderson also had special interest in such anomalous mysteries as the Abominable Snowman, the Loch Ness Monster, and UFOs. In 1965 he founded the Society for the Investigation of the Unexplained.

Sanderson was born on January 30, 1911, in Edinburgh, Scotland, the son of Arthur Buchanan, a famous whisky manufacturer who also founded the first game reserve in Kenya, East Africa. He was educated at Eton College (1924–27), Trinity College, Cambridge (1930–32), and the University of London (1933–34). He started collecting animals in 1924 and traveled around the world collecting for the British Museum (1927–29). He also led the Percy Sladen Expedition to Cameron, West Africa for the British Museum, the Royal Society of London, and other institutions (1932–33). Through the 1930s he traveled widely, exploring and collecting animals, a career cut short by World War II. He served in British Naval Intelligence (1940–45) and finished the war with the rank of commander. He continued in intelligence work with the British government through 1957. He moved to the United States in the 1950s and became a regular on television shows as a naturalist spreading knowledge about the world’s animals. He also edited books and wrote widely on animals and his favorite hobby, Forteana (the study of bizarre phenomena, named for Charles Fort.) Through the last two decades of his life he averaged more than a book a year. His books were commonly illustrated with photographs he had taken on his world tours. His Fortean interests become widely known after the publication of his memorable book on the Abominable Snowman in 1961. It was followed by a series of volumes on Fortean topics.

Sanderson died on February 19, 1973. His Society for the Investigation of the Unexplained continued his work into the 1980s, collecting data and maintaining the library he had assembled.

Sources:

British baron who, in the later years of a life spent in diplomatic service, was prominent before the public because he claimed to be able to cure both organic diseases and functional derangement by prayer and the laying on of hands. In June 1912 he testified before the clerical and medical committee of inquiry into spiritual, faith, and mental healing, over which the Dean of Westminster presided, that his power was a divine gift that he was unable to explain. He never accepted money for his services.

Accounts of many of his cases, with letters of gratitude, are published in his autobiography.

Sources:
Santoliquido, Rocco (1854–ca. 1930)

Italian scientist and Italy’s director general of Public Health who became the first president of the Institut Métapsychique International, which was founded in 1919 in Paris by Jean Meyer on the initiative of Santoliquido and Gustav Geley. Santoliquido’s first experience in psychical research took place in 1906 in his own home. The table rapped out messages opinions of various people, including Fr. René Laurentin, the famous French Marianiologist. While public apparitions have not resumed, a group of people in Santa Maria now circulate the messages received and are attempting to implement the admonitions contained therein, much of which is directed to the Catholic community of the region.

Sources:

Santo Daime

Santo Daime is a new religion founded in Brazil at the beginning of the twentieth century when Raimundo Irineu Serra was introduced to the use of a powerful hallucinogenic brew called ayahuasca while in the upper Amazon. The drug is made from boiling the vine Banisteriopsis Caapi in water along with various other plants. The resultant mixture contains several psychedelic substances that produce a unique ecstatic experience that has been compared to that produced by peyote. In the case of Maestre Irineu, as he is called by those affiliated with the movement, his use of ayahuasca was accompanied by an apparition of the Virgin Mary in which she began to expound the doctrine of what would become the Santo Daime religion. Mary appeared as Our Lady of Conceição and opened the way for viewing Christian teachings through the new experience.

Soon after his initial experience Maestre Irineu received the text of new songs that now comprise a hymnal for the movement. He also received the movements to three dances, each with very simple steps, that are used to accentuate the flow of divine energy. Additional hymns have been received through the years and as the group has spread to other countries, new hymns in languages other than Portuguese have begun to be received and accepted for use in the rituals.

Santo Daime rituals begin with the separation of the men and women into two groups in the meeting hall. Two lines are formed and the ayahuasca is received. Then the hymns are sung and dancing begins. Different songs have different purposes (healing, communicating with spirits, celebration). Additional sips of the sacramental substance are handed out every few hours. The ceremony may last as long as eight to twelve hours.

Maestre Irineu was succeeded by Padrinho Sabastiao de Melo, who was in turn succeeded by his son, Padrinho Alfredo Gregório de Melo, the present international leader. A second smaller group is headed by Padrinho Alfredo’s brother, Paulo Roberto de Melo. The larger group was incorporated in Brazil in 1974 as the Eclectic Center of the Universal Flowing Light, the term “Eclectic” referring to the mixing of Christian and traditional beliefs within the church. It is headed by a spiritual council, and headquartered at Céu do Maipá, a community created by Padrinho Sabastiao de Melo. Céu de Maipá is located in the jungle on the Purus River, a tributary of the Amazon River. The branch of the movement led by Paulo Roberto has established centers in Hawaii, California, and the Netherlands.

The Eclectic Center of the Universal Flowing Light may be contacted through its website at http://www.santodalime.org/.

Sources:
in the presence of his niece, "Louise." He soon became convinced that the information furnished could not have been acquired normally. Among the messages was one directed to him: "Instead of criticising my experiments you ought to be working on your report which is not yet finished." Santoliquido believed that the report had been posted, but found out that owing to the negligence of an employee, it was still in his office. He published a pamphlet on these experiments under the title Observation d'un cas de mediumité intellectuel.

During World War I his international hygienic activities obliged him to reside in Paris. He became acquainted with Gustave Geley and took him on as a secretary. They often discuss the problems of psychological research. Santoliquido found the rich and generous Jean Meyer to endow a research facility, and in 1918 Meyer founded the Institut Métapsychique International in Paris, following up on Santoliquido’s and Geley’s initiative. Santoliquido remained its president for ten years and was then elected honorary president.

To provide permanent headquarters for international psychological congresses and research, he founded another center in Geneva with a provisional committee consisting of Hans Driesch, Dr. Young, Professor Grandjean and Eugen Osty. This Centre International de Conferences et de Congres de Recherches Psychiques de Genève dissolved after his death.

Sanyojanas
According to Theosophy, these are obstacles that the traveler along the Path must surmount. There are ten of them:
1. Belief in the Ego as unchangeable.
2. Lack of faith in higher effort.
3. Reliance on ritual.
4. Lust.
5. Ill-will.
7. Egotistic longing for a future life.
8. Pride.

Sources:

Saphy (or Grigris)
Perhaps deriving from the Arabic sofī (“pure, select, excellent”), saphy were charms or amulets worn by Africans as protection against thunderbolts and diseases, to procure wives, and to avert disasters of all kinds. They are composed of strips of paper on which sentences from the Koran are inscribed, sometimes intermixed with Kabbalistic signs. These strips are enclosed in silver tubes or silk bags, which are worn near the skin, often fastened in the dress. This is by no means a practice limited to Muslims; Africans of both sexes and many faiths have been believers in the occult properties of such talismans. The Scottish explorer Mungo Park (1771–ca. 1806) is said to have depended on the making of saphy or grigris, as they are sometimes called.

Sapphire
Many legends of occult properties surround this precious stone, whose name derives from the Sanskrit saphira, i.e., dear to the planet Saturn. Next to the diamond, it is the hardest mineral; its true color is blue, but it may also be red, yellow, violet, green, or brown. It was also known in ancient times as lapis lazuli. According to folklore, the vision seen by Moses and the Law given to him were inscribed on sapphire. The sapphire was one of the twelve stones on the Jewish high priest’s breastplate, located on the second row in the middle. It attained an eschatological significance as a foundation stone for the New Jerusalem (Isaiah 54:11 and Rev. 21:19).

When Roman Catholics select a new pope, a gold ring set with a sapphire is traditionally placed on his ring finger, symbolizing marriage to the church. Buddhists ascribed sacred magical power to the sapphire and believed that it reconciled mankind to God.

It was said to be a good amulet against fear, to promote the flow of good spirits, to preventague and gout, and to prevent the eyes being affected by smallpox. The sixteenth-century writer Camillo Leonardo claimed: “The sapphire heals sores, and is found to discharge a carbuncle with a single touch.” The occult writer Francis Barrett stated in his book The Magus (1801): “A Sapphire, or a stone that is of a deep blue colour, if it be rubbed on a tumour wherein the plague discovers itself, (before the party is too far gone) and if, by and by it be removed from the sick, the absent jewel attracts all the poison, or contagion therefrom.”

Sara, St.
A patron saint of Gypsies, especially in France and Western Europe. According to Gypsy lore, she was a maid to Marie Jacobe and Marie Salomé, two sisters of the Holy Virgin. The three Marys (the biblical Marys) are thought to have come to France after the resurrection of Jesus, where Sara met and served them. In fact, she seems to be an adaptation to Christian folklore of the goddess Kali, brought by the Gypsies from India. St. Sara is a local saint at les Saintes Maries de la Mer in the Camargue, France.

Sources:

Sarcognomy
A term coined by J. Rhodes Buchanan, pioneer writer on psychometry, to denote a therapeutic science of the relationship between body and brain. He advanced the ideas that the whole body is expressive; that the entire form is an embodiment of character; that each part of the evolving surface not only possesses a physiological characteristic but also psychological powers; and that each portion of this cutaneous surface exercises, through the nervous system, a direct action upon some particular part of the brain. Buchanan believed that understanding these relationships could have great value in the treatment of disease.

Sardius (or Sard)
A precious stone that is a variety of cornelian, varying in color from pale yellow to reddish orange. According to ancient tradition, it is an antidote to the onyx. It was believed to prevent unpleasant dreams, to make its possessor wealthy, and to sharpen the wit. It was one of the twelve stones in the breastplate of the Jewish high priest and a foundation stone of the New Jerusalem yet to appear (Revelation 21:20).

Sardou, Victorien (1831–1908)
Famous French dramatist and member of the Académie Française who attracted considerable attention in Spiritistic circles in the 1860s with curious automatic drawings, signed “Bernard Palissy, of Jupiter.” He was born on September 5, 1831, in Paris. For a short period, he studied medicine, but gave it up in order to devote himself to writing. He was not successful at first, and was seriously ill and in great poverty when rescued by a Mlle. de Brécourt (whom he later married). She introduced him to a Mlle Déjazet, for whom he wrote successful plays. In due course, many outstanding actors and actresses acted in a long line of successful plays by Sardou. His plays enjoyed long runs in France, England, and America, and his drama La Tosca became the basis of Puccini’s opera Tosca. He wrote plays for the great actress Sarah Bernhardt. One controversial play by Sardou in which Bernhardt appeared was titled Stupitome. It had a plot that involved mediums, and it included a discussion between believers in occultism and skeptics.

Sardou himself was a remarkable medium and produced many intricate automatic drawings. Some of these were supposed to delineate the dwellings of people in Jupiter. He sketched the houses of Mozart, Zoroaster, and Bernard Palissy, who were country neighbors on the immense planet that, at the time, was commonly believed to be inhabited by a superior race of beings.

He made his own opinions clear in a letter published in Le Temps at the time when he was putting on his drama Spiritisme. He spoke of himself as an observer, incredulous by nature. He had been obliged to admit that Spiritism concerns itself with facts that defy any present scientific explanation. Further, respecting the dwellings of the planet Jupiter, I must ask the good folks who suppose that I am convinced of the real existence of these things whether they are well persuaded that Gulliver (Swift) believed in Lilliput, Campanella in the City of the Sun, and Sir Thomas More in his Utopia.

In another letter, written to Charles Frohman on the same occasion, he spoke with much greater freedom:

“Everybody knows that for forty years I have been a wonderful medium myself, and I have had in my own house wonderful manifestations. My piano has played by itself. Flowers have fallen on my ceiling under a table; and it is I who have brought this about, and they dare not lay at my door calumnies such as are so often heard in my house, that I am a charlatan.”

Sardou was elected to the French Academy in 1878. He died in Paris November 8, 1908.

Sargent, Epes (1813–1880)

Well-known American author, editor, and psychological investigator. He was born on September 27, 1813, in Gloucester, Massachusetts. He graduated from Boston Latin School in 1829 and long edited the editorial staff of the Boston Daily Advertiser. He subsequently worked for the Daily Atlas as its Washington correspondent. He wrote two plays, The Bride of Genoa and Velasco, which led to a move to New York City, where he worked as a journalist, founding the short-lived Sargent’s New Monthly Magazine (January–June 1843). He also published a biography of Henry Clay (1842) and a popular novel Fleetwood, or the Stain of Birth (1843).

Returning to Boston, he edited the Boston Transcript (1847–1855) and published his own works, including two volumes of verse, the song “A Life on the Ocean Wave,” The Woman Who Dared (1870), and a number of widely used textbooks for schools.

His attention was drawn to mesmerism as it emerged in New England around 1837. He studied the subject and soon became convinced clairvoyance and thought-reading were actual. With the Phenomena at Hydesville broke out, he was editing the Boston Transcript and did much to direct public attention to the problem.

This life-long interest resulted in a set of books during his mature years beginning with Planche: or, The Deepin of Science (1869). He wrote extensively on the subject of Spiritualism. He died in Boston on December 30, 1880.

Sources:

Sarkar, Probhat Ranjan (1923–1990)

Known primarily under his religious name, Shrii Anandamurti, the founder of the Hindu religious community, the Ananda Marga Yoga Society. Sarkar was born in 1923 in Jamalpur, India. His father died when he was still a youth, and he went to work for the railroad in order to provide for his family. In 1955, however, he announced to his fellow employees that he had attained enlightenment and was leaving his secular occupation to found a spiritual movement that he termed the path (marga) of bliss (anando). The movement expanded rapidly.

Ananda Marga was envisioned as a fully integrated social-spiritual movement and members were expected to practice yoga (a form of tantric yoga) and to engage in social work. The group founded over 400 schools and 250 children’s homes.

In 1958, under his given name, Sarkar launched Renaissance Universal, an organization designed to propagate his social ideals, which he presented as the Progressive Utilization Theory (Prout). Prout was offered as a political alternative to both the communists and the philosophy of the then Indian government. The Indian government became a particular target because of its perceived corruption, and in 1967 and 1969, Anandamurti’s followers ran candidates. Indira Gandhi retaliated by issuing orders against any government employee joining Ananda Marga. Then in 1971 Anandamurti was arrested, ostensibly for giving orders to members to kill some former members. He was still in jail when Ghandi issued the Emergency Rule in 1975, and he was sentenced to life imprisonment in November 1976. Ananda Marga was banned, many of its members arrested, and its assets seized.

Finally, in August 1978, after the fall of the Ghandi government, Anandamurti’s case was reviewed, the fictitious nature of the charges against him ascertained, and he was released. In the meantime his movement had spread around the world. He died in October 1990.

Sources:

Sasportas, Howard (1948–1992)

Howard Sasportas, an important voice in contemporary astrology, was born in Hartford, Connecticut, on April 15, 1948. He studied at Antioch University in New York, and received his master’s degree in humanistic psychology. Shortly afterward, in 1973, he moved to England, where he pursued his psychological studies at the Psychosynthesis and Education Trust. (Psychosynthesis, developed by Italian psychotherapist Roberto Assagioli, is a form of psychotherapy that has been found compatible with occult perspectives.) He also developed an interest in astrology. As his interest grew, he became an associate of the Faculty of Astrological Studies, a prominent British astrological organization founded by a group of leading astlogers including Margaret Bone and Charles E. O. Carter. He became a stellar student and in 1979 was awarded the school’s gold medal. That same year he also joined the school’s staff as a tutor.
Sasportas’ astrological career led him to make the acquaintance of Liz Greene, another exponent of the psychological approach to astrological interpretation. Together, in 1983, they founded the Centre for Psychological Astrology in London. The school offered a spectrum of seminars and a broad course of study in psychology and mythology, in addition to a standard curriculum in astrology.

Beginning in 1985, Sasportas authored a set of books, including the three volumes of the “Seminars in Psychological Astrology” series with Liz Greene, that quickly became popular texts for his colleagues. Then in 1987 he became the series editor for the Arkana Astrology series published by Viking-Penguin. He not only assembled volumes from some of the most important voices in contemporary astrology for the series, but contributed what most consider to be his finest volume, _The Gods of Change._ Unfortunately, at the height of his career, he passed away in London on May 12, 1992.

Sources:

---

Sasquatch

Another name for Bigfoot, the mysterious humanoid creature reported to inhabit remote areas of North America. (See _monsters_)

Sasquatch Investigations of Mid-America

An organization founded in 1976, one of several which functioned in the 1970s and 1980s whose membership was interested in the scientific study of the Sasquatch, also known as Bigfoot, a large hairy nocturnal creature allegedly sighted in thickly-wooded, mountainous regions throughout the world. Sasquatches are reportedly about eight feet tall, walk upright, and appear to be intelligent and peaceful.

About 1,000 Sasquatch sightings were documented through the 1970s in the United States, primarily in the northern states. SIA collected and evaluated data on Bigfoot and released findings to the general public through lectures, publications, and radio and television programs. It maintained a library of books and magazines and published _Bigfoot News_, in which members reported their investigations and sightings. SIA was headquartered in Edmond, Oklahoma. (See also _Bigfoot Information Center; Michigan Canadian Bigfoot Information Center; Monsters_)

Satanic Bible

The basic text of the Church of Satan (founded April 1966), written and compiled by the church’s founder, Anton Szandor LaVey. The book includes the basic principles, the texts of the rituals, and basic invocations and conjurations.

Satanic Ritual Abuse

Satanic ritual abuse is narrowly defined as an assault (either psychological, physical, or sexual) that takes place on an individual as part of a liturgy or ordered pattern incorporated into a ceremony of worship aimed at Satan, the Christian devil. As such, ritual abuse is one type of occult-related crime but different from other types of occult crimes such as the adoption of Satanic symbols and language by a serial killer or Satanic ceremonies that include only legal and voluntary activities.

The idea of Satanic ritual abuse was brought to the fore in the 1980s with the publication of a book, _Michelle Remembers_, which recounted the reputed memories/experiences of Michel-le Smith (the pseudonym of Michelle Pazder, the wife of Lawrence Pazder, a psychiatrist and author of the book). The book recounted the story of Michelle’s teen years in which she was forced into a Satanic cult, abused, and forced to forget her traumatic experiences. Her memory of the experience only re-merged 20 years later when she underwent psychiatric treatment. It would be followed later in the decade by a growing number of reports of Satanic abuse following the pattern of and expanding upon Michelle’s story. These reports were accompanied by additional accounts of contemporary abuse of children by parents in Satanic cults. Graphic accounts of Satanic ritual abuse were supplied in books such as Laureen Stafford’s _Satan’s Underground_ (1988) and Rebecca Brown’s _He Came to Set the Captives Free_ (1993). By the end of the decade, it was apparent that a major wave of concern focused upon the belief in widespread Satanic abuse had emerged. Several cities established agencies to handle the problem.

The belief in Satanic abuse was greatly aided by the McMartin case, in which the teachers and employees of a preschool in Manhattan Beach, California, were accused of sexually and otherwise abusing the children left in their care. The case began with a letter by the Manhattan Beach police chief to the parents of children who had attended or were currently attending the preschool seeking confirmation that Ray Buckley, who worked at the school, had molested some children. When the letter became public, panic followed. Literally hundreds of children were interviewed at the Children’s Institute International, a research facility that specialized in problems of child abuse, and by 1984 the doctors in charge had concluded that some 360 children had been abused over the years. Their report built upon a 1978 paper by Dr. Roland Summit who had argued that children’s reports of sexual abuse were almost always factual.

The accounts derived from the interviews included incidents of Satanic rituals complete with animal sacrifice and the drinking of blood.

The McMartin case lasted for six years. It was placed in the hands of prosecutor Marcia Clark (later to lose the equally high-profile O. J. Simpson case). The McMartin case fell apart when the videos of the interviews of the children revealed the manner in which interviewers planted the story of abuse in the minds of the children and in some of the factually unsubstantiated statements made by the children. Most important of the unsubstantiated claims from the interviews were the descriptions of an extensive set of tunnels under the school building. No such tunnels were ever found, in spite of the building being dismantled and the lot dug up in several different searches.

The multiplying accounts of ritual abuse began to coalesce into a very new picture of Satanism. They described an extensive Satanic network that had been in place for many decades. This picture contradicted all of the previous work that had basically described Satanism at best as a very small phenomenon on the cultural fringe. This network was seen to be responsible for thousands of kidnappings of infants and children who were then abused or killed. Adult members of these groups would give infants for sacrifice in a black mass or allow their older children to become the object of rape by the cult. These children would otherwise seemingly lead a normal life, their trauma undetected by their friends and schoolmates, and later as-
Satanic Society

The Satanic Society is a small Satanic organization in the tradition of Anton LaVey and one of a number of groups that emerged out of the Church of Satan that he founded. The Satanic Society was founded in the early 1990s by its High Priestess Jessica as the Society of Sin, and took its present name toward the end of the decade. Jessica was raised in a Christian home from which she rebelled and was led to Satanism through reading the writing of LaVey and others and through guidance from several older Satanists who served as her mentors. Since the death of LaVey, she considers herself no longer a supporter of the Church of Satan, but recommends both the First Church of Satan and the First Satanic Church.

Membership in the Satanic Society follows application and screening. Members must demonstrate the possession of a wide range of traits and abilities, including a sense of personal responsibility, a goal-centered approach to the future, the ability to organize and manage their life, the ability to listen and work with a team, and the ability to reform and revile the self. Prospective members must complete a lengthy membership application. The Satanic Society accepts the Nine Satanic Statements originally articulated by LaVey and promotes both magic and self-aggrandizement. It is opposed to illegal acts and abusive behavior.

The Satanic Society may be contacted at P.O. Box 109, 2925 Guelph Line, Burlington, ON, Canada L7P 4X4. It has an Internet site at http://www.thesatanicsociety.net/ which includes an extensive collection of documents on Satanism and related topics for the use of its members.

Sources:

Satanism

The worship of Satan, the Christian devil. The idea that such a parody of Christian worship could and did exist emerged in several stages. Central to Satanism was the idea of magic and that extraordinary miracles, if not performed by God in answer to the prayer of one of his servants (i.e., a Christian), had to be accomplished by the devil in cooperation with someone who had made a pact with the devil. Once the idea of the pact became commonplace, it was but a short step to the notion of an organized community of devil-worshippers. Some substance was provided by the small pockets of paganism that had not succumbed to the church’s evangelical efforts.

Before the fifteenth century, the magic practices (i.e., witchcraft) associated with paganism had been defined as unreal and pagan belief as disbelief. However, for several centuries the Roman Catholic Church had been engaged in a struggle to eliminate heresy, especially in southern France. That successful effort had left it with a large and efficient organization, the Inquisition, essentially bereft of a job. Thus the redefinition of witchcraft as Satanism served the Inquisition’s need for those conducting the Inquisition. It transferred witchcraft from the realm of doubt to that of heresy and apostasy, and thus the concern of the Inquisition. Satanism implies the acceptance of Christianity and the subsequent transfer of allegiance to the Christian anti-God.

Immediately after the papal bull Summis desiderantes affectibus, issued in 1484, which unleashed the Inquisition, two German Dominicans, Jakob Sprenger and Heinrich Kramer, wrote a massive text, Malleus Maleficarum (The Witches Hammer), which became the textbook for witch-hunters in understanding the evil of witchcraft and in locating and identifying witches. Witches were accused of sacrificing infants and of having sexual intercourse with the devil (most witches were women). Since the Bible affirmed the existence of witchcraft, to believe it did not exist was to be considered in itself a heresy, according to the inquisitors.
Thus was initiated the era of the great witch-hunts. In spite of the Reformation, which split the church and commanded so much attention in the sixteenth century, the crusade against witches continued and was pursued by Protestants and Catholics alike. Confessions were obtained by torture and tended to conform to the image expected by the inquisitors after having read the Malleus Maleficarum.

There is no real evidence that a devil cult existed. Its description in the Malleus Maleficarum was the result of the imag-dinations of the inquisitors. As the cases were investigated and no supporting evidence was discovered, the stories became increasingly conspiratorial. Therefore, the beliefs and activities of Satanism. Without the writings of Christian anti-Satanists, Satanism could not exist.

The anti-Satanist literature defined the practices proper to any self-deifying Satanist, including the Black Mass (a parody of the Roman Catholic Mass), the saying of the Lord’s Prayer backwards, the destruction/profanation of sacred objects, the sacrifice of an infant, and the invocation of Satan for the purpose of working malevolent magic (sorcery). It was not until the late seventeenth century that something similar to the Satanism described in the Malleus Maleficarum came into being.

The Affair La Voisin

In the year 1679, King Louis XIV set up a secret court to deal with several cases of poisoning of the French nobility. The investigations and findings of the court centered around the activities of Catherine Deshayes, better known as La Voisin. La Voisin operated as an adviser and fortune-teller to ladies at the court. She supplied them with love potions, charms, and occasionally, poison. However, things turned in a more sinister direction in 1667.

In that year La Voisin was consulted by the Marquise de Montespan, Françoise-Athenais, who was ambitious in the extreme. She wanted to become the queen of France. Her goal was, through magic, to alienate Louis from both the queen and his current mistress. Reportedly, following a mass during which two doves were killed, she became Louis’s mistress. Further masses were said to secure her position. Then in 1673, with the Abbé Guibourg officiating, a mass was said over Montespan’s nude body, during which an infant was sacrificed and the blood used to create a host that was then added to the king’s food.

These later masses seemed to have no effect, and Louis was perceived to be changing his affections to another. Finally, in 1879, she had a mass for the dead said for Louis, followed by an attempt to poison him. The plot was discovered. La Voisin was arrested and Montespan distanced from the king (though for the sake of appearances she was never publicly accused). The trial of La Voisin’s activities became knowns threatened to bring down the monarchy if made public. It was handled with the utmost discretion. La Voisin was executed, but most of the people involved were merely banished.

Satanism in the 1980s

Satanism had plainly declined by the end of the 1970s; however, in the mid 1980s there reports that it had merely gone underground began to surface. Claims of the existence of a massive Satanic underground emerged around a set of reports concerning ritual child abuse. Amid the heightened concern for child abuse generated during the era, children began to tell horrendous stories of having been abused as part of forced participation in Satanic rituals, both in homes and in day care centers.
These stories were soon joined by an increasing number of stories of women, and a few men, mostly in their thirties, who told stories of having been abused as children and youth, and then having suppressed the memories until they were recalled twenty years later in sessions with counselors.

These two types of reports generated much attention in the press, a heated debate among psychological professionals, and a variety of court cases. In the end, little substance concerning Satanic activity emerged, though a core of childhood trauma was discovered at the heart of many of the reports. Some cases were discovered to be lies told to reclaim custody of children lost in a divorce settlement, and many were generated by psychological counselors using unprofessional techniques and practices. As the cases were investigated and no supporting evidence was discovered, the stories became increasingly conspir-cy oriented. By the 1990s little support remained for the ve-reality of the accounts of widespread Satanism.

The Church of Satan

A new era began on Walpurgis Night (May Eve), 1966.
Anton LaVey announced the first day of the year of Satan (anno Satanas) marked by the founding of the Church of Satan. The very affront of such an organization in an ostensibly Christian nation was newsworthy, but LaVey, an old carnival performer, was able to make good use of publicity events—the first Satanistic wedding and the first funeral—to have his picture on the front page of newspapers across the United States.

To some, the very appearance of the Church of Satan was all they needed to project it as a symbol of all that was wrong with contemporary society and to associate the new organization with every occult-related crime that was uncovered. The reality was more mundane. The Church of Satan was, in fact, a fairly small group (never more than a few thousand members), which affirmed some of the values that LaVey saw as dominant in secular society but counter to traditional values.
People were trapped in a value system that affirmed mutually contradictory goals. He advocated indulgence of the senses, individual responsibility, selfishness, life in the present, and ego strength and assertion. He specifically denounced love for in-grates, turning the other cheek, and obscurantism.

The main holiday in the church was an individual’s birthday. The primary ritual was the Black Mass, which served as a psychodrama for people, allowing them to overcome inhibitions and move ahead with their lives. He specifically eschewed any illegal activities and told members to pursue their goals, but to do so without harming others.

The Church of Satan gave Satanism a new representability. Its scripture, The Satanic Bible, became a steady seller at news-stands, and LaVey attracted some celebrities to his organization. During the early 1970s, however, the church went through a period of turmoil and a number of splinter groups emerged. The most substantive of these (and the only one to survive the decade) was the Temple of Set. Founded by Michael Aquino and Lilith Sinclair, two prominent leaders in the Church of Satan, the temple became the home of a sophisticated Satanic theology developed from Egyptian thought.
Sat B’Hai

Sources:

Sat B’Hai

A Masonic type of society supposed to be of Anglo-Indian origin. The name signifies “Seven Feathers,” and it alludes to the bird Malacoceras Gross, which flies in groups of seven. The society was introduced into England about the year 1872 by J. H. Lawrence Archer. It had seven descending degrees, each of seven disciples, and seven ascending degrees of perfection, Ekata or Unity. Occult historian Arthur E. Waite believed that the rituals were compiled by Masonic writer John Yarker. Waite also believed that occultist Kenneth MacKenzie may have been involved and may have incorporated some of these rites into the Order of Light, another Masonic society.

Satchidananda, Swami (1914—)

Disciple of the late Swami Sivananda and founder of Integral Yoga International. He was born December 22, 1914, into a wealthy family. He married, but his wife died only five years later. Following World War II he began a wandering life that led him for a brief period to the monastery of the Ramakrishna order at Timpuraiturai, and then to Sivananda’s forest academy at Rishikesh. He was initiated as a renunciate in 1949 and emerged as Swami Satchidananda. He served as a professor of raja and hatha yoga at the academy, the educational arm of the Divine Life Society.

Toward the end of his life, Sivananda assigned different parts of the world to his leading disciples and gave them a commission to spread his yoga teaching around the globe. In 1953 Satchidananda settled in Sri Lanka, where he founded a branch of the Divine Life Society and led in the spread of its work of social service, so integral to Sivananda’s life and work.

Then in 1966 he undertook a global tour sponsored by artist Peter Max, during which he visited the United States and gained popularity in the counter culture. He became widely recognized as a result of his making the opening address for Woodstock. While in America, not part of his assigned territory, he established the Integral Yoga Institute (now Integral Yoga International) in New York. Shortly thereafter he broke with the Divine Life Society and settled permanently in the United States. As a master of hatha yoga, in 1970 he wrote what has become one of the most popular yoga texts in the English language. To his students he taught the integral yoga system of Sivananda, which attempted to integrate the various branches of yoga into a unified practice.

In the 1980s Satchidananda established a new headquarters complex near Buckingham, Virginia, which included the Light of Truth Universal Shrine (LOTUS), a temple embodying the universalist religious perspective taught by Satchidananda and honoring all religious traditions. In his later years Satchidananda was known for his busy schedule of writing and lecturing, which he has since cut back.

Sources:
———. The Glory of Sannyasa. Pomfret Center, Conn.: Integral Yoga Institute, 1975.

Saturn-Gnosis

The teachings of the Fraternitas Saturni, or Brotherhood of Saturn, a German occult group dating from about 1930 and continuing after World War II. One essential feature of the Gnosis was the sex-magic adjustment of coital positions to match planetary movements.

Sources:

Sata Sai Baba (1926—)

Modern Hindu guru, regarded by his devotees as a reincarnation of an early twentieth century holy man, Sai Baba (d. 1918). He was born Sathyanarayana Ramakaru Raju, November 23, 1926, in the village of Puttaparthi, South India. As a thirteen year old, in 1940, he was bitten by a scorpion and remained unconscious for some time. He emerged from the experience, however, a changed person. He stated to those around him, “I am Sai Baba,” a name hardly known to anyone in his obscure village. He then became a religious teacher and healer, manifesting extraordinary miracles.

He quite frequently “materializes” small objects out of the air—pictures, statuettes, prayer beads, or rings—which he gives to his devotees. A widespread religious movement has grown up around him, and he has directed devotees into social work, resulting in the building of a number of schools and medical centers. His fame has spread far beyond India into both African and Western countries due to the distribution of his writings and the books about him written by Indra Devi, Howard Murphet, and other Western writers. A charismatic figure, he is regarded by many devotees as a divine avatar.

Sai Baba remains something of an enigma. He has refused many parapsychologists the opportunity to study him. Many have, however, joined his audiences and reported seeing the extraordinary feats his followers have reported. C. T. K. Chari raised the question of trickery, but gathered no substantial proof of it.

Sources:

Saucer and Unexplained Celestial Events Research Society

A flying saucer organization founded on paper in 1954 by James W. Moseley as the sponsoring organization for his periodical, Saucer News. SAUCERS was never established as a group. It still exists, one of the oldest in ufology. Saucer News made its most lasting contribution in the 1950s with its exposés of contactee George Adamski. Saucer News was sold to Gray Barker in 1968, and it continued to appear until 1972. In 1976 Moseley began a new periodical entitled Nexus and eventually changed the name to Saucer News. It was sent gratis to several hundred of Moseley's acquaintances. Address: P.O. Box 1709, Key West, FL 33041. Website: http://www.martiansgohome.com/smeart/.

Savage, Minot Judson (1841–1918)

Unitarian clergyman, author, and an early member of the American Society for Psychological Research. He was born on June 10, 1841, at Norridgewock, Maine. He studied at Bangor Theological Seminary, graduated in 1864, and was ordained as a Congregational minister a short time afterward. He served churches in California, Massachusetts, and Missouri. In 1873 he left Congregationalism and joined the Unitarian Church. He subsequently pastored the Third Unitarian Church, Chicago (1873–74), the Church of the Unity, Boston (1874–96), and the Church of the Messiah (now the Community Church), New York City (1896–1906).

Savage frequently advocated the examination of Darwin's evolutionary theories and their acceptance by the church. Evolution he believed, tended to strengthen rather than weaken religious faith. His views were expressed in his books: Christianity, the Science of Mankind (1873), The Religion of Evolution (1876), and The Morals of Evolution (1880).

As were many liberal thinkers of the day, he became interested not only in the scientific approach to origins supplied by biology, but the light shed on the end of earthly life by psychological research. He wrote several books dealing with issues of religion and survival. He died May 22, 1918, in Boston, Massachusetts.

Sources:

Sawyer, Carrie M.

American materialization medium with whom Paul Gibier, director of the Bacteriological Institute of New York, conducted experiments in his own laboratory for ten years. According to Gibier’s report, published in 1901 in the Annales des Sciences Psychiques, he enclosed the medium in a large wire cage, the meshes of which were so small that they only admitted his little finger. The cage was darkened. After the appearance of several spirit forms, Gibier was asked to tend to the medium, who required his care.

Stepping before the door of the cage, he was astounded to see the medium fall into his arms through the door, which was locked with intact paper slip fastenings and a stamp over the keyhole. The phenomenon was repeated on three occasions. According to sitters, the wire cage felt burning hot when the medium exited it, though Gibier could not confirm this observation.

Gibier intended to take Sawyer on a three-years tour of England, France, and Egypt, but he died in an accident before the project could be realized.

É. A. Brackett, a Boston sculptor, attended a séance in the mid-1880s during which he was led into the cabinet by a spirit. Sawyer was not entranced. Arm in arm, the three of them walked out of the cabinet in full view of 25 sitters. In his account of Sawyer, Brackett also wrote of evil influences that were sometimes noticeable in her séances.

Sources:

Scallion, Gordon Michael

Gordon-Michael Scallion, a contemporary prophet known for his predictions of vast changes, began his current career in 1979. As an electronic consultant, he had been meeting with a client when unexpectedly, he lost his voice. He checked into a hospital, and during his stay had an apparition of a woman who came into his room and hovered several feet above him. Scallion’s voice returned. It also appeared that he had experienced a psychic awakening. He began to see auras around people and emerged as a healer.

He continued to receive visions of future events and through the 1980s had a series of successful predictions, including the 1984 Mexico City earthquake and George Bush’s election as president in 1988. In 1984, inner guidance told him to move to a location within ten miles of the New Hampshire border at an elevation 300 feet above sea level. He settled in Chesterfield, New Hampshire. Then in 1991 he had a set of disturbing dreams that took place over 29 evenings. He wrote down the contents of the dreams and sent the transcript to a number of his friends. This report is now seen as the origin of what would become his periodical, The Earth Changes Report. The subject of his dreams was worldwide changes, many of a catastrophic nature.

In the 1990s, Scallion unveiled maps of North America and the world that indicated a series of significant geographical changes that he predicted would occur between 1998 and 2012. They bear some resemblance to the I AM America map published in 1899. Scallion’s map shows the American West Coast, the Mississippi River Valley, and Florida now covered by water. It also shows the emergence of new land masses east of Australia, south of the southern tip of South America, and in the midst of the South Pacific Ocean. Concurrent with the map, Scallion predicted that a great spiritual awakening would occur worldwide during the 1990s. He saw that by the year 2002 humanity would be reborn and living in harmony with each other, and that a new utopian society would arise. Many of Scallion’s predicted changes are based upon his appropriation of a form of what is termed the Gaia hypothesis, the idea that the Earth is itself a living organism that reacts to human disturbance of the natural order of things.

Scallion and his wife, Cynthia Keys, now head the Matrix Institute and send out The Earth Changes Newsletter bimonthly. The institute may be reached at P.O. Box 336, Chesterfield, NH 03443. It has a website at http://www.matrixinstitute.com/. A complete evaluation of Scallion’s career rests on the dramatic predictions he has made for the first decade of the new millennium. Objective looks at his predictions to date note both significant hits and misses among those predictions that were falsifiable.

Sources:
Witchcraft

In medieval times, Scandinavian examples of the witchcraft persecutions that arose in much of Europe were rare, but in 1669–70 a great outbreak against witchcraft commenced in Sweden, especially in the district of Östergötland and Västergötland. The village of Mohra was a center of the activity.

The list of arrested included 18 women and 17 men, of whom 15 were children. Among those who suffered death were 15 children, and 36 more, of different ages between nine and sixteen, were forced to run a gauntlet and be scourged on the hands at the church door every Sunday for one year. Twenty more, who had been drawn to Satan, whom they promised to serve faithfully. Hereupon the devil cut their fingers, and they wrote their names in his book. He then caused them to be baptized with blood in his book.

The commissioners began by taking the confessions of the children, and then they confronted them with the witches, whom the children accused as their seducers. Most of the latter, to use the words of the authorized report, said, “... children with them, which they had either seduced or at-tended them, and mischief they were forced sometimes to suffer of the devil unto the living God.” One account noted, “In the meanwhile, the commissioners that were of the clergy examined the witches, but could not bring them to any confession, all continuing steadfast in their denials, till at last one of them burst into tears, and their confession agreed with what the children said; and these expressed their abhorrence of the fact, and begged pardon. Adding that the devil, whom they called Locyta, had stopped the mouths of some of them, so loath was he to part with his prey, and had stopped the ears of others. And being now gone from them, they could no longer conceal it; for they had now perceived his treachery.”

The witches asserted that the journey to “Blockula” was not always made with the same kind of conveyance. They commonly used humans, animals, and even spits and posts, according to opportunity. They preferred, however, riding upon goats, and if they had more children with them than the animal could conveniently carry, they elongated its back by means of a spit annointed with their magical ointment.

It was further stated that if the children did at any time name the names of those, either man or woman, that had been with them and had carried them away, they were again carried by force, either to “Blockula” or the crossway, and there beaten, insomuch that some of them died of it, “and this some of the witches confessed, and added, that now they were exceedingly troubled and tortured in their minds for it.”

One thing was lacking to confirm these confessions: the marks of the whip could not be found on the bodies of the victims, except on one boy, who had some wounds and holes in his back that were given him with thorns; but the witches said they would quickly vanish.

As described in the court records, the mysterious “Blockula” was situated in a large meadow, like a plain sea, “wherein you can see no end.” The house they met at had a great gate painted with many different colors. Through this gate they went into a little meadow distinct from the other, and here they turned their animals to graze. When they had used men for their beasts of burden, they set them up against the wall in a state of helpless slumber, and there they remained until needed for the homeward flight. In a very large room of this house stood a long table, at which the witches sat down, and adjoining this room was another chamber, where there were “lovely and delicate beds.”

As soon as they arrived at the ritual site, the visitors were required to deny their baptism and devote themselves body and soul to Satan, whom they promised to serve faithfully. Hereupon the devil cut their fingers, and they wrote their names with blood in his book. He then caused them to be baptized anew, by priests appointed for that purpose.

Upon this the devil gave them a purse, wherein there were fillings of clocks, with a big stone tied to it, which they threw into the water, and said, “As these fillings of the clock do never return to the clock, from which they were taken, so may my soul never return to heaven!”

Since few of the children had any marks on their fingers to show where they had been cut, another difficulty arose in verifying their statement. But here again the story was helped by a girl who had hurt her finger, and who declared that because she would not stretch out her finger, the devil in anger had wounded it.

When the ceremonies were completed, the witches sat down at the table, those whom the devil esteemed most being placed nearest to him, but the children denounced all of them, except some very little ones, which could not tell all the circumstances, did punctually agree in their confessions of particulars.
their intercourse with Satan, and these children, having mar-rried together, became the parents of toads and serpents.

The witches of Sweden appear to have been less noxious than those of most other countries, for, whatever they confessed, there seems to have been no real evidence of mischief done by them. They confessed that they were obliged to promise Satan that they would do all kinds of mischief and that the devil taught them "milk" in the following manner. They used to stick a knife in the wall and hang a kind of label on it, which they drew and stroked, and as long as this lasted, the persons they had power over were miserably plagued. The beasts that were milked like this sometimes died.

One woman confessed that the devil gave her a wooden knife, with which, going into houses, she had the power to kill anything she touched. However, there were few that could confect that she had hurt any man or woman. Being asked if they had murdered any children, they confessed that they had indeed tormented many, but did not know whether any of them died of these plagues. They also said that the devil had showed them several places where he had power to do mischief.

The minister of Elfdale declared that one night these witch-eses were, to his thinking, on the crown of his head, and that from this he had a long-continued headache. One of the witches confessed that the devil had sent her to torment the minister, and that she was ordered to strike a nail into his head, but his skull was so hard that the nail would not penetrate it and merely produced that headache. The minister said further that one night he was so seized as if he were torn with an instrument used for combining flux, and when he awoke, he heard somebody scratching and scraping at the window, but could see nobody. One of the witches confessed that she was the person who had disturbed him.

The minister of Mohra also claimed that one night one of these witches came into his house and so violently took him by the throat that he thought he would choke. Upon awaking, he saw the person that did it, but did not recognize her, and for some weeks he was not able to speak or perform divine service.

An old woman of Elfdale confessed that the devil had helped her make a nail, which she stuck into a boy's knee, of which stroke the boy remained lame a long time. She added that before she was burned or executed by the hand of justice, the boy would recover.

Another circumstance confessed by these witches was that the devil gave them a beast, about the shape and size of a cat, which they called a "carrier," and a bird as big as a raven, but white, and these they could send anywhere, and wherever they went, they took away all sorts of victuals, such as butter, cheese, milk, bacon, and all sorts of seeds, and carried them to the witches.

What the bird brought, they kept for themselves, but what the carrier brought they took to "Blockula," where the archfiend gave them as much as he thought good. The carriers, they said, often filled themselves so full that they were forced to disgorge by the way, and what they thus rendered fell to the ground, and was found in several gardens where coleworts grew, and far from the houses of the witches. It was of a yellow colour like gold and was called witches' butter.

Such were the details, as far as they can now be obtained, of this extraordinary occurrence, the only one known to have occurred in the northern part of Europe during the age of the witch-trials. In other countries, we can trace some particular cause that gave rise to great persecutions of this kind, but here, as the story is told, we see none, for it is hardly likely that such a strange series of accusations should have been the mere involuntary creation of a party of little children.

Suspicion is excited by the peculiar part the two clergymen of Elfdale and Mohra played in this affair, and perhaps they were not altogether innocent of fabrication. They seem to have been weak, superstitious men, and perhaps they had been reading the witchcraft books of the south until they imagined the country around them to be overrun with witches. Perhaps the two clergymen themselves became alarmed, but one thing seems certain, that the moment the commission was revoked and the persecution ceased, no more witches were heard of.

The proceedings at Mohra caused so much alarm throughout Sweden that prayers were ordered in all the churches for delivery from the snares of Satan, who was believed to have been let loose in that kingdom. A new edict of the king suddenly put a stop to the whole process, and the matter was brought to a close rather mysteriously. It is said that the witch prosecution was increasing so much in intensity that accusations began again; a complaint was made to the king, and the mania brought to a close.

Spiritualism

In 1843, an epidemic of "preaching" occurred in southern Sweden, which provided Joseph Ennemoser with material for an interesting passage in his History of Magic (1854). The manifestation of this was similar in character to outbreaks described elsewhere. A writer in the London Medium and Daybreak of 1878 states,

"It is about a year and a half since I changed my abode from Stockholm to this place, and during that period it is wonderful how Spiritualism has gained ground in Sweden. The leading papers, that used in my time to refuse to publish any article on Spiritualism excepting such as ridiculed the doctrine, have of late thrown their columns wide open to the serious discussion of the matter. Many a Spiritualist in secret, has thus been encouraged to give publicity to his opinions without standing any longer in awe of that demon, public ridicule, which intimidates so many of our brethren.

"Several of Allan Kardec's works have been translated into Swedish, among which I may mention his Evangile selon le Spiri-tisme as particularly well-rendered in Swedish by Walter Jochnick. A Spiritual Library was opened in Stockholm on the 1st of April last, which will no doubt greatly contribute to the spreading of the blessed doctrine. The visit of Mr. Eglington to Stockholm was of the greatest benefit to the cause. Let us hope that the stay of Mrs. Esperance in the south of Sweden may have an equal beneficial effect.

"Notwithstanding all this progress of the cause in the neighbouring country, Spiritualism is looked upon here as something akin to madness, but even here there are thin, very thin rays, and very wide apart, struggling to pierce the darkness.''

In Norway, Spiritualism as known to modern Europe, did not seem to have become existent until about 1880. A writer in a number of the Dawn of Light published in that year states,

"Spiritualism is just commencing to give itself a visible existence here in Norway. The newspapers have begun to attack it as a delusion and the 'expose' of Mrs. C., which recently took place at 38 Great Russell St., London, has made the round through all the papers in Scandinavia. After all, it must sooner or later take root as in all other parts of the world. Mr. Eglinton, the English medium, has done a good work in Stockholm, showing some of the great savants a new world; and a couple of years ago Mr. Slade visited Copenhagen. The works of Mr.
Zollner, the great astronomer of Leipzig, have been mentioned in the papers and caused a good deal of sensation.

"Of mediums there are several here, but all, as yet, afraid to speak out. One writes with both hands; a gentleman is developing as a drawing medium. A peasant, who died about five years ago, and lived not far from here, was an excellent healing medium; his name was Knud (the wise Knud); directly when he touched a patient he knew if the same could be cured or not, and often, in severe cases, the pains of the sick person went through his own body. He was also an auditive medium, startling the people many times by telling them what was going to happen in the future; but the poor fellow suffered much from the ignorance and fanaticism around him, and was several times put in prison. I am doing all I can to make people acquainted with our grand cause.''

A second and more hopeful letter of 1881, addressed to the editor of the Revue Spirite, was as follows:

“My dear Brothers, Here our science advances without noise. An excellent writing medium has been developed among us, one who writes simultaneously with both hands; while we have music in a room where there are no musical instruments; and where there is a piano it plays itself. At Bergen, where I have recently been, I found mediums, who in the dark, made sketches—were dessinateurs—using also both hands. I have seen, also, with pleasure that several men of letters and of science have begun to investigate our science spirite. The pastor Eckhoff, of Bergen, has for the second time preached against Spiritualism, ‘this instrument of the devil, this psychographie’; and to give more of eclat to his sermon he has had the goodness to have it printed; so we see that the spirits are working. The suit against the medium, Mme. F., in London, is going the rounds of the papers of Christiania; these journals opening their columns, when occasion offers, to ridicule Spiritualism.

We are, however, friends of the truth, but there are scabby sheep among us of a different temperament. From Stockholm they write me that a library of spiritual works has been opened there, and that they have to a medium from Newcastle, with whom seances are to be held.

In the London Spiritual Magazine of May 1885, is a long and interesting paper on Swedish Spiritualism by William Howitt, in which he gives quite a notable collection of narratives concerning the “Phenomenal Spiritual Manifestations in Sweden,” most of which were furnished by an eminent and learned Swedish gentleman—Count Piper. Howitt stated that the public had become so thoroughly sated with tales of hauntings, apparitions, previsions, etc., that Piper’s narrations would present few, if any, features of interest, save in justification of one assertion, that Spiritualism was rife in human experience everywhere, although it might not take the form of a public movement, as it had in America and England.

As early as 1864, the Aften Blad, one of the most popular journals circulated in Sweden, published a number of excellent leading articles commending the belief in spiritual ministry, and the study of such phenomena that would promote communion between the “two worlds.”

Psychical Research and Parapsychology

Scandinavia has produced some notable psychical researchers, including Sydney Ahrutz (1868–1925) of Uppsala University; Chr. Winther of Copenhagen, who was president of the Danish Society for Psychical Research (Selskapet for Psykisk Forskning) and experimented with the medium Anna Rasmus-son; and Aage Slomann (died 1970), a full-time parapsycologist and president of the Danish Society. Professor Jaeger and Thornstein Wereide (who edited the Oslo Psykisk Tid-schrift) led the effort in Norway, and in Iceland could be found Harald Nielsdøn (died 1928), who wrote books on theological and psychic subjects; Godmundur Hannesson of the University of Reykjavik; and Einar Hjorleifsson Kvaran (1859–1938), who founded the Icelandic Society for Psychical Research in 1918.

In 1942, the Swedish Sällskapet for Parapsykologisk Forskning (Society for Parapsychological Research) was founded in Stockholm. Well-known members included Gosta Rodhe, Rolf Evijegärd, Eric Uggla, and Eva Hellström (who was also clairvoyant). The engineer Haakon Forswald (1897–1978) carried out valuable studies in psychokinesis. Other Swedish psychcyologists include Martin Johnson and Nils Olof Jacobson.

In Norway, there is the Norsk Parapsykologisk Selskap, under Kirsten Pauss (Dahlsgt. 33, Oslo 3). The dramatist Wiers Jensen (1866–1925) made notable contributions to the study of the “varder” or “projected double” phenomenon, and also edited the journal Norsk Tidsskrift for Psykisk Forskning from 1922 to 1925.

In Finland there has also been much activity in parapsychological research, which has received favorable notice from such scientists as Sven Segerstråle, professor of biology; Sven Krohn, professor of philosophy and former president of Parapsykologien Tukituomissuure; Vainö Aufer, famous geologist; and Uuno Saarnio, philosopher and mathematician. The Finnish Society for Psychical Research was established as early as 1907 under the name Sällskapet for Forskning i Finland-Suomen Psykkinen Tukituomissuure. The psychical researcher Jarl Fahler was president for a number of years, and also experiimented with ESP and psychokinesis; a later president was Stefan Talqvist. In 1938, the Parapsykologien Tukitusseura was established and has been active ever since. In 1965, an Institute of Parapsychology was established in Helsingfors, directed by Jarl Fahler, who is also president of the Society for Hy-nosis in Finland. Another parapsychological organization is Tampereen Parapsykologien Tukitusseura, in Tammers-for, under the presidency of Gunnar Strömmer.

Scandinavian UFO Information (Organization)

Founded in 1957 to research and disseminate information relating to UFO phenomena. It publishes the quarterly UFO-Ny (Danish language), UFO-VISION (Yearbook of UFO Literature, Danish language), and an occasional Newsletter in Enlish. Address: P.O. Box 6, DK 2820 Gentofte, Denmark. Website: http://www.ufo.dk.

Scapulomancy

An ancient branch of pyromancy (divination through fire) based on the interpretation of the cracks in the shoulder blade of an animal burned in sacrifice.

Scheaffer, Hans (1906– )

Physiologist, director of the Department of Physiology, College of Medicine, University of Heidelberg, Germany, who has also written on parapsychology. He was born on August 13, 1906, in Düsseldorf, Germany, and studied at the University of Bonn (M.D., 1931). He held teaching positions beginning in 1935 at the University of Bonn (1935–40), the Kerckhoff Foundation, Bad Nauheim (1940–41), Giessen University (1941–50), and at Heidelberg University after 1950. He was an editor of Medizin, Theorie und Klinik, a winner of the Adolf Fick Prize in Physiology (1944), and an honorary life member of New York Academy of Sciences.

Sources:

———. “Telepathie und Hellsehen” (Telepathy and Clair-voyance). Die Umwelt 52 (1952).

Schepis, Giovanni (1894–1963)

Italian official who experimented in the field of parapsychology. He was born on June 5, 1894, at Catania, Italy, and studied at the University of Rome. He was a lecturer in statistics at the University of Rome for many years (1936–63). In 1963 he became the director of the mechanographic center of Italy’s Department of Elections, of the Ministry of the Interior. In 1937 he co-founded and became the first general secretary of the Società Italiana de Metapsichica. He went on to become its president (1959–63). Schepis conducted mass experiments in telepathy using radio and television. He also studied the personality of sensitives, but made his major contribution with his work on the statistical approach to parapsychological experiments. He published a number of papers in various Italian journals. He died December 1, 1963.

Sources:

Schierling, Charlotte Anna (1911— )
German archivist and evangelical Christian who conducted research in parapsychology. She was born on January 10, 1911, at Tübingen, West Prussia. She received her doctorate at the University of Berlin. After World War II, she joined the staff of the Danzig Library (1946) and then became the archivist of the Federal Board for Employment Service, Frankfurt am Main, West Germany. Schierling published a number of books and pamphlets for children and on religious subjects. She also studied shamanism in Asia and the United States and took special interest in telepathy and the study of poltergeist phenomena. She published an article “Red Indian Studies,” in Dakota Scout (1960) and subsequently undertook research in shamanistic practices among Native Americans.

Sources:
Hayek, Max. Der Schriftsteller Raffael Schermann. N.p., 1921.

Schermann, Raphael (1879— )
Austrian clairvoyant mostly known as a graphologist but with powers far transcending reading character from handwriting samples. He was credited with telling the past and future with an uncanny precision. From the writing Schermann could visualize the writer, from a face he could visualize and reproduce the script. "Psycho-graphology," the term employed by E. S. Bagger as the title of his book on Schermann, was coined to refer to this strange gift of combining the science of graphology with psychic talents.
Schermann was born in Cracow, then part of Austrian Galicia, in 1879. He was self-educated, and by the age of 12 he had developed a serious study of the characteristics of handwriting. He visited the United States early in the twentieth century, but soon returned to Europe and settled down in Vienna, where he earned a living as a claims inspector for an insurance company. His privately exhibited talents as a psycho-graphologist soon earned him a considerable reputation, and he was consulted by the police to assist their work, eventually being appointed an official handwriting expert at the Vienna Central Law Court.
During World War I, Schermann served in the Austrian army. In 1923, he again visited the United States, where he delivered lectures and cooperated with the New York police in solving a murder mystery. Back in Vienna, he acted in two silent movies based on some of his most interesting cases. After this, he continued to work as a consultant for a group of insurance companies, but spent his spare time on psychography. He charged nothing for his talents and took part in many experiments conducted by psychical researchers.

Sources:
Hayek, Max. Der Schriftsteller Raffael Schermann. N.p., 1921.

Schiller, F(erdinand) C(anning) S(cott) (1864—1937)
Author, philosopher, and president of the Society for Psychical Research, London (1914). He was born on August 16, 1864, at Ottensen, near Altona, Germany. He was educated at Rugby School, and Balliol College, Oxford University (M.A., D.Sc., LL.D.). He moved to the United States, taught philosophy at Cornell University for four years and then spent many years as a private tutor. He joined the SPR in 1884.
He became an active member of the SPR and served terms as president and vice president (1920–28). His earliest contribution to the society’s Proceedings was on automatic writing experiments (vol. 4, pt. 11, 1887). He later contributed frequent reviews and articles on psychological and philosophical aspects to both the Proceedings and the Journal of the SPR and other psychic and non-psychic periodicals.

He was author of the articles on psychic research in the Encyclopedia Britannica (11th edition, 1920) and of articles on Spiritism and telepathy in Hasting’s Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics. He also authored a number of books on various philosophical questions. He died August 6, 1937.

Sources:

Schlatter, Francis (1855–1895)

Mystic and miracle worker of the nineteenth century. Born in Alsace in 1855, he emigrated to the United States and traveled the country with head and feet bare, preaching the love of God and peace amongst men. When imprisoned as a vagrant, he continued to preach in jail. He had a gift of healing and cured many sick individuals merely by placing his hand on their heads. He appeared in San Francisco, California, in 1894, traveled through Mexico, and crossed the Mohave Desert. He spent several weeks at Flagstaff, then wandered among the Indian tribes, staying with the chief of the Navajos five days and performing many miracles.

Thousands came to see him in Denver, Colorado, where he once identified a secret murderer. He reputedly healed blindness, deafness, diphtheria, cancer, and other diseases with a touch of the hand, and also cured a number of handicapped people. He claimed that faith was the cause of his cures, and that even touching was unnecessary. He would sometimes sensitize a piece of material or a handkerchief with healing force. He treated from three to five thousand people a day by standing with outstretched hands blessing them.

Eventually he undertook a forty-day fast, during which he continued to heal the sick. In November 1895 he disappeared from Denver without warning. He left a note at the house of Al- derman Fox, where he was a guest, stating "Mr. Fox—my mission is ended, and the Father calls me. I salute you. Francis Schlatter, November 13th." He was never heard from again.

Schmeidler, Gertrude Raffel (1912– )

Professor of psychology and parapsychologist, she was born Gertrude Raffel on July 15, 1912, in Long Branch, New Jersey. She studied at Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts (B.A. magna cum laude, 1932), Clark University, Worcester, Massachusetts (M.A., 1935), and Radcliffe College/Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts (Ph.D., 1935). She first encountered parapsychology by reading a just-published copy of J. B. Rhine’s first book, Extra-Sensory Perception, in 1934. Before she completed her Ph.D. she took a course in psychical research with Gardner Murphy.

After graduation she taught at Monmouth College, Long Branch, New Jersey (1935–37), was a research associate at Harvard University (1942–44) and a research officer at the American Society for Psychical Research (1945–46) before beginning her long tenure at the City College of New York in 1945. She was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association and was elected vice president (1958, 1960) and president (1959). She also received a grant for research from the Parapsychology Foundation (1955–59).

Schmeidler has conducted quantitative experiments in telepathy and clairvoyance with hundreds of students and other subjects in an attempt to evaluate connections between objective interpersonal and personality factors and success or failure in ESP experiments. She has also taken an interest in the question of theories of survival after death. She attained fame in the 1940s for her "sheep-goat" experiments based upon the hypothesis that subjects who believed in ESP scored better as subjects in ESP tests than those who did not. Also among her many noteworthy experiments were PK tests with psychic Ingo Swann. She has contributed to over 150 articles for professional journals.

Sources:

Schmidt, Helmut (1928–)

Physicist who has specialized in parapsychology. He was born in Danzig, Germany, February 21, 1928. He was educated at the University of Göttingen (M.A., 1953) and the University of Cologne (Ph.D. Physics, 1958). He moved to North America in 1964 as a visiting lecturer at the University of British Columbia and stayed to become senior research physicist at Boeing Science Research Laboratory (1966–69) and a resident associate at the Institute of Parapsychology (1969–70). In 1970 he was named director of the institute, a position he held until 1973. More recently he became associated with The Mind Science Foundation in San Antonio, Texas.

Schmidt has been praised by critics of parapsychology as the person with the most sophisticated approach to the methodological design of parapsychological experiments. He has conducted research with electronic random generators (with which he is most identified), and with E. H. Walker he proposed a "psi enhancement" paradigm in which it is suggested that psi facility is triggered at the instant of positive feedback. He also worked with Walter J. Levy, Jr. on possible PK in chickens, cockroaches, and rats, though the studies with Levy were called into question after it was discovered that he had been manipulating data.

Sources:

Schneider Brothers, Willi (1903–1971) and Rudi (1908–1957)

Physical mediums of Braunau, Austria, initially discovered by Baron Schrenck-Notzing and tested by him under stringent conditions in the presence of a number of scientists. The father of the Schneider brothers was a linotype compositor. Of his six sons, four—Willi, Rudi, Hans and Karl—had psychic power, though the latter two only in a slight degree.

The trance personality of Willi was a woman, “Olga,” who said that her full name was Olga Lintner, and that she was the notorious Lola Montez, the mistress of Ludwig I, the king of Bavaria, who died in New York in 1861, Willi’s mediumistic development was taken up by Schrenck-Notzing.

Between December 3, 1921, and July 1, 1922, a hundred scientists witnessed Willi’s telekinesis and ectoplasm phenomena under very strict test conditions and declared themselves completely convinced of their reality. The room was searched, the medium was examined by specialists, and glowing pins were affixed to his clothing so that his slightest movements could be seen by witnesses even in the dark. Willi sat outside the cabinet. Two witnesses held his wrists and a third sat in front of him, holding his hands and keeping his legs between his own. Both medium and experimenters were shut off from the objects to be telekinetically moved by a gauze screen in the form of a cage. The severity of the control did not prevent the phenomena.

The result of these sittings was published in Schrenck-Notzing’s Experimente der Fernbewegung in 1924. In English-speaking countries, the mediumship of the Schneider brothers began to be known after British psychical researcher Harry Price, accompanied by Mrs. Holub, came to London, and from November 12 to December 13 he gave twelve sittings on the society’s premises. According to E. J. Dingwall’s report in Proceedings of the SPR (vol. 36): “The only phenomena clearly observed were telekinetic, and even these were only striking upon a few occasions.”

Making every effort to find a normal explanation Dingwall stated: “In order to raise an object 2–3 feet distant from him, the medium must have had concealed in his mouth an extensible apparatus workable by the mouth alone and by this means have supported a flat object lying on the table and raise it into the air from below. This feat must have been accomplished without any obvious interference with his breathing or speech; and when completed the rod must have been in some inexplicable manner withdrawn and again concealed in his mouth. We frankly do not believe such a device exists, and therefore are driven to the conclusion that the only reasonable hypothesis which covers the facts is that some supernormal agency produced the results.”

The development of Rudi Schneider’s powers was also under Schrenck-Notzing’s supervision. One night in a séance with Willi, “Olga” said that the power was not strong enough and that she wanted Rudi to assist. As Rudi was only eleven years of age then and was asleep in bed, the parents objected. “Olga” did not answer.

A few minutes later, however, the door opened and Rudi, in deep trance, entered and joined the circle. After that night, “Olga” permanently attached herself to Rudi and never spoke through Willi again. Her place was taken by “Mina,” another female personality.

Rudi’s first independent séance was held in November 1919, at Braunau. The materialization of a tiny hand was witnessed. One peculiarity of his sittings was the frequent intermissions that “Olga” demanded.

In 1923–24, Stefan Meyer and Karl Prizbram, of the Institut für Radiumforschung der Akademie der Wissenschaften, Vienna, detected Rudi evading control. After that they had no reason to believe that any of the phenomena they witnessed were of supernormal character. Actually, however, fraud was more assumed than proved. Rudi went on with his sittings and several reports of his mediumship appeared through the 1920s in the Journal of the ASPR. Then in April 1927, the journal Psyche published an article by Warren Jay Vinton that made a detailed and categorical charge of fraud through confederacy. Vinton was introduced at Braunau by Dingwall, attended a total of ten séances and concluded that the phenomena were caused by someone who secretly invaded the séance room.

The article made a stir and provoked strong comment both for and against these claims. J. Malcolm Bird, the researcher of the American Society for Psychical Research, decided to see the evidence for himself. He arrived at Braunau in October 1927, but owing to pressure of business could only stay for a single séance. His conclusion was that all the essentials of the Dingwall-Vinton theory were verified and all the conditions requisite to its operation were reproduced.

Harry Price and the VX

Some time after, Walter F. Prince attended a series of ten sittings with Rudi in Braunau and in Rudolf Lambert’s house at Stuttgart. Phenomena were scarce. In his notes in Bulletin VII of the Boston Society for Psychical Research, published under the title Experiments with Physical Mediums in Europe (1928), Prince came to the conclusion that the phenomena could not be considered genuine. He observed: “Throughout the thirteen sittings, despite my studied and unremitting complaisance, no phenomena have occurred when I had any part in the control, save certain movements which were capable of the simplest explanation.”

These events somewhat dimmed the luster of Rudi’s reputation. Schrenck-Notzing desired to settle the matter definitely and arranged an elaborate program of experiments for 1929. They were to be conducted in Herr Kral’s laboratory under a completed system of partly electrical, partly tactual control. Early in 1929, before the test could be conducted, both Schrenck-Notzing and Kral died. Later that year, psychical researcher Harry Price paid a visit to Munich. On this occasion he made arrangements with Rudi to visit the National Laboratory for Psychical Research in London. Karl Ameckler, an electrician who employed Rudi, accompanied him to London and installed his electric indicator. This indicator was developed from Price’s electric chair idea. As developed at the beginning of 1923, it consisted of a number of electric contact-makers, normally kept apart by light springs which corresponded to various parts of the medium’s anatomy. The contacts were connected up with a row of colored indicator lights, so that should a person under test move or rise from the chair, the corresponding light immediately failed.

The plan of this indicator had been submitted to Baron Schrenck-Notzing and perfected by him and Ameckler. In its latest phase, it controlled the four limbs of the medium by four separate electric circuits. In the experiments at the National Laboratory, however, Harry Price decided to control the hands and feet of the sitters in the same way, making six separate circuits and corresponding lights for all.

The first series of séances took place between April 12 and April 22, 1929. The second series lasted from November 14, 1929, to January 20, 1930. Both were eminently successful. As Harry Price stated in the conclusion to his book, "Rudi Schneider: A Scientific Investigation of His Mediumship" (1930):

"But the fact remains that Rudi has been subjected to the most merciless triple control ever imposed upon a medium in this or any other country and has come through the ordeal with flying colours. The genuineness of the phenomena produced at his London séances has impressed nearly one hundred persons, including scientists, doctors, business men, professional magicians, journalists, etc. The triple control involved: The holding of Rudi's hands and feet by one controller, a second person always having one hand upon the four locked hands of the medium and the controller; the electric indicator; the dressing of the medium in a pajama jacket to which metallic gloves were sewn; he being invariably searched beside.

The phenomena witnessed were summed up by Harry Price as follows:

...the Vienna Experiments: Miss Stella C. . . . If Rudi were to be 'exposed' a hundred times other physical medium who could claim it—except perhaps should have no hesitation in awarding it to Rudi. I know of no genuine mediumship under our own scientific conditions, we electric indicators, the charging plates, could intercept it. An increase in red light, a change in the conditions of the room, or a change in the medium's position however, always sensibly diminished the action of the substance.

Under the conditions laid down by Osty, no fraud seemed possible. He was satisfied as to the reality of telekinetic movements. At the end of ninety sittings, Rudi was presented with a gift of 5,000 francs from the institute in recognition of the willing manner in which he had submitted to experiments. For details of the experiments see Osty's book Les Pouvoirs inconnus de l'esprit sur la matière (1932).

In the spring of 1932, Rudi again sat at the National Laboratory of Psychical Research. Out of twenty-seven séances, eighteen were negative. His powers appeared to be on the wane. Nevertheless Osty's infra-red experiments were successfully duplicated and a number of distinguished scientists were convinced of the reality of the phenomena.

As, however, an automatic photograph taken in the twenty-fifth sitting apparently revealed (as disclosed a year later in Price's report An Account of Some Further Experiments with Rudi Schneider), there was an arm free behind Rudi when both his hands were supposed to be controlled by the sitter in front. Price concluded that "it will be necessary for previous investigators to revise their findings."

Both this conclusion and its basis were subjected to vigorous attack by Professor Fraser-Harris (Light, March 17, 1933). He gave his unqualified testimony to the genuineness of the medium. Several members of the laboratory's council resigned to protest the report.

Strong exception to Price's methods was also taken by Osty in an offprint from the Revue Métapsychique, April 1933, L'Etrange Conduit de M. Harry Price. It has also been suggested that Price misinterpreted or deliberately falsified this photograph.

In October–December 1932, Rudi gave 27 sittings in London to Lord Charles Hope's research group. According to the report in Proceedings of the SPR (vol. 41, p. 131): "On the whole, the phenomena noted were weaker and less frequent than those reported as having taken place with the same medium elsewhere, but the results obtained go far to support the claims put forward by Dr. Osty in his report." Replying to Price's allegation of trickery, Lord Charles Hope stated in a special section of the report:

"I submit that neither the evidence Mr. Price adduces nor his method of presentation is such as to make his charges count for anything against a medium with Rudi's record. What does emerge damaged from Mr. Price's report is his own reputation as controller, conductor of investigations and critic."

In an addendum, Theodore Besterman stated: "Quite apart from other and important considerations, Mr. Price's report appears to me to be in itself quite worthless as an exposure. It can have no effect on Rudi Schneider's standing."

The next development was Bulletin V of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research (Rudi Schneider, the Vienna Experiments of Professors Meyer and Przibram). This referred to sittings in 1924. The theories of fraud there advanced, however, had been dealt with earlier in Schrenck-Notzing’s posthumous Die Phänomene des Mediums Rudolf Schneider (December 1922) and by Osty in his book. The rest of the Bulletin was devoted to answering the criticism that Osty and others levelled against Price. Meanwhile, Willi Schneider had retired from mediumship much earlier, after the sittings with Schrenck-Notzing. His psychic talents had waned, and he transferred his attention to studying dentistry. He died in 1971. Rudi gave up mediumship, married, and became an automobile mechanic, eventually owning a garage. He died April 28, 1957, at Weyer, Austria.

Sources:

---

School of Economic Science

British-based organization that helped to promote the Transcendental Meditation technique of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in Britain in the 1960s. The school’s roots actually stem from the land reform economic theories of Henry George (author of Progress and Poverty, 1879) and the mystical theories of Georgi I. Gurdjieff and his disciple P. D. Ouspensky. It commenced primarily as a political and economic group, founded by Andrew MacLaren in Glasgow. It was developed by his son Leon (Leonardo da Vinci), who added the esoteric philosophy of Gurdjieff and later the mediation popularized by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi in the belief that the practical problems of the world could best be solved by transforming the nature of human beings.

Leon MacLaren was strongly attracted to the teachings of the Maharishi at the latter’s first visit to London in 1960, and in the following year MacLaren organized the Maharishi’s first world assembly in the prestigious Albert Hall, London. In that year a school of meditation was established by members of the SES. Leon MacLaren made a pilgrimage to India and became convinced of the importance of Hindu-based meditation and philosophy. The connection with Maharishi appears to have been short lived and was eventually discarded as the school’s own technique was put in place.

Leon MacLaren began to devote more time to the SES, giving up his professional work as a lawyer. The SES acquired a number of valuable properties throughout the United Kingdom and, with the success of its teachings, soon expanded abroad, with branches in Europe, Cyprus, Malta, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, North America, Trinidad, and Fiji. The organization was variously styled the “School of Philosophy,” and/or the “School of Economics and Philosophy.” The enormous successful expansion appears to owe much to MacLaren’s systematic method and his firm control over the organization’s branches.

As with the esoteric tradition in general and the Gurdjieff tradition in particular, some degree of secrecy veils much of the SES program from the uninitiated public. It appears to have an eclectic program for personal development drawing on the Sufism so central to Gurdjieff and various more or less familiar Hindu and yogic techniques.

The organization has encountered some criticism. Several people who had a bad experience with the group have branded it with the “cult” and “brainwashing” labels of the anti-cult movement, which the leadership of SES has chosen to ignore.

Sources:

---

School of Natural Science

See The Great School of Natural Science

---

School of Universal Philosophy and Healing

British Spiritualist organization founded in 1946 by the medium Grace Spearen-Cook, based on the teachings of her spirit guide “Ra-Men-Ra.” The purpose of Universal Philosophy was to awaken the soul to its spiritual destiny so that it may participate actively in the working and unfolding of the cosmos. The school also published the monthly The Occult Gazette. Last known address: 6 Phillimore Place, Kensington, London, W8, England.

---

Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert von

(1862–1929)

German pioneer of psychological research, a physician of Munich who specialized in psychiatry, which eventually led him into psychical research. He was born May 18, 1862, at Oldenburg, Germany, and educated at the University of Munich. He investigated the mysteries of somnambulism while a student, when, in hypnotic experiments, he succeeded in obtaining duplications of personality. He soon realized that there was a new realm of science awaiting discovery.

With a young woman of Munich, Lina M., he made experiments in thought-transference. They were described by Baron Carl du Prél in his books. Lina M. also presented the curious phenomenon of the transposition of the senses, when senses blocked from normal activity reappear and operate from another place on the body.

Magdeleine C., a musical medium, gave Schrenck-Notzing opportunity to study hypnotic alterations of personality. She was a dancer who, in trance, interpreted the feelings and reproduced the actions of various personalities and played any piece of music suggested mentally by a committee on the stage.

These cases, the study of which was described in Schrenck-Notzing’s monograph Die Transmanternzen Magdelene C. (1904) marked the transition between his research on hypnosis and metapsychics. He resigned from the Gesellschaft für Wissenschaftliche Psychologie, a Spiritualist society which Carl du Prél founded, established himself as an authority in sexual anomalies and criminal psychopathy, published essays upon the importance of suggestion in medico-legal practice, and wrote many other remarkable books.

By his marriage to Gabrielle Siegle in 1892, he suddenly became financially independent, and he surrendered his medical practice and devoted himself exclusively to research. With the awakening of his interest in metapsychics he founded the Gesellschaft für Metapsychische Forschung and began the study of telekinesis and teleplastics (or ectoplasm) that rendered him famous. Up to the time of his death, there was no important medium in Europe with whom he did not conduct personal experiments.

He commenced with Eusapia Palladino, at whose séances in Rome he was present as early as 1894. He followed her all over Europe and invited her twice to Munich as his guest. But he did not declare his belief in the reality of her phenomena until 1914 and only published his Rome and Munich séance records in Physikalische Phänomene des Metaphenomen in 1920.

For many years he studied the phenomena of materialization of Eva C. (Marthe Béraud), in Munich and at Juliette Bison’s house in Paris. His book, Materialisations-Phénomene, published in Germany in 1914, at the same time as Bisson’s work in France, is amply illustrated with photographs. He discussed the phenomena, concluding, “I am of the opinion that the hypothesis of spirits not only fails to explain the least detail of these processes, but in every way it obstructs and shackles serious scientific research.” However, he put forward the equally vague theory of teleplasmic (ectoplasmic) phenomena. (In recent years Eva C. has been shown to have been a clever fraud who seems, with Bisson’s help, to have completely fooled Schrenck-Notzing.) The book evoked much public criticism. The pros and cons were summed up by Schrenck-Notzing in a later book, Der Kampf um die Materialisations Phänomene (Battle for the Phenomena of Materialization). The two main works appeared in English translation under the title Phenomena of Materialization (London, 1920, 1923; New York, 1973).

A supplementary volume to the original book was published in 1922. In it the cases of Willi Schneider, Stanislava P., Maria Silbert and Einer Nielsen were presented. Schrenck-Notzing also sat with Stanislava Tomczyk, Franek Kluski, Linda Gazzera, Lucia Sordini, and many other mediums. Their cases were reviewed in his book Physikalische Phänomene des Mediums (1920). He expressed his conclusions as follows:

The telekinetic and teleplasmic phenomena are not only different degrees of the same animistic process, they depend in the end upon physical manifestations in the subconscious sphere of the medium. The so-called occult intelligences which manifest and materialize themselves in the séance, never display any higher spiritual faculty than is owned by the medium and the sitters, they are wholly of oneric type, dream personifications that correspond to detached memories, to beliefs, to all the miscellaneous things that lie dormant in the minds of the participants. It is not on a foundation of extra-corporeal beings that one will find the secret of the psycho-dynamical phenomena of these subjects, but rather through consideration of hither-to unknown transformations of the biopsychical forces of the medium’s organism.

When he discovered the mediumistic gifts of the Schneider children, he trained Willi Schneider so that the same phenomenon could be repeated under similar conditions at specified times and before varying observers. The conditions of these experiments were very strict and the records considered unimpeachable. An electrical system of control made the phenomena apparently fraud-proof. Schrenck-Notzing’s work was criticized by Harry Price, but supported by a group of scientists who witnessed the phenomena in 1922 and declared themselves completely convinced of the reality of telekinesis and ectoplasm. The book, Experimente der Fernbewegung, Stuttgart, 1924, in which he summed up the story of these researches, is one of the most important works on telekinesis.

In Der Betrug des Mediums Ladislaus László, published in the same year in Leipzig, he described his experiences in Budapest with a pseudo-medium, László. At the conclusion of a series of four sittings he advised the sponsor of the medium, a Mr. Torday, of his uncertainties. Soon after László confessed to gross fraud. When Willi Schneider “lost” much of his power, the Baron trained his brother, Rudi. He discovered another subject, Karl Weber (Karl Kraus), a young man who produced levitations at will and while awake. He reported on him at the Paris Congress.

However, Malcolm Bird in Psychic Research (July 1930) accused Schrenck-Notzing of “extraordinary improprieties in the way of suppressing unfavorable evidence,” and cited as one instance that Schrenck-Notzing had completely concealed at the Paris Congress that “Karl Weber” was identical to the notorious Karl Kraus.

In his last years, Schrenck-Notzing devoted much attention to the phenomena of haunting. He left behind a posthumous book, Geister. Ich wandelte in meinem Leben (1924) and his collected articles, Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Parapsychologie devoted 47 pages to intellectual and more than 300 to experimental physical phenomena.

Another posthumous volume (Die Phänomene des Mediums Rudi Schneider) was published in December 1932. As René Sudre pointed out in his memorial article in Psychic Research (May 1929), Schrenck-Notzing never made any attempt at an inner interpretation of the phenomena he observed. “He lacked the spirit of the philosopher. With him there existed no urgent need for construction; he felt only the urge of accumulating material.”

He died February 12, 1929, at Munich, Germany.

Sources:

Schucman, Helen (1910–1981) Helen Schucman, the psychologist and channel who received the material later incorporated into A Course in Miracles (ACIM), the most successful channelled work of the late twentieth century, was born Helen Cohn, the daughter of Sigmund Cohn, a chemist. Her mother had dabbled both in Theosophy and Christian Science, but Helen had not been interested in either. She was influenced by a Roman Catholic governess and throughout her life she periodically attended mass and possessed a number of rosaries she had collected over the years. During her teens, she was attended by an African-American maid who saw to her baptism as a Baptist. However, through most of her life, she was a professing atheist who was quite aware of the dominant secularism of her professional colleagues.

She attended New York University, aiming for a career as a writer or possibly an English teacher, but following her graduation suffered a traumatic experience from which she never recovered. Following a gall bladder operation in 1935 she married Louis Schucman, the owner of an antiquarian bookstore, and settled down to life as a housewife and sometime assistant to her husband. In 1939, however, she decided to return to school and entered the psychology program at her alma mater. She specialized in clinical psychology and concentrated upon the problems of mental retardation in children.

Following her graduation with a Ph.D., in 1958 she accepted a position at Colombia-Presbyterian Medical Center. Here she met William N. Tetford, the new head of the hospital’s Psychology Department. The pair was temperamentally very different, and the next seven years they had an often stormy relationship. Then in 1965, Tetford, who had been dabbling in metaphysical literature, suggested that they attempt to change their relationship and shortly thereafter, at Tetford’s suggestion, they began to practice meditation.

Over the next seven years they had a number of vivid visual experiences. Tetford suggested that she record her experiences, and on October 21, 1965, she heard an inner voice that told her, “This is a course in miracles. Please take notes.” Again Tetford suggested that she do what the voice told her.

Schucman recorded what she was told in shorthand and over the next seven years read her notes to Tetford, who transcribed them. Eventually some 1,200 pages were received. She then worked with Kenneth Wapnick to edit the materials that would later be published as the three-volume A Course in Miracles.
The material, whose teachings are very close to those found in New Thought metaphysics, claims to have been dictated by Jesus Christ. It offers a means to a more meaningful life as an awakened child of god who learns the self-recrimination that manifests as guilt and hostility can be overcome through forgiveness and learning to forgive.

Schucman was ambivalent about the material and the method of its reception, both of which contradicted her self-professed atheism. However, she slowly became more comfortable with the material and finally allowed its publication in 1975. She assigned the copyrights to the Foundation for Inner Peace, a corporation set up to publish the books and disseminate the teachings. The Course took off and quickly spread through the New Thought and New Age communities. However, Schucman continued to be in the background and, while identified as the channel, was known only to a small circle of early leaders in the New York area.

In 1980, she developed pancreatic cancer and withdrew even more and lived largely cut off from the growing ACIM community until her death in 1981. Only in the years after her death was the story of her life made known.

Sources:

Schuetzinger, C(aronale) E(va) (1909– )

Psychologist and linguist who also explored parapsychological subjects. She was born on February 14, 1909, in Munich, Germany. She attended the Pädagogisches Institut, Münich (M.Ed., 1943), Incarnate Word College, San Antonio, Texas (B.A., 1951), and St. Louis University, St. Louis, Missouri (M.A., 1955). She taught at the Pädagogisches Institut (1947–60) before moving to Detroit, Michigan and assuming a position at Mercy College. She was a member of the Parapsychological Association, the author of the German Controversy on St. Augustine’s Illumination Theory (1960), and has studied such parapsychological subjects as telepathy, clairvoyance, psychokinesis and theories of survival.

Schwartz, Emanuel K(ing) (1912–1973)

Psychologist who wrote on parapsychology. He was born on June 11, 1912, in New York City. He studied at College of the City of New York (B.S., 1932; M.S., 1935) and New York University (Ph.D., 1937). He was a practicing psychoanalyst for the United States Army during World War II (1942–46). After the war he worked as dean and director of the Postgraduate Center for Psychosomatic Research, New York (1947–73) and as a teacher at Long Island University (1951–57), New York University (1960–73), and Adelphi University, Garden City, New York (1960–73). His studies in the field of parapsychology concerned personality determinants in psychical experiences, and he conducted research to ascertain whether hypnosis can facilitate such experiences. He died January 22, 1973.

Sources:

Schwartz was Emanuel K. “The Psychodynamics of Spontaneous Psi Experiences.” Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 46 (1952).

Schweighöfer, Jurgen (1921– )

German psychologist who has written on parapsychology. He was born on June 22, 1921, at Allenstein, Germany. He served in the German Army during World War II (1940–46). He studied at the University of Marne (Diplom-psychologie 1951; Ph.D. 1956). His psychology degree thesis in 1950 was entitled Probleme der Aussernormalen Wahrnehmung und Telekinese im Lichte der Amerikanischen Forschung (Problems of Extrasensory Perception and Psychokinesis in the Light of American Researches). After the war and the completion of his doctoral program, he worked as a vocational guidance officer. He was a charter associate of the Parapsychological Association. He translated Betty Humphrey Nicol’s book, Handbook of Tests in Parapsychology, into German.

Schweizerische Vereinigung für Parapsychologie

Semi-annual German-language publication containing information on parapsychological research in Switzerland and elsewhere and reports on conferences and details of courses at Bern University. It is published from Brückfeldstrasse 19, 3012 Bern, Switzerland.

Scientific American

In the summer of 1922, this New York journal, known for its outstanding presentation of scientific findings to the American lay public, decided to investigate the subject of psychic research. Contributions were invited, but as these proved to be rather contradictory, a plan was worked out for first-hand investigation, and the sum of $2,500 was promised for the demonstration of an objective psychic phenomenon before a committee of five.

The offer was to remain open from January 1923, when it was published in the Scientific American, until December 31, 1924. The committee consisted of Walter McDougall, a professor of psychology at Harvard; Daniel Frost Comstock, formerly of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and then a retired inventor; Walter Franklin Prince, principal research officer of the American Society of Psychical Research; Howard Carrington, the well-known psychic investigator and author; and Harry Houdini, the stage magician and escapologist. J. Malcolm Bird, associate editor of the Scientific American, was assigned to the committee as a non-voting member to perform secretarial duties.

Psychics and mediums proved reluctant to appear before the committee, some objecting to its composition. In fourteen months, the committee had only three applicants. The verdict in each case was fraud, conscious or otherwise.

The offer of the Scientific American was enlarged in April 1924. It comprised the payment of the expenses of any high-class medium who would come forward, regardless of the verdict. No response came, but Bird succeeded in making arrangements with Mina Crandon, soon to become famous as “Margery,” the wife of L. R. Crandon of Boston, to sit for investigation in Boston. In return for the change of scene, necessitated by L. R. Crandon’s professional engagements, the doctor waived the Scientific American’s offer to pay expenses and himself undertook to pay the committee’s expenses in Boston.
The "Margery" Sittings

The first séance was held on April 12. The committee witnessed gradual development of interesting phenomena and made good headway into the investigation by using scientific instruments. Final judgment might have been reached; however, friction, dissension, and distrust arose between the members.

One focus of tension was Houdini. He had established, at that time, a reputation in the unmasking of fraudulent mediums. In the end, possibly not without justification, he openly accused Bird with confederacy in producing the mediumistic phenomena. Other members of the committee had come to believe that Bird was at best highly incompetent.

Houdini obtained no direct proof against "Margery," yet after two sittings in July, he published a document attacking both the Crandons and Malcolm Bird. He began to give lectures in which he claimed to have in falibly demonstrated that the rest of the committee was duped.

Orson D. Munn, the publisher of the Scientific American, now stepped in and, noting that the finality of the exposure was in no way acknowledged by the committee itself, prevailed upon Houdini to go back for further sittings in August and to make an attempt to reach a final verdict. At that stage, since Carring ton had pronounced the mediumship genuine, he withdrew from further sittings. McDougall was otherwise engaged, so Comstock, Houdini, and Prince remained on the scene.

Houdini constructed a supposedly "fraud-proof" wooden cage for the critical séance, but refused to sit with it in red light, demanded total darkness, and categorically denied the request of his colleagues for its examination. The committee yielded to Houdini but some suspicion was present. In any case, after a few minutes of the séance the entire top of the cage was found open and Houdini at once stated that anybody sitting in it could throw it open with her shoulders. It appeared, therefore, that the problem at this point was Houdini's design. This incident had followed with confrontations between Houdini and "Margery's" spirit control "Walter," who demanded to know how much Houdini was getting for stopping phenomena. "Walter" advised Comstock to take the bell box out into white light and examine it. Sure enough, a rubber eraser, off the end of a pencil, was found tucked down into the angle between the contact boards, necessitating four times the usual pressure to ring the bell.

At the next séance, when the top of the cage was properly secured, Houdini, on some pretext, put his arm in through the porthole at the last minute. "Walter" thereupon denounced Houdini and accused him of putting a ruler in the cage under the cushion on which "Margery's" feet rested. The accusation was proved. A two-foot jointed ruler, of the sort used by carpenters, folded into four sections, was found at the designated spot. After this, Houdini was delivered an ultimatum for handing over the cage to the committee. Houdini refused to comply, packed the cage up, and carted it away.

The attitude of the rest of the committee towards the mediumship of "Margery" was also open to criticism. Prince disclaimed to have seen enough. McDougall could not be reached, but later sided with Comstock. After this, Prince and McDougall attended some more séances. Prince witnessed bell ringing in perfect daylight with the bell box in his lap; McDougall saw it ringing while being carried about the room, yet they still refused to commit themselves. Thus ended the investigation of the committee of the Scientific American.

In April 1925, O. D. Munn announced: "The famous Margery case is over so far as the Scientific American investigation is concerned." The question of the "Margery" mediumship was now transferred from the Scientific American fiasco to the ASPR. Bird left the editorial board of the Scientific American and became a staff member of the ASPR. This made the ASPR a focal point for mediumistic research.

The affair seemed to have reached a stalemate: the ASPR basically backed "Margery," and the Boston SPR opposed her. Then Bird submitted a confidential report to the ASPR board in which he revealed that, contrary to his own book, he was aware that at least some of the phenomena produced by Margery were produced in a mundane manner and that he had approached to become the Crandons' accomplice. Bird soon resigned and dropped out of sight.

Sources:
results of actions that do not promote survival, he said. The mind operates to solve the problems relating to survival. From the information it receives, stored in mental pictures, it directs the individual in actions geared toward surviving. Such mental images are three dimensional—they have energy and mass, they exist in space, and they tend to appear when someone thinks of them, Hubbard said. They are strung together in a consecutive record accumulated over a lifetime Hubbard called a "time track."

The theory of Dianetics is a variation on preexisting concepts of conscious and unconscious mind, using the terms analytic and reactive mind. The analytic mind, according to Hubbard, records the mental image pictures derived from our experiences. However, pictures of experience which contain pain or painful emotions are recorded in the reactive mind. Also, experiences that occur when a person is unconscious (on the operating table, for example) or partially conscious (when inebriated) are recorded by the reactive mind and are not available to the analytic mind, he said.

The problem with the reactive mind is that it stores particular types of mental images called "engrams" (a term borrowed from psychologist Richard Semon to denote a memory trace), creating a complete record of unpleasant or unconscious experiences. It also thinks in identities, equating the various elements of a painful experiences. In the future, when one experiences several elements in the engram, all of the pain and emotion of past experiences will flood back into the present. Over a lifetime, the cumulative effect of engrams can be a set of unwanted and little-understood negative conditions, including, but not limited to, pains, emotional blocks, and physical or emotional disorders. His techniques are supposed to erase the contents of the reactive mind, rendering them useless in further affecting the person without his/her conscious knowledge.

The aim of the techniques is the production of a "clear," a person whose reactive mind has been cleared, who has no engrams. The primary technique is called "auditing," a one-on-one counseling process that uses an instrument called an "E-meter," a modified whetstone bridge that measures the level of electrical resistance in the human body. It is the belief that such resistance is directly related to the focus upon an engram. The process of becoming a clear occurs in a series of classes and personal counseling sessions. Participants record the state of clear in degrees.

Hubbard founded the Hubbard Dianetic Research Foundation in June 1950. He spent the rest of the year traveling and lecturing and the following year opened the Hubbard College in Wichita, Kansas. By this time Hubbard had speculated that human beings are basically spiritual, and that once cleared, have great potential. These insights led to what would be termed "Scientology." The Hubbard Association Scientology International was founded in 1952, and the first Church of Scientology opened two years later. Dianetics became the method of entering the church and discovering its teachings.

Scientology

Hubbard proposed the existence of engrams—painful impressions from past experiences, extending back into innumerable previous incarnations. According to his book The History of Man (1952), the human body houses two entities—a genetic entity (for carrying on the evolutionary line), and a Thetan, or consciousness, like an individual soul, that has the capacity to separate from body and mind. In man's long evolutionary development the Thetan has been trapped by the engrams formed at various stages of embodiment, Hubbard says.

As soon became obvious in Dianetics, clears were not the fully liberated individuals it had been hoped they would be. The idea of engrams from past lives explained the problem, thus a new concept appeared in Scientology—the "MEST—Clear" (MEST = Matter-Energy-Space-Time). Much of Hubbard's thinking resonates with the concepts of reincarnation and transmigration of souls found in Eastern religions. The purpose of Scientology training was thus another step toward clearing of the individual of all engrams and the creation of what is termed an "Operating Thetan." Among the abilities of the operating Thetan is the soul's capacity to leave and operate apart from the body.

The exact content of the teachings of the Church of Scientology is imparted in the classes attended by church members and are not revealed to the public. Such is especially true of the highest classes (OT-4–7 levels), though jumbled accounts have been presented in books by former members, several of whom left the church with the confidential materials used in the classes and who tried to hurt the church by making these materials available to the general public. As in Dianetics, one progresses through the OT levels on a degree basis, the mastering of one level being a prerequisite to the next.

Scientology's Controversy

Almost from its beginning, Scientology has been a controversial religion. Soon after his announcement of the discovery of Dianetics, Hubbard encountered opposition by the American Medical Association, and in 1958 a two-decade battle with the Food and Drug Administration began. The initiation of these continuing battles had immense consequences, and critics of the church used the actions in one country as a basis for initiating actions elsewhere. Also, government files, not checked for accuracy, were passed to other government agencies and to other countries. Suddenly, in the 1960s, Scientology found itself under attack from a variety of quarters and has spent 30 years in the courts in the attempt to vindicate its existence and program.

Through the 1970s and 1980s, the church fought battles with the Internal Revenue Service in the United States (finally resolved in the early 1990s) and with several former members and anticult organizations who accused it of brainwashing church members. The church itself initiated legal action against publications that it believed libeled the organization and its founder. Important international cases were fought and won in Australia, Canada, and Great Britain, and ongoing cases are pending in Germany, among the most conservative of Western countries concerning religious freedom issues.

In the midst of its fight with the U.S. government, and continually blocked in its attempt to gather documentation of covert government actions against the church, in the mid-1970s several high officials conspired to infiltrate targeted agencies and obtain copies of files on the church. The FBI, CIA, and IRS were especially high on their list. When the plan was discovered, it resulted in a massive raid on the church's headquarters. Several church officials were arrested and convicted of theft of government property.

As of the 1990s, with the solving of its problems with the U.S. government, the church has moved to gain its rights as a viable religion in Germany and to oppose the actions of the Cult Awareness Network—which it believes is simply an anti-religious organization—and similar organizations.

The Church of Scientology reports members in 129 countries and the words of L. Ron Hubbard have been translated into over 30 languages. They also maintain social reform and community activities among services such as the World Institute of Scientology Enterprises (WISE), that provide professional groups with strategies to find harmony in the workplace.

For an authoritative account of Dianetics and Scientology, see current editions of L. Ron Hubbard's books Dianetics: The Modern Science of Mental Health and History of Man, both published by the Church of Scientology, Los Angeles, and available

Sources:

Scimancy

A somewhat obscure branch of divination concerned with the evocation of astral reflections to ascertain future events.

Scoresby, William (1789–1857)

British Arctic explorer, whaler, physicist, author, and clergyman who was also a pioneer in the study of animal magnetism. He was born on October 5, 1789, at Cropton, near Whitby, England. At the age of eleven, he accompanied his father (a master mariner) on a whaling expedition, afterward resuming his education at a simple country school. Three years later, he was apprenticed to his father on a whaler. He made annual voyages to Greenland, and became a ship’s chief officer in 1806. Later in the same year, he resumed his studies, entering Edinburgh University, Scotland, and studying chemistry and natural philosophy.

In 1807, he undertook a voyage to survey and chart the Balta Sound in the Shetland Islands. Afterward he served with the fleet at Copenhagen. He left the navy a year later and became acquainted with Joseph Banks, who introduced him to other scientists of the day. Scoresby made studies of natural phenomena and resumed attendance at Edinburgh University. From 1813 to 1817, he was at sea again, in charge of whaling vessels. In January 1819, he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and in the following month he contributed a paper on variations of the magnetic needle to the Royal Society of London. The next year he published his first book, An Account of the Arctic Regions, with a History and Description of the Northern Whale-Fishery (2 vols., 1820), for many years the standard work on the subject. This was the first of a number of books that grew out of his worldwide travels.

In 1819, Scoresby moved with his family to Liverpool, where he superintended the building of the Baffin, a vessel fitted for the Greenland trade. He made three successful voyages in this vessel, but on returning to Liverpool in 1822, he found that his wife had died. Her death stimulated his strong religious convictions. Following his next voyage in 1823, he entered Queen’s College, Cambridge, England, to prepare for the ministry. He was ordained in 1825, and for two years he was curé of Bessingby, near Bridlington Quay, in the north of England.

He became successively chaplain of Mariners Church, Liverpool (1827–32), incumbent of Bedford Chapel, Exeter (1832–39), and vicar of Bradford (1839–47). He resigned because of ill health, having spent six months leave on a voyage to the United States in search of a replacement. He lived his last years at the English seaside resort of Torquay when he was not traveling in search of some relief from his illness. He died at Torquay on March 21, 1857.

It was during his years at Exeter that Scoresby’s interest in animal magnetism (mesmerism) arose from his observations on terrestrial magnetism during his polar voyages, emerged. During his last years at Torquay, he conducted a number of experiments, having found that he could mesmerize subjects easily. He gave the name “zoistic” to this hypnotic faculty. His third wife was one of his hypnotic subjects. Scoresby’s careful research into the possibility of clairvoyance resulted in persuasive evidence for thought transference or community of sensation between operator and subject. One entranced subject was able to describe accurately food that Scoresby tasted and also identified physical sensations in Scoresby’s body. Another subject was immobilized as she sat on a sofa that had been “magnetized” by Scoresby and was unable to move outside an imaginary circle that Scoresby had traced on the floor. The power of purely imaginary diagrams to imprison hypnotized subjects was often explored by early mesmerists and suggests affinities with the magic circles of occult magicians. Scoresby’s work in the field of animal magnetism is of special importance. His book Zoistic Magnetism influenced James Esdaile, who read it while he was in India. Esdaile claimed to have successfully repeated Scoresby’s experiment in “magnetizing” a sofa, using an armchair with knobs that Esdaile “magnetized.” The subject was unable to remove his hands from the chair knobs until Esdaile had made mesmeric passes over him.

Sources:

Scoriton Affair

As he later told the story, on April 24, 1965, at about 5:30 in the late afternoon, Ernest Arthur Bryant, a resident of Scoriton, Devonshire, England, saw a flying saucer approach. It stopped near to him, and a door opened. Three beings appeared and beckoned to him. He approached the saucer. Two of the three beings appeared to be nonhuman, but the third seemed to be a youth in his teens. The youth spoke with an accent that Bryant thought might be Russian and called himself Yamski. He said that he was from Venus, and then remarked that he wished Des was there, as he would understand what was happening. At the close of their conversation, he said that in a month he would return and bring proof of Mantell.

Ufologists who would eventually hear the story immediately associated Yamski with George Adamski, the controversial flying saucer contactee who had died on April 23, 1965. Adamski was of Polish background and had a noticeable accent. If this were Adamski, he would have immediately lost the signs of his agaging. Adamski had a friend Desmond Leslie with whom he had written his first book. Captain Thomas F. Mantell, piloting an F-51, had been killed when he began chasing what he thought was a flying saucer. According to Bryant, the saucer returned in June and left some items, including several pieces of metal that could have possibly come from an F-51.

He reported the story to the British UFO Research Association (BUFORA), and an investigation was launched. The various items Bryant turned over to the two investigators proved to be mundane and of no relation to the F-51. In spite of problems with the story, one of the investigators, Eileen Buckle, rushed into print with a book. Shortly thereafter, Bryant unexpectedly took ill and died from a brain tumor. The other investigator, Norman Oliver, visited his widow. She reported that she was familiar with the story in the book as her husband had pressed her bitterly, vowing that she would not see the script for a science fiction novel. It was only after the investigation was well along that she realized her husband was trying to sell the story as a real event. She indicated that the supposed items related to Mantell had been purchased at a naval surplus store.

Alice Wells, head of the Adamski Foundation, dismissed the Scoriton story from the beginning, as did Desmond Leslie. Between their rejection and Oliver's uncovering of the hoax, few remained to support Bryant except Buckle. It is remembered amid the many UFO hoax attempts primarily because it extended, however briefly, the entertaining story of George Adamski—especially in the sense of being the first independent attempt to show that extraterrestrial life existed and could communicate with humans. Buckle, Eileen. The Scoriton Mystery. London: Neville Spearman, 1967. Oliver, Norman. Sequel to Scoriton. London: The Author, 1968.

SCOTLAND

[For early historical material on Scotland, see the entry on the Celts.]

Witchcraft

Witchcraft and, more commonly, sorcery, malevolent magic that had appeared to have been practiced in the earliest historical and traditional times in Scotland. It is related that during the reign of Natholocus in the second century there lived in Iona a witch of great renown, so celebrated for her marvelous power that the king sent one of his captains to consult her regarding the issue of a rebellion then troubling his kingdom. The witch declared that within a short period the king would be murdered, not by his open enemies but by one of his most favored friends, in whom he had most special trust. The messenger inquired the assassin's name. “Even by thine own hands as shall be well known within these few days,” replied the witch. So troubled was the captain on hearing these words that he abused the messenger, vowing that he would see her burned before he would commit such a crime. But after reviewing the matter carefully in his mind, the captain arrived at the conclusion that if he informed the king of the witch’s prophecy, the king might, for the sake of his personal safety, have him put to death, so thereupon he decoyed Natholocus into his private chamber and killed him with a dagger.

In about the year 388, the devil was said to be so enraged at the piety of St. Patrick that he assailed the saint with a whole band of witches in Scotland. The story goes that St. Patrick fled to the river Clyde, embarking in a small boat for Ireland. As witches cannot pursue their victims over running water, they flung a huge rock after the escaping saint, which fell harmlessly to the ground, and which tradition says now forms Dumbarton Rock.

Catholic and Protestant church leaders alike pursued the crusade against witchcraft with equal vigor, drawing their support from biblical passages such as Exodus 22:18, which commanded, “Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live.” Witches were believed to have sold themselves, body and soul, to the devil. Their ceremony was said to consist of kneeling before the devil, who placed one hand on the individual’s head and the other under her feet, while she dedicated all between to the service of the devil and renounced baptism. The witch (usually thought of as a female) was thereafter deemed to be incapable of reform. No minister of any denomination whatever would intercede or pray for her. On sealing the compact, the devil then proceeded to put his mark upon her.

Writing on the “Witches’ Mark,” the Reverend Bell, minister of Gladsmuir, in 1705 states, “The witches’ mark is sometimes like a blemish, or a little tale, or Reid spots, like being bitten, sometimes the flesh is sunk in and hollow and this is put in secret places, as among the hair of the head, or eyebrows, within the lips, under the armpits, and even in the most secret parts of the body.”

The Reverend Robert Kirk of Aberfoyle in his Secret Commonwealth of Elves, Fauns and Fairies (written in 1691) notes, “A spot that I have seen, as a small mole, horny, and brown colored, throw which mark when a large brass pin was thrust (both in buttock, nose, and roof of the mouth) till it bowed [bent] and became crooked, the witches, both men and women, rather felt a pain nor did bleed, nor knew the precise time when this was doing to them (their eyes only being covered).”

In many cases the mark was invisible, and according to popular lore, no pain accompanied the pricking of it. Thus, there arose a group of experts who pretended great wisdom and skill concerning the marks. They referred to themselves as “witch prickers” and it became their business to discover and label witches.

The method employed was barbarous. First, having stripped and bound his victim, the witch pricker proceeded to thrust his needles into every part of the body. When at last the victim, worn out with exhaustion and agony, remained silent, the witch pricker declared that he had discovered the mark.

The witch pricker could also resort to trial by water. The suspects were tied, wrapped in a sheet, and flung into a deep pool. In cases where the body floated, the water of baptism was supposed to be giving the accused, while those who sank to the bottom were absolved, but no attempt was made at rescue. If a confession was demanded, tortures was resorted to, burning with iron being generally the last torture applied. In some cases a diabolic contrivance called the “witches’ bridle” was used. The “bridle” encircled the victim’s head while a pronged iron bit was thrust into the mouth, piercing the tongue, palate, and cheeks. In cases of execution, the victim was usually strangled and her body later burned at the stake.

Witches were accused of a great variety of sorceries. Common offenses were bewitching milk cattle by turning their milk sour or curtailing the supply, raising storms, stealing children from their graves, and promoting various illnesses. A popular device was to make a waxen image of the victim, thrust pins into it, and set it with hot iron, all of which the victim was supposed to feel. Upon domestic animals witches cast an evil eye, causing emaciation and refusal to take food until at length death ensued. On the other hand, to those who believed in them and acknowledged their power, witches were supposed to use their powers for good by curing disease and causing prosperity.

Witches were believed to meet weekly, at which time the devil presided. Saturday was commonly called “the witches’ sabbath,” as their meetings were generally believed to be held on that day in a desolate place or possibly a ruined church building (a number of which had been left by the invading Vikings). They rode to the gatherings through the air on broomsticks (see transvection). If the devil was not present on their arrival, they evoked him by beating the earth with a fir stick and saying "Rise up foul thief."

The witches appeared to see the devil in different guises; to some he appeared as a boy clothed in green, others saw him dressed in white, while to others he appeared mounted on a black horse. After delivering a mock sermon, he held a court at which the witches had to make a full statement of their doings during the week. Those who had not accomplished sufficient "evil" were beaten with their own broomsticks, while those who had been more successful were rewarded with enchanted bones. The proceedings finished with a dance, the music to which the fiend played on his bagpipes.

The poet Robert Burns in his Tale of Tam o'Shanter gave a graphic description of a witches' gathering. There were great annual gatherings at Candlemas (February 2), Beltane (April 30), Lammas (August 1), and St. John (October 31), and in the fictional character and the witch sisterhood of all nations assembled, those who had to cross the sea performing the journey in barges of eggshell, while their aerial journeys were on goblin horses with enchanted bridles.

Laws Against Witchcraft

Through the confessions extracted from accused witches, guided by the fantasies about witchcraft in the several manuals that circulated through Europe beginning late in the fifteenth century, a picture of witchcraft was constructed and then promulgated into a society that still strongly believed in the powers of supernatural magic. In response to the fear of sorcerers and witches, the government passed laws outlawing their reported activities. In Scotland, less than a century after the redefinition of witchcraft as apostasy by the Roman Catholic Church in the 1480s, the first witchcraft law was enacted in the form of statute passed in 1565 in the Parliament of Queen Mary. It read (in the now archaic English of the time),

"That na maner of person nor persons of quhatsumever estate, degree or condition they be of, take upon hand in onie times hereafter to use onie maner of witchcraft, sorcerie, or necromancie, under the paine of death, alswel to be execute against the user, abuser, as the seeker of the response of consultation."

Scottish Catholics then accused Protestant reformer John Knox of being a renowned wizard and having by sorcery raised up saints in the churchyard of St. Andrews, when Satan himself was said to have appeared and so terrified Knox's secretary that he became insane and died. Knox was also charged with using witchcraft and sorcery against the user, abuser, as the seeker of the response of consultation.

Knox of being a renowned wizard and having by sorcery raised up saints in the churchyard of St. Andrews, when Satan himself was said to have appeared and so terrified Knox's secretary that he became insane and died. Knox was also charged with using witchcraft and sorcery against the user, abuser, as the seeker of the response of consultation.

Knox was also charged with using witchcraft to bewitch the fields of the offending baker with a view to destroying his crops. Reid then proceeded to enchant a piece of raw flesh and also to make a statute of wax. The nature of the design is not recorded, but presumably Libbertoun himself was represented. Mrs. Christie was instructed to thrust the meat under her own fire. These instructions she duly obeyed, and a little later the victim breathed his last. Reid did not escape justice.

When James VI of Scotland in the year 1603 was called upon to ascend the throne of Great Britain and Ireland (as James I), his own native kingdom was in a rather curious condition. James himself was a man of considerable learning, intimate with Latin and theology, while his book, * Daemonologie* marks him as a person completely absorbed in the supernatural. Moreover while education and even scholarship were comparatively common at this date in Scotland (more common in fact than they were in contemporary England), the great mass of Scottish people shared abundantly their sovereign's dread of witches and sorcery. The efforts of Knox and his associates had brought about momentous changes in Scottish life, but if the Reformation rejected certain popular beliefs, Presbyterianism (the particular form of Protestant Christianity that came to power in Scotland) undeniably tended to introduce others. For that stern Calvinistic faith that now began to take root in Scotland nourished the idea that sickness and accident were a mark of divine anger. This theory did not cease to be common in the north till long after King James' day.

King James mentioned few precise facts concerning the practitioners of magic who were said to flourish in Scotland during his reign. But other sources of information claimed that these people were very numerous, and whereas in Elizabethan England it was customary to put a witch to death by hanging, in Jacobean Scotland magistrates employed harsher measures. In fact, the victim was burned at the stake, and it is interesting to note that on North Berwick Law, in the county of East Lothian, there is a tall stone that, according to local tradition, was formerly used as a site for such burnings.

Yet it would be wrong to suppose that witches and sorcerers, although handled roughly, were regarded with universal hatred, for in seventeenth-century Scotland medicine and magic went hand in hand, and the man suffering from a physical malady (particularly one whose cause he could not understand) very seldom entrusted himself to a professional leech (a physician whose medical technique was the placement of bloodsucking leeches on the patient's body) and much preferred to consult one who claimed healing capacities derived from intercourse with the unseen world.

Sorcerers, however, were generally also experts in the art of poisoning, and while a good many cures are credited to them, their triumphs in the opposite direction would seem to have been much more numerous. Thus we find that in July 1702, a certain James Reid of Musselburgh was brought to trial, being charged not merely with achieving miraculous cures, but with contriving the murder of one David Libbertoun, a baker in Edinburgh. This Libbertoun and his family, it transpired, were sworn enemies of a neighboring household, by the name of Christie, and eventually their feud grew as fierce as that between the Montagues and Capulets. The Christies swore they would bring things to a conclusion, and going to Reid they petitioned his nefarious act.

His first act was to bewitch nine stones, these to be cast on the fields of the offending baker with a view to destroying his crops. Reid then proceeded to enchant a piece of raw flesh and also to make a statue of wax. The nature of the design is not recorded, but presumably Libbertoun himself was represented. Mrs. Christie was instructed to thrust the meat under her own fire. These instructions she duly obeyed, and a little later the victim breathed his last. Reid did not escape justice and after his trial suffered the usual fate of being burned alive.

Isobel Grieswone, a Prestonpans woman who was burned to death on the Castle Rock, Edinburgh, in March 1607, had a record of poisonings rivaling that of Cellini himself, and it is even recorded that she contrived to put an end to several people simply by cursing them.

Equally sinister were the exploits of another sorceress, Belgis Todd of Longmiddry, who was reported to have brought about the death of a man she hated just by enchanting his cat. This picturesque method was scorned by notorious Perthshire witch Janet Irving, who in about 1605 poisoned and killed a number of the members of the family of Erskine of Dun, in the county of Angus. The criminal was eventually detected and suffered the usual fate.

The wife of John Dein, a burgess of Irvine, conceived a violent aversion for her brother-in-law, Archibald, and on one occasion, when the latter was setting out for France, Margaret hurled imprecations at his ship, sowing none of its crew or passengers would ever return to their native Scotland. Months went by, and no word of Archibald's arrival reached Irvine, until one day a peddler named Stewart came to John Dein's... house and declared that the baneful prophecy had been duly fulfilled.

Learning of the affair, municipal authorities arrested Stewart, who had long suspected of practicing magic. At first he confessed innocence, but under torture he confessed how, along with Margaret Dein, he had made a clay model of the ill-starred ship, and thrown this into the sea on a particularly stormy night. His audience was horrified at the news, but they hastened to lay hands on the sorcerers, whereupon they dealt with her as noted above.

No doubt the witches of Jacobean Scotland were credited with triumphs far greater than what they really achieved. At the same time, a number of the accused sorcerers firmly maintained, when confronted by a terrible death, that they had been imitated in their craft by the devil himself, or perhaps by a band of fairies. It is not surprising that they were dreaded by the simple, illiterate folk of their day, and, musing on these facts, we may feel less amazed at the credulity displayed by King James, who declared that all sorcerers "ought to be put to death according to the law of God, the civil and imperial Law, and municipal Law of all Christian nations."

The last execution of a witch in Scotland took place in Sutherland in 1722. An old woman residing at Loth was charged, among other crimes, with having transformed her daughter into a pony, shed by the devil, which caused the girl to turn lame both in hands and feet. Sentence of death was pronounced by Captain David Ross, the Sheriff-substitute. C. Rodgers relates: "The poor creature when led to the stake was unconscious of the stir made on her account, and warming her wrinkled hands at the fire kindled to consume her, said she was thankful for so good a blaze. For his rashness in pronouncing her sentences, the Sheriff was emphatically reproofed."

In more recent centuries witchcraft has been dealt with under laws pertaining to rogues, vagabonds, gamblers, and practitioners of fortune-telling.

Magic and Demonology

Magic appears to have been common in Scotland until a late period. In the pages of Adamnan, Abbot of Iona (ca. 625–704 C.E.), St. Columba and his priest regarded the Druids as magicians, and he countered their sorcery with what was believed to be a superior celestrial magic of his own. Thus does the religion of one race become magic in the eyes of another.

Notices of sorcery in Scotland before the thirteenth century are scanty, if we except the tradition that Macbeth encountered three witches who prophesied his fate to him. There is no reason to believe that Thomas the Rhymer (who was endowed by later superstition with adventures similar to those of Tannhäuser) was really other than a minstrel and maker of epigrams, or that Sir Michael Scott was other than a scholar and man of letters.

The rhymed fragment known as "The Cursing of Sir John Rowl," by a priest of Corstorphine, near Edinburgh, which dates perhaps from the last quarter of the fifteenth century, provides a glimpse of medieval Scottish demonology. The poem is an invective against certain persons who rifled his poultry-yard, upon whom the priest called down divine vengeance. The demons who were to torment the evildoers were Garog, Hingog, Sym Skynar, Deventis "the devil that maketh the dyce," Frewmorth, Cokakade, Tutivilus, Browny, and Syr Garnega, who may be the same as Gernigo, to whom cross children are often likened by angry mothers of the Scottish working classes. The Scottish verb, "to ginv" (Scottish poetry "true faces or grins"); may find its origin in the name of a medieval fiend, the last shadow of some Teutonic or Celtic deity of unlovable attributes.

In Sym Skynar, we may have Skynir, a Norse giant in whose glove Thor found shelter from an earthquake, and who sadly fooled him and his companions. Skynir was one of the Jotunn or Norse Titans, and probably one of the powers of winter, and he may have received the popular surname of "Syn" in the same manner as we speak of "Jack" Frost.

A great deal has still to be done in unearthing the minor figures of Scottish mythology and demonology, and even the greater ones have not received the attention due to them. For example, in Newhaven, a fishing district near Edinburgh, we find the belief in a fiend called Brounger, who is described as an old man who levies a toll of fish and oysters upon the local fishermen. If he is not placated with these, he wreaks vengeance on the persons who fail to supply him. He is also described as "a Flint and the son of a Flint," which strongly suggests that, like Thor and many other gods of Asia and Africa, he was a thunder or weather deity. In fact his name is probably a mere corruption of an ancient Scandinavian word meaning "to strike," which still survives in the Scottish expression "make a breege."

With regard to practical magic, a terrifying and picturesque legend tells how Sir Lewis Bellenden, a lord of session and superior of the Barony of Broughton, near Edinburgh, succeeded by the aid of a sorcerer in raising the devil in the backyard of his own house in the Canongate, somewhere around the end of the sixteenth century. Bellenden was a notorious trafficker with witches, with whom his barony of Broughton was reportedly overrun. Wanting to see the devil in person, he secured the services of one Richard Graham. The results of the evocation were disastrous to the inquisitive judge, whose nerves were so shattered at the devil's appearance that he fell ill and soon expired.

The case of Major Thomas Weir in 1670 is one of the most interesting in the annals of Scottish sorcery. Master storyteller Sir Walter Scott recounts the major aspects of the curious occurrence:

"It is certain that no story of witchcraft or necromancy, so much of which occurred near and in Edinburgh, made such a lasting impression on the public mind as that of Major Weir. The remains of the house in which he and his sister lived are still shown at the head of the West Bow, which, as a matter of respect, well suited for a necromancer. It was, at different times, a brazier's shop and a magazine for lint, and in my younger days was employed for the latter use; but no family would in inhabit the haunted walls as a residence; and bold was theurchin from the High School who dared approach the gloomy ruin at the risk of seeing the Major's enchanted staff parading through the old apartments, or hearing the hum of the necromantic wheel, which procured for his sister such a character as a spinner."

"The case of this notorious wizard was remarkable chiefly from his being a man of some condition (the son of a gentleman, and his mother a lady of family in Clydesdale), which was seldom the case with those that fell under similar accusations. It was also remarkable in his case that he had been a Covenanter, and peculiarly attached to that cause. In the years of the Commonwealth this man was trusted and employed by those who were then at the head of affairs, and was in 1649 commander of the City-Guard of Edinburgh, which procured him his title of Major. In this capacity he was understood, as was indeed implied in the duties of that officer at the period, to be very strict in executing severity upon such Royalists as fell under his military charge. It appears that the Major, with a maiden sister who had kept his charge, was subject to fits of melancholy lunacy, an infirmity easily reconcilable with the formal pretences which he made to a high show of religious zeal. He was peculiar in his gift of prayer, and, as was the custom of the period, was often called to exercise his talent by the bedside of sick persons, until it came to be observed that, by some association, which it is more easy to conceive than to explain, he could not pray with the same warmth and fluency of expression unless when he had in his hand a stick of peculiar shape and appearance, which he generally walked with. It was noticed, in short, that when this stick was taken from him, his wit and talent appeared to forsake him."
“This Major Weir was seized by the magistrates on a strange whisper that became current respecting vile practices, which he seems to have admitted without either shame or contrition. The disgusting profligacies which he confessed were of such a character that it may be charitably hoped most of them were the fruits of a depraved imagination, though he appears to have been in many respects a wicked and criminal hypocrite. When he had completed his confession, he avowed solemnly that he had not confessed the hundredth part of the crimes which he had committed.

From this time he would answer no interrogatory, nor would he have recourse to prayer, arguing that, as he had no hope whatever of escaping Satan, there was no need of incessant him by vain efforts at repentance. His witchcraft seems to have been taken for granted on his own confession, as his in-digustion was chiefly founded on the story, in which he alleged he had never seen the devil, but any feeling he had of him was in the dark.

He received sentence of death, which he suffered 12th April, 1512, between Leith and Edinburgh. He died so stupidly sullen and impenitent as to justify the opinion that he was oppressed with a kind of melancholy frenzy, the consequence perhaps of remorse, but such as urged him not to repent, but to despair. It seems probable that he was burnt alive.

“His sister, with whom he was supposed to have had an incestuous connection, was condemned also to death, leaving a stronger and more explicit testimony of their mutual sins than could be extracted from the Major. She gave, as usual, some account of her connection with the queen of the fairies, and acknowledged the assistance she received from that sovereign in spinning an unusual quantity of yarn. Of her brother she said that one day a friend called upon them at noontide with a fiery chariot, and invited them to visit a friend at Dalkeith, and that while there her brother received information of the event of the battle of Worcester. No one saw the style of their equipage except themselves.

“On the scaffold this woman, determining, as she said, to die with the greatest shame possible was with difficulty prevented from throwing off her clothing before the people, and with scarce less trouble was she flung from the ladder by the executioner. Her last words were in the tone of the sect to which her profession was evidently regarded in ancient times as a sect of hermits, was called by the name of "The Cosmopolite," who is said to have succeeded in achieving the transmutation of metals.

Alchemy

The poet William Dunbar described the patronage the king bestowed upon certain adventur-ers who had studied the mysteries of alchemy and were ingenious in making "quintescence," which should convert other metals into pure gold. In the "Travestier's Account," there are numerous payments for the "quinta essencia," including wages to the persons employed, utensils of various kinds, coals and wood for the furnaces, and for a variety of other materials such as quicksilver, aqua vitae, litharge, sulfur, fine tin, burnt silver, alum, salt and eggs, and salt peter.

The Scottish monarch appears to have collected around him a multitude of quacks of all sorts for mention is made of "the leech with the curland hair," of "the lang Dutch doctor," of one "water wife," like the English "mer wife," (see mermaids), of a Dr. Ogilvy who labored hard at the transmutation of metals, and many other empirics, whom James not only supported in their experiments, but himself assisted in their laboratory. The most noted of these adventur-ers was Master John Damian, the French Leich. He probably held an appointment as a physician in the royal household.

John soon ingratiated himself with the king, who had a strong passion for alchemy. He remained in James's favor throughout the rest of his life, the last notice given to him being on March 27, 1513, when the sum of £20 was paid to him to travel to the mine in Crawford Moor, where the king had artisans at work searching for gold.

From the reign of James IV to that of Mary Stuart, no magician or alchemical practitioner of note appears to have existed in Scotland, and in the reign of James VI, too great a severity was exhibited against such to permit them to avow themselves publicly. In the reign of James VI lived a man named Alexander Seton of Port Seton near Edinburgh, known abroad as "The Cosmopolite," who is said to have succeeded in achieving the transmutation of metals.

Magic and Religion in the Scottish Highlands

Pagan Scotland appears to have been lacking in benevolent deities. Those representatives of the spirit world who were on friendly terms with mankind were either held captive by magic spells or had some sinister object in view which caused them to act with the most plausible duplicity. The chief demon or deity (one hesitates which to call her) was a one-eyed Hag who had tusks like a wild boar. She was referred to in folk tales as "the old wife," (Cailleach), "Grey Eyebrows," or "the Yellow Mousteartheach," and reputed to be a great worker of spells. Appar-ently she figured in a lost creation myth, for fragmentary accounts survive of how she fashioned the hills, brought lochs into existence, and caused whirlpools. Echoes of this boar-like hag survive in folk ballads of "Old Bangum" and "Sir Lionel" (Child No. 18), prefigured in ancient Hindu legends of the god Vishnu as the giant boar Vahana.

The Hag was a lover of darkness, desolations, and winter. With her hammer she alternately splintered mountains, prevented the growth of grass, and raised storms. Numerous wild animals followed her, including deer, goats, and wild boars. When one of her sons was thwarted in his love affair, she transformed him into a mountain boulder "looking over the sea," a form she retained during the summer. She was liberated again on the approach of winter. During the spring months, the hag drowned fishermen and preyed on the food supply; she also stole children and roasted them in her cave.

Her progeny included a brood of monstrous giants, each with several heads and arms. These were continually operating against mankind, throwing down houses, abducting women, and destroying growing crops. Heroes who fought against them required the assistance of a witch who was called the "Wise Woman," from whom they obtained magic wands.

The witch of Scottish folk tales is the "friend of man," and her profession was evidently regarded in ancient times as a highly honorable one. Wizards also enjoyed high repute; they were the witch-doctors, priests, and magicians of the Scottish Pagans, and it was not until the sixteenth century that legal steps were taken to suppress them in the Highland districts.

There seems to have been no sun-worship or moon-worship in Scotland, for neither sun nor moon was individualized in the Gaelic language; these bodies, however, were reputed to exercise a magical influence. The moon especially was a "Magic Tank," from which supplies of power were drawn by those cap-pable of performing requisite ceremonies. This practice has been revived by modern neo-pagan witches in the ritual referred to as "drawing down the moon."

But although there appear to have been no lunar or solar spirits, there were numerous earth and water spirits. The "water wife," like the English "mer wife," (see mermaids), was a greatly dreaded being who greedily devoured victims. She must not be confused with the banshee, that Fate whose chief business was to foretell disasters, either by washing blood-stained garments or knocking on a certain boulder beside the river.

The water wife usually confronted a late traveler at a ford. She claimed him as her own, and if he disputed her claim she asked what weapons he had to use against her. The unwary one named each in turn, and when he did so, the power to harm her passed away. One story of this character is as follows:
“The wife rose up against the smith who rode his horse, and she said, ‘I have you: what have you against me?’ ‘My sword,’ the man answered, ‘I have that,’ she said, ‘what else?’ ‘My shield,’ the man said. ‘I have that and you are mine.’ ‘But,’ pro-tested the man, ‘I have something else.’ ‘What is that?’ the water wife demanded. To this question the cautious smith answered, ‘I have the long, grey, sharp thing at my thigh.’ This was his dirk, and no woman named it, he was able to make use of it. As he spoke he flung his plaid round the water wife and lifted her up on his horse behind him. Enclosed in the magic circle she was powerless to harm him, and he rode home with her, deaf to her entreaties and promises.

“He took her to his smithy and tied her to the anvil. That night, her brood came to release her. They raised a tempest and tore the roof off the smithy, but the smith defied them. When day dawned they had to retreat. Then he bargained with the water wife, and she consented that if he would release her neither he nor any of his descendants should ever be drowned in any three rivers he might name. He named three and received her promise, but as she made her escape she reminded him of a fourth river. ‘It is mine still,’ she added. In that particular river the smith himself ultimately perished.”

Ever since, fishermen have not liked to name either the fish they desire to procure or those that prey on their catches. Haddock are “white bellies,” salmon “red ones,” and the dog-fish “the big black fellow.” It is also regarded as unlucky to name a minister, or refer to Sunday, in a fishing boat—a fact that suggests that in early Christian times fishermen might be pious churchmen on land but continued to practice paganism when they went to sea, like the Icelandic Norsemen who believed that Christ ruled their island, and Thor the ocean. Fairies must not be named on Fridays, at Halloween, or on Beltane (May Day) when the Sun is on the horizon. Returning from sea the fishermen went to sea, like the Icelandic Norsemen who believed that Christ ruled their island, and Thor the ocean. Fairies must not be named on Fridays, at Halloween, or on Beltane (May Day) when the Sun is on the horizon. Returning from sea the fishermen did not like to name anything either the fish they desire to procure or those that prey on their catches.

In cases of sickness, a divination cake was baked and left at a sacred place: If it disappeared during the night, the patient was supposed to recover, if it remained untouched until the following morning it was believed that the patient would die.

Offerings were constantly made to the earth spirits. In a witch trial recorded in Huntly Kirk Session Register (September 24, 1619) one Agnes Gourlay was accused of having made offerings of milk, saying, “God preserve us too; they are under the earth, that have as much need of it as they that are above the earth.”

The milk poured out upon the earth at magical ceremonies was supposed to go to the fairies. Gruagach stones survived into relatively modern times in the Highlands. These were flat stones with deep “cup” marks. After a cow was milked, the milk was poured into a hole the portion of milk required by the Gruagach, a long-haired spirit who is usually “dressed like a gentleman.” If no offering was given to him, the cream would not rise on the milk, or even if it did, the churning would be a failure. There are interesting records in the Presbytery records of Dingwall, Ross-shire, regarding the prevalence of milk pouring and other ceremonies during the seventeenth century.

The seer was usually wrapped in the skin of a sacrificed bull and left lying all night beside the river. He was visited by supernatural beings in the darkness and obtained answers regarding future events. Another and horrifying way to perform this divination ceremony was to roast a live cat. The cat was turned on a spit until the “Big Cat” (the devil) appeared and either granted the wish of the performer of the ceremony, or foretold what was to take place in answer to a query. In the twentieth century, there are still memories of traditional beliefs regarding witchcraft, fairies, the evil eye, second sight, and magical charms to cure or injure.

Individuals, domesticated animals, and dwellings were charmed against witchcraft by iron and certain herbs or berries. The evil eye influence was dispelled by drinking “water of silver” from a wooden bowl or ladle. The water was taken from a river or well of high repute, silver placed in it, then a charm repeated. When it had been passed over a fire, the victim was given it to drink and what remained was sprinkled around the hearth-stone with a ceremony that varied according to district.

Curative charms were handed down in families from a male to a female and a female to a male. Blood-stopping charms were regarded with great sanctity and the most persistent folklore collectors were unable to obtain them from those who were reported to be able to use these with effect.

Accounts were given of “blood-stopping” from a distance. Although the possessor of the power usually had a traditional charm, he or she rarely used it unless the person to be healed was a Highland doctor testifed in private to the wonderful effects of “blood-stopping” operations. In relatively recent times, a medical officer of Inverness-shire stated in his official report to the county council that he was watching with interest the operations of “King’s Evil Curers,” who still enjoyed great repute in the Western Isles. These were usually seventh sons.

Second sight, like the power to cure and stop blood, runs in families. There is scarcely a parish in the Scottish Highlands without a family in which one or more individuals are reputed to have occult powers. Some had visions, either while awake or asleep. Others heard ominous sounds on occasions and were unable to understand what they signified. Certain individuals confessed, but with no appreciation of the faculty, that they were sometimes able to foretell that a person was likely to die soon.

Two instances of this kind may be cited. A younger brother caused a chill. When an older brother visited him, he knew at once that the young man would die soon, and communicated a statement to that effect to a mutual friend. According to medical opinion, the patient, who was not confined to bed, was in no danger, but three months afterward, he developed serious symptoms and died suddenly. When news of the death was communicated to the elder brother, he had a temporary illness.

The same individual met a gentleman in a friend’s house and had a similar experience; he “felt,” he could not explain how, that this man was near death. On two occasions within the following week he questioned the gentleman’s daughter regarding her father’s health and was informed that he was “as usual.” The daughter was surprised at the inquiries. Two days after this meeting, the gentleman in question expired suddenly while sitting in his chair.

Again the individual, on hearing of the death, had a brief but distressing illness, with symptoms usually associated with shock. The mother of this man had a similar faculty. On several occasions she saw lights. One day during the Boer War, an officer passing her door bade her goodbye, since he had been ordered to South Africa. She said, “He will either be slain or come back deformed,” and turned ill immediately. A few months later the officer was wounded in the lower jaw with a bullet and returned home with his face much deformed.

The faculty of second sight manifests itself in various ways, as these instances show, and evidence that it is possessed by individuals may occur only once or twice in a lifetime. There are cases, however, in which it is constantly active. Those reputed to have the faculty are most reticent regarding it and appear to dread it.

At the close of the nineteenth century, “tow-charms” to cure sprains and bruises were sold in a well-known Highland town by a woman who muttered a metrical spell over each magic knot she tied as the afflicted part was treated by her. She had numerous patients among all classes. Bone-setters (the precursors of modern chiropractors) enjoyed high repute in some localities. In modern memory a public presentation was made to... a Ross-shire bone-setter in recognition of his life-long services to the community. His faculty was inherited from his forbears. Numerous instances may be gleaned in the Highlands of the appearance of the spirits of the living and the dead. The appearance of the spirit of a living person is said to be a sure indication of the approaching death of that individual. It is never seen by a member of the family, but appears to intimate friends. Some tales it speaks and gives indication of the fate of some other mutual acquaintance.

The Supernatural in Scottish Fiction

While Sir Walter Scott frequently introduced supernatural traditions into his novels and poems, and writers like Robert Louis Stevenson published powerful stories on occult subjects (see fiction, English occult), the magical and supernatural stories of the land go back to the ancient balladry of Scotland. Many of the 305 ballads collected and classified by Francis James Child (regarded as definitive in its time) echo ancient stories and beliefs from a magical past. Some of these themes seem to have descended from Scandinavian balladry.

From Folklore to Psychological Research

The study of Scottish occultism was begun by the collectors of folklore. Among the earliest was the Reverend Robert Kirk, whose The Secret Commonwealth of Elves, Faws and Fairies, (written in 1691, but not published until 1815) reads like an anthropologist’s report on a foreign country. The work is precise in its descriptions of fairy life and customs, and some believed that Kirk himself became a prisoner of the fairies.

Among Scottish folklorists whose research preserved ancient legends and magical traditions, the most prominent was John Francis Campbell of Islay (1822–1885). His great collection, Popular Tales of the West Highlands, Orally Collected (4 vols., 1860–62), achieved for Scotland what Jacob Grimm had done in the Household Tales of Europe. Alexander Carmichael (1832–1912) collaborated with Campbell and preserved the ancient Gaelic culture in his collection Carmina Gadelica, Hymns and Incantations, With Illustrated Notes in Words, Rites, and Customs, Dying and Obsolete, Orally Collected in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland (2 vols., 1890), achieved for Scotland what Jacob Grimm had done for the House of Tales of Europe. Alexander Carmichael (1832–1912) collaborated with Campbell and preserved the ancient Gaelic culture in his collection Carmina Gadelica, Hymns and Incantations, With Illustrated Notes in Words, Rites, and Customs, Dying and Obsolete, Orally Collected in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland (2 vols., 1890), achieved for Scotland what Jacob Grimm had done for the House of Tales of Europe. Alexander Carmichael (1832–1912) collaborated with Campbell and preserved the ancient Gaelic culture in his collection Carmina Gadelica, Hymns and Incantations, With Illustrated Notes in Words, Rites, and Customs, Dying and Obsolete, Orally Collected in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland (2 vols., 1890), achieved for Scotland what Jacob Grimm had done for the House of Tales of Europe.

Cock Lane and Common-Sense. 4 vols. Edinburgh, 1897.

Scott, Christopher S(avile) O'D(onoghue) (1927– )

He joined the Society for Psychical Research, London, and was an SPR council member during the years he lived in London (1957–60). He conducted experiments in an attempt to find a repeatable technique for the demonstration of extrasensory perception. He has also done theoretical work on models for psi and examined the work of Gertrude R. Schneider on the so-called "sheep-goat" effect on scoring in quantitative psi experiments.

Scott was among the first researchers to call into question Soal's conclusions. Based upon Scott's initial critique, much of Soal's work was re-examined and found to have been faulty and his spectacular results probably a matter of conscious fraud. Scott's conclusions were initially attacked, but later independently confirmed.

Sources:

Scott, Cyril (Meir) (1879–1970)

Eminent British composer, librettist, poet, author, and Theosophist. He was born on September 27, 1879, at Oxton, Birkenhead, England. He studied music at Frankfurt-on-Main, Germany. He was only 21 when his Heroic Suite was first performed at Darmstadt, Germany, and launched him on a successful music career. He wrote for the piano, on which he also performed capably, as well as composing orchestral pieces, chamber and choral works, and violin studies. He composed an opera, The Alchemist, a ballet and a cantata, and songs and ballads. In addition he published several volumes of his poetry: The Celestial Aftermath, The Tales of Unity, and The Voice of the Ancient.

Scott was an outspoken Theosophist, and he gave much thought to the occult meanings of music, a topic to which only a few, for example, Cornme Helene, had given any consideration. He published his conclusions in the book Music: Its Secret Influence Throughout the Ages (1933; enlarged ed. 1950), a volume dedicated to "Master Koot Hoomi Lal Singh and his pupil Nischa Chaplin." It dealt with both aspects of musical perception and the effects on the morals and aesthetics of different periods in history.

He also authored a series of books on the occult: The Initiate (1920), The Initiate in the Dark Cycle (1932), and The Initiate in the Dark Cycle (1932). His autobiography, Memoirs, Entitled My Years of Indiscretion, appeared in 1924. He died December 31, 1970.

Sources:

Bone of Contention N.p., 1969.

Memoirs, Entitled My Years of Indiscretion. N.p., 1924.

The Vision of the Nazarene. N.p., 1933.

Scott, David (1806–1849) and William Bell (1811–1890)

These two brothers displayed unusual talent in the treatment of supernatural themes in art. David Scott was born October 10 (or 12), 1806, in Edinburgh, Scotland, and lived a comparatively uneventful life, his remarkable gifts being largely unrecognized by his contemporaries. He died on March 5, 1849.

In modern times, however, connoisseurs have appreciated his paintings, perceiving in his work great technical merits. In addition, people who care for art dealing with the supernatural have noted that Scott's Paracelsus and Vasa de Gama are in the forefront of work of this kind. His beautiful drawings for The Ancient Mariner express the very spirit of Coleridge, the arch-mystic, rendering it with a skill unsurpassed in any previous or subsequent illustrations to this poem. Aspects of musical perception and the effects on the morals and aesthetics of different periods in history.

David’s brother, William Bell Scott, was also born in Edinburgh, his birth date being September 12, 1811. His career was very different from David’s, for he won worldly success from the outset, and before his death on November 22, 1890, he had received much acclaim. Etching some of his brother’s works, and painting a host of pictures, he was also a voluminous writer, and his Autobiographical Notes of the Life of William Bell Scott (2 vols., published posthumously, 1892) contains insights concerning the mystic symbolism permeating the painting of the Middle Ages. It also contains a shrewd and interesting account of D. G. Rossetti’s essays on table-turning and other Spiritualist practices.

William Bell’s poems are almost all of a metaphysical order, and although it is extravagant to call him “the Scottish Blake,”... as many people have done, his mystical verse undoubtedly reflects a certain "meditative beauty," as "Fiona Macleod" (William Sharp) once wrote on the subject.

Scott, Michael (ca. 1175–ca. 1254)

Scottish mathematician, physician, astrologer, and reputed magician. Although Michael Scott’s life is shrouded in obscurity, his name is familiar for various reasons. First, the poet Dante refers to him, not as Michael Scott but as Sir Michael Scott of Balwearie, who, along with Sir David Wemyss of Wemyss, went to bring the Maid of Norway to Scotland in 1290. However, this identification is manifestly wrong, for in a poem by Vincent de Beauvais published as early as 1235, Michael Scott was mentioned as lately deceased.

This does not altogether dispose the idea that he emanated from the family of Balwearie, whose estates were situated near Kirkcaldy, in Fife, and it is almost certain that Scott was a man of high birth, since he studied at Oxford University.

When his Oxford days were over, Scott proceeded to the Sorbonne in Paris, where he acquired the title of mathematicus, and from the French capital he wandered on to Bologna, in those days famous as a seat of learning. He did not stay for long, however, but went on to Palermo. He subsequently settled for a while at Toledo to study Arabic.

He appears to have been successful with these studies, thoroughly mastering the intricacies of the Arabic language. He next went to Sicily, where he became attached to the court of Ferdinand II, probably in the capacity of state astrologer. At least, he is so designated in an early manuscript copy (now in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, England) of his book on astronomy.

Scott had also at some time taken holy orders. In 1223, Pope Honorius III wrote to the Archbishop of Canterbury, urging him to procure an English benefice for Scott. It appears that in that year, Scott was engaged in the translation of Aristotle’s De Animalibus, but the ascription is not very well founded. However, it is almost certain that he wrote Quaestio Curiosa de Natura Solis et Lunae, which is included in the Theatrum Chemicum. He was undoubtedly the author of Menæ Philosophica, published at Frankfurt in 1602, and also of Libri Physiognomiae Magistri Michaelis Scoti, a book that was reprinted nearly twenty times and translated into various languages.

Reference has already been made to a manuscript attributed to Scott in the Bodleian Library, and it should be noted that at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, the Vatican, and at the Sorbonne, there are further documents purporting to have been written by the astrologer himself, at his dictation, or copied out by scribes soon after the actual author’s death.

Scottish Society for Psychical Research

Organization concerned with the study of parapsychology in Scotland. It sponsors meetings and lectures and issues a regular newsletter. It may be contacted c/o Archie Lawrie, 5 Church Wynd, Kingskettle, By Cupar, Fife, KY15 7PS Scotland, U.K.

Screech Owl

A variety of owl (Megascops asio) commonly found in the United States. The cry of the screech owl at midnight is said to portend evil. In Italy, the screech owl became the basis of the stories of a night demon, which further developed into the strega, the witch/vampire who under slightly different names appears in the folklore of various southern European countries.

Scriven, Michael John (1928—)

Professor of the science of who has written widely on parapsychology. He was born on March 28, 1928, at Beaulieu, Hampshire, England. He studied at University of Melbourne, Australia (B.A., 1948; M.A., 1950) and returned to Oxford for his doctorate in 1956. Following his graduation he taught at Swarthmore College (1956–60) and Indiana University (1960–66) prior to joining the philosophy department at the University of California in 1966.

While in Australia, Scriven founded and served as secretary of the Melbourne University Society for Psychical Research and then presided over the Oxford University Society for Psychical Research. Scriven’s interests included, research in psychokinesis and spontaneous phenomena and the theoretical and philosophical implications of parapsychology. He has contributed a variety of articles on the philosophical implications of psychical research.

Sources:

———. “Randomness and the Causal Order.” Analysis (October 1956).

Screwing

Divination by gazing into crystals or at shining surfaces. Screwing is commonly simple crystal-gazing but also includes the use of a magical mirror in ceremonial magic.

Seabrook, William (Buehler) (1886–1945)

American traveler and author who explored paranormal phenomena and occultism many years before the occult revival of the 1960s and 1970s. From the 1920s onward, he lived with a Bedouin tribe in Arabia, witnessed whirling dervish dancing at a monastery in Tripoli, saw Yezidee devil worshipers in Kurdistan, studied voodoo in Haiti for a year, and also investigated black magic in West Africa. Born February 22, 1886, in Westminster, Maryland, he was educated at Mercersburg Academy; Roanoke College, Salem, Virginia (Ph.B.); Newberry College, South Carolina (M.A.); and the University of Geneva.

In 1908 he worked as a reporter on the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle and became city editor at the age of 22. He went on to become a partner in an advertising agency in Augusta, then enlisted in the French Army in 1915. He was discharged after a gas attack at Verdun and awarded a Croix de Guerre. After a period as a farmer in Georgia, he went to New York, where he worked as a reporter for the New York Times, then as a writer for the Readers Digest Syndicate.

In 1924, he visited Arabia, where he lived with a Bedouin tribe, and thereafter he devoted himself to traveling and writing. In 1933, he committed himself to a New York hospital where he was treated for alcoholism; his ten-month treatment became the basis of his book Asylum (1935). He died on September 20, 1945, at Rhinebeck, New York, by committing suicide.

Sources:

Séance

A major structure of Spiritualism, the séance is a gathering of a small group of individuals who sit together to obtain paranormal manifestations or establish communication with the dead. At least one member of the group is usually a medium or at least possessed of some mediumistic powers.

In 1848 the Fox family at Hydesville, New York, called in their neighbors to listen to mysterious rapping sounds, which later became famous as the "Rochester rappings" and were responsible for inaugurating the modern Spiritualist movement. The gathering was too informal to be called a séance, although the Foxes themselves undoubtedly did not intend the experiment to be one of the phenomena—to be associated with the rest in investigation. It may be a consequence of action of incredule, owing to the class of 'collective experiments,' for the phenomena are the result of subconscious psycho-physiological collaboration between the medium and the experimenters."

The Sitters

The sitters need not have psychic powers, although the phenomena reported are generally more impressive if they do. As a rule séances are held with a single medium, because, according to Spiritualists, a second powerful medium introduces another spirit control and the ensuing conflict between the controls can lead to confusion.

The optimum number of sitters is generally believed to be eight or nine, but many mediums sit in larger circles. The great medium D. D. Home, even at the risk of offending the empress of France, refused to sit with more than eight individuals. However, the number of sitters in Indridi Índridason's séances sometimes approached seventy. Lujza Ignath demonstrated direct writing before a hundred people.

In isolated instances mediums have been known to demonstrate psychic phenomena onstage, although doubts surround the genuineness of such displays. The Davenport brothers demonstrated before as many as a thousand people, but there is no firm evidence that their phenomena were genuinely psychic. Others who held séances in public halls include the Bangs sisters, for spirit paintings; a Mrs. Suydam, for immunity to fire; Annie Eva Fay, Lulu Hurst, Annie Abbot, and a Miss Richardson, for feats of strength; Eta Roberts and a Mrs. Bliss, for materializations; Mary M. Hardy, for paraffin wax molds (see Plastics); William Eglinton, for slate writing; and Mary Murphey-Lyde, for direct voice.

Composition and Conditions of the Séance

Ideally, according to Spiritualists, males and females should be about equally represented at séances. The majority of the sitters should not be too old. Young sitters provide favorable conditions if their attitude is serious and not flippant. Persons of questionable moral character should not be admitted into the circle. Those in ill health, preoccupied, or nervous should withdraw. Skepticism does not prevent success, but the effect of a hostile or suspicious mind is not helpful and may be a hindrance.

Strangers should not be introduced frequently into the circle. A series of at least six sittings should be held without modifying the group. New sitters should be admitted one by one at intervals of three or four sittings. No more than two or three sittings should be held a week.

A favorable environment is an essential condition for a séance. Excitement or fatigue before the sitting should be avoided. The medium should not take any stimulants. He or she should be comfortable and maintain a genial frame of mind.

Both the medium and the experimenters have an equal share in success or failure. As the psychical researcher Gustav Geley aptly remarked, "Mediumistic investigations belong to the class of 'collective experiments,' for the phenomena are the result of subconscious psycho-physiological collaboration between the medium and the experimenters." Augustus De Morgan wrote to Alfred Russel Wallace at an early period: "There is much reason to think that the state of mind of the inquirer has something—be it external or internal—to do with the power of the phenomena to manifest themselves. This I take to be one of the phenomena—to be associated with the rest in inquiry into cause. It may be a consequence of action of incredulous feeling on the nervous system of the recipient; or it may be that the volition—say the spirit if you like—finds difficulty in communicating with a repellent organization; or, may be, is offended."

A dark or semi-dark séance room is believed to be favorable for phenomena, according to Spiritualists, because light often interferes with spirit manifestation. Critical observers have often noted that it favors fraud, and the demand for darkness was an early hindrance to discovering the manipulations of fake mediums. However, darkness is by no means essential for the production of psychic phenomena, and many remarkable effects have been produced in good light.
The placement of the sitters appears to be a matter of consequence. The controls often make changes to produce a better combination of "psychic currents." After sitters form a chain by holding hands or placing them on the table with fingertips touching, they are requested to engage in general conversation or to sing. It is said that talking or singing creates vibrations that help produce the phenomena. For the same purpose, phonographs and audio tape players have been used in recent years.

Spiritualist medium W. Stainton Moses believed that the chief merit of music in the séance room was its soothing effect, that it harmonized conditions. In his own circle, music was very seldom asked for by the communicators. Harmony was effected by means of perfume and breezes of cool scented air.

The utility of general conversation, free and easy chatter, is that it prevents the sitters from concentrating too much. Tension, solemnity, eagerness, depression are obstructive. Even with the great medium D. D. Home intense attention often prevented manifestations. When everybody stopped talking and looked at him, he awoke from trance. (Media often enter into a trance condition during a séance, although they sometimes retain normal consciousness throughout.)

A natural, easy, relaxed attitude on the part of the sitters is most conducive to phenomena. Fear or terror usually breaks a manifestation. A table, partly levitated, may drop or a phantom may disappear at a scream. During his levitations, Home always asked the sitters not to get excited and to talk of something else because, until he had risen above their heads, any movement or excitement could thwart the force at work. Once in Nice in 1874, Home, in trance, reportedly buried his face and hands in the flames of the open fireplace. On seeing his head, it is understood, one of the gentlemen present was so frightened as to vanish. He was said to have been a member of the House of Commons.

In 1867, Frederick L. H. Willis, professor of the New York Medical College, described his experience with a musical medium in The Spiritual Magazine.

"Sacrificed to the medium struck the first note upon the piano when the tambourine and the bells seemed to leap from the floor and join in unison. Carefully and noislessly I stole into the room, and for several seconds it was my privilege to witness a rare and wonderful sight. I saw the bells and tambourine in motion, I saw the bells lifted as by invisible hands and chimed, each in its turn, accurately and beautifully with the piano. I saw the tambourine dexterously and scientifically manipulated with no mortal hand near it. But suddenly... the medium became aware of my presence... instantly everything ceased... A wave of mental emotion passed over her mind, which was in itself sufficient to stop the phenomena at once."

Emma Hardinge Britten, testifying before the London Di-lectical Society, narrated the case of the medium J. B. Conklin, who was invited to hold a number of séances in Washington:

"The manifestations were very marked and decisive until Mr. Conklin discovered that one of the gentlemen present was of no other than President Lincoln, when his anxiety and surprise became so great as entirely to stop the manifestations which were not again renewed till a mutual explanation had restored him to his natural state of mind."

According to Spiritualists, the medium should not be pressured to produce phenomena. Psychical researcher Sir William Crookes wrote of Home:

"I used to say [to Home], let us sit round the fire and have a quiet chat and see if our friends are here and will do anything for us; we won't have any tests or precautions. On these occasions, when only my own family were present, some of the most convincing phenomena took place.

Atmospheric conditions also can have an important bearing on séances. Dry climates are seemingly more favorable than wet ones, and a thunderstorm is believed inimical. Joseph Maxwell observed that dry cold is helpful and rain and wind often cause failure.

The medium William Eglinton kept a careful record of the atmospheric conditions during his séances. He found that during the 170 failures in 1884–85 the weather was either very wet, damp, or dreary in the majority of instances.

Some Spiritualists believe that the location and furnishing of the séance room are also of considerable consequence. A place saturated with historic atmosphere facilitates manifestations, as does one with powerful emotional associations. With the marquis Carlo Centurione Scotto, a fellow of the Royal Society, a current of cold air passing through the hands of the sitters or by a chilling of the atmosphere. Sometimes there are rapping sounds or moving furniture. In some cases there are moving lights.

If there is a medium in the circle, he or she may breathe heavily or groan before becoming entranced. The medium may then speak and deliver messages in the character of a spirit entity, often with a marked change of voice. In some sittings an alleged spirit control takes charge of the proceedings and dictates how the séance may best be conducted or reveals what departed spirit is conveying a message. With certain powerful mediums, messages may be given in direct voice, supposedly without use of the medium's vocal apparatus.

In one simple form of séance, communication is accomplished through raps or audible movements of a table. Questions are asked, and the answers are given by a single rap for "yes" or a double rap for "no," or by some other code of communication agreed upon by the circle. The Ouija board and planchet are more sophisticated forms of such communication, suitable for one to three individuals rather than a full séance sitting. Another mode of communication for a single sitter or a small group is slate-writing, although considerable doubt surrounds the genuineness of communications received via this method because it is most amenable to fraud.

It is convenient to classify parapsychological phenomena such as automatic writing or speaking by a medium as "psychical," as distinct from the "mental" phenomena of, say, telepathy. Such manifestations as raps, table turning, and slate writing are also largely psychical, but also partially "physical." Physical manifestations properly involve more remarkable phenomena, such as the paranormal movement of objects (telekinesis), the levitation of objects or human beings, the summoning of small objects (materialization) from a distance through closed doors (apports), the transformation of heavy objects or people into very light ones, or the manifestation of spirits (materialization).

Mediums who regularly manifested materialization phenomena (few have attempted such feats in the last several decades) usually sat inside a small cabinet with a heavy curtain in front. Materialized forms issued from the cabinet. The cabinet was believed to conserve and condense psychic force in the production of spirit forms. Not all materializations were of full-length spirit forms. Some were only faces or other partial forms of objects such as flowers, fruit, or jewels.
human shapes, in some instances even grotesque forms. Materialization mediums were sometimes securely tied inside the cabinet as a check against fraud, but of course they frequently merely demonstrated their abilities as escape artists. A few of the more renowned physical mediums of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries demonstrated astonishing phenomena, such as the ability to handle live coals without injury and the manifestation of spirit hands that wrote messages in clear daylight instead of the darkness or subdued light of a séance room. The most talented medium was undoubtedly D. D. Home, who was never detected in fraud. An account of one of his phenomena was given by H. D. Jenkins in the journal Human Nature (February 1867):

"Mr. Home had passed into the trance still so often witnessed, rising from his seat, he laid hold of an armchair, which he held at arms' length, and was then uplifted about three clear of the ground; travelling thus suspended in space, he placed the chair next Lord Adare, and made a circuit round those in the room, being lowered and raised as he passed each of us. One of the observers measured the elevation, and passed his leg and arm under Mr. Home's feet. The elevation lasted from four to five minutes. On resuming his seat, Mr. Home addressed Captain Wynne, communicating news to him of which the present alone could have been cognizant.

"The spirit form that had been seen reclining on the sofa, now stepped up to Mr. Home and mesmerised him; a hand was then seen luminously visible over his head, about 18 inches in a vertical line from his head. The trance state of Mr. Home now assumed a different character; gently rising he spoke a few words to those present, and then opening the door proceeded into the corridor; a voice then said: 'He will go out of this window and come in at that window.'

"The only one who heard the voice was the Master of Lindsay, and a cold shudder seized upon him as he contemplated the possibility of this occurring, a feat which the great height of the third floor windows in Ashley Place rendered more than ordinarily perilous. The others present, however, having closely questioned him as to what he had heard, he at first replied, 'I dare not tell you,' when, to the amazement of all, a voice said: 'You must tell; tell directly.'

"The Master then said, 'Yes; yes, terrible to say, he will go out at that window and come in at this; do not be frightened, be quiet.' Mr. Home now re-entered the room, and opening the drawing-room window, was pushed out semi-horizontally into space, and carried from one window of the drawing-room to the farthest window of the adjoining room. This feat being performed at a height of about 60 feet from the ground, naturally caused a shudder in all present. The body of Mr. Home, when it appeared at the window of the adjoining room, was shunted into the room feet foremost—the window being only 18 inches open. As soon as he had recovered his footing he laughed and said, 'I wonder what a policeman would have said had he seen me go round and round like a teetotum!'

"The scene was, however, too terrible—too strange, to elicit a smile; cold beads of perspiration stood on every brow, while a feeling pervaded all as if some great danger had passed; the nerves of those present had been kept in a state of tension that refused to respond to a joke. A change now passed over Mr. Home, one often observable during the trance states, indicative, no doubt, of some other power operating on his system. At this séance Lord Adare had his arm and leg under Mr. Home's feet. The elevation lasted about six or seven minutes. On resuming his seat, Mr. Home addressed Captain Wynne, communicating news to him of which the present himself could have been cognizant. A spirit form now became distinctly visible; it stood next to Lord Adare, and a long robe with a girdle, the feet scarcely touching the ground, became pouring in, chilling the room; when, to his surprise, he found the window 18 to 24 inches open! This puzzled him, for how could Mr. Home have passed outside through a window only 18 to 24 inches open. Mr. Home, however soon set his doubts at rest; stepping up to Lord Adare he said, 'No, no; I did not close the window; I passed thus into the air outside. An invisible power then supported me vertically in space, and thrust his body into space through the open window, head foremost, bringing him back again feet foremost into the room, shunted not unlike a shutter into a basement below."

"The circle round the table having re-formed, a cold current of air passed over those present, like the rushing of winds. This repeated itself several times. The cold blast of air, or electric fluid, or call it what you may, was accompanied by a loud whistle like a gust of wind on the mountain top, or through the leaves of the forest in late autumn; the sound was deep, sonorous, and powerful in the extreme, and a shudder kept passing over those present, who all heard and felt it. This rushing sound lasted quite ten minutes, in broken intervals of one or two minutes. All present were much surprised; and the interest became intensified by the unknown tongue in which Mr. Home now conversed. Passing from one language to another in rapid succession, he spoke for ten minutes in unknown languages. "A spirit form now appeared on the table, the Master of Lindsay, clad, as seen on former occasions, in a long robe with a girdle, the feet scarcely touching the ground, the outline of the face only clear, and the tones of the voice, though sufficiently distinct to understand, whispered rather than spoken. Other voices were now heard, and large globes of phosphorescent lights passed slowly through the room."

The following extract is taken from an account of a séance held by Cesare Lombroso with the famous Italian medium Eu-sapia Palladino:

"After a rather long wait the table began to move, slowly at first—a matter explained by the skepticism, not to say the positively hostile spirit of those who were this night in a séance circle for the first time. Then little by little, the movements increased in intensity. M. Lombroso proved the levitation of the table, and estimated at 12 or 15 pounds the resistance to the pressure which he had to make with his hands in order to overcome that levitation.

"This phenomenon of a heavy body sustained in the air, off its centre of gravity and resisting a pressure of 12 or 15 pounds, very much surprised and astonished the learned gentleman, who attributed it to the action of an unknown magnetic force. "At my request, taps and scratchings were heard in the table. This was a new cause for astonishment, and led the gentlemen to themselves call for the putting out of the candles in order to ascertain whether the intensity of the noises would be increased, as had been stated. All remained seated and in contact. In a dim light which did not hinder the most careful surveillance, violent blows were first heard at the middle point of the table. Then a bell placed upon a round table, at a distance of a yard to the left of the medium (in such a way that she was placed behind and to the right of M. Lombroso), rose into the air, and went tinking over the heads of the company, describing a circle around our table where it finally came to rest." At this séance the sitters also felt themselves pinched and their clothes plucked and felt invisible hands on their face and fingers. The accuracy of the account was testified to by Lombroso himself.

The Problem of Verification

It may seem surprising that a group of people sitting together can induce extraordinary phenomena that appear to defy normal physical laws. It has been argued that suggestion may play a part, and it is difficult to rule out the possibility of conscious or even subconscious suggestion as a factor. The important thing is that the facts be understood; it is helpful to use visual and aural recording apparatus to register the objectivity of the manifestations. Experiments have shown that the senses may be deceived in the séance-room atmosphere and that individuals do not always remember accurately things seen or heard.

The availability of modern cameras and film, tape recorders, camcorders, and other highly sensitive electronic surveillance devices greatly simplifies accurate documentation of séances.

The Wider Implications of the Séance

As mentioned earlier, the purposes and aims of a group of people sitting together may influence the result, although little research has been done on the mechanics of séance phenomena. It is clear that the medium and the sitters frequently have reported a drain on their energies, manifested in fatigue and weakness afterward; loss of weight has also been reported.

We do not at present know how nervous energy is related to any psychic forces. There are analogies to be drawn from the séance room to the claimed currents of energy in the human body that may be modified by acupuncture techniques and result in improvements in health. There are also comparable concepts in yoga and in the psychophysical energy popularly termed kundalini, expressed alternatively in either sexual activity or transformations of higher consciousness, sometimes with paranormal side effects. Large groups of people in an atmosphere of emotional fervor may contribute to the spiritual or psychic healing of revival meetings. Analogies can also be drawn to the changed atmosphere that often exist between entertainer and audience at concerts and theaters and even the atmosphere at traditional religious services in churches.

In each case, there is a single individual (or small group of individuals) acting as a focal point for the mass vital energies of the group. Entertainer, actor, minister, or medium: all are involved in vital energy exchanges and transformations. Although the nature of such energy transformations is clearly affected by the established conventions of the group occasion, it is not clear how a street demonstration accumulates and releases the lowest common impulse of the mob, resulting in stone-throwing, window smashing, or other antisocial behavior while a revival meeting may result in paranormal healing, or a séance in levitation or telekinetic phenomena.

Sources:
Abbott, David P. Behind the Scenes With the Mediums. La Sale, Ill.: Open Court, 1907.

Sea Phantoms and Superstitions

Sailors in general are often superstitious, as are fishermen and others who live by deep bodies of water. The old songs of the outer Hebrides off the coast of Scotland are full of wizardry, with figures in some of the old sea shanties as well. The novelist Captain Frederick Marryat (1792–1848), who understood sailors as few others have, testified repeatedly to their firm belief in the supernatural.

He is the not only author who has dealt with this subject: Coleridge also touched on the matter in his Rime of the Ancient Mariner. Turning from literature to painting, Scottish master David Scott, in a memorable canvas now in the seaport town of Leith, Scotland, showed Vasco de Gama and his henchmen gazing thunderstruck at an apparition rising from the waves. It is scarcely surprising that the supernatural should be a preoccupation of sailors, as they have lived until this century with the constant possibility of sudden death.

In Cornwall, England, so rich in romantic associations of all sorts, quite a number of stories concerning marine specters have been handed down from generation to generation and are still remembered.

One of these stories relates how, on a winter’s evening when a fierce gale was raging around the Cornish headlands, a fisherman chanced to see a ship in distress. The man called on some of his friends to aid him in the rescue. In a few minutes, a row boat had been manned, for Cornish fisherfolk are accustomed to being on the water in all weather despite the danger of drowning. Very soon the rescuers were almost within earshot of the distressed vessel and could see her name clearly on the stern. They planned to jump on board, their idea being that if the ship had a skillful pilot acquainted with the coast’s dangers, the ship might be steered safely into Falmouth harbour. However, just as one of the fishermen stood up in the prow of the boat intending to throw a rope, the great vessel looming before him disappeared from sight.

The ship could not have sunk, for some relics would certainly have survived. Fearing that the devil had conjured up a phantom to induce them to put out to sea, the rowers put treated speedily, and pulled for home. One and all, they were more afraid of the devil’s machinations than of the more genuine perils they were encountering.

Another Cornish fishing tradition is associated with the village of Sennen Cove. This place is situated at the head of a bay flanked by two capes. Sometimes a band of misty vapor stretch- es across the bay, obscuring the villagers’ outlook on the sea. Whenever this occurs, the fisherfolk believe that it warns them not to put out in their boats. At one time, Sennen Cove numbered among its inhabitants a group of skeptical fishermen who laughed at this superstition. Accordingly, when the warn- ing band of vapor next made its appearance, they sailed off singing gaily. But their boat never returned, their fate remained a mystery, and they strengthened rather than weakened the belief they had ridiculed.

Scotland has stories of phantom ships. Near Ballachulish, on the west coast of Argylshire, there is a rocky island on which the MacDonalds of Glencoe used to bury their honored dead. The tradition of the district tells that once, some hundreds of years ago, a skiff bearing a beloved chieftain’s corpse to this place foundered before reaching its destination. For the Mac- Donalds, it was a horrible catastrophe that a leader of their clan should be denied a resting place beside his ancestors. Soon the accident came to seem supernatural, for invariably, just before any misfortune overtook the Macdonald tribe, the wrecked skiff was seen drifting about the sea, its dead oarsman clinging to it, and a coffin floating in its wake. This weird vision appeared only too often, and it was said that on the eve of the massacre of Glencoe, the specter boat bore a crew of ghostly female mourners who sang a loud coronach.

Another Scottish Highland story claims that a large ship, wrecked off the coast of Ross at the time of the first Celts voyages to Canada, still rises occasionally from the waves and, after sailing for a few minutes, suddenly lurches and sinks beneath the ocean. Dwellers by the shores of the Solway tell how a certain straggler, which was conveyed to the town of Stranraer while conveying a happy bridal party towards Stranraer, is frequently seen sailing at full speed before the gale, the bride and bridgroom clinging to the rigging as though in terror of immediate death by drowning.

Nor is this the only Solway phantom, for that treacherous seaway once witnessed the foundering of two Scandinavian pirate vessels, which are said to rise periodically from the water, the crew of each calling for mercy.

Religion has played a prominent part in some stories of specter ships. At Boulogne, France, for example, there is a tradition that on one occasion in the Middle Ages, the townspeople wanted to build a church, for they were without any public place of worship. They were anxious to choose a site. God would approve, but found it difficult to come to a decision, as everyone concerned suggested a different place.

Finally, a group assembled on the beach, intending to offer up a prayer for a solution to the problem. While they were thus engaged, they happened to look out to sea, where to their astonishment a vessel was seen sailing toward them, the sacred Virgin herself on board. Standing in the bow, she pointed in a certain direction, and the devout people concluded that their petition had been answered. The mysterious phantom vanished as quickly as it had come.

Another French specter ship, however, used to remain in sight for longer periods. The vessel was manned by a crew of demons and great dogs—the perjured souls of men who had been guilty of fearful crimes. Yet the pious knew that they had little to fear, the priests having told them that the repetition of a paternoster would guard against the hideous vision.

Somewhat similar to this story is one associated with Venice, where one stormy evening about the middle of the fourteenth century, a fisherman was requested to row three saints to a neighboring village on the Adriatic. After rowing for a while, he suddenly stopped as though petrified, a galley filled with Saracens having risen beside his boat. The oarsman wanted to start back, but his godly passengers calmed him, while they sang an Ave Maria the ominous galley was submerged by the waves. The fisherman rowed on and reached his haven. The three saints rewarded him with a present of a gold ring. That ring figures in the old coat-of-arms of the Venetian Republic.

There are legends of the sea in most countries. In Japan, there are tales of phantom junks, distinctive Chinese ships. The Chinese used to paint a pair of great eyes on the prow of each craft to deter any monsters prowling about. On the coasts of the United States, there are traditions of spectral vessels. Kindred stories are known in the Ionian Islands, and the folklore of the Shetlands has a wealth of such tales. Around the coast of Denmark and the fiorads of Norway, many a phantom vessel was supposed to howl as well.

It was on the North Sea that the most famous of all supernatural ships was said to sail, the ship known as The Flying Dutchman.

The story goes that a sailor who had loved a woman but wronged her, left her to languish, and put forth on the high seas, where he committed many flagrant acts of piracy. But the fates condemned him to sail warily and eternally from shore to shore. He was to endure this punishment until he could win the staunch affection of a virtuous woman and prove faithful to her.

The guilty man longed to walk solid ground once more, but whenever he dared to put in to port to try to win the woman who might be able to save him, the devil drove him on board ship again, and his interminable voyage commenced again.

Century after century passed in this way, the ill-fated vessel gradually becoming familiar to all who sailed the North Sea or lived by its shores. The legend did not disappear with a more skeptical age; for Richard Wagner evolved a drama from the legend, and his powerful music—charged so abundantly with the weirdness, mystery, and glamour of the surging ocean—vividly evokes the Dutchman’s ship driving before a gale, the criminal sitting terrified and hopeless at his useless helm.

Sea Monsters

Among persistent legends of the sea is the belief in great monsters of the deep. The sea serpent has been reported since earliest times. The Roman historian Pliny the Elder (ca. 23–79 C.E.) described in his Naturalis Historia how a Greek squadron on a voyage for Alexander the Great saw a shoal of sea serpents, each thirty feet long, in the Persian Gulf.

Much more terrifying is the great sea serpent. Two hundred feet long and twenty feet broad cited by Olaus Magnus in his History of Northern People in 1555. It would be a mistake to assume that all reports of great sea serpents belong to the fabulous past or represent confused accounts of known sea creatures, like whales or giant squid. Sea serpents continued to be reported into modern times, although some accounts would indicate creatures nearer to a plesiosaurus than a serpent. This is understandable, as the prehistoric plesiosaurus had a long neck which might appear to look like a serpent. One of the most celebrated of such creatures is the famed Loch Ness Monster of Scotland.

More legendary are the ancient accounts of a gigantic sea creature named the Kraken. Bishop Eric Pontoppidan discussed the Kraken in his Natural History of Norway (1751) and concluded that it was an enormous polyp (octopus) or starfish. It is probable that it was one of the cephalopods popularly known as cuttlefish.

Less ominous are the stories of mermaids, around whom many strange myths have grown. It is generally supposed that mermaid stories grew up around the dugong or sea-cow, which superficially resembles a human form. However, there are early accounts of mermaids that do not seem to fit this description. In an old history of the Netherlands, there is the following account of a sea-woman of Harlem in the fifteenth century:

“...at that time there was a great tempest at sea, with exceeding high tides, the which did drowne many villages in Friseland and Holland; by which tempest there came a sea-woman swimming in the Zuyderzee, with long hair, from the town of Campen and Edam; the which passing by the Purmeric, entered into the straight of a broken dyke in the Purmerweer, where she remained a long time, and could not find the hole by which she entered, for that the breach had been stopped after that the tempest had ceased.

“Some country women and their servants, who did daily pass the Purmerr, to milk their kine in the next pastures, did often see this woman swimming on the water, thereof at the first they were much afraid; but in the end being accustomed to see it very often, they viewed it neerer, and at last they resolved to take it if they could. Having discovered it they rowed towards it, and drew it out of the water by force, carrying it in one of their barkes unto the town of Edam.

“When she had been well washed and cleansed from the seaweed which was grown about her, she was like unto another woman; she was apparelled, and began to accustom herself to ordinary meats like unto any other, yet she sought still means to escape, and to get into the water, but she was straightly guarded.”

“They came from farre to see her. Those of Harlem made a great suit to them of Edam to have this woman by reason of the strangenesse thereof. In the end they obtained her, where she did learn to spin, and lived many years (some say fifteen), and for the reverence which she bare unto the signe of the crosse whereunto she had beene accustomed, she was buried in the church-yarde. Many persons worthy of credit have justified in their writings that they had seen her in the said towne of Harlem."

A strange superstition of seafaring life related to the caul, a thin membrane found around the head of some new-born babies. The caul was considered a good omen for the child, and also for anyone who acquired it. Many seamen considered a caul to be a powerful lucky charm against shipwrecks or death from drowning. There are many allusions to the occult power of the caul by early writers, and in Ben Jonson's play The Alchemist (act I, section 2), the character Face says to Dapper: "Ye were born with a Cawl o' your head."

Belief in the power of the caul persisted even into the late nineteenth century, when advertisements relating to the sale of a caul frequently appeared in British newspapers. As much as fifteen, twenty, or even thirty guineas were asked by sellers. In the Western Daily News of Plymouth (February 9, 1867) a notice offered mariners a child's caul for five guineas. The Times (May 8, 1848) offered a caul for six guineas and described it as "having been aloof with its last owner forty years, through all the perils of a seaman's life, and the owner died at last in his bed, at the place of his birth."

Great stress was laid on the soundness of the article, thus in the Times (February 17, 1813) an advertisement stated, "A child's caul in a perfect state for sale."

The notion that a child's caul could prevent drowning prevailed in France as well as in England. It was alluded to in a rondeau by Claude de Malleville (born 1597).

The superstition concerning the caul is from remote antiquity and was prevalent in the days of the Roman empire. Ælius Lambrius in his Life of Diadumeninus (surnamed Lampridius) in his life of Antonine (February 17, 1865) stated that Pudens Maximus related the following: "A caul was examined at the place of his birth."

Il est né coiffé, is a well-known French expression describing a lucky man, and indicating that he was born with a caul.

It was believed that so long as the child from whom the caul had been taken enjoyed good health, the caul experienced the same and was dry, flexible, and healthy, but when the caul-born person suffered from any sickness, the membrane also underwent a change, either becoming totally crisp or regaining its former flexibility, according to whether the person died or recovered. Often these caulbs became heirlooms, handed down from father to son (especially if it had been born in the family), and were regarded by their owners with as much superstition as if the caul-born person were still living. (Of course, the caul, a relatively unusual birth event, meant different things in different cultures. In Poland, for example, a child born with a caul was a potential vampire and the caul had to be treated precisely to prevent that fate.)

SOURCES:

---

The Searcher

A bi-monthly publication for followers of the teachings of the New Age bible Oahspe. Address: Kosmon Publications, P.O. Box 4670, Hualapai, AZ 86412-4670.

Search Magazine

Former quarterly publication dealing with UFOs and other mysteries, founded as Mystic in the early 1950s by entrepreneur occult publisher Raymond A. Palmer. In the 1970s Search magazine absorbed Flying Saucers and Phantoms of Evil. The magazine continues to appear as a separate publication issued by Palmer. Search continued into the 1980s.

Sebottendorf, Rudolf Freiherr von (1875–1945)

Name assumed by Adam Glauer, founder of the occult political Thule Society in pre-war Germany, and the Germanen Order.

Second Sight

Paranormal perception at a distance in time and space, today classified by parapsychology under such labels as ESP, clairvoyance, precognition and remote viewing. Second sight, as a faculty of foreseeing future events or occurrences happening at the moment at a distance, is traditionally attributed to certain individuals in the Highlands of Scotland.

The medium Daniel Duglas Home, who claimed descent from a Highland family, was supposed to have second sight and described it in the following way: "A deadly tremor comes over me, and there is a film on my eyes, and I not only see persons, but hear conversations taking place at a distance." While in Paris Home saw his brother, who was then in the North Sea. He saw his fingers and toes fall off. Six months afterward tidings came of the brother having been found dead on the ice, his fingers and toes having fallen off from scurvy.

The chief peculiarity of second sight is that the visions are often of a symbolic character. For example, in March 1907, in a lecture before the Société Internationale de Philologie, Sciences et Beaux Arts, F. G. Fraser noted: "The vision of coming events which some of the Highlanders possess, used to be accompanied, in some cases, by a nerve storm and by a subsequent prostration. It must not be confused with the sight of apparitions, nor does it depend upon artificial aids, such as accompanied by the invocation of the oracles in classic times."

Samuel Johnson took note of the phenomenon in his 1775 account of A Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland: "The foresight of the seers is not always prescience. They are impressed with images, of which the event only shows them the meaning."

He denied that "to the second sight nothing is presented but phantoms of evil. Good seems to have the same proportion in those visionary scenes as it obtains in real life."

According to old books (Ranulf Higden's Polychronicon, 1482 and Robert Kirk's Secret Commonwealth of Elves, Fairies and Fairies, 1691) second sight is communicated by touch. Napier's Folklore and Superstitious Beliefs in the West of Scotland (1879) mentions the practice as surviving in the nineteenth century.

The belief in second sight dates back to a very early period in the history of these regions, and has not been altogether eradicated by the encroachments of the twentieth century. And, of course, apart from the name, which is used primarily in Scotland, second sight itself is not exclusive to the Celts of Scotland, for it is allied to the clairvoyance, prophetic vision, soothsaying, and so on, that have been reported from time immemorial in practically every part of the world. Yet the second sight has certain distinctive features of its own.

It may, for instance, be either congenital or acquired. In the former case, it generally falls to the seventh son of a seventh son, by reason of the potency of the mystic number seven. In the days of large families and no birth control, such a person appeared far more frequently than in modern society. Yet again, sometimes Highlanders would find themselves suddenly endowed with the mysterious faculty. A person gifted with second sight is said to be "fey." Generally there is no apparent departure from the normal consciousness during the vision, although sometimes a seer may complain of a feeling of disquiet or uneasiness. A vision may be communicated from one person to another, usually by contact, but the secondary vision is dimmer than that of the original seer.

A frequent vision is that of a funeral, a premonition of a death shortly to occur in the community. This is an instance of the second sight taking a symbolical turn. Occasionally the apparition of the doomed person will be seen—his wrath, or double—while he himself is far distant.

Another form second-sight visions often take is that of "seeing lights." The lights, too, may indicate death, but they may likewise predict lesser happenings. In one instance, a light was seen by two persons to hover above the mansion of an estate, then to travel swiftly in the direction of the gamekeeper's cottage, where it remained stationary for a while. The next day the gamekeeper was found dead.

Animals also are said to possess second sight, especially dogs and horses. Two men were travelling in Scotland from Easdale to Oban on a stormy night. In making a short cut through a wood, one of them died from fatigue and exposure. That night his driver, who as yet knew nothing of the tragedy, took his place, and horses. Two men were travelling in Scotland from Easdale to Oban on a stormy night. In making a short cut through a wood, one of them died from fatigue and exposure. That night his driver, who as yet knew nothing of the tragedy, took his place, and that as a sign they were about to appear, the night would be illuminated by an unknown light. Speaking to the three children, she asked that they illuminate by an unknown light. Speaking to the three children, she asked that they be consecrated to the Virgin Mary and asked that she initiate the devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, and that a communion of reparation be received on the first Saturday of each month. If that happened, Russia would be converted. If it did not, Russia would spread its errors throughout the world.

For a time, all that was known of the secret message was that while receiving it, the children were heard to groan aloud. Two of the children, Jacinta and Francisco Marto, died in 1919 and 1920 respectively, but did not speak of the message that they had been given. Subsequently, some years later Lucia Dos Santos, who had been the third child, made two parts of the secret message known. The first part consisted of a vision of hell, with an accompanying admonition that the children should sacrifice themselves for sinners in reparation for the many offenses against the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The second part was an admonition to spread the devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, which has become a popular form of devotion in the Roman Catholic Church. Added to this admonition was a prediction that World War I (1914–18) would soon end, but another one would soon begin if people did not cease their offending behavior. The war would occur during the reign of Pope Pius XII. She added that five scourges would come upon the world and that as a sign they were about to appear, the night would be illuminated by an unknown light. Speaking to the three children, she asked that Russia, in particular, be consecrated to the Immaculate Heart, and that a consecration of reparation be received on the first Saturday of each month. If that happened, Russia would be converted. If it did not, Russia would spread its errors throughout the world.

In 1925, Mary again appeared, this time privately to Lucia, and asked that she initiate the devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary through the Communion of Reparations on the first Saturdays. Lucia began to advocate the Communions but did not tie them to the original apparitions until 1927, when she received a further message from Christ to reveal that part

Secret Chiefs

A term which emerged in the nineteenth century to designate the superhuman adepts who were attributed with the founding of several secret magical orders. They were the real founders of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, for example, analogous to the Mahatmas or Masters who supposedly led the Theosophical Society (founded in 1875). Together they formed the Great White Brotherhood who from their lofty perspective secretly guided and influenced human history. They also had a model in the Superiores Incogniti, or hidden superiors, introduced by Baron Hund (1792–76) for his Strikt Observanz Masonic system.

The Secret Chiefs of the Golden Dawn were said to be unknown magi who were "Concealed Rulers of the Wisdom of the True Rosicrucian Magic of Light." Human founders W. Wynn Westcott, S. L. MacGregor Mathers and W. R. Woodman are supposed to be in contact with them.

Sources:

Secret Fire

Described by Philostratus (ca. 170–245 C.E.) in his Life of Apollonus as issuing from a basin in a well on the hill Athanor. A blue vapor was said to rise from the well and change into all the colors of the rainbow. The bottom was strewn with red arsenic, on it was the basin full of fire, and from it rose flame without smell or smoke. Two stone reservoirs were beside it, one containing rain, the other wind. This description is probably a symbolic one.

Secrets of Fatima

During 1917, three children in the town of Fatima, Portugal, claimed to have witnessed an apparition of the Virgin Mary some six times between May 13 and October 13. The attention of the public and the Roman Catholic Church was captured by the phenomenon in the sky over Fatima on the day of the last apparition, but as devotion to Mary as advocated at Fatima spread, a second element of the apparitions emerged to also claim widespread attention. During the July 13 apparition, the Virgin shared information with the children that they were to keep secret. This occurrence repeated the course of the apparition at La Salette several decades previously.

For a time, all that was known of the secret message was that while receiving it, the children were heard to groan aloud. Two of the children, Jacinta and Francisco Marto, died in 1919 and 1920 respectively, but did not speak of the message that they had been given. Subsequently, some years later Lucia Dos Santos, who had been the third child, made two parts of the secret message known. The first part consisted of a vision of hell, with an accompanying admonition that the children should sacrifice themselves for sinners in reparation for the many offenses against the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The second part was an admonition to spread the devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary, which has become a popular form of devotion in the Roman Catholic Church. Added to this admonition was a prediction that World War I (1914–18) would soon end, but another one would soon begin if people did not cease their offending behavior. The war would occur during the reign of Pope Pius XII. She added that five scourges would come upon the world and that as a sign they were about to appear, the night would be illuminated by an unknown light. Speaking to the three children, she asked that Russia, in particular, be consecrated to the Immaculate Heart, and that a consecration of reparation be received on the first Saturday of each month. If that happened, Russia would be converted. If it did not, Russia would spread its errors throughout the world.

In 1925, Mary again appeared, this time privately to Lucia, and asked that she initiate the devotion to the Immaculate Heart of Mary through the Communion of Reparations on the first Saturdays. Lucia began to advocate the Communions but did not tie them to the original apparitions until 1927, when she received a further message from Christ to reveal that part of the secret. She would spend the next decade promoting the devotion.

When Lucia saw the extraordinary aurora borealis on January 25, 1938, she believed it to be the sign that the punishment of the world was about to begin. Most believers equate the Spanish Civil War (1936–39) and the succeeding Second World War (1939–45) as confirmation of the prophecy. In 1940 she wrote to Pope Pius XII, asking for the consecration of Russia to the Immaculate Heart of Mary and tied the request to the secret received in 1917. Pius XII did consecrate Russia to the Immaculate Heart in 1942 and again in 1952.

In 1941, she wrote the last of seven documents recording her memories of the 1917 apparitions, apart from the third secret. But two years later, when Lucia fell ill, her bishop finally ordered her to write down the rest of the secret. The brief message was sealed in an envelope and presented to the bishop of Beauraing. On several occasions through the 1940s and 1950s, the bishop indicated that the letter would be opened in 1960 and/or after Lucia’s death (she is still alive as of 2000). There was great expectation that the rest of the secret would be revealed in 1960. The sealed letter was transferred to Rome in 1957 and in 1960 was presented to Pope John XXIII, who did read it. He also shared its contents with several of his close advisors. Afterwards, he placed the message in another envelope, sealed it, and returned it to the archives.

The non-publication of the final secret came as a disappointment to many who had been swept up into the international community of Fatima devotees. Speculation as to the nature of the secret ranged from the bizarre to the mundane. Some suggested that it contained prophecies of imminent world disaster. Others suggested that it was quite unpredicatable, antinomian. The idea of the secret was integrated into many conspiracy theories already present about the papal role in secret world government intrigues.

In what became one of the most widespread of reports, the German newspaper Nenues Europa claimed that the third secret spoke of important treaties to be concluded in the years 1963–65 between the Anglo-Saxon nations and the Soviet Union. Following the test ban treaty of 1963, the newspaper went on to publish what it claimed was the exact text of the third secret document. The lengthy third secret document referred to the previous secret at La Salette, internal church conflict, and the endtimes for humanity. It suggested that this text was being circulated to the rulers of Europe and helped bring about the 1963 treaty. The article was republished in French by Le Monde de la Vie in Paris and in English in a book printed and widely circulated by a conservative Catholic businessman, Emmett Culligan. Culligan tied his own understanding of the document to the assassination of U.S. president John F. Kennedy in 1963 and the predictions of seeress Jeanne Dixon that the anticrist was born in Egypt in 1962. Many Fatima experts have pointed out that this 1963 document is far too long to be the final secret which was written in longhand on a small piece of paper.

In 1971, Ray Stanford, a psychic channel and head of the Association for the Understanding of Man in Austin, Texas, did a set of readings in which the source that spoke through him discussed Fatima. It suggested that the children had been in contact with beings from the angelic realm. It also suggested that the third secret spoke of the assassination of a pope and the end of the papacy. Many Fatima enthusiasts believe that this secret refers only to popes installed after 1960 (Pope John Paul II being the third). The idea that the papacy would end, also suggested by some of the interpreters of Nostradamus, has become a popular theme in speculation on Fatima.

Still others, relying primarily on statements made by people such as Lucia or those from the Vatican known to have been privy to the secret, agree that the document speaks of the last days but suggest that it refers to a falling away of the faithful and a great apostasy among church teachers. In May of 2000, Pope John Paul II revealed the third secret of Fatima. The third secret dealt with an assassination attempt on a “bishop in white” by an atheist system against the Catholic Church and Christians in the twentieth century. This was considered to be the assassination attempt of Pope John Paul II in 1981. Apart from speculation over the content of the Fatima secret, the idea of Mary sharing a secret with the persons to whom she appears has become a common element in more recent apparitions. It was integral to the apparitions at Beauraing (1932), Lipta (1948), and Bayside (1968), among others. By its association with Fatima, the granting of a secret has come to be viewed as an element contributing to the authenticity of any given apparition.

In 2000, Pope John Paul II finally released the text of the third secret. The brief description of the vision seen by the three children in 1917 included an angel with a flaming sword. This angel spoke the words “Penance! Penance! Penance!”; a bishop dressed in white fell to his knees; and the three children were surrounded by a ring of fire. The secret is hidden (or so some believe) in the assassinations of popes and others. Pope John XXIII was prophesied to be the last pope. Pope John Paul II was said to have been killed by an assassin in 1981. The secret’s message was meant to serve as a warning to the faithful.

Sources:

Secret Tradition

Since the medieval period, students of occultism (that which is hidden) have professed a belief that the ancient wisdom and secret tenets of the various psychic sciences have been preserved to modern times by a series of adepts, who have handed these secrets down from generation to generation in their entirety. Leaders have gained authority by claiming to be in contact with such secret adepts, for proficiency in any one of the occult sciences requires instruction from a master of that branch.

It is possible that in neolithic times, societies existed among our ancestors similar in character to the Midewiwin of the North American Indians, the snake-dancers of the Hopi of New Mexico, or the numerous secret societies of aboriginal Australians. This is inferred from the probability that totemism existed amongst neolithic peoples. Hierophantic castes would hand down secret traditions from one generation to another.

The early mysteries of Egypt, Éleusis, Samothrace, and Caerleon were probably the elaboration of such primitive mysteries. There would appear to be what might be called a fusion of occult beliefs throughout the ages. It has been said that when the ancient mysteries are spoken about, it should be understood that the same sacred ceremonies, initiatory processes, and revelations are intended, and that what is true of one applies with equal certainty to all in the others.

Thus the Greek geographer Strabo recorded that the strange orgies in honor of the mystic birth of Jupiter resembled... those of Bacchus, Ceres, and Cybele, and the Orphic poems identified the orgies of Bacchus with those of Ceres, Rhea, Venus, and Isis. Euripides also mentioned that the rites of Cybele were celebrated in Asia Minor in a manner identical with the Grecian mysteries of Dionysus and the Cretan rites of the Cabiri.

The Rev. Geo. Oliver, in his book The History of Initiation (1829), asserted that the rites of Freemasonry were exercised in the antediluvian age, were received by Noah after the Flood, and were practiced by people at the building of Babel. These rites spread and were molded into a form, the great outlines of which can be traced in the mysteries of every heathen nation. These mysteries are the shattered remains of the one true system, from which they were derived.

Although there may have been likenesses between the rites of certain societies, the idea that all sprang from one common source has never been proved. One thing, however, is fairly certain. Anthropology permits us to believe that human concepts, religious and mystical, are practically identical wherever people exist, and there is every possibility that this brought about a strong resemblance between the mystical systems of the older world.

The principles of magic are universal, and these were probably handed on throughout the centuries by hereditary castes of priests, shamans, medicine-men, magicians, sorcerers, and witches. But the same evidence does not exist with regard to the higher magic. Was this handed on by means of secret societies, occult schools or universities, or from adept to adept?

This magic is that spiritual magic that, taken in its best sense, shades into mysticism. The schools of Salamanca and the mystic colleges of Alexandria could not impart the great truths of this science to their disciples. Its nature is such that communication by lecture would be worse than useless. It is necessary to suppose then that it was imparted by one adept to another. But it is not likely that this magic arose at a very early period in human history, probably not before some three or four thousand years B.C.E. The undisturbed nature of Egyptian and Babylonian civilization leads to the belief that these countries brought forth a long series of adepts in the higher magic.

We know that Alexandria was heir to the works of these adepts, but it is unlikely that their teachings were publicly disseminated in her public schools. Individuals of high magical standing would, however, be in possession of the occult knowledge of ancient Egypt, and it seems likely that they imparted this to the Greeks of Alexandria. Later Hellenic and Byzantine magical theory is distinctly Egyptian in character, and we know that its esoteric forms were disseminated in Europe at a comparatively early date, placing all other systems in the background.

Regarding alchemy, the evidence is much more sure, and the same may be said regarding astrology. These are occult studies in which it is peculiarly necessary to obtain the assistance of an adept if any excellence is to be gained in their practice, and it is known that the first originated in Egypt, and the second in ancient Babylon.

The names of those early adepts who carried the sciences forward until the days of Alexandria are not known, but subsequent to that period the identity of practically every alchemical and astrological practitioner of any note is known. In the history of no other occult study is the sequence of its professors so clear as is the case in alchemy, and the same might almost be said of astrology.

In the case of mystical brotherhoods, a long line of these have probably existed from early times, sharing the traditions. Many persons would be members of several and would import the conceptions of one society into another, as we know Rosicrucian ideas were imported into Masonry.

In the mystic societies of the Middle Ages there seem to be reflections of the older Egyptian and classical mysteries, and some support the theory that the spirit and, in some instances, even the letter of these may have descended to medieval and perhaps to present times.

Such organizations die much harder than any credit is given them for doing. We know, for example, that Freemasonry was transformed at one part of its career, about the middle of the seventeenth century, by an influx of alchemists and astrologers who crowded out the operative members and strengthened the mystical position of the brotherhood.

It is therefore possible to suppose that on the fall or disuse of the ancient mysteries, their disciples, looking eagerly for some method of saving their cults from entire extinction, would join the ranks of some similar society, or would keep the flame alive in secret.

The occult idea has been preserved through the ages, the same in essence among the believers in all religions. To a great extent, the occult’s trend was in one direction, so that the fusion of the older mystical societies and their rebirth as a new brotherhood is a plausible hypothesis.

The entry on the Templars, for example, suggests the possibility that one brotherhood having its origin in the East. It seems very likely that its rites were original in origin, and certainly the occult systems of Europe owed much to the Templars, who, probably, after the fall of their own order, secretly formed others or joined existing societies.

Masons have a hypothesis that they inherited traditions from the Dionysian artists, the artisans of Byzantium, and the building brotherhoods of Western Europe. This is not a proven theory, however, it is much more feasible than the romantic legend concerning the rise of Freemasonry at the time of the building of the Temple of Solomon.

One of the chief reasons that we know so little concerning these brotherhoods in medieval times is that the charge of dabbling in the occult arts was a serious one in the eyes of the law and the church; therefore, occultists found it necessary to carry on their practices in secret.

But after the Reformation, a modern spirit took possession of Europe, and protagonists of the occult sciences came out of their secrecy and practiced in the open light of day. In England, for example, numerous persons avowed themselves alchemists; in Germany the “Rosicrucians” sent out a manifesto; in Scotland, Alexander Seton, a great master of the hermetic art, flourished.

But it was nearly a century later when further secret societies were formed, such as the Academy of the Ancients and of the Mysteries in 1767; the Knights of the True Light, founded in Austria about 1780; the Knights and Brethren of Asia, which appeared in Germany in the same year; the Order of Jerusalem, which originated in America in 1791; and the Society of the Universal Aurora, established in Paris in 1785.

Besides being masonic, these societies practiced animal magnetism, astrology, Kabala, and even ceremonial magic. Others were political, such as the Illuminati. But the individual tradition was kept up by an illustrious line of adepts, who were more instrumental in keeping the flame of mysticism alive than even such societies as those mentioned.

Anton Mesmer, Emanuel Swedenborg Louis Claude de Saint-Martin and Martines de Pasqually all labored to that end. We may regard all these as belonging to the school of Christian magicians, distinct from those who practiced the rites of the grimoires or Jewish Kabalah. The line may be carried back through Lavater, Karl von Eckermann, and Emanuel Swedenborg to the seventeenth century. These men were mystics besides being practitioners of theurgic magic, and they combined in themselves the knowledge of practically all the occult sciences.

With Anton Mesmer began the revival of a science that cannot be altogether regarded as occult when consideration is given to its modern developments, but that powerfully influenced the mystic life of his time and even later. The Mesmerists of the first era were in a direct line from the Martinists and the mystical magicians of France in the late eighteenth century. Indeed, for some English mystics, such as Valentine Greatrakes, mysticism and “magnetism” are one and the same thing. But when hypnotism, to give it its modern name, became numbered with the more practical sciences, persons of a mystical cast of mind appear to have deserted it.
Hypnotism does not bear the same relation to mesmerism and animal magnetism that modern chemistry does to alchemy, but those who practice it are as dissimilar to the older professors of mesmerism as the modern practitioner of chemistry is to the medieval alchemist. It is symptomatic of the occult studies that its students despise knowledge that is “exact” in the common sense of the term, that is to say, pertaining to materialistic science. Students of the occult do not delight laboring upon a science whose basic laws are already known.
The occultists of the twentieth century, however, draw upon an ancient inspiration. They recognize that their forerunners of the nineteenth and eighteenth centuries were influenced by older traditions and may have had access to records and traditions that are now obscure. The recovery of these is, perhaps, the great question of modern occultism. But apart from this, modern occultism strains towards mysticism. It ignores ceremony and exalts the spiritual. (See also Gnosticism; Neoplaton-nism)
Sources:
Hall, Manly P. An Encyclopedia Outline of Masonic, Hermetic, Qabalistic and Rosicrucian Symbolical Philosophy. Los Angeles:
Philosophical Research Society, 1928.
Hartmann, Franz. Magie White and Black: or, The Science of Finite and Infinite Life. London: George Redway, 1886. Reprint, Masterlinck, Maurice. The Secret Great. London: Methuen, Shirley, Ralph. Occultists & Mystics of All Ages. London: Will-
Waite, Arthur E. The Brotherhood of the Holy Cross. London:
William Rider, 1924. Reprint, New York: University Books, 1961.
———. The Life of Louis Claude de Saint-Martin: The Unknown Philosopher. London: Philip Wibby, 1901. Reprinted as The Unknown Philosopher: The Life of Louis Claude de Saint-Martin.
Blauvelt, N.Y.: Rudolf Steiner, 1970.
———. The Secret Tradition in Alchemy. Kegan Paul, London,
———. The Secret Tradition in Freemasonry. London, Rider, Yarker, John. The Avenaco Schools: A Review of Their Origin and Tait, 1909.
Secret Words
According to Christian folklore, Christ communicated certain words relating to the Eucharist to Joseph of Arimathea, who was described as a secret disciple in John 19:38, and these words were committed orally from keeper to keeper of the Holy Grail. In Robert de Borron’s (ca. 1170–1212) metrical ro-niture, people of Arimathea; material power is added to the spirituall efficacy of these words, and whoever could acquire and retain them had a mysterious power over all around him, could not suffer by evil judgments, could not be deprived of his right, and need not fear the result of battle, provided his cause was good.
The words were the secret of the Grail and were either incommunicable in writing or were written only in the Book of the Grail, which, de Borron implied, was itself written by Joseph of Arimathea. These words are the chief mystery of the Lesser Holy Grail, as the prose version of de Borron’s poem is called. They were most probably a form of eucharistic consecration, and there is evidence that the Celtic church, following the example of the Eastern Church, used them in addition to the usual consecration as practiced in the Latin Church, which is merely a repetition of the New Testament account of the Lord’s Supper. The separate clause they are supposed to have formed was called Epiclesis and consisted of an invocation of the Holy Ghost.
De Borron’s account also ties the Grail to Glastonbury, a borough in England that had also been identified with King Arthur by the reported discovery of his body and that of his queen, Guenevere. According to de Borron, the Grail was to be conveyed to the Far West to the veils of “Avaron” (i.e., “Avalon,” i.e., Somerset).
Sources:
Furnivall, J. F., ed. The History of the Holy Grail . . . from the French prose of Sires R. de Borron. London: Early English Text Society, 1874.
Lacy, Norris J. The Arthurian Encyclopedia. New York: Far-Loomis, Roger Sherman. The Grail: From Celtic Myth to Chris-Waite, Arthur E. The Holy Grail; The Collected Quest in the Arthurian Literature. London: Rider, 1953. Reprint, New York:
Weston, Jessie L. The Quest of the Holy Grail. London: G. Bell, Sedona
During the last quarter of the twentieth century, Sedona, Arizona, a small city south of Flagstaff, emerged as a center of the New Age Movement, and in the 1990s, as the New Age waned, it has become a major center of the successive focus upon ascension and human transformation. Sedona has been touted as a remnant of the ancient mythical continent of Lemuria, and contemporary psychics have claimed that it is the center of various energy vortexes that make it a place especially accommodating to psychic/spiritual awakening and channels work.
Sedona’s present role as a metaphysical center can be traced to the late 1950s when Mary Lou Keller moved to the area and opened the Sedona Church of Light. The church became a center for disseminating metaphysical teachings both by Weller and the many outside speakers who came to Sedona. She was joined in the early 1960s by Evangeline and Carmen Van Pollen, two teachers who led the Ruby Focus of Magnificent Consummation, an independent “I AM” group. The Van Polens operated as messengers of the ascended masters, much as had Guy W. Ballard in the 1930s, and their work continues under the name Rainbow Focus.
As the New Age Movement began to identify different significant locations as power spots, places where the Earth’s configuration creates a spiritual energy vortex, Sedona was touted as such a location. As the image of Sedona developed, New Age writer/publisher Dick Sutphen joined the chorus of Sedona supporters and in 1986 published a new book, Sedona Psychic Energy Vortexes. He built his discussion both upon the ancient designation of sacred spaces by Native Americans and the more modern mapping of the lines of magnetic forces on the earth’s surface. The area around Flagstaff has been noted as an area of deviation from the expected pattern of the Earth’s magnetic field. Sutphen argued that Sedona is a sight at which several vortexes, peculiar places where energy is emitted on the Earth’s surface, are located. He identified these particular locations (while offering practical advice on visiting the more remote spots that require hiking through the snake-infested countryside). He also explained the power vortexes on the Earth as similar to acupuncture points on the human body. Others tied Sedona to UFO activity.
During the 1990s, many holistic healers and channelers settled in Sedona, while others visit regularly. Around 1989, Emergence—a Journal for the Golden Age began to feature the people, organizations, and events in the larger New Age community of Sedona. In the mid-1990s, renamed Sedona: Journal of Emergence, it became the voice of the new generation of channelers across North America and around the world, and has established Sedona as the vocal center of the post-New Age vision of the ascended life. Light Technology Publishing also publishes and distributes a wide range of channeled material both from the Sedona channels and other like-minded channels around the world.

Sources:

Sedona Journal of Emergence
Sedona Journal of Emergence is one of the most important expressions of the post-New Age spirituality as it has become focused in the channeling activity of a group of channelers who have emerged to prominence in the 1990s. The monthly publication began as a local networking magazine serving the Sedona, Arizona, community which became known in the 1980s as a peculiar spot favoring psychic and spiritual activity. Over the decade it transformed into a large monthly magazine circulated nationally and throughout the English-speaking world.

Each issue of Sedona is built around excerpts of channeled material produced by a spectrum of individuals, a number of whom reside in the Sedona area, though increasingly channelers from around the world contribute material. Occasionally, this material is grouped around particular themes to which a variety of channeled entities have spoken. While these entities have their differences, they tend to speak out of the common worldview supplied by the Western Esoteric tradition as exemplified in Theosophy. In the post-New Age environment, the two strains of channeling work, that based primarily on ascended masters and that with extraterrestrials, has merged and many channelers have both members of the spiritual hierarchy and space beings speaking through them. Particularly prominent is Robert Shapiro, who channels Zoosh, Isis, and other entities. These entities are listed along with the magazine staff as the magazine’s “Interdimensional Board of Directors.”

Along with the channeled material, Sedona also carries a monthly astrology column and a column by New Thought metaphysician Louise Hay. There is relatively little space devoted to advertising, most of which advertises the counseling sessions and books by the channelers. In the late 1990s Sedona nurtured the development of an Australia/New Zealand edition, which after a year-and-a-half, in 1999, became Elohim. Elohim continues as a sister publication following the format of Sedona.

Sources:

The Seekers
A spiritual healing organization founded in London in 1926 by C. A. Simpson, formerly a New Zealand electrical engineer, who gave up his profession to establish this center under the direction of the spirit guide “Dr. Lascelles.” The center was originally named The Guild of Spiritual Healing. Many cures were reported in cases generally classed as incurable. Associated Harmony Prayer Circles throughout Britain provided absent healing treatment. In 1953, the Seekers center moved to larger premises at West Malling, Kent, where over 5,000 members were linked in prayer circles. Last known address: Seekers Trust, The Close, Addington Park, West Malling, Kent, England.

The Seer

The Seer (Journal)
Early twentieth-century monthly review of occult and psychic sciences, founded 1928, published in Nice, France, and later in Carthage, Tunisia. It was edited by Francis Rolt Wheleer. Contributors included Ernesto Bozzano, Lewis Spence, and Jollivet Castelot.

Seer (or Seeress)
A traditional term for a person who manifests clairvoyance or precognition. In ancient Israel the term was replaced by “judge.” The judges used their psychic abilities to guide the twelve tribes from the time of the settlement in Palestine until the establishment of the monarchy under Saul (I Samuel 9:9). In Scotland it is equated with the possession of second sight.

“Seer” (Software)
An astrology software program that purportedly indicates from their star signs how well business partners will perform with each other. From the proposed partners’ date and place of birth, the program calculates the planetary conjunction believed to determine personal characteristics and behavior patterns. An index of business compatibility is then generated using a scale from 0 to 30. “Seer” was marketed by British-born Peter Mackenzie through the Triangle Group in California, and customers are said to have included Pizza Hut and Motorola. The package was also tested on a KOBATelevision program.

Seik Kasso
Burmese evil spirits inhabiting trees. (See MYANMAR)

Seiktha
A Burmese evil spirit. (See MYANMAR)

Self-Realization Fellowship
An early American Hindu organization founded in 1920 as the Yogoda Satsang Society by Swami Paramahansa Yogananda. Yogananda was the inheritor of a tradition of kriya yoga, which had been revived in the 1860s by Mahavatar Babaji, a guru who lived in the foothills of the Himalayas and was believed to be an incarnation of Shiva, the Hindu deity. The lineage was passed to Swami Sri Yukteswar, who passed it to Yogananda.

Yogananda traveled to Boston in 1920 for the tricentennial anniversary of the Pilgrims’ landing, sponsored by the International Congress of Religious Liberals, and decided to stay in the United States, one of the few Hindu teachers to settle in the country before immigration from India was stopped in 1924. He moved the headquarters to California in 1925. He wrote several books and began a magazine, East-West (later Self-Realization). He also developed a set of correspondence lessons, which facilitated the spread of the movement to all parts of the country.
The Self-Realization Fellowship was incorporated in 1935. As its name implies, it emphasizes the attainment of and meditation, the details of which are taught only to students of the Self-Realization Fellowship Lessons.

The fellowship also emphasizes what it sees as the essential unity of Eastern and Western spiritual teachings. To that end, its teachers often provide interpretations of parallel passages in the Christian New Testament and the Hindu Bhagavad Gita.

Following Yogananda’s death in 1935, Swami Rajaj Jnanakanada (James J. Lynn) led the organization for three years but died in 1955. He was succeeded by Sri Daya Mata, who has led the organization since. SRF has more than 500 meditation centers in 36 countries, including twelve temples and ashram centers: nine in California and one each in Arizona, Virginia, and Nurernburg, Germany.

Yogananda’s Autobiography of a Yogi, first issued in 1946, has proved to be a widely popular text and has influenced people far beyond the Self-Realization Fellowship. Among the more famous members of the fellowship is W. Y. Evans-Wentz, scholar of Eastern mysticism and author of various books dealing with Tibetan and yoga texts. Website: http://www.yogananda-srf.org/

Sources:

The Semites

This entry on the Semites applies to the more ancient divisions of the race, such as the Babylonians and Assyrians, and the Hebrews in Biblical times. For later Semitic occultism, see Arabs and Cabala.

In ancient Babylonia and Chaldea, magic was a department of priestly activity. In Mesopotamia a sect of priests named the Asipu were set apart for the practice of magic, which in their case probably consisted of hypnotism, the casting out of demons, the banishing of troublesome spirits and so forth.

The caste of priests called the Baru consulted the oracles on the future by inspecting the entrails of animals, the flight of birds, “the observation of oil in water, the secret of Anu, Bel, and Ea, the tablet of the gods, the sacket of leather of the oracles of the heavens and earth, the wand of cedar dear to the great gods.”

These priests of Baru and Asipu wore clothing peculiar to their rank, which they changed frequently during the ceremonies in which they took part. In ancient tablets we find kings making frequent inquiries about the future through these priestly castes: in a tablet of Sippar, we find treated the royal Semachrib seeking through the Baru the causes of his father’s violent death. The Asipu were exorcists, who removed taboos and laid ghosts. An Asipu’s functions are set forth in the following incantatory poem:

[The man] of Ea am I,
The messenger of Marduk am I,
My spell is the spell of Ea,
My incantation is the incantation of Marduk,
The circle of Ea is in my hand,
The tamarisk, the powerful weapon of Anu,
In my hand I hold,
The date-pathe, mighty in decision,
In my hand I hold.
He that stilleth all to rest, that pacifieth all,
By whose incantation everything is at peace,
He is the great Lord Ea,
Stilling all to rest, and pacifying all,
By whose incantation everything is at peace.
When I draw nigh unto the sick man
All shall be assuaged.
I am the magician born of Eridu,
Begotten in Eridu and Subiri.
When I draw nigh unto the sick man
May Ea, King of the Deep, to see, . . .
I, the magician, am thy slave.
March thou on my right hand,
Assist [me] on my left,
Add thy pure spell to mine,
Add thy pure voice to mine,
Vouchsafe (to me) pure words,
Make fortunate the utterances of my mouth,
Ordain that my decisions be happy,
Let me be blessed where’er I tread,
Let the man whom I [now] touch be blessed.
Before me may lucky thoughts be spoken,
After me may a lucky finger be pointed.
Oh that thou wert my guardian genius,
And my guardian spirit!
O God that blesseth, Marduk,
Let me be blessed, where’er my path may be!
Thy power shall god and man proclaim;
This man shall do thy service,
And I too, the magician thy slave.
Unto the house on entering..., . . .
Samas is before me,
Sin [is] behind [me],
Nergal [is] at (my) right hand,
Ninib [is] at my left hand;
When I draw nigh unto the sick man,
When I lay my hand on the head of the sick man,
May a kindly Spirit, a kindly Guardian, stand at my side.
The third caste was the Zuwwaru, and its members sang or chanted certain ceremonies.

The lower ranks of sorcery were represented by the Kassopt and Kassopta, the wizard and witch, who, as elsewhere, practiced black magic and were fiercely combated by the priest-magician caste. In the code of Hammurabi there was a stringent law against the professors of black magic:

If a man has charged a man with sorcery and has not justified himself, he who is charged with sorcery shall go to the river, he shall plunge into the river, and if the river overcome him, he who accused him shall take to himself his house. If the river makes that man to be innocent, and he be saved, he who accused him shall be put to death.

He who plunged into the river shall take to himself the house of him who accused him. This recalls the water test for a witch in the seventeenth century: if she sank when thrown in a pond, she was innocent, but if she floated, she was a witch.

Another series of tablets dealt with the black magician and the witch, who were represented as roaming the streets, entering houses, and prowling through towns, stealing the love of men, and withering the beauty of women. The exorcist made an image of the witch and he called upon the fire-god to burn it. He seized the witch’s mouth, tongue, eyes, feet, and other members and prayed that sin would cast her into an abyss of water and fire, and that her face would grow yellow and her tongue salt, that the words of evil she had spoken be poured out like talcows, and that the magic she was working be crumbled like salt.

The tablets abound in magical matter, and in them we have a record of the actual wizardry in vogue at the time they were written, which runs at least from the seventh century until the time when cuneiform inscription ceased to be used.

Chaldean magic was renowned throughout the world, especially for its astrology. The book of Isaiah states: "Let now the astrologers, star-gazers, monthly prognosticators, stand up and save thee from the things that shall come upon thee." In the book of Daniel, magicians are called Chaldeans, and even in modern times occultists have praised Chaldean magi. The Greek geographer Strabo and the Roman rhetorician Aelian attested to Chaldean knowledge of astrology, and it is supposed to have been the Chaldean magician Ethanes who introduced his science into Greece, which he entered with Xerxes.

The great library of Assurbanipal, king of Assyria, who died in 626 B.C.E., affords first-hand knowledge of Assyrian magic. Assurbanipal gathered together numerous volumes from the cities of Babylonia, stored them in his great library at Nineveh, and had them copied and translated. In fact, letters have been discovered from Assurbanipal to some of his officials, giving instructions for the copying of certain incantations. Many grimoires also come from Babylonia, written during the later empire, the best known of which are the series entitled Makkal (burning), Utubki lnavnati (evil spirits), Labartu (hag-demon), and Nis kati (raising of the hand).

There are also many ceremonial texts available that throw considerable light on magical practice. The Makkal, for example, contains eight tablets of incantations, and spells against wizards and witches—the general idea running through it being to instruct the bewitched person how to manufacture figures of his enemies and thus destroy them.

The practice of incantation with the exorcism of evil spirits enumerates demons, goblins, and ghosts, and consists of at least sixteen tablets. They were for the exorcist's use in driving devils out of possessed people. This was to be accomplished by invoking the aid of the gods, so that the demons might be placed under a divine taboo. The demon who possessed the unfortunate victim had to be described in the most minute manner.

The series dealing with the labartu or hag-demon, a kind of female devil who delighted in attacking children, gave directions for making a figure of the labartu and the incantations to be repeated over it. The magician and philosopher appear to have worked together in Assyria, for medical men constantly used incantations to drive out demons, and incantations were often associated with prescriptions. Medical magic indeed appears to have been of much the same sort as we find among the Native Americans.

The doctrine of the “Incommunicable Name” was established among the early Semites, as among the Egyptians. It related to the secret name of a god that, when discovered, gave the speaker complete power over him by its mere utterance. Knowing the name or inscription of the person or demon against whom the magician directed his charm was also essential to success. Drugs were originally ascribed the power vouchsafed by the gods for the welfare of mankind and were supposed to aid greatly in exorcism.

In Assyrian sorcery, Ea and Marduk were the most powerful gods, Marduk being an intermediary between human beings and their father, Ea; indeed the legend of Marduk going to his father for advice was commonly repeated in incantations. When working magic against an individual it was necessary to have something belonging to him or her—clippings of hair, or fingernails if possible. The possessed person was usually washed, the principle of cleansing probably underlying this ceremony. An incantation called the Incantation of Eridu was often prescribed, and this must have related to some such cleansing, for Eridu was the Home of Ea, the Sea-god.

A formula for exorcising or washing away a demon named Rabesu stated that the patient was to be sprinkled with clean water seven times. Of all water seven was so sacred as that on the Euphrates river, and its water was frequently used for charms and exorcisms.

Fumigation with a censor was also employed by the Assyrians for exorcism, but the kinship of the.offering the censor from the attack of fiends by being placed in the middle of an enchanted circle of flour, through which it was thought no spirit could break. Wearing the glands from the mouth of a fish was also a charm against possession. In making a magic circle, the sorcerer usually formed seven little winged figures to set before the god Nergal, blessing them with a long spell that stated he had completed the usurta or magic circle with a sprinkling of holy water, and the knowledge of the magical properties of substances—the ancient warlock was well fitted for his trade. He was then capable of defying hostile demons or summoning friendly spirits, of driving out disease or casting spells, of making amulets to guard the credulous who came to him. Furthermore, he had a certain stock-in-trade of tricks which were a steady source of revenues.

"Armed with all these things—the word of power, the acquisition of some part of the enemy, the use of the magic circle and holy water, and the knowledge of the magical properties of substances—the ancient warlock was well fitted for his trade. He was then capable of defying hostile demons or summoning friendly spirits, of driving out disease or casting spells, of making amulets to guard the credulous who came to him. Furthermore, he had a certain stock-in-trade of tricks which were a steady source of revenues.

Lovesick youths and maidens always hoped for some result from his philtres or love-charms; at the demand of jealousy, he was ever ready to put hatred between husband and wife, and for such as had not the pluck or skill even to use a dagger on a dark night, his little effigies, pierced with pins, would bring death to a rival. He was at once a physician and wonder-worker for such as would pay him fee.

Among the more modern Semites magic is greatly in vogue in many forms, some of them quite familiar to Europeans: indeed we find the Arabian Nights edited by Lane, a story of old women riding on a broom-stick. Among Mahommedans the wizard is thought to deserve death by reason of the fact that he is an unbeliever. Witches are fairly common in Arabic lore, and we usually find them figuring as sellers of potions and philtres. . . . In Arab folk tales the maghru di is the sorcerer who has converse with demons, and we find many such in the Old and New Testaments, as well as diviners and other practitioners of the occult arts. In the Sanhedrin, Rabbi Akiba defines an enchanter as one who calculates the times and hours, and other rabbis state that an enchanter is he who gives life when his bread drops from his mouth, or if he drops the stick that supports him from his hand, or if his son calls after him, or a crow crosses in his hearing, or a deer crosses his path, or he sees a serpent at his right hand, or a fox at his feet.

The Arabs used to believe that magic would not work while he that employs it was asleep. In this belief system it is possible to overreach Satan himself, and many Arabic tales exist in which men of wisdom and cunning have succeeded in accomplishing this. The Devil Iblis once sent his son to an assembly of honorable people with a flint stone, and told him to have the stone woven. He came in and said, "My father sends his peace, and wishes to have the flint stone woven." A man with a goat's beard said, "Tell your father to have it spun, and then we will weave it."
The son went back, and Iblis was very angry and told his son never to make any suggestion when a goat-bearded man was present, "for he is more devilish than we." Curiously enough, the rabbi Joshua ben Hananiah made a similar request in a contest against the wise men of Athens, who required him to sew together the fragments of a broken millstone. He asked in reply for a few threads made of the fiber of the stone. The good folk of Mosul, too, always prided themselves on a ready wit against the Devil. Once upon a time, the devil Iblis came to Mosul and found a man planting onions. They fell to talking, and in their fellowship agreed to divide the produce of the garden. On the day when the onions were ready, the partners went to their vegetable patch and the man said, "Master, wilt thou take as thy half that which is above ground or that which is below?"

The Devil saw the green shoots of the onions sprouting high and carried these off as his share, leaving the gardener chuckling over his bargain. But when wheat time came round, the Devil looked over the land and complained that he had made nothing out of their previous compact. "This time," he said, "we will divide differently, and thou shalt take the tops," and so the bargain fell to the gardner's advantage again. When they visited the land together when the corn was ripe, the man reaped the field and took away the ears, leaving the Devil stubbing up the roots. After he had been digging for a month, he began to realize his error and went to the man, who was cheerily threshing his portion.

"This is a paltry quibble," said Iblis, "thou hast cozened me this twice." "‘Nay," said the former, "I gave thee thry desire, and furthermore, thou didst not thresh out thine onion-tops, as I am doing this." So it was a hopeful Devil that went away to beat the dry onion-stalks in vain. Iblis left Mosul sullenly, stalking away in frustrated anger, stopping once in a while to shake his hand against so crafty a town. "Cursed be he, ye tricksters! who can outmatch devilly like yours?"

"In modern times in the East," stated R. C. Thompson, "from Morocco to Mesopotamia, books of magic are by no means rare, and manuscripts in Arabic, Hebrew, Gershuni, and Syriac can frequently be bought, all dealing with some form of magic or popular medicine. In Suakin in the Soudan I was offered a printed book of astrology in Arabic illustrated by the most grotesque and bizarre woodcuts of the signs of the Zodiac, the blocks for which seem to have done duty in other places. Such books existed in manuscript in ancient days, as is vouched for by the story of the Sibylline books or the passage in Acts XIX, 19; ‘Not a few of them that practised curious arts brought their books together, and burned them in the sight of all.’"

"It is curious to find the charm for raising hatred was practised similarly the same among the Semites and the peoples of Hungary and the Balkan States—that is, through the agency of the egg of a black hen.

"We find, too, many minor sorceries the same among the Semites as among European races. To be invisible was on attainment much sought after, and it was thought that if one wore a ring of copper and iron engraved with certain magic signs this result would be secured. The heart of a black cat, dried and steeped in honey, was also believed to be effective.

(For various instances of potent enchantments, see Solomon.)

Sympathetic magic was often resorted to by the Arabic witch and wizard, just as it was among the ancient Hebrews and Assyrians. The great repertory of Semitic occultism is the Kabala, but here the occult has been transmuted into Hebrew mysticism.

Sources:

Sensitive

The term "sensitive," often interchangeable with "psychic," refers to a person with psychic powers, but eschews communication with the dead. A sensitive is thus distinguished from the "medium," or "channel." A medium is usually also a sensitive. According to Spiritualism, a medium is not necessarily a sensitive but may be simply an instrument for spirit communication. (It must be remembered that such a distinction was made in the days in which may "mediums" accepted by the movement were frauds. This distinction explained why they made no pretense of being "psychic" except in the seance room.)

Sensitive ordinarily believe that their psychic abilities are a natural ability that they possess to a greater degree than most, either through natural endowment or a process of psychic development. Many believe in reincarnation, a belief that is often incompatible with Spiritualist contact with the dead, and they may explain many events (such as seeing an apparition) that Spiritualists ascribe to spirit agency to memories from previous lives. Sensitive may specialize in one form of psychic ability, be it psychometry, precognition, telepathy, or clairvoyance. Many emerge as healers with some ability in psychokinesis.

During the nineteenth century, prior to the rise of Spiritualism, German scientist Baron Karl von Reichenbach conducted numerous experiments with "sensitive" in order to validate his concept of a mysterious vital force in nature which he termed "od" or "odyle." These individuals, drawn from all walks of life, were selected on the basis of specific sensitive reactions—feelings of pleasant coolness or alternatively disagreeable feelings in relation to other people or to metals, as well as reactions to colors and foods.

Sources:

Sensory Deprivation

The process of psychic development generally entails learning to refocus attention from the outer world of sensory input and directing attention inward in some form. One popular form is meditation, in which the person consciously withdraws attention from sensory data. Various attempts to readjust the environment to reduce sensory input have been made. Lights can be dimmed, a quiet location selected, a comfortable posture assumed, and breathing regulated. The heightened blocking of normal sensory input has been found to result in hallucinations and vivid fantasies. Such a heightened blockage can be attained by placing a person in a sensory neutral environment. In the Ganzfeld setting, the eyes and ears are covered, and a sensory neutral environment is created with blue light and white noise.

An even more intense experience is provided by the isolation tank, in which an individual can float in water at a controlled temperature in a soundproof, lightproof chamber. While such experiments may be exhausting and affect mental process in an unstable individual, they can throw light on personality disorders and apparent paranormal experiences. An apparatus called the Witches’ Cradle, devised by Robert E. L. Masters and Jean Houston of the Foundation for Mind Research, has been developed to study heightened sensory deprivation.

Sources:
“Sepharial”

Pseudonym of British astrologer and occult author Walter Gorn Old (1864–1929).

Serios, Ted (1918– )

A former Chicago bellhop, born November 27, 1918, with a claimed ability to project photographic images onto camera film by staring into the lens of a Polaroid camera. He sometimes used a piece of rolled cardboard to look into the camera lens at the moment the picture was taken. This “gizmo,” as he called it, tended to arouse suspicions of fraud, although there was no evidence that it was a device for trickery. Serios also produced images using a camera without a lens.

A report of Serios’s strange talent by Pauline Oehler of the Illinois Society for Psychic Research was published in Fate magazine. Curtis Fuller, proprietor of Fate, sent a copy of the article to parapsychologist Jule Eisenbud, and as a result Eisenbud conducted an extensive investigation of Serios’s phenomena in 1964, the results of which were published in The World of Ted Serios: “Thoughtographic.” Studies of an Extraordinary Mind (1966). Eisenbud found the phenomena as erratic as Serios himself, but probably genuine.

Critics charged fraud and James Randi claimed to have been able to reproduce pictures like Serios’s by use of a “gizmo-like” device. While Randi had suggested a means by which the pictures could be reproduced, at least those in which Serios held the camera in his hand and used the cardboard device, he did not explain how the pictures were produced when the camera was at some distance. Among some of the extraordinary images produced by Serios with a Polaroid camera were pictures of Mariner IV and Russian Vostok rockets. Many pictures produced by Serios are ambiguous, in soft focus, or too vague to identify. Some contained mistakes which would have been absent from a picture of an object that had merely been reproduced via the “gizmo.”

At one point, a rumor circulated that Serios had confessed to fraud, a fact that both Eisenbud and Serios staunchly denied. His work has faded into the shadow created by the confession of Masaki Kiyota to having faked similar effects after he had produced via the “gizmo.”

Sources:

Serling, Rod (1924–1975)

Writer, dramatist, television producer, and creator of the classic science fiction/horror series, Twilight Zone. He was born in Syracuse, New York, on December 25, 1924. During World War II, he served with the paratroopers, and after the war he studied at Antioch College (B.A., 1950), but even before completing his degree he had become a writer for radio (beginning in 1946) and television (beginning in 1948). His plays were produced on a variety of popular drama shows such as the Kraft Theatre, Studio One, U.S. Steel Hour, Playhouse 90, Suspense, and Danger. He later became writer-producer for The Twilight Zone, and Rod Serling’s Night Gallery, and the narrator for In Search of Ancient Astronauts. He received Emmy awards for best teleplay writing in 1955–57, 1959–61, and 1963–64 and numerous additional awards for his teleplay writing. He also authored a number of books. He died on June 28, 1975.

Sources:

Servadio, Emilio (1904–1995)

Italian psychoanalyst, author, and co-founder in 1937 of the Societa Italiana Di Parapsychologia (the Italian Society for Psychic Research, now Italian Society for Parapsychology). He was born on August 14, 1904, in Genoa, Italy. He studied at Genoa University (LL.D., 1926). In private practice for much of his life, he took special interest in the psychodynamic and psychoanalytic aspects of ESP. In 1932 he investigated the phenomena of the medium Pasquale Ero, and in 1957 he investigated the miraculous healers in Lucania, South Italy.

Highlighting his outstanding career, he was named president of the Psychoanalytic Center of Rome in 1962, and he was elected to terms as vice president of the Italian Society for Parapsychology (1955–56) and vice president of Italian Psychoanalytic Society (1955–56, 1958–60). He was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association and in 1982 was elected president of the Parapsychological Association of Italy. He was chairman of the International Committee for the Study of Methods in Parapsychology and a subeditor and contributor to the Encyclopedia Italiana and various scholarly and scientific journals. He is author of La Ricerca Psichica (Psychical Research, 1930, 1946), and contributed to Proceedings of an International Conference on Methodology in Psi Research: Psi Favorable States of Consciousness edited by Roberto Cavanna (Parapsychology Foundation, 1970) and Proceedings of an International Conference: Psi Factors in Creativity edited by Allan Angoff and Betty Shapin (Parapsychology Foundation, 1970).

Servadio died January 18, 1995.
Servants of Awareness

The Servants of Awareness was one of several organizations that formed in response to the turbulence in the Organization of Awareness (now Cosmic Awareness Communications) that arose after the death of William Ralph Duhé in 1967. Since the Organization of Awareness’s founding, Duhé had served as the channel for messages from “Cosmic Awareness,” upon which the group’s teachings were based. Servants of Awareness was formed by David E. Worcester in Seattle, Washington. It gained some support through the 1970s but has since disappeared.

Servants of the Light (SOL)

The Servants of the Light is a contemporary ritual magic group founded by William E. Butler (1898–1978) in early 1963. Butler had studied with Dion Fortune and the Society of the Inner Light, which he founded and had gone on to establish his own direct contact with the higher magical planes. In the years following Dion Fortune’s death, Butler wrote several basic magical textbooks, several of which became quite popular in occult circles for their clarity and readability: Magic: Its Ritual, Power, and Work (1952), The Magician: His Training and Work (1959), and Apprenticed to Magic (1962).

In 1965, along with fellow society member Gareth Knight, he left the society and founded the Helios Book Service and a new correspondence course of study in magic, the Helios Course, similar to that taught by Dion Fortune. In 1972, Knight departed and the following year founded a new magical group. Butler continued to offer the Helios Course, which evolved into the curriculum of the Servants of the Light School of Occult Science. He was joined in this endeavor by Michael and Delores Ashcroft-Nowicki. Together they built the school into an international training instrument with students in more than 20 countries.

Delores Ashcroft-Nowicki eventually came into direct contact with the same inner plane teacher that Butler had contacted. She decided to dedicate her life to the service of this inner plane adept. She was appointed to succeed Butler as the director of studies for the school and Michael was named the school’s guardian. In the decades since assuming leadership of the school, as the school has expanded, Delores Ashcroft-Nowicki has emerged as a teacher in her own right and has authored a number of books, both beginning and advanced.

The Servants of the Light offers a 50-lesson correspondence course in magic (with each lesson taking approximately one month). The content of the course is drawn from the Kabbalah, the tarot, and the Arthurian myths. It supplies a basic understanding of the esoteric tradition and the fundamentals of magical practice. Students study in their own home but are assigned a personal teacher to whom they may direct questions and from whom they can receive guidance. The school is not sectarian and teaches a system of magic that is compatible with a variety of religious backgrounds.

As of the beginning of the new millennium, the school reports some 2,600 students in 23 countries. Contact may be made through the international headquarters at P.O. Box 215, St Helier, Jersey, Channel Islands, Great Britain JE4 9SD. An Internet site is found at http://www.servantsofthelight.org/.

Sources:

Servants of the Star and the Snake

The Servants of the Star and the Snake (SSS), founded in 1995, grew out of the remnants of the Ordo Templi Baphometis (OTB), a thelemic magical order which had functioned earlier in the decade, and it retains the thelemic character of the OTB. SSS exists as a free association of magical practitioners, members variously defining themselves as ceremonial magicians, shamans, witches, neopagans, sorcerers, or tantriks. Having jettisoned the hierarchical structures and degree systems of what is considered the Old Aeon, the magicians of the SSS come together for mutual sharing, learning, and networking. There are no leaders, no holy books, and no formal initiations; however, the group does have a special respect for the teachings of the late Sri Gurudeva Mahendrabath Paramahamsa, known to his followers as Dadaji, the cofounder of AMOOKOS (the Arcane, Magikal Order of the Knights of Shambhala) and the late Alan Watts.

The association is overseen by an administrator-general, a revolving office; the current administrator-general of the SSS is known by his magical name, Frater Evore. SSS may be contacted at P.O. Box 642, Welasco, TX 78599-0642. It publishes a periodical, Lila. Closely associated is the American Gnostic Church, founded in 1985, headed by the Rev. James M. Martin. The church serves as an umbrella organization for several closely related spiritual movements, each claiming some form of illumination by stellar-gnosis. Through it, the SSS is closely related to the Order of Napumssaks in the West (ON), a tantrick Order for non-heterosexuals. The ON exists through an outer order for both males and females, though its inner order, the Cultus Skanda-Kartikeya (CS-K), is open only to males. The Tantra (from Hinduism) and Thelema (the magical system developed by Aleister Crowley) systems have a common interest in sex magic, though traditionally they approach sexuality from different perspectives.

The SSS has a webpage at http://www.wild.au/ss/index.html.

Sources:

Servier, Jean H(enri) (1918— )

Professor of ethnology who has written on parapsychology. He was born on November 2, 1918, in Constantine, Algeria. He moved to France and studied at the Sorbonne. After graduation he became a professor of sociology and ethnology at the University of Montpellier, France. He was a member of Société des Africanistes. In addition to his studies in ethnology and anthroplogy, Servier has taken special interest in clairvoyance, mediums and, the ethnological aspects of the history of magic.

Sources:

“Seth”

Entity channeled through the medium Jane Roberts, the public name of Jane Butts (1929–1984). The communications from Seth began in 1963, when Jane and her husband Robert...
Butts first experimented with an ouija board. Later, Jane went into a trance, and when "Seth" spoke through her, Jane's voice and features changed character.

The "Seth" material comprises a mass of teachings in manuscript and on tape recordings, much of which has been edited and issued in a series of books. The philosophy presented is coherent and continuous, covering teachings on dreams, health, reincarnation, astral projection, and the relationship of human beings to their creator. The teachings are comprehensive, dealing with "aspect psychology" (different levels of awareness and grades of reality in relation to mobile consciousness), the nature of the soul, death, and after-death experiences.

In a communication titled "The Unknown Reality," "Seth" stated:

"The individual self must become aware of far more reality, it must allow its identity to expand to include previously unconscious knowledge. Your species is in a time of change—you are now poised on the threshold from which the race can go many ways. Potentials within the body's mechanisms, not as yet used, can immeasurably enrich the race and bring it to levels of spiritual, psychic, and physical fulfillment. But if some changes are not made, the race will not endure. . . . I am suggesting ways in which the unknown reality can become a known one."

Sources:

Sethos (ca. 12th century C.E.)

According to M. A. Del Rio (1561–1608), Sethos was a diviner, who was deprived of his sight by the Emperor Manuel because of his addiction to magic. It is said that the emperor Andronicus Comnenus, cousin of Manuel, had Sethos divine by hydromancy an answer to the question of who was to succeed him. The spirit gave the letters "S I" in reply; and on being asked when, said before the feast of the exaltation of the Cross. This prediction was fulfilled, for before the date mentioned, the wife and child of Nefer-ka-Ptah, he solemnly restored their lives to Nefer-ka-Ptah. In the hope of atoning to some extent for his sin he journeyed to Koptos, and finding the graves of the wife and child of Nefer-ka-Ptah, he solemnly restored their mummies to the tomb of the father and husband, carefully closing the tomb he had so sacrilegiously disturbed.

"At length the prince recognized and repented of the sacrilege he had committed in carrying off the book, and brought it back to Nefer-ka-Ptah. In the hope of atoning to some extent for his sin he journeyed to Koptos, and finding the graves of the wife and child of Nefer-ka-Ptah, he solemnly restored their mummies to the tomb of the father and husband, carefully closing the tomb he had so sacrilegiously disturbed.

"The second text, edited two years ago by Griffith from a London papyrus, is also genuinely Egyptian in its details. Three magic tales, interwoven one with another, are brought into connection with Saosiri, the supernaturally born son of Setna.

"In the first, Saosiri, who was greatly Setna's superior in the arts of magic, led his father down into the underworld. They penetrated into the judgment-hall of Osiris, where the sights they saw convinced Setna that a glorious future awaited the poor man who should cleave to righteousness, while he who led an evil life on earth, though rich and powerful, must expect a terrible doom. Saosiri next succeeded in saving his father, and with him all Egypt, from great difficulty by reading without breaking the seal a closed letter brought by an Egyptian magician, whom he thus forced to recognize the superior power of Egypt.

"The last part of the text tells of a powerful magician once dwelling in Ethiopia who modelled in wax a litter with four bearers to whom he gave his life. He sent them to Egypt, and at his command they sought out Pharaoh in his palace, carried him off to Ethiopia, and, after giving him five hundred blows with a cudgel, conveyed him during the same night back to Memphis. Next morning the king displayed the wounds on his back to his courtiers, one of whom, Horus by name, was sufficiently skilled in the use of amulets to ward off by their means any immediate repetition of the outrage.

"Horus then set forth to bring from Hermopolis, the all powerful magic book of the god Thoth, and by its aid he succeeded in treating the Ethiopian king as the Ethiopian sorcerer had treated Pharaoh. The foreign magician then hastened to Egypt to engage in a contest with Horus in magic tricks. His skill was shown to be inferior, and in the end he and his mother received permission to return to Ethiopia under a solemn promise not to set foot on Egyptian territory for a space of fifteen hundred years."

Setna, Papyrus of

An ancient papyrus said to have been discovered by Prince Setna Kha-em-ust, son of Rameses II of Egypt, under the head of a mummy in the Necropolis at Memphis. The Egyptologist Alfred G. L. Kuenen stated in his book Popular Literature in Ancient Egypt (1902):

"The first text, which has been known to us since 1867, tells that this prince, being skilled and zealous in the practice of necromancy, was one day exhibiting his acquirements to the learned men of the court, when an old man told him of a magic book containing two spells written by the hand of Thoth himself, the god of wisdom.

"He who repeated the first spell bewitched thereby heaven and earth and the realm of night, the mountains and the depth of the sea; he knew the fowls of the air and every creeping thing; he saw the fishes, for a divine power brought them up out of the depth. He who read the second spell should have power to resume his earthy shape, even though he dwelt in the grave; to see the sun rising in the sky with all the gods and the moon in the form wherein she displays herself.

"Setna inquired where this book was to be found, and learned that it was lying in the tomb of Nefer-ka-Ptah, a son of King Mer-neh-ptah (who is nowhere else named), and that any attempt to take away the book would certainly meet with obstinate resistance. These difficulties did not withhold Setna from the adventure. He entered the tomb of Nefer-ka-Ptah, where he found not only the dead man, but the Ka of his wife Ahuri and their son, though these latter had been buried in Koptos.

"Ahuri told all the trouble that the possession of the book had brought upon her husband and herself, but her tale of woe produced no effect upon the intruder. Setna persisted in his undertaking, and at length, by the help of magic, he gained his end.

"But as in many other tales among many other peoples, success brought no blessing to the man who had disturbed the repose of the dead. Setna fell in love with the daughter of a priest at Memphis, who turned out to be a witch, and took advantage of his intimate connection with her to bring him to ignominy and wretchedness.

"At length the prince recognized and repented of the sacrilege he had committed in carrying off the book, and brought it back to Nefer-ka-Ptah. In the hope of atoning to some extent for his sin he journeyed to Koptos, and finding the graves of the wife and child of Nefer-ka-Ptah, he solemnly restored their mummies to the tomb of the father and husband, carefully closing the tomb he had so sacrilegiously disturbed.

"The second text, edited two years ago by Griffith from a London papyrus, is also genuinely Egyptian in its details. Three magic tales, interwoven one with another, are brought into connection with Saosiri, the supernaturally born son of Setna.

"In the first, Saosiri, who was greatly Setna's superior in the arts of magic, led his father down into the underworld. They penetrated into the judgment-hall of Osiris, where the sights they saw convinced Setna that a glorious future awaited the poor man who should cleave to righteousness, while he who led an evil life on earth, though rich and powerful, must expect a terrible doom. Saosiri next succeeded in saving his father, and with him all Egypt, from great difficulty by reading without breaking the seal a closed letter brought by an Ethiopian magician, whom he thus forced to recognize the superior power of Egypt.

"The last part of the text tells of a powerful magician once dwelling in Ethiopia who modelled in wax a litter with four bearers to whom he gave his life. He sent them to Egypt, and at his command they sought out Pharaoh in his palace, carried him off to Ethiopia, and, after giving him five hundred blows with a cudgel, conveyed him during the same night back to Memphis. Next morning the king displayed the wounds on his back to his courtiers, one of whom, Horus by name, was sufficiently skilled in the use of amulets to ward off by their means any immediate repetition of the outrage.

"Horus then set forth to bring from Hermopolis, the all powerful magic book of the god Thoth, and by its aid he succeeded in treating the Ethiopian king as the Ethiopian sorcerer had treated Pharaoh. The foreign magician then hastened to Egypt to engage in a contest with Horus in magic tricks. His skill was shown to be inferior, and in the end he and his mother received permission to return to Ethiopia under a solemn promise not to set foot on Egyptian territory for a space of fifteen hundred years."

Seton (or Sethon) Alexander (d. ca. 1604)

One of the very few alchemists, reportedly, who succeeded in the great experiment of the transmutation of metals. He was... said to have taken his name from the village of Seton, in the vicinity of Edinburgh, Scotland.

In the year 1601, the crew of a Dutch vessel was wrecked on the coast near Seton's dwelling, and he personally rescued several of them, lodged them in his house, and treated them with great kindness, ultimately sending them back to Holland at his own expense. In the following year, he visited Holland and renewed his acquaintance with at least one of the shipwrecked crew, James Haussen, the pilot, who lived at Arksun.

Haussen, determined to repay Seton for the hospitality he had received in Scotland, entertained him for some time in Haussen house, and to him Seton disclosed the information that he was a master of the art of alchemy and proved his words by performing several transmutations. Haussen could not keep this information to himself and confided it to Venderlinden, a physician of Enkhuysen, and showed him a piece of gold that had been transmuted from lead. Venderlinden's grandson, in turn, showed it to the celebrated author D. G. Morhoff, who wrote a letter concerning it to Langlet du Fresnoy, author of the Histoire de la Philosophie Hermétique (3 vols., 1742).

Seton visited Amsterdam and Rotterdam, traveled by sea to Italy, then went through Switzerland to Germany, accompanied by Wolfgang Dienheim, a professed skeptic of alchemy, whom Seton convinced of the errors of his views at Basel, but before the eyes of several of its principal inhabitants. Dienheim described Seton, and the pen picture he made resembles a typical Scot of the seventeenth century. "Seton," Dienheim said "was short but stout, and high coloured, with a pointed beard, but despite his corpulence, his expression was spiritual and exalted." "He was," added Dienheim, "a native of Molier, in an island of the ocean.

Seton demonstrated several experiments of importance. In one of these the celebrated physician Zwinger himself brought the lead that was to be transmuted. A common crucible was obtained at a goldsmith's, and ordinary sulphur was bought on the road to the house where the experiment was to take place. Seton handled none of these materials and took no part in the operation except to give those who followed his directions a small packet of powder that transformed the lead into the purest gold of exactly the same weight. Zwinger appears to have been absolutely convinced of the genuine nature of the experiment, for he wrote an account of it to his friend Dr. Schobinger, which appears in Lomig's Ephemerides.

Shortly after this Seton left Basel and, changing his name, went to Strasbourg before traveling to Cologne, where he lodged with Anton Bordemann, who was something of an alchemist himself. In this city, Seton was sufficiently imprudent to exhibit his alchemical skill openly, on one occasion producing six ounces of gold through the application of one grain of his magical powder. The incident seems to have made an impression on at least one of the savants of Cologne, for Theobald de Hoghelande in his Historiæ Alchymii Transmutationis Metallorum, which was published in Cologne in 1604, alluded to it.

Seton then went to Hamburg and traveled south to Munich, where something more important than alchemy engaged his attention: he eloped with the daughter of a citizen of that city, Christian H., the young elector of Saxony, and had heard of Seton's brilliant alchemical successes and invited him to his court, but Seton, reluctant to leave his young wife, sent his friend William Hamilton (probably a brother-Scot) instead, with a supply of the transmuting agent.

In the presence of the whole court, Hamilton undertook and carried through an experiment with complete success, and the gold manufactured resisted every known test. This excited the elector's desire to see and converse with Seton himself, and a pressing invitation, which amounted to a command, was dispatched to Seton, who, unable to refuse, came to the electoral court.

He was received there with every mark of honor, but it soon became evident to him that Christian II had only invited him for the purpose of learning his secret, but Seton, as an adept in the mysteries of alchemy, remained true to his calling and flatly refused to gratify the elector's greed.

In the end the elector ordered him to be imprisoned in a tower, where he was guarded by forty soldiers. There he was subjected to every conceivable species of torture, but it failed to extort from him his methods. The elector at last ceased the torture.

At this point, Michael Sendivogius, a Moravian chemist who happened to be in Dresden, heard of Seton's terrible experiences and possessed sufficient influence to obtain permission to visit him. Himself a searcher after the philosophers' stone, he sympathized with the adept, and proposed to him that he should attempt a rescue. Seton agreed to this and promised that if he were fortunate enough to escape, he would reward Sendivogius with his secret.

The Moravian traveled back to Cracow, where he resided, sold his property, and returned to Dresden. He lodged near Seton's place of confinement, entertaining the soldiers who guarded the alchemist and judiciously bribing those who were directly concerned in his imprisonment.

At last he judged that the time was ripe to attempt Seton's rescue. He feasted the guards and they were soon in a condition of drunken carelessness. Sendivogius hurried to the tower in which Seton was imprisoned, bribed the warder to let him in, and then went through the severity of his tortures. He therefore supported Seton to a carriage, which they reached without being observed. They halted at Seton's house to pick up his wife, who had in her possession some of the all-important powder, and sped to Cracow, which they reached in safety.

When quietly settled in that city, Sendivogius reminded Seton of his promise to assist him in his alchemical projects, but was met with a stern refusal. Seton explained to him that it was impossible for him as an adept to reveal to his rescuer the terms of such a great mystery. The health of the alchemist, however, had been shattered by the torture he had suffered, and upon his death he presented the remains of his magical powder to his preserver.

The possession of this powder made Sendivogius more eager than ever to discover the mysteries of alchemy. He married Seton's widow, perhaps with the idea that she was in possession of her late husband's occult knowledge, but she was absolutely ignorant of the matter.

Seton left behind him a treatise entitled The New Light of Alchemy, which Sendivogius published as his own. In its pages he thought he saw a method of increasing the powder, but he only succeeded in lessening it.

With what remained he posed as a successful alchemist. In his own country of Moravia, he was imprisoned, but escaped. His powder was rapidly diminishing, but he still continued his experiments. Pierce Borel, in his work Tresor de Recherches et Antiquités Galaises et Françaises (1655), mentioned that he saw a crown piece that had been partially dipped into a mixture of the powder dissolved in wine, and that the part stepped in the elixir was gold, porous, and was not soldered or otherwise tempered.

The powder expended, Sendivogius degenerated into a charlatan, pretending that he could manufacture gold, and receiving large sums on the strength of being able to do so. He survived until the year 1646 when he died at Parma at the age of sixty-four. Seton's book The New Light of Alchemy would appear to deny that the philosophers' stone was to be achieved by the successful transmutation of metals. It stated:

"The extraction of the soul out of gold or silver, by what vulgar way of alchemy soever, is but a mere fancy. On the contrary, he which, in a philosophical way, can without any fraud, and colourable deceit, make it that it shall really tinge the basest metal, whether with gain or without gain, with the colour of gold or silver (abiding all requisite tryals whatever), hath the gates of Nature opened to him for the enquiring into further and higher secrets, and with the blessing of God to obtain them."
Seven Principles (in Theosophy)

According to the teachings of Theosophy (derived from Hinduism), there are seven principles or parts of the human being that reflect cosmic principles. These concern the evolution of life from the unmanifest principles through creation. The seven principles are: Aouhi (the general soul), Buddhi (the intellectual principle), Manas (the mental principle), Kama (desire), Prana (subtle vitality), Linga-svaira (astral body), and Sthula-svaira (gross physical matter).

For convenience, these are sometimes simplified into three principles of the human being: spirit, soul, and body, as in Christianity. These three parts are first and highest, the Divine Spirit or the Divine Monad, rooted in the universe, whose spirit is linked with the All, being in a mystical sense a ray of the All; second, the intermediate part of Spiritual Monad, which in its higher and lower aspects is the spiritual and human soul; third, the lowest part of the human constitution, the vital-astrophysical part, composed of material or quasi-material life atoms. (See also Logos; Planetary Logos; Rupa)

Sources:

Seven Stewards of Heaven

According to the sixteenth-century magical ritual system Arbatel, these are the spirits through whom God governs the world. They are known as the Olympian spirits, and they govern the Olympian spheres, which are composed of 196 regions. Their names in the Olympian language are: Aratron, the celestial spirit of Saturn, whose day is Saturday; Bethor, the angel of Jupiter, whose day is Monday; Phaleg, the prince of Mars, whose day is Tuesday; Och, the master of the Sun, whose day is Sunday; Hagith, the sovereign of Venus, whose day is Friday; Ophiel, the spirit of Mercury, who must be invoked on Wednesday; Phul, the administrator of affairs in the Moon, whose day is Monday. Each of these Seven Celestial Spirits may be invoked by magicians with the aid of ceremonies and preparations.

Seventh-Day Adventism

Heterodox Christian cult stemming from the teachings of William Miller (1782–1849), formerly a Baptist convert, whose simplistic interpretation of scripture led him to assert that Christ would return to earth March 21, 1843. He built up a considerable following, but lost support when the return did not take place, even for a revised calculation of October 22, 1844.

His teachings were later modified by the Millerite Hiram Edson in New York State, who claimed that he had a vision which confirmed that Miller was right about the time of redemption but wrong about the place, which should have been the "heavenly sanctuary" and not the earth. Edson's doctrine was further developed by "Father Bates" (former sea captain), Elder James White of the S.D.A. church which had been organized in 1860 and his wife Ellen G. White.

Since then, S.D.A. has built up a membership claimed at over two million in the United States and abroad. Two of its doctrinal points influenced Charles Taze Russell (1879–1916) in the formation of his evangelical cult of Russellites which became known as Jehovah's Witnesses under Joseph Rutherford (1916–1942). These doctrines were those of a "soul-sleep" after death, and of annihilation of the wicked. Other specifically S.D.A. doctrines include the concept of a completion of Christ's atonement which had remained unfinished and the need to observe the Sabbath on Saturday.

Sources:

Seventh Son

It has long been believed in Europe and the United States that a seventh son is especially lucky or gifted with occult powers, and that the seventh son of a seventh son has healing powers. In Scotland, the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter was said to have the gift of second sight (prophetic vision). In Ireland, the saliva of a seventh son was said to have healing properties. However, in Romanian folklore, a seventh child was believed to be fated to become a vampire.

As early as the beginning of the seventeenth century, the Diary of Walter Yonge 1604–1628 (published by the Camden Society, 1847, edited by G. Roberts) had a negative reference to the healing powers of a seventh son:

"In January, 1606–7, it is reported from London by credible letters, that a child being the seventh son of his mother, and no woman child born between, healeth deaf, blind, and lame; but the parents of the child are popish, as so many say as are healed by it. The Bishop of London, Doctor Vaughan, caused divers [various people] to be brought to the child as aforesaid, who said a short prayer as [he] imposed his hands upon, as 'tis said he did unto others; but no miracle followeth any, so that it appeared to be a plain lie invented to win grace to the popish faction."

Thomas Lupton, in the second edition of his book A Thousand Notable Things (1660), noted, "It is manifest, by experience, that the seventh male child, by just order (never a girl or wench being born between) doth heal only with touching (through a natural gift) the king's evil [scrofula], which is a special gift of God, given to kings and queens, as daily experience doth witness."

In France, there was also a tradition that a seventh son had the power to cure the king's evil. He was called a "Marcou" and branded with a fleur-de-lis. The Marcou breathed on the part affected, or else the patient touched the Marcou's fleur-de-lis. Robert Chambers, in his Domestic Annals of Scotland from the Reformation to the Revolution (1858), stated that in February 1682, a certain Hugh McGie, "... gave in a bill to the Privy Council, representing that, by the practice of other nations, any tradesman having seven sons together, without the intervention of a daughter, is declared free of all public burdens and taxes, and has other encouragements bestowed on him, to enable him to bring up the said children for the use and benefit of the commonwealth; and claiming a similar privilege on the strength of his having that qualification. The Council recommended the magistrates [of Edinburgh] to take Hugh's seven sons into consideration when they laid their 'stents' (trade taxes) upon him."

A tradition in Donegal, Ireland, claimed that the healing powers of a seventh son required a special ceremony at the moment of the infant's birth. The woman who received the child in her arms should place in its hand whatever substance she decided that he should use to heal in later life. This substance could be metal (e.g., a silver coin) or a common substance like salt, or even hair; when the child was old enough, it would rub the substance and the patient would apply it to an afflicted part for healing purposes. There was also an Irish tradition similar to the Scottish belief that a seventh son in a seventh son possessed prophetic as well as healing powers.

There was a general belief in Britain that the seventh son of a seventh son was destined to be a physician and would have an intuitive knowledge of the art of healing, often curing a patient simply by touching an afflicted part. This belief also extended to the seventh daughter of a seventh daughter. A contributor to Notes & Queries (June 12, 1852) observed: "In Saltash Street, Plymouth [England], my friend copied, on the 10th December, 1851, the following inscription on a board, indicating the profession and claims of the inhabitant: ‘A. Shepherd, the third seventh daughter. Doctoress."

1391

The belief in the healing powers of a seventh son of a sev enth son has persisted into the twentieth century, and there are two Irish healers of this kind: Danny Gallagher and Finbarr Nolan. Both are ‘‘natual healers,’’ although Gallagher arrives psychically ‘‘blesses’’ soil that is to be mixed with water and applied to the afflicted area of the patient; both healers recommend a sequence of two or three visits for maximum healing. They are early supporters of the concept that would become known as ‘‘soul mates.’’ Early speculation would be passed on to Paschal Beverly Randolph, an eclectic physician who specialized in spiritualism and, pointing out the difference in Sex Magic Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology  5th Ed.

In the West, sexual activity was to a large extent denigrated and identified with original sin. Thus the idea of positively integrating sexuality and religion was considered somewhat scandalous. With the emergence of alternative forms of spirituality, however, new attention was given to sexuality.

Within Spiritualism a new attention to sexuality began quite early as the basic problem in non-Western religious traditions and is especially prominent in Hindu tantric yoga, which strongly influenced Tibetan Buddhism. Sex was utilized as a means to unite with the goddess, in one of her several guises. It also emerged in Chinese Taoist traditions, where it was integrated into speculations of longevity and immortality.

The West, sexual activity was to a large extent denigrated and identified with original sin. Thus the idea of positively integrating sexuality and religion was considered somewhat scandalous. With the emergence of alternative forms of spirituality, however, new attention was given to sexuality.

Within Spiritualism a new attention to sexuality began quite early as the basic problem in non-Western religious traditions and is especially prominent in Hindu tantric yoga, which strongly influenced Tibetan Buddhism. Sex was utilized as a means to unite with the goddess, in one of her several guises. It also emerged in Chinese Taoist traditions, where it was integrated into speculations of longevity and immortality. Continuing his experiments, he finally ended by accepting the OTO and his quick rise to a position of power as head of the British section. He then succeeded Reuss as outer head of the order. Crowley rewrote the ritual material for the order and added an eleventh, homoerotic, degree. Crowley also experimented with sex magic at an intense level over the next decade and kept detailed journals of his endeavors.

Through the decades after World War I several other sex magic groups were born, most founded by former members of the OTO. They included the Fraternal Saturni (Germany) and the Choronzon Club, also known as the Great Brotherhood of God (United States).

The OTO itself was never a large organization and few knew about and practiced its sex magic techniques. Crowley was succeeded by Carl Germer, whose administrative leadership was almost nonexistent. Through the 1950s the secret materials were dispensed to a variety of people internationally. Germer died in the early 1960s without designating a successor, and the order fell into chaos. In the meantime a set of Crowley’s papers were deposited at the Warburg Institute in London and became known to various British magicians (especially Kenneth Grant).

Then in 1969 Louis Culling, a former member of the OTO who had left to join an American offshoot, published the Complete Magick Curriculum of the Secret Order of the G.B.G., and shortly thereafter a commentary on it, A Manual of Sex Magic. Beginning with the publication in 1972 of an edited edition of Crowley’s Magical Diaries, which contained the account of some of his sexual experiments, within a decade all of Crowley’s writings on sex magic and all of the secret materials of the OTO were published. These books provided the basis for the spread of sex magic throughout the Western world. At the same time, through the Bihar School of Yoga in Bengal, the sexual teachings of Indian tantra were for the first time spread to the West in such detail that tantric practice could be institutionalized.

From the 1980s to the present a host of different sex magic groups drawing upon the Crowley/OTO tradition have arisen. At the same time a number of tantric groups (and a few Taoist groups) have also appeared. While each tradition seems to be aware of the other and has some superficial similarity in its use of sexual intercourse for religious and magical ends, they have remained separate. The Western and Eastern teachings on sexuality are quite different. While the same basic practices are present in both Eastern and Western forms of occult sexuality, the ideas under which they were organized do not easily mix.

Sources:

Sexton, George

British secularist teacher of the nineteenth century. Robert Owen invited his attention to the phenomena of Spiritualism. After a crusade against its doctrines, personal experiences with the Davenport Brothers convinced Sexton of their genuine validity. Continuing his experiments, he finally ended by accepting Spiritualism and proclaimed its truth in lectures with the same outspokenness with which he formerly fought against it. He denounced the pretensions of conjurers who claimed to have exposed Spiritualism and, pointing out the difference in

Sources:

Sex Magic

The sexualization of spirituality has a long tradition in most non-Western religious traditions and is especially prominent in Hindu tantric yoga, which strongly influenced Tibetan Buddhism. Sex was utilized as a means to unite with the goddess, in one of her several guises. It also emerged in Chinese Taoist traditions, where it was integrated into speculations of longevity and immortality.

In the West, sexual activity was to a large extent denigrated and identified with original sin. Thus the idea of positively integrating sexuality and religion was considered somewhat scandalous. With the emergence of alternative forms of spirituality, however, new attention was given to sexuality.

Within Spiritualism a new attention to sexuality began quite early as the basic problem in non-Western religious traditions and is especially prominent in Hindu tantric yoga, which strongly influenced Tibetan Buddhism. Sex was utilized as a means to unite with the goddess, in one of her several guises. It also emerged in Chinese Taoist traditions, where it was integrated into speculations of longevity and immortality. Continuing his experiments, he finally ended by accepting the OTO and his quick rise to a position of power as head of the British section. He then succeeded Reuss as outer head of the order. Crowley rewrote the ritual material for the order and added an eleventh, homoerotic, degree. Crowley also experimented with sex magic at an intense level over the next decade and kept detailed journals of his endeavors.

Through the decades after World War I several other sex magic groups were born, most founded by former members of the OTO. They included the Fraternal Saturni (Germany) and the Choronzon Club, also known as the Great Brotherhood of God (United States).

The OTO itself was never a large organization and few knew about and practiced its sex magic techniques. Crowley was succeeded by Carl Germer, whose administrative leadership was almost nonexistent. Through the 1950s the secret materials were dispensed to a variety of people internationally. Germer died in the early 1960s without designating a successor, and the order fell into chaos. In the meantime a set of Crowley’s papers were deposited at the Warburg Institute in London and became known to various British magicians (especially Kenneth Grant).

Then in 1969 Louis Culling, a former member of the OTO who had left to join an American offshoot, published the Complete Magick Curriculum of the Secret Order of the G.B.G., and shortly thereafter a commentary on it, A Manual of Sex Magic. Beginning with the publication in 1972 of an edited edition of Crowley’s Magical Diaries, which contained the account of some of his sexual experiments, within a decade all of Crowley’s writings on sex magic and all of the secret materials of the OTO were published. These books provided the basis for the spread of sex magic throughout the Western world. At the same time, through the Bihar School of Yoga in Bengal, the sexual teachings of Indian tantra were for the first time spread to the West in such detail that tantric practice could be institutionalized.

From the 1980s to the present a host of different sex magic groups drawing upon the Crowley/OTO tradition have arisen. At the same time a number of tantric groups (and a few Taoist groups) have also appeared. While each tradition seems to be aware of the other and has some superficial similarity in its use of sexual intercourse for religious and magical ends, they have remained separate. The Western and Eastern teachings on sexuality are quite different. While the same basic practices are present in both Eastern and Western forms of occult sexuality, the ideas under which they were organized do not easily mix.

Sources:

Sexton, George

British secularist teacher of the nineteenth century. Robert Owen invited his attention to the phenomena of Spiritualism. After a crusade against its doctrines, personal experiences with the Davenport Brothers convinced Sexton of their genuine validity. Continuing his experiments, he finally ended by accepting Spiritualism and proclaimed its truth in lectures with the same outspokenness with which he formerly fought against it. He denounced the pretensions of conjurers who claimed to have exposed Spiritualism and, pointing out the difference in condition and effect, he actually performed sham spiritual manifestations before his audience. Sexton authored one pamphlet, a transcript of a lecture: Scientific Considerations on the Present State of the Matter of Spiritualism (1874). He also served as editor of the Spiritual Magazine and became a member of the British National Association of Spiritualists.

Sextus V. Pope (1521–1590)

One of the popes accused of sorcery, J. A. de Thou said of him in his Histoire Universelle (1734, Vol. I): "The Spaniards continued their vengeance against this Pope even after his death, and they forgot nothing in their anxiety to blacken his memory by the libels which they flung against him. Sextus, said they, who, by means of the magical art, was for a long time in confederacy with a demon, had made a compact with this enemy of humanity to give himself up to him, on condition he was made Pope, and allowed to reign six years."

"Sextus was raised to the chair of St. Peter, and during the five years he held sway in Rome he distinguished his pontificate by actions surpassing the feeble reach of the human intellect. Finally, at the end of this term, the Pope fell sick, and the devil arriving to keep him to his pact, Sextus inveighed strongly against his bad faith, reproaching him with the fact that the term they had agreed upon was not fulfilled, and that there still remained to him more than a twelve-month."

"But the devil reminded him that at the beginning of his pontificate he had condemned a man who, according to the law, was too young by a year to suffer death, and that he had nevertheless caused him to be executed, saying that he would give him a year out of his own life; that this year, added to the other five, completed the six years which had been promised to him, and that in consequence he did very wrong to complain."

"Sextus, confused and unable to make any answer, remained mute, and turning himself towards the ruelle of his bed, prepared for death in the midst of the terrible mental agitation caused by the remorse of his conscience." De Thou added, "For the rest, I only mention this trait as a rumor spread by the Spaniards, and I should be very sorry to guarantee its truth."

During his papacy, Sextus authorized very large sums to be expended on public works, including completion of the dome of St. Peter’s, the loggia of Sextus in the Lateran, and the chapel of the Praesepe in Sta. Maria Maggiore. In spite of the controversy, today Sextus is ranked among the greatest popes.

Seybert Commission

A commission for the investigation of Spiritualism, appointed by the wish of Henry Seybert, a Philadelphia Spiritualist who, in his will, left $60,000 to the University of Pennsylvania to be devoted "to the maintenance of a chair in the said University to be known as the 'Adam Seybert Chair of Moral and Intellectual Philosophy,' upon the condition that the incumbent of the said chair, either individually or in conjunction with a commission of the university faculty will make a thorough and impartial investigation of all systems of morals, religion, or philosophy which assume to represent the truth, and particularly of Modern Spiritualism."

The commission, which began its investigations in March 1884, was composed as follows: William Pepper, Joseph Leidy, George A. Koenig, Robert Ellis Thompson, George S. Fullerton, and Horace Howard Furness; added afterward were Coleman Sellers, James W. White, Calvin B. Knerr, and S. Weir Mitchell. Pepper, as provost of the university, was ex-officio chairman. Furness acted as chairman and Fullerton was secretary to the committee.

Seybert was represented in the committee by Thomas R. Hazard, a personal friend. Hazard was charged by Seybert to prescribe the methods to be used in the investigation, designate the mediums to be consulted, and reject the attendance of those whose presence might be in conflict with the harmony or good order of the spirit circles. In May 1887, the committee published a preliminary report with negative conclusions in the whole field of Spiritualist phenomena. No final report was ever published, nor was the investigation continued.

The committee first turned its attention to slate-writing. Two séances with Mrs. S. E. Patterson led to no result. The committee then sent to New York for Henry Slade and promptly caught him in fraud. As no other slate-writing medium was available for testing, a mock séance was arranged for the committee by Harry Kellar, one of the more capable magicians of the day, and he proceeded to deliver messages in French, Spanish, Dutch, Chinese, Japanese, Gujarati, and German, without the committee being able to discover the trick.

The committee then turned to the issue of spirit rappings. Margaret Kane-Fox (of the Fox Sisters), the medium of these experiments, stood on four glass tumblers, the heels of her shoes resting upon the rear tumblers and the soles upon the first tumblers. After many attempts, raps were heard and Furness remarked to the medium, "This is the most wonderful thing of all, Mrs. Kane, I distinctly feel them in your feet. There is not a particle of motion in your foot, but there is an unusual vibration."

"After two séances the enlightened medium was conquered, and as the medium expressed doubt that in her state of health a third meeting would bring more striking results. According to the committee, this investigation was not sufficiently extensive to warrant any positive conclusions. The report, however, points out that "sounds of varying intensity may be produced in almost any portion of the human body by voluntary muscular action. To determine the exact location of this muscular activity is at times a matter of delicacy."

An attempt was made to study spirit photography. This was frustrated as the committee felt disinclined to accept the high fees of William M. Keeler. He asked three hundred dollars for three séances and the right to demand, if conditions made it necessary, the exclusive use of the dark room and his own instruments. The committee refused and concluded "that in these days of composite photography it is worse than childish to claim a spiritual source for results which can be obtained at any time by any tyro in the art."

The investigations into materialization with Pierre L. O. A. Keeler, into telekinesis phenomena with Dr. Rothermel, and into direct voice with Maud E. Lord were declared to have been negative.

In 1886 Fullerton visited to Germany to reexamine psychic researcher Johann C. F. Zöllner’s experiments with Henry Slade. He interviewed William Wundt, philosopher of the University of Leipzig; Gustave Theodore Fechner, emeritus physicist at the University of Leipzig; W. Schneibner, mathematician of the University of Leipzig; and Wilhelm Weber, emeritus physicist at the University of Göttingen. With the exception of Wundt, the learned professors declared that Zöllner’s mental condition was not normal. The results of Fullerton’s investigation in Europe appeared as an appendix to the Seybert Report. The report of the Seybert Commission was received with indignation by Spiritualists. Thomas R. Hazard, the only Spiritualist on the committee, declared that he repeatedly protested against the committee’s methods, but his protests were disregarded. In the Philadelphia North American, Hazard publicly argued for the removal of Fullerton. This led to false charges as prejudiced researchers. For, he continued, "... had the object in view been to belittle and bring into discredit, hatred and general contempt the cause... the Trustees could scarcely have selected more suitable instruments for the object intended from all the denizens of Philadelphia than are the gentlemen who constitute a majority of the Seybert Commission."

This protest was considered and rejected. The report subsequently appeared, and A. B. Richmond, a Philadelphia lawyer, replied in two books. Frank Podmore observed, "Spiritualists contend, and not apparently without justification, that the intentions of Mr. Seybert were never fairly carried out, and that the prepossessions of the committee against the subject under investigation are demonstrated by their willingness to leave the inquiry unfinished and to divert the funds entrusted to them to an object which was regarded by the testator as at most of secondary importance."

The negative results attained by the Seybert Commission, and its implicit condemnation of the movement for harboring fraudulent mediums, which has been substantiated by later research, did much to set the intellectual community in the United States against Spiritualism and marginalize it in the religious community.

Sources:

Shaddai

According to the mysticism of Kabbalah, this was one of ten divine names in the angelic hierarchy. The Zohar speaks of three supernal degrees or divine hypostases (that which stands under), the first being Kether. When the world of manifest things was in the condition of Tiphareth, God revealed himself in the hypostasis Shaddai; when it had proceeded to the condition of Yesod, he manifested as the hypostasis Tsabaoth, but when the darkness had disappeared from the face of things he appeared as Elohim.

Shah, (Sayed) Idries (1924–1996)

Author and translator of important works on occultism and Eastern mysticism. He was born on June 16, 1924, in Simla, India. He came from an Afghan family of Arabian origin that claims descent through the prophet Mohammed to the Sassanian emperors of Persia. He was educated privately, and became a British citizen. He became the proprietor of the International Press Agency in 1953, and from 1966 until his death he was the director of studies of the Institute for Cultural Research in London. He was also the literary and film director of Mulla Nasrudin Enterprises.

Shah wrote over 30 books and translated others, and through them he became a major force in the movement of Islamic, especially Sufic, thought into the West. He also had a broad knowledge of the occult and reportedly ghostwrote the early biography of Gerald B. Gardner, the founder of the neopagan revival in the 1940s.

He was awarded the Dictionary of International Biography Certificate of Merit for Distinguished Service to Human Thought, and in 1972 he was appointed Visiting Professor in Intercultural Studies at the University of Geneva, Switzerland. He received a Certificate of Honoris Causa, National University of La Plata, Argentina, from 1974 to his death on November 23, 1996, in London.

Sources:

Shakars

A spiritual community established in New Lebanon, New York, near the Massachusetts line, formally known as the United Society of Believers in Christ’s Second Appearing. It had its origin in England in 1747, when Jane and James Wardley became the first leaders of a Lancashire revivalist sect. They were Quaker tailors influenced by the French prophets, an enthusiastic movement that had spread through southern France earlier in the century. Ann Lee, 22-year-old daughter of a Manchester blacksmith, joined this group of “shaking Quakers” in 1758 and through her strange visionary gifts became their leader. She was imprisoned in 1772 for disturbing the Sabbath and preaching a doctrine of celibacy, an idea stemming from her own experience of losing four children at or soon after their birth.

In 1774, after visions and inspired revelations, she moved to America with a handful of followers. By 1780 the Shaker colony had grown, attracting many settlers. Men and women lived together in celibacy with common ownership of property.

Between 1781 and 1783 Lee and her elders visited 36 towns in Massachusetts and Connecticut on a missionary campaign, but the Shakers were ridiculed. They had become especially unpopular for their pacifist ideas during the Revolution.

Lee died in 1784. The community eventually prospered, especially under Lee’s successor, Joseph Meacham, and established an enviable reputation for hard work, excellent furniture making, and community spirit. The most characteristic behavior of the Shakers, from which their popular name derived, was an ecstatic dance. It seems clear that much of the very genuine joy and creativeness of the Shaker community arose from the intense energy of sexual sublimation.

Starting in 1857, the Watervliet community near Albany, New York, was visited by Spiritualist-type manifestations of shaking and jerking, and some Shakers were possessed by Indian spirits and spoke in tongues (see Xenoglossia). Some of them became Spiritualists.

The Shaker community grew throughout the nineteenth century. The Shakers were able to gather many converts on the frontier and found other members among the many orphans to whom they provided a home. They originally had functioned informally as an orphanage in many areas, but the creation of a system of government and church-sponsored orphanages had a significant impact on the movement’s development. The eventual decline of Shakerism owed partly to materialistic influences from outside and partly to the inevitable dwindling of a community that outlawed sexual activity.

Sources:
Shaman

The magician or “medicine man” of primitive tribes, with powers of healing, prophecy, or paranormal phenomena. The term is thought to derive from Tungus shaman and Sanskrit svāman (ascetic). As distinct from priests, shamans have no ritualistic knowledge, but operate rather as occult adepts. Their primary ability, at least in their Siberian setting, was the power of astral travel. The gift of shamanism is often a hereditary function, and its nature is communicated orally from one shaman to another.

Shamanism has been studied among the Eskimos and in Scandinavia, Tibet, China, Japan, Korea, Siberia, Manchuria, Mexico, Yutacan, Guatemala, and the North Pacific coast. A shamanistic performance often includes dancing, a mediumistic trance, and spirit possession. The role of the shaman (and shamans) became the subject of a new movement in the West that began in the 1980s primarily through the work of Michael Harner and a number of popular teachers (many with Matove American backgrounds) who have developed a neo-Shamanism that draws on many themes emphasized in the New Age movement. Neo-Shamanist leaders have varied: some, such as Sun Bear, have attempted to translate traditional Native American themes into useful practice for those outside of the Native American community. Other have developed new systems claiming Native American esoteric traditions as a base (Lynn Andrews) and still others have simply taken traditional occult teachings upon which they have placed a Native American overlay.

Sources:

Shaman’s Drum

Shaman’s Drum: A Journal of Experiential Shamanism & Spiritual Healing is a newsstand magazine that has through the 1990s emerged as the major voice of neo-shamanism, the new appropriation of shamanism by modern Westerners. Shamans are the major bearers of the spiritual wisdom of pre-modern, pre-literate societies (once termed primitive) that underwent a significant reappraisal in the last half of the twentieth century. Anthropologists who had led in the study of such societies discovered a level of sophistication in the thought of pre-modern peoples and others found in their holistic worldviews a wisdom they believed had much to teach contemporary society. Not a small part of the attractiveness of pre-modern cultures was their use of various psychedelic substances as an integral element in their psychic and spiritual activity. The appropriation of wisdom came from around the world, but special attention was paid to the peoples of the Amazon, Tibetan cultures, and Native Americans.

Shaman’s Drum emerged in the late 1980s to provide education, information, and networking in the growing neoshamanistic community. It is published quarterly by Cross-Cultural Shamanism Network, a nonprofit corporation whose major program is the sustaining of the magazine. Shaman’s Drum is a subsidized publication, with a minimum of advertising, all directly related to the subject matter.

The majority of the space in each issue of the magazine includes a set of feature articles on such topics as traditional shamanism, environmentalism, and contemporary spiritual healing. The magazine functions as a scholarly study of shamanism and its popular appropriation. Shaman’s Drum has given significant space to airing the controversy of non-Indians claiming status as teachers of Native American wisdom and the business of selling Native sacred artifacts for use in secular and other non-Native contexts. Each issue also contains a news column, a book review column, and a directory of individuals and organizations that offer resources for studying shamanism.

Shaman’s Drum may be contacted at P.O. Box 97, Ashland, OR 97520.

Sources:
Shaman’s Drum. Ashland, Ore., n.d.

Shamballah

Fabulous mystical city of ancient legend, believed to be the site of the Garden of Eden.

Shanti Nilaya

A healing and growth center founded in Escondido, California, in 1978. The name means “true home of peace” and the organization is concerned with the work of physician Elisabeth Kübler-Ross, author of the book On Death and Dying (New York, 1975). An extension of Kübler-Ross’s earlier well-known “Life-Death and Transition” workshops, Shanti Nilaya offers short- and long-term therapeutic sessions connected with the experience of death and the question of life after death. The Shanti Nilaya Newsletter, giving news of the work of Kübler-Ross and Shanti Nilaya centers, is published from the center, now located in Virginia: General Delivery, Headwaters, VA 24442.

Sharp, William (1856–1905)

Scottish poet, biographer, and editor, who also achieved fame under the name of “Fiona Mac-Leod”—not so much a literary pseudonym as virtually a psychic secondary personality. Sharp was born in Paisley, Scotland, on September 12, 1856, and spent his childhood in the Scottish Highlands. He ran away from home three times, on one occasion spending a whole summer in a gypsy encampment. He studied for two years as a student at Glasgow University before becoming an attorney’s clerk.

He suffered from ill health and his family sent him on a Pacific cruise. Afterward he settled in London as a bank clerk, eventually becoming acquainted with literary circles that included B. G. Rossetti and Walter Pater.

Pater encouraged his literary work, which first appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette. Then in 1885 Sharp became the art critic. for the Glasgow Herald. In the same year he married his first cousin Elizabeth Amelia Sharp, who became companion and co-worker as well as wife. They worked jointly on the anthology Lyra Celtica (1896). Sharp abandoned banking for a journalistic career, becoming editor of The Pagan Review in 1892. He traveled throughout Europe and even visited the United States, where he met Walt Whitman.

Sharp’s enthusiasm for the Celtic literary revival brought him into contact with William Butler Yeats and the Isis Urania Temple of the famous Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn magical society. Here he was initiated into the Neophyte grade. This occult connection may have been a stimulus to the development of his anima personality of “Fiona MacLeod.” Sharp and “Fiona” remained distinctly different identities in literary style and outlook, even corresponding with friends as separate personalities for many years.

Sharp himself kept up a correspondence with Yeats and George W. Russell on occult and mystical experiments, while also writing to them on literary, poetical, and Celtic matters as “Fiona MacLeod.” The identical nature of the two personalities remained a closely guarded secret among Sharp, his wife, and one or two personal friends until after Sharp’s death. The “Fiona” letters were in the handwriting of Sharp’s sister, but their style and personality were those of a distinct individual. “Fiona’s” letters, poems, and books were quite feminine in outlook, quite unlike the masculine lifestyle and writings of the bearded Sharp. The “Fiona” works played a leading part in the Scottish Celtic literary revival and were the product of automatic writing by Sharp, who virtually acknowledged “Fiona” as a separate personality. She was said to be a distant cousin and even had a biography in the prestigious British biographical annual Who’s Who.

Sharp died December 12, 1905, after catching a cold during a visit to a friend in Sicily. His widow died a few years later, leaving two large packets of materials “to be destroyed unexamined.” It is believed that these may have contained Golden Dawn documents.

Sources:
MacLeod, Fiona. The Divine Adventure. Portland, Maine: T. B. Mosher, 1903.
———. The Immortal Hour. Portland, Maine: T. B. Mosher, 1907.
———. The Mountain Lovers. N.p., 1895.
———. Flowers o’ the Vine. N.p., 1894.

Shasta, Mount

Mount Shasta is an awe-inspiring volcanic cone in northern California. Long a sacred site for Native American tribes, it became a magnet for many occult speculations in the twentieth century. As early as 1899 Mount Shasta was an element in the Spiritualist world created in a channeled book, An Earth Dweller’s Returns, by Phylos (the pseudonym of Frederick William Olier), an early text discussing the lost Pacific continent of Lemuria. After the publication of this book, California and Mount Shasta began to be seen as a remnant of Lemuria. The Lemurian hypothesis was developed by H. Spencer Lewis, who, under the penname Wishar Spenie Cerve, wrote a text for the Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rosae Crucis, Lemuria, the Lost Continent of the Pacific (1931).

Two years before the publication of Lewis’s work, Guy W. Ballard, walking the slopes of Mount Shasta, had an encounter with a mysterious person whom he later identified as Saint Germain, an ascended master of the Great White Brotherhood (the spiritual hierarchy believed by many occultists to be guiding the destiny of humankind). Out of this encounter, Ballard later led in the founding of the I Am Movement. The story of his encounter appears in Ballard’s 1934 book Unveiled Mysteries, published under the penname Godfire Ray King. In recent years, the “I Am” has presented an annual pagant centered upon their unique interpretation of the life of Jesus.

Over the years since the Rosicrucian and “I Am” publications on Mount Shasta, numerous authors have described mystical experiences associated with the mountain and offered their speculations about its significance. The resort community of Mount Shasta, California, became a unique gathering place for metaphysical people, a trend further spurred by the beginning of the flying saucer era.

Sources:
Cerve, W. S. [H. Spencer Lewis]. Lemuria, the Lost Continent of the Pacific. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Lodge of the AMORC, 1931.

Shaver, Richard Sharpe (1907–1975)

Pennsylvania welder and author born on October 8, 1907, responsible for the series of revelations known as the “Shaver Mystery,” originally published by Raymond A. Palmer in Amazing Stories from 1945 to 1949. Drawing upon “racial memories,” Shaver described a race of “deros” or vicious dwarfs living in underground caverns, indulging in sexual orgies and ha-rassing human beings by means of secret rays and telepathy. Shaver’s somewhat crude original manuscript, titled A Warning to Future Man, was extensively worked over by Palmer and emerged in the March 1945 issue of Amazing Stories as “I Remember Lemuria.” At first the series boosted the magazine’s circulation to a record 185,000. Many earnest readers described their own knowledge of secret influences from deros who were also apparently responsible for the disaster of Pearl Harbor. More traditional science fiction readers were indignant at such stories being presented as factual, and after thousands of protests, Howard Browne, who took over from Palmer, ended the series. Browne described the Shaver material as “the sickest crap I’d run into.”

However, Palmer kept the the Shaver legend alive and revived it from time to time in Search and Flying Saucers magazines and The Hidden World, a series of periodicals in trade paperback format. For a while there was also a fanzine, the Shaver Mystery Magazine, and I Remember Lemuria and The Return of Sathanas were reissued in book format in 1948. Shaver died on November 5, 1975.

Sources:

Shavick, Nancy (1957– )

Nancy Shavick, a contemporary author and tarot counselor, was born in Englewood, New Jersey, in 1957. Following high
Sheldrake, Rupert (1942—)

British biochemist with specialized experience in plant research who has proposed a bold new theory of formative causation, concerned with the origin and growth of form and characteristics in nature. While not denying the inheritance of characteristics through the gene complex, he has suggested a literal view of what has been termed for convenience “morphogenetic fields” as actual structures independent of time and space. Although Sheldrake’s field theory applies primarily to organisms, plants, and animals, it also has important relevance to concepts of parapsychological phenomena, such as telepathy, clairvoyance and reincarnation.

Robert Sheldrake was born June 28, 1942, in Newark Notts, England. He was educated at Clare College, Cambridge University, England, becoming a fellow and director of studies in biochemistry and cell biology. In 1973, he was awarded a Rosenheim Research Fellowship of the Royal Society. Instead of taking a professorship at a university, he decided to study growing plants first hand, and he became a member of the staff of the International Crops Research Institute for the Semi-Arid Tropics in Hyderabad, India. He became a consultant to the institute in 1978.

In 1966, Sheldrake was associated with the Epiphany Philosophers, a group of scientists and philosophers at Cambridge University concerned with exploring interconnections between science, philosophy, and mysticism. This contact stimulated his early ideas on formative causation. Other influences were the theories of Henri Bergson and Hans Driesch.

Sources:

Sheep-Goat Hypothesis

A concept in parapsychology relating to the effect of belief and attitude to success in ESP scoring. The term derives from the pioneer researches of parapsychologist Gertrude R. Schmeidler in 1958. She conducted experiments in which her subjects were divided into two groups—“sheep” and “goats.” The sheep had belief in the possibility of psi, while the goats rejected the possibility.

It was observed that, in individual and group tests, the sheep scored higher in ESP trials than the goats, suggesting that belief strongly influenced successful ESP. The differences in scoring were relatively small, although statistically significant. Many later experiments have been conducted by other parapsychologists to test the hypothesis, and the term “sheep-goat” has now become commonplace in parapsychological discussions.

Sources:

She-Goat

One of the branches of divination in ancient Rome dealt especially with the signs that might be derived from animals, and it was believed that if a she-goat crossed the path of a man who was stepping out of his house, it was a good omen.

Sheargold, Richard K (empsell) (1911–1988)

British parapsychologist. He was born on December 20, 1911, at Caterham, Surrey, England. He was departmental manager at McMichael Radio, Slough, England. He joined the Society for Psychical Research and took a special interest in scientific experiments relating to the question of human survival. In 1963 he became the first chairman of the Survival Joint Research Committee Trust.

Under the sponsorship of the SPR, he completed a series of card-guessing tests with mediums as percipients, in order to investigate the possibility of a relationship between telepathic faculty and the ESP demonstrated by mental mediums. These experiments were reported in the Journal of the SPR (June 1961). From 1971 on, Sheargold experimented with the electronic voice phenomenon, also known as Raaudive Voices, that had just been publicized in the West by Friedrich Jürgenson and Konstantin Raudive. In September 1973, he gave a talk on “Experiments on the Jürgenson Voice Phenomena” at a symposium organized by The Institute of Parascience. He died January 25, 1988.

Sources:

school graduation she entered Hampshire College (Massachusetts), from which she graduated in 1979 with a degree in creative writing. Through the 1980s she taught creative writing, worked as an editor, and became an accomplished student of the tarot cards. In 1984 she founded Prima Materia Books, a publishing house, through which she published her first book, The Tarot: A Guide to Reading Your Own Cards. In the process of mastering the tarot, she became a gifted reader with a growing clientele. In 1991 she closed Prima Materia and moved to San Francisco.

Shavick felt that the tarot should be demystified and was most useful as a tool for self-transformation and personal development. These themes dominated the four best-selling books she wrote for Berkley Books between 1988 and 1993: The Tarot Reader (1991), Traveling the Royal Road: Mastering the Tarot (1992), and The Tarot Guide to Love and Relationships (1993). Along the way she also acquired a working knowledge of astrology and in 1994 authored her first volume on it, Reach for the Stars. Her most recent work, Nancy Shawick’s Tarot Universe (2000), is a comprehensive text summarizing her previous five books.

Sources:

Sheep-Goat Hypothesis

A concept in parapsychology relating to the effect of belief and attitude to success in ESP scoring. The term derives from the pioneer researches of parapsychologist Gertrude R. Schmeidler in 1958. She conducted experiments in which her subjects were divided into two groups—“sheep” and “goats.” The sheep had belief in the possibility of psi, while the goats rejected the possibility.

It was observed that, in individual and group tests, the sheep scored higher in ESP trials than the goats, suggesting that belief strongly influenced successful ESP. The differences in scoring were relatively small, although statistically significant. Many later experiments have been conducted by other parapsychologists to test the hypothesis, and the term “sheep-goat” has now become commonplace in parapsychological discussions.

Sources:

She-Goat

One of the branches of divination in ancient Rome dealt especially with the signs that might be derived from animals, and it was believed that if a she-goat crossed the path of a man who was stepping out of his house, it was a good omen.

Sheldrake, Rupert (1942—)

British biochemist with specialized experience in plant research who has proposed a bold new theory of formative causation, concerned with the origin and growth of form and characteristics in nature. While not denying the inheritance of characteristics through the gene complex, he has suggested a literal view of what has been termed for convenience “morphogenetic fields” as actual structures independent of time and space. Although Sheldrake’s field theory applies primarily to organisms, plants, and animals, it also has important relevance to concepts of parapsychological phenomena, such as telepathy, clairvoyance and reincarnation.

Robert Sheldrake was born June 28, 1942, in Newark Notts, England. He was educated at Clare College, Cambridge University, England, becoming a fellow and director of studies in biochemistry and cell biology. In 1973, he was awarded a Rosenheim Research Fellowship of the Royal Society. Instead of taking a professorship at a university, he decided to study growing plants first hand, and he became a member of the staff of the International Crops Research Institute for the Semi-Arid Tropics in Hyderabad, India. He became a consultant to the institute in 1978.

In 1966, Sheldrake was associated with the Epiphany Philosophers, a group of scientists and philosophers at Cambridge University concerned with exploring interconnections between science, philosophy, and mysticism. This contact stimulated his early ideas on formative causation. Other influences were the theories of Henri Bergson and Hans Driesch.

Sources:
Shelta Thari

An esoteric language spoken by the tinkers (a Gypsy-type people) of Britain and Ireland and possibly a descendant of an "inner" language employed by the ancient Celtic Druids or bards. It was in 1876 that the first hint of the existence of Shelta Thari reached the ears of Charles Godfrey Leland. It seems strange that George Borrow, the first authority on Romany and Gypsy lore, had never stumbled upon the language, and that fact may be taken as evidence of the jealousy with which the nomadic classes guarded it.

Leland related how he and E. H. Palmer were wandering on the beach at Aberystwyth in Wales when they met a wanderer who heard them conversing in Romany. Leland questioned the man as to how he made a living, and he replied, "Shelkin gallo-pas." The words were foreign even to Leland, and he asked what they meant. "Why," said the man, "it means selling ferns. That is tinker's language or minklers' thari, I thought as you knew Romany, you might understand it. The right name for the tinkers' language is Shelta."

"It was," said Leland, "with the feelings of Columbus the night before he discovered America that I heard the word Shelta, and I asked the fern-dealer if he could talk it. The man replied 'A little,' and on the spot the philologist collected a number of words and phrases from the fern-seller that gave him sufficient insight into the language to prove that it was absolutely different from Romany.

The Celtic origin of the dialect soon began to suggest itself to Leland, and he attempted to obtain from the man some verse or jingle in it, for the purpose of observing its syntactical arrangement. But all he was able to learn from his informant were some rhymes of no philological value, and he found he had soon exhausted the fern-seller's knowledge.

It was later on in the United States that Leland terrified a tinker by speaking to him in the lost dialect. The man, questioned as to whether he could speak Shelta, admitted that he could. He proved to be an Irishman, Owen Macdonald by name, and he furnished Leland with an invaluable list of several hundred words. But Leland could not be sure upon which of the Celtic languages the dialect was based. Owen Macdonald declared to him that it was a fourth language that had nothing to do with old Irish more than with any other Celtic dialect. One hypothesis of the Pictish origin of Shelta, the chief among them is identified with the itinerant bronze workers. The tinker fraternity that possessed the luxury of a private dialect.

This, he thought, accounted in part for the secretiveness as regards this language. In Italy, to this very day, the tinker class is known to the two peoples. Whoever they were, they were a Celtic-speaking people and probably a nomadic one. Shelta has been referred to as the language of the ancient bards of Ireland and the esoteric tongue of an Irish priesthood.

Leland put forward the hypothesis that the Shelta-speaking tinker is a descendant of a prehistoric guild of bronze workers. This, he thought, accounted in part for the secretiveness as regards this language. In Italy, to this very day, the tinker class is identified with the itinerant bronze workers. The tinker fraternity of Britain and Ireland existed with perhaps nearly all its ancient characteristics until the advent of railroads. But long before this, it had probably amalgamated to a great extent with the Gypsy population, and the two languages had become common to the two peoples.

It seems to be highly probable that Sheltka originated in Ireland, for in no other part of these islands during the later Celtic period was technology sufficiently advanced to permit of the existence of a close corporation of metalworkers possessing a secret language. Moreover, the affinities of Shelta appear to be with old Irish more than with any other Celtic dialect. One other theory that presents itself in connection with the origin of Shelta is that it is the modern descendant of the language of the "Ould Picts" mentioned by Owen Macdonald, Leland's tinker friend. But there are great difficulties in accepting the hypothesis of the Pictish origin of Shelta, the chief among them being its obvious Irish origin. There were, it is known, Picts in the north of Ireland, but they were almost certainly a small and primitive colony and a very unlikely community to form a metalworking fraternity that possessed the luxury of a private dialect.

It still remains for the Celtic student to classify Shelta in a definitive way. It may prove to be "Pictish," strongly influenced by the Gaelic of Ireland and Scotland. A comparison with Basque and the dialect of the Iberian tribes of Morocco might... bring affinities to light and thus establish the theory of its non-Aryan origin, but its strong kinship with Gaelic seems likely.

Sources:
Leland, Charles Godfrey. The Gypsies. Boston: Houghton, Millin, 1882.

Shemhamphorash

In the Talmud, the external term representing the hidden word of power, by whose virtues a new world might be. This word is lost to the human race, although even sounds approximating it have a magic power and can give to whomever pronounces them dominion in the spirit world.

Some of the old rabbis believed that the word of power contains 12 letters, others, 42, and yet others 72, but these are the letters of the divine alphabet, which God created from certain luminous points made by the concentration of the primal universal light. Shemhamphorash is, in fact, the name of this word.

In the Kabbala, the Shemhamphorash, or 72 syllabled name of God, is related to three verses of the Hebrew Bible, Exodus 14, 119-21. Each of these verses, in Hebrew, contains 72 letters. If one writes the 72 letters or verse 19 in correct order, and under them write the letters of verse 20 in a similar manner in reverse order, and then the letters in verse 21 in correct order below the first two, one creates 72 three-letter names. By adding either AL or IH to these names the names of the 72 angels of Jacob’s ladder were created.

This ancient Jewish mystical concept is somewhat paralleled by the ancient Hindu teachings of the creation of the world through the mystical triviable “AUM,” said to contain the origin of the alphabet and all sounds. related to such concepts are the use of certain letters and sounds known as mantras for magical purposes. (See also Nada; Yoga)

Sources:
Poncé, Charles. Kabalah: An Introduction and Illumination for

Shepard, Jesse Francis Grierson
(1848–1927)

Mystic, seer, author, and musical medium who performed before famous musicians and royal personages. His musical séances were held both in light and darkness. In darkness his renders were marvelous. He did not always actually play the piano: the music sometimes came through the shut keyboard.
He rendered duets and sang simultaneously in bass and sopranos. He also played the organ and sang in cathedrals. He could give trance addresses in English, French, German, Latin, Greek, Chaldean, and Arabic on any subject.

His full name was Benjamin Henry Jesse Francis Grierson Shepard. He was born on September 18, 1848 and was of Scottish-Irish descent but moved to the United States with his family in his first year. He spent his boyhood on the Illinois prairie.

At the age of 13 he became a pageboy to General John C. Frémont and made the acquaintance of both Generals Grant and Sherman.

When in his twenty-first year, he set out for Paris without any funds. Within a short time he became one of the most famous mediums in Europe, demonstrating psychometry, clairvoyance, prediction, and diagnosis of disease. He also displayed uncanny musical gifts. Without extensive formal training in music, he gave performances at the piano and claimed to be possessed by the spirits of Mozart, Beethoven, Meyerbeer, Rossini, Sontag, Persiani, Malibran, Lablache, Lissi, Berlioz, and Chopin. He performed to the rich, the famous, and the royal in Europe. The audience at one concert in Holland in 1894 included the duchess of Cumberland, the queen of Hanover, the reigning duke of Saxe-Altenburg, and the queen of Denmark.

In addition to his piano performances, Shepard sometimes sang, in every voice of sound from bass to soprano. Henry Kiddle, superintendent of schools in New York, was imprudent ear enough to state that he heard Shepard playing a splendid piano symphony under the control of Mozart, while at the same time delivering a learned philosophical discourse under the influence of Aristotle. Kiddle was forced to resign his position.

In Catherine Berry’s Experiences in Spiritualism (1876), historical fragments relating to Assyrian queen Semirami were published as recorded after Shepard’s trance statements under the control of an Egyptian spirit. In 1889 he published two volumes of which Maurice Maeterlinck declared that he knew nothing in literature more admirable or profound.

Prince Adam Wisniewski wrote in an account quoted by Light in 1894: “After having secured the most complete obscurity we placed ourselves in a circle around the medium, seated before the piano. Hardly were the first chords struck when we saw lights appearing at every corner of the room . . . The first piece played through Shepard was a fantasia of Thalberg’s on the air from “Semiramis.” This is unpublished, as is all the music which is played by the spirits through Shepard. The second was a rhapsody for four hands, played by Liszt and Thalberg with astounding fire, a sonority truly grand, and a masterly interpretation. Notwithstanding this extra ordinarily complex technique, the harmony was admirable, and such as no one present had ever known. The piece was played by Liszt himself, even by Liszt himself, and it is ded to the king of England.

In 1907, after his fabulous success in Europe and return visits to America, Shepard broke with his psychic connections and mediumship and settled in London, where he ceased his musical exhibitions and devoted himself to writing. He changed his name to Francis Grierson and made a reputation through his essays in both English and French. At the age of fifty, he published his book Modern Mysticism and Other Essays (1899), followed by The Celtic Temperament and Other Essays (1901). The latter work was adopted as a textbook by Japanese universities.
Other publications included The Valley of Shadows: Recollections of the Lincoln Country, 1858–63 (1909), Portraits (1910), La Vie et Les Hommes (1911), The Humoors of the Underman (1911), The Invisible Alliance (1915), Illusions and Realities of the War (1918), and Abraham Lincoln: The Practical Mystic (1918).

The quality of his literary work secured him a place in the prestigious Kunitz and Haycraft Twentieth Century Authors (1942). Many of Shepard’s readers were unaware of his earlier psychic activities until he published a Spiritualist pamphlet, Psycho-Phone Messages, in 1921.

In spite of Shepard’s mystical and artistic talents or perhaps because of his dedication to mystical insight rather than material things, he died in utter poverty. As an old man of 78, he died from hunger May 29, 1927, while a case worker from the Los Angeles Assistance League was knocking on his door. She was unaware of his glittering past as a musician or his fame as a writer. He had earlier pawned his last valuable—a watch given to him by the king of England.

Sources:
Grierson, Francis [Jesse Shepard]. Abraham Lincoln: The Practical Mystic. New York: John Lane, 1918.
Sherman, Harold (Morrow) (1898–1987)

Author, broadcaster, and lecturer in the field of parapsychology. Born July 13, 1898 in Traverse City, Michigan, he was educated at Traverse City High School and the University of Michigan. In 1920 he married Martha Frances Bain. Memberships include Authors League of America and the Dramatists Guild. After working as a freelance writer, he was employed at CBS-Radio in New York from 1935–36. He was founder and president of E.S.P. Research Associates Foundation, Little Rock, Arkansas from 1964 onward. He conducted experiments in clairvoyance, telepathy, psychokinesis, precognition, mediumsip, and survival; he lectured on ESP. With psychologist Leslie LeCron and scientists affiliated with the University of California, L.A., he investigated the question and the method of operation of ESP faculty. Sherman contributed articles to Mind Digest, Journal of Living, Success Unlimited, and Tomorrow.

By the age of twenty-two, Sherman authored approximately sixty books on such subjects as sports, adventure, and short stories, as well as books on extrasensory perception and mental power. He was also interested in the theater and produced plays and a Hollywood movie “The Adventures of Mark Twain.” His book Your Key to Happiness (1935) was presented on radio and he conducted a radio series on philosophy three times a week under the title “The Man Who Helped You to Help Yourself.”

Sherman died August 19, 1987, at Mountain View, Arkansas. One of his final messages to his many friends was, “I expect it will be a great moment when I greet you in the next dimension.”

Sources:

Shawer, Michael (1954– )

Michael Shermer, cofounder of the Skeptics Society, one of the major organizations debunking what it considers pseudo-scientific claims, especially of a psychic or occult nature, was born on September 8, 1954, in Glendale, California. He attended Pepperdine University, where he majored in psychology. He later received an M.A. in experimental psychology from California State University—Fullerton and a Ph.D. in the history of science from the Claremont Graduate School (1991).

During the 1980s Shermer launched a ten-year career as a professional cyclist, the high point of which was his participation in a 30,000-mile transcontinental Race Across America. His racing activity, which led to his first media appearances on various sports broadcasts, led to his first books, including Sport Cycling (1985), Cycling for Endurance and Speed (1987), The Woman Cyclist (with Elaine Mariolle, 1989), and Race Across America: The Agony and Glories of the World’s Toughest Bicycle Race (1994).

Shermer’s racing career coincided with a growing interest in the movement started by the Committee for the Scientific Claims of the Paranormal (CSICOP), based in Buffalo, New York. Though he was a member, he also felt that more could be done, and in January 1992, with Pat Linse and Kim Ziel Shermer, he founded the Skeptics Society, with its base in the Greater Los Angeles area. Several months later the first issue of Skeptic, a new periodical, joined the newsstand shelves next to CSICOP’s Skeptical Inquirer. Shermer envisioned the Skeptics Society as treating traditional pseudoscience issues concerning psychic and occult claims, but also was concerned with other boundary issues in science where no such paranormal element was present (cold fusion, cryonics, nanotechnology, etc.) as well as controversial issues in social science and history, such as Holocaust denial.

Shermer has supplied much of the energy that has seen the Skeptics Society, which he directs, grow into a significant organization challenging occult claims, and the Skeptic magazine, which he edits, gain national circulation. He has authored several related books, including Why People Believe Weird Things (1997), How We Believe: The Search for God in an Age of Science (2000), and Denying History (2000). He created the Skeptics Lecture Series at the California Institute of Technology and is an adjunct professor at Occidental College in Los Angeles. Shermer also put the media attention he gained in his cycling era to good use and has been a popular guest on talk shows. Most recently he has hosted a weekly radio show, “Science Talk,” on the NPR affiliate in Southern California and a national television show on the Fox Family Channel.

Sources:

Sherwood, Carlton M(ontgomery) (1895–1970)

Financial counselor also active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on April 12, 1895, in Buffalo, New York. After serving in the Army during World War I, he worked for various agencies, mostly Christian organizations, through the next two decades. They included the New York State Christian Endeavor Union (1919–27), the Citizens Committee of 100 (1926–36), and the International Society of Christian Endeavor (1926–34). He edited Christian Endeavor World (1930–34). After two years as the executive director of Associated Boards for Christian Colleges in China (1934–36) he began a long tenure as president of Pierce, Hedrick & Sherwood, counselors in institutional financing.

Over the years he became interested in psychical research. He joined and served on the boards of both the Parapsychology Foundation and the American Society for Psychical Research. He was also a member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, and chaired the Conference on Parapsychology and Psychedelics, New York, November 1958. He died on September 14, 1970.

Sources:

Shiatsu (or Shiatzu)
A Japanese term from the root words shi (fingers) andatsu (pressure). Shiatsu is an applied system of massage which, like acupuncture, seeks to release and facilitate the flow of vital life energy, known as Qi (chi in Chinese, ki in Japanese), within the body. Shiatsu incorporates a number of massage techniques, such as pressing, sweeping, rotating, and patting. More than techniques, however, shiatsu has been described as a dance of two, a touch communication between practitioner and client, grounded in the traditional Chinese medicine concept of balance.

In the 10th century, a contingent of Japanese monks reportedly traveled to China to study Buddhism. While there, they observed the tenets of traditional Chinese medicine. They learned of the Qi (analogous to kundalini in Hindu tradition), the balancing life concepts of yin and yang, plus the body’s energy pathways called meridians. They also gleaned the connections between the meridians, the five basic elements (earth, metal, water, fire, and wood) and corresponding organs of the body. The monks combined this acquired knowledge with the ancient medicinal practices of Japanese massage, which over time has become known as Shiatsu.

Shiatsu was introduced to the United States by individuals such as Wataru Ohashi, founder of Ohashiatsu. Ohashi was a protégé of Japanese psychologist and Zen student Shizuto Masunaga. Instrumental in the repeal of governmental restrictions on massage, Masunaga reincorporated psychological and spiritual dimensions to shiatsu. Another instrumental pioneer of Shiatsu was Tokujiro Namikoshi. Working as a masseur, he developed a chart comparable to the acupuncture chart, showing where the appropriate pressure could be applied to relieve pain in specific parts of the body, as well as affect underlying conditions.

In the United States a variation on shiatsu, jin shin jyutsu, has also been developed by Jiro Murai. Also closely related are the Chinese system of do-in and reflexology.

Sources:

Shiels, Tony (“Doc”)
Well-known contemporary magician who presents conjuring and mentalism in a setting of “psychic power.” In his publicity to fellow stage magicians, Shiels gives instructions on how “to bend metal in the Geller style . . . to teleport and levitate . . . to become a successful witch . . . to raise ghosts and poltergeists, etc.” However, Shiels also acknowledges the reality of PK and ESP as well as the effects produced by conjuring and mentalism. Shiels claims to have taken several photographs of the Loch Ness monster but most researchers have dismissed them as a hoax attempt. He has also been accused as the hoaxer behind some photos of fairies and Morgawr the Cornish sea serpent.

Sources:

Ship of the Dead
Similar to the idea of the death-coach is the belief that at times a phantom ship carries away the souls of men. In the form of a cloud-ship, or wrapped in a driving mist, it sails over mountains and moors, and at sea it sails without hindrance. A story is told of a certain pirate, at whose death a spectral ship approached in a cloud. As it sailed over the roof, the house was filled with a sound as of a stormy sea, and when the ship had passed by, the soul of the pirate accompanied it. (See also Flying Dutchman)

Shipton, Mother
Legendary British prophetess, supposed to have been born in the reign of King Henry VII and to have predicted the deaths of Cardinal Wolsey and Lord Percy, as well as other events. Her prophecies had a clarity quite unlike the cryptic verses of Nostradamus. Shipton was also credited with even more remarkable prescience in the following rhymed couplets:

“Carriages without horses shall go,
And accidents fill the world with woe.

Around the world thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye.
The world upside down shall be
And gold be found at the root of a tree.
Through hills man shall ride,
And no horse be at his side.

Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk.
In the air men shall be seen,
In white, in black, in green;
Iron in the water shall float,
As easily as a wooden boat.
Gold shall be found and shown
In a land that’s now not known.

Fire and water shall wonders do,
England shall at last admit a foe.
The world to an end shall come,
In eighteen hundred and eighty one.

These alleged prophecies occurred in a chapbook pamphlet published in 1862 by the bookseller Charles Hindley, who claimed that they were reprinted from an earlier chapbook by Richard Head titled The Life and Death of Mother Shipton, first published in 1864.
The final couplet about the end of the world caused a great deal of panic in country districts of Britain during 1881, with people leaving their houses and spending the night in the open fields or praying in churches and chapels.

Meanwhile Hindley had already confessed that these lines were a fabrication in 1873, but by then they had passed into folk tradition, and ordinary country folk did not read learned antiquarian journals. Even in modern times, these spurious prophecies of Hindley, which seem to predict automobiles, steamships, submarines, the telegraph, radio, and aircraft, are still often quoted as Shipton’s. (For details of Charles Hindley’s confession of having invented Shipton prophecies, see Notes and Queries, 4th series, vol. 9.)

Richard Head’s chapbook of 1684 contains an undoubtedly imaginary account of the birth of Shipton from a union between her mother Agatha and the Devil in Yorkshire, England. That account appears to be an embellished version of an earlier pamphlet of 1641 titled The Prophesy of Mother Shipton, In the Kagane of King Henry the Eigthth. Fortelling the death of Cardinal Wolsey, the Lord Percy and others, as also what should happen in ensuing tunes.

Four years later, the famous astrologer William Lilly published A Collection of Ancient and Moderne Prophecies that included what he called “Shipton’s Prophecy, after the most exact Copy.” This gave 20 prophecies attributed to Shipton, most of which were said to have been fulfilled.

There is no validation that these prophecies were actually made that Shipton was even a real person, but she rapidly became a folk heroine and even the subject of stage comedies. In The Life of Mother Shipton: A New Comedy (1660), the heroine and prophetess is named Agatha Shipton, daughter of Solomon Shipton. In a later work titled Mother Shipton and Nixon’s Prophecies (1797), she is stated to have been born in July 1488 and to have been baptized Ursula Sonthiel. This account added: “Her stature was larger than common, her body crooked, her face frightful; but her understanding extraordinary.”

Early chapbook portraits of Shipton represent her as an ugly woman with the characteristic hooked nose, chin, and humped back associated with Punch in the traditional Punch and Judy puppet show. Shipton is probably wholly legendary, and many prophecies attributed to her are spurious inventions.

Sources:

Shirley, Ralph (1865–1946)

Leading British pioneer in the publication of occult and mystical literature, Ralph Shirley was born at Oxford, England, December 30, 1865, of aristocratic stock, brother of the eleventh Earl Ferrers and a direct descendant of Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex. He was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, University.

For more than three decades (1892–1925) he was director of William Rider & Son, the foremost British publishers of literature dealing with occultism, mysticism, New Thought, astrology, psychological research, and related subjects. Rider’s authors included Eliphas Lévi, Arthur Edward Waite, Hereward Carrington, and Franz Hartmann in addition to many others who became legendary in the field.

In 1905, Shirley published The Occult Review, which he edited for 21 years. It included contributions from the leading occultists of the time and set a high standard of both popular and scholarly occultism. Shirley also became vice president of the International Institute for Psychic Investigation, for whom he edited Ernesto Bozzano’s important study Discarnate Influence in Human Life (1938).

It was in the pages of the Occult Review that Shirley published the important firsthand experiences of Oliver Fox (pseudonym of Hugh G. Callaway) on astral projection and out-of-the-body travel from April to May 1920. Shirley also published other pioneer writings on the subject, including his own book The Mystery of the Human Double: The Case for Astral Projection (1938; reprinted University Books, 1965).

Shirley had a special interest in astrology and had edited The Horoscope (under the pseudonym Rollo Irenton). From 1943 to 1944 he was chairman of the Spiritualist journal Light, but suffered from failing health and was obliged to retire. He also published a pamphlet The First, The Second, and the Third (1915) reviewing the legends that accumulated around Arthur Machen’s famous short story The Bowmen. He died December 29, 1946.

Sources:

Shivapuri Baba (Sri Govinananda Bharati) (1826–1963)

Hindu mystic who made a great impression on his biographer J. G. Bennett, who met him in 1961 when the sage was already a reported 135 years old. Bennett stated: “He was a saint who produced an immediate and uplifting effect on everyone who entered his presence.” Shivapuri Baba had a profound influence on many individuals during his long life, including Hindus, Buddhists, Moslems, and Christians.

When he was born, Britain was under the reign of George IV, and the future Queen Victoria was only a child of seven. Later in life, Shivapuri Baba visited England and made no fewer than 18 visits to Queen Victoria; he was possibly the first Indian holy man invited to meet the queen.

Shivapuri Baba was born in a Brahmin family in Kerala. His grandfather, a famous astrologer, announced that the boy would become a great sannyasin (renounce or wandering monk) and became his guru until about 1840. Shivapuri Baba decided to leave a worldly life in 1844, at age 18. After making a will leaving his rights of succession in his father’s property to his sister, he joined his grandfather in the forest of the upper Deccan, near the banks of the river Narbada. The grandfather insisted that after his own death, the boy should meditate until he obtained God-realization, then make a pilgrimage on foot not only through India, but also around the world, and he set aside money for this purpose.

After the death of his grandfather, the young man received initiation as a sannyasin and took the name of Govinananda Bharati. He then retreated to the Narbada forest and spent 25 years in absolute seclusion. During this period he was even completely unaware of the Indian Mutiny of 1856. At the age of 50, he achieved the beatific vision and became aware of the divine as absolute, beyond name and form, which in Hinduism is considered the highest and most difficult stage of God-realization. He then undertook his great pilgrimages.

He visited all the holy places of India, meeting Sri Rama-krishna and Sri Aurobindo. He went on to travel through Afghanistan and Persia, then made a pilgrimage to Mecca. After this experience of the Moslem shrine, he next traveled to Jerusalem, the holy city of Judaism and Christianity. He went on to Turkey, through the Balkans into Greece and then through Italy to Rome, so that he might better understand the Christian religion. After visiting most European countries, he was invited...
Showers, Mary (ca. 1857–?)

British materialization medium, daughter of General C. L. Showers of the Bombay Army. As a child she conversed with invisible people, sat for the first time in the circle of her family in the spring of 1872, produced raps and movement without contact, obtained poltergeist manifestations in daylight, performed direct writing, and saw spirit forms among which “John King” rose to prominence.

In 1874, Showers and her mother came from Teignmouth to London to give séances to representative Spiritualists. The test conditions in these early séances were taken charge of by the Spiritualist Society; one or two raps were produced and a table cloth would be placed in the cabinet. At a signal, the curtain of the cabinet was drawn aside and the medium was discovered tightly bound.

The usual materialized spirit form was a girl, “Florence,” who was eight inches taller than the medium, could vary her height, and was often seen by Florence Marryat together with the medium. Marryat describes these experiences in her book _There Is No Death_ (1891).

Marryat found herself so much in rapport with Showers that she wrote:

“We could not sit next each other at an ordinary tea or supper table when we had no thought of, or desire to hold a séance, without manifestations occurring in the full light. A hand that did not belong to either of us would make itself apparent under the table-cloth between us—a hand with power to grasp ours—or our feet would be squeezed or kicked beneath the table, or fingers would suddenly appear and whisk the food off our plates.”

An attempt at exposure of Showers was made on April 2, 1874, at the house of Edward William Cox. When “Florence” appeared between the curtains of the cabinet, Cox’s daughter Edwards opened the curtain wider. The spirit resisted in the struggle the headress fell off and revealed Showers. Cox, however, seemed satisfied that the medium was entranced and had unconsciously impersonated the spirit.

Although Cox may have believed that the medium was entranced, the episode cast strong doubts upon the genuineness of Showers’s phenomena. Cox himself reinforced such doubts in a letter dated March 8, 1876, to the medium D. D. Home (printed in full in Home’s _Light and Shadows of Spiritualism, London_, 1877).

“I am satisfied that a large amount of fraud has been and still is practiced. Some of it is, doubtless, deliberately planned and executed. But some is, I think, done while the medium is in a state of somnambulism, and therefore unconscious. As all familiar with phenomena of somnambulism are aware, the patient acts to perfection any part suggested to his mind, but wholly without self-perception at the time, or memory afterwards. But such an explanation serves only to acquit the medium of deliberate imposture; it does not affect the fact that the apparent manifestation is not genuine.

“The great field for fraud has been offered by the production and presentation of alleged spirit-forms. All the conditions imposed are as if carefully designed to favour fraud if contemplated, and even to tempt to imposture. The curtain is guarded at either end by some friend. The light is so dim that the features cannot be distinctly seen. A medium is often thrown over the body from head to foot is put on and off in a moment, and gives the necessary aspect of spirituality. A white band round head and chin at once conceals the hair, and disguises the face. A considerable interval precedes the appearance—just such as would be necessary for the preparations. A like interval succeeds the retirement of the form before the cabinet is permitted to be opened for inspection. This just enables the ordinary dress to be restored. While the preparation is going on behind the curtain the company are always vehemently exhorted to sing. This would conveniently conceal any sounds of motion in the act of preparation. The spectators are made to promise not to peep behind the curtain, and not grasp the form. They are solemnly told that if they were to seize the spirit they would kill the medium. This is an obvious contrivance to deter the onlookers from doing anything that might cause detection. It is not true. Several spirits have been grasped, and no medium has died of it; although in each case the supposed spirit was found to be the medium. That the detected medium was somewhat disturbed in health after such a public detection and exposure is not at all surprising. Every one of the five mediums who have been actually seized in the act of personating a spirit is now alive and well. There need be no fear for the consequences in putting them to the proof.

“But I have learned how the trick is done. I have seen the description of it given by a medium to another medium who desired instruction. The letter was in her own handwriting, and the whole style of it showed it to be genuine.

“She informs her friend that she comes to the séance prepared with a dress that is easily taken off with a little practice. She says it may be done in two or three minutes. She wears two shifts (probably for warmth). She brings a muslin veil of thin material (she gives its name, which I forget). It is carried in her drawers! It can be compressed into a small space, although when spread it covers the whole person. A pocket-handkerchief to England by Queen Victoria’s Indian Secretariat and had 18 private visits with the queen.

In 1901, after the death of the queen, Shivapuri visited the United States and met President Theodore Roosevelt. He spent two or three years in America before going to Mexico, where he met Porfirio Diaz before going on through the Andes to Colombia and Peru. After a period in South America, he embarked on a ship for the Pacific Islands, moving through New Zealand and Australia and visiting Japan in 1913. He then followed an ancient pilgrim route into Nepal, then back to India, visiting Benares. He traveled more than 25,000 miles, eighty percent on foot.

He then returned to his own home in Kerala as a wandering sannyasin after 70 years. He found no trace of his sister, who had also become a renunciate. He concluded remaining family affairs in 1921, by which time he had retired to the forests of Nepal. Although he was known as a holy man, equally at ease with the religions of Buddhism, Christianity, and Islam (a task made easier by Hindu ideas about the nature of religion), he insisted on remaining isolated, living in a small wooden hut without running water and only a tape genuine seekers. Those who saw him received a sense of inner peace and realization from him, and one visitor suggested that even the wild beasts of the forest were on friendly terms with him.

J. G. Bennett, a disciple of G. I. Gurdjieff who later promoted the mission of _Subud_, met the Shivapuri Baba in Easter 1901 and found him, at the age of 135 years, alert, quick, and graceful, with a phenomenal memory and an inspiring spiritual grace. With a certain code of life was required—a spiritual, moral, and intellectual order.

The pose of human life was to find the Ultimate Truth, or God, and was: “Live Right Life, Worship God. That is all. Nothing more.” He took a drink of water then said “Gaya” (I’m gone), laid down on his right side and passed away. His teaching of right living involved duty, morality, and worship. The sole purpose of human life was to find the Ultimate Truth, or God, and to this end a certain code of life was required—a spiritual, moral, and intellectual order.

Sources:

Showers, Mary (ca. 1857–(?))

British materialization medium, daughter of General C. L. Showers of the Bombay Army. As a child she conversed with invisible people, sat for the first time in the circle of her family in the spring of 1872, produced raps and movement without contact, obtained poltergeist manifestations in daylight, performed direct writing, and saw spirit forms among which “John King” rose to prominence.

In 1874, Showers and her mother came from Teignmouth to London to give séances to representative Spiritualists. The test conditions in these early séances were taken charge of by the Spiritualist Society; one or two raps were produced and a table cloth would be placed in the cabinet. At a signal, the curtain of the cabinet was drawn aside and the medium was discovered tightly bound.

The usual materialized spirit form was a girl, “Florence,” who was eight inches taller than the medium, could vary her height, and was often seen by Florence Marryat together with the medium. Marryat describes these experiences in her book _There Is No Death_ (1891).

Marryat found herself so much in rapport with Showers that she wrote:

“We could not sit next each other at an ordinary tea or supper table when we had no thought of, or desire to hold a séance, without manifestations occurring in the full light. A hand that did not belong to either of us would make itself apparent under the table-cloth between us—a hand with power to grasp ours—or our feet would be squeezed or kicked beneath the table, or fingers would suddenly appear and whisk the food off our plates.”

An attempt at exposure of Showers was made on April 2, 1874, at the house of Edward William Cox. When “Florence” appeared between the curtains of the cabinet, Cox’s daughter Edwards opened the curtain wider. The spirit resisted in the struggle the headress fell off and revealed Showers. Cox, however, seemed satisfied that the medium was entranced and had unconsciously impersonated the spirit.

Although Cox may have believed that the medium was entranced, the episode cast strong doubts upon the genuineness of Showers’s phenomena. Cox himself reinforced such doubts in a letter dated March 8, 1876, to the medium D. D. Home (printed in full in Home’s _Light and Shadows of Spiritualism, London_, 1877).

“I am satisfied that a large amount of fraud has been and still is practiced. Some of it is, doubtless, deliberately planned and executed. But some is, I think, done while the medium is in a state of somnambulism, and therefore unconscious. As all familiar with phenomena of somnambulism are aware, the patient acts to perfection any part suggested to his mind, but wholly without self-perception at the time, or memory afterwards. But such an explanation serves only to acquit the medium of deliberate imposture; it does not affect the fact that the apparent manifestation is not genuine.

“The great field for fraud has been offered by the production and presentation of alleged spirit-forms. All the conditions imposed are as if carefully designed to favour fraud if contemplated, and even to tempt to imposture. The curtain is guarded at either end by some friend. The light is so dim that the features cannot be distinctly seen. A medium is often thrown over the body from head to foot is put on and off in a moment, and gives the necessary aspect of spirituality. A white band round head and chin at once conceals the hair, and disguises the face. A considerable interval precedes the appearance—just such as would be necessary for the preparations. A like interval succeeds the retirement of the form before the cabinet is permitted to be opened for inspection. This just enables the ordinary dress to be restored. While the preparation is going on behind the curtain the company are always vehemently exhorted to sing. This would conveniently conceal any sounds of motion in the act of preparation. The spectators are made to promise not to peep behind the curtain, and not grasp the form. They are solemnly told that if they were to seize the spirit they would kill the medium. This is an obvious contrivance to deter the onlookers from doing anything that might cause detection. It is not true. Several spirits have been grasped, and no medium has died of it; although in each case the supposed spirit was found to be the medium. That the detected medium was somewhat disturbed in health after such a public detection and exposure is not at all surprising. Every one of the five mediums who have been actually seized in the act of personating a spirit is now alive and well. There need be no fear for the consequences in putting them to the proof.

“But I have learned how the trick is done. I have seen the description of it given by a medium to another medium who desired instruction. The letter was in her own handwriting, and the whole style of it showed it to be genuine.

“She informs her friend that she comes to the séance prepared with a dress that is easily taken off with a little practice. She says it may be done in two or three minutes. She wears two shifts (probably for warmth). She brings a muslin veil of thin material (she gives its name, which I forget). It is carried in her drawers! It can be compressed into a small space, although when spread it covers the whole person. A pocket-handkerchief...
pinned around the head keeps back the hair. She states that she takes off all her clothes except the two shifts, and is covered by the veil. The gown is spread carefully upon the sofa over the pillows. In this array she comes out. She makes very merry with the spiritualists whom she thus gulls, and her language about them is anything but complimentary.

"This explains the whole business. The question so often asked before was—where the robe could be carried! It could not be contained in the bosom or in a sleeve. Nobody seems to have thought of the drawers.

"But it will be asked how we can explain the fact that some persons have been permitted to go behind the curtain when the form was before it, and have asserted that they saw or felt the medium. I am sorry to say the confession to which I have referred states without reserve that these persons knew that it was a trick, and lent themselves to it. I am, therefore, forced to adopt such a formidable conclusion, although the so-called 'confession' was a confidential communication from one medium to another, and that they were imposed upon, and that it is easy to find how this was likely to be. The same suspicious precautions against detection were always adopted. The favoured visitor was an assured friend, one who, if detecting trick, would shrink from claiming the cheat. But one was permitted to enter. A light was not allowed. There was nothing but the "darkness visible" of the lowered gas rays struggling through the curtain. I have noted that no one of them ever was permitted to see the face of the medium. It was always 'wrapped in a shawl.' The hands felt a dress, and imagination did the rest. The revealer of the secret above referred to says that, when she took off her gown to put on her body!"

"The lesson to be learned from all this is, that no phenomena should be accepted as genuine that are not produced under strict test conditions. Investigators should be satisfied with no evidence short of the very best that the circumstances will permit."

Crooks’s reference to the means by which "spirit forms" were produced fraudulently in a “communication from one medium to another medium who had asked to be instructed how the trick was done” is thought by Trevor H. Hall (in his book The Spiritualists, London, 1962) to refer to Florence Cook and Mary Showers, who were known to each other and indeed collaborated with each other in a joint performance of fully materialized “spirit forms” at the house of Sir William Crookes. It is particularly significant that at the final séance with the phantom “Katie King” on May 21, 1874, Crookes himself noted that the face of the medium Florence Cook was covered with a red shawl, ostensibly to protect her from the effects of light, and that this established the separate identity of phantom and medium, seen together.

Although some sitters at the Crookes séances with Florence Cook noted marked similarities between the medium and the phantom “Katie King,” Crookes himself was at pains to establish specific differences. If the phenomena of Florence Cook was fraudulent, it is likely that her friend Showers was an accomplice at séances when the differences between medium and "spirit form" were apparent.

Both Trevor H. Hall and E. J. Dingwall are satisfied that the circumstantial evidence strongly indicates that Cook’s phenomena were fraudulent and that Showers was an accomplice. Their conclusion that such fraud was known to Crookes and that he connived at it, using the séances as a cover for an affair with Cook, is much more speculative, although it is undeniable that Crookes was tremendously impressed and captivated by the beauty of the materialized phantom "Katie King."

The story of the connections between Showers, Cook, and the investigations of Crookes and Cox is a complex one. The best sources are the writings of Hall and Dingwall.

Sources:

Shrine of Sothis

The Shrine of Sothis was a short-lived occult organization that made its public appearance in 1973 through ads placed in a variety of occult periodicals. It stressed a system of practical theurgy (magic) as the best form of communication between the individual and the inner self. It offered a set of lessons on the occult and magical disciplines, including the pentagram, the deities, initiation, reincarnation, black magic, divination, and the construction of talismans. Progressing through the lessons led the student to a realization of "the great concealed one," i.e., God.

The shrine was headquartered in San Francisco. After several years it dropped out of sight.

Shrine of the Eternal Breath of Tao/
Universal Society of the Integral Way

Organization founded by Master Ni, Hua Ching, who had studied Taoism as a child in China. He moved to Taiwan after the Chinese Revolution. He continued his studies and became a teacher of Taoism and related martial and healing arts. During the 1970s, he moved to the United States and began to teach in Los Angeles.

This Taoist teaching concerns a universal law of subtle energy response. According to Master Ni, everything in the universe is a manifestation of energy in either its grosser or more subtle states. An understanding of how to develop the proper response to the energies of one’s environment will bring harmony to one’s life. The practice of Taoist meditation, martial arts (kung fu and d’ai chi ch’uan), and medical practices (acupuncture and herbs) assist in attaining a balanced relationship to life. The universal law of response is claimed to be the basis of all spiritual practices.

The shrine is located in Los Angeles and sponsors the College of Tao and the Yo San University of Traditional Chinese Medicine. Website: http://www.usiw.org/.

Sources:

Shroud of Turin Research Project

Former project founded in 1978, with a membership of professionals, logistics support personnel, and physical scientists whom acted as principal investigators in research work being performed on the Turin Shroud.

The purpose of the project was to determine the physics and chemistry of both the cloth and image in order to verify or refute the authenticity of the Turin Shroud. The project conducted nondestructive testing and research and attempted to simulate and analyze various images and stains found on the Shroud.
through laboratory testings, including chemical analysis, infra-red spectroscopy and thermography, optical and ultraviolet reflectance and fluorescent spectroscopy, photography, X-radiography, and X-ray fluorescence.

The project reported findings in the form of technical papers to the scientific press, sought to coordinate all activities in the field, reviewed research proposals, and distributed funding. It published a quarterly called Update. The project was formally dissolved by the Connecticut Secretary of State in 1995.

Siberia

Siberia is a vast territory of northern Asia, part of the Commonwealth of Independent States (formerly the U.S.S.R.). It is bounded by the Urals on the west, by Kazakhstan, China, and North Korea on the south, by the Pacific on the east, and by the Arctic on the north.

In former times, most of the tribal cultures of Siberia practiced the art of sorcery through the expertise of the shaman. The definitive characteristic of the shaman, as opposed to other tribal ritual leaders, was the ability to go into trance and travel in the spirit world.

The Samoyeds of Siberia believed in the existence of an order of invisible spirits called tadibu. These were ever circling through the atmosphere and were a constant menace to the people, who were anxious to propitiate them. This propitiation could only be effected through the intervention of a tadibe, or necromancer, who, when his services were requisitioned, attired himself in a magic costume of reindeer leather trimmed with red cloth, a mask of red cloth, and a breastplate of polished metal. He then took a drum of reindeer skin ornamented with brass rings and, attended by an assistant, walked in a circle and invoked the spirits while shaking a large rattle. The practice was very similar to that found among the Lapps in Lapland.

As the noise grew louder the spirits were supposed to draw near the sorcerer, who addressed them, beating the drum with great violence, and appeared to be possessed by the spirits' influence, writhing and foaming at the mouth. All at once he stopped and oracularly pronounced the will of the spirits.

The tadibe’s office was a hereditary one, but a member of the tribe exhibiting special qualifications was adopted into the priesthood, and through fasts, vigils, and the use of narcotics and stimulants—in the same manner as employed by some Native Americans—came to believe that he or she was visited by the spirits. The initiate was then adopted as a tadibe in a midnight ceremony and invested with a magic drum.

Many of the tricks of the priesthood were merely those of ordinary conjuring, such as the rope trick, but some of the illusions were exceedingly striking. With their hands and feet tied together, the tadibe sat on a carpet of reindeer skin and, putting out the light, summoned the assistance of the spirits. Peculiar noises heralded the spirits’ approach, snakes hissed and demanding frequent sacrifices.

The Samoyeds sacrificed often to the dead and performed various ceremonies in their honor, but they believed that only the souls of the tadibes enjoyed immortality, hovering in the air and demanding frequent sacrifices.

Further to the east, inhabiting the more northerly part of Siberia, lived the Ostiaks, who nominally adopted the rites of the Greek church, but magic was also common among them. Many Ostiaks carried a kind of fetish they called sehaton.

Larger images of this kind were part of the furnishings of an Ostiak lodge, but they were attired in seven pearl-embroidered garments and suspended from the neck by a string of silver coins. In a strange sort of dualism they were placed in many of the huts cheek by jowl with the image of the Virgin Mary, and at mealtimes their lips were smeared with the blood of raw game or fish.

The Mongols, who inhabited the more southern parts of the vast expanse of Siberia, were also ancient practitioners of magic and relied greatly on divination. To prognosticate the weather they employed a stone endowed with magic virtues, called yadeh-tush, which was suspended over or laid in a basin of water with sundry ceremonies.

Many of the old beliefs and practices in Siberia died out following the Russian Revolution of 1917 and the subsequent development of the area. (See also Fetishism)

Sibley, Ebenezer (1751–1799)

Ebenezer Sibley, British astrologer, magician, and practitioner of herbal medicine, was born on January 30, 1751. He had a conservative upbringing in a Calvinist Baptist church and later attended the Aberdeen Medical College. He studied orthodox medicine, but also had an interest to study animal magnetism under Franz Anton Mesmer; he joined Mesmer’s Harmonic Philosophical School. Then Sibley also taught himself the basics of occultism. In 1784 he joined the Freemasons.

Sibley is best remembered for two books. In 1784 the first volume of his four-volume magnum opus, The Complete Illustration of the Celestial Art of Astrology, summarized the work of the previous century of astrological writing and became a steady seller for the rest of Sibley’s life in spite of the reviews. The Conjurers’ Magazine, the only occult periodical in England at the time dismissed it as derivative. The final volume, concerning magic, that appeared in 1792, presented an interesting variation on Emanuel Swedenborg’s vision of the spiritual world. According to Sibley, spirits live in another world that is neither heaven nor hell. Magic can summon only the evil spirit. Good spirits watch over humans, but do not respond to any summoning. Sibley went on to highlight seven good spirits that watch over human affairs and noted seven corresponding wicked spirits. He noted that since God had removed his wrath through Christ, these seven spirits made but few appearances.

The same year that his fourth volume was purchased, Sibley also completed A Key to the Physic and the Occult Sciences, a systematic statement of his occult philosophy. Like Mesmer, he suggested that the world was animated by a universal spirit, the operative agent in both astrology and healing work. This spirit works on matter and can be used by the magician for his purposes. This understanding would become standard for magical thought through the century and anticipates the more heralded work of Éliphas Lévi. Also included in the Key, published a supplement to the famous work on herbal medicine by Nicolas Culpepper.

Ebenezer’s brother Manoah Sibley became a prominent Swedenborgian minister.

Ebenezer Sibley styled himself an “astro-philosopher.” He claimed to have cast the horoscope of the forger-poet Thomas Chatterton, and to have predicted his fatal end, such as “death by poison.” Among various successful prognostications made through astrology, Sibley claimed to have foretold the American War of Independence in a symbolic picture in his book. Sibley was sufficiently enterprising to design a small notebook for astrologers, engraved from plates but with blank spaces for recording the positions of various planets and noting horoscopes.

Sources:

Sibley, Manoah (1757–1840)

Swedeborgian minister and astrologer, born in Bristol, England, on August 20, 1757, the younger brother of astrologer Ebenezer Sibley. Unlike his college-educated brother, Manoah Sibley had to study on his own from age 11, but through his teens he mastered several languages, which, along with shorthand, he taught through the 1760s and 1770s. He married in 1780 and opened a bookshop, which he and his wife managed. Sibley dropped his own work to align with the church that had been established in London by Robert Hindmarsh. Swedenborg’s teachings were received as the end of his spiritual quest and by Easter of the next year he began preaching. He was ordained in 1790. Hindmarsh, a former Methodist, modeled his church on that which was familiar to him. Sibley found his approach too restrictive and in 1793 he left to found his own Swedeborgian congregation. He preached weekly for the next forty years.

Apart from pioneering the beliefs of Emanuel Swedenborg in England, Sibley is most remembered today for his publication of translations of the writings of Claudius Ptolemy and Placidus. Sibley’s translation of The Tetrabiblos (four books) of Ptolemy, the major work from which Western astrology developed, appeared in 1786, and the writings of Placidus, whose system of arranging the astrological houses would come to dominate astrology in the next century, appeared in several volumes in 1789 and 1790.

Astrologers hail Sibley for making these works available and note their importance in directing the astrological revival in England in the nineteenth century. Critics have charged Sibley’s approach too restrictive and in 1793 he left to found his own Swedenborgian congregation. He preached weekly for the next forty years.

Sources:
Hindmarsh, Robert A. The Eight occult powers resulting from the practice of yoga, according to the system of Patanjali (ca. 200 B.C.E.). These powers are nirvikalpa (to become infinitely small at will), mahima (large), laghima (light), garima (heavy), prapatti (to reach anywhere), prakamya (to gratify any wishes), ishata (to create), and rashita (to command).

There are many accounts of Hindu yogis possessing and manifesting such powers, even in relatively modern times. However, at the same time the siddhis are regarded by many as obstacles to spiritual realization as they might distract the seeker from his or her true goal. In recent years, the Transcendental Meditation movement founded by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi inaugurated a controversial Siddha Course for advanced students and claimed the ability to teach students the power of levitation.

Sources:
Siderealist (Journal)

Former publication for professional astrologers and students concerned with sidereal aspects of astrology. Among astrologers, there are several systems of calculating the divisions of the horoscope chart and devising its relation to the actual stars that constitute the 12 signs of the zodiac. The sidereal zodiac places the division according to the present locations of these signs, which, because of a phenomenon known as the procession of the equinoxes, are constantly changing. In contrast, the tropical zodiac always measures the divisions from the position of the sun at the annual spring equinox. The Siderealist included charts of personal characteristics in relation to star patterns.

Siderite

An old name for a loadstone or magnet. The term has also been variously used to indicate a steel-colored stone (possibly sapphire), a blue-colored quartz, carbonate of iron, and meteorites containing iron.
Sideromancy

A branch of pyromancy (divination by fire), based on interpretation of the flame, smoke, and pattern of straws placed on a hot piece of iron.

Sidgwick, Eleanor Mildred Balfour (1845–1936)

Psychical researcher and president of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR). Sidgwick was born on March 11, 1845, the older sister of Arthur James Balfour (later British Prime Minister Premier) and Gerald William Balfour, both of whom were also elected president of the SPR. In 1876 she married Henry Sidgwick, who would go on to become a professor of moral philosophy at Cambridge and in 1882 the first president of the SPR. Though without formal training, she was of great intellect and began to participate in research alongside her husband. Her sister Evelyn Balfour married John William Strutt (Lord Rayleigh), also an SPR president.

Mathematics was her forte. With her brother-in-law Lord Rayleigh, she conducted several experiments in electricity and with him published three papers in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society. Lord Rayleigh later won the Nobel Prize for physics.

She joined the SPR, and in 1888 she assumed the duties formally assigned to her husband as editor of the society’s Journal and Proceedings. In the 1890s, deemed the best at handling large masses of information, she was placed in charge of the Census of Hallucinations and was the author of the final report. She was elected president of the SPR for 1908–09. After her term of office was finished, she acted as honorary secretary until 1931. At the society’s jubilee Celebrations in 1932, she was appointed as President d’Honneur. Over a 30 year period she collected and analyzed many communications that made up the bulk of the cross-correspondences.

Over the years she wrote a number of papers for the Journal and Proceedings of the SPR. She assisted Edmund Gurney, F. W. H. Myers, and Frank Podmore in the compilation of their key work Phantasms of the Living (2 vols., 1886) and edited an abridged edition in 1918. She also contributed the entry on Spiritualism to the 9th edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica (1875–89). She died February 10, 1936.

Sources:

Sidgwick, Henry (1838–1900)

First president of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London, a professor at Cambridge University who filled the chair of moral philosophy, and who once was described as “the most incorrigibly and exasperatingly critical and sceptical mind in England.” F. W. H. Myers (who pursued investigations with Sidgwick) and Edmund Gurney made their cooperation with the fledgling SPR contingent upon his acceptance of the presidential post.

Sidgwick was born May 31, 1838, at Skipton, Yorkshire, England. He attended Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge (fellow, 1859–69). In 1876, he married Eleanor Mildred Balfour, the sister of Arthur James Balfour, later British Prime Minister.

In his first presidential address to the SPR, on July 17, 1882, Sidgwick used plain words:

“We are all agreed that the present state of things is a scandal to the enlightened age in which we live, that the dispute as to the reality of these marvelous phenomena of which it is quite impossible to exaggerate the scientific importance, if only a tenth part of what has been alleged by generally credible witnesses could be shown to be true—I say it is a scandal that the disputes as to the reality of these phenomena should still be going on, that so many competent witnesses should have declared their belief in them, that so many others should be profoundly interested in having the question determined, and yet the educated world, as a body, should still be simply in an attitude of incredulity.”

He declared that he did not expect to produce evidence of a better quality than that of Sir William Crookes, Alfred Russell Wallace, and Augustus de Morgan, but wanted a great deal more of it. Speaking on scientific incredulity he concluded:

“We have done all that we can when the critic has nothing left to allege except that the investigator is in the trick. But when he has nothing else left he will allege that . . . We must drive the objector into the position of being forced either to admit the phenomena as inexplicable, at least by him, or to accuse the investigators either of lying or cheating or of a blindness or forgetfulness incompatible with any intellectual condition except absolute idiocy.”

For 18 years Sidgwick claimed an active share in the work of the SPR, contributed many important studies to the Proceedings, and helped the investigations by his personal means. He edited the society’s Journal in 1885.

He died without admitting any reality to either telekinesis or ectoplasm. But as early as 1864 he wrote to a Mr. Dakyns, a friend: “I (fancy I) have actually heard the raps . . .” and added: “However, I have no kind of evidence to come before a jury. So keep it still till I blaze forth.” He never blazed forth.

He had sittings with mediums Frank Hersie and Henry Slade and materialisation séances with C. E. Wood and Annie Fairlamb in his own home at Cambridge under the most stringent test conditions, as testified by Myers’s notes. Eleanor Sidgwick published an account of those she attended in the SPR Proceedings (vol. 4) and admitted that it was exceedingly difficult “but not perhaps impossible” to impute the results to imposture. In justice, however, it should be added that the most astounding and conclusive phenomena, according to Myers, occurred in the absence of both Sidgwicks.

It is more widely known that Sidgwick was impressed by the phenomena of Eusapia Palladino, which he witnessed with his wife on the Ile. Roubaud in 1894, as the guest of Charles Richet. During the latter part of Palladino’s stay there, her phenomena were less spectacular, and he then took a leading part in the sittings held at Cambridge in 1895 that resulted in her exposure. He had a number of sittings with Leonora Piper in 1889–90 and retained the keenest interest in her trance phenomena.

He died August 28, 1900. The first communications purporting to come from Sidgwick after his death were obtained... through Rosina Thompson on January 11, 1901. According to J. G. Piddington, who was present, the diction, manner, and voice were astonishingly lifelike, and he felt that he was indeed speaking with and hearing the voice of the man he had known. The written communications that followed the oral one bear a striking resemblance to Sidgwick's handwriting. The first such script was received through Thompson in Piddington's presence. Subsequent messages, of varying evidential value, were received through the hand of Margaret Verral.

Sources:

Sierra, Ralph U(son) (1904–1982)

Chiropractic doctor who conducted research in parapsychology. Sierra was born December 6, 1904, in San Juan, Puerto Rico, and graduated from Atlantic States Chiropractic Institute of New York. He was a physical therapist at Kings County Hospital, Brooklyn, New York (1935–47), an instructor in neurology at Atlantic States Chiropractic Institute (1947–49), and a lecturer on healing and natural sciences. He wrote the Handbook of Neurology, a chiropractic text. Sierra investigated respiratory and diaphragmatic changes in mediums during manifestation of phenomena. He died in November of 1982.

Sources:

Sigil

A sign or seal for an occult entity. Sigils, especially those that are the marks of angels, deities, or demons, are often used on amulets and talismans. According to occultists, such signs are like the signatures of gods and other supernatural entities, and the inscribing of such sigils evokes the entities that they symbolize. (See also Yantra)

In this century, the art of creating sigils was recreated by artist-magician Austin Osman Spare. He saw in sigils a means of concentrating the magical will. He would write his magical intention or will down in a sentence or word, and then combine the major letters (without repeating any letter) into a patterned shape, the sigil. The symbolic shape thus created could be impressed upon the subconscious for working magic.

Sources:

Signs (Paranormal)

At various moments in history and in times of great stress, suffering, and persecution, reports of paranormal signs (believed to portend great events) frequently emerged. Under these conditions it was not unusual for ecstatic states to become epidemic, prophecies to be uttered, and unusual physical phenomena to appear. Many of these reports appear to be a mixture of misobservation of mundane if unusual occurrences and hallucinations. The ancient historians Josephus and Tacitus wrote of fearful sights and great signs from heaven before the judgment on Jerusalem. When, three centuries later, Julian the Apostate attempted to rebuild Jerusalem, fiery balls burst forth upon the workmen and took strange shapes. This was recorded not only by Julian’s own historian but by Jewish and non-Roman writers as well. Many accounts testify of the signs and wonders during the persecution of the Huguenots in France.

From the dawn of printing onward, unnatural events and prodigies of nature became the subject of broadside ballads, pamphlets, and chapbook pamphlets, the street literature of poor people. Monstrous births and other signs and wonders were made the occasion for moralizing about the sins of the day and predicted divine judgment. Even in modern times, visions of the Virgin Mary are often considered signs of divine wrath at a sinful world. (See also Fatima; Garabandal)

Sources:
- Eniatos, Mihailis Anous; or, The Year of Prodigies and Wonders; Being a Collection of Several Signs That Have Been Seen in the Heavens, in the Earth, and in the Waters, Together with Many Remarkable Accidents and Judgments. . . . Within the Space of One Year Last Past. London, 1661.

Silberhartz, Allen (1947– )

Allen Silberhartz, the host of the national New Age television show Bridging Heaven and Earth, was born on February 28, 1947, in New York City. He grew up in a Jewish home and had his Bar Mitzvah at age 13. He completed his degree at the University of Pennsylvania (1967), where he majored in accounting, and earned a law degree at George Washington University (1971). He moved to rural Maryland, where he joined a commune residing on an organic farm. While there he learned to practice meditation which has subsequently remained a part of his daily schedule.

Having joined the bar in Maryland, in 1975 Silberhartz began practicing law, but in 1980 moved to Santa Barbara, California, where he became an investment counselor. During his Maryland years, he had had a profound mystical experience of oneness that changed his outlook on life and that he has since sought to manifest in all his various activities. In 1985 he began to teach meditation and spiritual development. He became close friends with another independent spiritual teacher named Wistancia.

In 1995, along with Wistancia and a group of spiritual friends, he launched a television show on the local community access station in Santa Barbara. The show grew out of a conversation reflecting upon the negativity that appeared to dominate many of the daytime talk shows then running on national television. Silberhartz and his colleagues attempted to put together a show that would be positive and uplifting and reflect his own experience of oneness which he had come to feel transcended any particular organizational expression. In the beginning, he and Wistancia served as cohosts, but since 1997 he has been the sole host.

By the end of the decade, Bridging Heaven and Earth had become a national show, having been picked up on a number of community access stations. Silberhartz continues his financial counseling work and role as a teacher.

Sources:

Silbert, Maria (d. 1936)

Austrian physical medium of Waltendorf, near Graz, mainly known for telekinesis, stigmata, apport, and trance phenomena. As a child she reportedly could predict future events, but her later physical powers were developed at the expense of her clairvoyant abilities.

Her apports were preceded by remarkable lights resembling lightning strokes. A deceased doctor, calling himself “Franciscus Nell,” was her chief control. One of his curious demonstrations was engraving cigarette cases with his name when they were held under the table. However, such a feat is more reminiscent of conjuring than paranormal phenomena. Paul Sinner recorded in Psychic Science (January 1931) some sittings in which, while the medium’s hands were visible above the table, the engraving feat was demonstrated five times in succession; additions being scratched on the same cigarette case on his request.

Silbert’s standing on the Continent was high. But except for her three visits to the British College of Psychic Science in London, she did not have the good fortune to sit with sympathetic British investigators. Walter Franklin Prince, of the Boston Society for Psychical Research, published a negative report after two sittings in Graz in 1927. Theodore Besterman, in an account of a personal investigation in November 1928 (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 38), admitted some interesting phenomena that he could not explain but nevertheless concluded fraud.

During 1925, the British psychical researcher Harry Price was in Graz, and on November 3 he attended a sitting with Silbert. Various objects, including Price’s gold cigarette lighter, were placed under the table. The lighter suddenly appeared on top of the table with the word “well” engraved on it. Price obtained permission to look under the table to see the movement of the objects. After 30 minutes he saw Silbert’s right foot outside her shoe with her toes visible where the end of a stocking had been cut off. Price was satisfied that the medium used her toes to handle objects. He did not accuse the medium of fraud because he was hoping to make further investigations later, and because he learned that five other individuals who had publicly criticized Silbert had suffered inexplicable misfortunes. (Price believed that Silbert actually possessed some paranormal powers, especially in regard to the raps she produced.) Silbert died in September 1936.

Silva, Edivaldo Oliveira (ca. 1930–1974)

Brazilian Spiritist healer specializing in psychic surgery. Born in Vitória da Conquista, Bahia, he became a schoolteacher, taxidermist, and entomologist. In his later years he studied medicine and law, hoping thereby to qualify as a doctor so that his spiritual healing would be secured against prosecution for illegal medical practice. Although brought up as a Roman Catholic, he was an unconventional Christian who did not endorse the monopoly of the church authorities and developed his own personal theological approach. He did not claim to be formally aligned to Spiritism, the Brazilian form of Spiritualism, although his healing work was ascribed to spirit controls.

He first discovered his healing abilities in 1962, when he visited a neighbor who had a fit of temporary insanity. Silva went into a trance and was taken over by a spirit personality, becoming very violent. When he recovered normal consciousness, his neighbor had been cured.

Later, Silva visited a Spiritist center where he again went into trance, discovering on his way home that he had performed psychic surgery while in this state. Over the next ten years, he performed psychic healing on some 65,000 individuals.

During his healing sessions, Silva went into a trance-like condition while his spirit controls performed the work. He only learned the details of his healing afterward from conversations, photographs, or tape recordings. His spirit controls consisted of an international team that included “Dr. Galazans,” “Pierre” (a Frenchman), and “Dr. Fritz” (a German), as well as an Englishman, a Japanese person, an Italian, and a Brazilian.

Silva believed that the psychic surgery operated on two planes—plasmic and ectoplasmic. In the former, red globules were actually separated from the plasma; in the latter, the operation was on a subtle body rather than a physical body. As with other psychic surgeons, he would make instantaneous incisions that were afterward apparently paranormally healed.

Silva was investigated by author Guy Lyon Playfair, a member of the Brazilian Institute for Psycho-Biophysical Research, who spent two years studying Brazilian healers firsthand. Two operations were performed on Playfair himself, who also witnessed the making of an incision in another patient and was allowed to place his fingers into the hole before the flesh was reunited.

Silva performed over 10,000 psychic operations during his lifetime. He died in 1974 after being involved in a car accident.

Sources:

Silvester II, Pope (d. 1003)

Silvester II (Gerbert), a distinguished scholar, statesman, and pope (999–1003 C.E.), was one of a number of popes from the tenth century on who were regarded as sorcerers. It was said that Silvester had evoked a demon who obtained for him the papacy, and who further promised him that he should die only after he had celebrated High Mass in Jerusalem.

One day while he was saying mass in a church in Rome, he felt suddenly ill, and, remembering that he was in a church called the Holy Cross in Jerusalem, suddenly knew that the demon had played him a trick. Before he died, he confessed to his cardinals his compact with the devil. However, as Silvester had been preceptor of two monarchs, and a friend of others, it is more likely that he owed his preference to one of these.

He was one of the most learned men of his day, proficient in mathematics, astronomy, and mechanics. He introduced clocks, and some writers credit him with the invention of arithmetic. It is not at all improbable that his scientific pursuits and the technical language involved might have appeared to the less educated to savor of magic. The brazen head that the chronicler William of Malmesbury, and later the chronicler Roger Bacon, ascribed to questions in an oracular manner, probably had its origin in a similar misinterpretation of scientific apparatus. It also recalls folk stories of the wonderful brazen head of Roger Bacon.

There is no lack of picturesque detail in some of the stories told of Silvester. He was said to have discovered buried treasure by the aid of sorcery and to have visited a marvelous underground palace, whose treasures and splendor vanished at the touch. His tomb was believed to possess the powers of sorcery and to shed tears when one of the succeeding popes was about to die.
Simmonite, William Joseph (ca. 1800–ca. 1862)

Prominent leader of the nineteenth-century astrology revival in England. Little is known of Simmonite’s life prior to his appearance as a schoolteacher in Sheffield, England, in the 1830s. He knew several languages and was a mathematician. He appears also to have practiced herbal medicine. His first book, The Practical Self-teaching Grammar of the English Language, appeared in 1841.

Simmonite emerged as an astrologer in the mid-1840s with the publication of his first astrological text, Prognostications on Revolutions, or Solar Figures (1845). He continued to write through the remainder of his life, greatly expanding the minuscule number of books available to would-be astrologers of the time. His books went through many editions and were published in the United States at the end of the century as the American phase of the astrology revival commenced. His work was noted for its erudite cast. Simmonite is also credited with simplifying the nature of the calculations required to construct a horoscope chart.

Simmonite lived into the early 1860s, but the date and place of his death are unknown.

Sources:

Simon Magus (ca. 67 C.E.)

Founder of the heterodox sect of Simonites, often identified with the sorcerer mentioned in the New Testament (Acts 8) who was said to have bewitched the people of Samaria and made them believe that he was possessed of divine power.

He was born in Samaria or Cyprus and was among the number of Samaritans who came to Philip for baptism after being rebuked by him with a loud cry, crashed to the earth and broke into more than 50 languages. His most well-known books include: The Jungle (1906), King Coal (1917), The Brain Check (1919), The Goose Step (1923), Oil (1927), Between Two Worlds (1941), Presidential Agent (1944), Presidential Mission (1947), and O Shepherd Speak (1947).

In his book Mental Radio: Does it Work, and How? (1930), he detailed his investigations into the phenomena of telepathy with his wife, Mary Craig Sinclair. The book, to which William McDougall wrote the introduction to the English edition and Albert Einstein to the German edition, presents a lively account of the abilities of Mary Sinclair as a sensitive, or psychic. She first became aware of her powers after the death of several intimate friends. They were further awakened by her contact with Jan, a Pole, who had studied yoga in India and performed some of the feats of the fakirs. He was, for some time, a guest in the Sinclair home.
Upton Sinclair himself was, for some time, irritated by his wife's gift. In the waking state and in her dreams she could follow her husband and describe his doings. Finally he decided to experiment. The usual method was to make half a dozen drawings of anything that came into his mind. These were folded. His wife, in a dark room, would take them one by one, place them on her abdomen and then write or draw her impression.

The curious thing was that sometimes the second drawing was registered on her mind before she finished with the first one. When, for instance, a necktie was drawn, she added puffs of smoke at the end of the tie. The next object was a burning match.

Sinclair concluded:

"We have something more than telepathy, for no human mind knows what drawings she has taken from that envelope. No one knew beforehand but her own mind what he is thinking of. Either there is something super-human in her mind or else there is something that comes from the drawings, some way of 'seeing' other than the way we know and use all the time."

Walter Franklin Prince made the Sinclair experiments the subject matter of the sixteenth bulletin of the Boston Society for Psychic Research, dealing also with a great deal of unpublished material and giving an account of a series of control tests with ten different persons. Upton Sinclair died November 25, 1968.

Sources:

Sindonology

Term given to studies relating to the Turin Shroud, a burial shroud that some people have promoted as the one in which Jesus was wrapped after his crucifixion. A first Sindonological Congress, held in Turin in 1939, was attended by scholars, primarily Roman Catholic, who supported the claims of the Shroud, though the majority of those who have studied the cloth have pronounced it a product of the Middle Ages.

Sinnett, Alfred Percery (1840–1921)

British journalist and occultist who played an important part in the affairs of the Theosophical Society during its first generation. He was born on January 18, 1840, in London. His father was a journalist and his mother a writer who had published numerous books. Sinnett became a journalist himself at the age of 19, working on the staff of the London Globe. Later he went to Hong Kong, where he became editor of the Daily Press. He returned to England in 1868 and became a writer on the Standard, then traveled to India to take a position as editor of the Pioneer in Allahabad in 1871.

He wrote some articles on Spiritualism, which led to a meeting with Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Henry S. Olcott, founders of the Theosophical Society. Sinnett and his wife Patience became members. The subsequent publicity given to Theosophy in the Pionees assisted its membership growth, but it cost Sinnett his job. He returned to London in 1883, where he became friendly with Frederic W. Myers, who (with Edmund Gurney and Henry Sidgwick) had founded the Society for Psychical Research a year earlier.

For a period, Sinnett was vice president of the Theosophical Society, but his independent views made it difficult for him to cooperate fully with other officials, although Sinnett's book The Occult World had attracted many individuals to the society. During his association with the society, Sinnett received a number of Mahatma letters, supposedly from the mysterious Masters who had directed the formation of the society. Sinnett’s book Esoteric Buddhism was said to have derived from communications from the “Master K. H.” on human evolution and cosmogony.

By 1887, Sinnett and his wife had formed associations with the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, the pioneering ceremonial magic society. In 1896 the poet William Butler Yeats, a prominent member of the Golden Dawn, wrote that Sinnett was in charge of the order's neophytes. Sinnett was also friendly with the important occult and mystical writer Arthur Edward Waite, and with Mary A. Atwood, who sent Sinnett her library of alchemical texts.

Sinnett died June 26, 1921, at the age of 81. He had written a number of books, including many that grew out of his theosophical experience.

Sources:

Sirens

The sea nymphs of Greek mythology whose hypnotically sweet song lured mariners to their deaths. The island of the sirens had a meadow strewn with the bones of the victims of these deadly nymphs. In Homer's Odyssey, Odysseus has to steer his vessel past the island and takes the precaution of having his men fill their ears with wax to avoid hearing the siren song, while he himself is lashed to the vessel's mast. Jason and his band of heroes also had to sail past that island, but Orpheus sang so sweetly that he drowned out the song of the sirens. After Orpheus's song vanquished them, the sirens sprang into the sea and became rocks.

The sirens, two or three in number, were said to be the offspring of Phorcys or Achelous, and were part women, part birds. Some believed they were unhappy souls of the dead, envious of the living. The modern story of the Lorelei has something in common with the myths of the sirens.

The Sirius Mystery

Title of a book by Robert K. G. Temple (1972), discussing his discovery that a primitive African tribe, the Dogon of Mali in former French Sudan, apparently had been aware for centuries that the Dog Star Sirius was orbited by a white dwarf neighbor invisible to the naked eye and only recently discovered by astronomers. Temple claimed that this knowledge of the Dogon tribe was five thousand years old, that the white dwarf was known also to the ancient Egyptians in pre-dynastic times prior to 3200 B.C.E., and that the Dogon people may have par-
Sisters of the Amber

The Sisters of the Amber was an early New Age network around Merta Mary Parkinson. Parkinson headed two interlocking networks. The Dena Foundation catered to the general audience. The more committed female members were invited to be part of the Sisters of the Amber. Parkinson was intrigued by the healing power of amber, and she sent a piece of the fossil resin to each of the women who dedicated themselves to be linked to each other in a life of loving service.

Parkinson was among the early supporters of the Universal Link network, which developed in England in the 1960s and was active in the United States into the 1980s. She wrote several books, but her loosely organized network died soon after her death in 1983.

Sitchin, Zecharia

Zecharia Sitchin, an author of books offering an alternative history of the extraterrestrial origins of ancient humanity, was born in the 1920s in Baku, Russia. Soon after his birth his family moved to Palestine, where he grew up. He learned a variety of Near Eastern languages including Hebrew and Sumerian. He moved to England for college and attended both the London School of Economics and the University of London, from which he graduated with a degree in economics. He returned to Palestine, where he became a journalist. During World War II (1939–45) he served in the British Army. He moved to the United States in the mid-1950s.

In the 1970s, Sitchin's lifelong interest in the archeology of the Middle East culminated in a book, The 12th Planet, published in 1976. It appeared at the height of the ancient astronaut controversy that had been generated by claims of Erich von Däniken that he had discovered evidence of the presence of UFOs and extraterrestrials in the artifacts from various ancient cultures. Sitchin, out of his knowledge of ancient languages, proposed a new option concerning ancient history and lifted the debate to a new level. While the debate generated by von Däniken had been most supportive of Sitchin, attempted independently to verify Sitchin's hypothesis with his own research. In the end, however, he too abandoned Sitchin after encountering astronomical data suggesting the impossibility of some of Sitchin's claims about the way that Nibiru's close approach affected the Earth. He subsequently has produced a significant variant hypothesis that nevertheless retains much of Sitchin's alternative approach to history.

Sitchin resides in New York City. He has an Internet site: http://www.crystalinks.com/sitchen.html. There are a number of additional sites that discuss Sitchin's work.

Sources:
- Allen F. Alford, whose 1998 book Gods of the New Millennium had been most supportive of Sitchin, attempted independently to verify Sitchin's hypothesis with his own research. In the end, however, he too abandoned Sitchin after encountering astronomical data suggesting the impossibility of some of Sitchin's claims about the way that Nibiru's close approach affected the Earth. He subsequently has produced a significant variant hypothesis that nevertheless retains much of Sitchin's alternative approach to history.

Situ See Society for the Investigation of the Unexplained

Sivananda, Swami (1887–1963)

One of the most influential modern Hindu spiritual teachers, whose most important contribution was the wedding of the traditional concept of sanyasa, the renounced life, with social service directed toward people in need. Born Kuppuswami in 1887 in Tampere, Tamil Nadu, he was son of Vengu Iyer, a revenue official and devotee of the Hindu deity Siva. Kuppuswami was educat ed in Ettayapuram, attending the Rajah's High School, where he was a good scholar and proficient in athletics. In 1903 he matriculated and went on to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel College at Tiruchirappalli.

In 1905 he entered the Tamil Medical Institute but was obliged to leave when the death of his father made it financially impossible to continue at the institute. He moved back to Tiruchirappalli, where he started a medical journal, Ambrosia, in 1909. Soon afterward, he supplemented his small income from the journal by working at a pharmacy in Madras.

In 1913 Kuppuswami decided to take up medical work in Malabar, where he earned a reputation for combining medical work, spiritual observance, and selfless service to the poor. By 1920 he was working with three European doctors and managing a hospital. He became a member of the Royal Institute of Public Health, London, a member of the Royal Asiatic Society, London, and an associate of the Royal Sanitary Institute, London. In addition he published several books, including Household Remedies, Fruits and Health, Diseases and their Tamil Terms, Obstetric Ready Reckoner, and Fourteen Lectures on Public Health.

During his spare time, he studied traditional yoga and Vedanta, spending much time in meditation. In 1923 he became increasingly preoccupied with the desire to realize spiritual truth. He gave up his job and returned to India. He became a religious mendicant, making pilgrimages to Varanasi (Bena- re), Poona, Nasik, Pandharpur, and Hardwar, staying at ashrams. In Rishikesh in northern India, a traditional holy place, he was formally initiated as a sannyasi, or renunciate, by Swami Viswananda, an elderly monk, and became Swami Sivananda Saraswati on June 1, 1924.

For some time, he lived at Swargashram by the side of the river Ganges, subjecting himself to intense spiritual discipline and using his medical knowledge to help the sick. He also made pilgrimages to Kedarnath and Badrinath, holy places high in the Himalayan mountains. He excited great enthusiasm by his popular lectures, inspiring chanting and singing of spiritual verses. In 1933 he was invited to attend the birthday celebration of Swami Ram Tirtha in Lucknow, and he subsequently traveled through India inspiring a great spiritual revival.

Returning to Rishikesh, he established an ashram in abandoned cowsheds on the banks of the Ganges in March 1934. With the help of disciples and supporters, the humble premises, named Ananda Kutir (hut of bliss), grew into a large self-contained community with a temple, hospitals, a pharmacy, a printing press for literature, and even a post office. As the Dive Life Society, the ashram sent its spiritual literature all over the world.

The rapid and successful establishment of the ashram was accelerated by the swami's dynamic personality and an astonishingly simple financial routine involving the spending of all donations on the day of receipt. Hindu swamis traditionally renounce the accumulation of wealth, so all contributions were immediately applied to practical purposes—feeding the sadhus of the district, maintaining hospital and medical treatment for the poor, leper relief, building huts, and developing a printing department for literature.

Integral yoga, Sivananda's unique system, which combined the practices of the various branches of traditional yoga, and Vedanta were propagated in hundreds of books and pamphlets and in the several magazines issued by the swami. They were often printed on poor-quality paper in quaint English as well as in the vernacular, yet they powerfully influenced thousands of devotees all over the world.

The Sivananda Ashram or Divine Life Society became a kind of Shangri-La in the foothills of the Himalayas, a half unreal world poised between past and present, between materialism and religion, between popular and advanced teaching. Part of its strange power lay in its paradoxical contrasts as a world in miniature, where high government officials and maharajahs rubbed shoulders with wandering mendicants, saints, and rogues. Each day, the swami would receive visitors and resident monks, giving instructions with a few succinct words, a gift, or a good-humored joke. In the evening, he would preside over Satsang (association of the wise), a kind of religious meeting at which visitors, Indian or Western, were encouraged to lecture, sing, dance, or tell a joke. Many individuals underwent a sudden uprush of spiritual awareness in this highly charged atmosphere.

Sivananda was credited with many miracles, and his teaching was often manifested obliquely in the collective unconscious of the ashram itself. The key to someone's problem might come from a casual remark from a stranger or the events of the day. One of the quaint but practical motifs of the swami was, "Do it now!" In the same succinct manner, he conditioned all religious teachings of various creeds to the simple formula, "Serve—Love—Give—Purify—Meditate—Realise. Be Good—Do Good—Be Kind—Be Compassionate. Inquire 'Who am I?'—'Know the Self, and Be Free'!"

Many swamis now well known in the Western world were disciples of Swami Sivananda or were influenced by his teachings. These include Swami Vishnudevananda (famous teacher of hatha yoga), Swami Venkateshanananda, Swami Hridayananda (a woman, formerly an eye surgeon), Swami Satchidananda (founder of Integral Yoga Institute), Swami Jyotir Maya Nanda, Swami Nadabrahmananda (famous for his application of yoga principles to music), and Swami Sivananda Radha (Western founder of the Yasodhara Ashram).

After the death of Swami Sivananda on July 14, 1963, his successor as president of the ashram was his leading disciple, Swami Chidarananda, the secretarial work continuing in the hands of Swami Krishnaananda.

Sivananda wrote a great number of books, and several biographies about him have been published. There are also two recordings of life at the Sivananda Ashram: The Sounds of Yoga-Vedanta: Documentary of Life in an Indian Ashram (Folkways Records, 33 1/3 rpm, Album 8970) and SOUNDS OF SIVANANDA ASHRAM, volumes 1 and 2 (two C60 cassette tapes), issued by Ashram Records, Box 9, Kootenay Bay, BC, Canada VOB 1X0.

Sources:

Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers See International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers

Sixth Sense

The theory of the existence of a sixth sense as a convenient explanation of paranormal phenomena was first put forward in the era of animal magnetism by Tardéd le Monravel in his Essai sur la Théorie du Somnambulisme Magnétique (1785). Departing from his mesmerist contemporaries, he considered the sixth sense as the source and sum of all our partial senses. (His colleagues attempted to explain clairvoyance and precognition by positing the existence of a "magnetic fluid.")

More recently the sixth sense has been given prominence as Charles Richet's comprehensive term for the phenomena of telepathy, clairvoyance, psychometry, premonition, prediction, crystal gazing, and phantasmal appearances. They were, in Richet's view, manifestations of a new unknown sense that perceives the vibrations of reality. The conception is largely an attempt to do away with the spirit hypothesis, making its invocation unnecessary. Richet admitted, however, that the working of this sense is incomprehensible when a choice has to be made between vibrations of reality, for instance in the case of a book test, when the sensitive is called upon to read a certain line on a certain page in a certain book that nobody has opened.

His main argument in favor of his theory was that the hypothesis of the sixth sense as a new physiological notion contradicted nothing that we learn from physiology, whereas the spirit hypothesis does. A hint of Richet’s term survived in the concept of extrasensory perception as used by J. B. Rhine.

Sources:

The Skeptic (Newsletter)

Newsletter issued by a group associated with CSICOP (the Committee for Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal) and formerly named The British & Irish Skeptic. It is published four times a year, and the first issue (January/February 1987) included notes on the James Randi exposure of faith healer Peter Popoff, Ireland’s claimed phenomena of Marian apparitions at Knock, and moving statues. The newsletter is edited by Wendy M. Grossman, at The Skeptic, PO Box 475, Manchester M60 2TH, England. Website: http://www.cix.co.uk/~philmck/skeptic/

Sources:

Skeptics Society

The Skeptics Society, one of the major American groups challenging claims to paranormal and supernatural reality which it considers largely in the realm of pseudoscience, was founded in 1991 by Michael Shermer, Pat Linse, and Kim Ziel Shermer. Michael Shermer, formerly a professional cyclist, completed his Ph.D. in the history of science in 1991. A former member of the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal (CSICOP), he felt that much more could be done in public education in this area by an organization that was located in the media nexus of Los Angeles and aggressively used radio and television as educational tools. He also wanted to launch a periodical that would allow for articles presenting more in-depth treatments of subjects and original research articles. Shortly after its founding, the society launched a quarterly newsstand magazine, Skeptic, which has a circulation of 40,000.

While focused upon claims of a psychic or occult nature, and the investigation of claims of supernatural miracles, the society has also involved itself in a variety of controversial issues of a scientific, psychological, historical, and religious nature, where no claim of paranormal or miraculous phenomena is present. Thus, while attacking such phenomena as claims to spirit contact or UFOs, the society has also attacked Holocaust denial as pseudo history and joined in the general denigration of minority religions (popularly called cults). Any issues that arise in public debate and include a crucial element of scientific (or social scientific) information in their resolution is considered an area of consideration.

The society currently pursues its expansive program through a monthly lecture series at the California Institute of Technology; an annual conference; a weekly radio show, “Science Talk,” on the Southern California NPR affiliate, KPCC; and a national weekly television show on the Fox Family Channel. The society carries out its education through a book service that sells skeptical literature and cassette tapes. The Skeptics Society may be contacted at P.O. Box 338, Altadena, CA 91001. Its website can be found at http://www.skeptic.com/.

Sources:

Skook Occult Review

Modern occult periodical reviving the title of the former Occult Review, which flourished in Britain from 1877 to 1948. Skook Occult Review commenced publication in the spring of 1990 and has been published irregularly by Scoop Two Books, which has become a significant London-based occult publishing house and bookstore. The substantive periodical focuses on magic, occult, and esoteric subjects. Address: Skook Two Books, 19 Bury Pl., London, WC1 2H England.

Skogtograph

A term (from the Greek for “dark-writing”) proposed by Fecilia Scatcherd for psychographs, spirit writing on photographic plates in unopened packets, and similar effects. Scatcherd was a member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, and helped W. T. Stead found Julia’s Bureau. She was associated with the study of psychic photography. She died in 1927.

Madge Donohoe, widow of Martin H. Donohoe, British war correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, was known to produce a bewildering variety of skogtographs—landscapes (often peopled), flowers, star constellations, jewels, birds, dogs, hands, eyes, and faces. Her gift was tested by F. W. Warren, a chemical manufacturer and well-known British psychical researcher.

SKS See Specialist Knowledge Services

Skylook Bulletin See Mutual UFO Network (MUFON)

Skynet (Project)

Founded in 1965 by a team of physicists, engineers, scientists, and other individuals interested in UFO research. Project Skynet conducted scientifically-oriented research into UFOs in the Los Angeles and southern California area, investigated sightings worldwide, engaged in statistical studies, operated a tracking system to help identify UFOs, and worked with other UFO networks. Leaders of Skynet held no socioeconomic or philosophical opinions on the sightings, though individuals associated with it had reached various conclusions. Among those associated with Skynet was Ann Drulief, now an investigator for the Mutual UFO Network.

Skywatch (Journal)

Former quarterly publication of the Manchester Aerial Phenomena Investigation Team in England. Each issue included reports on local UFO sightings, information from other areas, letters from readers, and editorial comment on ufology.

Slade, Henry (d. 1905)

Controversial American medium, best known for his slate-writing phenomena. He was familiar to the American public... for 15 years when the choice fell on him to demonstrate paranormal phenomena in St. Petersburg, Russia, before the investigators of the university of that city. Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and Henry S. Olcott, cofounders of the Theosophical Society, were asked to find a suitable medium and sit with him for weeks. They testified to “messages inside double slates, sometimes tied and sealed together, while they either lay upon the table in full view of all, or were laid upon the heads of members of the committee, or held flat against the under surface of the table-top, or held in a committee man’s hand without the medium touching it.”

En route to Russia, Slade arrived in England on July 13, 1876. He gave many sittings in London and was examined by both Spiritualists and non-Spiritualists. Besides slate writing he produced partial materializations and strong telekinesis phenomena. Observers reported seeing tables moved, matter passing through matter, levitation, and musical instruments played by invisible hands. For six weeks all went well, his fame spread, and J. Enmore Jones, the editor of The Spiritual Magazine, declared that he was taking the place vacated by the great medium D. D. Home. The World wrote in a long article on August 30, 1876:

"Then came more and violent knockings at the table, a chair at the farthest corner from Dr. Slade was lifted rapidly in the air and hurled to the ground without visible agency. My coat and trousers were plucked violently, and I was pinched and patted, all with great rapidity, and in quarters which it seemed absolutely impossible Dr. Slade could reach. A hand appeared and disappeared fitfully, but with unmistakable reality, close to me; and when the slate was produced with a similar crumb of pencil, once on it when it was held under the table, and once under it when it was placed on the table, messages of various kinds were inscribed rapidly and in different handwritings. One, the longest, was of a religious character, and inculcated the usual religious lessons. Others were in reply to questions in which I pressed hard for a communication on some subject which could be only known to myself."

The article on the séance at which the reporter was alone with Slade and, presumably from the context, in daylight, concluded: “I had not, and have not, a glimmering of an idea how the effects described had been produced, and I came away completely puzzled. Slade convinced Lord Rayleigh, director of the observatory of Paris, to confide to the Grand Duke Constantine in the presence of Alexander Aksakof and one Professor Boulfer. According to an account there had been accidentally two bits of pencil on the slate. When he held it under the table they were not heard at the same time and when he drew out the slate it was found that one pencil had written from left to right, the other from right to left."

In December 1877, the experiments of Johann Zöllner, well-known in psychical literature, commenced in Leipzig. Zöllner hoped to establish his theory of four-dimensional space. Professors Fedlner, Scheibner, and Weber participated in the investigation. Writing on sealed slates was produced under the strictest test conditions, knots were tied on an endless string, there were remarkable displays of force, and the apparent penetration of matter through matter was several times demonstrated. After this brilliant success, Slade went to Paris and placed himself at the disposal of Camille Flammarion, “but I obtained nothing certain,” stated Flammarion. He added:

“In the cases that did succeed, there was possible substitution of slates. Tired of so much loss of time, I agreed with Admi- ral Mouchez, director of the observatory of Paris, to confide to Slade a double slate prepared by ourselves, with the precau- tions which were necessary in order that we should not be en- trapped. The two slates were sealed in such a way with paper of the observatory that if he took them apart he could not con- ceal the fraud. He accepted the conditions of the experiment. I carried the slates to his apartment, my two pencils not being heard at the same time, not a quarter of an hour, not a half hour or an hour, but ten consecutive days, and when he sent them back to us there was not the least trace of writing inside.”

Charles Richet writes of the same period:

“I saw Slade once with Gibier. Slade handed me a slate and put a small fragment of a slate-pencil on it. I held one end and Slade the other, and we put the slate under the table. In a few moments we heard a noise as of writing. There was some writing and the bit of slate-pencil was worn. But I gave this experiment (my only one of the kind) under all reserves: (1) It was long ago; (2) I cannot find the notes I took; (3) Slade’s honesty is open to question; and (4) Experiments with slates lend themselves too trickery.

The next stage of Slade’s career was his visit to Australia. His activities there were recorded in a book by James Curtis titled Rustlings in the Golden City (1894).

In 1885, he appeared before the Seybert Commission in Philadelphia. He was caught in glaring fraud. On one occasion, the sitters distinctly saw that his foot, before he had time to get it back into its slipper, was the instrument of claimed telekinetic phenomena. Once a slate, resting against the leg of the table, was upset by a sitter. It was seen that it had a message on it prepared in advance.

The writing obtained was generally of two kinds. The general messages were very legible and clearly punctuated, but when the communication came in answer to questions it was clumsy, scarcely legible, abrupt and vague. It bore traces of hasty work under difficult conditions, as these impromptu messages could not be prepared in advance.

According to the Seybert Committee’s report, Slade declared that Zöllner watched him closely only during the first three or four sittings, but afterward let him do as he pleased. This was the starting point of Fullerton’s trip to Germany to interview Zöllner’s surviving colleagues in an attempt to discredit his favorable findings.

The exposure by the Seybert Commission was preceded by J. W. Truesdell’s revelations. In Bottom Facts of Spiritualism (1883), he claimed to have caught Slade in cheating and narrates an amusing incident. He had discovered a slate with a prepared message in the séance room. He stealthily added another message of his own: “Henry, look out for this fellow; he is up to snuff—Alcinda.” He says that he enjoyed Slade’s discomfiture when, at the appropriate moment, the unrehearsed message came to light.

Another highly damaging incident was recorded on February 2, 1886, in the Boston Herald, namely an account of the denunciation of Slade as an impostor in Weston, West Virginia. Both Slade and his business manager were arrested but they were afterward released without prosecution.

During the last years of his life Slade fell victim to alcohol addiction; his moral standing was far from high, and he sank lower and lower. He died penniless and in mental decrepitude. He was convicted of no effect. But Slade found that England had become too hot for him and speedily left.

Ray Lankester exposed his trickery, and Henry Slade was prosecuted. Although sentenced to three months’ hard labor, the omission of certain words in the accusation made the conviction of no effect. But Slade found that England had become too hot for him and speedily left.

Slater, John (1861–1932)

American clairvoyant who, for 50 years, gave remarkable demonstrations of reading sealed names and giving names, data, and specific information on deceased people from the platform. He traveled all over the United States and attracted big audiences. In 1930, he established his right to function as a medium in Detroit, Michigan. A clergyman had him arrested for making predictions, then a statutory offense, but he won the case with costs and continued his work thereafter undisturbed.

He later moved to San Francisco.

Sources:

Slater, Thomas (ca. 1872)

British spirit photographer, the first after the initial success of Frederick A. Hudson in England. He was an established optician and amateur photographer in London. After a sitting with Hudson in 1872, he experimented at his own home and, the family being mediumistic, obtained striking success.

By the side of a portrait of his sister two heads appeared on the plate. One of them was unmistakably Lord Brougham, the other, much less distinct, was recognized by Slater as Robert Dale Owen. The curious thing about this picture is that in 1856, when Slater was holding a séance with Lord Brougham and Robert Dale Owen, it was predicted by raps that the time would come when he would be engaged in spirit photography. Owen immediately remarked that if dead at the time he would attempt to appear.

Alfred Russell Wallace believed that the Slater pictures were genuine.

Slate Writing

A form of direct writing, or “autography,” that has been one of the popular phenomena of séances. The method is the same in the majority of cases. The medium and the sitter take their seats at opposite ends of a small table, each grasping a corner of an ordinary school slate that they thus hold firmly pressed against the underside of the table. A small fragment of slate-pencil is first enclosed between slate and table, for the use of the spirit-writer. Should the séance be successful, a scratching sound, as of someone writing on a slate, is heard at the end of a few moments; three loud raps indicate the conclusion of the message; and on the withdrawal of the slate, it is found to be partly covered with writing—either a general message from the spirit world, or an answer to some question previously written down by the sitter.

Among the mediums who were most successful in obtaining spirit writing in this manner were Henry Slade and William Eglinton. The former, an American medium, came to England in 1876 and succeeded in mystifying a number of people of education and of scientific attainments. His critics attributed his success, in part at least, to his frank and engaging manner.

Ray Lankester exposed his trickery, and Henry Slade was prosecuted. Although sentenced to three months’ hard labor, the omission of certain words in the accusation made the conviction of no effect. But Slade found that England had become too hot for him and speedily left.

Many of the accounts of his séances in different countries are of interest, chiefly because of the discrepancy that exists between the observations of credulous Spiritualists and those of trained investigators. Richard Hodgson, however, has pointed out that even in the latter class, instances of flawed observation were the rule rather than the exception, particularly where sleight of hand played a prominent part.

William Eglinton was a worthy successor to Slade as a medium for slate-writing manifestations and attained extraordinary popularity, with more than a hundred people testifying to his mediumistic powers in the Spiritualist journal Light. Speaking of Eglinton’s performances, C. C. Massey of the Psychological Society said: “Many, of whom I am one, are of the opinion that the case for these phenomena generally, and for autography, in particular, is already complete.”

Eglinton’s manifestations were produced in full light, and his séances were seldom without results, so it is hardly surprising that many persons, ignorant of the lengths to which conjuring can be carried and overconfident in their own ability to observe correctly, should have seen in slate-writing a phenomenon explicable only by a Spiritualist theory.

But there was definite proof of fraud in several cases. Muslin and a false beard, part of the make-up of a “spirit,” had been found in Eglinton’s portmanteau, and various persons declared... that they had seen his messages written on prepared slates previous to séances.

Other well-known exponents of slate-writing were Fred P. Evans and Laura A. Pruden.

Spiritualists themselves responded to exposures by asserting that fraud might occasionally be practiced by genuine mediums, owing to the uncertainty of the "power" and the constant expectation of phenomena. Particularly was this so in the case of professional mediums, who felt obliged to produce some results, and who had to resort to trickery when other means failed them.

S. J. Davey, an associate of the Society for Psychical Research, London, having discovered the tricks of slate-writing, practiced himself and was accordingly claimed by certain Spiritualists as a medium as well as a conjurer, notwithstanding his protestations to the contrary! This was undoubtedly a powerful argument against the good faith of slate-writing. If his sitter could mistake these sleight-of-hand tricks (which Davey practiced with the express purpose of discrediting professional mediums) for genuine spirit manifestations, they might also be misled by the legendarism of Slade and Eglinton, and other well-known mediums. It has been objected that even a skilled conjurer such as Professor Hoffmann (Angelo J. Lewis) professed himself mystified by slate-writing performances.

The methods adopted by Davey were of a simple nature, requiring little or no apparatus. In the case of a long, general message, he would prepare a slate beforehand and substitute it for the test slate. A shorter message, or a reply to a question, he would write on the reverse side of the slate, with a strip of pencil fastened in a thimble, and so withdraw the slate that the side written on would be uppermost. There is reason to believe that similar devices were used in other séances for their simplicity and the absence of all apparatus rendered them particularly difficult to detect. But where the sitters were more credulous, intricate furniture and appliances were used and the most elaborate preparations made for the séance.

Slate writing is now a largely discredited phenomenon because it is open to conjuring fraud and it has never required anything in the nature of the reverent atmosphere of a Spiritualist séance. The businesslike way in which vague messages or answers to questions are obtained does not suggest either spirit agency or the operation of a paranormal faculty.

Sources:

Witchcraft

The witch was frequently mentioned in Slavonic folktales, especially among the southern Slavs. She was called "jesėta" (masculine "vestor"), meaning originally "the knowing one" or "the well-informed one." In Dalmatia and elsewhere among the southern Slavs the witch was called "kstovac," the "crossed," in allusion to the idea that she was of the horned race of hell. It was said that it enraged the witches so much to be called by this word that when they heard that anyone had used it they went to his house by night and tore him into four pieces, which they cast to the four winds of heaven, and drove away all his cats and stock. Therefore, the shrewd farmers of the country called the witch "huma zena," or "common woman."

There were many forms of Slavonic witches, however, and the "vestor" differed from the "masculine" and the latter from the "zlokobina," or "evil-meeter," whom it was unlucky to encounter in the morning and who possessed the evil eye.

One Serbian authority related that he had often heard that "every female Wallach [Slav] as soon as she is forty years old, abandons the 'God be with us,' and becomes a witch ("vesteria") or at least a "zlokobina" or "macunous." A real witch has the mark of a cross under her nose, a "zlokobina" has some hairs of a beard, and a "macunous" was known by a forehead full of dark folds with blood-spots in her face."

In southern Slavonic countries on St. George’s Day, the peasants adorned the horns of the cattle with garnets to protect them from witches. They attached great importance to the seventh or a twelfth child, believing that children born in that order were the great protectors of the world against witchcraft. But children of that order were thought to be in great danger on St. John’s Eve, for then the witches, having the most power, attacked them with staves or the stumps of saplings, which is why the parishioners carefully removed everything of the kind from the ground in the autumn.

The Slavs believed that on St. George’s Day the witches climbed into the steeples of churches to get the grease from the axle of the bell, which, for some reason, they greatly prized.

The "kstovac," or wizards, notoriously attracted female vila, who in most instances desired to be their mistresses, just as female salamanders desired to mate with men. See the Curiosa of Heinrich Kornmann, 1666). The man who gained the love of a vila was supposed to be extremely lucky.
Transformation stories were also fairly common in Slavonic folklore, which indicates that this was a form of magic practiced by the witches of those countries. (See also Seventh Son)

Slawensik Poltergeist

A curious poltergeist case in 1806 in the Castle of Slawensik, Upper Silesia. Councillor Hahn, in the service of the Prince of Hohenlohe, was directed to proceed to Slawensik, where he stayed in the castle with his old friend Charles Kern, attended by John, Hahn’s servant.

On the third day of their residence, the disturbances commenced with a shower of lime, apparently from the ceiling. This was repeated the next day, accompanied by the sound of heavy blows. Soon afterward, noises like a beating drum and a sound as if someone was walking around the room with slippers on and striking a stick on the door were heard. Various small articles in the room were thrown around, including knives, forks, brushes, caps, slippers, padlocks, funnels, snuffers, and soap, while lights darted from corner to corner. The showers of lime and heavy noises continued. Various witnesses were called and confirmed the phenomena.

One day, Kern saw a figure in the mirror staring at him, apparently interposed between himself and the glass. Another evening, Hahn was about to shave when the soapbox, razor, brush, and soap flew at him and fell at his feet. When he tried to sleep he was awakened by the heavy noises, and once it seemed as if someone had sprinkled water on him while he lay in bed, although he could find no water.

Hahn then made a journey to Breslau, but when he returned he was told that rather than be alone, Kern had asked Hahn’s servant John to stay in the room with him.

As Kern lay in his bed, John was talking to him when he saw a jug of beer slowly lift to a height of about three feet and pour into a glass until it was half full. The jug was then gently replaced and the glass lifted and emptied as if by some invisible force. John exclaimed in terrified surprise, “Lord Jesus! It swallows!” The glass was quietly replaced.

After some time, the disturbances ceased as suddenly as they had begun. Hahn wrote a detailed narrative of the events and signed it November 19, 1808. Many years later the castle was sold and the glass lifted and emptied as if by some invisible force. John exclaimed in terrified surprise, “Lord Jesus! It swallows!” The glass was quietly replaced.

Sleep

A state of unconsciousness or partial consciousness in which, according to psychical belief, the human organism is being perpetually replenished with energy from an unseen world. Here-sequence theory of sleep, doubtless, until we admit the presence of a vital force and the existence of an individual human spirit which withdraws more or less completely from the body during the hours of sleep, and derives spiritual invigoration and nourishment during its sojourn in the spiritual world.”

In the paranormal phenomena observed in dreams and the hypnotic state, F. W. H. Myers found indications that “the self of sleep is a spirit freed from ordinary material limitations, and this conclusion conforms to the hypothesis that we live in two worlds; the waking personality is adapted to the needs of terrestrial life, the personality of sleep maintains the fundamental connection between the spiritual world and the organism, so as to provide the latter with energy while developing itself by the exercise of its spiritual powers.”

Related to theories of sleep are theories on astral projection, also known as OBE (out-of-body experience) or soul traveling, in which the soul is said to leave its body, and travel about the astral plane. People who experience this, claim OBEs eliminate their fears of death, while convincing them of a connection to the spiritual realm. Writer Sylvan J. Muldoon, explains the theory through his own experience: “the astral body coincides during sleep for the purpose of recharging and the depth of sleep and the amount of recuperation depend upon the distance between the astral and physical bodies; i.e., the greater the distance of separation, the freer the inflow of cosmic energy, or prana, into it.” Precursors to astral projection are lucid dreaming (an awareness of the self in dream state) and interrupted sleep (in which the physical body arises during the sleep state).

Considerable study is presently being conducted in the area of Rapid Eye Movement (REM) sleep. REM sleep is said to constitute between 20 and 50 percent of sleep activity. During this type of sleep, the brain seems to behave as if the body is awake: brainwave activity is high, heart rate increases, and sexual stimulation occurs. It is during this REM period that most of the night’s dream activity—and perhaps paranormal activity—occurs.

While the increased neural activity during REM sleep may facilitate the development and maturation of the nervous system in infants, the role of REM in adults remains unclear. William C. Dement of the Stanford Sleep Disorders Clinic proposes some of the possibilities:

“There is strong evidence that REM sleep plays a role in the regulation of mood and/or drive; that it is related in some way to excitability of the central nervous system; and that its suppression may in some way jeopardize the learning and memory functions. The occurrence of large amounts of REM sleep among newborn infants remains possibly the most provocative puzzle of all; it suggests a very important role for REM in the earliest stages of life.”

Another subject currently receiving significant attention is sleep deprivation. Murphy, in an article written for the Atlantic Monthly (1996), asserts Americans living a century ago could sleep 20% longer than the average American today. Ten million Americans each year seek medical, alternative medical, or therapeutic help for the treatment of sleeping disorders. Also sleep deprivation is thought to be a greater contributor to traffic fatalities than intoxication. Severe sleep deprivation is known to cause substantial detrimental alterations in both behavior and perception. Since a considerable amount of people who have been deprived of sleep report paranormal experiences, there exists the question of what role sleep deprivation plays in perceived paranormal incidents.

Sources:

The Sleeping Preacher (1794—?)

Rachel Baker, known as “the Sleeping Preacher,” was born at Pelham, Massachusetts, in 1794. When she was nine years old, her parents moved to Marcellus, New York. As a child she had religious training, her parents being devout people, and she manifested a strong conviction about sinfulness. In 1811 she showed symptoms of somnambulism, in which she seemed stricken with horror and despondency. But gradually her mind became calmer, and she delivered discourses of singular clarity, marked by a devout and solemn tone. Reportedly, these fits of apparent physical distress appeared, characterized by shaking, prayer, between which came the discourse. Then a period of fasting, and general immorality. He was himself among the New Age movement under the label channeling. Channeling, according to Sloan’s account, had been turned back because of his immoral life. He saw the light, so frequently mentioned in accounts of near-death experiences, and faced a life review. He also, at one point, looked down upon his own body.

At the gates of heaven, according to Sloan’s account, he had been turned back because of his immoral life. He encountered some angelic beings who gave him a choice of going to Hell or returning to Earth to teach his people the way to heaven. He announced that all should be Christians and requested that a church be built. Within a short time, some 50 people associated with the church. The movement subsequently spread among the various Native American groups in the area.

The teachings of the new church combined elements of Presbyterians, Catholics, and the traditional religious of his people. Among the traditional practices, members of a secret society were known to go into a trance and commune with various spirit entities. Sloan taught a form of Christianity, but downplayed the Bible in favor of his own contacts with heaven that he felt were more immediate and relevant than an old book. He emphasized moral living as a prerequisite to heaven. A short time after the founding of the church, he fell ill again. His wife, Mary, began to pray for him. In her concern she began to shake and tremble. When Sloan recovered, he attributed his getting better to the shaking. Very soon afterwards, the members began to copy Mary Slocum’s movements and soon were demonstrating a range of exuberant body movements that had been a familiar part of revival and camp meetings among Protestant religious groups. Because of this shaking, they became known as the Shaker religion. The members also adopted a form of ritualized prayer for the sick.

The Shaker Church was incorporated in 1802. Slocum led it for the rest of his life but as the end of his earthly life drew near, he withdrew from the public, and the exact place and date of his death is unknown. His church continues to the present.

Sources:

Sloemann, Aage (1891–1970)

Danish chemical engineer who was concerned with parapsychology. He was born on October 25, 1891, at Copenhagen. He graduated as a chemical engineer in 1914 at the Technical University of Denmark. He worked as a chemical engineer in Denmark (1914–18), in Bordeaux, France (1919–20), and in New York (1920–31). He returned to Denmark where he was a factory superintendent for Colgate-Palmolive in Copenhagen until his retirement (1932–56).

Sloemann was particularly interested in qualitative research and philosophical aspects of parapsychology, and he lectured on psychological research throughout Scandinavia and broadcast on Danish radio. He was a member of the executive committee of the Danish Society for Psychical Research beginning in 1950, named honorary librarian and research officer in 1956, and elected president in 1961. He was a member of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR) and the Swedish Society for Parapsychological Research, and he was a charter associate of the Parapsychological Association.

In 1959, he completed a two-year survey of paranormal phenomena in Denmark. He published many articles on parapsychology in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research, the Journal of the SPR, and the Danish parapsychological journals Psykisk Forum and Psykisk Information.

Sources:

“Smagorad”

A mysterious book of magic power in the possession of Arnaud Guillaume in 1935, during the reign of Charles VI of France.

Smagoradine Table

Believed to be the earliest statement of the principles of spiritual alchemy, ascribed to Hermes Trismegistus. It was said to have been inscribed on emerald (smaragdine) in Phoenician letters and was generally referred to as the Emerald Table of Hermes.

Smead, Mrs. (ca. 1902)

Pseudonym of Mrs. Willis M. Cleveland, wife of an American preacher to whom James H. Hyslop’s attention was invited in December 1901. Smead had occasionally practiced planchette writing from her childhood and began systematic experiments in 1895. Records were kept of the communications received and put at Hyslop’s disposal. He was impressed with both Willis Cleveland and Mrs. Smead as honest, conscientious people. The communicators claimed to be the deceased children of the couple and a deceased brother of Willis Cleveland’s. Their identities were very plausible.

A curious feature of Smead’s mediumship began to develop when in August 1895 several references were made to the planets Mars and Jupiter. A short time before, an article by Percival Lowell was published in the Atlantic Monthly that referred to the canals of the planet Mars. This article may have had something to do with Smead’s new variety of phenomena in which Jupiter played an additional but minor part.

A crude map of Jupiter’s surface was given, and the planet was said to be the ‘‘babies’ heaven.’’ At the next sitting, the map of Mars was drawn, the different zones were named in Martian, and several communications were given about the inhabitants and the canals.

There followed then an incubation period of five years during which no Martian revelations were granted. In September 1900, the communications returned in a developed state. Men, boats, houses, and flowers were drawn, named in Martian, and written in hieroglyphic characters. Some of the sketches, such as one of a self-winding double clock, were very ingenious; others, like a Martian airship, were peculiar but unconvincing. A curious coincidence existed with Hélène Smith, the French medium studied by Theodore Flournoy, who also produced Martian drawings.

In general, according to Flournoy’s review in Spiritism and Psychology, “the Martian revelations of Mrs. Smead present the same character of puerility and naive imagination as those of Mlle. Smith.” He could only think that the psychological explanation was at basis the same. Flournoy’s book was actually in the house, but it was carefully kept from the medium.

The number of Martian scripts continued to increase until a new personality, calling himself “Harrison Clark,” abruptly came on the scene and shut out all other communicators. He showed great facility in inverted and mirror writing and gave his autobiography. When he was confronted by Hyslop with the findings of his investigation, he began “a battle of intellectual sparring and defiance which perhaps has hardly its equal in the annals of secondary personality.”

For a considerable period, Hyslop attributed all the communications to a secondary personality. In this view Hyslop was confirmed by the controls of the medium Leonora Piper. They sent a message to Hyslop that he should be wary. “The so-called light as seen by us is not a light given from our world at all, but the conditions are hypocritic and fanciful.”

Later, however, the mediumship improved, scraps and bits of paranormal information came through, and, although at first Hyslop only classified the case as an intermediate one between Smith and Piper, he later surrendered his hesitations and admitted the existence of genuinely paranormal phenomena beyond question.

Smells (Psychic)

Smells appearing in the séance room have often been ascribed to a paranormal origin. Materializations in settings with the medium Franek Kluski were associated with strong animal odors. Psychical perfumes were reported at séances of Carlos Mirabelli and Daniel Dunglas Home. (See also Odor of Sanctity; Perfumes)

Smith, Alson Jesse (1908–1965)

Writer and lecturer on religion and parapsychology. He was born on August 12, 1908, at Danbury, Connecticut. He studied at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania (B.A., 1930) and Garrett Biblical Institute (now Garrett Theological Seminary), Evanston, Illinois (B.D., 1933). He was ordained as a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and after a year in Montana (1933–54) he served churches in New York and Connecticut for 20 years (1935–54). He retired from the active ministry in 1954 and became a full-time author and lecturer. In the years after World War II he wrote a number of books including several on the psychic. He was a member of Spiritual Frontiers fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship) in its initial years. He died May 17, 1965.

Sources:

Smith, Barbara Gosline (1909–1994)

Newspaper columnist who studied parapsychological subjects. She was born on November 4, 1909, in Dallas, Texas. She attended the University of California at Los Angeles (B.A., 1929) and the University of Southern California (M.A., 1933). She was successively an elementary school teacher (1930–35), high school teacher (1935–45), and college instructor (1945–50). In 1950 she became a freelance writer. She was a member of Bema Forensic Society. With the exception of Maria D’Après la Mort (1909–1994), Smith refused to reveal, was already known. She claimed to have been Guiseppa Balsamo, alias Cagliostro. With the exception of Smith herself, everybody believed in his existence as a spirit. Even he admitted that “it would be impossible to imagine a being more independent and more different from Smith herself, having a more personal character, and individuality more marked, or a more certain actual existence.”

When “Leopold” wrote with Smith’s hand she held the pen in a different way and her handwriting differed from her usual calligraphy and showed the style of the last century. The voice of “Leopold” was a deep bass. He had a strong, easily recognizable Italian accent.

But Smith was firm in his conviction that “there is no reason to suspect the real presence of Joseph Balsamo behind the automatism of Mlle. Smith.” He traced the psychogenesis of “Leopold” to a great fright that she had when ten years old. She was attacked in the street by a big dog. She was terrified but the terror was dispelled by the sudden appearance, as if by a miracle, of a personage clothed in a long brown cape with flowing sleeves and with a white cross on the breast who chased the dog away and disappeared before she had time to thank him.

“Leopold” claimed that this was his first appearance. Whenever some unpleasant sight or a more certain actual existence.”

When “Leopold” wrote with Smith’s hand she held the pen in a different way and her handwriting differed from her usual calligraphy and showed the style of the last century. The voice of “Leopold” was a deep bass. He had a strong, easily recognizable Italian accent.

But Smith was firm in his conviction that “there is no reason to suspect the real presence of Joseph Balsamo behind the automatism of Mlle. Smith.” He traced the psychogenesis of “Leopold” to a great fright that she had when ten years old. She was attacked in the street by a big dog. She was terrified but the terror was dispelled by the sudden appearance, as if by a miracle, of a personage clothed in a long brown cape with flowing sleeves and with a white cross on the breast who chased the dog away and disappeared before she had time to thank him.

“Leopold” claimed that this was his first appearance. Whenever some unpleasant sight or a more certain actual existence.”

When “Leopold” wrote with Smith’s hand she held the pen in a different way and her handwriting differed from her usual calligraphy and showed the style of the last century. The voice of “Leopold” was a deep bass. He had a strong, easily recognizable Italian accent.

But Smith was firm in his conviction that “there is no reason to suspect the real presence of Joseph Balsamo behind the automatism of Mlle. Smith.” He traced the psychogenesis of “Leopold” to a great fright that she had when ten years old. She was attacked in the street by a big dog. She was terrified but the terror was dispelled by the sudden appearance, as if by a miracle, of a personage clothed in a long brown cape with flowing sleeves and with a white cross on the breast who chased the dog away and disappeared before she had time to thank him.

“Leopold” claimed that this was his first appearance. Whenever some unpleasant sight or a more certain actual existence.”

When “Leopold” wrote with Smith’s hand she held the pen in a different way and her handwriting differed from her usual calligraphy and showed the style of the last century. The voice of “Leopold” was a deep bass. He had a strong, easily recognizable Italian accent.

But Smith was firm in his conviction that “there is no reason to suspect the real presence of Joseph Balsamo behind the automatism of Mlle. Smith.” He traced the psychogenesis of “Leopold” to a great fright that she had when ten years old. She was attacked in the street by a big dog. She was terrified but the terror was dispelled by the sudden appearance, as if by a miracle, of a personage clothed in a long brown cape with flowing sleeves and with a white cross on the breast who chased the dog away and disappeared before she had time to thank him.

“Leopold” claimed that this was his first appearance. Whenever some unpleasant sight or a more certain actual existence.”

When “Leopold” wrote with Smith’s hand she held the pen in a different way and her handwriting differed from her usual calligraphy and showed the style of the last century. The voice of “Leopold” was a deep bass. He had a strong, easily recognizable Italian accent.

But Smith was firm in his conviction that “there is no reason to suspect the real presence of Joseph Balsamo behind the automatism of Mlle. Smith.” He traced the psychogenesis of “Leopold” to a great fright that she had when ten years old. She was attacked in the street by a big dog. She was terrified but the terror was dispelled by the sudden appearance, as if by a miracle, of a personage clothed in a long brown cape with flowing sleeves and with a white cross on the breast who chased the dog away and disappeared before she had time to thank him.

“Leopold” claimed that this was his first appearance. Whenever some unpleasant sight or a more certain actual existence.”

When “Leopold” wrote with Smith’s hand she held the pen in a different way and her handwriting differed from her usual calligraphy and showed the style of the last century. The voice of “Leopold” was a deep bass. He had a strong, easily recognizable Italian accent.
showed striking dissimilarities to that known of the real Cagliostro. His answers to questions regarding his life and occupation were evasive or vague. He did not furnish a single name, date, or precise fact. He was, on the other hand, as archaic in his therapeutics as in his orthography and treated all maladies in an old-fashioned way. He claimed that his sentiments for Smith were only the continuation of those of Cagliostro for Marie Antoinette.

Marie Antoinette was the first great romance of Smith's mediumship. Flournoy called it the "Royal Cycle." It was roughly outlined at séances in the house of Cuenot in December 1893. The announcement that Smith was the reincarnation of the late queen was made by the table on January 30, 1894. In the interval she had for some time believed herself to be the reincarnation of Lorenzo Feliciani. When, however, she was told that Lorenzo Feliciani only existed in the fantasy of novelist Dumas, she quickly dropped this role.

There was less difference between the autograph of Cagliostro and "Leopold" than between the handwriting of the real Marie Antoinette and the somnambulistic one. The role of the queen was acted in a very lifelike manner. Probably Smith's tastes for everything that was noble, distinguished, and elevated made the task easier. In the surroundings of the queen, the king was conspicuous by his absence. Three personages figured most often, "Cagliostro" ("ce cher sorcier"), Louis Philippe d'Orléans, and the "Marquis de Mirabeau." They were discovered reincarnated in two sitters: M. Eugene Demole and M. Auguste de Morsier. For the spectators, the royal somnambulism was the most interesting on account of the brilliancy and life of the role and the length of time during which it was sustained. But for lovers of the paranormal it was not in the least extraordinary.

The Hindu dream in which Flournoy was cast in the role of Prince Sivrouka Nayaka began on October 16, 1894, eight weeks before his admission to the circle. The Martian romance dated from the same period and was to be attributed, in Flournoy's view, to an involuntary suggestion of one Professor Lemaitre. In the Oriental Cycle, Smith was Simandini; furthermore the signatures resembled the authentic signature of the old man whom she also saw possessed her hand and wrote: "Burnier, Curé de Chessenaz." The medium's defense was also taken up in an anonymous volume (Autour des Indes à la Planète Mars) published under the auspices of the Société d'Etudes Psychiques de Genève (1901). On the other hand, V. Henry, professor of Sanskrit at the Sorbonne, completely vindicated Flournoy's conclusions in his book La Language Martien (1901) and showed how the Martian words, with the exception of a residue of two per cent, were derived from known terrestrial words.

The medium and other investigators of the phenomena did not share Flournoy's view of the earthly origin of the Martian romance. In articles published in the Annales des Sciences Psychiques (March–April and May–June, 1897), Lemaitre argued for the extraterrestrial origin of Smith's Martian language. The medium's defense was also taken up in an anonymous volume (Autour des Indes à la Planète Mars) published under the auspices of the Société d'Etudes Psychiques de Genève (1901). On the other hand, V. Henry, professor of Sanskrit at the Sorbonne, completely vindicated Flournoy's conclusions in his book La Language Martien (1901) and showed how the Martian words, with the exception of a residue of two per cent, were derived from known terrestrial words.

Flournoy did not stop at the claim that all the controls of the medium were secondary personalities. He proposed that the source of the reincarnation dreams was to be found in the influence of Allan Kardec's beliefs in the transmigration of souls and the practices of various automatic writers. Flournoy also disputed the paranormal character of the other manifestations. He stated: "As to the Supernormal, I believe I have actually found a little telekinesis and telepathy. As to lucidity and spiritistic messages, I have only encountered some brilliant reconstructions, which the hypnotic imagination, aided by latent memory, excels in fabricating in the case of mediums."

At a séance in 1899, Smith had a vision of a village and a landscape that she could not recognize. At the same time, an old man whom she also saw possessed her hand and wrote: "Chauimonet Syndic." Later, further information was divulged. The old man was syndic of Chessenaz in 1839. At another séance these words came: "Burnier, Curé de Chessenaz." Flournoy made inquiries and found out there was a little village named Chessenaz in Haute Savoie, that in 1839 the syndic of the village was Jean Chaumontet and the curé was named Burnier; furthermore the signatures resembled the authentic signatures of these two people. Nevertheless he dismissed the case, as he found out that Smith had relations in a neighboring village and had been to visit them.

To the physical phenomena of the mediumship he devoted little attention. He was inclined to admit that a force may radiate from the medium that may be capable of attracting or repelling objects in the neighborhood. How such a force could be employed to levitate a table, play on distant instruments, or app ort branches of trees, leaves of ivy bearing the name of the control, shells filled with sand and still wet from the sea, a China vase full of water containing a rose, or Chinese money, he did not even attempt to explain. The physical phenomena did not last long and ceased at an early period.

Smith, Hélène Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

In 1901, Flournoy published another extensive study on some further developments in the Archives de Psychologie (Nouvelles Observations sur un cas de Somnambulisme avec Glossolalie). He related that owing to the sensation that his previous work created, Smith was inundated with letters and requests for sit-tings. A rich American lady provided her with a life income. Smith resigned her position and gave many sittings to her new friends, but Flournoy and Lemaître were not among the invited ones. In the summer of 1900 there came a complete break. Flournoy was no more accorded facilities for study. The materi-al that he dealt with in his new book hardly covered the period of a year.

He stated that the Martian romance passed into oblivion, but the Martian personalities “Astané” and “Ramier” were retained as guides and interpreters in the exploration of the Ultra-Martian and Uranian worlds. A Lunarian phase also de-veloped at a later period, with descriptions, language, and writ-ing. But of this Flournoy had no firsthand information. The Ultra-Martian romance was accompanied by several painted scenes. The writing was ideographic. Its curious hieroglyphs did not express letters but words. The ideograms showed no re-ssemblance to the objects that they represented.

In this, Flournoy found another proof of infantile imagina-tion. The essential characteristic was omitted because the me-dium strove to create something defying all analysis. The Ura-nian language and writing differed totally from the Ultra-Martian. But, stated Flournoy, the phonetic and alphabetic system was a copy of the Martian, and the Uranian language differed less from French than from the languages of the neighboring countries. The origin of the strange notion of Lunarian inhabitants presumably sprung from Smith reading an article in La Paix Universelle in which, after flattering allu-sions to Smith, mention was made of the claims of certain yogis of psychic visits to the inhabitants of that side of the moon that is turned away from the Earth.

The duration of the astronomic cycle was not long. It was su-perseded, after a complete break with the Spiritualists, by a re-ligious cycle in which Christ, the Virgin, the apostles, and the archangels played the dominant roles. In 1903, a luminous vi-sion filled Smith’s room. “Christ” appeared and she heard the voice of “Leopold”: “You will draw him.” Two years later, Smith began with crayon. This was later changed to oil. On large wooden boards, in a state of trance, she executed 12 religious tableaus.

Lemaître stated in a study that, according to certain medi-umistic communications she had received, Smith was a reincar-nation of “Raphael”, or of “Michaelangelo”; the medium her-self, however, did not accept his conclusion.

In May 1913, at the International Congress for Psychical Re-search at Geneva, eight of her striking pictures were exhibited. In a statement to Light (October 11, 1913) she said:

“On the days when I am to paint I am always roused very early—generally between five and six in the morning—by three loud knocks at my bed. I open my eyes and see my bedroom brightly illuminated, and immediately understand that I have to stand up and work. I dress myself by the beautiful iridescent light that filled the room, sitting in my armchair, until the feeling comes that I have to work. It never delays. All at once I stand up and walk to the picture. When about two steps before it I feel a strange sensation, and probably fall asleep at the same moment. I know, later on, that I must have slept because I no-tice that my fingers are covered with different colours, and I do not remember at all to have used them, though, when a picture is being begun, I am ordered to prepare colours on my palette every evening, and have it near my bed.”

A brush was very seldom used in these pictures. She put on the first coating of paint with her three middle fingers. For the second coating, she moved the same fingers very lightly from right to left and back, thus producing a very smooth surface. The outlines were made by the nails and the sky with the palm of her hand.

This last phase of Smith’s mediumship was exhaustively dealt with by W. Deonna in his book De La Planète Mars en Terre Sainte (1932). As the medium did not again subject herself to scientific investigation, Deonna’s psychoanalytic examination was based on the voluminous correspondence that Smith left behind and on the paintings themselves. The religious cycle was arrested in 1915 in its further progress by the shock that the medium received when her dearest Italian friend died. Her later years were dominated by visions and automatic communica-tions of and from this friend.

Deonna attached no particular value to the paintings. He stated that their inspiration did not surpass the usual level of religious imagery. The tableaus did not have an elevating ef-fect, indeed a striking mediocrity was often noticeable. But he also admitted certain qualities and said that the paintings were far above what Smith could produce normally. He looked for an explanation to the regression of infantile memories. He of-fered no explanation for certain paranormal features.

It was Smith’s habit to have photographs taken of the succes-sive stages of the pictures. To her utter despair, some of the negatives of the painting “Judas” were spoiled. Her guardian angel appeared and announced a miracle. Two days later, the portrait began to fade out. The beards, the moustache, the tears of Judas, and other details gradually disappeared until the painting returned to the stage where it was last successfully photographed. Then an inscription appeared: “God’s will, November 18, 1913.” The photographs were taken again. The in-scription vanished and Smith finished the picture as before.

She always painted from visions. The eyes appeared first. But Judas was painted into the landscape from the leg upward. The visions were accompanied by luminous phenomena. They began with a ball of light that expanded and filled the room. This was not a subjective phenomenon. Smith exposed photograph-ic plates that indeed registered strong luminous effects. But to Deonna, they had no scientific value as they were only supported by the good faith of the medium.

The Smith case is, on perspective, one of the more impor-tant in parapsychology. It illustrated many of the phenomena encountered by parapsychologists as they dealt with Spiritualist claims. Flournoy proved the equal of the task and was able, through his long-term observation and study, to understand the dynamics operating in Smith’s life. He was able to show the mundane sources for her extraordinary material without fall-ing into name calling and charges of fraud and to present the material fully without the need of an exposé format.

Sources:

Smith, Helene Veeder Altpeter (1890–7) Worker in the field of parapsychology. She was born on July 31, 1890, at Redding, California. She became a school teacher, college instructor, and secretarial worker. From 1957 on Smith was secretary, treasurer, and librarian for the California Soci-ety for Psychical Studies, meeting in Berkeley. Her own spe-cial interests included telepathy, clairvoyance, and spontaneous psi phenomena.
Smith, Robert Cross (1795–1832)

Robert Cross Smith, a pioneering modern astrologer, was the first of a lineage of British astrologers to use the pseudonym Raphael with his writings. He was born in Bristol, England, on March 19, 1795. He became a carpenter and in 1820 married Sarah Lucas. Soon after his marriage he moved to London. In the city he became interested in astrology, possibly due to his acquaintance with G. W. Graham, the balloonist. The pair authored a book on geomancy, Philosophical Merlin, in 1822. In 1824, Smith became the editor of a new magazine, The Struggling Astrologer, but it failed for lack of subscribers after only a few issues. Then, two years later, he was offered the opportunity to edit an almanac, The Prophetic Messenger. The first issue appeared in 1827 under his pen name and carried the ephemeris (chart of daily planetary positions) that was to become so identified with him.

Smith edited The Prophetic Messenger annually for the rest of his life. It was widely read and the ephemeris used by an increasing number of astrologers. Following Smith's death on February 26, 1832, in London, his work as Raphael would be continued by a series of astrologers who successively inherited the title. Eventually, Raphael's Ephemeris would be issued as a separate volume and become the standard text consulted by both British and American astrologers for the construction of their clients' horoscopes. The Ephemeris was unique in introducing in its table of houses the system of house division developed by the Italian monk Placidus de Titius (1603–1668). Through the success of Raphael's Ephemeris, the Placidian system of house division would come to dominate English-speaking countries.

Smith also wrote several books, the most important being A Manual of Astrology (1828), which joined James Wilson's Dictionary of Astrology as a basic textbook for astrology. It continued to be reprinted into the twentieth century. Raphael thus joined Wilson, his older contemporary, in creating the astrological revival that, following a century of decline, would initiate two centuries of steady growth.

Sources:

Smith, Susy (1911–?)

Journalist and author of a number of books on psychological subjects and parapsychology. She was born on June 2, 1911, in Washington, D.C. She attended the University of Texas and the University of Arizona. She was a columnist for the Salt Lake Tribune and the Desert News, in Salt Lake City, Utah, and also conducted radio programs on shopping information at Daytona Beach, Florida.

Smith has spent most of her life as a freelance writer, and for a period she worked as an editor at Sherbourne Press on the popular "... for the Millions" series. Besides her own many books, she edited the one-volume edition of F. W. H. Myers' Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death for University Books in 1961. She was a member of the Society for Psychical Research, London; the American Society for Psychical Research; the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship; the Association for Research and Enlightenment; and founded the Survival Research Foundation in 1971.

In addition to her many popular books on parapsychology she also lectured on the subject and has operated as a psychic and channeled one book from William James. She is herself psychic, as related in her book Confessions of a Psychic (Macmil-teaching based upon the Earth as the Mother of All and articulated a program that opposed the attempts of the U.S. government to force the various groups into reservations and favored individuals integrating into the larger economic system. Church-like buildings were constructed for the gathering of the Dreamer religion. Out of his teachings a new Native American church developed that would prosper for a generation and remnants of which, known as the Feather Religion or Seven Drums religion, can still be found. His ideas influenced the Paiute prophet Wovoka, the founder of the Ghost Dance movement. Among his converts was Old Joseph (d. 1871) of the Nez Perce who passed the Dreamer religion on to his son, Chief Joseph, who would later adopt Wovoka’s message. Smohalla lived into his 90s. He died in 1907.

Sources:

Smythies, John Raymond (1922–

University lecturer and psychiatrist who has written widely on parapsychology. He was born on November 30, 1922, at Naini Tal, U.P., India. He studied at Cambridge University and the University of British Columbia. He settled in Edinburgh and for many years was a senior lecturer at the Department of Psychological Medicine, University of Edinburgh, and a consultant psychiatrist at Royal Edinburgh Hospital, Scotland (1961–73). In 1973 he was named C. B. Ireland Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. In 1957 he began a lengthy tenure as editor of the International Review of Neurobiology.

In addition to his many papers on psychological and psychiatric subjects, Smythies has special interest in the theoretical basis of ESP. He was a member of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR). In 1967, he was a consultant psychiatrist at Royal Edinburgh Hospital, Scotland (1961–73). In 1973 he was named C. B. Ireland Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. In 1957 he began a lengthy tenure as editor of the International Review of Neurobiology.

In addition to his many papers on psychological and psychiatric subjects, Smythies has special interest in the theoretical basis of ESP. He was a member of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR). In 1967, he was a consultant psychiatrist at Royal Edinburgh Hospital, Scotland (1961–73). In 1973 he was named C. B. Ireland Professor of Psychiatry at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. In 1957 he began a lengthy tenure as editor of the International Review of Neurobiology.

Smythies has much in common with the earlier practice of the Snake handling. While Pentecostals had practiced speaking in tongues and healing—both also mentioned as gifts of the Holy Spirit in the writings of the apostle Paul—no one had paid attention to the signs in the passage in Mark until 1999. That year George W. Hensley of Tennessee captured a rattlesnake and brought it to a church service for snake handling as a test of religious faith. In 1914, Hensley was invited to an annual meeting of the Church of God, whose leader Ambrose Tomlinson gave the practice tacit approval. In 1928, the leadership of the church realized their mistake and distanced themselves from the practice, but by that time it had spread among church members throughout the Appalachian Mountains and as far south as central Florida.

Hensley, Raymond Hays, and Thomas Harden eventually founded the Dolly Pond Church of God with Signs Following, in Pine Mountain, Tennessee; it became the mother church of Southern snake handling. Pushed out of the Church of God, the “signs” people founded similar churches in a loose fellowship that became in effect a new denomination. Snake handling became clandestine after World War II, when Tennessee led other states in passing laws to forbid the practice, following the publicity given to the death of a member of the Dolly Pond church. Less known is the associated practice of drinking poison, usually a solution of strychnine, at church services, also forbidden by law.

The astonishing fact is that scores of sincere devotees of snake handling have survived the bites of deadly snakes and the effects of drinking poisons at church ceremonies. Less than 75 deaths have been recorded as of the mid-1990s. The deaths that occurred were ascribed to lack of faith. Interestingly enough, Hensley, after surviving numerous snake bites, died after being bitten during a church service in Florida in 1965. Snake handling adds a dramatic element to religious faith, and has much in common with the earlier practice of the fire ordeal in non-Christian religions.

Present-day members of the Holiness Church of God in Jesus’ Name in the Southeast are more concerned about the dangers of persecution through punitive laws against snake handling than from the practice itself. They regard such laws as a breach of their freedom to exercise their religious convictions sincerely in accordance with Holy Scripture.

Estimates place the number of snake-handling church members at about 3000, living chiefly in Ohio, Indiana, and Appalachia.

Sources:
Sneezing

There are many superstitions concerning sneezing. It is said that the custom of blessing one who sneezes originated in Italy in the time of Pope Gregory the Great (ca. 540–604) during a pestilence that proved fatal to those who sneezed. A still older date is given to this custom by some writers, who traced the idea to the biblical Adam and to his descendant Jacob, who supposedly begged that its fatal effects might be removed. On his request being granted, the people gratefully instituted the custom of saluting the sneezer.

In some diseases, sneezing was a bad omen, while in others it was a good omen. Sneezing to the right was lucky, to the left, unlucky; from noon to midnight good, from night to noon, bad. St. Augustine (d. 430) stated that the ancients would return to bed if they sneezed while putting on a shoe.

Snowdon, Ruth J.(ohnson) (1896– ?)

Research associate in biophysics who published articles on parapsychology. She was born in 1896 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and studied at Vassar College. In 1948 she became a research associate in biophysics at the University of Pittsburgh, where R. A. McConnell established his center for parapsychological research. She was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association.

Sources:

Soal, S(amuel) G(eorge) (1889–1975)

Mathematician and important figure in British parapsychology whose credibility has been attacked. He was born on April 29, 1889, at Kirby Moorside, Yorkshire, England. He received his degrees at London University (B.S. first class honors mathematics, 1910; M.A. mathematics, 1914). He was for many years a lecturer in mathematics at Queen Mary College, University of London (1911–54). After his retirement he was a part-time lecturer at Queen Mary College (1954–58) and an examiner at London University (1960–62).

Soal was one of the shining stars of British parapsychology. From 1919 onward he conducted parapsychological studies, in mediumship (1919–24), automatic writing (1923–28), and statistical experiments in telepathy and clairvoyance (1927 on). He collaborated in quantitative research with Kathleen M. Goldney, Frederick Bateman, and J. G. Pratt. He lectured widely on parapsychology in Britain and the United States.

He was the Myers Memorial lecturer (1947), Perrott Student in Psychical Research, Cambridge (1948–49), Fulbright Research Scholar in Parapsychology (1951); and president of the Nottingham University Society for Psychical Research (1938). In 1950 he was elected president of the Society for Psychical Research.

Soal, at first critical of J. B. Rhine’s early work, carried out some very successful experiments with Basil Shackleton. The Soal-Goldney experiments became one of the foundation stones of the emerging field. As early as 1949 critics began to complain that the results were too good, that they had to have been produced by error or fraud. In 1960, C. E. M. Hansel criticized the claimed precognitive findings in the card-guessing experiments and suggested a number of ways in which there might have been conscious or unconscious falsification of the evidence.

A March 1971 article in the Journal of the SPR by R. G. Medhurst initially pointed out inaccuracies in the method of constructing quasi-random series in the experiments. By 1974, such criticism had become hostile, with papers by other experimenters suggesting that Soal had deliberately falsified or manipulated his data.

It was also suggested that experimenters J. G. Pratt and J. B. Rhine, who had checked Soal’s statistical evaluation, had failed to disclose in detail a glaring error in the assessment of probability, using instead the vague term “very significant.” There may, of course, have been a number of quite valid reasons for Pratt and Rhine to have failed to be specific. Soal himself ascribed his initial error to an assistant.

Soal died in 1975. Three years later Betty Markwick, a computer expert, published a complex technical paper in which computer analysis indicated that Soal was guilty of fraud. Other researchers have attempted to defend Soal from the charge of conscious deception, but their arguments have been unconvincing. The effect has been to destroy whatever value had been attached to the Shackleton experiments and, more significantly, to call into question Soal’s lifetime of contributions to the field.

Sources:
—. “A Report on Some Communications Received Through Mrs. Blanche Cooper.” Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 35 (December 1925).
—. “Some Relations Between Call Sequence and ESP Performance.” Journal of Parapsychology (September 1952).

Sociedad Espanola de Parapsicología

The Sociedad Espanola de Parapsicología (Spanish Parapsychological Society) was founded in 1973 and grew out of the fledgling interest in parapsychology that emerged in Spain in the 1960s. In 1971 Raimon Molina Perera became the first person to offer courses in parapsychology at a Spanish university, the Universidad Autónoma Madrid. Two years later Perera became one of the founders of the Sociedad Espanola de Parapsicología.

The society was an open membership group with members from many segments of Spanish society, including psychologists, newspaper reporters, and scholars of various backgrounds. Its program had both research and educational components, and it published a journal, Psi Communication. Last known address: Belen 15—1 Derecha, 28004, Madrid, Spain.

Sociedad Mexicana de Parapsicologia

The Sociedad Mexicana de Parapsicologia (Mexican Parapsychological Society) was founded in 1974 by Carlos B.Treviso and Marcela G. de Treviso. Its formation was occasioned by the perception that the general public was being defrauded by people claiming various paranormal abilities, from tea leaf reading to witchcraft, and by various self-appointed parapsychologists. The society immediately became controversial, and many who did not believe in the existence of psychic phenomena protested the formation of the organization.

The society found an ally in the Roman Catholic Church. The church has made use of the society's expertise in cases of reported diabolical possession. It occasionally sends people to the parapsychologists for an initial assessment of their condition and psychological health. The primary objectives of the society, however, remain the battle against psychic trickery and public gullibility and the perennial attempt to gain some acceptance for psychological research from the mainstream of the scholarly world. Its major focus is education rather than research, and it sponsors frequent programs to alert the public to the tricks of fake psychics. In 1984, it sponsored its first symposium on parapsychology, at which a number of international speakers were featured. The symposium was held at the Centro Universitario México, Mexico City. Address: CDA Nicolas San Juan No. 16, D. F. Mexico 12 D.F.

Societa Italiana di Parapsicologia

The Societa Italiana di Parapsicologia (Italian Society of Parapsychology) was founded in Milan, Italy, in 1946 as the Associazione de Metapsicicha. It was an educational association and does not engage in research. It sponsored an annual series of lectures on psychological research and publishes a journal, Rassegna Italiana di Ricercà Psichica (Italian Journal of Psychic Research). Last known address: Via dei Montecatini 7, Rome, Italy.

Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia

The Rosicrucian Society of England, organized in 1865 by Robert Wentworth Little (who claimed to have found some old Freemasonry rituals) and Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie (who claimed to have received Rosicrucian initiation in Austria). The Metropolitan College was founded in London in 1865 with Little as supreme magus, and a Societas Rosicruciana in Scotia was started soon afterward, followed by provincial lodges.

Some famous names associated with the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia include Sir Francis Burdett (vice president) and author-occultist-politician Lord Edward Bulwer Lytton (grand patron 1871–73). Kenneth Mackenzie became an honorary magus. William Wynn Westcott was supreme magus in 1916. The aims of the society were:

1. To afford mutual aid and encouragement in working out the great problems of Life, and in discovering the Secrets of Nature; to facilitate the study of the system of Philosophy founded upon the Kabala and the doctrines of Hermes Trismegistus, which was inculcated by the original Fratres Rosac Crucis, of Germany; and to investigate the meaning and symbolism of all that now remains of the wisdom, art and literature of the ancient world."

In spite of these resounding aims, the society confined itself mainly to lectures and Freemasonry rituals. In 1887, Westcott, Mackenzie, and W. R. Woodman were concerned in the formation of the Isis-Urania Temple of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, in which the esoteric Freemasonry of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia was expanded into a more complex occult system. The Societas Rosicruciana in America was modeled on the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia.

Sources:

Societas Rosicruciana in Civitatis Foederatis

The Societas Rosicruciana in Civitatis Foederatis was founded in Boston in 1878 by Charles E. Meyer (1839–1908) with a Mason from Pennsylvania. The Mason had headed the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, the British branch of the society. The American branch was founded in the 1860s by Robert Wentworth Little. Within a few years the American group had established lodges, called colleges, across the country. With several others, Meyer traveled to England and was initiated at the college in Sheffield. When Sheffield blocked their request for a charter, they turned to the college in Edinburgh, which issued a charter in 1879. The next year a second charter was issued for a college in New York, and the two American colleges jointly founded the Societas Rosicruciana Republicae Americae. Almost immediately, colleges were chartered for Baltimore and Boston. As did the English body, the American group limited membership to Masons.

The society remained stable for a generation but experienced a schism shortly after the turn of the century. At that time some of its members, led by Sylvester C. Gould and George Winslow Hummer (1876–1944), formed the Societas Rosicruciana in America, with membership not limited to Masons. However, the losses were compensated for by the chartering of new colleges in Duluth, Minnesota (1911), and Texas (1918). The society enjoyed a brief period of growth during the 1930s when new colleges were chartering for New Jersey (1931), North Carolina (1932), Virginia (1933), Illinois (1934), and Colorado and Long Island, New York (both in 1935). The society expanded to Canada with colleges chartered in Nova Scotia in 1936 and Ontario in 1937.

The society issues the periodical Rosicrucian Fama. The membership in 1990 was 1400 and as of 1996 there were 32 active colleges. Website: http://www.geocities.com/Athens/2092/.

Sources:

Societies of Harmony

Associations formed for the practice of animal magnetism by the pupils of Franz Anton Mesmer. The first Société de Harmonie was formed in Paris, and its members seem to have acted in a manner that was anything but "harmonious." After some quarreling among themselves, they broke their contract with Mesmer, whereby they had promised before being admitted to his lectures that they would not practice on their own account or give away the secret of his methods without his consent. Other Societies of Harmony soon sprang up, the most important being that of Strasbourg, founded in 1785 by the Marquis Chastenet de Puységur.

Society for Astrological Research

British organization that superseded the older Astrological Society, which had been formed in 1895 but had been critcized by astrologers around England as being primarily a London operation. In 1903, the older society was disbanded and a new one reorganized with a seven-person leadership committee. The committee consisted of Walter Gorn Old, Alan Leo, Bessie Leo, H. S. Green, E. H. Bailey, Robert King, and G. T. Elliot. This body gave way to the Astrological Lodge of the Theosophical Society (now the Astrological Lodge of London).

Sources:
Naylor, P. I. H. Astrology: A Fascinating History. North Holly-

Society for Interdisciplinary Studies
British organization founded in 1974 to act as a link between specialists in various disciplines who are interested in the theories of Immanuel Velikovsky. The aim of the society has been “... to bring a rational and objective approach to the study of Velikovsky's theories and encourage the detailed evaluation which is their due in the light of the evidence accumulating in their favour.”

Meetings for members are held throughout the United Kingdom and public seminars and conferences are organized at universities. While activities are focused in England, membership comes from around the world. The society maintains an extensive archive of reviews, reports, and other material. The society publishes a journal, Chronology & Catastrophism Review and the SIS Internet Digest. Address: 10 Witley Green, Darley Heights, Stopsley, Beds, LU2 8TR England. Website: http:// www.knowledge.co.uk/sis/.

Sources:

Society for Parapsychological Studies
(Taiwan)
Organization for parapsychological investigations. It pub-ished a newsletter, Parapsychology, in Chinese.
Current address unavailable.

Society for Psychical Research (SPR)
The British organization that became the focus for the emerging field of psychical research in the nineteenth century. Its establishment was proposed on June 6, 1882, at a meeting, by Sir William F. Barrett, and on February 29, 1882, the society came into being. Henry Sidgwick, professor of moral philosophy at Cambridge, was elected president. The first council included Barrett, Edmund Gurney, Balfour Stewart, F. W. H.
Myers, Richard Hutton (all non-Spiritualists) and W. Stainton
Moses, Dawson Rogers, Morell Theobald, E. N. Bennett, George Wyld, and others (all Spiritualists). The investigation of Spiritualist phenomena was to be the focus of the society’s work. Eleanor Sidgwick, Frank Podmore, and Richard Hodgson were among the first to join.

The objects of the society consisted of the following points: 1. An examination of the nature and extent of any influence that may be exerted by one mind upon another, apart from any generally recognized mode of perception.
2. The study of hypnotism and the forms of so-called mesmeric trance, with its alleged insensibility to pain; clairvoyance and other allied phenomena.
3. A critical revision of Reichenbach’s research with certain organizations called sensitive, and an inquiry whether such organizations possess any power of perception beyond a highly exalted sensibility of the recognized sensory organs.
4. A careful investigation of any reports, resting on strong testimony regarding apparitions at the moment of death, or otherwise, or regarding disturbances in houses reputed to be haunted.
5. An inquiry into the various physical phenomena commonly called spiritualistic; with an attempt to discover their causes and general laws.
6. The collection and collation of existing materials bearing on the history of these subjects.

The early activity of the society was devoted to an experimental investigation of thought transference. They established it to their satisfaction as a fact. Equally important to this achievement was the discovery of the authors of Phantoms of the Levong (Gurney, Myers, and Podmore) that between death and aparitions a connection existed that was not due to chance alone. The report of the committee on the Census of Hallucinations came to the same conclusion. It was largely attributable to the SPR’s investigation that hypnotism was officially recieved by the British Medical Association.

Hystera, haunted houses, Reichenbach’s phenomena, the divining rod, multiple personality, automatic writing, and trance speaking were other subjects taken up in due course.

Very valuable work was done in the study of cross-correspondence and in the investigation of the mediumship of Leonora Piper. The specific subject of communication with the dead was not included in the original program of the society, but the presumption for evidence became so strong that much of the SPR’s activity was devoted to its consideration.

In 1889, the American Society for Psychical Research was affiliated. From 1887 until his death in 1905, Hodgson was in charge and concentrated most of his activity on the mystery of Piper’s trance communications. This investigation is one of the most memorable events in the whole existence of the society, for, to the satisfaction of many distinguished psychical researchers, it dealt with the question of survival and the possibility of holding intercourse with the departed. Hodgson himself accepted the evidence of survival, to the great jubilation of Spiritualists, for, in the words of E. Dawson Rogers, then president of the London Spiritualist Alliance, “he was a very Saul persecuting the Christians.” Officially, however, the society reached no conclusions, and in the century of its existence it has made no collective pronouncement on the question of survival, maintaining that the constitution of the society precludes a collective opinion.

At first the cooperation between the SPR and the Spiritualists was friendly. The line of distinction was that psychical researchers only attempted to establish the veracity of the phenomena whereas Spiritualists not only considered them proved but also attributed them to the action of disembodied spirits.
Sympathy, however, soon changed to hostility as the society refused to endorse, and then in many ways became antagonistic to, the views of the Spiritualists (in spite of the personal views of many of the society’s members).

Spiritualists objected to the extreme suspicion and the frequently voiced charges of fraud by psychical researchers and said that their standard of evidence, when they wished to prove fraud, was far more elastic than when the genuine occurrence of phenomena was in question.

Early resentment was shown for the treatment of mediums Kate Fox-Jencken (one of the Fox Sisters), Henry Slade, and William Eglington, and that this feature of the situation remained constant through a great many years is best evidenced by the statement of Sir Oliver Lodge in his book The Survival of Man, published in 1909: “It has been called a society for the suppression of facts, for the wholesale imputation of imposture, for the discouragement of the sensitive, and for the repudiation of every revelation of the kind which was said to be pressing itself upon humanity from the regions of light and knowledge.”

It cannot be denied that a certain bias against physical phenomena was observable in the society. The exposure by Hodgson of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, co-founder of the Theosophical Society, of performing the same kind of tricks that were present throughout Spiritualism, appears to have prejudiced the society against this side of psychical phenomena: Eusapia Palladino was branded an impostor in 1895, and it was only after the society’s commitment had been reduced to an amusing anachronism by many years of competent investigation all over Europe that the case was reopened in 1908. A committee was delegated to sit with her in Naples; the later verdict was in favor of Palladino.

E. N. Bennett, who was assistant secretary to the society for 20 years, published a book in 1904 under the title Twenty Years of Psychical Research. It is a review of the work of the society and states:

‘...the question of the movement of tables without contact is exactly in the state in which it was left by the Dialectical Society in the year 1869. In all the series of the Proceedings there is no light whatever thrown on this simple phenomenon. Some investigation was made as regards direct writing and spirit photography, but to a large extent with negative result.’

As far as the official attitude of the society is concerned the question is in about the same state even now. In a century of research, not a single physical phenomenon has been established as an unquestionably genuine fact. This attitude of reserve and the gradual dying out of the first famous group of psychical investigators dimmed the luster of the society for many years. The society could have never been accused of being unduly credulious. Only the most hostile and defensive of debunkers could disagree with William James in his widely read volume, The Will to Believe and Other Essays (1902), ‘In fact, were I asked to point to a scientific journal where hard-headedness and never-sleeping suspicion of sources of error might be seen in their full bloom, I think that I should have to fall back on the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research.’

The name given by the society, so necessary if the findings of psychical research were to be integrated into the larger body of scientific knowledge, led to criticism by those who had too quickly jumped to unwarranted conclusions. Otherwise outstanding scientists such as Gustav Geley sarcastically criticized the society’s report on Eva C. The William Hope scandal reflected on the good reputation of the society. In public protest against its methods, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle resigned his membership in 1930. His example (as pointed out in an indictment by H. Dennis Bradley) was followed by some other members supporting his views. This indictment was published in the daily press in March 1931 but elicited no public reply on the part of the society.

In his Jubilee address in June 1932, Sir Oliver Lodge remarked that up to that time, in its corporate capacity, the society had entertained no corporate conviction and reported no progress except to the extent that it might have committed itself to a corporate belief in telepathy. He also remarked:

‘Many of us are now similarly convinced of the reality of a spiritual world and of its interaction with this world. I wonder whether it would be premature to say so and thus show that we are not merely working towards some unknown and perhaps unprofitable end, but are really in our opinion making progress. . . . I suggest that time has now arrived and that during the next 50 years we might announce this as a verified hypothesis and use it as an explanation of occurrences in which it is evidently an operative factor.’

Against criticisms of negative or over-skeptical attitudes, it must be said that the society has maintained a high standard of investigation and discussion. The middle period of elitism and rejection has long passed; the membership has broadened and the scope of investigations is a wide one. In the middle of the twentieth century the society went through a shift from emphasis on psychical research to laboratory experimental parapsychology. The society has successfully avoided the uncritical contagion of the “occult explosion” of the 1960s and also the negative backlash of the 1980s, and has thus retained its leadership in the scientific investigation of the paranormal in England. The style of contributions to the society’s Journal and Proceedings now varies from the simple clarity of a down-to-earth investigation to the highly technical project heavily structured with statistical analysis. Members hold a wide variety of viewpoints and there are lively and stimulating controversies.

In addition to the Journal and Proceedings, the society has published a number of books and pamphlets on a wide range of topics concerned with psychical research as well as recordings of important lectures. It also publishes its own quarterly Psychical Research: A Guide to Its History, Principles and Practices, in Celebration of 100 Years of the Society for Psychical Research. The society is headquartered at 49 Marloes Rd., Kensington, London, W8 6LA, England. Website: http://moebius.psy.ed.ac.uk/~spr/.

Sources:

Society for Psychical Research (Australia)

The Society for Psychical Research was founded in 1933 by Spiritualists who wished to assemble evidence that human personality survives death. Spiritualism, as a religion, has as a major objective obtaining proof that humans survive into a spirit existence. While it carried on occasional research, none of the society’s work was scientifically valid, and the major effect of the organization was to stimulate the Australian public’s interest in psychical research.

The society continued to function into the 1980s; however, during the last years of its existence it gave up all pretense of being a research organization. It moved its headquarters into a personal growth center and operated a referral agency for various mediums and psychics readers.
Society for Psychic Research (California)

Present name of the organization for many years known as the Southern California Society for Psychical Research. Not to be confused with the long-established British organization, the California group conducts research into extrasensory perception, altered states of consciousness, and related subjects, and it issues a monthly newsletter to members.

Current address unavailable.

Society for Research on Parapsychological Phenomena (Germany)

A parapsychological organization founded in 1976 in Freiburg, Germany. In March 1980, the society organized an International Congress of Parapsychology in Freiburg, attended by eminent parapsychologists from a number of different countries.

Current address unavailable.

Society for Scientific Exploration

Society devoted to advancing the study of anomalous phenomena of the kind Charles Fort called attention to. It operates in various areas both inside and outside established science. It publishes a semimannual Journal of Scientific Exploration. Address: P.O. Box 5848, Stanford, CA 94309-5848. Website: http://www.scientificexploration.org/.

Sources:

Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness (SAC)

An interdisciplinary organization (formerly the Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness) interested in states of consciousness; shamanic, spiritual, and magic phenomena; indigenous healing practices; mythological and religious studies; and psi phenomena. SAC publishes a quarterly journal, The Anthropology of Consciousness (formerly the AASC Newsletter), and sponsors an annual spring meeting consisting of monograph readings, panel discussions and workshops. Address: Box 13738, Berkeley, CA 94712.

Society for the Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge

The first American Spiritualist organization, established in New York on June 10, 1854. It published the Christian Spiritualist and engaged mediums to give séances free. New York judge John Worth Edmonds and governor N. P. Tallmadge were among its members.

Society for the Investigation of the Unexplained (SITU)

An organization founded by naturalist Ivan T. Sanderson in 1963, “...for the acquisition, investigation and dissemination of information on reports of all tangible items in the fields of chemistry, astronomy, geology, biology and anthropology, that are not readily explained.” For a generation it was the leading organization pursuing research on anomalous phenomena of the kind usually associated with Charles Fort. It encouraged fieldwork and on-the-spot investigation by offering advice, helping to raise funds, and arranging contacts for members who planned field trips and expeditions. Fieldwork and research were reviewed by a panel of 20 scientists.

The society disseminated information on findings through a quarterly journal, Pursuit, and through papers and reports. Investigations by society members included such areas as claims of ancient Egyptian television, ringing rocks, entombed toads, and poltergeist manifestations. The society maintained information files of original material, a map collection, and a specialized library. It was disbanded in the 1980s.

Society for the Study of Physiological Patterns

The Society for the Study of Physiological Patterns is a prominent British palmistry organization founded around 1945 by Noel Jaquin (1893–1974) and Beryl Hutchinson to further the science of hand analysis. The society arose amid the vacuum created by the demise of the Cheirolological Society of Great Britain at the end of the 1930s, and many former members of the Cheirolological Society joined the new organization. It differed from the older organizations in that it included a place for related occult interests such as astrology, graphology, and phrenology.

As a young man, Jaquin had studied with William G. Benjamin, the prominent palmist and author of The Laws of Scientific Hand Reading (1900). He later developed his own approach to palmistry based upon the idea that the shape of the fingers, palms, and nails, and the texture of the skin were the primary elements indicative of the personality traits of the individual. By the 1930s he concentrated his studies on the fingerprint and the five major patterns, the loop, whorl, arch, tented arch, and composite (a subfield of palmistry called dermatoglyphics). He published his initial findings in two books, The Hand of Man (1933) and The Signature of Time (1940). Jaquin, in particular, was an amazingly productive author and reportedly was the only palmist ever invited to work with Scotland Yard on their investigations. In addition, both Jaquin and Hutchinson worked in the field of medical palmistry, their findings being published in Jaquin’s book, Hand and Disease (1928), and Hutchinson’s Your Life in Your Hands (1967).

The Society for the Study of Physiological Patterns has grown into an international organization with members throughout the English-speaking world. It is headquartered at 59 Larchwood House, Baywood Sq., Chalgrove, Essex IG7 4AY, United Kingdom.

Sources:

The Society for the Study of Supernormal Pictures

Small psychical research organization established in 1918 in London, England, to promote the scientific study and investigation of supernormal pictures. Its members consisted largely of professional photographers. The first president was Abrahama Wallace. He was assisted by first vice presidents W. G. Mitchell, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, and H. Blackwell. After many hundreds of experiments, the society reported in May 1920:

"The members here present desire to place on record the fact that after many tests and the examination of thousands of pictures, they are unanimously of opinion that results have been obtained supernormally on sensitive photographic plates.
under reliable test conditions. At present the members do not undertake to explain how the results have been obtained, but they assert that they have undoubtedly been secured under conditions excluding the possibility of fraud.

The society’s views were not found acceptable to other psychological researchers and it ceased operation in 1923.

Society of Metaphysicians

British organization devoted to a science of unity between physical and psychical fields, founded by J. J. Williamson, an electronic engineer, in 1948. Williamson experienced such psychical abilities as astral projection, also known as out-of-the-body travel, and clairvoyance at an early age, and in later life attempted to find a basis for integrating such faculties with normal physical science. An early associate of the society was “Oliver Fox” (Hugh G. Callaway), pioneer of astral projection, who prepared a mail-order course on the subject for the society.

The society commenced by experimenting in such areas as out-of-the-body travel, aura studies, and dosing, and later explored biofeedback phenomena. The society concentrates largely on postal courses in conjunction with a mail-order business for books and such psychical appliances as aura goggles for viewing the human aura (as described in the books of Walter J. Kilner and Oscar Bagnall). It is headquartered at Archers Ct., Stonestile Ln., The Ridge, Hastings, East Sussex, England.

Society of Novus Spiritus

The Society of Novus Spiritus was founded in 1986 by spirit medium Sylvia Browne (1936—), who has been channeling a spirit, Francine, since the 1960s. The society was created to disseminate the teachings that have been received over the past 25 years. Novus Spiritus strives to uncover all of the “mysteries” regarding the nature of life, death, God, and the role humans play in life’s scheme. Members believe that God never withholds information, though individuals may choose to ignore it.

Novus affirms the existence of an all-loving God and is dedicated to eliminating what it considers the false concepts of Satan, hell, sin, guilt, and the fear of God, all of which are contrary to its understanding of a benevolent Creator. The pain of life is not punishment from God; rather it is a learning tool, and a very necessary one in the larger scheme of life.

The society also affirms that after death, the human soul goes to the Other Side, which is better known as heaven. This place is the true reality, as opposed to the temporal planet Earth. The Other Side is eternal, a place of total harmony, no physical limitations. The individual’s identity is intact. Life exists in its most wondrous and joyous form on the Other Side. Even though the Other Side is total beauty and happiness, the soul may not be at peace and will still seek to better itself. This seeking drives an urge again to enter life on Earth to experience God’s knowledge, gaining perfection in the process. Each soul decides how much experience it wants. While some may never have a life on Earth, others will choose 50 or more lives.

Based upon the observation that everything in nature exhibits its a dual nature, most notably in the pairing of male/female, the society teaches that this pattern extends even to the Most High, to God. Members believe in both Mother God and Father God who reflect the patterns of nature. While God the Father holds creation in a constant state of being, God the Mother actively works with and through human beings for learning and perfection. Each is a distinct entity, not just a nebulous force, and they are addressed as Om (male) and Aza (female).

The society exists to help prepare individuals to receive God’s wisdom. It teaches that knowledge provides the key needed to unlock the mind, and considers itself to be a Gnostic organization, by which it means that members are seekers after truth (gnosis). God is the source of all truth, available to all who are ready to receive it. The society promotes a community of people who seek to be guided by the Light and dedicated to living a spiritual life.

The society holds weekly celebration services in Campbell, California, and Seattle, Washington. The work of the society is expanded through study groups which utilize a 16-volume set of books written by Browne, Journey of the Soul. Monthly, related study groups receive two cassette tapes by Browne to focus their meetings. Those who complete the Journey of the Soul lessons may choose to take more advanced lessons leading to becoming a deacon and ordained minister of the society.

The Society of Novus Spiritus is headquartered at 35 Dillon Ave., Campbell, CA 95008-3001. Website can be found at http://www.sylvia.org/novusdoc.htm.

Sources:

Society of Rosicrucians in America See Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia

Society of the Inner Light

The Society of the Inner Light was founded by the British occultist “Dion Fortune” (Violet Mary Firth) in 1924. Originally known as the Community then Fraternity of the Inner Light, it became the Society of the Inner Light when incorporated as a registered charity in 1946.

Firth was a member of the Stella Matutina, an outer order of the famous Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, and the Community of the Inner Light was originally intended by Golden Dawn members as a recruitment body for suitable prospects. Firth came into conflict with Golden Dawn leaders, however, and “death,” the human soul may not be at peace and will still seek to better itself. This seeking drives an urge again to enter life on Earth to experience God’s knowledge, gaining perfection in the process. Each soul decides how much experience it wants. While some may never have a life on Earth, others will choose 50 or more lives.

Based upon the observation that everything in nature exhibits its a dual nature, most notably in the pairing of male/female, the society teaches that this pattern extends even to the Most High, to God. Members believe in both Mother God and Father God who reflect the patterns of nature. While God the Father holds creation in a constant state of being, God the Mother actively works with and through human beings for learning and perfection. Each is a distinct entity, not just a nebulous force, and they are addressed as Om (male) and Aza (female).

The society exists to help prepare individuals to receive God’s wisdom. It teaches that knowledge provides the key needed to unlock the mind, and considers itself to be a Gnostic organization, by which it means that members are seekers after truth (gnosis). God is the source of all truth, available to all who are ready to receive it. The society promotes a community of people who seek to be guided by the Light and dedicated to living a spiritual life.

The society holds weekly celebration services in Campbell, California, and Seattle, Washington. The work of the society is expanded through study groups which utilize a 16-volume set of books written by Browne, Journey of the Soul. Monthly, related study groups receive two cassette tapes by Browne to focus their meetings. Those who complete the Journey of the Soul lessons may choose to take more advanced lessons leading to becoming a deacon and ordained minister of the society.

The Society of Novus Spiritus is headquartered at 35 Dillon Ave., Campbell, CA 95008-3001. Website can be found at http://www.sylvia.org/novusdoc.htm.

Sources:

Society of Rosicrucians in America See Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia

Society of the Inner Light

The Society of the Inner Light was founded by the British occultist “Dion Fortune” (Violet Mary Firth) in 1924. Originally known as the Community then Fraternity of the Inner Light, it became the Society of the Inner Light when incorporated as a registered charity in 1946.

Firth was a member of the Stella Matutina, an outer order of the famous Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, and the Community of the Inner Light was originally intended by Golden Dawn members as a recruitment body for suitable prospects. Firth came into conflict with Golden Dawn leaders, however, and “death,” the human soul may not be at peace and will still seek to better itself. This seeking drives an urge again to enter life on Earth to experience God’s knowledge, gaining perfection in the process. Each soul decides how much experience it wants. While some may never have a life on Earth, others will choose 50 or more lives.

Based upon the observation that everything in nature exhibits its a dual nature, most notably in the pairing of male/female, the society teaches that this pattern extends even to the Most High, to God. Members believe in both Mother God and Father God who reflect the patterns of nature. While God the Father holds creation in a constant state of being, God the Mother actively works with and through human beings for learning and perfection. Each is a distinct entity, not just a nebulous force, and they are addressed as Om (male) and Aza (female).

The society exists to help prepare individuals to receive God’s wisdom. It teaches that knowledge provides the key needed to unlock the mind, and considers itself to be a Gnostic organization, by which it means that members are seekers after truth (gnosis). God is the source of all truth, available to all who are ready to receive it. The society promotes a community of people who seek to be guided by the Light and dedicated to living a spiritual life.

The society holds weekly celebration services in Campbell, California, and Seattle, Washington. The work of the society is expanded through study groups which utilize a 16-volume set of books written by Browne, Journey of the Soul. Monthly, related study groups receive two cassette tapes by Browne to focus their meetings. Those who complete the Journey of the Soul lessons may choose to take more advanced lessons leading to becoming a deacon and ordained minister of the society.

The Society of Novus Spiritus is headquartered at 35 Dillon Ave., Campbell, CA 95008-3001. Website can be found at http://www.sylvia.org/novusdoc.htm.

Sources:

Society Ordo Templi Orientis (SOTO)

The Society Ordo Templi Orientis (SOTO) is one of several groups to emerge following the death in 1962 of Karl Germer, the outer head of the OTO (Ordo Templi Orientis). In the English-speaking world the OTO had been headed by Aleister Crowley until his death in 1947. Crowley appointed Karl Germer as his successor. Germer, however, was inactive during much of the 15 years of his administration, which allowed contact with many of the order’s members to be broken. When Germer died, several different people emerged to lead the leaderless organization. A Brazilian, Marcelo Ramos Motta (1951–1987), claimed that on his deathbed, Germer had appointed him as the new head. Motta was not at the time sufficiently advanced to assume the office, but over the next years he completed his initiate work and assumed control of a reorganized order, which he named the Society Ordo Templi Orientis.

Through the society, Motta issued in 1975 the first of four massive volumes of a revived Equinox, modeled on the journal Crowley had published early in the century. Each issue contained writings by Motta and documents that supported his claims, as well as writings by Crowley. Various issues of the Equinox also denounced the rival claimants to OTO leadership who came forward. The issue came to a head in the United States when the OTO sued the SOTO on several legal actions. The publication house Samuel Weiser was caught in the middle as the publisher of both organizations. The primary ruling occurred in 1985, when the court declared the OTO, then led by Grady McMurtry, to be the legal entity who owned all Crowley copyrights and trademarks. In effect, the court turned back all Motta’s claims to OTO lineage and leadership.

It may be contacted through the Parzival XI O.T.O. Foundation, P.O. Box 979, Belconnen, ACT 2616 Australia.

Sources:

Solar Systems (in Theosophy)

Theosophy has presented a unique perspective on the formation of solar systems. It postulates the existence of an all pervading ether (a popular concept of nineteenth-century science, later discarded), known as koilon, which is imperceptible to ordinary senses and indeed even to clairvoyants except the most highly-developed. It is considered dense despite its diffusion. The Deity, intending to create a universe, invests this ether with divine force to become matter in the shape of minute drops or bubbles and the universe with its solar systems is formed. First, a mass is aggregated by the appropriate agitation of these drops and added to this mass is a rotatory motion. The formed mass contains the matter to create all the seven worlds. It may be possible to observe that these worlds are not separate in the manner we usually conceive separate worlds to be, but interpenetrate each other.

The substance in its original form is the texture of the first world and to create the texture of the second— and lower-world, the Deity sets up numerous rotatory agitations to collect 49 atoms arranged in a certain way, sufficient for the first atom to form the first world. This process continues six times, the atoms of the succeeding lower worlds are formed from the world immediately higher and each time with a multiple of forty-nine atoms. Gradually, and with time, the aggregation containing the atoms of all seven worlds completely intermingled, contracts until it forms a nebula with the flat, circular form familiar to astronomers.

The center is more dense than the fringes. During the process of flattenning and due to the initial revolving motion, rings are formed encircling the center. From these rings the planets are formed and later the solar systems.

The various worlds penetrate each other substantially within the same bounds, with the exception being the worlds of finer texture that extend beyond those relatively more dense. The names of the worlds are: first, the Physical World, which has not yet been experienced by man; second, the Monadic whence come the impulses that form human beings; third, the Spiritual World, which is the highest world humans have experienced; fourth, the Intuitional World; fifth, the Mental World; sixth, the Emotional or Astral World; and seventh is the world of matter familiar to us.

Some of these worlds are referred to in other entries as: Adi or Divine plane; Anupadaka plane (see Monad); Atman, Nirvana, or Spiritual plane; and Buddhic or Intuitional plane. (See also Evolution of Life)

Sources:

SOL See Servants of the Light

Solar Temple

The Solar Temple (officially the Ordre du Temple Solaire or OTS) was an obscure French-speaking initiatory occult order that made front-page headlines following the suicide death of its leaders among 52 people who died in a 72-hour period in three incidents on October 3–5, 1994, in Switzerland and Quebec. Sixteen additional members of the group died on the winter solstice in 1995 and five more on March 22, 1997, in Quebec. It appears that some of those who died committed suicide in hopes of making a transition to a higher world. A few people were murdered, considered traitors by the larger group. The remainder were considered weaker members and were assisted (i.e., murdered) to make the transition.

The Solar Temple was one of a number of groups that emerged in France and neighboring countries in the years since 1804 that traced their authority to a lineage of grand masters of the Order of the Temple, a medieval order of knights that was suppressed at the beginning of the fourteenth century. In 1804, a Parisian physician, Bernard-Raymond Fabre-Palaprat (1773–1838), claimed that he was the successor to a secret line of Templar grand masters who had kept the order alive through the years since its disappearance from public view. Following his death the order began to splinter. Among the modern splinters from this milieu was the Renewed Order of the Temple founded around 1970 by Julian Origas (1920–1983). The Solar Temple was founded in 1984 as the Ordre International Chevaleresque Tradition Solaire by Luc Jouret (1947–1994) and Joseph Di Mambro (1924–1994). Jouret was born in the Belgian Congo, but as a youth his parents returned... to Belgium where he attended the Free University of Brussels and became a physician. After a short time in the army, he took training as a homeopathic physician and established a practice in France. In the early 1980s he became a popular speaker on alternative medicine in French-speaking Europe and Quebec. His travels brought him into contact with Di Mambro. Di Mambro was a French jeweler and watchmaker who as a young man had joined the Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rosae Crucis (AMORC). In 1973, he founded the first of several successive organizations, the Center for the Preparation of the New Age, in Annemasse, France. One of the successor groups, the Golden Way Foundation, in Geneva, Switzerland, hosted Luc Jourret for some of his health lectures.

The Solar Temple was founded as a secret order in the 1980s. Its members were drawn from affiliates of the Amenta and Archédia Clubs, esoteric groups founded by Jourret, and the Golden Way Foundation. The Solar Temple members saw themselves as assisting in the arrival of the coming New Age. They practiced various meditative and occult disciplines and participated in elaborate rituals to achieve an enlightened state of consciousness. The rituals invoked the spiritual hierarchy of ascended masters to send light and love to bring in the New Age. The recitation of the popular “Great Invocation” that originated in the Alice Bailey’s Arcane school was an integral part of their ritual life. Members also believed that the group would produce a next generation of exceptional children, including nine cosmic children who would initiate the New Age. To this end, group members listened to Di Mambro’s identification of them with famous people in previous incarnations, his pairing them in cosmic marriages.

The group prospered through the 1980s, reaching a peak of 442 members in 1989, but in the early 1990s it began to lose members, a number of whom demanded the money they had contributed be returned. The leadership became increasingly pessimistic as members defected, no signs of the coming New Age appeared, and Di Mambro’s health suffered. By 1994, Di Mambro, Jourret, and a few members in their confidence began to think in terms of an alternate plan. Since the world was not responding to their message, they decided to escape the world to a higher reality via suicide. In the process, they also decided to take revenge on some of the former members.

In 1982, Di Mambro had fathered a female child, Emmanuel, who was assigned a messianic role in the New Age. At a later date, against Di Mambro’s wishes, Nicki Dutuit became pregnant, and she and her husband left the order. When their child arrived, he was named Christopher Emmanuel. Di Mambro saw this act as a challenge to Emmanuel’s status and labeled the young boy the Antichrist. When the decision was made to make the transition, the Dutuits and their son were the first victims. They were murdered on October 3, 1994, and their two assailants then committed suicide in the house in Morin Heights, Quebec. On that same day, 22 people were found dead in Cheiry, Switzerland, 18 of whom were found in a room with their bodies arranged in a circular pattern as if they were the spokes of a wheel. On October 25, bodies were found in two chalets in Granges-sur-Salvan, Switzerland.

It was later concluded that the total of 52 dead, only 15 were suicides. Besides the three people murdered in Canada, the majority had been drugged and killed by shooting. Di Mambro and Jourret were among those who committed suicide. However, the next year 16 more who had not been invited to the original event in Switzerland died at their own hand near Grenoble, France. A final five died on March 22 (spring equinox), 1997, in Canada. In the meantime, the Solar Temple had been disbanded and its surviving members have melded back into the population.

The Solar Temple deaths were a unique event for the European Templar and occult community, though it has in the popular consciousness been tied to several other violent incidents involving small new spiritual/religious groups such as the murders committed by leaders of the AUM Shinrikyo Buddhists in Japan and the suicides of 39 members of Heaven’s Gate, the American LFO contactee group. In France and Belgium, the Solar Temple deaths were seen as a backlash against minority religions that continues to the present. The government of Switzerland carried out an extensive investigation of the deaths and concluded that it had been the outcome of the group’s theological choices. Religious scholar Jean François Mayer consulted with the police in their investigation.

Sources:

Solomon

Legends have connected the biblical King Solomon, son of David, with magical practices. Although it does not possess any biblical authority, there is a considerable body of Middle Eastern folklore concerning Solomon that grows out of his reputation as one of the wisest of men, coupled with the possible identification of Solomon with a still older mythical figure named Saul. In 1982, Di Mambro had fathered a female child, Emmanuel, who was assigned a messianic role in the New Age. At a later date, against Di Mambro’s wishes, Nicki Dutuit became pregnant, and she and her husband left the order. When their child arrived, he was named Christopher Emmanuel. Di Mambro saw this act as a challenge to Emmanuel’s status and labeled the young boy the Antichrist. When the decision was made to make the transition, the Dutuits and their son were the first victims. They were murdered on October 3, 1994, and their two assailants then committed suicide in the house in Morin Heights, Quebec. On that same day, 22 people were found dead in Cheiry, Switzerland, 18 of whom were found in a room with their bodies arranged in a circular pattern as if they were the spokes of a wheel. On October 25, bodies were found in two chalets in Granges-sur-Salvan, Switzerland.

It was later concluded that the total of 52 dead, only 15 were suicides. Besides the three people murdered in Canada, the majority had been drugged and killed by shooting. Di Mambro and Jourret were among those who committed suicide. However, the next year 16 more who had not been invited to the original event in Switzerland died at their own hand near Grenoble, France. A final five died on March 22 (spring equinox), 1997, in Canada. In the meantime, the Solar Temple had been disbanded and its surviving members have melded back into the population.

The Solar Temple deaths were a unique event for the European Templar and occult community, though it has in the popular consciousness been tied to several other violent incidents involving small new spiritual/religious groups such as the murderers committed by leaders of the AUM Shinrikyo Buddhists in Japan and the suicides of 39 members of Heaven’s Gate, the American LFO contactee group. In France and Belgium, the Solar Temple deaths were seen as a backlash against minority religions that continues to the present. The government of Switzerland carried out an extensive investigation of the deaths and concluded that it had been the outcome of the group’s theological choices. Religious scholar Jean François Mayer consulted with the police in their investigation.

Sources:

Solomon

Legends have connected the biblical King Solomon, son of David, with magical practices. Although it does not possess any biblical authority, there is a considerable body of Middle Eastern folklore concerning Solomon that grows out of his reputation as one of the wisest of men, coupled with the possible identification of Solomon with a still older mythical figure named Saul. In 1982, Di Mambro had fathered a female child, Emmanuel, who was assigned a messianic role in the New Age. At a later date, against Di Mambro’s wishes, Nicki Dutuit became pregnant, and she and her husband left the order. When their child arrived, he was named Christopher Emmanuel. Di Mambro saw this act as a challenge to Emmanuel’s status and labeled the young boy the Antichrist. When the decision was made to make the transition, the Dutuits and their son were the first victims. They were murdered on October 3, 1994, and their two assailants then committed suicide in the house in Morin Heights, Quebec. On that same day, 22 people were found dead in Cheiry, Switzerland, 18 of whom were found in a room with their bodies arranged in a circular pattern as if they were the spokes of a wheel. On October 25, bodies were found in two chalets in Granges-sur-Salvan, Switzerland.

It was later concluded that the total of 52 dead, only 15 were suicides. Besides the three people murdered in Canada, the majority had been drugged and killed by shooting. Di Mambro and Jourret were among those who committed suicide. However, the next year 16 more who had not been invited to the original event in Switzerland died at their own hand near Grenoble, France. A final five died on March 22 (spring equinox), 1997, in Canada. In the meantime, the Solar Temple had been disbanded and its surviving members have melded back into the population.

The Solar Temple deaths were a unique event for the European Templar and occult community, though it has in the popular consciousness been tied to several other violent incidents involving small new spiritual/religious groups such as the murderers committed by leaders of the AUM Shinrikyo Buddhists in Japan and the suicides of 39 members of Heaven’s Gate, the American LFO contactee group. In France and Belgium, the Solar Temple deaths were seen as a backlash against minority religions that continues to the present. The government of Switzerland carried out an extensive investigation of the deaths and concluded that it had been the outcome of the group’s theological choices. Religious scholar Jean François Mayer consulted with the police in their investigation.

Sources:

and reciting the incantations which he composed. And when Eleazar would persuade and demonstrate to the spectators that he had such a power, he set, a little way off, a cup, or basin full of water, and commanded the demon as he went out of the man, to overturn it, and thereby to let the spectators know that he had left the man.”

Some claimed fragments of these magical books of Solomon are mentioned in the Codex Pseudepigraphus of Fabricius, and Josephus himself has described one of the antedemical roots, which appears to refer to legends of the perils involved in gathering the mandrake root, or mandragoras.

The Islamic Solomon

The Qur’an alleges that Solomon had power over the winds, and that he rode on his throne throughout the world during the day, and the wind brought it back every night to Jerusalem. This throne was placed on a carpet of green silk, of a prodigious length and breadth, and sufficient to afford standing room to all Solomon’s army, the men on his right hand and the jinn on his left. An army of the most beautiful birds hovered near the throne, forming a kind of canopy over it and the attendants, to screen the king and his soldiers from the sun.

A certain number of evil spirits were also made subject to Solomon, whose business it was to dive for pearls and perform other work. It is also stated that the devils, having received permission to tempt Solomon, in which they were not successful, conspired to ruin his character. They wrote several books of magic, and hid them under his throne, and when he died they told the chief men among the Jews that if they wished to ascertain the manner in which Solomon obtained his absolute power over men, Genii, and the winds, they should dig under his throne. They did so and found the books, abounding with the most impious superstitions.

The more learned and enlightened refused to participate in the practices described in those books, but they were willingly adopted by the common people. Muslims asserted that the Jewish priests published this scandalous story concerning Solomon, which was believed until Mahomet, by God’s command, declared him to have been no idolater.

It was maintained by some Muslims that Solomon brought a thousand horses from Damascus and other cities he conquered, although some say they were left to him by his father David, who seized them from the Amalekites; others claimed that they came out of the Red Sea and were provided with wings. The king wished to inspect his horses and ordered them to be paraded before him. Their symmetry and beauty so much occupied his attention that he gazed on them after sunset, and thus neglected evening prayers until it was too late. When aware of his omission, he was so greatly concerned at it that he ordered the horses to be killed as an offering to God, keeping a hundred of the best of them. This, we are informed, procured for him an ample recompense, as he received for the loss of his horses dominion over the winds.

The following tradition was narrated by Muslim commentators to the building of the temple of Jerusalem. According to them, David laid the foundations of it, and when he died he left it to be finished by Solomon. That prince employed Jinn, and not men, in the work; and this idea may relate to what is said in Kings 6:7, that the temple was “built of stone, made ready before it was brought thither, so that there was neither hammer, no axe, nor any tool of iron, heard in the house while it was building.” The rabbis noticed a worm that they claimed assisted the workmen, the power of which was such as to cause the rocks and stones to separate in chiseled blocks.

While engaged in the erection of the temple, Solomon found his end approaching, and he prayed that his death might be concealed from the Jinn until the building was finished. His request was granted. He died while in the act of praying, leaning on the staff that supported his body in that posture for a whole year. The Jinn, who believed he was still alive, continued their work. At the expiration of the year the edifice was completed. When a worm that had entered the staff ate through it and, to the amazement even of the Jinn, the body fell to the ground, the king was discovered to be dead.

The inhabitants of the valley of Lebanon believed that the celebrated city and temple of Baalbec were erected by the Jinn under Solomon’s direction. The object of the erection of Baalbec was variously stated, one tradition affirming that it was intended to be a residence for the Egyptian princess whom Solomon married, and another that it was built for the Queen of Sheba.

The Magical Solomon

From the sixteenth century on, occultists have studied the great grimoire known as The Key of Solomon (Clavicula Salomonis) to which tradition ascribes an ancient history before it was committed to writing. This book of ceremonial magic has two sections: the Great Key and the Lemnegot or Lesser Key. The first is concerned with magic spells, rituals, and talismans, the second with the evocation of spirits.

There is also another work known as The Testament of Solomon that was translated into German from an ancient Greek manuscript. Manuscripts of the Testament have also been reported from Greek monasteries, and the work is extremely rare in any format. The work claims to be Solomon’s own story covering the period between the building of the Temple in Jerusalem and his own fall from grace. It tells the story of a vampire-like Jinn and the magic ring of Solomon and details the various spirits and the magical means of controlling them. The ring of Solomon is also the subject of stories in the Arabian Nights.

In the seventeenth century, Freemasons began to trace their work backward to Hiram, the architect of Solomon’s kingdom. This indirect reference to Solomon has possibly been the single reference that has kept Solomon associated with the occult world.

Sources:

Solomon, Mirror of Popular name given to a “magic mirror” used for divination. Various magical signs and devices have been attributed to the biblical Solomon, but they were derived from folk legends rather than any statements in the Hebrew Bible. The Mirror of Solomon is constructed from a shining and well-polished plate of fine steel, slightly concave. The blood of a white pigeon is inscribed at the four corners with the names "Jehovah," "Eloym," "Metatron," and "Adonai.

The newly constructed mirror is placed in a clean and white cloth. Its owner, when beholding a new moon during the first hour after sunset, would repeat a prayer that the angel Anael might command and ordain his companions to act as they are instructed, that is, to assist the operator in divining from the mirror. He or she would then cast a suitable perfume upon burning coals, at the same time uttering a prayer.

After repeating this process three times, the person breathes on the mirror and evokes the angel Anael. The sign of the cross is then made upon the operator and upon the mirror for 45 days in succession, at the end of which period, if all goes as planned, Anael appears in the form of a beautiful child to accomplish the operator’s wishes. Sometimes he appears on the Solomon Ibn Gabirol (ca. 1021–ca. 1058)

Spanish-Hebrew poet and mystic philosopher. He was an advocate of neoplatonism, but also ascribed to the via negativa, the mystical doctrine that holds that the deity can only be understood as a negation of all attributes (which are in themselves limiting and human in our thoughts). He considered this view essential to the preservation of Jewish monotheism.

Solovovo, Count See Perovsky-Petrov-Solovovo, Count

Solstices

As ancient peoples began systematic observation of heavenly phenomena, they noticed the wandering habits of the Sun, easily measured by its changing location at its daily rising. Over half a year the rising point would be a little further to the north each day and then it would appear to pause and begin moving south. In the Northern Hemisphere, it would reach its northernmost point just as the summer began and its southernmost point as a prelude to the coldest days. The word “solstice” is derived from the apparent pause, from the Latin solvere, to stand still. The phenomena of the changing position of the rising sun is due to the 23-degree tilt to the Earth’s axis. The axis changes daily as the Earth rotates around the Sun.

The Sun’s movements were so obvious, and so equated with changing weather, that some form of acknowledgment of the solstices occurred in cultures around the world. Some of these festivals continue into the present and many were observable in the recent past. Among the oldest records of solstice celebrations are found in the remains of the ancient megalithic cultures, such as the one that led to the building of Stonehenge.

Such stone monuments were frequently oriented to include an alignment to the point of the rising sun at the summer solstice, presumably an occasion for the community to gather for ritual observances.

In astrology, the solstices were important markers. The Sun entered Capricorn at the winter solstice and Cancer at the summer solstice. While important markers in constructing a horoscope, the solstices were little used in its interpretation.

In modern times, as Paganism has been revived, the summer solstice has become a major occasion for ritual gatherings, among the oldest and certainly the most famous being the gatherings of the Druids at Stonehenge. Until quite recently, the summer solstice was celebrated in Germany with a picnic and bonfire. Couples would attempt to jump the bonfire as a sign of the strength of their relationship. Neo-Pagans mark the solstices as two of the major festival occasions (called sabbats). The ancient winter solstice, called Yule, has survived in a radically altered form as the Christian’s Christmas, but is now being celebrated in its own right.

Sources:

Soma

A term found in the hymns of the Rig-Veda, one of the four sacred scriptures of ancient India (the others are the Sama Veda, Yajur Veda, and Atharva Veda). The essential teachings of the Vedas were recast in the form of the Upanishads, of which there are 108 principal scriptures and a number of minor ones.

The ninth chapter of the Rig-Veda comprises 114 verses in praise of soma, the ambrosia of the gods and the elixir of immortality. It is clear that soma was also an intoxicating drink (possibly made from the milk-weed asclepias asclepias described in the Yajur Veda as a dark, sour creeper without leaves). This drink was offered by the priests as a libation to the gods, much as wine is used sparingly in the sacraments of the Christian religion for symbolic purposes.

In the twentieth century, several writers, most notably R. Gordon Wasson in his book Soma, Divine Mushroom of Immortality (1968), have speculated that soma was the amanita muscaria (a mushroom with hallucinogenic properties) and that Hindu mysticism arose from intoxication of the priests. This suggestion stemmed from Wasson’s research in Mexico, when he discovered a Mazatec Indian religious practice based on the use of a hallucinogenic mushroom.

Wasson’s work has often misled commentators into literal interpretations. Critics of drug use have also complained that the use of drugs and hallucinogenic mushrooms. The twentieth-century discovery of psychedelic drugs and their power to transform normal consciousness have misled many people into vastly overstating the role of such substances in the history of mystical experiences. Critics of drug use have also complained that the use of drugs and hallucinogenic mushrooms.
for mystical purposes has yet to “produce a single inspiring statement on the philosophy and meaning of life comparable with the wisdom of the prophets and mystics of history.”

In the 1960s, several groups were formed in the United States to promote the idea of the religious use of psychedelics, but most of these dissolved following negative court actions. Outside of these circles, as recently as 1988, a short-lived attempt to defend the psychedelic/soma connection was made in the journal ReVision (vol. 10, no. 4, spring 1988). There was little positive response and a strong rebuttal by Gene Kieffer, a follower of Indian teacher Gopi Krishna.

Sources:

—–. “It’s Not the Soma that the Brahmans Know!” SFF Newsletter [Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship] (September 1988).

Somatography
A fringe medical technique deriving from study of the human aura, devised by Welsh healer Bryn Jones. The term derives from the Greek and implies “mapping out of the soul.” Jones’ “massages” the auras of his patients, using a diagnostic device taken over from radionics and designed by an American named Mark Gallot. This therapy of healing through the human aura recalls an earlier technique of Hyppolite Bardac, who used to “clip” a short distance around the face and body of his patient with large copper scissors to free the etheric body from the physical part of the aura.

Sommer, Robert (1929– )
Research psychologist with special interest in imagery and its relationship to paranormal experience. He was born April 26, 1929, in New York City. He studied at Hobart College, Geneva, New York (B.A., 1950), the University of Oklahoma (M.S., 1952), and the University of Kansas (Ph.D., 1956). Following his graduation he was a research psychologist at Saskatchewan Hospital, Canada (1957–63) and assistant professor, University of Alberta, Edmonton (1961–63) prior to joining the Department of Psychology at the University of California, Davis, California, in 1963. He contributed a paper on parapsychology to The Psychic Force: Essays in Modern Psychical Research edited by Allan Angoff (1970).

Sources:

Somnambulism
Term derived from Latin somnus (sleep) and ambulare (to walk). A state of sleep, or half-waking trance, spontaneously or artificially induced, in which subconscious faculties take the place of normal consciousness and direct the body in the performance of various actions from the erratic (sleep walking) to the highly intellectual (solving problems). Somnambulism may start as an exaggerated dream and lead to the development of what resembles a secondary personality with a chain of memory of its own. This chain of memory will often be found as part of the hypnotic memory. The personality itself, in some cases, may exhibit wisdom beyond that of the waking subject and perform paranormal feats.

The somnambulist may have his or her eyes closed, and ears deaf to auditory impressions or sense impressions, without awakening any gleam of consciousness. This lack of attention to sensory impressions may have some effect in rousing new trains of association and suggesting a new line of action. It is suggested that the sleepwalker may see only a mental picture of what he or she is doing as in a dream instead of objective reality, and certain experimental tests have suggested that this occurs in some cases.

The somnambulistic state was the discovery of the Marquis Chastenet de Dieu Segur in 1784 in the context of mesmerism and animal magnetism. He induced it by passes, and finally, by a simple act of will. The Abbe Faria brought it on by shouting; Chevalier de Barbarin by praying; and James Braid by staring at a bright object, usually his lance case.

The nineteenth-century physician Alexandre Bertrand assigned somnambulism to four causes: (1) A particular nervous temperament that predisposes individuals otherwise in good health to paroxysm of somnambulism during their ordinary sleep. (2) It is sometimes produced in the course of certain diseases of which it may be considered a symptom of a crisis. (3) It is often seen in the course of the proceedings necessary to bring on the condition known as animal magnetism. (4) It may result as a consequence of a high degree of mental exaltation. Accordingly, he distinguished four kinds of somnambulism: the natural, the symptomatic, the artificial, and ecstatic. Hypnotism would fall under the artificial category, and trance under the ecstatic.

Physiologically, somnambulism differs from sleep in that the muscles retain the ordinary tension of the waking life. The eyelids are usually in an unnatural position, drawn upward and inward so that the vision is directed to the top of the forehead. There is an insensibility to pain; taste and smell are paralyzed. The external senses are perfectly sealed. No memory is carried into the waking state.

There are various degrees of somnambulism. Charles Richet spoke of semi-somnambulism, the state in which the medium retains consciousness while automatic manifestations take place. Catalepsy is a deep stage of somnambulism. The fakirs and yogis of India induced it by an effort of will.

The mildest form of somnambulism is typified in the inarticulate murmurings or vague gestures of a dreaming child, while in the most extreme cases where all the senses are active and the actions apparently as purposeful as in the normal waking state, it borders on the condition of spontaneous hypnotism. Its affinity with hypnosis was recognized early, when the hypnotic subjects of the animal magnetists were designated “somnambules.” It is remarkable that somnambulists may walk in dangerous paths with perfect safety, but if they are suddenly awakened they are liable to fall. Spontaneous somnambulism generally indicates some tendency of the nervous system, since as a rule, only in some abnormal state could the dream ideas exercise so exciting an influence on the brain as to cause activity centers normally controlling voluntary movements.
Sylvan J. Muldoon (with Hereward Carrington) in The Projection of the Astral Body (1929) writes of "astral somnambulism," a state of unconscious astral projection that, according to Muldoon, was far more common than generally supposed. It mostly occurred in the dream state.

It should be noted that in the wake of contemporary language concerning altered states of consciousness, somnambulism has dropped out of the language of psychology and parapsychology.

Sources:
Weinhold, Arnold. Seven Lectures on Somnambulism. Edinburgh, Scotland, 1845.

Sons Ahman Israel See Suns Ahman Ishrael—IA:A:O:

Sorcery
Term originating in the 14th century. From Middle English sorre, Old French sorcier, derived from the Vulgar Latin sortarius, traced back to the original Latin, sors, meaning lot, or chance, and sortis, the genitive case meaning of, or by, lots. Indicating the practice of divination by lots. Its practices date back to prehistoric and pre-Columbian religions, as well as those of the Middle East and ancient Egypt; by the Middle Ages it referred to the practice of malevolent magic, or black magic, most commonly the use of supposed supernatural power by the agency of evil spirits called forth by spells by any person with a desire for malice, often motivated out of envy or revenge. Contrasted from witchcraft, referring to the destructive methods that can be used by anyone, rather than by one with the special innate powers attributed to witches. Also connotes the use of special charms, potions, or rituals to cast a particular spell. Practices abounded in certain regions of Africa and Oceania among the tribal peoples into the 21st century.

Sources:

Sordi, Signora Lucia (1871–?)

Italian physical medium, a working-class woman controlled by "Remigio," a spirit who specialized in giving demonstrations, under test conditions, of matter passing through matter, producing many-colored psychic lights, materializations, and telekinesis.

The clothes of the securely-fastened medium were often removed from under a labyrinth of knots while not the slightest ringing was heard from the small bells attached to her garments. Handuffs and a straightjacket were similarly taken off, and the medium herself was repeatedly placed outside a padlocked wooden fence more than two yards high.

In 1911, the Societa di Studi Psichici di Milano engaged Sordi's services for test sittings during a period of not less than a year. During this investigation, Baron Schrenck-Notzing attended two of the sittings. He discovered no trickery but expressed an opinion in Psychische Studien that the results might have been obtained by purely mechanical means. This opinion stimulated an animated controversy. In December 1911, and in the following January, the medium sat for scientists in Rome. An interesting account of an attempted exposure is given by Professor V. Tummolo in Luce e Ombre. A sitter being touched by a solid materialized limb switched on an electric lamp and produced a dazzling light. Tummolo continues.

Then to my sight there appeared a sort of transparent shirt, which vanished immediately, instantaneously entering the medium. The latter, who happened to be standing at some distance from the cabinet and not far from the individual responsible for the sudden illumination, fell to the ground like a corpse, and then commenced to wail in an indescribable manner. Every possible attention was hastily rendered her; but she expectorated blood, and felt terrible pains in the region of the heart until the next day—pains which forced her to utter cries which she was unable to repress. ... In the cabinet, immediately after the event just narrated, the medium's gown was found completely buttoned up, in spite of the fact that she was still bound in the manner previously described—bound, that is to say, in respect to her hands and body, with a network of ribbon."

Tummolo expressed his conviction of the genuineness of Sordi's mediumship.

Sorokin, Pitirim Alexandrovitch (1889–1968)

Professor of sociology with special interest in the superconscious, manifestations of genius, and creativity. He was born January 21, 1889, at Turva, Vologda Province, Russia. He studied at the University of St. Petersburg but was eventually banished by the Soviet government in 1922.

He moved to the United States and became a professor of sociology at the University of Minnesota (1924–30). In 1930, he moved to Harvard University, where he founded and headed the department of sociology (1930–45). In 1943, he became the director of the Harvard Research Center in Creative Altruism where he remained until his retirement. Sorokin published 30 books on sociology and history.

He contributed an introduction to The Psychic Source Book, edited by Alson J. Smith, which includes an appendix in which Sorokin wrote on the importance of parapsychology. He died February 19, 1968.

SORRAT

Acronym for the Society for Research on Rapport and Telekinesis, a group founded by John G. Neihardt. Meetings were usually held at Neihardt's home at Skyrim Farm, near Columbia, Missouri.

Neihardt's interest in psychic matters stemmed from his close association with the Indian Rights movement from 1903 on. Neihardt was accepted as a participant in secret healing ceremonies and was actively concerned with the Indian shaman Black Elk, the subject of his book Black Elk Speaks (William Morrow, 1932). Neihardt's wife, Mona, had been associated with...
Spiritualism and was mediumsistic, and Neihardt investigated the phenomena of various mediums.

The SORRAT group was formed during the mid-1960s with a primary focus on the manipulation of matter by conscious mental effort. Neihardt discussed the group methods with veteran parapsychologist J. B. Rhine, in order to conduct experiments in a congenial atmosphere that would also be fraud-proof.

One technique employed was the ‘mini-lab’—a sealed transparent box containing target objects for testing psychokinetic phenomena. With the assistance of parapsychologist Edward William Cox, an automatic filming method was developed in which a fixed movie camera and lights were trained on a mini-lab and activated by an electrical signal. The former McDonnell Laboratory for Psychic Research also supported these techniques. Posed to have, the SORRAT group performed experiments tending to validate psychokinesis, levitation, apparitions, and communication with entities. However, the methods of recording the phenomena were so poor that most parapsychologists dismissed the experiments as the work of unprepared amateurs and hence of no evidential value.

Sources:

Sorrel Leaf
A sorrel leaf was sometimes used to bewitch people, as in the case of the Irish witch mentioned in George Sinclair’s Satan’s Invisible World Displayed (1685), who gave to a girl a leaf of sorrel that the child put into her mouth. Great torture ensued for the child and increased on the approach of the witch.

Sortilege
Divination by lots, one of the most ancient and common superstitions. It was used among Oriental nations to detect a guilty person, as when Saul by this means discovered that Jonathan had disobeyed his command by taking food, and when the sailors by a similar process found Jonah to be the cause of the tempest by which they were overtaken.

The various methods of using the lot have been very numerous, including rhabdomancy, chalumancy, the Sortes Sagittariae or belomancy, and the common casting of dice. The following are the more classical methods:
Sortes Thraeae, or Thraem lots, were chiefly used in Greece and Rome. They were pebbles or counters distinguished by certain characters that were cast into an urn, and the first that came out was supposed to contain the right direction. This form of divination received its name from the Thraeae, three nymphs supposed to have nursed Apollo and to have invented this mode of predicting futurity.
Sortes Viales, or street and road lots, were used both in Greece and Rome. The person that wanted to learn his fortune carried with him a certain number of lots, distinguished by several characters or inscriptions. Walking to and fro in the public ways he asked the first boy whom he met to draw, and the inscription on the lot thus drawn was received as an infallible prophecy. Plutarch declared that this form of divination was derived from the Egyptians, by whom the actions and words of boys were carefully observed as containing in them something prophetic.

Another form of the Sortes Viales was exhibited by a boy, or sometimes by a man, who positioned himself in a public place to give responses to all comers. He was provided with a tablet, on which certain predictive verses were written; when consulted, he cast dice on the tablet, and the verses on which the dice fell were supposed to contain the proper direction. Sometimes instead of tablets they had urns, in which the verses were thrown, written upon slips of parchment. The verse drawn out was received as a sure guide and direction. Tibullus alluded to this custom as follows: ‘‘Thrice in the streets the sacred lots she threw, and thrice the boy a happy omen drew.’’ This form of divining was often practiced with the Sibylline oracles, and hence was named Sortes Sibyllina.

Sortes Preneustae, or the Preneustae lots, were used in Italy. The letters of the alphabet were placed in an urn and shaken; they were then turned out upon the floor, and the words that they accidentally formed were received as omens.

This divinatory use of letters is still known in Eastern countries. The Muslims had a divining table that they said was invented by the prophet Edris or Enoch. It was divided into a hundred little squares, each of which contained a letter of the Arabic alphabet. The person who consulted it repeated three times the opening chapter of the Qur’an, and the 57th verse of the 6th chapter: ‘‘With Him are the keys of the secret things; none knoweth them but Him; He knoweth whatever is on the dry ground, or in the sea: there falleth no leaf but He knoweth it; neither is there a single grain in the dark parts of the earth, nor a green thing, nor a dry thing, but it is written in a perspicuous book.’’

Having concluded this recitation, he averted his head from the table and placed his finger upon it; he then looked to see upon what letter his finger was placed, wrote that letter; the fifth following it; the fifth following that again; and so on until he came back to the first he had touched. The letters thus collected formed the answer.

Sortes Homericae and Sortes Virgilianae involve divination by opening some poem at hazard and accepting the passage that first turns up as an answer. This practice probably arose from the esteem that poets had among the ancients, by whom they were reputed divine and inspired persons. Homer’s works among the Greeks had the most credit, but the tragedies of Euripides and other celebrated poems were occasionally used for the same purpose. The Latinus chiefly consulted Virgil, and many curious coincidences were related by grave historians, between the prediction and the event; thus, the elevation of Severus to the Empire is supposed to have been foretold by his opening at this verse, ‘‘Remember, Roman, with imperial sway stood of the nations.

It is said that Charles I and Lord Falkland made trial of the Virgilian lots a short time before the commencement of the great Civil War. The former opened at that passage in the fourth book of the Aeneid where Dido predicts the violent death of her faithless lover; the latter at the lamentation of Evander over his son in the eleventh book. If the story is true, the coincidences between the responses and events are remarkable.

Sortes Biblicae was divination by the Bible, which the early Christians used instead of the profane poets. Nicephorus Gregoras recommended the Psalter as the fittest book for the purpose, but Cedrenus stated that the New Testament was more commonly used. St. Augustine denounced this practice in temporal affairs, but declared in one of his letters that he had recourse to it in all cases of spiritual difficulty. Another form of the Biblical lots was to go to a place of worship and take as an omen the first passage of Scripture read by the minister or the text from which he preached.

Muslins consulted the Qur’an in a similar manner, but one of their methods was to deduce their answer from the seventh line of the right-hand page. Others counted how often the letters kha and shin occurred in the page; if kha (the first letter of kheyr, ‘good’) predominated, the answer was deemed favorable, but if shin (the first letter of shan, ‘evil’) appeared more frequently, the inference was that the projects of the inquirer were forbidden or dangerous.
It would be easy to multiply examples of these efforts to obtain guidance from blind chance. They were once so frequent that it was deemed necessary to denounce them from the pulpit as being clearly forbidden by the divine precept, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

Soul

The term soul is used in two senses—it indicates the ego and the spirit-body. In ancient writings, an individual was described as a trune being: body, soul, and spirit. According to this concept, the soul is just as much an envelope, animated by the spirit, as the physical body is an envelope for the soul. At death the soul withdraws and continues to function in the spiritual world. Astral body and soul are almost equivalent terms.

Some occult and Eastern teachings, however, speak of five bodies of differing degrees of refinement that will be cast away in time just as the physical body is left behind.

In his book Man and the Universe (1908), Sir Oliver Lodge defined the soul and ego as,

"... that controlling and guiding principle which is responsible for our personal expression and for the construction of the body, under the restrictions of physical condition and ancestry. In its higher development it includes also feeling and intelligence and will, and is the storehouse of mental experience. The body is its instrument or organ, enabling it to receive and convey physical impressions, and to effect and be effected by matter and energy."

Because such concepts as "soul" and "spirit" (as its animating essence) are not available for scientific scrutiny like the body or the world of matter generally, many scientists have either denied their existence as real entities or as a reality not subject to scientific scrutiny, although retaining as useful the concept of consciousness, with which the ego is associated.

Spiritualists claim that there is evidence for survival of consciousness after death, and that there is sufficient individuality in the surviving consciousness to justify the use of the term soul. A good deal of psychical research tends to confirm this position, without necessarily accepting the religious implications of such survival.

Christianity has generally taught the resurrection of the body, although, in light of Paul's mention of a spiritual resurrection-body, there has been some disagreement on the exact nature of that revived body. The doctrine of the soul has always vied for attention with the Greek notion of the immortality of the soul.

In Eastern religious philosophy, there are clear distinctions between the gross ego of name and form (with individual experience) and the subtle ego that is claimed as a universal substratum of all individual souls. The gross ego, by reason of its limitations of experience and consciousness, is tied to the world of matter, which is transient. This ego is an obstruction to fuller awareness of reality and must be transcended by selfless service and refinement of consciousness. In this process, the individual soul loses its attachment to the transient desires and fears of material life and is eventually subsumed in a divine consciousness. In this progress, the world of matter becomes like an illusion that ceases to have validity when divine reality supervenes. As long as attachment to the world of matter and sense experience remains, the soul must go through a process of reincarnation.

The concept of the soul remains unverifiable by experimental method that is based on the limitations of material existence itself. But it is a useful concept insofar as it relates to individual subjective experience, which is often more relevant to ethical goals than laboratory experiments.

For many individuals, the conviction that there is a soul that is independent of (although shaped by) the physical body occurs as they experience out-of-the-body travel or astral projection. Such an experience is an overwhelming one to most who have it and has become a profound religious experience to many individuals.

Sources:

Soule, Minnie Meserve (d. 1936)

Trance medium of the American Society for Psychical Research, known in early experiments under the pseudonym "Mrs. Chenoweth." For many years J. H. Hyslop made interesting tests in cases of obsession with her mediumship. She produced excellent trance phenomena, similar to those of "Leonora Piper". Soule was controlled by "Imperator" and "Sunbeam," the spirit of a child.

In the publications of the Boston Society for Psychical Research, an interesting record of séances narrates the experiences of Lydia W. Allison, with supplementary material by Walter Franklin Prince, under the title Leonard and Soule Experiments in Psychical Research (1929). An earlier work, Spirit Messages (Rochester, 1914), dedicated to the medium Hiram Cornell University, recorded unique communications received through Soule, apparently from Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Alfred Lord Tennyson, Henry Wardsworth Longfellow, and many other eminent minds.

Sources:

SoulSongs, Inc., The Center for Sound Healing

SoulSongs, Inc., The Center for Sound Healing is an organization founded and led by a woman known only as Shulamit (from the Hebrew word Sholam, meaning whole or complete), described as a gifted healer and a Kabalistic vocal toner. Her work is based upon the Kabbalah, the ancient Jewish system of mystic wisdom. The Kabbalah pictures the universe as having emanated from God through a series of levels, each of which is entered through a gate or sephiroth (sephira). These ten gates are often pictured on a diagram called the Tree of Life. The highest of the sephiroth are named Kether and Chochmah.

As a tonal healer, Shulamit uses her voice to produce sacred tones (the sounds of the Hebrew vowels that are identified as the breath of God in the Kabbalistic literature). Her intoning the sounds allows her to access what is thought of as the Chochmah consciousness, a level of wisdom that exists beyond words and concepts, a realm that is boundless and infinite. She then brings that wisdom into a realm of verbal and conceptual understanding (the sephirah call Binah) and relates it to each person with whom she works.

Shulamit teaches that according to Kabbalah, each person has a higher self (the Neshamah) that is often dormant and must be awakened. Shulamit offers personal sessions to individuals who wish to stimulate their higher self into action or who are in need of healing.

Soul Travel Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed.

Travel is seen as taking place on the various planes of existence and must be awakened. Shulamit offers personal sessions to individuals who wish to stimulate their higher self into action or who are in need of healing.

Soul Travel Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed.

With them, as with other phenomena, a great variety was caused by good or bad conditions. Just as illness or atmospheric disturbance made the perfumes and drapery coarse and unrefined, so the lyre sounds became harsh, unmusical and wooden. . . . The table was used until at times the musical twang would shade into a sort of musical knock, and finally become an ordinary dull thud upon the table. . . . When things were not all right, the sound would assume a most melancholy wailing character, which was indescribably weird and saddening. It was not unlike the soughing of the wind through trees in the dead of night; a ghost-like dreamy sound that few persons would sit long to listen to. That sound was always accompanied by black darkness in the room. . . . No point, indeed, connected with these strange sounds is more remarkable than the intensity of feeling conveyed by them. . . . Anger, sadness, contentment and mirth, solemnity and eagerness, are conveyed in a way that is quite inexplicable. . . . The wailing sounds above noticed seem at times almost to sob and shriek as if in a burst of sadness. Sometimes to a question put silence will be maintained for a while, and then little hesitating sounds will be made, very slowly and tremulously, as to convey perfectly the idea of uncertainty and doubt. Then again the reply will come clear, sonorous, and immediate as the 'I do' of a witness in the box who has no doubt as to the answer he should give.

"The sounds used always to commence near the circle, and, so to say, radiate from it as a centre into different parts of the room. Of late they have changed, and are usually audible to me before they strike the ear of any other person. How far it may be attributable to clairaudience, a faculty lately developed in me, I cannot say positively. But at any rate, they seem to me to commence by a distant rumble, not unlike the roll of a drum. This gradually draws nearer until it is audible to all, and the old sounds are in our midst."

"Hitherto I only mentioned the stringed musical sounds. . . . But there are other sounds which professedly emanate from the same source and which resemble the sound of a tambourine played over our heads, or, at times, the flapping of a pair of large wings. . . . Still later other sounds, like those made by a small zither, have presented themselves."

Charlton Speer, in an account given to F. W. H. Myers, described four kinds of musical sounds produced without any instrument in the room. The first was called "fairy bells." These resembled the tones produced by striking musical glasses with a small hammer. No definite tune was ever played, but the bells, on request, would always run up and down a scale in perfect tune. It was difficult to judge where the sounds came from, but when Speer applied his ear to the top of the table it seemed to be somehow in the wood. The second was a stringed instrument, akin to a violincello but more powerful and sonorous. It was only heard in single notes and was employed to answer questions. The third sound was an exact imitation of an ordinary handbell. It denoted the presence of a particular spirit. The fourth sound could best be described by imagining the soft tone of a clarinet gradually increasing in intensity, until it rivaled the sound of a trumpet, then by degrees gradually diminished to the original subdued tone of the clarinet, until it eventually died away in a drawn-out, melancholy wail. In no case were more than single notes, or at best isolated passages, produced. The controlling agencies accounted for this with the peculiarly unmusical organization of the medium.

Various sounds were used by some of the spirit controls as a special mark of identity. "Groovy" produced pure sounds like those of a thick harp string; "Chom" made the sound of an old Egyptian harp with four strings; "Said" used a three stringed lyre; "Rooph" a seven-stringed one with a rippling sound; and "Kabila's" sound was like a drum, very deep, a sort of prolonged roll.

It is said in mediumistic communications that the spirits, in their world, can create for themselves from fluidic material the things they wish. Spirits have claimed that they can produce the sound of anything in this same way.
In Gwendolyn K. Hack's Modern Psychic Mysteries at Millesimo Castle (1929), there is the interesting note that the spirit of the young aviator Vittorio Centurione always arrived and departed in his airplane. The coming of the airplane was heard from a distance, then it descended into the séance room with the characteristic noise and flew above as if there was no limit of space and finally stopped. On the first occasion when 'Centurione' manifested, the approach of the plane was followed by the sound of falling, hissing, and splashing into the water illustrating the very manner by which this aviator had perished over Lake Varese.

Dancing performances and duels were executed for the sitter's entertainment at the séances at Millesimo Castle. In the notes of the séance August 12, 1928, we find:

"D’Angelo: 'Here, in the midst of you, a little battle between two gentlemen is going to take place', . . . we heard the sound of two swords hastily withdrawn from their scabbards. They were crossed and glanced off each other in a sinister manner. Then we heard the most formidable blows, given first by one side and then by the other. These blows rained upon metal, echoing upon the shields and helmets of the warriors. We heard rapid footsteps pounding the floor as the combatants fought, now advancing, now retreating. It was quite alarming, and one could not avoid covering instinctively, when a powerful thrust came too close, for one felt that the next blow might glance off and strike one’s head or neck."

Will Goldston wrote an account of a séance with Rudi Schneider in the Sunday Graphic (December 22, 1929): "Several heavy thuds followed, as though a giant were striking a block of marble with a mallet. The extraordinary thing was that the thuds did not seem to come from the walls, the ceiling or the floor, but from the table. They were powerful thuds, and yet they did not cause any vibration in the room, as such thuds caused by normal means would create."

Sources:

South African Society for Psychical Research

The first South African Society for Psychical Research was founded in 1910 but existed for only a few years. It was not until 1955 that a second attempt to form such an organization was attempted, this time by Arthur E. H. Bleksley and others at the University of Witwatersrand. The previous year an informal group had gathered to study psychic phenomena, and the interest stimulated by this group led directly to the society's formation.

No sooner had the society formed than it came under a strong ideological attack by a group of psychic debunkers, described as "Marxists, atheists, and communists," and the original program of the group was diverted to answering the challenge. It developed a public program to establish the existence of psi phenomena and the legitimacy of scientific efforts to study it. It was able to survive this crisis successfully and has continued to this present. In 1958, it founded the South African Institute for Parapsychological Research and moved from an exclusive emphasis on education to the development of a research program. The institute survived for several years but eventually ran out of funds.

Over the long haul, the society has suffered from the country's former apartheid policies, which prohibited the participation of black people in the organization. Social customs also prevented research among the native population, which would have provided a unique resource for the society. Also, the relatively small white population has had difficulty keeping the society functioning on a steady basis. Its meetings and publications are sporadic, and it has been unable to establish a headquarters or hire staff. However, the society now publishes the Parapsychological Journal of South Africa, and in 1975 a branch of the society opened at the University of Natal in Durban. It may be contacted at P.O. Box 23154, Joubert Park, Johannesburg 2044, South Africa.

Sources:

South American Indians

Throughout South America, the magician caste analogous to the medicine men or shamans of North America were known as yauhahu or yauhaha. Of those of British Guiana (now Guyana), W. H. Brett gives the following account in The Indian Tribes of Guiana (1868):

"They are each furnished with a large gourd or calabash, which has been emptied of its seeds and spongy contents, and has a round stick run through the middle of it by means of two holes. The ends of this stick project—one forms the handle of the instrument, and the other has a long string to which beautiful feathers are attached, wound round it in spiral circles. Within in the calabash are a few small white stones, which rattle when it is shaken or turned round. The calabash itself is usually painted red. It is regarded with great awe by the heathen Indians, who fear to touch it, or even to approach the place where it is kept.

"When attacked by sickness, the Indians cause themselves to be conveyed to some friendly sorcerer, to whom a present of more or less value must be made. Death is sometimes occasioned by those removals, cold being taken from wet or the damp of the river. If the patient cannot be removed, the sorcerer is sent for to visit him. The females are all sent away from the place and the men must keep at a respectful distance, as he does not like his proceedings to be closely inspected. He then commences his exorcisms, turning, and shaking his marakka, or rattle, and chanting an address to the yauhaha. This continues for successive nights. If the patient be strong enough to endure the disease, the excitement, the noise, and the fumes of tobacco in which he is enveloped, and the sorcerer observes signs of recovery he will pretend to extract the cause of the complaint by sucking the part affected. After many ceremonies he will produce from his mouth some strange substance, such as a thorn or gravel-stone, a fish-bone or bird's claw, a snake's tooth, or a piece of wire, which some malicious yauhaha is supposed to have inserted in the affected part. As soon as the patient fancies himself rid of this cause of his illness his recovery is generally rapid, and the fame of the sorcerer greatly increased. Should death, however, ensue, the blame is laid upon the evil spirit, whose power and malignity have prevailed over the counteracting charms. Some rival sorcerer will at times come in for a share of the blame, whom the sufferer has unhappily made his enemy, and who is supposed to have employed the yauhaha in destroying him. The sorcerers being supposed to have the power of causing, as well as of curing diseases, are much dreaded by the common people, who never willfully offend them. So deeply rooted in the Indian's bosom is this belief concerning the origin of diseases, that they have little idea of sickness arising from other causes. Death may arise from a wound or a contusion, or..." be brought on by want of food, but in other cases it is the work of the yauhahu.

“I once came upon a Warau practising his art upon a woman inflicted with a severe internal complaint. He was, when I first saw we him, blowing violently into his hands and rubbing them upon the affected part. He very candidly acknowledged his imposture when I taxed him with it, put up his implements, and went away. The fate of the poor woman, as it was related to me some months afterwards, was very ill. Though a Venetian of half-breed, and of the Church of Rome, she was wedded to the Indi- an superstitions, and after trying the most noted sorcerers without relief, she inflicted on herself a mortal wound with a razor in the vain attempt to cut out the imaginary cause of her internal pain.

“Some have imagined that those men have faith in the power of their own incantations from their performing them over their own children, and even causing them to be acted over themselves when sick. This practice it is indeed difficult to account for. The juggling part of their business is such a gross imposture as could only succeed with a very ignorant and credu- lous people; but it is perhaps in their case, as in some others, difficult to tell the precise point where credulity ends and imposture begins. It is certain that they are excited during their incantations in a most extraordinary way, and positively affirm that they hold intercourse with spirits; nor will they allow them- selves to be laughed out of the assertion however ridiculous it may appear to us.

The Waraus, in many points the most degraded of the tribes, are the most renowned as sorcerers. The huts which they set apart for the performance of their superstitious rites are regarded with great veneration.

“Mr. Nowers, on visiting a Warau settlement, entered one of those huts, not being aware of the offense he was committing and found it perfectly empty, with the exception of the gourd, or mataro, as it is called by the tribe. There was, in the centre of the hut, a small raised place about eighteen inches high, on which the fire had been made for burning tobacco. The sorcer- er being asked to give up the gourd, peremptorily refused, saying that if he did so his two children would die the same night.”

Franz Keller, in Amazon and Madera Rivers (1874), observes of the Brazilian tribes as follows:

“As with the shamans of the North Asiatic nations, the influence of a Paje must secure over his tribe depends entirely on the success of his cures and his more or less imposing personal qualities. Woe to him if by some unlucky ministration or fatal advice he forfeits his prestige. The hate of the whole tribe turns against him, as if to indemnify them for the fear and awe felt by them until then; and often he pays for his envied position by his life. And an influential and powerful position it is. His advice is first heard in war and peace. He has to mark the boundaries of the hunting-grounds; and, when quarrels arise, he has to decide in concert with the chief lain, sometimes even against the latter’s wishes. By a majestically distant demeanour, and by the affectation of severe fasting and of nightly meetings with the spirits of another world, these augurs have succeeded in giving such an appearance of holiness to the whole caste, that their influence is a mighty one to the present day, even with the Indi- ans of the Aldeamentos, where contact with the white race is sure by-and-by to produce a certain degree of scepticism.

“When I was at the Aldeamento of San Ignacio, on the Pa- ranapanema, Cayaba, chieflain and Paje of an independent horde of Cayowa Indians made his appearance, and I had the honour of being introduced to this magnificent sample of a conjurer. He was a man of about fifty, with wide well-cut fea- tures, framed within a dense, streaming mane of long black hair. The long sarubita on his under lip (a long, thin, cylinder of a resin resembling amber), a great number of black and white beads covering his chest in regular rows like a cuirass, and a broad girdle holding his cherapa (sort of apron), which was fringed all round with rich, woven ornaments, gave him quite a stately, majestic appearance.”

The Chilenus called their magicians gígua or dugol, and they were subdivided into gauenguau, genopaya, and genipiru, meaning respectively “masters of the heavens,” “masters of winds,” and “of insects or worms.” There was also a sect called caleu, or “sorcerers,” who lived in caves, and who were served by yama- ches, or “man-animals,” to whom they taught their terrible arts.

The Araucanians believed that these wizards had the power to transform themselves at night into nocturnal birds, to fly through the air, and to shoot invisible arrows at their enemies, besides indulging in the malicious mischief with which folklore credits the wizards of all countries. They believed their priests possessed numerous familiars who were attached to them after death—similar to the beliefs of the magicians of the Middle Ages. These priests or diviners were celibate, and led an exist- ence apart from the tribe, in some communities being dressed as women. Many tales are told of their prowess in magic, that indicate that they were either natural epileptics or ecstasies, or that disturbing mental influences were brought about by the use of drugs. The Araucanians also held that to mention their real personal names gave magic power over them that might be turned to evil ends. Regarding the wizards of the inhabitants of the territory around the River Chaco in Paraguay, Barbrook Grubb records as follows in An Unknown People in an Unknown Land:

“The training necessary to qualify an Indian to become a witch-doctor consists, in the first place, in severe fastings, and especially in abstinence from fluid. They carry this fasting to such an excess as to affect the mind. In consequence of cer- tain herbs are eaten to hasten this stage. They pass days in solitude, and, when thoroughly worked up to an hysterical condition, they see spirits and ghosts, and have strange visions. It is necessary, furthermore, that they should eat live toads and some kinds of snakes. Certain little birds are plucked alive and then devoured, their power of whistling being supposed to be thus communicated to the witch-doctor. There are other fea- tures in the preliminary training which need not be mentioned, and when the initiatory stage has been satisfactorily passed, they are instructed in the mysteries under pledge of secrecy. After that their future depends upon themselves.

“It is unquestionable that a few of these wizards understand to a slight degree the power of hypnism. They appear at times to throw themselves into a hypnotic state by sitting in a strained position for hours, fixing their gaze upon some distant object. In this condition they are believed to be able to throw their souls out—that is, in order to make them wander. It seems that occasionally, when in this state, they see visions which are quite the opposite of those they had desired. At other times they content themselves with concentrating their attention for a while upon one of their charms, and I have no doubt that occasionally they are sincere in desiring to solve some perplexing problems.

“One of the chief duties of the wizard is to arrange the weather to suit his clansmen. If they want rain it is to him they apply. His sorceries are of such a kind that they may be extend- ed over a long period. He is never lacking in excuses, and so, while apparently busy in combating the opposing forces which are hindering the rain, he gains time to study weather signs. He will never or rarely venture an opinion as to the expected change until he is nearly certain of a satisfactory result. Any other Indian could foretell rain were he to observe signs as closely as does the wizard. The killing of a certain kind of duck, and the sprinkling of its blood upwards, is his chief charm. When he is able to procure this bird he is sure that rain cannot be far off, because these ducks do not migrate southwards until they know that there is going to be water in the swamps. These swamps are filled by the overflowing of the rivers as much as by the local rainfalls, and the presence of water in the rivers and swamps soon attracts rain-clouds.
Southcott, Joanna (1750–1814)

British prophetess of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries who announced that she had a divine pregnancy. She was born on April 25, 1750, one of the daughters of a farmer in the village of Cattistock, East Devon, England. She grew up in a devout religious atmosphere, being obliged to read a chapter of the Bible daily and discuss it with her father. She became a sturdy, vivacious, self-reliant young woman.

When she was 21, her father became ill, obliging her to take charge of the farm, which she managed admirably for a couple of years after her father recovered. Southcott left the farm and went into domestic service for five years at the house of an upholsterer in Exeter, where she also became skilled in the trade. She next went to work as a maid for a couple named Taylor.

For 42 years Joanna had lived a normal life, but in 1792, at the time of her menopause, she began to have strange experiences.

Southcott's Prophetic Career

These were apocalyptic times. In France, revolutionary mobs had burned the king's palace, and the houses of noblemen were in flames. Radical propagandists sought to foment revolution in Britain. Tom Paine's The Rights of Man had just been published. Several extreme religious movements had appeared.

Among the prophetic voices was that of a young naval officer, Richard Brothers. Brothers immersed himself in Bible study and preached powerful sermons on his apocalyptic visions, with warnings of the Day of Doom. He believed that the time had come for the Jews to regain Palestine, that the British were a lost tribe of Israel, and that the Second Coming of the Lord was at hand. Brothers was eventually arrested and charged with "maliciously publishing fantastical prophecies with intent to cause disturbances," certified as insane, and sent to a mental asylum, where he stayed for 11 years.

About this time Southcott also began to have similar apocalyptic dreams and visions. She was visited by a "voice," which told her, "The Lord is awakened out of sleep. He will terribly shake the earth." At first, Southcott thought she was being deceived by Satan, but the voice began to make amazingly accurate prophecies about events, both great and small.

Asked for a sign, the voice knocked three times on the bedstead—an early precursor of the raps at nineteenth-century Spiritualist séances. Then she suddenly found her hand writing messages without conscious guidance. She stated, "The writing comes extremely fast, much faster than I could keep up by voluntary effort. I have to turn over the pages and guard the lines of writing from running into each other; but, except for this, I need not look at the paper. I can talk on other subjects while writing. The mass of the writings consists in teachings on Religion. Some messages, however, deal with earthly matters." Many of the writings were in simple verse form.

When her prophecies on domestic affairs began to be vindicated, Southcott became confident that the voice was a true guide, and she attempted to interest religious authorities in her messages. A Methodist preacher listened to her, then pronounced, "This is from Satan to disturb your peace." She approached the Dissenters, but their minister stated that her revelations were unpatriotic. She then turned to the established Church and wrote to a preacher named Joseph Pomeroy, vicar of St. Kew in Cornwall, who had himself warned of perilous times to come.

Pomeroy received her kindly and said he saw nothing diabolical in the messages, but he told her mistress, Mrs. Taylor, "She will be out of her mind soon." On a subsequent visit, Southcott spoke to Pomeroy of impending events of an apocalyptic nature, and he said, "You have advanced things that make me shudder. It is bordering on blasphemy." At a loss to refute her sincerity, he suggested that she have her writings examined by a jury of clergymen.

Thereupon Southcott sent Pomeroy a number of prophecies that were fulfilled. She predicted that the bishop of Exeter, then in good health, would not live until Christmas of that year. He died on December 12. In 1796 Lord Malmesbury went on a peace mission to Paris. Southcott foretold that it would fail, and so it did. At that time it would have seemed unreasonable to believe that the French revolutionary armies would conquer Italy, as predicted by Southcott, but young Bonaparte's success brought this to pass. Southcott was sincerely convinced that her messages were from God.

In 1797, Southcott left the service of the Taylors and went to work for several Exeter tradesmen in upholstering. She was a good worker, and her income helped to support her father, who was ill again. She also saved some money for her eventual retirement.

All this time her messages continued. Joanna introduced an early feminist view into her messages, claiming that when the time was right, God would use a woman to fulfill divine purpose. She stated, “Is it a new thing for a woman to deliver her people? Did not Esther do it? And Judith? Was it not a woman that nailed Sisera to the ground?” She became convinced that she herself was the destined “Bride of the Lamb,” “woman clothed with the sun” in Revelation (12:1). In 1794, her voice had stated, “Now I’ll tell thee who thou art, The true and faithful Bride.”

Southcott alarmed Pomeroy with what seemed to him a blasphemous claim, as well as with more prophecies. She demanded that her messages be considered by a panel of clergymen. She wrote to the bishop, the archdeacon, and the chancellor, urging them to visit Pomeroy and test her teaching. On January 5, 1801, she wrote again to five clergymen, asking them to prove within ten days that the messages were not divine revelations. After a week she heard nothing, so she took her messages to an Exeter printer, paying him £100 she had saved for her old age.

In February of that year, The Strange Effects of Faith appeared as a 48-page, nine-penny pamphlet describing how the messages had come to Southcott and how she had sought to get clerical recognition of them. The following month she published Second Part. By now, her life savings were exhausted, so she borrowed from a moneylender to sponsor publication of further parts.

Rev. T. P. Foley, fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, an intelligent, educated man and a former follower of the unfortunate fanatic Richard Brothers, saw these modest pamphlets and was immediately impressed with them. He consulted other friends, including the engraver William Sharp (who had also been a follower of Brothers’s), and they attempted to interest clergymen in forming a jury to consider Southcott’s writings. Afterward, many of the prophecies and other papers were put in a box fastened with cords and sealed with seven seals. Sharp had charge of this. The sealed box was later to become a central point in controversies over the writings.

When some of Southcott’s followers printed her letters, Pomeroy was alarmed to find his name frequently quoted, and in a weak moment threw her papers on the fire. Almost immediately he had a letter from Southcott demanding their return, and thereafter his life was made miserable by scores of letters. Eventually his life savings were exhausted, so he borrowed from a moneylender to sponsor publication of further parts.

Shiloh

Southcott was 64 years old when her “voice” commanded, “Order twelve gowns for thy wedding.” She was greatly discouraged by this, as she had no desire for matrimony, but in early 1814 the voice added, “This year in the sixty-fifth year of thy age thou shalt bear a son by the power of the Most High.” Back in 1794, she had already declared her conviction that she was “the Bride of the Lamb,” but now the full significance of this dawned on her. The Virgin Mary had born a divine son. Southcott’s child would have a divine destiny.

In Genesis (49:10) Jacob says that the scepter will not depart from Judah “until Shiloh come.” This passage has confused and comforted many religious prophets, including Richard Brothers, who had declared at one point, “I am Shiloh.” Southcott believed Brothers misunderstood the passage; Shiloh was to arise in the Last Days. In March 1814 she declared her belief that Shiloh was her unborn child. By then she showed every sign of pregnancy, and astonishingly enough this was confirmed by a leading surgeon and no fewer than 20 other medical practitioners.

The followers received the news of the coming divine virgin birth with great joy, and gifts flowed in. A satintwood cradle for the baby was prepared at a cost of £200. A superbly bound Bible was presented, and dozens of christening mugs and pap spoons. Recalling her message to Pomeroy (the Cornwall vicar) that she was the bride mentioned in Scripture, Southcott concluded that she must make an earthly marriage so that Shiloh would have a foster father, as well as Joseph and the child Jesus. Accordingly on November 12 she was married in her bedroom to John Smith, steward of the earl of Darnley.

Southcott expected the divine birth in July, but as late as September nothing had happened. During November, painful doubts began to manifest in her mind, and once again she began to wonder at her voice and its message. She called her close friends to her side and confessed despairingly, “Now it all appears delusion.” She grew weaker, and by December 16 the symptoms of pregnancy had vanished. She told her doctor she was gradually dying, and requested that after her presumed death her body be kept warm for four days, in case she was only in a trance. She died early in the morning on December 27.
After the four days had elapsed, her doctor and 14 other medical practitioners examined the body and found no organic disease beyond a condition of dropsy, which may have enhanced the false pregnancy. It is probable that Southcott suffered a deep depression and no longer wished to live after her final disillusionment with her divine mission.

Just before her death she had made a will in which she sadly claimed that she had been deceived by the Devil and directed that all the gifts intended for the coming Shiloh be returned to their donors. She was buried in Marylebone Cemetery, London, on January 2, 1815, and her tombstone, evidently suppplied by a follower, predicted great wonders yet to come but inaccurately stated her age as 60 instead of 64. The tombstone was shattered in a gunpowder explosion at Regent's Park in 1874.

The Successors of Joanna Southcott

Her death and recantation left her thousands of followers in great confusion. A large number refused to believe that her mission had been a delusion. Others formed splinter groups.
Among these was a group led by George Turner, "Herald of Shiloh," who claimed to be Southcott's successor. He explained that Shiloh had been taken from Southcott's womb into Paradise until the appointed time.

Turner's demented "Proclamation of the Final Days" was to be delivered in Palace Yard, London. It denounced "the Treasury, Horse Guards, Carlton House, the Playhouses, Churches and Chapels, the Tower, Somerset House, and other public places. The Angel of the Lord shall sink all by earthquake."
His radical manifesto dictated, "The whole United Kingdom is to be divided to the People on the Roll. Those who are not worth a penny now must be lords of the land. No rents must be paid.
No postage for letters. No turnpikes. No taxes. Porter a gallon for one half-penny. Ale the same. The dead must be carried in carts three miles from the city and put into deep pits covered with pig's flesh."

Confined to a Quaker asylum for the insane, Turner continued with fantastic directions for his faithful followers. Shiloh's palace must have walls of pure gold adorned with precious stones. "There must be in attendance 70,000 men that play musical instruments and 70,000 singing women. He must have 500,000 servants, and his carriages must be of pure gold."
"Turner himself was to have 300,000 servants and accommodations similar to those of Shiloh."

In 1820 Turner was declared cured of insanity, and his followers petitioned the lord chancellor for his release, granted a few months later. After an extravagant "marriage supper," Turner promised that Shiloh would appear in London on October 14, being born as a boy already six years old. When the date passed uneventfully, the faithful took it as merely a divine test of their love. Turner's own "voice" ordered him to marry, so that Shiloh might have a foster mother. Accordingly Turner chose a wife, and a new date of April 10, 1821, was pronounced for the birth of Shiloh. When nothing happened, some followers were disillusioned; others followed rival leaders.

Visions came to a wool comber named John Wroe, another Southcott follower, who came into prominence when he challenged Turner's original prophecy of October 14, 1820, as the date of birth of Shiloh. Wroe now assumed control of Turner's group, and his followers proclaimed themselves Christian Israelites. Wroe dictated new laws for the Final Days. Males were to be circumcised, and everyone was to eat only kosher meat.
Men had to wear dark, broad-brimmed hats and special clothing; even the sober dress for women was stipulated in great detail. There were also to give up shaving and wear beards. Everyone was to give up snuff, tobacco, and alcohol. Those who transgressed these laws were to be severely beaten.

One child died after circumcision and the man performing the operation was charged with manslaughter. He was acquitted after Jewish leaders pressured the government, fearing that their own legitimate rite would be prohibited.

Eventually the movement renounced Wroe after persistent debaucheries on his part, but he emigrated to the United States and then to Australia, where his mission continued to have followers. He died in 1865. The Christian Israelite church continues in Australia, and there was one congregation in the United States as of the mid-1990s.

Meanwhile another large group of Southcott believers had followed John Ward, a pauperish shoemaker. He had been a disciple of George Turner's before his faith in Southcott was shaken when he read an attack on the New Testament account of Christ by the freethinker Richard Carlile. Eventually he concluded that the Scriptures were not history but prophecies, foretelling future events, and that the accounts of the birth of Jesus were allegorical. He had visions of Southcott, who told him,
"Thou art Shiloh."

Ward eventually decided that he himself was the Jesus foretold in the Gospels, in part because he had been born on Christmas Day and his mother's name was Mary. Even more fantastic was Ward's belief that he was Satan before becoming Christ, and that the Devil was now the Son of God. All the Scriptures implicated him in a multiplicity of roles. He was Adam, Judah, and Elijah. He claimed, "There is no name in Scripture which I may not with propriety apply to myself." Because of the many texts using the name Zion, he chose this dis-designation for himself, becoming known as "Zion Ward."

Ward escaped from the poorhouse where he had been continued and talked followers into supporting his mission by publishing literature and handbills. He roamed the country preaching his unique variety of messianism, which included attacks on landlords, the government, and the established Church. He was a remarkable orator and obtained considerable support for his mission. Eventually his health broke down, and he died of a stroke on March 12, 1837. Faithful followers continued to support him long after his death, and as late as 1921 one supporter published his book The Shilohites' Bible. By then there was no public mission, and a handful of the faithful simply read his books and meditated on his message.

In 1875, the Southcott followers were given a new direction by another prophet, a soldier named James White, whose friends called him "The Stranger. " Like Southcott, he was inspired by a mysterious voice that ordered him to regroup his faithful. He adopted the name James Jershom Jezezel. "Jer-shom" was a misspelling of "Gershom," the name of the first child of Moses. "Jezezel" came from Hosea: "Then shall the children of Israel and the children of Judah be gathered together and appoint themselves one Head, for great shall be the day of Jezezel."

White published a book, titled The Flying Roll (derived from the book of Zechariah), outlining his new creed. In Rev. 8:2, seven angels are given seven trumpets to sound before the Day of Doom. According to White, these angels were seven prophets. The first five were Richard Brothers, Southcott, George Turner, a man named Shaw (another Southcott successor), and John Wroe. White was the sixth angel. One more prophet would arise, then Shiloh would come.

One of Jezezel's important converts was a girl of 15 named Clarissa Rogers. She too heard a mystical voice, which called on her to preach in the United States. Her beauty and eloquence converted many Americans, some of whom returned with her to Gillingham, Kent, where Jezezel had become established.
Jezezel married her, and together they spread Jezezelism in the United States as of the mid-1990s. produce, and other provisions. The Jezreel estate also had the International College for boys and girls, with special emphasis on harp playing and study of Jezreel's writings.

In 1884, after a successful tour in Australia, Jezreel returned with ambitious plans for a temple, cubic in shape, 100 feet high, 100 feet wide, and 100 feet long. It was to house printing presses, offices, and an assembly hall seating six thousand people. The walls were to be reinforced with steel girders and cement used instead of mortar, and it was to last for a thousand years. After six months' building, Jezreel died in March 1885.

His wife, who had adopted the name Esther, continued to develop the movement effectively, opening Jezreel chapels in many areas and employing hawkers to carry the movement's literature all over the country. There were Jezreel followers in the United States, Australia, and New Zealand. Esther was accepted as the seventh angel with a trumpet, to be followed by Shiloh. She died in 1888, only three years after her husband. The great temple remained unfinished.

After her death, quarrels and schisms arose in the movement. Octavia, with the help of a Methodist preacher, organized a Jezreel community in Detroit, Michigan, but it soon broke up. In 1903 Benjamin Purnell, who had been expelled from the Detroit community, founded his own colony, the House of David, in Benton Harbor, Michigan. Things went well for several years, and their orchestra and baseball team became famous.

Problems began in 1926, when the community had nine hundred colonists. Four years earlier, Purnell had stopped making public appearances and disappeared from public sight, but in 1926 he was arrested during a police raid on the community. A lengthy investigation and court proceeding followed. In 1927 the colony was declared a public nuisance and moved into receivership. Purnell and his wife, Mary, were excluded from further association with the colony. Purnell died on December 16. Mary Purnell began a lengthy fight for the return of the colony's property, and in 1930 a settlement was reached. Assets were divided between her and H. T. Dewhisth, who had assumed control of the House of David following Purnell's arrest.

The House of David continues on its original land. Mary Purnell and her followers established a second community a short distance away. Both continue to the present time. An Australian branch of the House of David also survives.

The Panacea Society

The final phase of the Southcott movement commenced in 1907 and involved four ladies who became skillful propagandists for the movement. They were Alice Seymour, who edited editions of Southcott's books; Rachel Fox, a Quaker; her friend Helen Exeter, who received Spiritualistic messages about Joanna Southcott's sealed box; and Mabel Barltrop, widow of an Anglican curate, who was a godchild of the poet Coventry Patmore.

Mabel Barltrop pestered innumerable clergymen and bishops, demanding that they open Southcott's box. She joined forces with Helen Exeter, whose spirit messages through automatic writing informed her that she would be the mother of Southcott's box. She, who was to be the eighth prophet, adopted the name Octavia.

Octavia established a settlement at Bedford, and many supporters of the emerging suffragette movement joined her. She continued to hedge the bail to keep Southcott's box organiza ted. In 1926, Octavia was found guilty of conspiring to open Southcott's box and sentenced to twenty-one months in prison. This was the nearest the famous box ever came to being officially examined as Southcott had always desired.

By this time Octavia had been declared to be Shiloh by her followers. By 1920 she had a team of 36 residents at Bedford and a large following in Britain, Australia, and America.

In 1923 the movement took a new direction. One night Octavia tried to swallow a pill, but it slipped away and rolled under a cupboard. Accordingly she took the glass of water and prayed that it would serve the purpose of the pill. When it did, her voice proclaimed that she had been given healing powers. Thereafter the community prepared small linen squares "with the breath of prayer." These were to be dipped in water, which was to be drunk or poured onto wounds. The community adopted the name The Panacea Society, convinced that they had a universal remedy for all ills.

Octavia herself died in 1934, notwithstanding the universal remedy, but her movement continues.

The Opening of the Southcott Box

For decades, quaint notices continued to appear in British newspapers stating, "War disguised under the name of religion will increase until the Bishops open Joanna Southcott's box."

In 1927 an attempt to resolve this persistent controversy was undertaken by the British psychical researcher Harry Price, who had a great flair for publicity. On April 28-29, 1927, he arrived at his National Laboratory of Psychical Research to be greeted by his secretary with the news "Joanna Southcott's box has arrived!" According to Price, it had been sent by the employer of two servants who were descendants of Mrs. Rebecca Morgan (née Pengarth), said to have been the sole companion of Southcott between 1798 and 1814. The cover letter stated that the Morgans had become custodians of Southcott's box, which had been earlier entrusted to Rebecca, and that the National Laboratory of Psychical Research should arrange for a formal opening of the box because the writer was moving to the United States.

This account has been challenged by Trevor H. Hall in his book The Search for Harry Price (1978), which suggests that the letter was a forgery by Price to obtain publicity for the box. It is true that there is no mention of Rebecca Pengarth as a companion to Southcott in histories of the movement, although the box itself appeared to be a genuine Southcott relic, however Price came into possession of it. It was a strongly built casket of walnut, stained with age, with a heavy lid with a mother-of-pearl plate bearing the engraved initials "I. S." (i.e., J. S.). The casket was secured by two rusty steel bands and by strong silk tapes secured in five places with large black seals bearing a profile of George III.

Price invited eight psychics, a psychologist, and a dowser to inspect the box and give their impressions of its contents. Most of the psychometric impressions proved reasonably accurate. When Price later x-rayed the box in his laboratory he identified the following objects: an old horse pistol, a dice box, a fob purse with coins in it, a bone puzzle with rings, some blocks (one with metal clasps), a framed painting or miniature, a pair of earrings, and a cameo or engraved pebble.

Price secured much publicity for the box, and sensational stories were published that it might contain a boobytrap bomb intended to kill the bishops. Price wrote to three archbishops and 80 bishops stating his intention to make a formal opening of the box, and asking if they would consent to be present to honor Southcott's wishes and perhaps to end the persistent superstition surrounding the box.

Some replies were noncommittal. The bishop of Derby hoped that Price could get a quorum for the opening in order to "lay to rest the Joanna Southcott Open Legend." The bishop of Lincoln strongly advised opening the box "with or without the presence of bishops." The bishop of Liverpool wrote: "I join you in hoping that the Southcott myth will be exploded." In contrast, the bishop of Kensington was unsympathetic, saying that he did not wish to be a party to providing amusement for a public that would like nothing better than to see a company of bishops the victims of a hoax, even if it had been arranged one hundred years earlier.

However, the bishop of Chichester wrote that he would be glad if the Southcott myth could be exploded and would be willing to be present, if in London at the time. The bishop of London replied that he would try to be present. The bishop of Carlisle replied that he would be present if the archbishop of Canterbury "should be satisfied as to the propriety of bishops being present at the opening of the box."

The archbishop of Canterbury replied that his correspondence over Southcott’s box had been voluminous and extended over many years. He was not sympathetic to the idea, "partly profane and partly comic," that 24 bishops representing the 24 elders in Revelation should sit around the box. He believed the box should be opened speedily, but also thought that as soon as it was opened a rival box would be found. Other bishops expressed interest in being present if in London, or if given permission by the archbishop of Canterbury.

The opening of the box took place before a large audience at the Hoare Memorial Hall, Church House, Westminster, London, on July 11, 1927. For the event, only the bishop of Grantham turned up, but the bishop of Crediton was represented by his son, the Reverend Trehus.

As already mentioned, the psychometric impressions given by the psychics contained many accurate statements. Not surprisingly, the X-rays of the solid objects were also correct. Among the 36 objects in the box, the pamphlets and books included: The Surprises of Love, Exemplified in the Romance of a Day. . . (1765), with annotations; Rider’s British Merlin (1715); Calendrier de la Cour (1775); and Ovid’s Metamorphoses (1794). There was a paper souvenir “printed on the River Thames, Feb. 3rd, 1814,” and a lottery ticket for 1796. Among the objects were a fob purse (containing silver and copper coins and tokens), a horse pistol, a miniature case, an ivory dice cup, a bone puzzle, a woman’s embroidered nightcap, and a set of brass money weights.

Naturally the local Southcottians did not accept that these pathetic souvenirs were the contents of the right box, and the appeals to bishops to attend the opening of the true box continued, although it was by no means clear where this box might be. Certainly one would have expected the real Southcott box to contain voluminous prophecies, correspondence, and religious pamphlets. The incredible story of Joanna Southcott and her prophecies has continued over nearly two centuries and is still not wholly extinct. The Southcott literature is voluminous. She herself published some 65 books and pamphlets, while her followers in the various groups added a flood of additional communications.

Sources:
Cane, Life and Bibliography of Joanna Southcott. London, 1912.
Octavia, [Helen Exeter], Healing for All: The "Joanna Southcott Healing." London: Panacea Society, 1925.
Pullen, Philip. Index to the Divine and Spiritual Writings of Joanna Southcott. Ashford, England: Clock House Press, 1921.

Sovereign and Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem

The Sovereign and Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem, incorporated in Belgium in 1832, is the largest group growing out of the Neo-Templar Movement launched by Bernard-Raymond Fabré-Palaprat (1773–1838) in the years following the French Revolution. The Order of the Temple, commonly called the Templars, was a medieval monastic order virtually destroyed by King Philip the Fair of France and formally dissolved by Pope Clement V in 1307. The order survived for another century in Portugal, but by the beginning of the fifteenth century had completely disappeared.

However, as Speculative Freemasonry spread through Europe in the eighteenth century, a rumor developed that the order had survived in the person of knights who sought protection in the masonic guilds of Scotland and Ireland. They were the sources of the “Templar” degrees in the Masonic initiatory structure. Then, at the time of the French Revolution, some French masons began to argue that since the Templars came before Freemasonry, it was logically independent of it and hence not subordinate to it. Their cause was championed by Fabré-Palaprat, a physician residing in Paris, who claimed to have found documents proving the existence of a lineage of grand masters who continued to operate from the time of the order’s official suppression to 1792 when the then-grand master was killed by political opponents. The most important of these documents was the Lamenius charter which specifies the passing of the grand mastership by the last public master, Jacques de Molay, to one John Mark Lamenius who he met in prison while awaiting his execution.

In the freer atmosphere of post-Revolutionary France, in 1804 Fabré-Palaprat organized a new Templar Order and four years later received the approbation of Napoleon. Since the Roman Catholic Church had not changed its official stance against the Templars, he also organized an esoteric Johannite church and consecrated its first bishop. After his death in 1838, the order experienced the first of many schisms. Over the next century, a number of branches and derivative groups would appear, including the German Ordo Templi Orientis and the French-based Independent Group of Esoteric Studies founded by Gérard Encausse. Among the more than 30 Neo-Templar groups operating in the 1990s was the infamous Solar Temple whose leaders committed suicide in 1995.

Fabré-Palaprat’s Order of the Temple existed as an informal association until 1952, when it was legally incorporated in Belgium as the Sovereign and Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem, under the leadership of Theodore Covais. Covais assumed the title of regent rather than grand master. Then, as Belgium was engulfed by World War II (1939–45), the regency was passed to Antonio Campello Pinto de Sousa Fontes, who resided in neutral Portugal. After the war, he continued as the regent, though not without opposition from some of the French-speaking Templars. He issued charters in many countries and the order grew significantly. An American branch was chartered in 1962.

Antonio Campello Pinto de Sousa Fontes died in 1960 and was succeeded by his son, Fernando Campello Pinto de Sousa Fontes. However, not all approved his election and in 1970, a French-speaking group gathered in Paris where Antoine Zdrojewski was elected regent of what became a rival body. This rival body included a number of people with right-wing political affiliations. They soon invoked the order in their political intrigues and it was disbanded in France in 1973. Internationally it became the source of a variety of new orders.

The order that remained loyal to Antonio Campello Pinto de Sousa Fontes has grown and prospered while at the same time it has played down its occult roots. Like Freemasonry, the contemporary Templars (especially in North America) have emerged as a fraternal organization dedicated to work for their communitarian ideals. The order is led by the current Grand Master MG Sir Roy Redgrave, who resides in London, England. He may be contacted through his magazine, originally called Saucer News, but quickly changed to Saucer Smear. This humor- and gossip-oriented periodical had a different title, the first word being saucer and the second word rhyming with “smeare.” Saucer Smear can be ordered from Moseley at Vol. 2 of The UFO Encyclopedia. Detroit: Omnigraphics, 1992.

Space and Unexplained Celestial Events Research Society

A paper organization created to cover the activities of James W. Moseley, an early flying saucer enthusiast and journalist. It was founded at the time of the preparation of the first issue of his magazine, originally called News but quickly changed to Saucer News. In 1968 Moseley sold Saucer News to Gray Barker of Saucerman Press in Clarksburg, West Virginia. The name Space and Unexplained Celestial Events Research Society appeared on the masthead of Barker’s issues of Saucer News through 1972, but it continued as a paper organization.

In 1976 Moseley started another newsletter. Each issue of this humorist- and gossip-oriented periodical had a different title, the first word being saucer and the second word rhyming with “smeare.” Saucer Smear can be ordered from Moseley at Box 1709, Key West, FL 33041.

Sources:

Space Intelligence

Alleged extraterrestrial entities. Prior to the 1970s such entities usually claimed to be inhabitants of the Moon, Mars, Venus, or another planet of this solar system. In the last two decades such claimed inhabitants have tended to come from far distant solar systems. Space Intelligences (SIs) allegedly communicate to human beings or through Spiritualist mediums. The most consistent Space Intelligences are those that communicate to the several contactee organizations such as the Aetherius Movement, Unarius-Science of Life, the Aetherius Society, and Mark-Age, Inc.

SPAIN

Witchcraft

Modern Spain emerged in the fifteenth century. The land had previously been occupied by the Romans, Visigoths, and the Moors, who remained dominant beginning in the eighth century C.E. From early times, Spain was regarded as a special abode of superstition and sorcery, malevolent magic, and, in the Middle Ages, as the home of witchcraft, much of that reputation deriving from the notoriety of the Moorish alchemists. Spain was a major point of dissemination of Arab learning into Christian Europe. As early as 1570, the kingdom of Castile (a major component of what would become Spain) declared divination to be heresy. Writing about 1458 C.E., Alfonso de Spinosa, a Franciscan brother from Castile, created a work especially directed against heretics and nonbelievers, in which he gave a chapter on those articles of popular belief that were derived from ancient pagan beliefs. Among these, witches, called Xurgena or bruxes, held a prominent place. He stated that in his time offenders abounded in Dauphiny and Gascony, where they assembled in great numbers by night on a wild tableland, carrying candles with them to worship Satan, who appeared in the form of a boar on a certain rock, popularly known by the name Elboch de Biterne, and that many of them had been taken by the Inquisition of Toulouse and burned.

Spain reemerged as a Christian kingdom during the reign of Ferdinand V (1474–1504) and Isabella. They introduced the Inquisition, expelled the Jews, and financed Columbus’s voyages to America. Their reign coincided with the redirection of the Inquisition against witchcraft in the 1480s and from that time in Spain, the charge of witchcraft and sorcery was frequently made under different forms and circumstances. Local inquisitors operated without clear guidelines, especially regarding exactly what constituted sorcery, and had considerable latitude in their prosecution of the accused.

The first auto-da-fé (act of faith) against witchcraft appears to have been that of Calahorra in 1507, when 30 women charged before the Inquisition as witches, were burned. In 1527 a great number of women were accused in Navarre of the practice of sorcery through the information of two girls, one 11, the other only nine years old, who confessed before the royal council of Navarre that they had been received into the sect of the jurginas. They promised, on condition of being pardoned, to expose all the women who were involved in these practices.

The prevalence of various magic practices in the Basque provinces became notorious, and Charles V, judging that it was to be attributed more to the ignorance of the population of those districts than to any other cause, directed that preachers should be sent to instruct them.

The first treatise in the Spanish language on the subject of sorcery was by a Franciscan monk named Martin de Castanaga, printed under approbation of the bishop of Calahorra in 1529. About this time, the zeal of the inquisitors of Saragossa was excited by the appearance of many witches who were said to have come from Navarre, and to have been sent by their sect as missionaries to make disciples of the women of Aragon. This sudden witch persecution in Spain appears to have had an influence on the fate of the witches of Italy. Pope Adrian IV, who was raised to the papal chair in 1522, was a Spanish bishop, and had held the office of inquisitor-general in Spain.

In the time of Pope Julius II (1505–13), a large sect of witches and sorcerers had reportedly been discovered in Lombardy who had their Sabbats and all the other activities of the Continental witches. The proceedings against them had been hindered by a dispute between the inquisitors and the ecclesiastical judges who claimed jurisdiction in such cases. Then on July 29, 1523, Pope Adrian issued a bull against the crime of sorcery, equating divination with its practice, and by naming both as heresies placed sorcery under sole jurisdic-tion of the inquisitors. This bull freed the Inquisition to act against witches in Spain.

Of the cases that followed during more than a century, the most notable was that of the auto-da-fe at Logrono, November 7 and 8, 1610, which arose in some measure from a visit to the French Basque province in the preceding year. The valley of Bastan is situated at the foot of the Pyrenees on the French frontier, near Labourd. It was within the jurisdiction of the Inquisition established at Logrono in Castille. The mass of the population of this valley were said to have been sorcerers, and they held their meetings or Sabbats at a place called Zuarbarrundi.

A woman who was condemned implicated a number of other persons. All the persons arrested on this occasion agreed in their description of the Sabbath and of the practices of the witches, who in their general features bore a close resemblance to the witches of Labourd. The usual place of meeting was known here, as in Labourd, by the popular name of Aquelarre, a Gascon word signifying “the meadow of the goat.” Their ordinary meetings were held on the nights of Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, every week, but they had grand feasts on the principal holidays of the church, such as Easter, Pentecost, and Christmas. All these feasts appear to have been fixed by the Christian teachers at the period of older pagan festivals. The accounts of their claimed Sabbats were similar to those given of such meetings elsewhere. They supposedly danced, sang, took part in orgies, and came into personal contact with Satan.

The auto-da-fe of Logrono, as far as it related to the sect of the sorcerers of Zugarramurdi, caused a sensation, and brought the subject of witchcraft under the consideration of the Spanish theologians. They were far more enlightened than most of their contemporaries in other countries, that they generally held the opinion that witchcraft was a mere delusion and that the details of the confessions of its victims were all creations of the imagination. They were punished because their belief was a heresy, contrary to the doctrines of the church. Llorente gave the abstract of a treatise on this subject by a Spanish ecclesiastic named Pedro de Valencia, addressed to the grand inquisitor in consequence of the trial at Logrono in 1610. It remained in manuscript among the archives of the Inquisition.

It also adopted the opinion that the acts confessed by the witches were imaginary; he attributed them partly to the methods in which the examinations were carried out—and to the desire of the people examined to escape by saying what seemed to please their persecutors—and partly to the effects of the ointments and draughts they had been taught to use. These were composed of ingredients that produced sleep and acted upon the imagination and the mental faculties.

The auto-da-fe of Logrono was one of the most imposing and the most terrible of the Spanish Inquisition. A vast number of victims being burned throughout Europe, in Spain itself witchcraft persecutions were relatively more restrained than elsewhere, and there were relatively fewer burnings. An entrenched skepticism on the part of the Suprema as to the reality of witchcraft discouraged mass persecutions from 1526 onward. During the witchcraft panic of 1610 in Navarre, the secular judges had burned their victims before the Inquisition could act. Subsequently the Suprema restrained punishment for alleged witches and in some cases denounced the charges as a delusion.

Spiritualism

A writer in the Religio-Philosophical Journal (flourished 1865–1905) states: “The language that furnishes the largest number of periodicals devoted to the dissemination of the doctrine and philosophy of modern Spiritualism, is the Spanish. This statement will be somewhat surprising to many of our readers, for we have been accustomed to look upon the Spaniards as non-progressive and conservative in the extreme. Spain, until a few years, has always been intolerant of any religions except the Roman Catholic, and was the latest of European nations to yield to the spirit of religious progress. Protestantism has with the greatest difficulty obtained a foothold in that country within the last few years, but it has been attended with annoying restrictions and persecutions, while its progress has been exceedingly slow and discouraging.”

Spiritualism in Spain began, as in many other lands, with a series of disturbances, which took place in a family residing in the outskirts of Cadiz. Stone throwing, bell ringing, and other poltergeist-style annoyances were the first means of awakening attention to the subject. Because they occurred at the house of a Spanish gentleman who had just returned from the United States, full of the marvels of the Rochester rappings, circles were at once formed, intelligent responses by rappings obtained, and a foothold for Spiritualism established. So rapidly did interest in Spiritualism spread, that the first promulgators were soon lost sight of. As early as 1854, a society was formed at Cadiz for the sole purpose of publishing the communications received from the spirits during the two preceding years.

From 1854 to 1860, Spiritualism spread through the principal towns and villages of Spain in the usual fashion, aided in large part by Spiritualism’s claim to be a nonreligious, scientific movement. Circles were held in private families, and an endless number of societies were formed and dissolved, according to the exigencies of the time.

One of the first public events of note in connection with Spanish Spiritualism deserves special mention. It was no other than a modern auto-da-fe, held on the morning of October 9, 1861, at the Esplanade Barcelona. The difference between this burning and the fiery executions of earlier centuries was that the early victims were humans, while these were all the books, pamphlets, and works of a Spiritualist character that could be procured at that period of the movement. Resting on the “funeral pyre” were the writings of Allan Kardec and Baron Ludwig von Goldenstein, some copies of English and American Spiritualist papers, and a large collection of the Spiritualist publications of Spain. Some change of attitude soon occurred.

Among the well-known residents of Barcelona was a Señor Navarez, whose daughter Rosa had, for many years, been the subject of spasmodic attacks, called by some of the Roman Catholic clergy “the obsession of demons,” and by the medical faculty, “an aggravated condition of epilepsy.” Within two years following the Barcelona burning, Rosa was pronounced entirely cured by the magnetic passes of a gentleman who was the medium of the private circle held in the city.

Shortly after this, Barcelona could boast of its well-approved Spiritualist publications, numerous societies for investigation, and several mediums. A journal published by a Señor Alcantara was supported by the Viscount de Torres Solanot and many other leaders of science and literature in Spain. Through this publication the opponents of Spiritualism were amazed to learn of the immense progress the cause was making, and the number of distinguished persons who assembled nightly in circles to promote its investigation.

A circular calling the attention of the Spanish public to the phenomena of Spiritualism was published in 1876 by Viscount Solanot. The authors of this circular met with no little response. However, the energetic viscount again promoted the subject before the Paris Exposition of 1878. In articles written for El Criterio, he argued for the development of an international co-operative effort by Spiritualists and named among those societies prepared to promote such a structure as including: La Fed-
Animal Magnetism and Mediums

In Spain, as in Italy, a considerable amount of attention was directed toward exploring mediumistic abilities by means of animal magnetism. Magnetic societies abounded in Spain prior to World War I, but internal discord eventually dissolved the bonds that had united flourishing associations.

Among the numerous groups formed in the different parts of Spain in the late nineteenth century to study Spiritualism and its phenomena was one of long standing at Tarragona called The Christian Circle. The president of this circle sent the following communication to the Revue Spirite of Paris:

It was about the end of the year 1880 that the Spiritualists of Spain sustained another series of attacks from the church. The first of these was the refusal of the clergy to accord the customary rites of internment to the remains of two women, both of irreproachable character and good standing in society, but both “guilty” of having believed in Spiritualist manifestations.

The second attack by the church about this time was the suppression of a Spiritualist paper published at Lerida, entitled El Buen Sentido. The bishop of Lerida had long threatened this step and warned the editor to beware allowing any writings reflecting upon clerical doings to appear in his columns.

One article that seemed to inflame the clergy to such threats was an article that appeared in El Buen Sentido protesting the condemnation of a working man to three years’ imprisonment, leaving a family of children destitute, and all for daring to speak in public against the inquisition of the church.

In an issue of El Criterio dated 1881 was a letter from Don Migueles in which he gave a somewhat discouraging account of the cause of Spiritualism as it existed at that time in Spain. The editor commented, “Don Migueles visited many cities to examine into the state of affairs of a spiritual nature, but found many who were only to be enticed by physical phenomena, caring nothing for the esoteric beauties of our faith; many who were convinced that they knew all there was to be known concerning it, and others who were timid fearing the disapproval of neighbours.”

In some places, however, excellent mediums were discovered. In Santiago, in Oviedo, in Comunica, and in Valladolid an exceptional interest was manifest. Near Santiago, there was a young girl said to be possessed of remarkable faculties. Two bars of magnetized iron held over her horizontally, half a meter distant, were reportedly sufficient to suspend her body in the air.

In 1881 the Barcelona Lux gave encouraging accounts of séances held at Cordova, Tarragona, Seville, and many other places. The editor, Madame Soler, also referred to an archbishop’s prohibiting Catholics from possessing or reading the Spiritualist work of Niram Aliv of the Society of Spiritualists of Tar rasa; that of the circle of Santa Cruz of Teneriff, that of Faith, Hope, and Charity, of Andujar, and that of St. Vincent de Boga tia.

Psychical Research

Psychical research emerged in Spain but had an extremely spotty existence. Some research was carried on by the Federation Espirita Española, a Spiritualist group in Sabadel. Periodicals included Hacia La Igualdad y el Amor of Barcelona and Lumen of Tarrasa. Spain was also represented at the several international congresses of psychical research. By 1930 Don Manuel Otero of Madrid and Signor Tassi of Perugia were active psychical researchers who had investigated the phenomena of the medium Eusapia Palladino in Naples in 1889.

The Civil War and World War II disrupted developments from the 1930s on. However, interest in parapsychology reappeared in 1971 when Ramos Molina Perera began to teach courses at the Universidad Autónoma of Madrid. Two years later Perera, several colleagues, and others interested in the field founded the Sociedad Española de Parapsicologia. Perera served as president for many years. The society, which at one time had several thousand members, conducts research, sponsors courses at colleges and universities, and issues Ps Comunicación.

Sources:
Spear, John Murray (ca. 1804–1887)

Famous American Universalist preacher and an outstanding figure in the history of early American Spiritualism, he was baptized by John Murray, the founder of the Universalist Church, whose name he bore. In the early years of his public activity he distinguished himself as an ardent abolitionist. In 1845, with his brother Charles, he published a weekly newspaper, The Prisoner’s Friend, in Boston, and for many years devoted himself to helping the poor, especially prisoners and their relatives. In one year alone he delivered 80 lectures on criminal reform and against capital punishment, distributing 7,500 books to prisoners and traveling 8,000 miles in the cause.

His attention was first drawn to Spiritualism in 1851. A year later, he developed automatic writing and healing, Messages came through his hand giving addresses, as well as names of sick people. He visited them and drove the pain out of their bodies by his touch.

Sources:

Spear Bone (Divination by)

An early form of divination used in Scotland. A speal bone, or blade bone of a shoulder of mutton, was used, but full details of the method are lacking. A soldier accompanying Lord Loudon on his retreat to Skye foretold the result of the battle of Culloden at the very moment it was decided, claiming to have seen the event by looking through the bone.

Spare, Austin Osman (1886–1956)

Artist and magician. Spare was born on December 13, 1886, in London. At the age of seven, he met a Mrs. Paterson, a fortune-teller and witch, with whom he kept company for many years. She eventually initiated him into her magical work. At the age of thirteen he dropped out of school and began to work in a stained glass factory while attending school at night. He won a scholarship to the Royal Academy and in 1905 published his first book of drawings, Earth Inferno. He emerged as a precursor to the surrealists by calling attention to an inner world. The book also brought him to the attention of magician Aleister Crowley, who commissioned drawings by Spare for his magazine, The Equinox.

Spare served in the British army in Egypt during World War I and then settled down to life as a poor painter, his pictures being the expression of the inner world he was exploring. Integral to that world was sexuality, and Spare took many partners through his lifelong practice of sexual magic. Spare died on March 15, 1956, in London. Though his death was kept secret, it circulated two books during his life, The Focus of Life and The Book of Pleasure, it was only after his death that some appreciation of his system could be found and his work made available to the larger magical community.

Spare’s teachings have been referred to as the cult of the Zos and Kaa, centered upon the polarized (positive and negative) interplay of sexual energy. The two currents are symbolized by the hand (touch) and the eye (vision). The hand and the eye become the magical instruments of the innate obsession to embody the cosmic in the flesh. Expositions of Spare’s system have been offered by Kenneth Grant, head of the British OTO in several books.

Sources:

Spangler, David (1945–)

David Spangler, prominent architect and theoretician of the New Age movement, was born in Columbus, Ohio, on January 7, 1945. He was raised in a family open to the psychic realm, and as a boy of seven he had his first mystical experience. As a teenager he affiliated with several theosophical groups, and through the writings of Alice A. Bailey, Spangler first learned of the coming New Age at the end of the twentieth century. In 1964 he settled in Los Angeles, where he and Myrtle Glines opened a counseling service. He began to channel an entity and the New Age movement, was born in Columbus, Ohio, on January 7, 1945. He was raised in a family open to the psychic realm, and as a boy of seven he had his first mystical experience. As a teenager he affiliated with several theosophical groups, and through the writings of Alice A. Bailey, Spangler first learned of the coming New Age at the end of the twentieth century. In 1964 he settled in Los Angeles, where he and Myrtle Glines opened a counseling service. He began to channel an entity and said that its essence would be found in the New Age. He now described the New Age as a metaphor for personal transformation and the idea that the coming New Age would be a cooperative venture between humans and cosmic forces. He disagreed with Findhorn leader Peter Caddy, who believed that the New Age would be brought in by a cataclysmic event.

By the 1980s, the New Age idea had become a mass movement. Spangler, who had worked so hard on popularizing the idea, now found himself in the role of critic of the more dubious aspects of the New Age. He vilified the interest in crystals, psychic phenomena, and even channeling, as taking people away from a focus on self-transformation and upon developing a compassionate and creative life. In 1988, after several years of silence, Spangler published a series of articles in which he professed to have given up on the idea of the New Age as a social event. He now described the New Age as a metaphor for personal transformation and said that its essence would be found in the change and growth of individuals. He called upon such people to work for real change in the social order.

Sources:

Spear, John Murray (ca. 1804–1887)

Famous American Universalist preacher and an outstanding figure in the history of early American Spiritualism, he was baptized by John Murray, the founder of the Universalist Church, whose name he bore. In the early years of his public activity he distinguished himself as an ardent abolitionist. In 1845, with his brother Charles, he published a weekly newspaper, The Prisoner’s Friend, in Boston, and for many years devoted himself to helping the poor, especially prisoners and their relatives. In one year alone he delivered 80 lectures on criminal reform and against capital punishment, distributing 7,500 books to prisoners and traveling 8,000 miles in the cause.

His attention was first drawn to Spiritualism in 1851. A year later, he developed automatic writing and healing, Messages came through his hand giving addresses, as well as names of sick people. He visited them and drove the pain out of their bodies by his touch.
Later he began to draw and deliver inspirational discourses. It was asserted that they came from John Murray. Under the large work that bore resemblance in scope to the Divine Revelations of Andrew Jackson Davis (1847).

The first volume of Spear’s work was published in 1857 in Boston under the title The Educator, being Suggestions, theoretical and practical, designed to promote Man-Culture and Integral Reform, with a view of the Ultimate Establishment of a Divine Social State on Earth. In the spirit world several similar organizations to the Association of Beneficents appear to have existed. One of them, the “Association of Electricizers,” involved John Murray Spear in one of the strangest adventures in the history of Spiritualism.

In April 1869, in The New Era, he instructed him to construct a “new motor” that would be self-generative, drawing upon the great reservoir of the magnetic life in nature and acting, like the human body, as a living organism. The machine was replaced by a new, and near Lynn, Massachusetts, of zinc and copper at the cost of $2,000. One of Spear’s disciples, Mrs. Alonzo E. Newton (the wife of one of his assistants), was appointed in a vision to be “the Mary of the New Dispensation.”

Andrew Jackson Davis explained, “...that by means of a spiritual overshadowing, à la Virgin Mary, the maternal functions were brought into acting, like the human body, as a living organism. The machine was considered a newborn child; the medium nursed it for weeks and the enthusiastic band announced it as “the Art of Arts, the Science of all Sciences, the New Messiah, God’s last Best Gift to Man.”

Reports of a shocking nature were circulated about the birth of this modern Frankenstein-style creation and the practices by which the life principle had been infused. Andrew Jackson Davis explained, “...that by means of a spiritual overshadowing, à la Virgin Mary, the maternal functions were brought into acting, like the human body, as a living organism. The machine was considered a newborn child; the medium nursed it for weeks and the enthusiastic band announced it as “the Art of Arts, the Science of all Sciences, the New Messiah, God’s last Best Gift to Man.”

The destruction of the new motor had a certain advantage in silencing critics of the machine’s failure to work as predicted. Other Spiritualists took the loss philosophically, S. B. Brittan commenting in the Spiritual Telegraph that, “If the New Motor is to be the physical savior of the race, it will probably rise again,” John Murray Spear also projected plans for the building of a “curiously formed” or “perpetually running” engine. These plans were also inspired by spirits. Emma Hardinge Britten, writing in Modern American Spiritualism (1869), observes, “...that Mr. Spear honestly believed in a spiritual origin for the various missions he undertook, and the remarkable part he played, none who ever have come into personal relations with him can question. The unwavering patience with which he endured reproach and odium of their execution, would attest his sincerity, were other evidence wanting.”

On April 15, 1869, Spear made a statement about his introduction to Spiritualism at a meeting of the London Dialectical Society. Since the time of John Murray Spear, other individuals, such as John Worrell Keely and Wilhelm Reich, have claimed to have discovered a motor force in nature.

Sources:

Spear of Destiny
A legendary Christian relic, the Spear of Longinus, identified in folklore with the spear that pierced the side of Christ (John 19:34) nearly two thousand years ago. Occult legend states that whoever claims this spear and understands its occult significance holds the destiny of the world in his hands. According to Houston Stewart Chamberlain, British-born propagandist for anti-Semitism and the German philosophy of an Aryan master race, this spear was claimed by Constantine the Great, Justinian, Charles Martel, Charlemagne, and various German emperors, all men of destiny.

Before World War II, the Spear of Destiny (more properly known as the Maurice Spear) was exhibited in the Hofburg Museum in Vienna. It attracted the attention of the young Adolf Hitler, who linked it with legends of the Holy Grail and made his own plans to be a man of destiny. The spear held a special fascination for Hitler and his associates in the hothouse atmosphere of occultism and evil philosophies that gave rise to the Nazi plan for world domination. In 1935, Heinrich Himmler had a replica of the spear made and kept it in his private room. Three years later, Hitler led his troops into Austria, the first stage of his plan for world conquest. One of his first acts was to remove the Spear of Destiny from the Hofburg Museum.

The spear was buried beneath the Nuremberg Fortress, where it was discovered on the day that Hitler shot himself in the Berlin bunker on April 30, 1945. It was recovered together with other treasures of the imperial collection. On January 6, 1946, these treasures were returned to the authorities at Vienna, and the spear was reinstated in the Hofburg Museum.

Trevor Ravenscroft has compiled an exhaustive account of the story of the spear. The manner in which it influenced Hitler was integral to the occult philosophy that permeated the upper echelons of the Nazi movement and affected the actual events of World War II. Ravenscroft drew much of his unique historical research from information from Walter Johannes Stein (1891–1957) who knew Hitler as a young man and saw Hitler’s books concerned with occultism and Grail legends, with copious manuscript notes by Hitler himself indicating the beginnings of his Nazi philosophy.

Sources:

Specialist Knowledge Services (SKS)
A now-defunct British organization that conducted research, consultancy, and information in the fields of the paranormal, fortunetelling, and anomalous phenomena, ufology, earth mysteries, and occultism. SKS was founded by Hugh Pincott, secretary of the ASSAP (Association for the Scientific Study of Anomalous Phenomena).

Spectral Flames
Luminous phenomena seen in cemeteries and around churches, believed by some to be paranormal.
Spectrum—Society for Psychical and Spiritual Studies

Irish society that conducted study of such paranormal phenomena as haunted sites, ESP, psychokinesis, and spiritual healing. It provided a healing service for individuals in need and was available to investigate hauntings. It was also associated with the Irish UFO Organisation, with which it shares a headquarters. Last known address: 70 Glasnevin Rd., Glasnevin, Dublin 11, Republic of Ireland.

Speculare

The name by which those who engaged in crystal gazing were known in the sixteenth century.

Speculum

The crystal ball or any shining, light-refracting surface that a scryer uses for divination, i.e., crystal gazing.

Spells

Spells are incantations, written or spoken formulas of words believed to be capable of magical effects. The term “spell” derives from the Anglo-Saxon spēl, a saying or story, hence a form of words; the Icelandic spegl, a saying; and the Gothic spel, a fable.

The conception of spells appears to have arisen from the idea that there is some natural and intimate connection between words and the things signified by them. Thus if one repeats the name of a supernatural being the effect will be analogous to that produced by the being itself. It is assumed that all things are in a “sympathetic” connection and act and react upon one another; things that have once been in contact continue to act on each other even after the contact has been removed. People in ancient Egypt believed that certain secret names of gods, demi-gods, and demons unknown to human beings might be discovered and used against them by the discoverer.

The power of the spoken word was a ubiquitous belief in nearly all ancient societies and continues among pre-industrial societies to the present. Magical practitioners also developed a special language, known only to them, that became an object of mystery and a source of their power in the society. Thus the magicians of ancient Egypt employed foreign words for their incantations, such as baḥātḥār, thannāsār, thāḥām, mommon, thānābūtā, ʾtrwāy, brrkhttx, and ʾhbrwtrwnxūkhth. These occurred at the end of a spell with the purpose of bringing dreams. The development of magic was integral to the development of writing, and magical writings reveal the manner in which the simple knowledge of writing, especially of a foreign language, was a magical skill of great import.

The magicians and sorcerers of the Middle Ages likewise employed words of a similar kind that were unknown to most people, as did the medicine men of the North American Indians into relatively modern times. The reason the spell was usually couched in a well-known formula may have been that it was the most efficacious. Thus in ancient Egypt not only were the formulas of spells well fixed, but the exact tone of voice in which they were to be pronounced was specially taught. The power of a spell remained until it was broken by an antidote or exorcism.

Spells belong to what modern magicians call low magic, that which attempts to effect the mundane world, as opposed to high magic, which attempts to change the consciousness of the magician and bring him or her into contact with the transcendent realm. Spells or enchantments can be divided into several classes: (1) Protective spells; (2) The curse or taboo; (3) Spells by which a person, animal, or object is to be injured or transformed; (4) Spells to procure some minor end, love-spells, or the curing of persons and animals.

Protective Spells

The protective spell commonly appeared as an incantation, usually rhymed, imploring the protection of certain gods, saints, or beneficent beings, who in waking or sleeping hours would guard the speaker from maleficent powers. For example, “Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, Bless the bed that I lie in.”

Of a deeper significance were those spells thought to be spoken by a dead Egyptian on his journey through Amenti (the kingdom of the dead), by which he warded off the evil beings who would hinder his way. The serpent who would bite the dead was addressed thus: “O serpent come not! Geb and Shu stand against thee. Thou hast eaten mice. That is loathsome to the Gods. Thou hast gnawed the bones of a putrid cat.”

E. A. W. Budge stated in his book Egyptian Magic (1899), “The Book of the Dead says, ‘Whoever readeth the spells daily over himself, he is whole upon earth, he escapes from death, and never doth anything evil meet him.’”

The deceased placed great confidence in his words of power. The gods of Thoth and Isis were the sources from which these words sprang. It will be remembered that Thoth is called the “scribe of the gods,” the “lord of writing,” the “master of papyrus,” the “maker of the palette and the ink-jar,” and the “lord of divine words,” i.e., the holy writings or scriptures. As he was the lord of books and master of the power of speech, he was considered to be the possessor of all knowledge both human and divine. The priests of Thoth were the learned magicians skilled in the written language for which Thoth had been responsible.

At the creation of the world, it was he who reduced to words the will of the unseen and unknown creative power, who uttered them so wisely that the universe came into being, and who proved himself by the exercise of his knowledge to be the protector and the friend of Osiris and of Isis, and of their son Horus.

From the evidence of the texts we know that it was not by physical might that Thoth helped these three gods, but by giving them words of power and instructing them how to use them. We know that Osiris vanquished his foes, and that he reconstituted his body and became the king of the underworld and god of the dead. It is this belief that made the deceased cry out, “Hail, Thoth, who proved himself by the exercise of his knowledge to be the protector and friend of Osiris and of Isis, and of their son Horus.”

Without the words of power given to him by Thoth, Osiris would have been powerless under the attacks of his foes, and similarly the dead man, who was always identified with Osiris, would have passed out of existence at his death but for the words of power provided by the writings that were buried with him. In the Judgment Scene it is Thoth who reports to the gods the result of the weighing of the heart in the balance, and who has supplied its owner with the words that he has uttered in his supplications, and whatever can be said in favor of the deceased he says to the gods, and whatever can be done for him he does.

But apart from being the protector and friend of Osiris, Thoth was the refuge to which Isis fled in her trouble. The words of a hymn declare that she knew “how to turn aside evil happening,” and that she was “strong of tongue and uttered the words of power which she knew with correct pronunciation, and halted not in her speech, and was perfect both in giving the command, and in saying the word,” but this description only proves that she had been instructed by Thoth in the art of uttering words of power with effect, and to him, indeed, she owed more than this. Spells to keep away disease are of this class.

The amulets found upon Egyptian mummies and the inscriptions on Gnostic gems are, for the most part, of a protective nature. The protective spell may be said to be an amulet... in words and is often found in connection with the amulet on which it is inscribed.

Taboos
The curse or taboo may appear as (a) the word of blighting, the damaging word, or (b) the word of prohibition or restriction.

The curse is of the nature of a spell, even if it is not in the shape of a definite formula. Thus we have the Highland Scottish curses: “A bad meeting to you,” “Bad understanding to you,” and “A down mouth be yours,” which are popular as formulas.

Those who had seen old women, of the type of Madge Wildfire (in Sir Walter Scott’s novel The Heart of Midlothian), cursing and haming, say their manner is well-calculated to inspire terror. Some years ago, a party of Scottish tinkers quarreled and fought, first among themselves, and then with some T'ive villagers. In the excitement, a tinker wife threw off her cap and allowed her hair to fall over her shoulders in wild disorder. She then bared her knees, and falling on them to the ground, in a praying attitude, poured forth a torrent of wishes that struck awe into all who heard her.

She implicated: “Drowning by sea and conflagration by land; may you never see a son to follow your body to the grave, or a daughter to mourn your death. I have made my wish before this, and I will make it now, and there was not yet a day I did not see my wish fulfilled."

Curses employed by witches usually invoked a blight upon the person cursed and their flocks, herds, and crops. Barrenness, too, was frequently called down upon women. A person under a curse or spell was believed in the Scottish Highlands “to become powerless over his own volition alive and awake but moves and acts as if asleep.” Curses or spells that invoked death were frequently mentioned in works that deal with Medieval magic (see summonses by the dying).

The taboo was a word of prohibition or restriction. This is typified in the mystic expression “thou shalt not.” Thus a number of the Biblical commandments are taboos, and the book of Leviticus teems with them. The taboo is the “don’t” applied to children—a curb on basic desire for the sake of the community. To break a taboo was to bring dire misfortune upon oneself, and often upon one’s family. It could even threaten the whole community and some action would have to be taken to counter the effects of a broken taboo.

Transforming Spells
There are copious examples of injury or transformation of a person, animal, or object. These were nearly always affected by a spell of a given formula. No fewer than 12 chapters of the Egyptian Book of the Dead (chapters 77 to 88) are devoted to providing the deceased with words of power, the recital of which was necessary to enable him to transform himself into various animal and human forms.

S. Baring Gould, in his Book of Folklore (1913), states that in such cases the consequence of a spell being cast on an individual required him or her to become a beast or a monster with no escape except under conditions difficult to obtain. To this category belong a number of so-called fairy tales that are actually folktales. Wherever the magical art is believed to be all-powerful, one of its greatest achievements is the casting of a spell so as to alter completely the appearance of the person on whom it is cast, so that this individual becomes an animal. One need only recall the story in the Arabian Nights of the Calendars and the three noble ladies of Baghdad, in which the wicked sisters are transformed into dogs that have to be thrashed every day. Also of this class are the stories “Beauty and the Beast” and “The Frog Prince.”

Procurement Spells
Procurement spells are spells to procure some minor end. Love spells were engraved on metal tablets by the Gnostics and the magicians of the Middle Ages. Instances of these are to be found in The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abraham the Jew. Spells were often employed to imprison evil spirits.

Jewish folklore has many opinions and legends relating to this subject, which appear to have derived in a great measure from the Babylonians. The ancient historian Josephus affirmed that it was generally believed by his countrymen that Solomon left behind many spells that had the power of terrifying and compelling evil spirits. Some of the old rabbis also described Solomon as an accomplished magician. It is possible that the belief in the power of spells and incantations became general among the Hebrews during the captivity, and that the invention of them was attributed to the wise Solomon, as a more creditable personage than the deities of the Assyrians.

Those fictions acquired currency, not only among the Arabs, Persians, and other Islamic nations, but, in the process of time, also in many Christian communities. They were first adopted by the Gnostics and the dualistic sects in whose beliefs pagan rituals mixed with Jewish and Christian notions. In the Middle Ages they found their way among Catholics too, principally by means of the apocryphal gospels and the hagiography of the saints.

An incident in the life of St. Margaret is typical. This holy virgin, having vanquished an evil spirit who assaulted her, demanded his name. “My name,” replied the demon, “is Veltis, and I am one of those whom Solomon, by virtue of his spells, confined in a copper caldron at Babylon, but when the Babylonians, in the hope of finding treasures, dug up the caldron and opened it, we all made our escape. Since that time, our efforts have been directed to the destruction of righteous persons, and I have long been striving to turn thee from the course which thou hast embraced.” The reader of the Arabian Nights’ Entertainments will be immediately reminded of the story of the fisherman. The Oriental origin of many similar legends, e.g., of St. George of Cappadocia, seems equally clear.

Modern Spell Magic
Spells became a large part of popular folk magic, a fact illustrated by the magic of the Pennsylvania Dutch as compiled in The Long Lost Friend by John Hohman. This book of magic largely consists of short spells that could be easily learned and just as easily repeated at any appropriate moment. Through the nineteenth century, as Western society reoriented itself around science and technology, spells supposedly became part of the superstitious pre-scientific past. However, the survival of magic into the post-scientific world has been accompanied with a reappraisal of magic in light of its social function.

As magic has been revived in the West, one can note the spread and use of spells, especially among the Wiccans, practitioners of neo-pagan witchcraft. Much of the popular Wiccan movement is focused on the improvement of the lives of the adherents and the lives of their friends and family. Low magic is common and accompanies a program that emphasizes psychic training, self-discipline, and the development of new social skills.

In modern Wicca, the emphasis is placed upon positive spells, but there is a place for curses and negative spells. Admonitions surround the use of such spells by pagan priests and speak of a threefold law of return. If one seeks out a spell, and if that spell does not take, it will rebound upon the one who sent it with a triple force.

Sources:
Spheres

Divisions of the spirit world, both in spatial and moral-spiritual senses. The doctrine of spheres, in a literal sense, was integral to the ancient world, and much of occult teachings—astrology, magic, Gnosticism—emerged in such a cosmology. It was retained in the occult culture and has passed into modern theosophical and Spiritualist circles, where it has remained, though the spheres are usually thought of as levels of a multidimensional world.

Spheres have developed a doctrine of the spheres based upon the communications of spirits in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The information conflicts at many points, and there is no authority to declare for one opinion over another, but there is a general agreement as to the number of spheres. They are seven: (1) Hell, (2) Sphere of Desires, (3) Material, (4) Mind, (5) Abstract, (6) Meeting of the Sexes, and (7) Union of the Sexes.

There is some contradiction as to whether the Earth should be considered as the first sphere. It is said that the first sphere is the abode of gross and ignorant spirits. It is gloomy and desolate, replete with sadness and misery. After a realization of this, one is led to believe that the second sphere is the sphere of the gods. In a scenery as natural as that of Earth, there is the abode of gross and ignorant spirits. It is gloomy and desolate, replete with sadness and misery. After a realization of this, one is led to believe that the second sphere is the sphere of the gods. In a scenery as natural as that of Earth, there is the abode of the guardian angels. This is the abode of the angels of the Earth, and the sphere of the gods. It is called the Sphere of Desires, and is the sphere of the gods. It is the sphere of the gods, and is the place where the gods dwell. It is the sphere of the gods, and is the place where the gods dwell. It is the sphere of the gods, and is the place where the gods dwell.

The period of the stay in a particular sphere varies individually. The higher spheres cannot be perceived by spirits in the lower ones. Information on the higher spheres is obtained from visitors descending to lower spheres. Owing to a lack of conception, no adequate description can be conveyed to us. It is also said that the spheres are the heavens of boundless extent. These are the ultimate abodes of the glorified and blessed. They are 120 degrees wide; that is, they extend 60 degrees on each side of the equator. If we take the sixtieth parallel of latitude each side of the equator and imagine it projected into the

Sources:

- Spence, Lewis. Atlantis in America. London: E. Benn, 1925.
- ———. The Magic and Mysteries of Mexico. Philadelphia: David McKay, 1930.
- ———. The Occult Causes of the Present War. N.p., 1940.
- ———. The Occult Sciences in Atlantis. London: Rider, 1943.
- ———. Scottish Ghosts and Goblins. N.p., 1952.
- ———. Will Europe Follow Atlantis? N.p., 1942.

Spence, (James) Lewis (Thomas Chalmers) (1874–1955)

Scottish journalist and scholar of the occult who took a particular interest in the Atlantis theme. Born November 25, 1874, in Forfarshire, Scotland, he was educated privately and at Edinburgh University before following a journalistic career. He was copy editor of the newspaper The Scotsman, (1899–1906), editor of The Edinburgh Magazine (1904–05), and copy editor of The British Weekly (1906–09). About this time he took to serious study of mythology and folklore, with special reference to Mexico and Central America. He published some important books on the subject, including his own study of The Popul Vuh, the sacred book of the ancient Quiche Indians of Maya (1908) and A Dictionary of Mythology (1910).

He also published more than 40 other works dealing with mythology, folklore, and the occult, including the Encyclopedia of Occultism (1920) the first comprehensive work of its kind and ultimately one of the primary sources of this Encyclopedia of Occultism and Parapsychology. He contributed articles to the Hibbert Journal, the Glasgow Herald, and The Times. An ardent Scottish nationalist, he contested North Midlothian as a candidate in 1929. He also found time to write romantic poetry. He was a fellow of the Royal Anthropological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland and was vice president of the Scottish Anthropological and Folklore Society. In 1951 he was awarded a royal pension for services to literature.

He is best known, perhaps, for his books exploring the Atlantis myth. He also edited the journal Atlantis Quarterly in 1932. His Magic Arts in Celtic Britain (1945) was used extensively in the early years of the modern neo-pagan witchcraft revival. He died March 3, 1955.
against the blue dome of the sky, we have the boundaries of these zones.

The first zone, or the innermost one, is 60 miles from the Earth's surface. The next external one is removed from the first by about the same distance. The third is just outside the moon's orbit, or 265,000 miles from the Earth. From the third sphere rise the most sublimated exhalations, which mingle with the emanations of the other planets and form a vast zone around the entire solar system, including even the unknown planets beyond the vast orbit of Neptune (the spirits had yet to inform him of the existence of Pluto).

The first zone is nearly 30 miles in thickness, the second 20, the third but two miles. While the Earth is slowly diminishing, the spheres are gradually increasing. The surface of the zones is diversified with changing scenery. Matter, when it aggregates there, is found to assume a form in which it existed below. Hence there are all the forms of life there as on Earth, except those, such as the lowest plants and animals, that cannot exist surrounded by such superior conditions. The scenery is of mountain and plain, river, lake and ocean; and of forest and prairie. It is like Earth with all its imperfections perfected, and its beauties are multiplied.

The first trance reference to spheres in the lineage of modern Spiritualism seems to have been made by Frederica Hauffe, the seeress of Prevorst. The second is contained in a letter from G. P. Billo to J. P. F. Deleuze in 1831. Billo wrote: "They taught that God was a grand Spiritual Sun—life on earth a probation. The spheres, different degrees of comprehensive happiness or states of retributive suffering—each appropriate to the good or evil deeds done on earth. They described the ascending changes open to every soul in proportion to his own efforts to improve."

The first exact dimensions were claimed by J. A. Gridley in his book Astonishing Facts from the Spirit World (1854). According to his data, the first sphere is 5,000 miles, the sixth 30,000 miles from the Earth’s surface.

Diagrams of the spheres were first drawn by Hauffe. Nahum Koons in the Koon loghouse was the second to provide detailed sketches; his information was supplemented by accounts given through the trumpet (see also Jonathan Koons).

Robert Hare differed from Gridley and agreed with Hudson Tuttle inasmuch as his communicators put the distance of the nearest sphere as 60 miles from the Earth's surface. But his further distances did not tally with Tuttle's calculations. He placed the sixth sphere within the area of the moon. He was told that the spheres are concentric zones, or circles, of exceedingly refined matter encompassing the Earth like belts or girdles. They have atmospheres of peculiar vital air, soft and balmy. Their surfaces are diversified with an immense variety of picturesque landscapes, with lofty mountain ranges, valleys, rivers, lakes, forests, trees and shrubbery, and flowers of every colour and variety, sending forth grateful emanations.

As flights of unverifiable speculation proceeded, almost every trance description of the spheres asserted something different. Eugene Crowell, in The Identity of Primitive Christianity with Modern Spiritualism (2 vols., 1875–79), states that he had received the following figures: the first sphere is within our atmosphere, the second is about 60 miles from the earth, the third about 160, the fourth 310, the fifth 460, the sixth 635, the seventh 865 miles.

Precise information was tendered in J. Hewat McKenzie's Spirit Intercourse (1916). The supposed spirit of William James was quoted as the authority behind the statements. The disagreement is too apparent. "The third sphere, the Summer Land, is 1,550 miles from the earth, the fourth 2,850, the fifth 5,050, the sixth 9,450, and the seventh 18,250."

The sustenance of the body in superphysical states is derived from the atmosphere by inhalation in the ordinary act of breathing; the material for clothing and houses is manufactured; there is a union of sexes in a bond of affection, with no offspring; the animals that live there have previously existed on Earth; the spiritual worlds of each planet unite at the seventh sphere; the spheres are built of essences cast off by millions of tons of matter that condense into solid substance and float in space like vast continents, by the operation of centripetal and centrifugal attraction; and the passage from one sphere to the other is effected by gradual refinement of the spiritual body under the effect of the spirit.

An impressive conception of after-death states was disclosed in Geraldine Cummins's The Road to Immortality (1932), a book said to be dictated by the spirit of F. W. H. Myers. According to the chapter "The Chart of Existence," the journey of the soul takes place through the following stages:

1. The Plane of Matter.
2. Hades or the Intermediate State.
3. The Plane of Illusion.
4. The Plane of Color.
5. The Plane of Flame.
6. The Plane of Light.
7. Out Yonder, Timelessness.

Between each plane, or new chapter in experience, there is existence in Hades or in an intermediate state when the soul reviews his past experiences and makes his choice, deciding whether he will go up or down the ladder of consciousness.

Although there is marked disagreement between different accounts of spirit worlds in the afterlife, it will be recalled that this is also characteristic of the eschatology (considerations of the afterlife) of the different Eastern and Western religions. It has been claimed that spirits who have not become purified and refined and remain tied to earthly desires have been easier to contact and that their communications would be unreliable. Advance spirits would have moved on to more rarified planes of existence. However, that idea seems to be contradicted by the attempts to identify various spirits with advanced beings from the past.

It is interesting to note that many individuals who have experienced out-of-the-body travel, especially as part of a near-death experience, have reported a remarkable similarity of content in terms both of positive experiences of moving toward a bright light and meeting light beings, as well as negative experiences of a purgatorial realm. These experiences, however, have no relation to the spiritualist doctrine of the spheres.

Sources:
Cummins, Geraline Dorothy. The Road to Immortality. Lon-

Spider
Various folklore beliefs surround the spider. In England, spiders were known as "money makers." If found on clothing, they were a sign that money was on the way, provided that the spider was not killed. A similar idea prevailed in Polynesia, where a spider dropping down in front of a person was a sign of a present. An American belief is that killing a spider will bring rain.

In folk medicine, a spider was rolled in butter or molasses and swallowed. As a cure for ague, it was tied up and secured on the left arm. A spider was also traditionally used as an amulet. The insect was baked and worn around the neck.

The British antiquary Elias Ashmole stated in his Memoirs (1717): "I took early in the morning a good dose of elixir, and hung three spiders around my neck, and they drove my ague away. Deo Gratias!"

Robert Burton (1577–1640) stated:
"Being in the country in the vacation time, not many years since, at Lindby in Leicestershire, my father's house. I first observed this amulet of a spider in a nut-shell, wrapped in silk, so applied for an ague by my mother. . . . This I thought most absurd and ridiculous, and I could see no warrant in it . . . till at length, rambling amongst authors, I found this very medicine in Dioscorides, approved by Matthiolius, repeated by Aldrovandus. . . . I began to have a better opinion of it, and to give more credit to amulets, when I saw it in some parties an-er to experience.”

Spiders were sacred to the ancient Egyptian goddess Maat and are used today as symbolism of a Mazzian (feminist) form do ceremomial magic.

Spiegelschrift

Writing written backward, from right to left, so as to be read in a mirror. Automatic writing is frequently done in this way, and it is said that the ability to produce spiegelschrift is often found where there is a natural tendency to automatism.

SPIRICOM

SPIRICOM, a post-New Age networking periodical, serves the greater Seattle area of the state of Washington. Appearing ten times annually, SPIRICOM covers holistic health, New Thought spirituality, and alternatives designed to connect the body, mind, and spirit.

Each issue is built around a set of brief feature articles on various religious and health perspectives dominated by a New Thought positive thinking approach, chosen for their aim to empower and inform. There are also several regular columns, including a question-and-answer column by hypnoterapist Ayal Hurst, and an astrology-tarot column, “Astrocures,” by health consultant Donna Pinkston, who is also SPIRICOM’s editor and marketing director. The sensitivity to a spectrum of alternative spiritual options is demonstrated in the inclusion of a “Totem of the Month” feature highlighting the symbolic significance of various animals.

SPIRAL JOURNEY

SPIRAL JOURNEY initially appeared in July of 1997, and grew out of the spiritual crisis that its editor, Asara Sharon Briski, had gone through in the mid-1990s. It is published at PMB 6121, 13500 Bothell-Everett Hwy., Mill Creek, WA 98012, and distributed free at a number of bookstores, health food stores, and other businesses in its target area. It is issued monthly, with combined issues in December/January and July/August.

Sources:

SPIRAL JOURNEY. Mill Creek, Wash., n.d.

SPIRICOM

Apparatus invented by research engineer George W. Meek of the MET/Ascience Foundation as a communication system with the dead. This particular development of an electronic voice phenomenon (EVP) involves a frequency modulation system using supplementary audio tones. In contrast to the previously claimed EVP or Raudive voices system, which obtained very weak voice signals, usually of a few words spoken at higher than normal speeds, Meek and his associates claimed to have received many hours of sustained conversation at normal speed from the American scientist George Jeffries Mueller, who had died of a heart attack 14 years earlier.

The first announcement of SPIRICOM was made on April 6, 1982, following 11 years of research and development. The system was not entirely mechanical, since, like other electronic devices such as the black box, it required the psychic energies of an operator.

In a release published in the journal New Realities (vol. 4, no. 6), Meek describes his system of SPIRICOM Mark IV as consisting of three components: a transceiver operating in the 30–150 MHz range; a special combination of 13 audio frequencies from 21 to 701 cps; and the input of energy from an operator who had certain highly psychic abilities, involving energy apparently outside present knowledge of the electromagnetic system, tentatively called “bioplasmic.” The system was developed in conjunction with the MetaScience Foundation at Franklin, North Carolina.

The inventor and his associates made their preliminary announcement in order to encourage other researchers to develop their invention beyond basic stage so that communication with the dead by means of electronic apparatus might become perfected as quickly as possible. No patent rights were filed on the equipment, and both printed and audio explanatory materials were published to facilitate the work of other experiment-ers. For further information, contact MET/Ascience Foundation, P.O. Box 10749, Minneapolis, MN 55438. (See also Ashkin-Jobson Triation; Commuminigraph; Friedrich Jürgensen; Reflectograph)

SPIRIT

A basic concept in the Western religious traditions, in which it is often contrasted to the material aspect of existence. The Hebrew word ruah (spirit) originally meant “breath” or “wind,” and the association of spirit with breath and wind is also found in the Greek word pneuma. In the Christian tradition, biblical interpreters generally argue for one of two views of the spirit. Some see the spirit as synonymous with the soul and as the principle of all life, including the intellectual, moral, and religious, and believe that when the body dies the soul returns to God, who made it. Others tend to see a distinction between the spirit and the soul. They believe the soul (psyche) is the principle of animal life and is possessed by humans and animals alike. The spirit, in contrast, is that which humans possess which is not shared with other animals—a moral and an immortal life, a conscious relationship to God. In this view, the soul and body die, but the spirit survives and goes into God’s presence. This latter view has tended to dominate within Spiritualism.

The Spirit in Spiritualism

In Spiritualism spirit is variously defined as the inmost principle, the divine particle, the vital essence, and the inherent actuating element in life. It is seen as manifesting through its association with protoplasm and dwells in the astral body, which Spiritualists identify with the soul, the connecting link between the spirit and the physical body.

At death the connection between the spirit and the physical body is severed, and the spirit finds no ordinary means of manifestation. Spirits appear to be cognizant of space, although not conditioned by it. The same applies to time, past, present, and future cease to exist for the spirit in the earthly sense.

Spiritualists do not see spirits in the role of Peeping Toms, keeping watch on the most private actions of the living, but have concluded that they are partly conscious of the thoughts and emotions directed toward them from the Earth.

They also maintain that spirits cannot hold communion with the living if the mental attitude of the latter is not receptive to spirit communication. In the mid-nineteenth century chemistry professor Robert Hare was told by alleged spirits that there were peculiar elementary principles out of which spiritual bodies were constructed that were analogous to material elements; that spirits have bodies, with a circulation and respiratory apparatus; and that they breathe a gaseous or ethereal matter that is also inhaled by men, beasts, and fish.

William Denton a geology professor noted for his research in psychometry, wrote: “The vision that can see through brick walls and distinguish objects miles away, does not belong to the body; it must belong to the spirit. Hundreds of times have I had the evidence that the spirit can smell, hear and see, and has powers of locomotion. As the fin in the unhatched fish indicates the water in which he may one day swim, so these powers in man indicate that mighty realm which the spirit is fitted eternally to enjoy.”

Spirit and Nature

Sources:

- Tyler, F. B. Primitive Culture. 2 vols. New York: George Putnam’s Sons, 1871.

Spirit and Nature (Magazine)

Bimonthly magazine dealing with the teachings of Paramahansa Yogananda and his disciple Swami Kriyananda, who left the Self-Realization Fellowship to found Ananda. Address: Ananda Cooperative Village, 4618 Tyler Foote Rd., Nevada City, CA 95959. Website: http://www.ananda.org/.

Sources:

Spirit Children

A Spiritualist explanation for the relatively frequent phenomenon of children reporting invisible playmates. In Spiritualism, these are children who have died and, according to accounts of mediums in trance, are growing to maturity in an afterlife. Child mediums have often claimed spirit children as their playmates, and mediums have often had a “child” as one of their spirit controls.

- Florence Marryat, in her book There is No Death (1891), writes of medium Bessie Williams’s little girl “Mabel”: “I have watched her playing at ball with an invisible child, and have seen the ball thrown, arrested halfway in the air, and then tossed back again as if a living child had been Mabel’s opponent.” According to Marryat, when a still-born baby enters the other side, she is delivered over to the nearest relative of its parent to be named and brought up.

- “The nurse of the little Goldenstubble,” writes Baron Hel- lenbach in his book Birth and Death as a Change of Perception (1886), “who afterwards became a very celebrated medium, noticed with terror that his playthings moved about by themselves, while the child declared that another child was playing with them.”

Sources:

Spirit Hypothesis

The theory that the intelligence that directs the phenomena of the medium and the séance room is a disembodied spirit. Interest in the possibility of this theory being true and of establishing proof of it energized much of psychical research in its first generations. The theory suffered greatly from the discovery that most of the more interesting phenomena was simply the product of fraud. Most of contemporary parapsychology has redirected itself away from any consideration of the spirit hypothesis and in favor of exploring psychic powers inherent in the individual and the various altered states of consciousness that accompany the exercise of such powers. Some consideration of possible spirit activity remains in the study of poltergeists and the near-death experience.

As Spiritualism developed, the spirit hypothesis stood against various psychological theories of mediumship and the diabolic theories of conservative Christian theologians. The psychological theory reduced the genuine phenomena to mental processes inherent in the mediums themselves and their associates.

Theodore Flournoy was an early champion of the psychological hypothesis:

“The state of passivity, the abdication of the normal personality, the relaxation of voluntary control over the muscular movements, and the ideas—this whole psycho-physiological attitude, where the subject is in a state of expectancy of communicating with the deceased—strongly predisposes him to mental dissociation and a sort of infantile regression, a relapse into an inferior phase of psychic evolution, where his imagination naturally begins to imitate the3850 discriminate, utilising the resources of the subconscious, the emotional complexes, latent memories, instinctive tendencies ordinarily suppressed, etc., for the various roles it plays.”

James H. Hyslop summed up the fundamental conditions of the spirit hypothesis as follows: (1) The information acquired must be supernormal, that is, not explicable by normal perception; (2) The incidents must be verifiable memories of the deceased persons and so representative of their personal identity; (3) The incidents must be trivial and specific—not easily, if at all, duplicated in the common experience of others.

- William James, in his report of the “Richard Hodgson” spirit control of Leonora Piper states: “I myself can perfectly well imagine spirit agency, and find my mind vacillating about it curiously. When I take the phenomena piecemeal, the notion that Mrs. Piper’s subliminal self should keep her sitters apart as expertly as she does, remembering its past dealings with each of them so well, not mixing its communications more, and all the while humbugging, acquiring a character of unlikelihood. The notion that so many men and women, in all other respects honest enough, should have this preposterous monkeying self annexed to their personality seems to me so weird that the spirit theory immediately takes on a more probable appearance. The spirits, if spirits there be, must indeed work under incredible complications and falsifications, but at least if they are present some honesty is left in the whole department of the dreamlike of the hypnotised subjects. . . . But I find that when I ascend from the details to the whole meaning of the phenomenon . . . the notion that such an immense current of experience, complex in so many ways, should spell out absolutely nothing but the word humbug, acquires a character of unlikelihood. The notion that so many men and women, in all other respects honest enough, should have this preposterous monkeying self annexed to their personality seems to me so weird that the spirit theory immediately takes on a more probable appearance. The spirits, if spirits there be, must indeed work under incredible complications and falsifications, but at least if they are present some honesty is left in the whole department of the universe which otherwise is run by pure deception. The more I realise the quantitative massiveness of the phenomenon and its complexity, the more incredible it seems to me that in a world all of whose vaster features we are in the habit of considering to be sincere at least, however, brutal, this feature should be wholly constituted on insincerity.”

In a chapter called “The Spiritistic Hypothesis” in his book My Philosophy (1935), Sir Oliver Lodge states: “My doctrine involves the primary reality of mind in association with whatever physical mechanism it may find available. Matter constitutes only one of these mechanisms, and indeed only constitutes it in a secondary fashion; and by a study limited to matter alone we shall never get the full reality of existence.
I hold that all our actions on matter here and now are conducted through empty space, or rather through the entity which fills space; and that if our activity continues, it must be continued in the same sort of way and through the same sort of etheric mechanism that we already unconsciously utilise now. That in brief terms is the spiritistic hypothesis which I proclaim and work on.

Sources:
Hyslop, James H. Contact With the Other World: The Latest Evidence as to Communication With the Dead. New York: Century, 1916.

Spirit Intervention

Spiritualist annals contain a number of accounts of the intervention of spirits to find lost wills, other papers, or objects of importance, or to track down murderers. Boccaccio, in his Life of Dante, related that the spectral form of Dante appeared in a dream to his son Jacopo Alighieri, and on the son’s inquiry whether he had finished his great poem, the thirteenth canto of which they were unable to find, the spirit took him by the hand and led him to the house and into the room where Dante had been accustomed to sleep and pointed out a blind window-covered by matting. On waking, Alighieri found the missing canto, which had not been seen before, in this place.

The philosopher Kant, in his revelations on Emanuel Swedenborg, narrated the story of a Madame Marteville, a widow who was asked to pay a debt of her deceased husband. She remembered that the debt was paid but could not find the receipt. During a visit to Swedenborg, Marteville asked the seer if he had known her husband. Swedenborg answered in the negative. Eight days afterward, the spirit of the dead man appeared to the widow in a dream and showed her where she would find a casket of finest workmanship with the receipt and a magnificent pin, which was also lost, inside. She immediately got out of bed, ran to the place indicated, and found the casket and contents.

In the morning, she was hardly awake when Swedenborg was announced. Without having knowledge of her dream Swedenborg told her that during the night he conversed with many spirits, among them her deceased husband who, however, cut short the conversation by saying that he must visit his wife in order to reveal to her the whereabouts of a paper of the highest importance and of a diamond breast pin she thought lost. Swedenborg called to find out whether the spirit had kept his promise.

The Master of Lindsay, on being questioned before the committee of the London Dialectical Society on July 6, 1869, as to whether he ever obtained any information that could not have been known to the medium or to any present, told the following story:

“A friend of mine was very anxious to find a will of his grandmother, who had been dead 40 years, but could not even find the certificate of her death. I went with him to the Marshall’s, and we had a séance; we sat at a table, and soon the raps came; my friend then asked his questions mentally; he went over the alphabet himself, or sometimes I did so, not knowing the question. We were told the will had been drawn by a man named William Walker, who lived in Whitechapel; the name of the street, and the number of the house were given. We went to Whitechapel, found the man, and subsequently, through his aid, obtained a copy of the draft; he was quite unknown to us, and had not always lived in the locality, for he had once seen better days. The medium could not possibly have known anything about the matter, and even if she had, her knowledge could have been of no avail, as all the questions were mental ones.”

Robert Macnish, in his book The Philosophy of Sleep (1830), narrates the court case of R. of Bowland. This man was summoned to pay a sum that his father had already paid. When he was about to pay again, the spirit of his father appeared to him in a dream and informed him that the respective papers were in the hands of M. of Inveresk, near Edinburgh. If he had no recollection of it, he should be reminded of the difference of opinion that he had with the deceased about a Portuguese coin. The reminder was most helpful. With the help of it the old attorney remembered and found the papers.

Gabriel Delanne, in his book Le Spiritisme devant la Science (1885), tells the story of a spirit communication given to a descendant of Johann Sebastian Bach by the spirit of an Italian musician named Baldasarini who lived at the court of Henry III of France. The communication led to the discovery of a small strip of paper inside a spinet of 1664 with four lines of verse in the handwriting of Henry III. The authenticity of the writing was proved by comparing the strip with manuscripts in the Imperial Library.

The “Widow’s Mite” incident was described by Isaac K. Funk in his book of this title, published in 1904. In February 1903, he heard of a Brooklyn family where every Wednesday evening sittings took place in the presence of a few invited guests. On his third visit, when he was getting reconciled to the notion that the mediumship was a remarkably good case of secondary personality, the control “George” asked: “Has anyone here got anything that belonged to Mr. Beecher?”

There was no reply. On his emphatic repetition of the question, Funk replied: “I have in my pocket a letter from the Rev. Dr. Hillis, Mr. Beecher’s successor. Is that what you mean?”

The answer was: “No, I am told by a spirit present, John Rakestraw[,] that Mr. Beecher, who is not present, is concerned about an ancient coin, the Widow’s Mite. This coin is out of place, and should be returned, and he looks to you, doctor, to return it.”

Funk was greatly surprised and asked: “What do you mean by saying that he looks to me to return it? I have no coin of Mrs. Beecher’s.” The control then explained that he knew nothing about it, except that he was told that the coin was out of place and had been for a number of years and that Beecher had said that Funk could find and return it. The control also added that he was impressed that the coin was in a large iron safe in a drawer under a lot of papers.

Funk then remembered that when he was making the Standard Dictionary, he had borrowed a valuable ancient coin, known as the Widow’s Mite, from a close friend of Beecher’s. This friend had just died several days before. Funk asked if the coin had been returned. The answer came that it had not.

After Funk instituted a search, the coin was found in his office in a little drawer in his large iron safe under a stack of papers. In later inquiries through the control Funk was told that Beecher was not concerned about the return of the coin. His purpose was to give Funk a test to prove communication between the two worlds.

James H. Hyslop, in his report on the direct voice mediumship of Elizabeth Blake of Ohio (Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research, vol. 7, p. 581), quotes the following case given by L. V. Guthrie, superintendent of the West Virginia Asylum at Huntington, Blake’s medical adviser:

“An acquaintance of mine, of prominent family in this end of the State, whose grandfather had been found at the foot of a high bridge with his skull smashed and life extinct, called on Mrs. Blake a few years ago and was not thinking of her grandfather at the time. She was very much surprised to have the spirit of her grandfather tell her that he had not fallen off the bridge while intoxicated, as had been presumed at the time, but that he had been murdered by two men who met him in a buggy and had proceeded to sandbag him, relieve him of his valuables, and throw him over the bridge. The spirit then proceeded to describe minutely the appearance of the two men who had murdered him, and gave such other information that had led to the arrest and conviction of one or both of these individuals.”

Spiritism

A general term for the belief that the spirits or souls of the dead communicate with the living through a medium or psychically sensitive individual. The term has been used with two quite different meanings in the twentieth century. In conservative Christian circles it is often used as a derogatory term to describe Spiritualism in anticult literature. It is also used as the designation of the followers of the particular Spiritualist teachings of Allan Kardec (1804–1869), a French medium who also had immense influence on the development of Spiritualism in Spain, Portugal, and South America (especially Brazil). Kardec’s thought was distinctive from British and American Spiritualism in the nineteenth century by its advocacy of belief in reincarnation.

Prior to his adoption of Spiritualist beliefs in about 1862, Kardec had been an exponent of animal magnetism and phrenology. He based his new teachings on spirit revelations received through clairvoyants, and so popular were these teachings that they rapidly spread over the Continent. In Britain, however, Spiritualism obtained little hold, its only prominent exponent being Anna Blackwell, who endeavored without success to establish the doctrine of reincarnation.

Spiritism and Spiritualism should not be confused, since the adherents of each section were opposed to the tenets of the other. Even in France, where Spiritualism obtained the strongest footing, there was a distinct Spiritualist party reluctant to accept the doctrine of reincarnation.

Kardec’s Spiritism flourished in nineteenth-century France, and is today well established in South America, especially Brazil, where it is estimated that there are now some four million Spiritists. In contemporary South America (especially Brazil), Kardec’s thought was distinctive from British and American Spiritualism in the nineteenth century by its advocacy of belief in reincarnation.

Prior to his adoption of Spiritualist beliefs in about 1862, Kardec had been an exponent of animal magnetism and phrenology. He based his new teachings on spirit revelations received through clairvoyants, and so popular were these teachings that they rapidly spread over the Continent. In Britain, however, Spiritualism obtained little hold, its only prominent exponent being Anna Blackwell, who endeavored without success to establish the doctrine of reincarnation.

Spiritism and Spiritualism should not be confused, since the adherents of each section were opposed to the tenets of the other. Even in France, where Spiritualism obtained the strongest footing, there was a distinct Spiritualist party reluctant to accept the doctrine of reincarnation.

Kardec’s Spiritism flourished in nineteenth-century France, and is today well established in South America, especially Brazil, where it is estimated that there are now some four million Spiritists. In contemporary South America (especially Brazil), Kardec’s thought was distinctive from British and American Spiritualism in the nineteenth century by its advocacy of belief in reincarnation.

Prior to his adoption of Spiritualist beliefs in about 1862, Kardec had been an exponent of animal magnetism and phrenology. He based his new teachings on spirit revelations received through clairvoyants, and so popular were these teachings that they rapidly spread over the Continent. In Britain, however, Spiritualism obtained little hold, its only prominent exponent being Anna Blackwell, who endeavored without success to establish the doctrine of reincarnation.

Spiritism and Spiritualism should not be confused, since the adherents of each section were opposed to the tenets of the other. Even in France, where Spiritualism obtained the strongest footing, there was a distinct Spiritualist party reluctant to accept the doctrine of reincarnation.

Kardec’s Spiritism flourished in nineteenth-century France, and is today well established in South America, especially Brazil, where it is estimated that there are now some four million Spiritists. In contemporary South America (especially Brazil), Kardec’s thought was distinctive from British and American Spiritualism in the nineteenth century by its advocacy of belief in reincarnation.

Prior to his adoption of Spiritualist beliefs in about 1862, Kardec had been an exponent of animal magnetism and phrenology. He based his new teachings on spirit revelations received through clairvoyants, and so popular were these teachings that they rapidly spread over the Continent. In Britain, however, Spiritualism obtained little hold, its only prominent exponent being Anna Blackwell, who endeavored without success to establish the doctrine of reincarnation.

Spiritism and Spiritualism should not be confused, since the adherents of each section were opposed to the tenets of the other. Even in France, where Spiritualism obtained the strongest footing, there was a distinct Spiritualist party reluctant to accept the doctrine of reincarnation.

Kardec’s Spiritism flourished in nineteenth-century France, and is today well established in South America, especially Brazil, where it is estimated that there are now some four million Spiritists. In contemporary South America (especially Brazil), Kardec’s thought was distinctive from British and American Spiritualism in the nineteenth century by its advocacy of belief in reincarnation.

Prior to his adoption of Spiritualist beliefs in about 1862, Kardec had been an exponent of animal magnetism and phrenology. He based his new teachings on spirit revelations received through clairvoyants, and so popular were these teachings that they rapidly spread over the Continent. In Britain, however, Spiritualism obtained little hold, its only prominent exponent being Anna Blackwell, who endeavored without success to establish the doctrine of reincarnation.

Spiritism and Spiritualism should not be confused, since the adherents of each section were opposed to the tenets of the other. Even in France, where Spiritualism obtained the strongest footing, there was a distinct Spiritualist party reluctant to accept the doctrine of reincarnation.

Kardec’s Spiritism flourished in nineteenth-century France, and is today well established in South America, especially Brazil, where it is estimated that there are now some four million Spiritists. In contemporary South America (especially Brazil), Kardec’s thought was distinctive from British and American Spiritualism in the nineteenth century by its advocacy of belief in reincarnation.
however, Gardner discovered that in at least two instances a living model was the subject of Mumler’s “spirit” pictures. Although he continued to believe that some of the photographs might be genuine, his exposure of Mumler as fraudulent effectively checked the movement for a time.

After a lapse of six years, Mumler appeared in New York, where the authorities endeavored to prosecute him, but the evidence against him was insufficient to prove fraud, and he was acquitted.

Spirit photography had flourished in the United States for some ten years before it became known in Britain. Samuel Guppy and his wife, Agnes Guppy-Volckman, the well-known Spiritualist mediums, endeavored without success to produce spirit photographs in private, and at length called for the assistance of Frederick A. Hudson, a professional photographer. A photograph of Guppy revealed a dim, draped “spirit” form.

Hudson speedily became popular, and his studio was as large as that of Mumler had been. He found support from several outside observers. Thomas Slater, a London optimist, made careful observations of his process without being able to detect any fraud. John Beattie, a professional photographer and something of a skeptic, made the following statement concerning Hudson’s performances: “They were not made by double exposure, nor by figures projected in space in any way; they were not the result of mirrors; they were not produced by any machinery in the background, behind it, above it, or below it, nor by any contrivance connected with the bath, the camera, or the camera-slide.” Trail Taylor, editor of the British Journal of Photography, said that “at no time during the preparation, exposure, or development of the pictures was Mr. Hudson within ten feet of the camera or darkroom. Appearances of an abnormal kind did certainly appear on several plates.”

Such testimonies as these from the lips of skilled and disinterested witnesses would naturally seem to raise spirit photography to the level of a genuine psychic phenomenon. But a careful analysis of the evidence, such as is given by Eleanor Sidgwick in her article “On Spirit Photographs . . .” in the Proceedings (no. 8, 1891) of the Society for Psychical Research shows how even a trained investigator can be deceived by sleight of hand. And it is notable that Beattie himself afterward pointed out instances of double exposure in Hudson’s productions.

In spite of this, Hudson continued to practice, and various Spiritualist magazines continued to lend him their support, with the notable exception of the Spiritualist, whose editor, himself a practical photographer, had aided John Beattie in denouncing spirit photography. Another enthusiastic Spiritualist, Enmore Jones, who at first claimed to recognize a dead daughter in one of the pictured “spirits,” afterward admitted that he had been mistaken.

Those who had pinned their faith to the genuineness of the photographic manifestations were naturally unwilling to relinquish their belief in what they considered sure proof of the reality of the spirit world, and ingenious explanations were offered to cover the circumstance of the apparent double exposures. The spirit aura, they said, differed from the natural atmosphere in its refracting power, and it was not to be wondered at that objects were sometimes duplicated. And so Hudson retained his fraud of which he was innocent.

In 1874 the Paris photographer Édouard Buguet crossed over to London and commenced the practice of spirit photography. Many of the purported spirits in his pictures were recognized by his clients, and even when he had been tried by the French government and had admitted deception there were those who refused to regard his confession as spontaneous, inclining to believe that he had been bribed by “Jesusis” to confess to fraud of which he was innocent.

Other spirit photographers were F. M. Parkes, a contemporary of Hudson, and Richard Bournell, who produced spirit pictures in London in later years.

The principal evidence in favor of spirit photography is undoubtedly the recognition of the spirits by their friends and relatives, but the unreliable nature of such a test has been seen time and again when a single “spirit” has been claimed by several persons as a near relative.

One of the most prominent defenders of the mediumistic photographers was W. Stainton Moses (who wrote under the pseudonym M. A. Oxon), who saw in them the best proof of the reality of Spiritualism. The same view was shared by Alfred Russel Wallace, who said (Arena, January 1891), “It is that which furnishes, perhaps, the most unassailable demonstration it is possible to obtain of the objective reality of spiritual forms.”

Throughout the 1920s and 1930s the whole idea of spirit photography was called into question by psychical researchers. In 1935 Fred Barlow and W. Rampling Rose presented the results of their research to the Society for Psychical Research and indicated that they had been unable to locate any spirit photographs not produced fraudulently. Their opinion has remained the consensus opinion of parapsychologists in the decades since. No set of photographs have been offered in recent decades for serious consideration as genuine spirit images.

“Spirits” are not the only paranormal effects claimed in psychic photography. Many photographs have been produced that allegedly show “spirit writing,” some on photographic plates not exposed in a camera (see Skotograph). In modern times, Ted Serios of Chicago has produced what appear to be “thought pictures” of distant scenes on Polaroid film. The Japanese investigator Tomobichi Fukurai used the term thoughtography to denote “paranormal” images on photographic materials.

Sources:

Spirit Teachings

“Spirit Teachings” (by “M. A. Oxon”)

The famous book written by W. Stanton Moses that records the teachings of the “Imperator” group of spirit controls.

The Spirit World (Periodical)

The first Spiritualist periodical in England, published by W. R. Hayden in May 1853. However, only one issue appeared. The title had earlier been used by La Roy Sunderland, who changed the name of his American periodical The Spiritual Philosophy to The Spirit World in 1851.

SpiritQuest

SpiritQuest is an educational program designed to introduce people to the spiritual experiences of Peruvian shamans and curanderos (healers) who live in the upper Amazonian area of Peru near the city of Iquitos. A defining part of the SpiritQuest experience is the opportunity to work with shamans who use the consciousness expanding substances in ayahuasca, a hallucinogenic substance made from the vine of the plant Banisteriopsis Caapi, which is boiled in water along with various other plants. These plants contain different substances identified as psilocybin.

The SpiritQuest program was put together by a brother/sister team, Howard E. Lawler and Sanchi Reta Lawler. Howard is a former museum curator trained in biology. Reta is a transpersonal psychologist and student of Zen. Both have many years of association which shamans in both South America and Asia. The pair also heads El Tigre Journeys, a tourist company that facilitates travel to Peru and arranges for small groups to enter into the culture, meet the indigenous religious leaders, and see the sights in a way that is sensitive to the ecology of the region. Founded in 1997, El Tigre has been designed to help enhance and restore the natural resources of eastern Peru through various programs financially supported by tourism. Howard Lawler also heads a nonprofit organization, the International BioPark Foundation, as an environmental organization dedicated to preserving the natural world and promoting an understanding of humanity’s interdependent relationship with the natural order. The foundation is working with El Tigre on a number of projects including the development of a living Museum of Western Amazonia along the banks of the Rio Momon outside Iquitos.

The SpiritQuest program is focused upon small groups (limited to eight people) who travel to Peru and participate in shamanic workshop retreats. The participants have in the Lawlers experienced guides, but are assured of experiencing shamanic initiations, including ceremonies with ayahuasca, much as they have been performed prior to the arrival of Europeans in the area. The Lawlers facilitate the preparation for the journey and are present to assist people through the cleansing, cathartic, and spiritually expansive moments that may go through, some of which may be temporarily uncomfortable.

SpiritQuest (and the associated organization may be contacted through the Lawlers offices: Reta Lawler, P.O. Box 1704, Boulder, CO 80306-1704 and Howard Lawler, Calle Loreto #337, Iquitos, Peru) also offers the different substances identified as psychedelics.

Sources:

Spiritual Advisory Council (SAC)

A New Age organization. The Spiritual Advisory Council (SAC) was founded in 1974 in Chicago by Paul V. Johnson and Paul Ericsson, both former national leaders in the Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship). The council operated a New Age perspective and built an open fellowship of like-minded people who gathered regularly for national and regional conferences and in small study groups. In 1979 Johnson relocated to Florida and opened the New Age Centre for Alternative Realities in Orlando. Also in 1979, some people who had found their primary spiritual home within the council organized the Church of the Spiritual Advisory Council and saw the first ministers of the new church ordained.

SAC has no creed or dogma but generally operates within a New Age perspective. Channeling, both for spiritual contact with the other world and for healing energies, is accepted. SAC publishes the Outreach Newsletter. Address: 2953 W. State Rd. 434, Longwood, FL 32279.

The Spiritual Age (Periodical)

Early American periodical serving the cause of Spiritualism.

Spiritual Athenaenum

Briefly the headquarters of British Spiritualists in London in 1866. The post of residential secretary was offered to B. B. Home. The real intent behind the foundation’s offer was to help Home, who was at the time struggling with financial difficulties. When, owing to a change of fortune, Home resigned his post, the institution died a natural death. John Elliotson was among those who sat on the council.

Spiritual Churches

The spiritual church movement developed in the early twentieth century among African Americans who had responded to Spiritualism and its championing of the cause of universal brotherhood. In spite of its rhetoric, however, too often Spiritualists practiced the same racism so evident in non-Spiritualist circles. By World War I, black leaders began to form their own separate churches, some of which grew into substantial denominations. Among the first to emerge was Leafy Anderson (1887–1927), who in 1913 founded the Eternal Life Christian Spiritualist Association. She moved to New Orleans in 1920, by which time her association had more than ten congregations, and founded a congregation, the first of many spiritual churches in what would become one of the most important centers of the spiritual movement.

Through the 1920s a number of new spiritual churches emerged, beginning in 1922 when the black members of the National Spiritualist Association of Churches were pushed out and formed the national Colored Spiritualist Association of Churches. The next year, in Detroit, Willie Harley founded the Universal Hagar’s Spiritual Church, and in 1925 William Frank Taylor and Leviticus L. Boswell founded the Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ in Kansas City. Also founded in the mid-1920s was the Church of God in David (later the Spiritual Israel Church and Its Army).

The spiritual movement is quite diverse. It mixes Protestantism, Spiritualism, and various elements of popular folk religions. Individual congregations and denominations use different blends of these elements. Leafy Anderson represented the more conservative wing of the movement: she used the Bible and denounced the voodoo and popular magic she found among potential members. One the other hand, her student, Mother Catherine Seals, freely incorporated elements of "hoodoo,'" the popular folk magic of the Southern black community, into her church’s rituals.

George Willie Hurley incorporated Masonic elements in the mystery school that became a part of every congregation in his Universal Hagar’s Spiritual Church. He also followed Father Divine’s example and proclaimed himself God. As Jesus was the God of the Pecan Age, so he was the God of the coming Aquarian Age. Hurley was also a pioneer black nationalist and incorporated Ethiopianism into his teachings, identifying black Americans with their African heritage, especially with the land of Emperor Haile Selassie.

The spiritual movement has experienced upheavals as new leaders have appeared on the scene. For example, in 1942, the Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ merged with the Divine Spiritual Churches of the Southwest, making it by far the largest spiritual denomination in the country. Shortly thereafter William Taylor died, and Thomas Watson, formerly the head of the Divine Spiritual Church of the Southwest, was elected to succeed him. However, by that time Clarence Cobbs had arisen as a charismatic leader of a church in Chicago and believed that the church was his to inherit. As a result of the struggle for control between Watson and Cobbs, the church split, with Cobbs inheriting the larger group.

During the last half of the twentieth century, spiritual churches have experienced ups and downs. Both Spiritualist and spiritual churches are more susceptible than most to volatile swings in support for prominent leaders who rise and pass from the scene. While several large denominations remain, many of the young talented mediums have formed independent churches or passed into the New Age movement.

Sources:

Spiritual India and Kundalini (Magazine)
Former quarterly journal published in India of international spiritual and scientific consideration in the study of kundalini, the energy believed to reside in human beings related to sexual activity and higher consciousness. The journal is published by the Kundalini Research and Publication Trust, New Delhi. This journal centers around the experience and theories of Hindu teacher Pandit Gopi Krishna (1903–1984), an advocate of kundalini who has built a following in the West.

Spiritual Institution
Established by pioneer British Spiritualist James Burns at 15 Southampton Row, London, in conjunction with a library dealing with books on Spiritualism and a lending library of several thousand volumes on Spiritualism, psychic phenomena, and related subjects, with a reading room and rooms for séances or experiments connected with Spiritualism.

The organization became a center for Spiritualism in London, providing a regular program of circles, séances, concerts, and other social events; it was an influential meeting place for Spiritualists. The organization has been disbanded.

Spiritualism
A social religious movement founded in the mid-nineteenth century in New York State. According to the definition adopted by the National Spiritualist Association of Churches, Spiritualism is

The Science, Philosophy and Religion of continuous life, based upon the demonstrated fact of communication, by means of mediumship, with those who live in the Spirit World. Spiritualism is a science because it investigates, analyses and classifies facts and manifestations, demonstrated from the spirit side of life. Spiritualism is a philosophy because it studies the laws of nature both on the seen and unseen sides of life and bases its conclusions upon present observed facts. It accepts statements of observed facts of past ages and conclusions drawn therefrom, when sustained by reason and by results of observed facts of the present day. Spiritualism is a religion because it strives to understand and to comply with the Physical, Mental and Spiritual Laws of Nature[,] which are the laws of God.

According to the British medium W. Stainton Moses, a Spiritualist is "one who has proven for himself, or has accepted on adequate evidence, the fact that death does not kill the spirit.” Spiritualism centers upon two basic teachings: the continuity of personality after the transition of death, and the possibility of communication between those living on Earth and those who have made the transition to death. Spiritualism teaches that death is a new birth into a spiritual body, the counterpart of the physical, which is gifted with new powers. Spiritualists claim that their beliefs are based upon scientific proof and communication with the surviving personalities of deceased human beings by means of mediumship.

After death, the individual faces neither punishment nor rewards. Individuality, character, and memory survive and undergo no change. Continued progression in the new life rests upon individual fitness. The rapidity of progress is in proportion to the mental and moral faculties acquired in Earth life. Every spirit is left to discover the truth for itself. Evil passions or a sinful life may chain a spirit to the Earth, but the road of endless progress opens up for these as soon as they discover the light. Higher and higher spiritual spheres correspond to the state of progress. The gradation is apparently endless. Communication with higher intelligences appears to be available, but the spirits report no particular communion with the deity.
Origins of Spiritualism

Spiritualism in its modern form dates back no further than 1848 and the Fox sisters. Its practices can be traced to attempts at spirit communication reaching back to ancient times. Such attempts at communication with both the surviving consciousness of the dead and various orders of spiritual beings, both angelic and demonic, appear in the oldest extant records of cultures worldwide. It has only been in the last few centuries that strong doubts about the possibility of life after death and communication with a spiritual world have arisen.

Spiritualism emerged as a direct counter to such post-Enlightenment doubts, which by the nineteenth century had become the subject of popular debate and literature. In his 1993 book, Madame Blavatsky's Baboon, writer Peter Washington noted that the true momentum for the movement was given full vent in America; but, in fact, its roots sprouted up from people and places all over the world. Washington noted that it seemed to have found a particular following in America for certain reasons. He also said that,

The seance offers a new version of holy communion, in which faith is replaced by evidence, blood and wine by manifested spirits. It was therefore especially popular among the Protestant sects to the east coast of the United States, deprived as they usually were of any sensuous fullfillment in their religion and susceptible to any sign of the workings of divine grace, however bizarre. It is no coincidence that Hydesville is in the middle of the notorious 'burned-over' district of New York State, so called because of the extraordinary number of religious fashions that swept through it in the early nineteenth century. Spiritualism blends easily with millenarian Christianity: though most of its messages were trivial, the expectation remained that these were merely a prelude to news of real import from the Other World. Having confirmed its own existence through the Fox girls, that world was now expected to come through with the facts about life after death, immortality, and even the future of mankind.

As Spiritualism formed, it looked to a number of individual occurrences of Spiritualist phenomena and previous movements to show its continuity with the past. For example, many famous outbreaks of an "epidemic" nature, such as that among the Tremblers of the Cevennes and the Convulsionaries of St. Médard, which to the beholders showed clear indications of demonic possession, had in their symptoms considerable analogy with modern Spiritualism. They were accompanied by spontaneous trance or ecstasy, lengthy discourses, and speaking in tongues, all of which are phenomena to be found in the seance room.

The fluency of speech noted in such outbreaks, especially of persons lacking any formal education, has been equaled, if not surpassed, by the outpourings of the unlearned medium under the influence of a "control." In such historical cases, the conditions were generally ascribed to either angelic or demonic possession, and most frequently to the latter. Witches were supposed to converse with the Devil, and many aspects of witchcraft, notably the part played by persecuted young women and children, show a relationship to poltergeist disturbances. These were the connecting link between early forms of possession and modern Spiritualism. Cases in which children of morbid tendencies pretended to be the victims of a witch are to be found in many records of witchcraft.

However much it seemed otherwise, still it was the poltergeist who showed affinity to the "control" of the mediumistic circle. For at its continuity with the past, and in its growth, the poltergeist disturbances have occurred from time to time. The mischievous spirit's favorite modes of manifesting itself have been similar to those adopted by spirit controls. Both poltergeists and spirit controls require a "medium," an agent for the production of their phenomena. It is in the immediate presence of the medium that the phenomena generally make their appearance. Both also tend to display personality, even if of an infantile nature in the case of poltergeists. Intelligent communication has often been reported to have occurred by means of taps in phenomena attributed to poltergeists.

A related manifestation also believed to be caused by spirits occurred in the practice of animal magnetism, which was said to have originated with the alchemist Paracelsus, in favor with the old alchemists. An actual magnet was rarely used, but was regarded as a symbol of the magnetic philosophy. This belief rested on the idea of a force or fluid radiating from the heavenly bodies, human beings, and, indeed, from every substance, animate or inanimate, by means of which all things act upon one another.

While Paracelsus's students were engaged in formulating a magnetic philosophy, there were others. They included the seventeenth-century healer Valentine Greatrakes, who cured diseases. He claimed such magnetic power as a divine gift and did not connect it with the ideas of the alchemists. According to Spiritualist thought, these two phases of "magnetism" united and climaxed in the work of Franz Anton Mesmer, who published De planetarium influxu, in 1776, a treatise on the influence of the planets on the human body. His ideas were essentially those of the magnetic philosophers. His cures equaled those of Greatrakes, but he infused new life into both theory and practice and won for himself the recognition, if not of the learned societies, at least of the general public. He laid the groundwork for the discovery of the induced hypnotic trance.

This has considerable significance in Spiritualism. In 1874 a commission was appointed by the French government to consider magnetism as practiced by Mesmer and his followers. Unfortunately, its report only served to cast discredit on the practice and exclude it from scientific discussion. A detailed account of the trance utterances of a hypnotic subject was given in 1878 in the journals of the Swedish Exegetical and Philanthropic Society. Members of the society inclined to the doctrines of their countryman Emanuel Swedenborg, who was the first to identify the “spirits” as the souls of the deceased.

Until the third decade of the nineteenth century, the explanations of mesmerism concerned themselves almost entirely with a fluid or force emanating from the mesmerist—and even visible to the eye of a clairvoyant. In 1823, however, Alexandre Bertrand, a Parisian physician, published his Traité du Somnambulisme. In 1829 he published the treatise Du Magnetisme Animal en France, in which he set forth a relationship between ordinary sleepwalking, somnambulism, and associated with disorder—demonic ecstasy and advanced the doctrine, now generally accepted, of suggestion.

Animal magnetism was by this time receiving a good deal of attention all over Europe. A second French commission appointed in 1825 presented its report in 1831, which, although of no great value, contained a unanimous testimony as to the authenticity of the phenomena. In Germany magnetism was also practiced to a considerable extent, but rationalist explanations of the associated phenomena found some acceptance. There was a class, however, more numerous in Germany than elsewhere, who inclined toward a Spiritualist explanation of mesmeric phenomena. Indeed, the belief in spirit communication had grown up beside magnetism from its conception, in opposition to the theory of a magnetic fluid.

In the earlier phases of "miraculous" healing, the cures were ascribed to the divine gift of the person conducting the session or the operator, who expelled the evil spirits from the patient. In epidemic cases in religious communities, as well as in individual instances, the spirits were questioned both on personal matters and on abstract theological questions.

In Germany Justinus Kerner experimented with Frederica Hauffe, "the Seeress of Prevorst," in whose presence physical manifestations took place and who described the condition of the soul after death and the constitution of man—the physical body, the soul, the spirit, and the nervengest, an ethereal body that clothes the soul after death—theses afterward elaborated.
by Spiritualists. Other German investigators, such as J. H. Jung (Jung-Stilling), C. Römer, and Heinrich Werner, recorded the phenomenon of clairvoyance in their somnambules. In 1845 Baron Karl von Reichenbach published research he claimed demonstrated the existence of an emanation, which he called od or odyllic force, radiating from every substance. This influence allegedly could be seen by clairvoyants and had definite color and produced a sensation of heat or cold.

Animal magnetism received little attention in England until the third decade of the nineteenth century. In 1828, Richard Chevinnix, an Irishman, gave mesmeric demonstrations. John Elliotson united mesmerism with the O’Key sisters, who were somnambules, and although he first believed in the magnetic fluid, he afterward became a Spiritualist. In 1843 two journals dealing with the measure they deny the existence of devils, final judgment, and the vicarious atonement. Christ was a great teacher like measure they deny the existence of devils, a final judgment. Not surprisingly, much of the movement’s motivation was less flattering than that gleaned from mediums speaking in their somnambules. In 1845 the O’Key sisters, who were somnambules, conducted in a highly rarified atmosphere. At length it reaches the sphere of pure spirit.

Spiritualism as a Religious Movement

In responding to the challenge of Enlightenment thinking, Spiritualism became the first of the new “scientific” religions. Adherents talked little of faith. Rather, they asserted that they could prove Spiritualism’s central doctrine of survival of death through facts, instead of relying on traditions and the revelations of ancient times. They saw Spiritualism as a progressive and evolutionary faith reconciling religion with contemporary science. “Spiritualism,” wrote Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, “is a religion for those who find themselves outside all religions; while contrary it greatly strengthens the faith of those who already possess religious beliefs.”

Not long after Spiritualism swept America, it began to take over Europe. According to Washington, “In the wake of failing political revolutions in 1848—the very year of the Hydesville phenomenon—it rapidly became part of an ‘alternative’ synthesis which included vegetarianism, feminism, dress reform, homoeopathy and every variety of social and religious dissent.”

He noted that when Harriet Beecher Stowe, famed American abolitionist, visited Europe in 1853, the seance was “all the rage.”

Early Spiritualists also believed their religion restored primordial spirituality, pointing to inscriptions in the Roman catacombs in which the early Christians spoke of the dead as though they were still living. According to Saint Augustine, in De Cura pro Mortuis, “The spirits of the dead can be sent to the living and can unveil to them the future which they themselves have learned from other spirits or from angels, or by divine revelation.” Not surprisingly, much of the movement’s motivation still rested in anti-Catholicism—not so different from the antagonism many Protestant sects harbored without Spiritualism. Spiritualists do not believe in an afterlife of unchangeable bliss or eternal damnation. In their perspective, there is no hell with brimstone and flames of fire as some Christians teach. In like manner, they deny the existence of devils, a final judgment, and the vicarious atonement. Christ was a great teacher who descended to set an example. “It is our task to do for Christianity what Jesus did for Judaism,” said a message reported from Moses from the spirits who allegedly spoke through his automatic writing. Spiritualists also deny the resurrection of the physical body, as did the hierarchies, a sect that flourished in the fourth century: they maintain that it is the soul alone that resurrected.

Spiritualism admits all the truths of morality and religion of all other sects. The moral stance is illustrated in the role of mediums. Spiritualists tend to maintain that those mediums who hold seances and become the direct mouthpieces of the spirits are only supereminently endowed with a faculty common to all humanity—that all men and woman are mediums to some degree, and that all inspiration, whether good or bad, comes from the spirits.

It is in connection with this idea of the universality of mankind that the effect of Spiritualism on the morals and daily life of its adherents is most clearly seen. The spirits are naturally attracted to those mediums whose qualities resemble their own. Enlightened spirits from the highest spheres seek “high-souled” and earnest mediums through which to express themselves. Mediums who use their divine gifts for ignoble ends are sought by the lowest and wickedest human spirits, or by elements, who do not even reach the human standard of goodness. Indeed, it is claimed that the lower spirits communicate with the living much more readily than do the higher, by reason of a certain gross or material quality that binds them to Earth. As with the full-fledged medium, so with the normal individual; if one is to ensure that the source of inspiration be a high one, one must live in such a way that only the best spirits will control.

In the United States, Spiritualists embraced many socialist ideals, and many resided in the socialist communities of the nineteenth century. The loose, nondogmatic approach also allowed some Spiritualists to embrace a variety of different ideals, such as free love. In England, where habit and tradition were more settled, Spiritualists emphasized its compatibility with Christianity and projected an image of affording a fuller revelation of the Christian religion. In France, Allan Kardec’s doctrine of reincarnation blended with the doctrines of Spiritualism to produce Spiritism, a form of Spiritualism highly alienated from Christianity.

These varied forms of Spiritualism are held together by two central beliefs: that the soul continues after “the great dissolution” (death of the body) and continually progresses and that the freed spirit can communicate with living human beings. The continuity of life after death is, of course, one of Spiritualism’s most important tenets. It is not a distinctive one, since most of the world’s creeds and religions also affirm such a belief. But Spiritualist ideas concerning the nature of the life of the freed soul are unique. Spiritualists believe that the soul, or spirit, is composed of a sort of attenuated matter inhabiting the body and resembling it in form. On the death of the body the soul withdraws itself, without undergoing any direct change, and for a period remains on the “Earth plane.” But the keynote of the spirit world is progress, so after a time the spirit proceeds to the lowest “disembodied plane” from which they go on to higher and higher planes, gradually evolving into a purer and nobler type. At length it reaches the sphere of pure spirit.

From the comments of mediums speaking in trance, a picture of the spirit domain has been constructed by Spiritualists. It is thought to be a somewhat attenuated version of earthly life, conducted in a highly rarified atmosphere. Automatic drawings, purporting to depict spirit scenes, afford a description no less flattering than that gleaned from mediums speaking in trance, although many such drawings appear imaginative rather than factual. From their exalted spheres the spirits are said to be cognizant of the doings of their fellow individuals still on Earth.

The other central belief of Spiritualism is that the spirits communicate with the living—primarily through the agency of mediums—offering their aid and counsel. They can produce in the physical world certain phenomena that challenge the laws of nature. Most Spiritualists, in seeking proof of the reality of the creed, have been content with what is described as “subjective” phenomena, including such as trance speaking, automatic writing, clairvoyance.

Spiritualism was enlivened by more or less sensational physical manifestations through an entire period of its history. These found great favor among both believers and psychical researchers. Their success seemed to promise irrefutable proof of the extraordinary nature of Spiritualist phenomena, and they were relatively easy to investigate. They were so intimately connected with fraud unfortunately, that any hope for verifying the phenomena disappeared in the first half of the twentieth century. Manifestation of phenomena therefore occupies a central place in Spiritualism, and the question of the genuineness of claimed phenomena remains of great importance. It is true, of course, that paranormal phenomena are also central to the development of other great religions that have claimed miracles in support of doctrine. Spiritualists point to the Judaic-Christian Holy Bible as a book full of accounts of "miraculous" phenomena not essentially different from those demonstrated by modern mediums and trance addresses, paranormal healing, apparitions, and prophecetic statements. The primary difference is that traditional religions assume a perspective of awe in the presence of the occasional miraculous event, whereas Spiritualists view such events as constant aspects of a mundane world.

The Literature of Spiritualism
There is vast literature on Spiritualism. Many important works from the nineteenth century are long out of print. This literature ranges from muckracker communications of varied value, including spirit revelations from automatic writing, trance sermons, and séances, to personal experiences of investigators and theories of psychical researchers, to histories of Spiritualism and attacks on it.

Books that chart the transition from mesmerism and animal magnetism to Spiritualism are valuable for the information and opinions of the time. Emma Hardinge Britten's Nineteenth-Century Miracles (1884) and Modern American Spiritualism (1869) are full of detailed, hard-to-find information on the events of the period but are written from the viewpoint of a firm believer and are sometimes marred by inaccurate quotations. Alphonse Cahagnet's The Celestial Telegraph (2 vols., 1851) and Robert Hare's Experimental Investigation of the Spirit Manifestations (1856) are also of special period interest. Other popular works of this kind are Estelle Roberts' Fifty Years a Medium (1890) and Doris Stokes' Voices From Beyond and My Ear (1890).

Various histories of Spiritualism are available, but there is no single satisfactory work. It is advisable to study different histories, bearing in mind the commitment of their writers. Cesar de Vescou.lt's History of Experimental Spiritualism (2 vols., 1893) is a comprehensive survey of Spiritualist type phenomena in many countries from primitive times on. William Howitt's The History of the Supersensual (1865) is useful, if simplistic, in tracing the antecedents of Spiritualism in past ages. E. W. Capron's Modern Spiritualism: Its Facts and Fanaticism, Its Consistencies and Contradictions (1855) has special interest as an account of the movement in its early years.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's History of Spiritualism (2 vols., 1926) is an important review of the background and history of the movement, but non-critical in its presentation. Frank Podmore's Modern Spiritualism (2 vols., 1902) is a skeptical review, valuable for its detailed information of early mediumship. J. Arthur Hill's Spiritualism: Its History, Phenomena and Doctrine (1918) is useful but fragmentary. A. Campbell Holms's The Facts of Psychic Science and Philosophy (1925) is a useful tabulation of the phenomena of Spiritualism but non-critical in treatment. In the decades since Spiritualism celebrated its centennial in 1918, a variety of scholars, primarily sociologists and historians, have taken a look at the movement and provided valuable additions to the literature. Foremost is J. Stillson Judah's The History and Philosophy of the Metaphysical Movements in America (1967), which discusses Spiritualism in the larger context of the movement, from the doctrines of Emanuel Swedenborg to Spiritualism and then to Theosophy. An excellent modern survey of nineteenth-century Spiritualism in the United States is provided in Slater Brown's The Heyday of Spiritualism (1970); and British Spiritualism is covered in Geoffrey K. Nelson's Spiritualism and Society (1969). Hans Bear supplies a most valuable discussion of the very neglected spiritual churches, the movement of Spiritualism in the African American community. Lamar Keene, a former Spiritualist, documents the continuance of fake materialization séances in some Spiritualist churches. Keene's volume joins a long list of older but still valuable literature, such as John W. Truesdell's The Bottom Facts Concerning the Science of Spiritualism (1884); Julien J. Prokauer's Spook Crooks! Exposing the Secrets of the Prophet-ers Who Conduct Our Wickedest Industry (1952); Harry Houdini's A Magician Among the Spirits (1944); and the anonymous Revelations of a Spirit Medium (1891; reissued by Harry Price and Eric J. Dingwall).

Sources:

Proskauer, Julien J. Spook Crooks! Exposing the Secrets of the Mystics, Mediums, and Misfits Who Brought Spiritualism to America. New York: Schocken

Spiritualism—France

Spiritualism—France

Animal magnetism, the phenomenon so important and central to Spiritualism, manifested itself in France at a comparatively early period in the movement. From correspondence between J. P. F. Deleuze and G. P. Billot from the year 1829, it appears that phantom forms and the phenomenon of apports were well known in this early age. Deleuze more frankly admitted that his experience was more limited.

Almost the full range of the phenomena of Spiritualism are found in Baron Du Potet's Journal du Magnetisme, which records his investigations between 1836 and 1848. His magnetized subjects excelled in clairvoyance, trance speaking, healing, dermography, levitation, fire immunity, telekinesis, apports, xenoglossis, prophecy, crystal gazing, materializations, and descriptions of scenes in the spirit world.

The best early séance records come from Louis-Alphonse Cabanet, the author of Avances de la vie future devolues (1848–54), translated as The Celestial Telegram (1850). He received many evidential communications from departed spirits through his somnambule, Adèle Magdelaine.

Table turning was introduced into France by Baron Ludwig von Goldenstubble and the Compte d'Ourches in 1850 and became an epidemic, as in England. Soon other phenomena followed. The famous direct scripts of Goldenstubble were obtained in 1856.

In that same year Allan Kardec's book Le Livre des Esprits was published, and developments took a radically different route from that in the United States and England. Kardec founded a school of thought called Spiritism that was dominant by the idea of a series of compulsory reincarnations. This was the opposing school to Spiritualism, which followed the American and English ideas. Spiritism was represented in France by Z. J. Piaire and La Revue Spiritualiste, founded in 1858; Spiritism was championed by Kardec's La Revue Spirtiste, founded in the same year.

Kardec's school eventually prevailed. Piaire, after years of bitter controversy, retired to the country. By 1864 there were ten periodicals published in France: three in Paris, the two already mentioned and L'Avenir; four in Bordeaux, which, in 1865, were merged into L'Union Spirtite Bordelaise; La Médium Evangelique, of Toulouse; L'Echo d'Outre Tombe, of Marseilles; and La Vériité de Lyons. With the exception of La Revue Spiritualiste all represented the school of Kardec.

Kardec and his followers discouraged physical phenomena. Because of that the stimulus for experimental investigators was largely provided by the visits of D. D. Home, the Davenport brothers, Henry Slade, William Eglinton, Frank Herne, Charles Williams, Elizabeth d'Esperance, Florence Cook, Lottie Fowler, and other famous mediums.

Joseph Maxwell, Camille Flammarion, Eugene Rochas, Paul Joire, Charles Richet, Emile Boirac, Gustav Geley, and Eugen Osty represented psychological research. Gabriel Delanne founded the Revue scientifique et morale du spiritisme. The first attempt at organized psychical research was La Societe de Psychologie Physiologique and its journal, La Revue des Sciences Psychiques.

In 1890 the Annuales des Sciences Psychiques was founded. It was replaced in 1920 by La Revue Métapsychique, the official organ
Psychical Research

Modern psychical research is best represented by Baron von Schrenck-Notzing. His book on the materialization phenomena of Eva C., Materialisation-Phenomena (Phenomena of Materialization, 1914), aroused heated scientific controversy. With this work and also the investigation of the mediumship of Willi Schneider, he convinced a hundred well-known scientists of the reality of telekinesis phenomena and of the existence of the elusive substance called ectoplasm. Other important thinkers and researchers included Hans Driesch, Konstantin Oesterreich, and Rudolf Tischner.

Crucial to the history of post-World War I Germany, were the movements of Rudolf Steiner, founder of the Anthroposophical Society, and whose philosophy continues to be known today in the United States for the background of the Waldorf Schools. When Steiner left the Theosophists, deeming it impossible to create a spiritual science based in Eastern mysticism, he inadvertently became a favorite of Hitler's Reich. Even while living in Switzerland during World War II and attempting to maintain neutrality, his Anthroposophy became identified with German war aims. His first evolution might have led the Nazis to believe he was on their side. As Peter Washington noted, in his 1993 book, Madame Blavatsky's Baboon, "At first, Steiner shared a common view that something pure and noble might arise out of the conflict between nations; but as the apparently unstoppable carnage became ever more horrifying he modified his instinctive nationalism in favour of a broader perspective. After the war he was ready to support the League of Nations." Yet all through the rise of the Aryan model for purity and perfection, even some of the artistic renderings associated with many of the Christian-based spiritual movements, portrayed Christ, for example, as being more Aryan in features than Jewish. Steiner and his group, Washington commented, were too willing to make Jesus an honorary German, denying his Semitic origins completely, and thus lending credence to the mounting racial tensions.

Since World War II, there has been considerable German activity in the field of parapsychological research with the Lehrstuhl für Psychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie at Freiburg University and the independent Institut für Grenzgebiete der Psychologie und Psycholygiene, directed by Hans Bender. A new direction to Spiritualist beliefs in survival was stimulated by the experiments in electronic voice phenomena (Raudive voices) of Friedrich Jürgenson, who cooperated with the Freiburg Institute.

Despite many efforts, Germany's pursuit of paranormal studies and parapsychology remained rather bleak at the turn of the twenty-first century. Individual research under such people as Gerd H. Hoelvelmann, Eberhard Bauer, Walter von Luckadou, Klaus Kornwachs, Ulrich Timm, and Hans D. Betz, while remarkable, has not served to form a collective movement for research. All but one effort to form parapsychological associations failed. The research center, Institut für Grenzgebiete der Psychologie und Psycholygiene, (Institute for Border Areas of Psychology and Mental Hygiene) and the organization, Wissenschaftliche Gesellschaft zur Forderung der Parapsychologie, (Scientific Society for the Advancement of Parapsychology) are the only two avenues for study currently in Germany.

Sources:

Spiritualism—Germany

In Germany Spiritualism developed very slowly, despite a rather early history of scattered individuals who conducted paranormal investigations back in the 1830s, most notably Justus Kerner. Philosopher I. H. von Fichte believed in Spiritualism; Gustav Fechner, the founder of psychophysiology, admitted belief in personal immortality; and Edward von Hartmann, author of The Philosophy of the Unconscious (1869), desired to give Spiritualist phenomena a definite place in philosophy. Pre-C. P. Seligman, author of The Philosophy of Mysticism (2 vols., 1889) delved into the subconscious for explanation and founded the first Spiritualist monthly, The Sphinx.

Most of the Spiritualist activity was the work of a foreigner, Alexander Aksakof, imperial councilor of Russia, who, owing to Russian censorship, concentrated his work in Germany. In 1874 he began publishing Psychische Studien, which continued for many years. Its title was changed in 1920 to Zeitschrift für Parapsychologie, Spiritualistische Blatter was started in 1883.

A great impetus was given to Spiritualism by the visit of the well-known medium Henry Slade in 1877. The conversion of Johann C. E. Zollner caused a sensation and was the subject of strong language on the part of other scientists. The visits of such mediums as William Eglington, Elizabeth d'Esperance, Annie Fairlamb, and others kept the interest alive.

of the Institut Métapsychique. In 1904 the Institut Général Psychologique was established in Paris.

The real benefactor of Spiritism and psychical research arrived during the war in the person of Jean Meyer, a rich industrialist. He founded La Maison des Spirits for spiritistic propaganda and the Institut Métapsychique for psychical research. In 1918 the institute was recognized as a public utility. Meyer endowed it with a portion of his fortune. The work it has carried on in experimentation and in demonstration of supernatural phenomena before invited scientists has been of great importance for psychical research in France.

In 1987, due to the general dissatisfaction with the nature of the research there, the Organisation pour la Recherche en Psychotronique was established. Such research has had a difficult time in France due to the university system's refusal of official work done there at the end of the twentieth century was done "underground." Prof. Remy Chauvin has been one such researcher forced to take his work out of the mainstream due to the overly critical educational establishment.
Spiritualism—Great Britain

Spiritualism was introduced from the United States to England within a few years of its emergence in New York. The transition from mesmerism into Spiritualism was effected in Britain under the impetus of visiting American mediums, the first being Maria B. Hayden, who arrived in 1852. Her way had been prepared by the publication the previous year of William Gregory’s book Animal Magnetism, which contains records of supernatural occurrences, and by the accounts published from time to time in the mesmerist journal Zoit.

Table turning soon became epidemic in Britain, and society invitations, it is said, were extended to five o’clock tea and table turning. An early controversy arose when prominent scientist Michael Faraday suggested that the table movements were caused by unconscious muscular action. Another theory suggested they resulted from “unconscious cerebration.”

Hayden herself was treated with derision by the press and returned to the United States in 1855. Yet, besides acting as forerunner for the great medium D. D. Home, she registered important conquests: Robert Owen, the veteran socialist; Robert Chambers, the publisher; and Agustus de Morgan, the famous mathematician. Sir Charles Isham and John Ashburner mostly owed their conversion to a belief in survival and communication with the dead to her limited powers. One Mrs. Roberts, a second American medium, and later Pascall B. Randolph and J. R. M. Squire left comparatively slight impressions.

Without Home, Spiritualism in England would probably have made but little further headway. He was received in the highest society and was visited by famous people of the day. Some of them (including novelist William Thackeray, Anthony Trollope, Robert Bell, Bulwer Lytton, and Lord Brougham) were said to have been deeply impressed but kept quiet for fear of public ridicule. Some figured in press sensations when they vented their anger for having become associated with Spiritualism before the public (e.g., Sir David Brewster and Robert Browning). Others, including William Howitt; J. Garth Wilkinson; Lord Adare, the earl of Dunraven; the master of Lindsay, N. W. Senior; Cromwell Varley; and Alfred Russell Wallace, braved the scorn of the public.

Home first visited England in 1855 at age 23, having acted as a medium for some four years. He made an impression before returning to America in 1856. During Home’s tour in 1855, London solicitor John Rymer and his wife, gathered friends at their home in the suburb of Ealing to experience the medium’s gifts. Famed poet Elizabeth Barrett Browning, a devotee of the spiritualism movement, and her husband, Robert Browning, who disclaimed spiritualism, managed to receive an invitation to this exclusive gathering. In 1859 medium Thomas Lake Harris visited England. As early as 1854, the trance utterances of a medium named “Annie” were recorded by a circle of Swedesborgians presided over by Elihu Rich. The first British professional medium, Mary Marshall, began to offer séances, but less successfully than D. D. Home and his American colleagues. British Spiritualists, however, did not seek publicity, but practiced for the most part anonymously.

The phenomena at these séances resembled those in America—playing of instruments by unknown means, materialization of hands, table-turning, and so on, but on a less sensational scale. It was not so much these physical manifestations that inspired early British Spiritualists as it was automatic writing and automatic speaking. Although at first rare, it soon became a feature of séances.

In 1860 a new Spiritualist era commenced and the whole subject came into greater prominence. This enhanced attention was caused by an increase in the number of British mediums and the emigration to Britain of many American mediums, including the stage performers the Davenport brothers, who did not claim to be Spiritualists but were considered by many to be so.

Kate Fox of the original Fox Sisters who caused the whole movement to rise, married and settled in England as Mrs. Jencksen. It is said that her child became a writing medium. Thomas Lake Harris, Emma Hardinge Britten, and Cora L. V. Richmond were remembered for inspirational addresses; Charles H. Foster for rather dubious pellet-reading and skin-writing phenomena (see dermography); the Davenport Brothers for noisy telekinetic demonstrations; Lottie Fowler for trance communications and predictions; and Henry Slade for slate-writing demonstrations.

British mediums were rather slow to arise. Mary Marshall was, for a long time, the only professional medium. In October 1867 the journal Human Nature knew of only one more, W. Wallace. The number of private mediums, however, was considerable. Mrs. Thomas Everett was considered the most powerful. Edward Childs was also credited with strong powers.

William Howitt, William Wilkinson, and Mrs. Newton Crossland developed as automatists (see automatism). Agnes Nichols (later Agnes Guppy-Volckman) presented mysterious apport phenomena and the first materializations in England. The partners Frank Herne and Charles Williams produced impressive if suspect phenomena.

Frederick A. Hudson introduced spirit photography to London, and others followed in his footsteps. Marvelous things were reported to occur in the seances of Elizabeth stock, W. Stainton Moses, William Eglington, Annie Eva Fay, F. W. Monck, Mary Showers, Arthur Colman, Elizabeth d’Esperance, C. E. Wood, Annie Fairlamb, Cecil Husk, and David Duguid.

Organizational Efforts

Because British mediums were slow to arise, Spiritualism as a movement was delayed until comparatively late. The Charing Cross Spirit Circle was the first experimental organization. In July 1857 it was superseded by the London Spiritualistic Union, a year later renamed the London Spiritualist Union, and in 1865 the Association of Progressive Spiritualists in Great Britain was formed. The Spiritual Athenaeum of 1866 was a temporary institution, established mainly to offer D. D. Home a paid position. The first really representative body, the British National Association of Spiritualists, was not born until 1873. In 1882 it was renamed the Central Association of Spiritualists and in 1884 the London Spiritualist Alliance.

The tardiness in organization was also manifested in the field of Spiritualist periodicals. The Spirit World, published by W. R. Hayden during his wife’s visit in May 1853, was issued only once. Robert Owen’s The New Existence of Man Upon the Earth, published in 1854, was spiritual but not Spiritualist. In April 1855 the Yorkshire Spiritual Telegraph was established by D. W. Weatherhead in Keighley, the chief provincial center of British Spiritualism. In 1857 it was renamed the British Spiritual Telegraph but was discontinued the next year.

Toward the end of 1860 The Spiritual Magazine was founded by William Wilkinson and became the leading organ. It ran until 1875. Thomas Shorter and William Wilkinson were the editors for the greater part of its existence, and William Howitt was the chief contributor.

The Spiritual Times ran from 1864 to 1866. In 1867 James Burns founded Human Nature, a monthly that ran until 1877, and in 1869 he brought out a weekly, The Medium, which absorbed the provincial Daybreak, founded in 1867, and was continued under the title The Medium and Daybreak until 1895.
In 1869 W. H. Harrison’s paper The Spiritualist Newspaper entered the field. Under the later abbreviated title The Spiritualist, held its own until 1881. The Christian Spiritualist began its month-long run in 1871. The Pioneer of Progress lasted for ten months, appearing weekly from January 1874. In 1878 Spiritual Notes was founded and ran until 1881, the year in which Light appeared. Light is the oldest British Spiritualist journal. It was founded by Dawson Rogers and W. Stanton Moses. Later editors included E. W. Wallis and David Gow. It was the official organ of the London Spiritualist Alliance but is now published quarterly by the London Spiritualist Alliance. Light replaced The Spectrum in 1932 and now published at 2 Tavistock Chambers, Bloomsbury Way, London, WC1A ILY.

The Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research and the society’s Journal had their inception in 1882. The Two Worlds, the most important of surviving Spiritualist journals in Psychic News, founded by Maurice Barbanell in 1932 and now published at 2 Tavistock Chambers, Bloomsbury Way, London, WC1A ILY.

The Psychical Quarterly Magazine was started by the Two Worlds Publishing Company in October 1902. An English edition of Annales des Sciences Psychiques was published between 1905 and 1910 under the title Annals of Psychic Science. In addition to Light and Two Worlds, the most important of surviving Spiritualist journals in Psychic News, founded by Maurice Barbanell in 1932 and now published at 2 Tavistock Chambers, Bloomsbury Way, London, WC1A ILY.

The Rise of Psychical Research

Although Spiritualism arose in the United States, the effort to investigate it started in England. There was plenty to investigate. Mrs. De Morgan, Lord Adare, and Alfred Russel Wallace published the first important books. In 1869 the London Dialectical Society delegated a committee to investigate. After its favorable report, which brought the testimonies of many important people before the public, Sir William Crookes stepped to the fore and announced an investigation. His findings, which were published in 1871, and later in 1874, simply stupefied the contemporary savants.

E. W. Cox founded the Psychological Society of Great Britain in 1875; the British National Association of Spiritualists appointed a research committee in 1878; and the Society for Psychical Research (SPR) was founded in 1879.

The development of Spiritualism in Britain has been closely associated with the work of the SPR, but it has often been an uneasy relationship. Indeed, many early Spiritualists claimed that the society’s initials really meant “Suppression of Psychical Research.” From time to time the skepticism of some members of the SPR has seemed hostile. Still, the society has had a wide range of membership and is not tied to a sponsor’s opinion on the genuineness of claimed phenomena.

The SPR was formed in 1882 to investigate psychic phenomena in a scientific and impartial spirit. Free from the bias of preconceived ideas, its members were to conduct an inquiry into the phenomena of spirit communication and other possible manifestations of the agency of the dead. The SPR was determined to prevent fraud and ensure that the number of apparitions could be ascribed to chance alone.

There was much to encourage belief in some "supernormal" agency, especially in the last decade of the nineteenth century. Although Spiritualists claimed that the spirits of the dead were involved in their phenomena, the Italian medium Eusapia Palladino and the American Leonora Piper, through the lips of the medium, and among others who held that fraud would not account for the revelations given by Piper in the trance state were James, Sir Oliver Lodge, F. W. H. Myers, and James H. Hyslop.

Frank Podmore, while not admitting any supernatural agency, suggested that telepathy, probably aided by skillful observations and carefully conducted inquiries concerning the affairs of prospective sitters, had helped to produce the phenomena. Charles Richet and Camille Flammarion, and others on the Continent, went to Britain in 1895. Several British scientists, including Lodge and Myers, had already witnessed their powers on the Continent, at Richet’s invitation. Lodge, at least, said he was satisfied that no known agency was responsible for the remarkable manifesta-

Notes

- The initial scope of the SPR was defined by the areas of investigation: (1) thought transmission; (2) hypnosis; (3) Reichenbach phenomena; (4) apparitions; (5) physical (Spiritualist) phenomena; and (6) the history and existing literature on the subject. The scope of the society was further enlarged in later years when a committee headed by Richard Hodgson conducted an inquiry into the claimed phenomena of Telepathy.

To find alternative explanations for Spiritualist phenomena, members explored psychological theories and studied automatism, hallucinations, and thought transference. Some members were also instrumental in detecting a great deal of fraud in connection with mediumistic performances, particularly in the field of slate writing.

Many individuals had declared slate writing to be such a simple and straightforward phenomenon that it was impossible. But S. T. Davey, a member of the SPR, attended séances by the well-known medium William Eglinton and considered them fraudulent. He began to study the rationale for slate writing and emulated Eglinton’s phenomena by conjuring methods. He then gave a number of pseudo séances, which Richard Hodgson carefully recorded.

Davey’s techniques so successful that none of the sitters could detect the fraud, even though they had been assured in advance that it was simply a conjuring trick—indeed some Spiritualist sitters refused to believe that the performances were fraudulent. After that, slate writing declined in Spiritualist circles and, like the phenomenon of spirit photography, was largely disregarded.

Excellent work was done by the society in collecting evidence relating to apparitions of the dead and the living, reported in the monumental Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death, by F. W. H. Myers (2 vols., 1903) and Phantoms of the Living, by Myers, Frank Podmore, and Edmund Gurney (2 vols., 1886).

A statistical inquiry on a large scale was undertaken by a committee of the SPR in 1889, and some seventeen thousand cases of apparitions were collected. The main object in taking such a census was to obtain evidence for the workings of telepathy in apparitions; to make such evidence of scientiﬁc value, the utmost care was taken to ensure the impartiality and responsible character of all who took part in the inquiry. From the results it was concluded that the number of apparitions coinciding with a death or other event greatly exceeded the number that could be ascribed to chance alone.

There was much to encourage belief in some "supernormal" agency, especially in the last decade of the nineteenth century. The two mediums whose manifestations led many in Britain, the United States, and Europe to conclude that the medium and the dead were involved in their phenomena were the Italian medium Eusapia Palladino and the American Leonora Piper.

In 1885 William James of Harvard began a study of Piper, and he was joined a few years later by Richard Hodgson, who had moved to the United States to be the secretary of the American branch of the SPR. Of all the trance mediums, Piper offered the best evidence for spirit agency. The skeptical Hodgson himself declared his belief that the spirits of the dead spoke through the lips of the medium, and among others who held that fraud would not account for the revelations given by Piper in the trance state were James, Sir Oliver Lodge, F. W. H. Myers, and James H. Hyslop.

Frank Podmore, while not admitting any supernatural agency, suggested that telepathy, probably aided by skillful observations and carefully conducted inquiries concerning the affairs of prospective sitters, had helped to produce the phenomena. Eusapia Palladino, after attracting considerable attention from Cesare Lombroso, Charles Richet, Camille Flammarion, and others on the Continent, went to Britain in 1895. Several British scientists, including Lodge and Myers, had already witnessed their powers on the Continent, at Richet’s invitation. Lodge, at least, said he was satisfied that no known agency was responsible for the remarkable manifestations of Palladino. The British sittings were held at Cambridge, and because it was proved conclusively that the medium made use of fraud, the majority of the investigators ascribed her "manifestations" entirely to that. Later, in 1898, more seances were held at Paris, and they were so successful that Richet, Myers, and Lodge once more declared themselves satisfied of the genuineness of the phenomena.

Perhaps the most convincing evidence for the working of some paranormal agency, however, was to be found in the famous cross correspondence experiments conducted in the early twentieth century. F. W. H. Myers had suggested before he died that if a spirit was to give the same message to two or more mediums, it would go far to establish the independent existence of the phenomena.

On the deaths of Sidgwick (in August 1900) and F. W. H. Myers (in January 1901) it was thought that if mediums controlled by their spirits some agreement might be looked for in the scripts. The first correspondences were found in scripts of Rosina Thompson and a Miss Rawson, the former in London, and the latter in the United States. The Sidgwick correspondences legedly appeared for the first time to these ladies on the same day, January 11, 1901.

On May 8, 1901, the Myers control appeared in the scripts of Rosina Thompson and Margaret Verrall, and later in those of Piper and others. So remarkable were the correspondences obtained in some cases where seemingly there could not possibly have been collusion between the mediums, that it is difficult to believe that some discarnate intelligence was not responsible for at least some of the scripts.

The end of 1916 a great sensation was caused with the publication by Sir Oliver Lodge of a memoir about his son, Lieutenant Raymond Lodge, who was killed near Ypres in September 1917, during World War I. The book, titled Raymond, or Life and Death, is divided into three parts, the first of which contains a history of the brief life of the subject. The second part details numerous records of sittings, both in the company of mediums and at the table, by Sir Oliver Lodge and members of his family. It was claimed that considerable evidence of the personal survival of his son were obtained in these sittings. The third part of the book deals with the scientific material relating to life after death, which is reviewed and summarized in a spirit of great fairness, although a natural bias toward belief in immortality is obvious.

Notwithstanding such useful work by the SPR on the phenomena of Spiritualism, there was frequent antagonism from Spiritualists during the first half-century or so of the society’s existence. The pioneer Spiritualist W. T. Stead fulminated against it, and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, after several disputes, resigned his membership as a public protest shortly before his death in 1930. Controversies over the phenomena of "Margery" (American medium Mina Crandon) also reached across the Atlantic to involve the society in London.

Meanwhile, many independent research organizations had been formed. In 1920 the British College of Psychic Science was founded by prominent Spiritualists Hewart McKenzie and his wife Barbara. It was a source for information, advice, and guidance for consultation of reputable mediums and the investigation of psychical phenomena. The McKenzie’s assisted in the development of the psychic faculties of the medium Eileen J. Garrett, who was to become world-famous. Garrett was invited to investigate the famous case of Rhine and was investigated by the American Society for Psychical Research in 1951 and took part in parapsychological investigations with William McDougall and J. B. Rhine. In 1951 she founded the Parapsychology Foundation in New York.

Meanwhile, the British College of Psychic Science performed useful work for a number of years, finally closing in 1947. Similarly, the work was carried on by the College of Psychic Science, London (not to be confused with the former organization), founded in 1955, which grew from the London Spiritualist Alliance, which in turn was an outgrowth of the British National Association of Spiritualists, founded in 1896.

In 1970 the College of Psychic Science was renamed the College of Psychic Studies. It publishes the long-established journal Light and maintains an excellent library, organizes lectures, and conducts other activities associated with Spiritualism and psychical research.

The National Laboratory of Psichical Research was founded by Harry Price in 1925 as an independent research body and conducted investigations with such mediums as Rudi Schneider, Eleonore Zügun, Stella C., and Helen Duncan. In 1936 the laboratory, with its library collected by Price, passed to the University of London Council for Psychical Investigation. Although laboratory work ceased, the library remains at the University of London.

Ever since the famous experiments of Sir William Crookes with the mediums Daniel Dunglas Home and Florence Cook beginning in 1871, Spiritualists had hoped that science would validate the phenomena of Spiritualism. The overall trend of psychical research tended to be skeptical and sometimes hostile, however, particularly as careful investigation disclosed fraudulent tricks. The different viewpoints of researchers and Spiritualists were largely irreconcilable, because Spiritualists operated within a framework of religious belief and researchers from a largely agnostic stance.

Some interesting Spiritualist organizations did not survive the passage of time. Julia’s Bureau, associated with W. T. Stead, was absorbed by the W. T. Stead Borderland Library in 1914 but closed in 1936. Other ephemeral groups included the Jewish Society for Psychical Research; the Society for the Study of Supernormal Pictures; the Link Association of Home Circles; and the Survival League.

Spiritualism Today

The British Spiritualist movement as a whole continues to flourish. The exposure of famous mediums in the past as fraudulent or partially fraudulent, probably proved largely irrelevant to the less-publicized activities of nonprofessional mediums in home circles and churches. The larger Spiritualist organizations are now careful to apply the strictest scrutiny to mediums and to regulate their activities through professional organizations. Any unsatisfactory conduct is firmly controlled, frauds exposed, and only the highest standards of integrity permitted.

As a result, British Spiritualist mediums and public demonstrators of evidence for survival are the most famous in the world. Such personalities as Doris Stokes became international figures on television and radio programs as well as in public demonstrations but remained dedicated to the Spiritualist cause and did not become rich. There are now more than four hundred Spiritualist churches in Britain.

Many of the Spiritualist organizations founded in the nineteenth century have continued into modern times, and new organizations have also grown up. The Marylebone Spiritualist Association, founded in 1872, became the Spiritualist Association of Great Britain, and is claimed to be the largest of its kind in the world. It is located at 53 Belgrave Sq., London, SW1.

The British Spiritualist Lyceum Union, founded in 1890, amalgamated with the Spiritualists’ National Union (SNU) in 1948. The SNU had been founded in 1891. It is now located at Britten House, Stanstead Hall, Stanstead, Essex, CM24 8UD.

White Eagle Lodge grew from the mediumship of Grace Cooke. It was founded in 1936 and includes a publishing trust. It has branches in Edinburgh, Bournemouth, Plymouth, Worthing, and Reading, as well as in New Jersey. Headquarters address: New Lands, Rake, Liss, Hampshire, GU33 7HY.

The Greater World Christian Spiritualist League was founded in 1921 around the mediumship of Winifred Meyers. It has more than 140 local branches throughout Britain, as well as in a dozen foreign countries. Headquarters address: 3 Landsdowne Rd., Holland Park, London, W11.
Associated with the Spiritualist movement are healers, represented by talented individuals and organizations. One of the most famous was Harry Edwards, who died in 1976. He claimed the assistance of spirit helpers and established a healing clinic, which is now carried on by Joan and Ray Branch, whom he had designated as his successors. Edwards had published several books on healing and the magazine The Spiritual Healer, which continues publication. The address of the Harry Edwards Spiritual Healing Sanctuary is Burrows Lea, Shere, Guildford, Surrey, GU5 9QG.

The National Federation of Spiritual Healers is located at Shortacres, Churchill, Loughton, Essex. There is also a World Healing Crusade at 476 Lytham Road, Blackpool, Lancashire, and a Churches’ Council for Health and Healing at 8–10 Denman St., London, W1.

Spiritualism and the Established Churches

Throughout the history of Spiritualism in Britain the established churches have been largely antagonistic. In 1881 Canon Basil Wilberforce was the partisan of Spiritualism before the Church Congress. The reception was hostile and denunciatory. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland was three times petitioned, by the Reverend W. A. Reid, to investigate psychic phenomena. On the first occasion, a committee was appointed, which reported that psychic phenomena did occur. Subsequent appeals, however, resulted in no fresh investigation.

Books have been published by Catholics insisting that Spiritualism is the work of evil spirits. In the period of postwar permissiveness, active opposition declined, and still today there are occasional fulminations from dogmatic clergymen that Spiritualism is the work of the Devil. The obsession with themes of possession and exorcism during the occult boom of the 1950s and 1960s confused many people.

In 1953 a group of interested clergymen led by Reginald M. Lester founded the Churches’ Fellowship of Psychical and Spiritual Studies, which investigates paranormal healing, psychic phenomena, and mysticism in a sympathetic manner and publishes the Quarterly Review. Address: The Rural Workshop, South Rd., North Somercotes, Nr. Louth, Lincs., U.K. LN11 7PT.

One of the greatest obstacles to Spiritualism was the cruel and archaic legislation under which mediums were persecuted. Mediums found themselves accused under the witchcraft laws of 1735 for “pretending to communicate with spirits.” Throughout the interwar years mediums were frequently brought into court under provisions of both the Witchcraft Act of 1735 and the Vagrancy Act of 1824. Disguised policemen, posing as bereaved parents, would approach a medium, begging for some consolatory message. A small sum of money would be offered as a “love offering,” and if this was accepted the medium was prosecuted and often fined or imprisoned for up to three months. This punitive legislation was finally repealed in 1951 by the Vagrancy Act of 1824, which, although not wholly satisfactory to the Spiritualist community, implicitly acknowledged that there might be genuine mediumship.

The matter was by no means settled at the turn of the twenty-first century. The Parapsychical Laboratory, DownInst., Wilshire; and the Parapsychological Laboratory, London, W1.

Sources:

Spiritualism—Italy

In Italy the birth of the Spiritualist movement was largely brought about by French periodicals and developed along the lines of the Kardoe school. The visit of the famous medium Daniel Dunglas Home in 1855 led to the formation of many societies and to the publication of the first Spiritualist journal, L’Amore del Vero.

The Kardoe school of Spiritualism greatly affected the development of Italian Spiritualism. Copies of Kardoe’s books and French Kardecian periodicals circulated freely in Italy. Once introduced, Spiritualism developed rapidly, and by 1870 there were more than a hundred societies in different parts of the country. Both Spiritists and Spiritualists were represented.

Among the prominent organizations were La Società Spirituale di Palermo, formed in 1863. In the same year the first representative Spiritualist organ, Annali dello Spiritismo, was started in Turin by Niceforo Filalete (also known as Vincenzo Scarpa). The Magnetic Society of Florence, which had influential members, began its activity about the same time. Baron Seymour Kirkup sent many accounts of activities to the London Spiritual Magazine.

In 1873 Baron Guisnardo Bozzi founded the Pneumatomical Psychological Academy at Florence, where earlier the visit of the British medium Agnes Guppy-Volckman, beginning in 1868 and extending to a period of almost three years, left a deep impression. The academy existed only a brief time.

A period of lively psychic activity began in 1872 when Signor Damiani discovered the medium Eusapia Palladino, around whom famous scientists gathered for a many years. G. B. Ernacora, founder and coeditor of the Rivista di Studi Psichici, Cesare Lombroso, Ernesto Bozzano, Enrico Morselli, Angelo Brofferio, Filippo Bottazzi, Benigno Bianchi, and many other well-known researchers worked to establish the authenticity of psychic phenomena. A succession of such powerful mediums as Augusta Politi, Francesco Carancini, Amedeo Zuccafini, Lucia Sordi, and Linda Gazzera helped them in their task.

Various organizations were formed, including the Società di Studi Psichici in Rome and the Society for Psychic Studies at Florence. Ernesto Bozzano, a leading psychological researcher, presided over the Italian Spiritualists Association, and a very well-organized society. Carlo Araldo Vassallo, was formed in Genoa. It was named after one of the pioneers of the movement in Italy.

1472
The formation of the Associazione Italiana Scientifica de Metapsichica (1946) at Milan and the Centro Italiano de Parapsicologia (1960) in Naples indicates the revived interest in psychic phenomena after World War II. Spiritualism made considerable progress in Italy in spite of continual opposition from conservative Catholics, who stigmatized the movement as diabolical. Progress owed much to the open-minded investigations of psychological researchers such as Angelo Brofferio, author of Per lo Spiritoismo (1892), Ercole Chiaia, and Ernesto Bozzano, who published a defense of the British medium W. Stainton Moses. In 1985 the Archivio de Documentazione Storica Della Ricerca Psichica was established in Bologna as a collection of psychological books and research records. The collection was built around the collections of Ernest Bozzano and Gastone de Boni.

According to a poll conducted in 1999, nearly a quarter of Italians believed in magic, fortune-telling, astrology, and spiritualism. They spent a total of one billion lire per year on these interests, according to the survey conducted by Confesercenti and Confagricoltori having more than 2 million members, or more than 10 million people, believed in mystical practices in a country that counts 70,000 magicians, astrologers, clairvoyants and faith healers. About 2.5 percent of those polled, or 1.2 million, admitted that they had been victims of fraud when they turned to the supernatural to solve the more mundane difficulties of love, health, and work. For a nation whose population has been largely one of practicing Roman Catholics, their church's denunciation against such practices apparently was not heeded. "While there is an understandable need for a touch of magic in life...action is needed to stamp out abuses, illegal behaviour and fraud widely linked to these practices," noted Confesercenti.

Sources:

Brofferio, Angelo. Per lo Spiritoismo. 3d ed. Turin, 1903.

Spiritualism—Phenomena

Spiritualism emerged in response to the post-Enlightenment attack on supernaturalism, which by the mid-nineteenth century had made a significant impact on the public. As part of a general assault on belief in the existence of a spiritual world post-Earth, many thinkers questioned the possibility of survival of bodily death. Spiritualists claimed that they had discovered a regular method of making contact with the spiritual world and could establish beyond a reasonable doubt the continuation of life beyond death.

The primary phenomenon of Spiritualism centers on mediums, individuals who can, it is believed, establish contact with spirit entities and through whom the spirits speak and act. Mediums seem to have a peculiar sensitivity to the presence of spirit forces and entities. Sometimes that sensitivity reportedly manifests early in life in such childhood experiences asknowing something is going to happen before it does or seeing spirits, sometimes described as invisible playmates. Other mediums grow to adulthood unaware of any psychic sensitivity and discover it quite by accident. For example, what occurs while playing with a Ouija board. Several report their sensitivity emerging after an accident to the head. Many have discovered their abilities while associating with Spiritualist friends or participating in a psychic ability development class.

The basic task for mediums is facilitating communication between individuals and their acquaintances in the spirit world. In either trance or a waking state, the medium mediates the conversation. When the medium is in a trance state, the spirit entity often speaks directly to an individual using the medium's vocal cords, it is said. When awake, the medium most frequently simply repeats messages from the spirits. Such communications may take place in a private session between the medium and the client, in a séance, or in "platform work," in which the medium stands in front of a large audience and gives brief readings to selected members.

Mediumship is thus meant to be a demonstration of the continued existence of persons who used to reside in a body on Earth. The problem, of course, is determining whether what appears to be happening (i.e., a simple conversation between an individual, a tree, or a spirit) is real, an elaborate hoax, or an unconscious charade stemming from the vivid imagination of the medium.

The basic evidence comes from the content of the messages. That is, the voice speaking through the medium reveals information that only the spirit entity could have known. From a successful session with a medium, sitters often report hearing private details of their lives, possibly relating to incidents shared with the deceased. They note peculiar traits of speech of the entity assumed by the medium or the discovery of a lost object by following the directions given by the spirit. Occasionally spirits offer predictions of things that will happen to the sitter. Spirits speaking through an entranced medium often reveal information apparently not available to the medium when awake.

In the course of a séance or platform work, the entire range of extrasensory perception (e.g., telepathy, psychometry, telekinesis, clairvoyance, and precognition) may occur; in fact, some psychical researchers have suggested that mediumship can be completely explained by ESP.

Mediumistic phenomena also include psychic or spiritual healing. Spiritualist healers generally see their healing work as originating in the work of spirit helpers who work through them. At one end of the healing spectrum is psychic surgery. Philippine psychic surgeons became famous with claims of actually opening the body of a patient and under spirit guidance removing unhealthy tissue. A tamer form, found among early American and British healers, involved an entranced medium operating on the astral body of the patient. With the patient lying on an operating table, the medium would appear to pantomime an operation several inches above the body. Corrections in this spiritual body double having been made, it was believed that appropriate changes would then occur in the physical body.

More commonly today, however, Spiritualist healers simply reach a rapport with their spirit guides and mediate healing energy from them. Spiritualists point to alleged healings as evidence of the spirit world. Critics, of course, point to similar healings in other contexts having no reference to spirits, and all contemporary research in paranormal healing has been directed toward defining a healing power without reference to any spirit agency. In actions akin to healing, mediums have demonstrated the ability to influence the growth of plants, seemingly by passing energy from their body to the plants.

Early in the Spiritualist movement various telekinetic phenomena began to appear. In contact with the press fact of the day of Spiritualism dates itself were rapping sounds that seemed to manifest some intelligence because they occurred in response... to questions put to a supposed spirit. Such raps became commonplace over the next decades, as did various other noises, such as paranormal voices and music.

Among the most common mediumistic phenomena are various forms of automatism: agitation of the body or limbs, automatic writing, automatic drawing and painting, slate writing, and direct writing. Of these forms, automatic writing is by far the most common. Numerous texts have been produced purportedly by a medium simply allowing his or her hands to be controlled by a spirit.

The most controversial physical phenomena have been those associated with materialization and dematerialization. To discover the cause of the sounds or how the answers to mental questions that were posed were correctly given. Some of those associated with materialization, apports, and spirit photography produced through-out the first century of Spiritualism. The most controversial physical phenomena have been those associated with materialization and dematerialization. To discover the cause of the sounds or how the answers to mental questions that were posed were correctly given. Some of those associated with materialization, apports, and spirit photography produced throughout the first century of Spiritualism.

The neighbors of the Fox family were deeply impressed by these “revelations” and, by way of a test, questioned the spirits on such matters as the ages of their acquaintances, questions that were answered, apparently, with some correctness. Soon afterward the daughter Margaretta Fox visited her married sister, Mrs. Fish, at Rochester, New York, where the knockings broke out as vigorously as they had at Hydesville. Her sister Catherine visited some friends at Auburn, and there, too, the rappings were heard.

Committee after committee was appointed but could not discover the cause of the sounds or how the answers to mental questions that were posed were correctly given. Some of those who sat with the Fox sisters soon found that they had similar powers. So the movement spread. The public had already been prepared for such demonstrations by the spread of the teachings of Emanuel Swedenborg and demonstrations of animal magnetism. Clairvoyants had also made use of rapping prior to the mediumship of the Fox girls. The induced trance had also recently been brought to the notice of the American people by lecturers, the clergy, and others. So, accustomed to departures from orthodoxy in every direction, many found no difficulty in admitting the intervention of good or evil spirits in human affairs, and for those who refused to accept the spirit hypothesis a satisfactory explanation of the phenomena was found in electricity, electromagnetism, or the od (odic) force.

Explanations

Although numerous fanciful explanations for mediumistic phenomena have been put forth—including one positing the existence of “planetary spirits” with whom mediums communicated and one theorizing a vast “thought reservoir” fed by human “thought rays”—most twentieth-century psychical researchers have concluded that not only were they not produced by spirit agencies, but were produced by fraud. That conclusion was reached after numerous cases of cleverly produced fraud were uncovered and information on how such phenomena could be produced through conjuring became available. The broad acceptance of that appraisal has meant the virtual abandonment of all of the accounts of materializations, apports, and spirit photography produced throughout the first century of Spiritualism.

Spiritualism still adheres to the spirit hypothesis, meaning the belief that the intelligence that directs the phenomena of the medium is of a disembodied spirit’s. The spirit hypothesis remains the most intriguing of the explanations of such phenomena, and the possibility of finding evidence of the spirit’s survival after death still motivates many parapsychologists.

Sources:

Spiritualism—United States

On March 31, 1848, Mrs. John Fox of Hydesville, New York, summoned her neighbors to hear strange knockings that were disturbing her family. At this time the Fox household comprised John Fox, his wife, and their two young daughters, Margaretta and Kate, aged 15 and 12 years respectively. On being questioned, the raps seemed to manifest signs of intelligence, and it was eventually deciphered from them, it was said, that the disturbing influence was the spirit of a peddler, murdered for the sake of his money by a former resident of the house. It was subsequently claimed in April of that year that the Foxes, while digging in their cellar at the instigation of the spirits, discovered fragments of human hair, teeth, and bones.

The neighbors of the Fox family were deeply impressed by these “revelations” and, by way of a test, questioned the spirits on such matters as the ages of their acquaintances, questions that were answered, apparently, with some correctness. Soon afterward the daughter Margaretta Fox visited her married sister, Mrs. Fish, at Rochester, New York, where the knockings broke out as vigorously as they had at Hydesville. Her sister Catherine visited some friends at Auburn, and there, too, the rappings were heard.

Committee after committee was appointed but could not discover the cause of the sounds or how the answers to mental questions that were posed were correctly given. Some of those who sat with the Fox sisters soon found that they had similar powers. So the movement spread. The public had already been prepared for such demonstrations by the spread of the teachings of Emanuel Swedenborg and demonstrations of animal magnetism. Clairvoyants had also made use of rapping prior to the mediumship of the Fox girls. The induced trance had also recently been brought to the notice of the American people by lecturers, the clergy, and others. So, accustomed to departures from orthodoxy in every direction, many found no difficulty in admitting the intervention of good or evil spirits in human affairs, and for those who refused to accept the spirit hypothesis a satisfactory explanation of the phenomena was found in electricity, electromagnetism, or the od (odic) force.

The first experimental Spiritualist organization, the New York Circle, was formed in 1851. The New York Conference was established the same year, and the preaching of a new science and faith began to make converts among the notable personalities of the day. Wisconsin governor N. P. Tallmadge, abolitionist William Lloyd Garrison, Professors Britten, Wells, Bryant, and Bliss of the University of Pennsylvania, Chief Justice Williams, Judge John Worth Edmonds, Professor Robert Hare, Professor James Jay Mapes, General Bullard, Horace Greeley, James Fenimore Cooper, and William Cullen Bryant were some of the distinguished early converts.

According to an estimate in Spirit World, there were 100 mediums in New York and 50 to 60 private circles in Philadelphia in 1851. The North American Review wrote in April 1855 that the New England Spiritualist Association, which computed the number of Spiritualists in America as nearly two million, did not overstate the facts. Probably the strangest developments in the early history of American Spiritualism were the new motor machine of John Murray Spear and the Mountain Cove Community of Rev. James Scott and Thomas Lake Harris. As time progressed, Spiritualists struggled with many offshoot movements that claimed justification for such ideas as free love and community ownership of the spirit communications of mediums.

Soon physical phenomena began to supplement the simpler forms of spirit communication. Table turning and tilting partially replaced the phenomenon of raps. Playing of musical instruments by invisible means, "direct" spirit writing, bell ringing, levitation, and materialization of spirit hands were just some of the phenomena witnessed and vouched for by distinguished sitters.

The levitation of the great medium Daniel Dunglas Home was recorded at an early stage in his career. Slate writing and playing of musical instruments were feats practiced by the alleged spirits that frequented the "spirit room" of Jonathan Koons in Dover, Ohio.

In Kaskaskia, Iowa, in 1854 two mediums spoke in tongues identified—on somewhat insufficient data—as "Swiss," Latin, and Indian, and thereafter other mediums practiced trance speaking in foreign tongues, a phenomena known as xenoglos-sis. But integral foreign tongues included Latin and Greek, French, German, Spanish, Italian, Chinese, and Gaelic, but generally the trance utterances, when they were not in English, were not recognized definitely as any known language, and frequently the "spirits" themselves interpreted the "tongues" as speaking in pseudotongues, or glossolalia, was evidently related to the articulate but meaningless fluency of people caught up in a moment of religious ecstasy. There were a few verified cases, however, where persons in a state of exaltation spoke fluently in a language with which they were unfamiliar in their normal状态.

Many of the "spirit" writings were signed with the names of great people—particularly Franklin, Swedenborg, Plato, Aristotle, St. John, and St. Paul. Trance lecturing before audiences was also practiced, books of inspirational sayings were published, and poetry and drawings were produced in abundance. These "automatic" productions had a character of their own—often vague, high-sounding, incoherent, and distinctly reminiscent. In cases where they displayed even a fair amount of merit, as in the poems of T. L. Harris, it was pointed out that they were not beyond the capacity of the medium in a normal state. As a rule they had a superficial appearance of intelligence, but on analysis were often found to be devoid of meaning.

Spiritualist Literature

With the spread of the movement, Spiritualist periodicals, mostly short-lived, sprung up. The Universalist of 1847 and the Spirit Messenger, which succeeded it in 1849, were mouthpieces of the "harmonious" philosophy as articulated by Andrew Jackson Davis. A similar paper, Discourses from the Interior and Superior Care for Minds, was published by Rev. James L. Scott, founder of the Mountain Cove Community, and Thomas Lake Harris. The Spiritual and Moral Instructor, by T. S. Hiatt, and Heat and Light also came into existence. The first true Spiritualist periodical was issued on July 1850 by former "magnetist" La Roy Sunderland. The title, The Spiritual Philosopher, was changed a year later to Spirit World. In 1852 the Shekhah was launched on its short career by S. B. Brittan and Charles Partridge. After 18 months it was absorbed by Joseph R. Buchanan's Journal of Man.

The first periodical that could boast of permanence was the Christian Spiritualist (1854–1857), and the year 1857 witnessed the appearance of The Banner of Light, which ran into the 1930s. Other early periodicals were The Spiritual Clarion, The New Era, The Light from the Spirit World, of St. Louis, The Age of Prophecy, and The Sunbeam. Later ones included the Religion-Philosophical Journal, the Western Star, The Spiritual Scientist, The American Spiritualist, the New England Spiritualist, The Spiritual Age, and The Lyceum Banner.

Trends in the Movement

From the beginning of the movement those who accepted the actuality of the phenomena arrayed themselves into two separate schools, each represented by a considerable body of opinion. The theory of the first was frankly Spiritualistic, and the second tended toward mesmerism or animal magnetism under one name or another, with a flavor of contemporary scientific thought. These two schools had their foundation in the early days of animal magnetism, when the more rationalist ideas of the magnetists were pitted against the theological theories of angelic or diabolic possession.

In the United States the hypothetical "force" of the rationalists went by such names as od (odic) force, electromagnetism, and so forth. Poltergeist disturbances, occurring from time to time, were ascribed either to spirits or to odic force, as in the case of the Ashtabula poltergeist. Asa Mahan, one of the "rationalists," suggested that a medium could read the thoughts of sitters by means of odic force. The protagonists of magnetic theory attributed trance speaking to the subject's own intelligence, but after the birth of American Spiritualism in 1848 a Spiritualist interpretation became more common.

Notwithstanding these conflicting theories, little was done in the way of scientific investigation, with the exception of the experiments conducted by Robert Hare, a professor of chemistry at the University of Pennsylvania, which resulted in Hare's conversion to Spiritualism. His critics denounced him violently, and he was obliged to resign.

Very few exposures of fraud were made, partly because the majority of the sitters accepted the phenomena with unquestioning faith, and partly because the techniques with which such detection might be made were not available. The collaboration of skillful, trained, and disinterested investigators, such as those who later applied themselves to the elucidation of parapsychology, was entirely lacking in the early days, and the public was left to form its own conclusions.

Spiritualism in the United States was, from the first, intimately bound up with socialism. It was, in fact, the outgrowth of the same original outlook that produced socialist communities and occasioned the rise and fall of so many strange religions. Warren Chase, Horace Greeley, T. L. Harris, and other prominent Spiritualists founded such communities, and "spiritual" writings (today called channeling) frequently gave directions for their construction.

The Problem of Fraud

American Spiritualism has been characterized by a wide range of phenomena, and there has been a problem distinguishing genuine phenomena from those that are fraudulent. For example, the Davenport brothers, who traveled far and wide, advertised Spiritualism by inexplicable noisy demonstrations but most likely were simply very good stage magicians. The medium Henry Gordon introduced levitation of the human body, and D. D. Home produced phantom hands that dissolved in the grasp of the sitters. Home's accomplishments remain a mystery. Joseph Rhodes Buchanan discovered psychometry, which William Denton corroborated in some exciting experiments. William H. Mumler accidentally became the first exponent of spirit photography. Mary Hardy produced the first paraffin wax molds. Emma Hardinge Britten, Nettie Colburn (also known as Henrietta Sturdevant Maynard), and Cora Scott (later Cora L. V. Richmond) did inspirational speaking, and Mary J. Hollis and Mrs. J. H. Conant became outstanding trance mediums. The infamous Henry Slade was the major exponent of slate writing, and Charles Foster led in the art of pellet reading and skin writing (dermography).

The Fox sisters, who gave the first impetus to modern Spiritualism, were soon eclipsed in power and variety of demonstrations by these and other mediums. But they were also the first who had to bear the brunt of the backlash against Spiritualism, which was soon to come. In the sisters’ first university examination, on February 17, 1851, Professors Austin Flint, Charles A. Dee, and C. B. Coventry of Buffalo University, delivered the following verdict on their phenomena: "It is sufficient to state that the muscles inserted into the upper and inner side of the large bone of the leg (the tibia) near the knee joint, are brought into action so as to move the upper surface of the bone just named, laterally upon the lower surface of the thigh bone (the femur), giving rise, in fact, to a partial lateral dislocation. This is effected by an act of the will, without any obvious movements of the limbs." The revelation by one of the Fox sisters cast more doubt on their credibility by one of the Fox sisters.

The Seybert Commission was set up by the University of Pennsylvania, who had to bear the brunt of the backlash against Spiritualism, which was soon to come. In the sisters’ first university examination, on February 17, 1851, Professors Austin Flint, Charles A. Dee, and C. B. Coventry of Buffalo University, delivered the following verdict on their phenomena: "It is sufficient to state that the muscles inserted into the upper and inner side of the large bone of the leg (the tibia) near the knee joint, are brought into action so as to move the upper surface of the bone just named, laterally upon the lower surface of the thigh bone (the femur), giving rise, in fact, to a partial lateral dislocation. This is effected by an act of the will, without any obvious movements of the limbs." The revelation by one of the Fox sisters cast more doubt on their credibility by one of the Fox sisters.

The publication of impressive accounts. Over the years important records of observations and long experiments were published by E. A. Brackett, Epes Sargent, a Dr. Wolfe, Allan Putnam, and Eugene Crowell. An early history of Spiritualism by E. W. Capron, Modern Spiritualism, was supplemented by Emma Hardinge Britten’s Modern American Spiritualism (1879), outlining 15 years of progress. Many organizations and Spiritualist churches worked for the advancement of the cause. In 1873 the first camp meeting was initiated at Lake Pleasant, Massachusetts. It was quickly followed by others.

The years between 1880 and 1890 witnessed four outstanding events: the report of the Seybert Commission; the self-exposure of Margaret and Kate Fox in 1885; the founding of the American Society for Psychical Research for systematic and organized psychical research in 1885, with the participation of a group of distinguished scientists; and the discovery of the remarkable mediumship of Leonora Piper.

The Seybert Commission was set up by the University of Pennsylvania, which received an endowment of $60,000 from the will of Spiritualist Henry Seybert to investigate Spiritualist phenomena. After issuing a preliminary negative report in 1887, which was widely resented, the committee discontinued the investigation.

The self-exposure of Margaret and Kate Fox did not result in the deathblow to Spiritualism hoped for by anti-Spiritualists, but rather raised the prestige of his name and their confession was followed a year later by full retraction.

The emergence of psychical research with the founding of an American branch of the Society for Psychical Research in 1885 was of far-reaching importance, attracting the publicity and of regular attention to Spiritualism phenomena. At about the same time William James discovered and became intensely interested in Leonora Piper’s powers. He wielded his research to that of the new organization and lent it the prestige of his name. Richard Hodgson joined James in the Piper investigations and acted as secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research until his death in 1905. The American branch of the society was then dissolved, but its work was quickly resumed by Columbia professor James H. Hyslop, who assumed leadership of a reorganized American Society for Psychical Research and conducted its work until his death in 1920.

Other keen and able investigators arose. Hereward Carrington established his claim to renown and Hyslop’s mantle was placed on the shoulders of Walter F. Prince. In the early twentieth century, Piper’s earlier role was filled by “Margery” (Mina Crandon). The controversy produced by her phenomena, focused in the investigation of the Scientific American and of Harvard’s Medical magazine, was not resolved until later in the decade.

The American Society for Psychical Research leaders withdrew and founded the Boston Society for Psychic Research in 1925. The Boston society competed successfully with its New York rival for 15 years until the Margery controversy had died and a merger was worked out.

Spiritualism in the Twentieth Century

The nineteenth century has been called the “heyday of Spiritualism,” and the period up to World War I was certainly the time when most attention was paid to it. However, such a designation, coupled with the knowledge of the negative results of so many investigations of the movement, led many to assume that it had largely died out. Such was not the case. In 1895 the National Spiritualist Association, later the National Spiritualist Association of Churches (NSAC), began to bring some order to the organizational chaos of state and local associations, provided a united front to respond to other competing groups, such as the Theosophical Society, and presented a creed abstracted from spirit teachings. The NSAC dominated the movement for a generation but in the 1920s began to experience internal discord arising from some mediums’ belief in reincarnation. While French Spiritualists had adopted a reincarnationist position, in general British and American mediums were opposed to it. As early as 1924 it became an element of contention, with the withdrawal of Amanda Flowers and the formation of the Independent Spiritualist Association. In 1930 the NSAC passed a strong statement repudiating reincarnation only to have the majority of the New York membership withdraw and reorganize as the General Assembly of Spiritualists. The issue would arise again and again.

The twentieth century also saw the emergence of an African American presence in the Spiritualist movement. Some joined the NSAC, but as early as 1913 Leafy Anderson founded the Eternal Life Christian Spiritualist Association. Through the remainder of the decade additional black denominations were founded, and in 1920 Anderson moved to New Orleans to pastor the congregation there. In 1922 the NSAC pushed black members out of its fellowship, and they founded the National Spiritualist Church (1930), the Spiritual Episcopal Church (1941), the Universal Spiritualist Association of Churches (1941), the International General Assembly of Spiritualists (1956), the National Spiritualist Church (1967), and the Universal Spiritualist Church (1967).

Spiritualism seems to have spread slowly and consistently across the United States through the century. However, with the emergence of parapsychology and the refocus of psychical research away from the claims of Spiritualists and toward the laboratory production of psi phenomena, Spiritualism was largely forgotten. The last great crusade against it was conducted by the magician Harry Houdini in the 1920s. A number of Spiritualist mediums attained some public recognition as psychics but were rarely identified with their churches. One such medium was Arthur A. Ford, who first came to public notice when he claimed to have received a message left behind by Houdini at the time of his death. Ford went on to inspire the formation of the Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship), a fellowship of non-Spiritualists who wanted the resources of the psychic world to investigate the religious life. He ended his career with a famous séance on Canadian television for Episcopal bishop James A. Pike.
The Spiritualist

The Pike séance revealed a continuing problem of Spiritualism. Several years after the séance and both Pike's and Ford's death, an examination of Ford's papers revealed that he had faked the séance. Periodically, word of similar fraudulent activity served to substantiate that Spiritualism was itself saturated with fakes and simply be dismissed as a movement of consequence. In 1966, psychical researcher Andrija Puharich uncovered the fake materializations going on at Camp Chesterfield. Then, in 1976, Lamar Keene quit his career as a fake medium and offered detailed information about a circle of churches operating what amounted to a confidence scheme to provide a constant stream of phenomena for their members. Meanwhile, during the same period, Spiritualism had to compete with the revival of occult religion in the New Age movement. Integral to the New Age has been mediumship under a new name, “channeling.” However, Spiritualism has largely remained aloof from the New Age movement, its adherents not participating to any marked degree.

Sources:

Spiritual Israel Church and Its Army

The beginnings of the Spiritual Israel Church and Its Army, a prominent spiritual church within the African American community of the United States, are somewhat obscure. It seems to have begun with the absorption of black Jewish ideas by Derk Field, a black Alabama man who founded the Church of God in David. Along the way he met a man named W. D. Dickson, who eventually succeeded him as head of the church. Dickson took the title “King of All Israel.” According to the Spiritual Israelites, Field and Dickson restored the teachings of the ancient Israelites. They believe that “Ethiopian” is the national name of black people, and “Israel” is their spiritual name.

The Spiritual Israelites are like other Spiritualist churches in that they value contact with the spirit world and the work of mediums who serve as the pastors of their temples. They believe that they belong to the one true spiritual church, but that the Spirit dwells in all people. They believe in life after death but think that traditional ideas of heaven and hell are mere projections of the limited human mind.

The Spiritual Israelites have adopted a version of the black Jewish myth. They maintain that black people were the first people, humanity having originated in Africa. All of the biblical patriarchs and prophets were black people, but at the time of Jacob and Esau, the sons of Isaac, a division occurred. Jacob is the progenitor of the Ethiopian people and Esau of the Caucasian. Modern Jews are the product of intermarriage between the children of Jacob and Esau.

By the 1980s, the Spiritual Israelites had some 40 temples and missions. There were also several schismatic groups, all of whom carried the word Israel in their title. A number of the congregations are located in the greater Detroit area.

Current address unavailable.

Sources:

The Spiritualist (Periodical)

The name of several Spiritualist periodicals. The first was an influential British weekly, edited by W. H. Harrison (formerly coeditor of The Spiritual Times), and published in London from 1869 until 1881 (originally issued as The Spiritualist Newspaper). It was closely associated with the British National Association of Spiritualists until 1879.

The name was again used by a monthly journal published in New York and edited by C. P. Christensen, from August 1879 until 1921.
1915 to November 1916. A third periodical called The Spiritualist was published monthly in England beginning in 1932 by the Spiritualist Community, London. The Community dissolved soon after the start of World War II. The Spiritualist was bi-monthly journal of the Spiritualist Association of Great Britain, since renamed The Spiritualist and Spiritual Gazette.

Spiritualist Association of Great Britain (SAGB)

One of the oldest and largest Spiritualist associations. It grew out of the Marylebone Spiritualist Association founded in 1872. The story of the association’s early struggles “to propagate spiritual truths in the Marylebone area of London” has been told in an SAGB publication One Hundred Years of Spiritualism, which also states that Queen Victoria held several séances after the death of the Prince Consort.

Even the term “Spiritualist” led to many difficulties in the early days of the association, which had to change its name to The Spiritual Evidence Society in order to hire halls. Widespread opposition to Spiritualism was also encouraged by the Witchcraft Act of 1735, which was frequently invoked for police prosecution of mediums.

Four years after the repeal of the Witchcraft Act in 1951, the SAGB moved to its present headquarters where it now provides weekly religious services with speakers, demonstrations of clairvoyance, healing clinics, Sunday services, a library, a bookstall, and other facilities for the study and practice of Spiritualism. It also links together “a commonwealth” of Spiritualist churches throughout Britain. Among the prominent mediums associated with the group were Ursula Roberts and healer Gordon Turner.

Membership of the association is open to interested members of the public, who are put in touch with their local Spiritualist church. Members may also attend psychic development classes or book sittings with approved mediums. The association publishes a magazine, The Spiritualist and Spiritual Gazette. Address: 53 Belgrave Sq., London, SW1X 8QJ, England.

Sources:

The Spiritualist Community

British organization, active in the period between the world wars in presenting religious and educational aspects of Spiritualism. It was founded by Mrs. St. Clair Stobart, known as “the woman on the black horse,” who had led one half of the Serbian Army in their retreat during World War I and was an early member of the British College of Psychic Science. She eventually became chairperson of its advisory council and published several books on Spiritualism.

The Community, under the presidency of Spiritualist Hannen Swaffer, conducted religious services with speakers, clairvoyant and healing services, and organized instruction groups, also publishing a monthly journal The Spiritualist from 1932 onward. The community is no longer active.

Spiritualist Episcopal Church

One of the most important Spiritualist churches in the United States in the mid-twentieth century, the Spiritualist Episcopal Church was founded in 1941 out of the turmoil that had plagued Camp Chesterfield, a central gathering point for Spiritualists in the midwestern United States. The founders included Revs. Clifford Bias and John Bunker of the Independent Spiritualist Association and Robert Chaney of the National Spiritualist Association of Churches. Each of these had experienced some degree of alienation over traditional Spiritualism’s emphasis on the phenomena believed to constantly dem-onstrate and prove the existence of life after death. They wanted to emphasize the teachings and philosophy coming through their channeling activity. This new emphasis was welcomed by some, and for many years the church conducted a summer seminar at Camp Chesterfield using the materials produced by Rev. Ivy Hooper.

The church prospered through the mid-1950s, though Chaney departed in 1951 to found Astara. However, in 1956, a morals charge was brought against a prominent leader in the church who was a candidate for a church office. The leadership was split by the candidate’s supporters and detractors. The tension affected the church’s position at Camp Chesterfield, where the church had its headquarters. Hoping to calm the anger, prevent the divisiveness at the camp from spreading through the whole church, and to dissolve the medium from seeking office, church president Rev. Dorothy Graff Flexer moved the headquarters to Lansing, Michigan. Despite the move, the church split, and Clifford Bias founded the Universal Spiritualist Association. The Spiritualist Episcopal Church’s mediums were denied access to Camp Chesterfield. Flexer left the church in 1958 and founded the Church of Metaphysical Christianity.

Formally, the Spiritual Episcopal Church has beliefs very similar to those of the National Spiritualist Association of Churches. Reincarnation is denied. However, inspiration is drawn from all of the world’s religions and the influence of Buddhism, Rosicrucianism, and Theosophy is evident in the lessons produced for the summer seminary. The present status of the church is unknown.

Sources:
Development of Mediumship. Dimondale, Mich.: Spiritual Episcopal Church, n.d.

The Spiritualistic Dramatic Society

British society of the 1930s, located in London, which presented plays with a Spiritualist theme to spread knowledge of Spiritualism through the channels of dramatic art. The Duchess of Hamilton and Brandon, Ms. Lind-of-Haghey, Hannen Swaffer, and Robert McAllen were its patrons.

Spiritualistische Blaetter (Periodical)

Pioneering German Spiritualist periodical of 1883.

Spiritualist Outlook (Magazine)

Monthly publication of the First United Spiritualist Church. It included poetry, inspirational articles, and a directory of affiliated Spiritualist churches.

Spiritualists’ National Union

One of the oldest British Spiritualist organizations. It was founded in July 1890 at the suggestion of Emma Hardinge Britten and focused attention on Spiritualism in Manchester and throughout northern England. In the beginning, it was known as the Spiritualists’ National Federation, bringing together a number of leading Spiritualists in Manchester for an annual conference with delegates from other Spiritualist societies to discuss matters of common interest. This annual conference still takes place today.

In October 1901, the Spiritualists’ National Union was incorporated under the Companies Acts, taking over the assets, rights, and obligations of the federation in July 1902.

In 1948, the British Spiritualists’ Lyceum Union, founded in 1890, amalgamated with the SNU, transferring its work of... spiritual education for children and young people to that organization. The SNU formulates policy through a National Executive Committee, which delegates certain responsibilities to standing and sub-committees such as Trust Property, Education, Training, and Awards, Publicity and Public Relations and Healing. The SNU also operates the Arthur Findlay College, which is based at Stansted Hall in Essex and runs courses on Spiritualist philosophy, religious practice, spiritual healing, and other related subjects.

The SNU delegates local matters to fourteen district councils, with executive committees formed by directly-elected members in the districts. Four hundred Spiritualist churches are affiliated with the SNU, most are in the UK, along with one in the US and several in Australia. The union also maintains a register of National Spiritualist ministers and mediums.

Membership in the union is open to individual Spiritualists as well as to churches and other organizations. The primary aim of the union is to promote the religion and religious philosophy of Spiritualism on the basis of the seven principles:

1. The fatherhood of God
2. The brotherhood of Man
3. The communion of spirits and the ministry of angels
4. The continuous existence of the human soul
5. Personal responsibility
6. Compensation and retribution hereafter for good and evil deeds done on earth
7. Eternal progress open to every human soul.

The Spiritualists’ National Union may be contacted at Redwoods, Stansted Hall, Stansted, CM24 8UD. Website: http://www.snu.org.uk.

Sources:

The Spiritual Magazine
A British Spiritualist monthly (1860–77) founded by William Wilkinson, who jointly edited it with Thomas Shorter. William Howitt was its chief contributor. It was the successor to the British Spiritual Telegraph.

The Spiritual Messenger (Journal)
British Spiritualist monthly that published a few editions in London in the winter of 1858–59. It was edited by W. Carpenter.

Spiritual Notes (Journal)
Monthly official publication of the British National Association of Spiritualists, which flourished from 1878 to 1881.

The Spiritual Philosopher (Periodical)
The first Spiritualist periodical in the United States, founded by La Roy Sunderland in 1850 as a monthly, then becoming a weekly, the title changing to Spirit World after the first year.

The Spiritual Quarterly Magazine
British periodical of Spiritualism, published by the Two Worlds Publishing Company in Manchester beginning in October 1902. It was edited by Will Phillips and had only a short life.

Spiritual Regeneration Movement Foundation
Founded in 1959 to teach the philosophy of Transcendental Meditation (TM) and its techniques as developed by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. It is now a section of the World Plan Executive council, the international organization that directs the TM movement from Switzerland. Address: Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, 433 South Harvard Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90020-3402.

Spiritual Research Society
The Spiritual Research Society was an early American New Age group founded by Edwin Cain, Sr., and his wife, Nellie Cain. The society can be traced to a psychic development circle that the Cains, both Spiritualists, organized in their home. During these sessions, Nellie began to channel messages purported to be from the Great White Brotherhood, the group of advanced beings believed by Theosophists to guide the destiny of the human race. These messages were compiled and published in 1965 as Gems of Truth from the Masters. A copy was sent to Merta Mary Parkinson, head of the Sisters of the Amber. Parkinson’s group was an early representative of the Universal Link, the original New Age organization headquartered in England. As a result a relationship developed between the Cains and British New Agers such as Libbie Pugh.

The Cains were introduced to the prediction that a momentous event would occur near Christmas Day 1967. The day came and went with nothing momentous having occurred. The Cains later explained to the disappointed Link members that the predictions had been fulfilled in a somewhat unexpected manner. They stated that during the years before 1967, human life had been tried and tested at every level. During the 1960s, a visible network of spiritual groups had been established through the Universal Link. The late 1960s was a time to shift the emphasis to the invisible work of spiritual practice, which would spread the spiritual energy in the world. They suggested a program termed the Nuclear Evolution Operation, through which the invisible spiritual light would be radiated to humanity.

Sources:

Spiritual Review (Journal)
British monthly founded by J. J. Morse in 1900. It continued until May 1902, when Morse departed from England for an extensive lecture tour to Australia, New Zealand, and the United States.

Spiritual Science Mother Church
The Spiritual Science Mother Church grew out of an interest in Spiritualism developed by some Christian Scientists in the early twentieth century. It was organized in 1927 by Mother Julia O. Forrest, a former Christian Science practitioner who had become a Spiritualist, and Dr. Carl H. Piers. They believed they were dealing scientifically with spiritual matters, and they felt comfortable with the organization of the Christian Science movement, which they used as a model. Forrest became the pastor of the Spiritual Science Mother Church, headquartered in New York, and head of the ecclesiastical council, which administered the church’s affairs. She and Piers also established a Spiritual Science Institute for training ministers.

Spiritual Science is specifically Christian in its belief and affirms a Trinity of God the Father and creator, the virgin-born Son, and the Holy Spirit. Jesus is seen as the Lord, Master, and dispenser of the law of love. Humans have been given free agency and are traveling a spiritual path that includes many incarnations. Members of the church are expected to demonstrate spiritual realities in this life. These principal demonstrations are emphasized: preaching, i.e., clairvoyant messages from God about what each member has to do; communications from other realms; and healing through the channeling of healing power. Members are expected to grow in their spiritual life, a process termed soul-unfoldment. Salvation eventually results as a cleansing process through intelligent prayer.

The Spiritual Science Mother Church was headquartered in New York City for many years and by the 1970s had some 40 affiliated congregations. It was headed at that time by Glenn Argoe, who had succeeded Forrest as pastor of the mother church. However, its present status is unknown.

The Spiritual Scientist (Journal)

Spiritual Telegraph (Periodical)

American Spiritualist weekly founded by S. B. Brittan and Charles Partridge and published in New York from 1852 to 1860. In 1860 it merged into the Herald of Progress, which Andrew Jackson Davis founded.

The Spiritual Times (Periodical)

Spirituelles Addressbuch (Directory)

Annual publication in German giving comprehensive listings of mystical, spiritual, yoga, and New Age organizations all over Germany. Last known address: PARAM, Verlag Gunther Köch, Kurzstrasse 5, D-2161 Alsterstedt 1, Germany.

Splitfoot

A facetious name for the Devil, who is traditionally depicted with hooves, sometimes expressed as "Old Splitfoot" or "Mr. Splitfoot."

When the Fox Sisters first encountered the mysterious rappings at Hydesville, New York, that supposedly heralded the beginnings of Spiritualism, the youngest child Cathie reportedly said "Mr. Splitfoot, do as I do" and clapped her hands; the raps immediately repeated her clapping. At first, Cathie thought somebody was tricking her, since it was the day before April Fools' Day.

Spodomancy

Divination by means of the cinders from sacrificial fires.

Spokesman (Newsletter)

Former monthly publication of the Universal Christ Church, headquartered in Los Angeles, California. It included inspirational messages, advice to readers, and a directory of affiliated churches.

Spontaneous Human Combustion

The idea that human beings can, quite apart from any outside stimulus, be consumed from an internal heat source so intense as to consume even the bones, but leave the immediate environment relatively unburned, has been a subject of controversy since the nineteenth century. Incidents had been reported since the fifteenth century and became the subject of both public and medical controversy in the 1850s following the use of spontaneous combustion as a means of disposing of a character by popular writer Charles Dickens in his novel Bleak House. During the twentieth century, with the continued if sporadic reports of burned bodies, the controversy has been pressed by writers on fortan anamalous phenomena. In a 1992 book on the subject, Jenny Randles and Peter Hough tracked some 85 cases that had occurred since 1850.

Though some incidents appear to be cases of spontaneous combustion in the ancient literature, the modern string of cases begins with the death of the Italian knight Polonius in 1470. A century and a half later, John Hilliard tried to bring the issue before the public in his pamphlet Fire from Heaven (1613). The death of Nicole Millet, the wife of an innkeeper in Rheims, France, on February 20, 1725, led to the first court inquiry and ruling. In the middle of the night, Jean Millet awoke smelling fire. He awakened the inn's guests and together they found Nicole's body in the kitchen. All except her skull, a few vertebrae, and her lower extremities had been consumed. Wooden objects close by were untouched. Millet was tried and found guilty of murder, but on appeal the conviction was reversed based on the testimony of a physician who had been staying at the inn that night who concluded that Mme. Millet's death was due to a "visitation of God," that is, an unknown cause. The fact that Mme. Millet had consumed a significant amount of alcohol was seen as possibly causing the fire to start and contributing to its disastrous results. Ever since, alcohol consumption has been associated with the phenomenon.

The first American case of spontaneous combustion was that of Hannah Bradshaw in New York City in 1770; however, the most heralded case has been that of Mary Reeser, a widow residing in St. Petersburg, Florida. Her body was discovered on the morning of July 2, 1951, after her landlady's hand found the doorknob too hot to grasp. She and two men called to assist entered the house and found her body in the kitchen. All except her skull, a few vertebrae, and her lower extremities had been consumed. Wooden objects close by were untouched. Millet was tried and found guilty of murder, but on appeal the conviction was reversed based on the testimony of a physician who had been staying at the inn that night who concluded that Mme. Millet's death was due to a "visitation of God," that is, an unknown cause. The fact that Mme. Millet had consumed a significant amount of alcohol was seen as possibly causing the fire to start and contributing to its disastrous results. Ever since, alcohol consumption has been associated with the phenomenon.

The first American case of spontaneous combustion was that of Hannah Bradshaw in New York City in 1770; however, the most heralded case has been that of Mary Reeser, a widow residing in St. Petersburg, Florida. Her body was discovered on the morning of July 2, 1951, after her landlady's hand found the doorknob too hot to grasp. She and two men called to assist entered the house and found her body in the kitchen. All except her skull, a few vertebrae, and her lower extremities had been consumed. Wooden objects close by were untouched. Millet was tried and found guilty of murder, but on appeal the conviction was reversed based on the testimony of a physician who had been staying at the inn that night who concluded that Mme. Millet's death was due to a "visitation of God," that is, an unknown cause. The fact that Mme. Millet had consumed a significant amount of alcohol was seen as possibly causing the fire to start and contributing to its disastrous results. Ever since, alcohol consumption has been associated with the phenomenon.

The first American case of spontaneous combustion was that of Hannah Bradshaw in New York City in 1770; however, the most heralded case has been that of Mary Reeser, a widow residing in St. Petersburg, Florida. Her body was discovered on the morning of July 2, 1951, after her landlady's hand found the doorknob too hot to grasp. She and two men called to assist entered the house and found her body in the kitchen. All except her skull, a few vertebrae, and her lower extremities had been consumed. Wooden objects close by were untouched. Millet was tried and found guilty of murder, but on appeal the conviction was reversed based on the testimony of a physician who had been staying at the inn that night who concluded that Mme. Millet's death was due to a "visitation of God," that is, an unknown cause. The fact that Mme. Millet had consumed a significant amount of alcohol was seen as possibly causing the fire to start and contributing to its disastrous results. Ever since, alcohol consumption has been associated with the phenomenon.

The first American case of spontaneous combustion was that of Hannah Bradshaw in New York City in 1770; however, the most heralded case has been that of Mary Reeser, a widow residing in St. Petersburg, Florida. Her body was discovered on the morning of July 2, 1951, after her landlady's hand found the doorknob too hot to grasp. She and two men called to assist entered the house and found her body in the kitchen. All except her skull, a few vertebrae, and her lower extremities had been consumed. Wooden objects close by were untouched. Millet was tried and found guilty of murder, but on appeal the conviction was reversed based on the testimony of a physician who had been staying at the inn that night who concluded that Mme. Millet's death was due to a "visitation of God," that is, an unknown cause. The fact that Mme. Millet had consumed a significant amount of alcohol was seen as possibly causing the fire to start and contributing to its disastrous results. Ever since, alcohol consumption has been associated with the phenomenon.

The first American case of spontaneous combustion was that of Hannah Bradshaw in New York City in 1770; however, the most heralded case has been that of Mary Reeser, a widow residing in St. Petersburg, Florida. Her body was discovered on the morning of July 2, 1951, after her landlady's hand found the doorknob too hot to grasp. She and two men called to assist entered the house and found her body in the kitchen. All except her skull, a few vertebrae, and her lower extremities had been consumed. Wooden objects close by were untouched. Millet was tried and found guilty of murder, but on appeal the conviction was reversed based on the testimony of a physician who had been staying at the inn that night who concluded that Mme. Millet's death was due to a "visitation of God," that is, an unknown cause. The fact that Mme. Millet had consumed a significant amount of alcohol was seen as possibly causing the fire to start and contributing to its disastrous results. Ever since, alcohol consumption has been associated with the phenomenon.

The first American case of spontaneous combustion was that of Hannah Bradshaw in New York City in 1770; however, the most heralded case has been that of Mary Reeser, a widow residing in St. Petersburg, Florida. Her body was discovered on the morning of July 2, 1951, after her landlady's hand found the doorknob too hot to grasp. She and two men called to assist entered the house and found her body in the kitchen. All except her skull, a few vertebrae, and her lower extremities had been consumed. Wooden objects close by were untouched. Millet was tried and found guilty of murder, but on appeal the conviction was reversed based on the testimony of a physician who had been staying at the inn that night who concluded that Mme. Millet's death was due to a "visitation of God," that is, an unknown cause. The fact that Mme. Millet had consumed a significant amount of alcohol was seen as possibly causing the fire to start and contributing to its disastrous results. Ever since, alcohol consumption has been associated with the phenomenon.
tremely high temperatures needed even to begin to consume bone material.

Spontaneous human combustion remains a rare phenomenon, and even among those most prone to adopt occult interpretations, few have followed that lead. Several fortunates have suggested that like the Bermuda Triangle, it may be a constructed problem that brings together cases that are only superficially related. Most have accepted the more telling incidents as unexplained, but view it as a natural mystery whose solving has been delayed due to the paucity of cases, the high level of diversity among cases studied, and the limitations imposed on experimenting on human subjects.

Sources:

Spontaneous Phenomena

Unexpected experiences of extrasensory perception (ESP), psychokinesis (PK), or other paranormal phenomena in everyday life.

The Spotlight (Magazine)

Published by the Lyceum section of the National Spiritualist Association of Churches and directed toward young people. It is published ten times a year and includes poetry, stories, cartoons, along with spiritual lessons. It is published from 1418 Hall SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49506-3960. Website: http://www.nsac.org/.

Sources:

SPR See Society for Psychical Research

Sprengel, Anna (ca. 1888)

The mythical Rosicrucian adept and member of the German occult society Die Goldene Dämmerung who is supposed to have given permission to Rosicrucian William Westcott to found the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. Westcott claimed to have found Sprengel’s name and address on a sheet of paper inserted in the pages of a mysterious cipher manuscript bought from a book stall on Farringdon Road, London, in 1867. Correspondence exists between Westcott and Sprengel relating to the Golden Dawn, but its authenticity has been questioned, and the cipher manuscript is believed to be a forgery that nevertheless launched an occult society.

Sources:

Sprenger, Jakob (1436–1495)

Dominican inquisitor of Cologne, Germany, generally associated with Heinrich Kramer author of Malleus Maleficarum, a sourcebook directing the witchcraft persecutions in Europe. Sprenger was born in Basel, Switzerland, and became a novice in a Dominican house. He rapidly rose to a responsible position, and in 1488 he was ordained to lecture at the University of Cologne on the sentences of Peter Lombard. He soon became master of theology at the university and was elected prior and regent of studies of the Cologne convent. On June 30, 1480, he was elected dean of the faculty of theology at Cologne University, and a year later he became an inquisitor for the provinces of Mainz, Trèves, and Cologne and traveled extensively throughout these provinces. In 1488, he was elected provincial of the whole German province.

His earlier writings included: The Paradoxes of John of Westphalia Refuted (1479) and The Institution and Approbation of the Confraternity of the Most Holy Rosary, which was first erected at Cologne on 8 September in the year 1475 (1475). This latter work recorded his activities for the Confraternity of the Most Holy Rosary, which brought him praise from leading Dominicans as an apostle of the rosary.

In 1484, at the time the pope released the Inquisition to deal with witchcraft, now redefined as Satanism, Sprenger became involved with Heinrich Kramer in trying alleged witches and sorcerers. In the following year, Kramer prepared a treatise on witchcraft (later published as the Malleus Maleficarum) that circulated in manuscript. Sprenger then added his name to the finished work, first published in 1486. Malleus Maleficarum embodied the new direction in the church’s consideration of witches. It became the authoritative manual for inquisitors, judges, and magistrates in dealing with accusations of witchcraft, which multiplied over the next several centuries. Interestingly, the Reformation of the sixteenth century did not slow these accusations, as witchcraft was accepted by Protestants as thoroughly as by Roman Catholics. The book went into thirty editions between 1486 and 1669, and it was published in French, Italian, and English editions, as well as in German.

Sprenger died December 6, 1495, at Strasbourg, where he was buried.

Spriggs, George (1850–1912)

British materialization medium. The first records of his phenomena date from 1877 to 1879. Having discovered his psychic gifts, he became a nonprofessional medium and conducted séances for The Circle of Light in Cardiff, Wales. He had two Indian controls: “Swiftwater” and “Shiwaukee,” who was “captured” from the medium Mary J. Hollis (also known as Mrs. Billings), with whom Spriggs sat in London.

The unique feature of Spriggs’ séances was supposedly that the phantoms that appeared moved at a distance from the medium, walked about the house, went out into the garden in evening light (on one occasion three phantoms did this simultaneously), and sometimes changed into the form of somebody else. These visitors were seen by next-door neighbors, who threatened to call the police for “dealings with the devil.”

In November 1880, Spriggins went to Melbourne, Australia. Similar phenomena were reported there: spirits who held out heavy objects, drank water, ate biscuits, and wrote letters to former sitters. After six years, the materializations ceased, but other phenomena remained. Spriggins gave direct voice sittings and clairvoyant diagnosis and treatment of diseases.

In 1900, he returned to England, and from 1905 until 1905 he gave free medical advice in the rooms of the London Spiritualist Alliance. The Psycho-Therapeutic Society was largely formed through his efforts. For years he diagnosed diseases for the society without charge.

1481 Springheeled Jack

Springheeled Jack

Legendary nineteenth-century British creature who supposedly harassed travelers and terrified women with his giant leaps, vicious behavior, and diabolical appearance. As the legend goes, he successfully eluded capture for many years, evading the police and the army, and mocking them with his daring leaps and wild eerie laughter.

Reportedly, he was a large man in a black cloak, and when the cloak was thrown aside, blue and white flames shot from his mouth and his eyes appeared like balls of fire. His hands appeared to be metallic claws, with which he slashed at people or tore their clothing. He was able to leap across high walls and hedges with ease. Sometimes he even knocked over or ran at front doors, using his athletic ability to escape after terrifying the occupants of the house. The first report survives from September 1857. A press account from 1858, quoted in Peter Haining's The Legend and Bizarre Crimes of Springheeled Jack (1977), notes a typical incidence:

She returned into the house and brought a candle and handed it to the person, who appeared enveloped in a large cloak, and whom she at first really believed to be a policeman. The instant she had done so, however, he threw off his outer garment, and applying the lighted candle to his breast, presented a most hideous and frightful appearance, and vomitted forth a quantity of blue and white flame from his mouth, and his eyes resembled red balls of fire.

From the hasty glance which her fright enabled her to get at his person, she observed that he wore a large helmet, and his dress, which appeared to fit him very tight, seemed to her to resemble white oilklin. Without uttering a sentence he darted at her, and catching her partly by the dress and the back part of her neck, pulled her head under one of his arms, and commenced tearing her gown with his claws, which she was certain were of some metallic substance.

She screamed out as loud as she could for assistance, and by considerable exertion got away from him and ran towards the house to get in. Her assailant, however, followed her, and caught her on the steps leading to the hall-door, where he dislocated his neck.

The instant she had done so, however, he threw off his outer garment, and applying the lighted candle to his breast, presented a most hideous and frightful appearance, and vomitted forth a quantity of blue and white flame from his mouth, and his eyes resembled red balls of fire.

From the hasty glance which her fright enabled her to get at his person, she observed that he wore a large helmet, and his dress, which appeared to fit him very tight, seemed to her to resemble white oilklin. Without uttering a sentence he darted at her, and catching her partly by the dress and the back part of her neck, pulled her head under one of his arms, and commenced tearing her gown with his claws, which she was certain were of some metallic substance.

She screamed out as loud as she could for assistance, and by considerable exertion got away from him and ran towards the house to get in. Her assailant, however, followed her, and caught her on the steps leading to the hall-door, where he dislocated his neck.

Sprinheeled Jack is reported to have terrorized many people in London and the provinces with his appearances in 1843, 1845, and sporadically until 1877. He appeared again in 1904. He popped up again in 1953 in Houston, Texas, where his appearance was linked to a UFO sighting.

Some have suggested that the original Springheeled Jack was the eccentric Marquis of Waterford, Henry de la Poer Beresford, who was also Baron Tyrone of Haverfordwest (1811–1859). According to the Reverend Brewer in The Reader's Handbook (1899; reprinted Gale Research, 1960):

"The Marquis of Waterford in the early parts of the nineteenth century used to amuse himself by springing on travellers unawares, to terrify them; and from time to time others have followed his silly example. Even so late as 1877–78, an officer in his majesty's service caused much excitement, in the garrisons stationed at Aldershot, Colchester, and elsewhere, by his 'spring-heel' pranks. In Chichester and its neighbourhood the tales told of this adventurer caused quite a little panic, and many nervous people were afraid to venture out after sunset, for fear of being 'sprung' upon. I myself investigated some of the cases reported to me."

The Marquis of Waterford was known to have been responsible for a number of somewhat sadistic pranks, particularly involving offensive behavior to women. But there is no firm evidence that he devised special boots fitted with steel springs or a phosphorescent mask with provision for emitting flames or smoke (as reported by victims and onlookers). He was, however, reported as having protuberant eyes and also a peculiar ringing laugh. Moreover, a servant gave an account of an encounter with the sinister cloaked figure with fiery eyes and claw-like hands and spoke of an ornate crest on the cloak, with the initial "W" in gold filigree.

If the original Springheeled Jack was the Marquis of Waterford, he outgrew this behavior when he met and married Louisa Stuart in 1842. The Marquis seems to have been benevolent towards the tenants on his Irish estates and like many noblemen of the period spent a good deal of time in sport and hunting. He died while hunting; his horse stumbled and threw him, dislocating his neck.

Springheeled Jack has been considered a supernatural or paranormal being by many people. In her book Stand and Deliver (1928), historian Elizabeth Villiers commented:

"A thousand tales were afloat and all lost nothing in the telling. Plenty of people definitely swore they had seen him leap right over the roofs of large houses, the cottages and hayricks were as nothing to him, the mail coaches and post chaises and family barouches were taken in his stride. Then, rather unaccountably, public opinion veered from thinking him a new form of highwayman and declared he was an inventor experimenting with a form of flying machine, while others maintained he was not flesh and blood but a haunting spirit."

After the death of the Marquis of Waterford, reports of Springheeled Jack continued, generated either through legend or a succession of imitators, which led to him being the central character of plays, "penny-dreadful" comic books, and popular thrillers. As late as 1945, a British movie was made about Springheeled Jack titled The Curse of the Wraydons, starring actor Tod Slaughter.

The suggestion that Springheeled Jack might have been a creature from outer space was made in an article in Flying Saucer Review (May–June, 1961) by J. Vyner. It cited twentieth-century reports from the United States.

An earlier suggestion was made that Springheeled Jack might have been a kangaroo that had escaped from captivity. The numerous reports of a creature breathing flames, molesting women, and laughing eerily indicated characteristics beyond the capacity of a kangaroo.

Sources:

Sprinkle, Ronald Leo (1930– )

R. Leo Sprinkle, psychologist and researcher of UFO contactee experiences, was born on August 31, 1930, in Rocky Ford, Colorado. He received his bachelor’s and master’s degrees from the University of Colorado and in 1961 completed his doctorate in counseling psychology at the University of Missouri. After three years in the administrative department at the University of North Dakota, he moved to the University of Wyoming, where he remained until his retirement in 1989.

Sprinkle has traced his interest in UFOs to a sighting he had in 1949. He and his wife also had a sighting in 1956. During the years immediately following the completion of his formal education, he conducted several studies, including an early survey of the members of the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena and an initial study of people who had experienced extraterrestrial encounters, both contactees and abductees. He served as a psychological consultant for the London Report (1969) on UFOs, which led to further work on several abduction cases through the 1970s.

Sprinkle is best known, however, for the annual conferences he has organized for UFO contactees each summer since 1980. For a number of years, Sprinkle had corresponded with people who had claimed friendly contact with the entities who drove the flying saucers. Unlike most ufologists, he had not dismissed them; in contrast, he had responded to them sympathetically. The conferences, sponsored by the Institute for UFO Contactee Studies, brought contactees to the university and provided an open forum for them to tell their stories in a non-judgmental environment. As the number of abduction reports increased in the late 1980s, abductees were welcomed to the summer conferences and it was in these conferences that the sharp distinction between the two groups began to disappear.

Eventually, Sprinkle identified himself as a contactee. He also concluded that UFO activity was part of a larger program of what he termed “cosmic consciousness conditioning.” The UFO entities, whether one thinks of them as being from outer space or another dimension, are attempting to move humanity into an understanding of themselves as cosmic citizens.

Sources:

The Spunkie
A goblin similar to the Scottish kelpie. He was popularly believed to be an agent of Satan, and travelers who had lost their way were his special prey. Supposedly, he attracted his victim by means of a light, that looked like a reflection on a window not far away, but as the victim proceeded toward the light, it receded. However, the victim followed the gleam until the spunkie lured him over a precipice or into a morass.

Sources:

Squinting
A popular superstition that a squint was a bad omen. It was said that if you met a squint-eyed person, you should spit three times, to avert bad fortune. The superstition is an old one, and it was referred to in the treatise on Fascination (de Fascino) published in 1589 by Vairus, prior to the Benedictine Convent of St. Sophia in Benevento, Italy. In this work he stated “Let no servant ever hire himself to a squinting master.”

Squire, J. R. M. (ca. 1860)
American medium and editor of the Spiritualist weekly Banner of Light, who visited England in 1859. He was introduced into society under the auspices of the medium D. D. Home, with whom he frequently held joint sittings. In the same year, the American minister presented Squire at court.

Lockhart Robertson described in the Spiritual Magazine (1860) some displays of psychic force in his sitting with Squire. Reportedly, a heavy circular table was tossed in the air and thrown on the bed when the medium placed his left hand on the surface; his other hand was held and his legs were tied to the chair on which he sat. Afterward, the table was twice lifted onto the head of Robertson and the medium.

SRI International
Contract research firm conducting advanced research in physics, electronics, bioengineering, and parapsychology. Originally affiliated with Stanford University, it became an independent organization in 1970. Some parapsychological research was conducted at SRI by Harold E. Puthoff and Russell Targ from 1973 through the end of the decade concerning psychic effects on parapsychology. Originally affiliated with Stanford University, it became an independent organization in 1970. Some parapsychological research was conducted at SRI by Harold E. Puthoff and Russell Targ from 1973 through the end of the decade concerning psychic effects on parapsychology.

Sources:

SRU
The SRU, formerly the Synchronicity Research Unit, is a foundation founded in the Netherlands by Jeff C. Jacobs, a Dutch engineer and statistician. He brought together a team of researchers that included Scottish parapsychologist Brian Miller, who now resides in the Netherlands, to pursue theoretical speculation on the basis of psychic phenomena and to carry out a directed program of research. During the decade of its existence, research has focused on psi-guided awakenings from sleep and theoretical speculation on the problem of the possible influence of the observer on psychic events (a particular interest of Miller’s). With the cutback of research at the University of Utrecht, the SRU has emerged as one of the most productive centers of Dutch psychological research. It may be contacted at P.O. Box 7625, 5601 JP Eindhoven, The Netherlands.

Stafford-Clark, David (1916– )
British consulting physician and authority on psychiatry with interests in parapsychology. He was born March 17, 1916, in Bromley, Kent, England and studied at Guy’s Hospital, London, and the University of London (M.D.). Stafford-Clark was a consulting physician at the Department of Psychological Medicine, Guy’s Hospital (1950–74), Bethlem Royal and Maudsley Hospitals, and the Institute of Psychiatry from 1954. He was a member of the Archbishop of Canterbury’s Commission of Divine Healing, and attended the Conferences on Parapsychology and Pharmacology in July 1959 at St. Paul de Venice, France. Stafford-Clark has authored a number of books, though none on parapsychology.

Sources:

Stanford, Rex G(ale) (1938– )
Stanford was born June 21, 1938, in Robstown, Texas, and received both his B.A. (1963) and Ph.D. (1967) in psychology from the University of Texas at Austin. He received Summer Research Fellowships from the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University in 1964, 1965, and 1966. He was a research associate at the Division of Parapsychology, Department of Psychiatry, University of Virginia School of Medicine (1968–75). From 1976 through 1980, he directed the center for Parapsychological Research, the research division of the former nonprofit corporation, and the Association for the Understanding of Man (led by his brother, psychic Ray Stanford). Stanford then joined the faculty in psychology at St. John’s University, Jamaica, New York, where he currently teaches.

Stanford is especially interested in the development and experimental testing of models for spontaneous psi, the factors involved in extrasensory perception (ESP) response, and the basic nature of psi events. He was vice-president (1970–71) and then president (1973) of the Parapsychological Association. He has been a member of the Committee of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was a participant in the symposium “Parapsychology (Psi) Processes; Towards a Conceptual Integration” held at the annual convention of the American Psychological Association, Montreal, August 26–28, 1973. Stanford is the author on numerous papers on parapsychological topics.

Sources:

Stanford Research Institute See SRI International

Stanisława P. (ca. 1930)

Polish medium, wife of a Polish officer, and subject of psychological experiments by Baron Schrenck-Notzing for research materialization. At the age of eighteen, Stanislawa believed she saw the phantom of a friend, Sophie M., at the exact time she died. Soon afterward spontaneous telekinesis phenomena developed. After Stanislawa joined a Spiritualist circle, “Sophie M.” began to materialize through her and “Sophie” became the medium’s permanent attendant, occasionally sharing control with “Adalbert” and a young Polish boy.

In 1911, P. Lebiedzinski, a Polish engineer, began a series of experimental séances that lasted intermittently until 1916. His report, published in the Revue Métapsychique (1921, no. 4) was favorable. Schrenck-Notzing’s experiments began in 1913. After a few months, Stanislawa’s mediumship lapsed and did not return until 1915. In 1906, when Schrenck-Notzing recommended her to his scientific observers, he became assured that Stanisława produced flows of ectoplasm. Schrenck-Notzing took many photographs.

In 1930, her reputation, based on the early favorable reports, suffered a blow. Stanisława appeared at the Institut Métapsychique shortly after a special automatic registering apparatus for phenomena produced in the dark was installed. She produced nearly blank séances until assured that no registering apparatus would remain in the room.

Eugene Osty suspected that the abortive phenomena noticed in séance was brought about by Stanisława’s secretly freed hand. He decided to attempt to catch her in the act. During a later séance, when Osty heard the objects on the table move, he exploded a secret flashlight and took three stereoscopic photographs. Both the sudden light and the developed photographs showed that Stanisława’s hand was free and manipulating the table.

Osty concluded in the Revue Métapsychique (Nov.–Dec. 1930): 1) Stanislawa played a joke on the Institute; 2) her fraud was persevering and organized; 3) her procedure consisted of giving the illusion of being restrained while she temporarily disengaged one of her hands from the restraints; and 4) used this procedure to dispel nervous movements. Osty, however, hastened to add that his findings made no attempt to judge the phenomena of Stanisława that were produced elsewhere.

Stapleton, Ruth Carter (1929–1983)

Evangelist, healer, and sister of U.S. president Jimmy Carter. She was born August 7, 1929, in Plains, Georgia. After two years of the Georgia State College for Women, she married Robert Stapleton, a veterinarian, and they settled in North Carolina. She became the mother of four children.

Her career as a healer dates from her own recovery from periods of deep depression. She combined attendance at group therapy sessions with an interdenominational retreat at a North Carolina hotel and “experienced God as a God of love.” Some three months later she attended a second retreat and came in contact with Pentecostalism. She received the baptism of the Holy Spirit in a Pentecostal meeting and experienced its definitive manifestation, speaking in tongues.

She subsequently developed her own kind of healing technique, which might be described as a spiritually-based psychotherapy. She combined prayer with a probing of the unhappy memories of the individuals who sought her help. She taught them to recreate painful past experiences in a “guided daydream” in which the figure of Jesus is introduced to neutralize emotional difficulties by love and forgiveness.

In her book The Gift of Inner Healing (1976), she describes her work over nine years with various Christian groups. She preached and prayed for Roman Catholics as well as Protestants at her spiritual workshops in over 70 American cities and abroad in Indonesia, Malaysia, Japan, and Britain. She rejected the label of “faith healer,” since she claimed God is the healer, but was also involved in more traditional healing of physical ailments by means of prayer.

In 1977, Stapleton hit the headlines when she was instrumental in bringing religious conviction to Larry C. Flynt, editor of the pornographic Hustler magazine. On February 8, 1977, Flynt was found guilty of engaging in organized crime and pandering to obscenity. CBS News producer Joe Wershba introduced Flynt to Stapleton, and after a discussion on religion and sexual repression, Flynt claims a religious conversion was set in motion. According to his own account, Flynt discovered God at 40,000 feet while on a flight from Denver to Houston.

Subsequently, both Stapleton and Flynt appeared together on the Today program on November 23, 1977, when Flynt publicly acknowledged that God had entered his life and that henceforth his magazine would introduce a religious element. Hustler would be transformed into a religious magazine, and Flynt’s multimillion-dollar empire would be turned into a non-profit religious foundation. At a Pentecostal congregation in Houston, Flynt stated: “I owe every woman in America an apology.” Flynt did not carry through, and Hustler remains a pornographic publication.

Stapleton was plunged into the spotlight by the election of her brother to the presidency in 1976. Through those years she wrote three more books and continued an active life of traveling and speaking. Then in 1983 she discovered that she had cancer, but refused standard medical treatment, turning in-steady to a macrobiotic diet, meditation, and reliance on God's healing power. She died September 26, 1983, at Fayetteville, North Carolina.

Sources:

Star, Ely
Pseudonym of Eugène Jacob (1847–1942), French astrologer and medical charlatan. He was a member of the Ahaathoor (or Ahood) Temple of the Golden Dawn. He was prosecuted and sentenced for fraud in 1914.

Star-Esseenia Temple of Ascension Mastery
The Star-Esseenia Temple of Ascension Mastery is a channeling group that grew out of the intense experience of former Reiki healer August Stahr during the 1991 solar eclipse. She has described the experience as a walk-in type experience, but one in which her own higher energy self was the entity that stepped in. At that time she was also told to abandon the Reiki and the related Seichem healing systems, as she would soon be bringing in a new set of fifth-dimensional energies that would be needed to assist in the coming ascension of the individuals on the planet. Since that time, Stahr has functioned as a healer, a channel, and Quadrant Commander of the Star Esseenia Division. She concentrates her efforts in the training of people to use these healing modalities in the effort to facilitate planetary ascension. In that effort she has discovered a number of new higher healing energies which she has named and to which she offers attunement.

Stahr has also seen herself as operating in the program developed by Solara of Starborne Unlimited around the symbol of 11:11. According to Stahr, 11:11 triggers a precoded response in humans indicating the time of completion or ascension. On January 11, 1992, Solara opened the 11:11 doorway that will remain open until December 31, 2011. The doorway includes 11 gates and levels of consciousness. The journey through the levels of consciousness will move us from the present ways of living in duality to the new way of living as ascended beings.

It is believed that at 11 moments during the period between 1992 and 2011, those on the ascension pathway will collectively experience a common issue (or set of related issues). These issues have been released for the purpose of clearing (removing them). Thus in 1992, at the first gate, financial survival issues were released. Once cleared by a realignment to God, the individual can move on to abundance. The second issues, concerning personal relationships, were released in the summer of 1993. In clearing them, everything not related to Divine Love must be abandoned. The third set of issues relates to the sense of personal power. Stahr has indicated the projected course of issue releasement through the time of the closing of the gate.

As each set of issues has been released, Stahr has developed healing modalities for dealing with them. In 1995, she also initiated the Star Team Mastery Program that would allow people to do their own clearing for ascension with her as the guide, rather than relying on Stahr alone to be their healer/facilitator for the cleansing process. Those who align with the program are initially linked up with a Star Team, a group of spirit beings specially trained for the healing needs of the ascension process. This linkup occurs in private sessions with Stahr over a year; individuals are trained to work with the Star Team and are attuned to the new healing energies with which she has come into contact since 1991. Those who complete the program and begin to work with the Star-Esseenia Technologies constitute the Star-Esseenia Temple.

Sources:

Stargate
Stargate is a name Americans came to know in the 1990s, first as the name of a television series concerning a doorway that allowed instantaneous travel between planets in different star systems. Then in 1993, the US government admitted that it had been carrying on secret parapsychological research, the last phase of which had been given the name Project STAR GATE. Not as well-known, in 1991 Mark Roberts (1934– ), an independent spiritual researcher, found what he had termed the real Stargate, an ancient painting of the constellation Pleiades located at the entrance to a cave. He believes the painting to be a presentation of a cosmic-portal. The painting seems to connect decades of studies in archeology of Egypt, an ancient alphabet (Ogham), and ancient symbols of the Pleiades. The portal seems to point toward ancient visitors to Earth. The real Stargate provides a mental doorway to step into a new consciousness where massive amounts of materials may be connected, mysteries of the ancient past solved, and contact with extraterrestrials established.

Roberts grew up in Oklahoma during the Dust Bowl era. He had several experiences, which he now interprets as extraterrestrial contacts, but then interpreted as a call to the ministry. After two years as a Methodist minister, he left to become an archeologist. His life traveling the world on archeological digs allowed him to pursue his search for what he had come to see as the spirituality he believed lay behind and contrasted with the religious establishment.

He also was able to study with Arch Druid Thomas Maughn and Margaret Lamley Brown, an associate of Dion Fortune, founder of the Fraternity of the Inner Light. In the early 1970s he was led to Dianic Wicca, that form of contemporary Witchcraft that most emphasized feminism. He also changed occupation within television. Over the next quarter of a century, he moved from cameraman to stage manager to director in television programming.

Since his discovery of the Stargate, and the announcement of it at a meeting of the Mutual UFO Network in 1992, Roberts has invited others to share the Quest, especially those drawn by the keys and symbols pictured on the Stargate. From the contemplation of the Stargate, research during the 1990s reached a set of conclusions that now serves as a base for future development. Roberts believes that Earth has been visited many times, from the distant past to the present, by visitors from the Pleiades and Sirius. The set of actual artifacts denoting Sirius and the Pleiades tie together the archeology of the ancient world with the extraterrestrial presence. That presence had a primarily positive effect. The extraterrestrials made judgments about human behavior and offered positive guidelines for human evolution.

Roberts also believes that the crop circles reported around the world in the 1990s are related to extraterrestrials. The Stargate project can be contacted through the Stargate Internet site at http://home.earthlink.net/~pleiades/.
Sources:
Robert's, Mark. An Introduction to Dianic Witchcraft. Dallas, Tex.: The Mother Grove, n.d.

Starhawk

Starhawk is the public name of Wiccan priestess Miriam Simos. She is an international spokesperson for neo-paganism, feminist concerns, and social activism. Through the 1970s she studied magic and witchcraft with a succession of prominent teachers, including Sara Cunningham of the Temple of Tipperath, Victor H. Anderson (founder of the Faery tradition), and Zsuzsanna E. Budapest.

In the mid-1970s she founded the Compost Coven and was one of the original signers of the Covenant of the Goddess (COG), serving as COG’s first officer in 1976–77. She cofounded Reclaiming: A Center for Feminist Spirituality and Counseling in Berkeley, California, for which she served as a director, teacher, and counselor.

In 1979 Starhawk wrote the first of her three books, The Spiral Dance, a textbook on witchcraft that became one of the most popular introductions to Wicca in the 1980s. In the wake of the book’s success, Starhawk lectured extensively in both America and Europe. She followed it with Dreaming in the Dark (1982) and Truth or Dare (1987).

When these idols were addressed, they replied either by gesture or by voice. They would speak and utter the right verdict on any particular questions they moved their arms and shook their heads to an invariable rhythm. . . . And as they assuredly did nothing of all this by themselves, someone had to do it for them. Indeed, there were priests in the temples whose business it was to attend to these things. Their functions, being anything but secret, were carried out openly, in the sight and knowledge of all. They had their appointed places in ceremonies, in processions and the sacerdotal hierarchy; each individual knew that they were the voice or the hand of the god, and that they pulled the string to set his head wagging at the right moment. Consequently this was not one of those pious frauds which the moderns always suspect in like circumstances; no one was ignorant that the divine consultation was brought about by this purely human agency.

“Things being so, one wonders how not only the people but the kings, nobles, and scribes could have confidence in advice thus proffered. . . . The testimony afforded by monuments compels us to acknowledge that as was taken seriously, paganism died a natural death, and that all who played any part in it did so with the utmost respect. They had been brought up from childhood to believe that divine souls animated the statues, to approach these living statues only in the most respectful dread and awe. . . . Their mental attitude was that of the modern-day priest who ascends the altar. No sooner has he donned the sacerdotal garb and repeated the final few sacramental words than he no longer belongs to himself but to the sacrifice he is about to consummate; he knows that at this voice and gesture the elements will change into precious blood and flesh, and he continues unperturbed the work which he is certain he can accomplish.”

Such a reverential attitude to manipulating statues, if true, offers an alternative theory to views of either miracle or fraud. Similarly, in some societies, shamans may invoke divine inspiration by initial trickery, acting out a miraculous situation by conjuring tricks as a preliminary to creating the emotional atmosphere in which heightened consciousness and genuine phenomena may arise.

However, there are also many claims in both ancient and modern times that statues have actually moved independently of humans. In some cases, rival religions did not deny the miracles but asserted that they were demonic, not divine. In analyzing a passage from Hermes Trismegistus concerned with “statues animated by divine association, which do great things, foretell the future and heal diseases,” St. Augustine did not dispute the claims, but commented that “this art of binding genii to statues is an ungodly art . . . Instead of serving men, these would-be gods can do nothing, except as devils” (City of God, book 8, chapters 23, 24). The Synod of Laodicea defined idolatry as “the art of invoking demons and incorporating them in statues.”

Moving Statues in Ancient History

Many reports of miraculous statues in pagan times were undoubtedly fraudulent, just as there are known cases of moving statue hoaxes in modern times. It is well known that ancient peoples constructed lifelike images of their gods and goddesses.

Plato and Aristotle stated that the Greek Daedalus was said to have made statues that not only walked but also needed to be tethered at night to prevent them from walking away. Aristotle described a wooden statue of Venus that moved as a result of quicksilver being poured into the interior. Pliny reported that the architect Timocharis began using loadstone (magnetized ore) to construct the vaulting in the temple of Arsinoë at Alexandria, to suspended in midair an iron statue inside. Such a levitating statue would have been a great wonder if the plan had succeeded. Propocius described a complex clock that the engineers for the ancient Romans were responsible for having flung gods and heroes that moved on the hour.

Lucian related how a certain Alexander caused a statue of Aesculapius to speak by using the gullet of a crane to transmit a voice through the mouth of the statue. In the fourth century, Bishop Theophilies described statues at Alexandria that he broke open and discovered to be hollow; they were placed against a wall in such a position that priests could slip behind them and speak.

It was believed that in ancient Egypt there were numerous statues of gods, said to deliver oracles. The Pyramids Asclepius (attributed to Hermes Trismegistus) asserted the Egyptians “knew how to make gods,” i.e., to install deities, angels, or demons in statues, with the power to do good or evil. Although such statues have not survived, it seems probable that they were animated by priests. The archaeologist Gaston Maspéro (1846–1916) stated (Journal des Débats, December 21, 1898):

“Things being so, one wonders how not only the people but the kings, nobles, and scribes could have confidence in advice thus proffered. . . . The testimony afforded by monuments compels us to acknowledge that as was taken seriously, paganism died a natural death, and that all who played any part in it did so with the utmost respect. They had been brought up from childhood to believe that divine souls animated the statues, to approach these living statues only in the most respectful dread and awe. . . . Their mental attitude was that of the modern-day priest who ascends the altar. No sooner has he donned the sacerdotal garb and repeated the final few sacramental words than he no longer belongs to himself but to the sacrifice he is about to consummate; he knows that at this voice and gesture the elements will change into precious blood and flesh, and he continues unperturbed the work which he is certain he can accomplish.”

Such a reverential attitude to manipulating statues, if true, offers an alternative theory to views of either miracle or fraud. Similarly, in some societies, shamans may invoke divine inspiration by initial trickery, acting out a miraculous situation by conjuring tricks as a preliminary to creating the emotional atmosphere in which heightened consciousness and genuine phenomena may arise.

However, there are also many claims in both ancient and modern times that statues have actually moved independently of humans. In some cases, rival religions did not deny the miracles but asserted that they were demonic, not divine. In analyzing a passage from Hermes Trismegistus concerned with “statues animated by divine association, which do great things, foretell the future and heal diseases,” St. Augustine did not dispute the claims, but commented that “this art of binding genii to statues is an ungodly art . . . Instead of serving men, these would-be gods can do nothing, except as devils” (City of God, book 8, chapters 23, 24). The Synod of Laodicea defined idolatry as “the art of invoking demons and incorporating them in statues.”

1486
Moving Statues in Modern History

Throughout history, moving statues have tended to be reported at times of civil, political, or religious crisis, in which a breakdown of morale or the imminence of national disaster seemed beyond human aid, inviting divine intervention. In 1524, Italy was overrun by French armies and coping with floods, famine, and plague. During this time, when Rome itself seemed threatened, a statue of the Virgin Mary at Brescia was reported to open and close its eyes and to move its hands, bringing them together and separating them in a gesture of sympathy. Thousands of witnesses attested to the phenomenon, and similar moving statues were reported in other towns. After a time such miracles ceased.

A similar event took place in 1716, when Turkish forces threatened war on Venice. One man claimed that the Virgin Mary had appeared to him in a vision and stated that if enough prayers for souls in purgatory were offered up, the infidels would be defeated. A crowd assembled in front of a statue of the Virgin Mary, and some of those present later declared that the statue opened and closed its eyes to confirm what the visionary had stated. The Senate of the city and the local bishop affirmed their belief in the reality of the phenomenon.

Eighty years later, when the French revolutionary forces threatened the Papal States during 1796–97 there were numerous reports of Virgin Mary statues opening and closing their eyes or shedding tears. These miracles were claimed in many churches in Rome and also all over the country. A papal commission examined over nine hundred witnesses and reported favorably on the reality of the phenomena. The manifestations subsided when Napoleon Bonaparte entered the Italian seaport town of Ancona and ordered the statue of the Virgin Mary, which had been one of those reported to move, to be covered up.

In 1870, at Soriano, Calabria, Spain, there were reports of a statue that appeared to move its hand and arm. In 1919, at Limpias, Santander, Spain, pictures of saints were reported to move their eyes or drip blood, some even stepping out of their panels. Hundreds of sworn statements attesting to such miracles were obtained. Many similar incidents were reported in Spain, in 1893 at Campocavallo and on five separate occasions at Rimini between 1850 and 1905. In the latter cases, paintings of saints were said to shed tears.

The reports from Limpias, Spain, were investigated by Professor A. Encinas of Santander University, who compared notes with the scientist E. R. Jaensch. These and similar cases were ascribed to collective hallucination, specifically arising from the psychological phenomenon of eidetic imagery.

In his book The Mechanism of Thought, Imagery and Hallucination (1939), J. Rosett commented: "The reports of mystics and devotees about pictures and statues which moved and spoke like living persons and performed miracles are not necessarily fraudulent. An understanding of the mechanism of attention and its relation to the state of falling asleep, and of the hallucinations associated with that state, offers a rational explanation of such reports."

(Eidetic Imagery (1930):

"Topical perceptual (or eidetic) images are phenomena that take up an intermediate position between sensations and images. Like ordinary physiological after-images, they are always seen in the literal sense. They have this property of necessity and under all conditions, and share it with sensations. In other respects they can also exhibit the properties of images (Vorstellungen). In those cases in which the imagination has little influence, they are merely modified after-images, deviating from the norm in a definite way, and when that influence is nearly, or completely zero, we can look upon them as slightly intensified after-images. In the other limiting case, when the influence of the imagination is at its maximum, they are ideas that, like after-images, are projected outward and literally seen."

Eidetic imagery has relevance to the visual faculty of artists, who can "see" their subject on the blank paper or canvas. It may also have relevance to the phenomenon of crystal gazing.

The existence of various explanations for moving statues—deliberate fraud, sacramental or ritualistic manipulation, hallucination through eidetic imagery—offers a number of explanations that must be discarded before any claims of paranormal phenomena can be considered.

It would be wrong to assume that moving statues belong only to earlier history. In 1985, there were numerous reports of statues moving, bleeding, or weeping throughout Ireland. Cases were reported from over thirty localities during a few months of that year. Interestingly enough, no cases were reported from Northern Ireland during this period, although there is a large Catholic population there.

Characteristically, the period was one of cultural, political, and religious unrest. The cultural unease was focused around a 1983 referendum on amending the constitution to protect the rights of unborn children. New legislation liberalizing the availability of contraceptives and the promise of a referendum on the issue of divorce (not permitted by the constitution) had excited conservative protests. All this came to a head with the 1983 judicial inquiry into the case of an infant corpse discovered with stab wounds in Clonycavan.

It was against this background that statues of the Virgin Mary were reported as moving throughout Ireland. It began on February 14, when several children in Asdee, County Kerry, claimed to have seen a statue of the Madonna and child at the parish church of St. Mary open its eyes and move its hands. An eighty-year-old farmer also stated that he saw the Madonna blink three times. Thousands of people visited the church, but there were no further reports.

A few weeks later, children at Ballydesmond, County Cork, stated that they saw a statue move in the local church, but parents ascribed this to their imaginations. A group of tourists at Courtmacsharry, County Cork, claimed to have seen a statue near the town move, but no other movements were reported and the affair died down.

In July, two teenage girls reported seeing movement in a statue of the Virgin Mary in a grotto some 20 feet up on the side of a hill at Ballinspittle. Soon other people reported seeing the statue change expression or movement, and large crowds gathered regularly to watch and recite the rosary. Many people claimed to have seen the Virgin’s eyes or hands move, or the statue to move back and forth or sway from side to side. Thousands of pilgrims visited the shrine, which became the central focus for stories of statues that moved. Pilgrimages and reports of moving statues persisted for over three months and subsided at the end of October, when vandals smashed the hands and face of the statue with an ax and a hammer.

Meanwhile, throughout August and September, further reports of phenomena associated with the Virgin Mary came from all over the Ireland. In Mitchelstown, County Cork, children stated they had seen black blood flowing from a statue of the Virgin Mary and an apparition of the devil had appeared behind the statue. Many pilgrims gathered, and other young people claimed they saw the statue move. Four teenage girls said a statue at the local Marian shrine spoke to them and called for peace.

In Dunkitt, County Waterford, a statue of the Virgin Mary in a grotto on the main Waterford to Kilkenny road was reported to have been seen moving. Some people claimed the statue breathed and the hands moved from center to right. A local publican and his wife stated the statue shimmered. Thousands of pilgrims visited the statue.

In Waterford, two young boys stated a statue of the Virgin Mary outside the Mercy Convent School moved its eyes, which were full of tears, and spoke of Pope John Paul II being assassinated. Hundreds of people kept vigil around the statue. At Mooncoin, County Waterford, several youths stated they saw a statue move, and a girl said she saw a tear fall from the right eye of the statue and the left eye open and close. Local people gathered at the site.

In the scores of cases reported from all over the country, it seems that a statue was supposed to move, rather than physically shift position. Psychologists pointed out that staring at statues in dim light, especially with a glare from an illuminated halo, could result in optical illusions. However, the essential and more elusive aspect of the phenomenon was the religious fervor associated with it, and the feelings of spiritual grace experienced by many individuals.

Staus Poltergeist

Between 1860–62, the village of Staus, on the shores of Lake Lucerne, Switzerland, was the scene of a reported case of poltergeist haunting. The outbreak occurred in the home of M. Joller, a lawyer and a member of the Swiss national council. The household comprised Joller, his wife, seven children (four boys and three girls), and a maid. One night in the autumn of 1886, the maid was disturbed by a loud rapping on her bed frame that she regarded as an omen of death. Joller ascribed the sounds to the girl’s imagination and forbade her to speak about them.

A few weeks later, returning after a short absence, Joller found his family alarmed. The knocks had been repeated in the presence of his wife and daughter. A few days later, the family received news of a friend’s death and they imagined this must have been what the raps portended.

The outbreak was renewed in June 1861. This time one of the boys fainted at the apparition of a white, indistinct figure. Supposedly, the children began to see and hear other strange things and a few months later the maid complained that the knick-knacks in the bedroom would change position. Psychologists pointed out that staring at statues in dim light, especially with a glare from an illuminated halo, could result in optical illusions. However, the essential and more elusive aspect of the phenomenon was the religious fervor associated with it, and the feelings of spiritual grace experienced by many individuals.

St. Chad (620 C.E.–672 C.E.)

According to the hagiography of the Roman Catholic church, St. Chad was a bishop born in what is now England around 620 C.E. He was the youngest of four brothers, two of whom, Cynebil and Caelin, became priests; the other, Cedd, also became a bishop. He was educated at the monastery at Lindisfarne under St. Aidan, and following the advice of his mentor, he lived close to his people and always traveled on foot. In 664, Cedd was serving as the bishop of East Saxons (London). Making his rounds, he arrived at the monastery of Lastingham where Cynebil lay dying of the plague. When Cedd also became ill, he sent for Chad, who became the new abbot at Lastingham.

Meanwhile, Chad had become the bishop of York. This was at the time when the Roman tradition was replacing the Celtic tradition in the Church in England. Five years after his consecration, the archbishop of Canterbury noted that Chad had an irregularity in his past, as he had been ordained as a priest by two Celtic bishops. He asked Chad to step down, and Chad returned to the monastery at Lastingham. His ordination problem was corrected and he soon assumed duties as bishop of Mercia (Lichfield).

In 672, the plague swept through England again and Chad became ill. At the time, he resided with a small group of monks at the monastery at Lichfield. One day Chad called the brothers together and announced that he would soon leave them and admonished them to live together in peace and observe the rules of their order after his passing. He died later that day, and one of the brothers testified that he had heard angelic singing coming from the oratory where the bishop had been praying. The angels had come to summon Chad to heaven. His death occurred on March 2, 672.

Chad soon became a focus of healing stories, and he was eventually canonized. His relics (bones) were moved on several occasions but placed in a special shrine in the cathedral by the bishop of Lichfield in the fourteenth century. When Henry VIII broke with the Roman Church and outlawed the cult of relics, the bones were removed from the shrine and kept quietly in the homes of local Roman Catholics until 1841, when they were placed in the new Roman Catholic Cathedral, which was dedicated to St. Chad, in Birmingham.

Modern scholars have charged that Chad and his brother never existed. They allege that he and his brother Cedd are variants of the Pagan deity Ceadda and emerged as the Roman Catholics gained dominance in the formerly Celtic Pagan area. Ceadda was associated with healing springs, a theme that flowed into the legend around St. Chad. He remains a saint on the Roman calendar, however, and churches are dedicated to him throughout the English-speaking world. There are also several ancient wells in the British Midland dedicated to him.

Sources:

St. Clair, David (1932–1991)

Actor, journalist, writer, and lecturer on the occult. He was born on October 2, 1932, in Newton Falls, Ohio. He was educated at Columbia University and the New School for Social Research. He spent five years as a professional actor in summer stock as well as did some television work.

In 1956 he went to Mexico and started to travel by land into Central and South America; he reached Brazil, where he worked full-time for Time and Life until 1965. Afterward he became a freelance writer and lecturer. He had a strong interest in the occult and investigated local occult practices everywhere he traveled. He made expeditions into the Amazon and Mato Grosso jungles, lived with Indians, and was initiated into you-
Stead, William T(homas) (1849–1912)

British editor, journalist, publicist, and champion of Spiritualism. He was born July 5, 1849, at Embleton, Northumberland, England, the son of a Congregationalist minister. He was first educated by his father, then attended school in Wakefield. In 1863, Stead left school to apprentice in a merchant’s countinghouse in Newcastle-on-Tyne. At the age of eighteen, he was impressed by the poems of James Russell Lowell and resolved to dedicate his life to helping other people. Throughout his subsequent career as an editor, he campaigned for truth and justice. In 1880, while editing the Northern Echo at Darlington, England, he protested against the Bulgarian atrocities. The Pall Mall Gazette, a pro-Turk paper, unexpectantly held in broad daylight. Robert King was engaged as a special clairaudient and clairvoyant. When he was unable to attend, Alfred Vout Peters attended. Records were kept of private sittings. Psychometry (divination through material objects) was believed to be successful.

In the three years of its existence about 1,300 sittings were given in the bureau. Its maintenance cost Stead 1,500 pounds a year. Besides King and Peters, Mrs. Wesley Adams and J. J. Vango were employed as psychics.

In addition to “Julia,” Stead claimed an influence, calling itself “Catherine II” of Russia, among his communicators. In the Contemporary Review for January 1909, under the title “The Arrival of the Slav,” an article was published under Stead’s name. It contained Catherine’s “Manifesto to the Slavs,” a singularly prophetic script made up of different Catherine messages obtained through the hands of Stead and his secretary.

Stead’s review of Sir Oliver Lodge’s book The Survival of Man (1909) disclosed an experiment. Supposedly, while writing the review, it occurred to Stead to ask one of Sir Oliver’s spirit friends on the other side to write the concluding passage of the review through two automatists, one of whom had read the book and one who had not. There was a distance of 70 miles between the two automatists. The second automatists did not know where the script of the first ended. In his review, Stead concluded the two automatists had performed satisfactorily.

As a result of his article “When the Door Opened” in the Fortnightly Review, the Daily Chronicle challenged Stead on the eve of general elections to obtain Gladstone’s views on the political crisis. He consulted “Julia.” Supposedly, she deprecated the attempt but did not forbid it. Accordingly, King listened for a clairaudient communication that seemed to come to Stead as though from a long distance. It was published to ridicule and public derision. Stead himself did not claim that it emanated from the spirit of Gladstone, but thought that it resembled the recorded utterances of Gladstone.

The sequel to this interview was obtained from scripts through a nonprofessional automatist as letters of further explanation. They were not published at the time. But in 1911, Admiral Osborne Moore telephoned Stead and informed him that during a seine in Detroit with the medium Etta Wriedt, “Gladstone” purported to speak and remembered the name of the lady in England through whose hand he had given a message. The voice then gave the correct name. As the story of the “Gladstone” interview sequel was only known to a few, Stead considered this as a good test.

There was a constant dispute between Stead and the Society for Psychological Research. “What are known as psychical research methods,” wrote Edith K. Harper in her book Stead, the Man (1918), “was abhorrent to him. He held them truly unscientific in the most extended meaning of the word. He said he would rather die in the workhouse than believe that anyone... would tell him a deliberate falsehood for the mere purpose of deceiving him.”

Speaking against the society in admitting evidence of communications from the dead, Stead drew, before the members of the Cosmos Club in 1909, a graphic, imaginary picture of himself, shipwrecked and drowning in the sea and calling frantically for help. He imagined that instead of throwing him a rope the rescuers would shout back: “Who are you? What is your name? I am Stead! W. T. Stead! I am drowning here in the sea. Throw me the rope. Be quick!” But instead of throwing him the rope they continue to shout back: “How do we know you are Stead? Where were you born? Tell us the name of your grandmother.”

The picture of a sinking ocean liner with its attendant horrors often recurs in Stead’s writings. His earliest prediction took the form of a narrative by a survivor in the Toll Mall Gazette. It was attended by the following editorial note: “This is exactly what might take place if liners are sent to sea short of boats.” Twenty-six years afterwards 1,600 lives were lost on the Titanic, due to a shortage of lifeboats, and Stead went down among them.

He was invited to speak at Carnegie Hall, New York, on April 21, 1912, on the subject of world peace. Before his departure on the Titanic he wrote to his secretary: “I feel as if something was going to happen, somewhere, or somehow. And that it will be for good . . .”

George Henslow’s book The Proofs of the Truths of Spiritualism (1919) stated that Archbishop Thomas Colley (who later printed a pamphlet The Forbiddance Wreck of the Titanic) sent a forecast of the disaster to Stead and received the answer: “I sincerely hope that none of the misfortunes which you seem to think may happen, will happen; but I will keep your letter and will write to you when I come back.”

Reportedly, Stead intended to bring Eta Wriedt, the Detroit direct voice medium, to England when he returned. Wriedt was waiting for him in New York. The Titanic was struck by an iceberg on the night of April 14, 1912. Supposedly, two nights later, “Dr. Sharp,” Wriedt’s control, gave a detailed account of the Titanic disaster, assured sitters of Stead’s death and psychic photography were summed up by James Coates in his book Has W. T. Stead Returned? (1913). Coates concluded the messages had established his identity. There was a W. T. Stead Memorial Society in Britain: c/o Victor Jones, “Rosamund,” 7A Seagrave Ave. (Hants.), Hayling Island, PO11 9EU, England.

Sources:

Steen, Douglas (1925–)

Researcher in finance, weather, astropsychology, and parapsychology. Steen was born on July 22, 1925, in Los Angeles, California, and studied at the University of California at Los Angeles (M.A., 1951). He served in the United States Navy and as a mathematical physicist on guided missiles for the Northrop Air Corp. (1951–54). In 1954 he became a freelance researcher. He assisted at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University in adapting four sports to dice-throwing for laboratory research in psychokinesis.

Sources:

Steiger, Brad (1936—)

Popular writer on UFOs, reincarnation, and related paranormal subjects. Steiger was born Eugene E. Olson on February 19, 1936, in Bode, Iowa. He was educated at Luther College (1955–57) and the University of Iowa (1963). From 1957 to 1963 he was a high school English teacher in Clinton, Iowa, and then a literature and creative writing instructor at Luther College, Decorah, Iowa, from 1963 to 1967. In 1965 his first book, Ghosts, Ghouls and Other Peculiar People, was published. A series of paperbacks began to appear in 1966, and in 1967 Steiger became a full-time writer and lecturer on paranormal and ufological subjects.

Steiger produced a steady stream of books over the next 25 years (sometimes as many as six a year), and in their entirety they chronicle the whole range of paranormal subjects. He early turned his attention to UFOs with the 1966 Strangers from the Skies. He would go on to write more books on the subject than any other person (more than 15 titles). Three of these, Aquarian Revelations (1971), Revelation: The Divine Fire (1973), and The Fellowship (1988) remain important studies of the flying saucer contactee movement. In Gods of Aquarius: UFOs and the Transformation of Man (1976), he introduced the concept of “star people,” human beings who are tied by some means, usually past lives, to extraterrestrials. Star people have reported contacts with otherworldly individuals who are preparing them for a transition through which humanity must go. Gods of Aquarius brought Steiger numerous letters from people claiming to be star people. He produced five books on the topic in the early 1980s.

Steiger had an important role in introducing Paul Twitchell and ECKANKAR to the American public. He wrote a chapter on Twitchell in an early book and followed it with an entire biographical treatment, In My Soul I Am Free (1968).

Throughout the 1970s Steiger manifested a strong interest in American indigenous cultures and produced important and empathetic books on the paranormal world of the Hawaiian Kabuna and of Native Americans. He also documented the careers of a number of prominent psychics, such as Olof Jonsson and Irene Hughes.

While Steiger has often presented a skeptical view of many of the claims of the people he discusses in his books, the overall result of his experience in the psychic and contactee community has been a belief that some external intelligence has been interacting with humanity in order both to learn about our species and to communicate some basic metaphysical truths.

Sources:
Steiner, Rudolf (1861–1925)

Founder of the Anthroposophical Society. He was born on February 27, 1861, at Kraljevec, Austria, but a year later his parents moved to Vienna. He grew up a Roman Catholic and attended a technical college in Vienna. While in college he attended lectures at the university, where he was attracted to the great German writer Johann Wolfgang von Goethe. He did intense study in Goethe's writings, in which he developed an expertise. Because of his technical background and his competence in the subject, he was invited to edit a critical edition of Goethe's scientific writings. Eventually he was offered a position at the Goethe Archives in Weimar.

As a young man Steiner became interested in the occult. He was a member of the OTO (Ordo Templi Orientis) for a brief period and in the late 1890s moved to Berlin, where he became affiliated with the Theosophical Society. He soon rose to leadership of the German section of the society.

Almost from the beginning Steiner had opposed what he considered a downplaying of Christ in Theosophical teachings. Theosophy considers Christ but one member of the vast spiritual hierarchy. His differences were brought to the fore, however, in 1910, with the announcement by international president Annie Besant that a young Indian boy was to be the new world savior. To Steiner, and many others who identified themselves as Theosophists, the emergence of Jiddu Krishnamurti and the formation of the Order of the Star of the East was very clearly an un-Christian statement. Steiner moved to oppose Besant and Krishnamurti by declaring that membership in the German section of the Theosophical Society and the Order of the Star were incompatible. Besant revoked the charter of the German section.

With 55 of the 65 chapters with him, Steiner in 1913 reorganized the membership as the Anthroposophical Society. The name of the organization was taken from a alchemical work by Thomas Vaughan, Anthroposophia Theosophica. He created a Gnostic-like theology and during the remaining years of his life, wrote voluminously, developing his perspective in every area of life, especially art, education, natural farming, and religion. In 1922 he introduced the Christian Community as a related church structure for those members who wanted more traditional worship.

Steiner died on March 30, 1925, at Dornach, in German-speaking Switzerland. From there the movement was later able to survive the destruction of occultism in Germany by the Nazi regime. His movement began to spread internationally in the 1920s and is now represented across Europe and North America.

Sources:

Steinschneider, Heinrich

Real name of famous clairvoyant and stage performer Harry Price in 1925. Price met Stella C. by chance when they shared a compartment on a train. During a casual conversation on psychical matters it was apparent she had psychic gifts. She gave a series of sittings in Price's National Laboratory of Psychical Research in London. Telekinesis phenomena were reportedly produced, with changes in temperature that were recorded by a self-registering thermometer. On many occasions, the temperature in the séance room was found to be lower.

Price read a paper on the subject before the Third International Congress for Psychical Research in Paris. It was entitled: “Some Account of the Thermal Variations as Recorded During the Trance State of the Psychic Stella C. The physical phenomena of raps, movements, and levitations of the table took place under stringent conditions.

Price developed a trick table that has since become famous. This table was a double table, the inner one fitting into a table rim of four legs. The space under the table was barred by strips of wood connecting the legs of the outer table. The inner table had a shelf nearly as large as the top. This shelf was surrounded on the sides by gauze of a fine mesh so that the only access to the space was through a trap door in the table top that was easy to push open from the inside but very difficult to lift from the outside. Supposedly, various musical instruments were placed on the shelf and operators of Stella C. got inside to play the instruments.

Price also developed the telekinetoscope. An electric telegraph key was placed in brass cup and connected to a red light under a hermetically sealed glass shade. A soap bubble was blown over the cup and covered with another glass shade. The red light would flash only by pressing the telegraph key. The instrument was placed on the shelf inside the double table. The telegraph key was repeatedly pressed. The soap bubble, at the end of the séance, was found unbroken.

A shadow apparatus, consisting of a battery and lamp in a metal box with a Zeiss telephoto lens as a projector and a Watten ruby filter to project a pencil of light on a luminous screen, was employed to supposedly detect the shape of the invisible arms that moved the bell or the trumpet. When the light was switched on, the shadow of the arm appeared on screen.

To quote the result of this experiment in the words of Eric J. Dingwall:

“When the red light was switched on under the table I lay down on the floor and looked through the passage towards the luminous screen. From near the medium’s foot, which was invisible, I saw an egg-shaped body beginning to crawl towards the centre of the floor under the table. It was white and where the light was reflected it appeared opal. To the end nearest the medium was attached a thin white neck, like a piece of macaroni. It advanced towards the centre, and then rapidly withdrew to the shadow.”

Stella C. married Leslie Deacon in 1928 and ceased to give sittings. Her last sittings in 1926 and 1928 were attended by scientists such as Julian Huxley, Edward Anstrade, and R. J. Tillyard.

Sources:

Stella Maris Gnostic Church

The Stella Maris Gnostic Church, one of a number of South American Gnostic sect groups, was founded in 1989 by Rodolfo Perez and former members of the Universal Christian Gnostic Movement. Modern Gnosticism had emerged in nineteenth-century Europe, from where it had been transferred to South America early in the twentieth century by Arnoldo Krumm-Heller and other occult leaders. The Stella Maris is headquartered in Cartagena, Colombia.

The small group rose out of its obscurity in the larger occult milieu in June of 1999. A month earlier, the mother of one of the young adults members complained to the local authorities about the group and asked them to assist her in removing her daughter from the group. They did not respond. In June, the group went on its annual retreat. The day after the small group (fewer than 100 members) departed for the retreat, Colombian papers carried stories that the group had departed for the Sierra Nevada mountains to meet a spaceship that would take them to another world. The Sierra Nevada has been the focus of UFO reports and many flying saucer buffs believe it to be a place where direct contact with extraterrestrials is possible. The story was given added credence by expectations of crazy actions to another world. The Sierra Nevada has been the focus of UFO reports and many flying saucer buffs believe it to be a place where direct contact with extraterrestrials is possible. The story was given added credence by expectations of crazy actions by different groups as the millennium came to an end.

The story was picked up by international wire services, carried worldwide, and tied to memories of the suicide of the 39 members of Heaven's Gate. However, within 24 hours of the story breaking, Perez and several members of the group went on television, denied that they had any interest in flying saucers, and said that they would return to Cartagena as usual when their retreat was over. The retreat was taking place near San Pedro, Colombia, as the media had been informed some weeks previously. El Tiempo, the leading daily newspaper, had run the initial story without checking the facts that they had at hand. The follow-up story of the group was carried by the Colombian press, but no follow-up appeared in the English-language media for almost a year when Fortean Times finally broke the story of the hoax in its May 2000 issue. Meanwhile, the Stella Maris Gnostic Church returned to its routine life in Cartagena.

Sources:

Stella Matutina (Order of the Morning Star)

A temple of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, an offshoot of the outer order that broke with the Golden Dawn’s chief S. L. M. Mathers, and rejected moving the London temple away from magic toward mysticism. It was founded by R. W. Felkin around 1903. Its members included Dion Fortune, Isra-el Regardie, W. B. Yeats and “E. Nesbit” (pseudonym of Mrs. Bland, author of stories for children). Some of the members of the Stella Matutina founded the heading organization, the Guild of St. Raphael.

Sources:

Stella Tenebrarum

Stella Tenebrarum (Star of Darkness) is a traditionalist Satanist group that was founded on June 21 (the summer solstice), 1993, in Croatia. On that date, three medallions were struck for the three leaders of the group. Each medallion had an inverted pentagram, and they were made to be placed next to each other, at which time the full group motto was depicted: "Vexilla regis produce inferi fulget Stella Tenebrarum" ("Flag of the king flies through hell, shines the Star of Darkness"). Some of the original members of the group, including one who was killed, served in the Croatian army during the Croatian war for independence.

The Stella Tenebrarum accepts the myth of Satan as the fallen angel who rebelled against the autocratic God of Jewish and Christian traditions. Satanism thus stands for the free spirit, rebellion against tyranny, standing for one’s own beliefs and not allowing oneself to be forced into accepted norms simply to get along with others.

Satanism offers an active approach to living one’s life, and encourages the use of magic to carry out one’s ends. Members of Stella Tenebrarum are not opposed to the use of magic both to influence others (as in love spells) or to harm an enemy with curses. They promote the exchange of knowledge of effective curses with other Satanist groups. They also recommend the writings of Anton LaVey, founder of the Church of Satan, as a means of getting started in magic and Satanism. Unlike most Satanist groups in the LaVey tradition, Stella Tenebrarum is not opposed to animal sacrifice, which it sees as primarily an issue between cultures.

Stella Tenebrarum may be contacted through its Internet site at http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Parthenon/2026/stella.html.

Sources:

Stelle Group

The Stelle Group was founded in Chicago in 1963 by Richard Kieninger, a former student of the Lemurian Fellowship. That same year he released an autobiography, The Ultimate Frontier, under the pseudonym Ekkl Kueshana. The book described Kieninger’s occult accomplishments, beginning with his meetings with a Dr. White on Kieninger’s twelfth birthday. Originally Stelle members were also required to join and absorb the teachings of the Lemurian Fellowship, a practice that continued until the disruptions of the mid-1970s.

White taught Kieninger about reincarnation and suggested that he was both King David and Akhnaton. He gave Kieninger his mission: to found a new nation that was to center on an ideal community, Stelle City, near Kankakee, Illinois. By 1970 there were enough members and capital to purchase land, and Stelle City began to rise out of the surrounding corn fields. Some urgency pervaded the creation of Stelle, as The Ultimate Frontier predicted a massive natural catastrophe to be triggered by the alignment of the planets on May 5, 2000. Before that, in 1999, an atomic war would occur, killing 90 percent of the Earth’s population.

Stelle grew steadily until 1976, when Kieninger left and formed a second community near Dallas, Texas, called the Adelphi Organization. It later was revealed that Kieninger had been expelled from Stelle for having sexual liaisons with several married women in the community. A leadership struggle ensued among the Illinois members. A number, including the entire board of trustees and Kieninger’s ex-wife, left the community. Those remaining reconciled with Kieninger. The headquarters of the Stelle group was moved to Texas in 1982, and Kieninger was named “Chairman of the Board for Life.” However, by 1986 new problems had emerged, and Kieninger was forced out again.

He resigned and founded another organization, the Builders of the Nation, in Dallas. A short time later he again assumed control of the Adelphi Organization, and the Texas and Illinois groups separated.
As of the mid-1990s, the members of the Stelle Group are concentrating on applying Lemurian philosophy to their daily lives. The group is currently led by Tim Wilhelm. Address: The Stelle Administration Building, Stelle, IL 60919.

Sources:

Stender (Journal)

Stern, Katherine Schmidt

Founder and president of the California Parapsychology Foundation and editor of Parapsychology News-Notes beginning in 1956. Born at Steetlen, Pennsylvania, Stern attended Akron University, Juilliard School (N.Y.), Columbia University, and San Diego City College. She was a public school teacher at in Akron, Ohio during World War II.

Stevens, William Oliver (1878–1955)

Author and educator who wrote on parapsychology. Stevens was born on October 7, 1878, in Rangoon, Burma. Stevens studied at Colby College, Waterville, Maine (B.A., 1899) and Yale University (Ph.D., 1903). He taught English for many years at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland (1905–24), and then successively was the headmaster of Roger Ascham School, White Plains, New York (1924–27); headmaster of Cranbrook School, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan (1927–35); and dean of the School of Literature and Journalism, Oglethorpe University (1956–37).

Out of his interest in parapsychology, Stevens joined the American Society for Psychical Research. He wrote many books on naval history and other subjects, including psychic research. He died January 16, 1955.

Sources:

Stevens, William O. Beyond the Sunset. New York: Dodd, Mead, 1944.

Stevenson, Ian (1918– )

Physician, professor of psychiatry, and parapsychologist. His special area of study has been as evidence for survival, and apparent memories of former incarnations. Stevenson was born on October 31, 1918, in Montreal, Quebec, Canada. He studied at McGill University, Montreal (B.S., 1943; M.D., 1944). He held positions at Cornell Medical College (1947–49), Louisiana State University (1949–1957), and the Department of Neurology and Psychiatry, University of Virginia School of Medicine, Charlottesville, Virginia, beginning in 1957. Stevenson was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association and a member of the American Society for Psychical Research. He wrote on various issues in parapsychology, but was particularly concerned with evidence supporting the belief of reincarnation. His research and writing concentrated in that area, beginning with his contest winning essay in honor of William James, “The Evidence for Survival from Claimed Memories of Former Incarnations” (1961). His publications include 8 books on parapsychology, 136 articles dealing with medicine, and 70 articles that address parapsychology.

Sources:

Stewart, Balfour (1828–1887)

Professor of natural philosophy at Owens College, Manchester, England, who received the Rumford Medal of the Royal Society for his discovery of the law of equality between the absorptive and radiative powers of bodies. He occupied the presidential chair of the Society for Psychical Research, London, from 1885 to 1887.

Stewart was born on November 1, 1828, in Edinburgh, Scotland. He was educated in Dundee and the Universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh. He traveled to Australia, where he acquired a reputation as a physicist. After returning to Britain in 1856, he joined the staff of Kew Observatory, becoming a director in 1859. He also made important scientific contributions in mathematics and radiant heat.

Stewart was interested in the phenomena of the medium Daniel Douglas Home, of whom he commented to Sir William Crookes:

“Mr. Home possesses great electrobiological power by which he influences those present . . . however susceptible the persons in the room to that assumed influence, it will hardly be contended that Mr. Home biologized the recording instrument.”

Stewart coauthored with Professor Tait the anonymously published The Unseen Universe (1875), a book that created a stir as the first serious scientific attempt to establish a spiritual view of the universe to oppose the prevailing materialistic one. He died suddenly on December 19, 1887, of a cerebral hemorrhage.

Sources:

Stewart, Daniel (1916– )

Professor of anthropology who studied possession and shamanism. He was born on June 16, 1916, in Tecumseh, Nebraska. Stewart completed his college work at the University of California (B.A., 1938, M.A., 1940, Ph.D., 1946). In 1947 he began his long tenure as a professor of anthropology at Arizona State University. Stewart conducted ethnological field work among the Native American Mohave and Pagago tribes of the American Southwest.
Sources:

Stewart, W(ilber) C(larence) (1936— )

Research assistant and graduate student at Duke University, Durham, North Carolina. Stewart was born on July 22, 1936, in Durham, North Carolina. He studied at Duke University (B.S. electrical engineering, 1958, M.S. electrical engineering, 1960). He is an associate member of the Parapsychological Association. He experimented with electrical devices for testing extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Paul Joire

Instrument invented by psychological researcher Paul Joire to demonstrate the existence of a nervous force acting externally to the body. In the center of a horizontal dial, marked out in 360 degrees, is a light needle or pointer, usually of straw, balanced by a pivot on a glass support. The device is covered with a glass shade.

When the extended fingers of a hand are at a right angle to the pointer, near the shade without touching it, reportedly, after a few seconds, the pointer moves toward the hand in the majority of cases. This movement extends between fifteen and fifty degrees. Certain substances that had been previously held in the hand also produce this movement. Wood, water, linen, iron, and cotton produce no effect. Tinfoil, in the hand also produce this movement. Wood, water, linen, iron, and cotton produce no effect.

The Reverend F. Fielding-Ould, in his book Wonders of the Saints (1919), conjectured that the nails were of some horny material the body is able to naturally develop.

La Bienheureuse Lucie de Narni (1476–1544) carried stigmata for seven years, from 1496 onward. Reportedly, four years after her death, her body was exhumed. It was perfectly preserved and exhaled a sweet scent. The stigmatic wounds on her sides were open and blood flowed from time to time. In 1710 she was again exhumed and the body was found still intact.

The stigmatic wounds of Johnanna della Croce, 1524, appeared every Friday and vanished the following Sunday.

Stigmatomancy

Another term for bibliomancy (divination through random selection of words in a book).

Stigmata

Marks resembling the wounds of the crucified Christ that appear inexplicably on the limbs and body of certain sensitive individuals, especially Christian mystics. The most common stigmata are marks on a person’s hands and feet resembling piercing with nails, sometimes accompanied by bleeding. Other stigmata include the seals of scourging, wounds on the shoulder and side, the bruising of the wrists (where Christ was bound with cords), and marks on the mouth (parallelizing the effect of the sponge soaked in vinegar). The most dangerous stigmata is the Ferita corpore meo porto. These wounds were considered the work of the devil.

Some people believe the Apostle St. Paul was the first stigmatic. He wrote in an epistle: Ego enim stigmata Domini Jesus in corpore meo porto. In the first twelve centuries of the history of the church his words were taken figuratively. There were ascetics who had wounds attributed to the teeth and claws of the devil on their body, but it was St. Francis of Assisi (died 1226) from whom the history of stigmatic wounds really dates. He was also reported to have manifested the phenomenon of bilocation. He carried the marks of stigmata during the final two years of his life. He fasted all through the 40-day fast of St. Michael and concentrated his thoughts on the Passion of Christ. Not only was his flesh torn and bleeding at the five places, but...his hands and feet appeared to be pierced through the middle with nails, the heads of which were in the palm of his hands and the soles of his feet; and the points came out again in the back of the hands and the feet, and were turned back and clinched in such a manner that within the bend formed by the reversal of the points a finger could easily be placed as in a ring, and the heads of the nails were found and black. They were the source of constant pain and of the utmost inconvenience. He could walk no more and became exhausted by the suffering and loss of blood. It hastened his premature decease. ... After the death of Francis ... a certain cavalier, named Jeronime, who had much doubted and was incredulous concerning them ... ventured, in the presence of the brethren and many seculars to move about the nails in the hands and feet."

The Reverend F. Fielding-Ould, in his book Wonders of the Saints (1919), conjectured that the nails were of some horny material the body is able to naturally develop.

La Bienheureuse Lucie de Narni (1476–1544) carried stigmata for seven years, from 1496 onward. Reportedly, four years after her death, her body was exhumed. It was perfectly preserved and exhaled a sweet scent. The stigmatic wounds on her sides were open and blood flowed from time to time. In 1710 she was again exhumed and the body was found still intact.

The stigmatic wounds of Johnanna della Croce, 1524, appeared every Friday and vanished the following Sunday.

Research in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries

Marie-Dominique Lazzari, Marie-Agnes Steiner, Marie de Moerl (1812–68), Crescenzia Nierklutsch, Victorie Courtier (1859–99) recorded more than 321 cases, and men comprised a seventh of the cases. This number includes the “companions.” and not those instances in which the stigmatic wounds were considered the work of the devil.

The “companions” or participants did not exhibit the physiological signs of stigmatization in the form of wounds. It is believed to be an inner, psychical experience, noticeable, however, by outsiders as well. For instance, the complexion of Jeanne de Marie-Jesus in the ecstatic state of the Passion became dark and blue, the blood mounted under her nails, bruises appeared on her arms and hands as if left by chains, her forehead and other parts of her body sweated blood.

Of the cases enumerated by Imbert-Gourbeyle, 29 occurred in the nineteenth century. Catherine Emmerich (1774–1821) furnished one case. Count Stolberg, the celebrated naturalist, visited her in 1821. We learn from his description that for months the nun of Dolmen ate small portions of an apple, plum or cherry and drank water daily. The thorn wounds on her head opened every Friday morning and later blood flowed continuously from eight wounds on her hands and feet.
Patrice Pio (Francesco Forgione of Pietrelcina) was a Capucin monk in the convent of San Giovanni Rotondo. Reportedly, in 1918 bleeding scars pierced his hands and feet and produced approximately a glassful of blood and blood daily. Physicians certified the fact. In 1926 the stigmata of Theresia Neumann, of Konnersreuth, developed during Lent. There was no evidence of infection or inflammation and blood flowed freely every Friday from the wounds. She also shed tears of blood.

In some cases the stigmata appear as simple red marks, in others as blister-like wounds oozing blood and lymph. The flow of blood, according to many testimonies, conforms to the supposed position of a body on the cross. The individual bearing stigmata may lie in bed and the blood appears to flow up the toes in defiance of gravity. In the case of Dominique Lazzari, of Tyrol, Lord Shrewsbury testified to this fact. He also referred to the statement of a German physician that the stigmatic could not endure water and was never washed, yet the blood sometimes suddenly disappeared, leaving the stigmatic with clean skin on unsoiled bedding. The wounds were often said to be luminous and to exude a scent. Supposedly, the wounds never produced pus and after death the entire body frequently became exempt from putrefaction.

During the nineteenth century, physicians investigated some 29 reported cases of stigmatization and were convinced of the honesty of the subjects and the objective reality of the phenomenon.

One difficulty in assessing the strictly Christian spiritual value of stigmatization is due to the perception that some stigmata have not been especially religious. Moreover similar phenomena have been reported of Islamic ascetics, who appear to have reproduced the wounds received by Mohammed the Prophet in spreading the message of Islam. Experiments with posthypnotic suggestion have shown that burns, blisters, and similar wounds may be produced on the body as a result of strong suggestion, and it is possible that some cases of stigmatization resulted from conscious or unconscious selfhypnosis.

Professor Jean-Martin Charcot was the first to demonstrate in an experiential the role of autosuggestion in stigmatic or borderland phenomena. Hereward Carrington in Psychic Oddities (1952) cited this case from an original document:

"On the afternoon of May 1st, 1916, I was standing in my hall, preparing to go out, when I saw the knob of my front door slowly turn. I stood still, awaiting developments; gradually the door opened, and I saw a man standing there. As he saw me he quickly closed the door and ran down the stairs and out of the front door. (He was, in fact, a burglar, trying to enter my apartment.) The interesting thing about the experience is this: that during the moment he was standing in the door, although he did not actually move, I had the distinct impression that he had run up the hall and grasped me firmly by the arm, and I was for the moment petrified with fear. The next day my arm was black and blue in the exact spot where I thought he had pinched me; and this mark continued for several days until it finally wore off. I told Dr. Carrington about this two days later when he called, and showed him the mark. Louise W. Kops."

Charles Richet stated that marks of stigmata:

"...may and do often appear on hysterical persons, bearing predetermined forms and shapes, under the influence either of a strong moral emotion, or of religious delirium. These are facts which have been thoroughly and scientifically established, and they only prove the power of the action of the brain upon the circulatory processes and upon the trophism of the skin."

As a mediumistic phenomenon, it was reported by many experimenters, including J. Malcolm Bird, in his book My Psychic Adventures (1924). Additionally, the stigmatization of Eleonore Zügun, who had strange bites and scratches on her body, was supposedly recorded in the process of invisible production by the camera.

An experience, resembling stigmatization, was mentioned by Richet in a footnote to his book Thirty Years of Psychical Research (1923). Supposedly, Count Baschieri placed a handkerchief to his eyes and withdrew it stained with blood. His eyes had sweated blood. He was unable to discover any conjunctival ecchymosis.

Deranographia (skin writing) is a phenomenon of the stigmatic class, but there is an essential difference. Reportedly, stigmata last for months, years, or throughout a lifetime, whereas skin writing disappears in a few minutes or a few hours at the most. A kindred phenomenon to stigmatization is the mark of a burn or in rare cases blood left by the touch of phantom hands.

Reportedly, some devout Christians experience stigmatization. Such individuals usually exhibit wounds that bleed on Good Friday, sometimes accompanied by a personal identification with Christ during crucifixion.

The Case of Ethel Chapman

The phenomenon of stigmatization was studied in the case of British subject Ethel Chapman, victim to multiple sclerosis. Chapman was paralyzed from the waist down. She was unable to hold things in her hands. Chapman was a patient at the Cheshire Home in Britain, where she was interviewed by geriatrician Dr. Colin Powell, who found no indication of depression, neurosis, or psychosis. There was also no indication of the condition known as dermatitis artefactual, when subjects scratch or otherwise harm themselves for various reasons. Chapman appeared friendly, mentally stable, and far from gaining any psychological advantage from stigmata, she found it a burden.

Various witnesses testified to seeing wounds on Chapman's hands and feet on Good Friday. In a BBC radio interview in 1973, Chapman gave a description of her first vision and sensations in the following words:

"I remember saying quite plainly 'Oh Lord, please show me in some way you're there.' In the early hours of the morning, I thought it was a dream. I felt myself being drawn on to the Cross. I felt the pain in the nails through my hands and through my feet. I could see the crowds, all jeering and shouting and, of course, it was in a foreign language. I don't know if they were saying, I felt myself all the agony and all the pain that the Lord Himself went through. ..."

Chapman also claimed that on occasions she had been lifted up in the air and smelled supernatural sweet perfumes (see also odor of sanctity). However, it is believed that sensations of floating often occur in subjects with heightened or mystical consciousness and do not involve any actual physical levitation. Reportedly, in some cases, “astral projection” or out-of-body experience may occur in which a subtle body appears to leave the physical body.

Witnesses affirmed seeing fresh blood on Chapman's hands on Good Friday and it is believed that Chapman was unable to inflict the wounds herself due to her paralysis. Neither Chapman nor her medical adviser at the Cheshire Home seemed interested in publicity or cultism. Chapman, like some other stigmatics, seemed to regard the phenomenon as a mark of divine love due to her illness. Word spread about Chapman's stigmata and people wrote asking for her help or healing. She regularly devoted time to prayers on behalf of the afflicted.

The objective aspects of such phenomena as stigmata take second place to the spiritual issues and their resolution. The rationalistic explanation of stigmata seems to be multiplicity chiefly for any light it may throw on the way that the phenomenon works, but it says nothing of the mystery of the function of stigmata in the spiritual life of the subject.

Sources:

Stiles, Joseph D.

American printer who, in the early days of Spiritualism, received through automatic writing remarkable prophecies of the impending Civil War. The story was published under the title Twelve Messages from John Quincy Adams through Joseph D. Stiles in 1859 by Josiah Brigham. The author had met Stiles in June 1854. The messages were written by Stiles in trance from August 1854 until March 1858. They came in John Quincy Adams’s handwriting and under his signature.

Stiles also produced other remarkable autographs. One prophecy—“I thus boldly prophesy the dissolution of the American Confederacy, and the destruction of slavery”—was signed “George Washington” with every peculiarity of Washington’s difficult signature.

St. Irvyne; or the Rosicrucian

A turgid Gothic novel published in 1811 by Percy Bysshe Shelley under the pseudonym “Gentleman of the University of Oxford.” It derives from the genre of Ann Radcliffe (1764–1825) and Matthew Gregory Lewis (1773–1818) and may also have been influenced by William Godwin's novel St. Leon: A Tale of the Sixteenth Century (1799). It tells the story of a man whose desire for the elixer of life leads him to make a compact with the devil. (See also English occult fiction; Rosicrucians)

St. John’s Crystal Gold

A mysterious and possibly symbolic operation, described by alchemists Thomas Vaughan (1622–1666), who wrote under the name Eugenius Philalethes:

“In regard of the Ashes of Vegetables, although their weaker exterior Elements expire by violence of the fire, yet their Earth cannot be destroyed, but is Vitrified. The Fusion and Transparancy of this substance is occasioned by the Radical moisture or Seminal water of the Compound. This water resists the fury of the fire, and cannot possibly be vanquished. ‘In hac Aquâ’ (saith the learned Severine), Rosa latet in Hieme.”

“These two principles are never separated; for Nature proceeds not so far in her Dissolutions. When death hath done her worst, there is a Union between these two, and out of them shall God raise us to the last day, and restore us to a spiritual constitution. I do not perceive there shall be a Resurrection of every Species, but rather their Terrestrial parts, together with the element of water (for ‘there shall be no more sea’—Revelations), shall be united in one mixture with the Earth, and fixed to a pure Diaphanous substance.

“This is St. John’s Crystal Gold, a fundamental of the New Jerusalem—so called, not in respect of Colour, but constitution. Their Spirits, I suppose, shall be reduced to their first Limbus, a sphere of pure, ethereal fire, like rich Eternal Tapesty spread under the throne of God.” (See also alchemy)

St. John’s Wort

General term for the plant species Hypericum. In classical mythology, the summer solstice was a day dedicated to the sun, and was believed to be a day on which witches held their festivities. St. John’s Wort was its symbolic plant. People used to judge from it whether their future would be lucky or unlucky, as it grew they read in its progressive character their future lot. This traditional lore carried over into the Christian era, when this festival period was dedicated to St. John’s Wort or root. It became a talisman against evil.

In one of the old Scottish romantic ballads, a young lady falls in love with a demon, who tells her:

Gin you wish to be leman mine [my lover]
Lay aside the St. John’s Wort and the vervain.

When hung up on St. John’s Day, together with a cross over the door, this plant was supposed to keep out the devil and other evil spirits. To gather the root at sunrise on St. John’s Day and to retain it in the house, gave luck to the family in their undertakings, especially in those begun on that day.

St. Joseph of Copertino (1603–1663)

St. Joseph of Copertino, a seventeenth-century Roman Catholic monk, is still remembered for his reported levitations, many of which were seen by multiple witnesses. He was born Joseph Dasa on June 17, 1603, in Copertino in Northern Italy into a poor family and spent his youthful years preparing himself for the monastic life. His neighbors were aware of his psychic abilities, though they did not blossom until after he joined the Franciscans and was ordained in 1628.

Various incidents of levitation began to occur without planning or control by Fr. Joseph, and no overall pattern emerged. It was noted that many of his levitations occurred as he was in prayer or engaged in veneration of the Virgin Mary. On one occasion he levitated in front of Pope Urban VIII who saw him hover in the air for several minutes. The pope was merely one among many notables of the era who testified to seeing Joseph in the air. The Duke of Brunswick was even taken into the air with Joseph. While the church built much of its case for being the prime contact point with God from the miraculous occurrences that happen among its members, it was somewhat embarrassed by Joseph’s paranormal life. They kept him from the public as much as possible and at one point had him examined by the Inquisition. However, in his later years, he won the support of Pope Urban VIII.

The levitations of Joseph remain baffling and inexplicable. They are difficult to dismiss, having been so thoroughly documented from so many sources. They were not promoted, and the very people who tried to keep Joseph from becoming a public spectacle were among those who left the best records of his activity. They also remain an anomaly, his levitations finding few repetitions in other lives. Several medieval monks were reported to have levitated, including St. Philip of Neri and Francis Loyola, but their examples never approached the quality or quantity of Joseph’s. The most famous modern levitator was Spiritualist medium Daniel Douglas Home (1833–1886), who also had several spectacular levitations witnessed by a number of people. Joseph died in 1663. It would only be some years later when the church reversed its opinion of him and canonized him. His levitations were an essential part of their considerations leading to his beatification. The case against him in the beatification process was conducted by Prosper Laboritini, who later as Pope Benedict XIV read the beatification decrees. Joseph was canonized in 1767. His feast day was set as September 18.

Sources:

St. Leon: A Tale of the Sixteenth Century

A Gothic novel by William Godwin (1756–1836), first published in 1799. It may have been suggested by stories of the mysterious Comte de Saint Germain and the curious book Hermippus Redivivus; or The Sage’s Triumph Over Old Age and the Grave by J. H. Cohausen (1744).

Godwin used this novel to propagate some of the ideas expressed in his work An Enquiry Concerning Political Justice and its Influence on General Virtue and Happiness (2 vols., 1793). St. Leon sought to show that “boundless wealth, freedom from disease, weakness and death are as nothing in the scale against domestic affection and the charities of private life.” (See also Signor Gualdi; occult English fiction; St. Irvyne; or the Rosicrucian)

Stobart, St. Clair (Mrs. Stobart Greenhalgh) (d. 1954)

Author, playwright, and prominent figure in British Spiritualism. He was a member of the Women’s Sick and Welfare Convoy Corps during the Balkan War in 1912–13, when she served with the Bulgarian Red Cross. During World War I she organized hospitals in Belgium and France for St. John’s Ambulance Association, was taken prisoner by the Germans, and condemned to be shot as a spy. She survived, and in September 1915 was appointed commander of column, First Serbian English Field Hospital.

She lectured for the British Ministry of Information in Canada and Ireland (1917–18) and was a candidate for the Westminster borough at the London County Council Election of 1913. She was a founder and vice president of the SOS Society and chairman and leader of the Spiritualist Community, London, which was concerned with religious and educational aspects of Spiritualism.

She was life patron of the British College of Psychic Science and a member of the council of the World Congress of Faiths. She was an active lecturer and campaigner for the alliance between Spiritualism and Christianity. She died December 7, 1954.

Sources:
———. The Either Or of Spiritualism. N.p., 1928.
———. Torchbearers of Spiritualism. N.p., 1925.

Stoicheomancy

A method of divination that is practiced by opening the works of Homer or Virgil and reading as an oracular statement the first verse that presents itself. It is regarded as a form of rhapsodomancy.

Stoker, Bram [Abraham] (1847–1912)

Writer of books on occult themes and creator of the deathless vampire Dracula. He was born on November 8, 1847, in Dublin, Ireland. Stoker was named Abraham after his father but later preferred the short form “Bram.”

He was a sickly child for some years although quite athletic as a young man. Perhaps his brooding childhood first engendered those imaginative horrors that found expression in his great vampire story and other weird thrillers. His mother had told him tales of the banshee, the Irish fairy whose terrifying wails announce death in the family, and also of the great cholera plague that had claimed thousands of victims in an Ireland ravaged by starvation and foreign occupation.

Stoker studied at Trinity College, Dublin, and became a member of the college’s Philosophical Society, later being elected president. His first essay delivered to the society was titled “Sensationalism in Fiction and Society.” He was auditor for the Historical Society and also developed a great interest in theater. At age 19 he was elected by a performance of the great actor Henry Irving, whose company he later joined as a manager.

Stoker graduated with honors in science in 1870 and spent ten uneventful years as a civil servant at Dublin Castle. His first book was the prosaic but quite useful The Duties of Clerks of Petty Sessions (1879). In 1878 he married Florence Balcombe, a beautiful woman who had been on friendly terms with Oscar Wilde.

After a period as part-time drama critic, newspaper editor, and barrister at law, he became acting manager for Henry Irving, accompanying him on his British and American tours.

Stoker was a hardworking manager and faithful friend to Irving for 27 years until Irving’s death in 1905.

His masterpiece, Dracula, was written at odd moments and weekends during a busy career. It owed the name of its basic character to chance conversation with the intrepid Hungarian scholar-explorer Arminius Vambery (1832–1913), who visited Dublin on a lecture tour.

It seems that Vambery told Stoker about Romanian legends of the bloodthirsty tyrant Prince Vlad Tepes (known as Dracula, or “son of Dracul”). Stoker also researched in libraries in Whitby and London and perfected his knowledge of the background of the Transylvanian countryside, in which he set his fictional count. Some of the weird atmosphere of his story probably derived from the vampire story Carnella, written by another Dubliner, Sheridan Le Fau, and first published in 1871.

In addition to his immortal Dracula, Stoker published other novels and stories: The Snake’s Pass (1890), The Watter’s Mou’ (1895), The Shoulder of Shasta (1895), Miss Betty (1898), The Mystery of the Sea (1902), The Jewel of Seven Stars (1904), The Man (1905), The Gates of Life (1908), Lady Athlyne (1908), Swaunboud (1908), The Lady of the Shroud (1909), and The Lawn of the White Worm (1911). His volume of short stories Dracula’s Guest was published posthumously in 1937, the title story was originally a chapter in the manuscript of Dracula, deleted to shorten the work. He died April 20, 1912. His greatest work, at least to himself, was his biography of his mentor, Personal Recollections of Henry Irving (2 vols., 1906). He also wrote an interesting volume called Famous Impostors (1910).

Bram Stoker’s memory and his association with Gothic literature is kept alive by various societies, notably the Bram Stoker Society (c/o David Lass, Hon. Secretary, Regent House, Trinity College, Dublin, 2, Ireland); the Dracula Society (36 Elliston House, 100 Wellington St., London, SE1 0QQ, England); The Count Dracula Fan Club (29 Washington Sq. W., New York, NY 10011); and the Transylvanian Society of Dracula (P.O. Box 91611, Santa Barbara, CA 93190–1611). (See also Fiction, English Occult)

Sources:

Stokes, Doris (1920–1987)

British psychic who established a worldwide reputation for her clairaudience. Born Doris Sutton, January 6, 1920, in Grantham, Lincolnshire, she grew up in poverty. Her father was gassed in World War I and retired on a small pension; Doris’s mother was obliged to take in laundry work to augment the family income. Her father died while Doris was still in school. She left school at age 14 and became a nurse. During this period she discovered she had psychic abilities, but they remained undeveloped.

At 24, she married John Stokes, an army paratrooper. During World War II, she was officially notified that her husband had been killed in action. Reportedly, her dead father appeared to her, however, and stated that her husband was alive and would return, which he did.

Stokes had another vision, in which her father appeared again to warn her that her baby son would soon die but that she would take good care of him after death. Although the child was perfectly healthy, he died at the time and date predicted. Subsequently John and Doris attended a local Spiritualist church, where Doris claimed she was told that she would become a medium. She was unwilling at first, but gradually her mediumship developed. It principally took the form of hearing spirit voices.

In her autobiography, Voices in My Ear (1980), she describes the problems and temptations of a young medium. She was often worried about losing continuity with the spirit voices and the members of the audience for whom the messages came. She was advised by a visiting medium to use one of the "tricks of the trade" by arriving at the meeting early, listening to what people said to each other, then slipping away and writing down conversations and names, to be useful to keep contact between the spirit voices and the audience.

It seemed like cheating, she said, but at her next meeting Stokes tried it, and it was successful, until in the middle of a communication that had been "helped out" in this way contact with the spirit voice was suddenly broken. She struggled to continue, but dried up and had to break off. After two more spirit communications, her spirit guide, "Ramomon," supposedly told her to go back to the recipient of the message and apologize. This happened at two meetings, after which Stokes determined never again to help out spirit communications in that way, in spite of the fear she felt at losing contact. After that, she openly admitted it to the audience if she lost contact with the spirit voice and simply tried to reestablish the link. She warned other developing mediums to be brave enough to admit it if no messages were being received. In 1948 her credentials as a bona fide clairaudient were endorsed by the Spiritualists National Union in England.

In more than thirty years of mediumship, Stokes attracted large and enthusiastic audiences and also appeared on popular radio and television shows in Australia, New Zealand, and the United States. She often duped disbelieving skeptical reporters and presenters by the accuracy of her spirit messages. Her reputation as a Spiritualist superstar was phenomenal. On her Australian tour, she packed the massive Sydney Opera House three nights in a row, and a private plane was chartered to take her from city to city. A television soap opera was postponed to make room for her.

Yet this international fame came only in later life. Prior to the mid-1970s, she had lived in modest circumstances in Lancaster, working as a nurse, or giving her mediumistic services to Spiritualist churches for no more than modest traveling expenses, sometimes giving private consultations for £1 (two or three dollars).

Stokes moved to London and became well known as a clairaudient medium, but she never ceased to be amazed by her growing fame. She made no showbiz concessions but appeared on stage in a simple frock, sitting in an armchair, and speaking to her audience in colloquial language.

Her fame attracted derisive and often hostile criticism from skeptics, but she met controversy head on and would not be bullied. In 1980 she appeared on a British television show with professional magician James Randi, who denounced her (without evidence) as a liar and a fake. When Doris challenged Randi to appear with her and prove her a fake, he declined.

Stokes, Henry Newlin (1859–1942)

Theosopist and editor, born in 1859 at Moorestown, New Jersey. Stokes attended Haverford College (B.S.) and Johns Hopkins University (Ph.D., 1884). He later did postgraduate work in Germany and Switzerland. He returned to the United States in 1889 and became a chemist for the U.S. Geological Survey. He wrote articles for scientific journals and served a term as president of the Chemical Society of Washington, D.C. He moved to the Bureau of Standards in 1903.

Early in the new century the agnostic Stokes began a search in esoteric philosophy that led him to Theosophy and the writings of Annie Besant. He joined the Theosophical Society in 1903 and the following year also became a member of a small, independent theosophical organization, the Oriental Esoteric (OE) Head Center. The OE had been headquartered in Paris but had a small group in Washington. In 1905 Stokes helped establish the Oriental Esoteric Library as a focal point of occult information in the District. In 1909 he retired from the Bureau of Standards. During this time his former wife spread rumors alleging that he was involved with Anna Marsland, the head of the OE.

Over the next three years he devoted his increased free time to the OE, especially to developing the library, into which he poured much of his own finances. In 1910 he and Marsland broke with the Paris headquarters and established the Oriental Esoteric Society as a separate entity. Then, in 1912, he and Marsland split, and he sued the OE Society for the library, claiming that he had largely built it with his own money. The court agreed and gave him the books. He then aligned the library as an independent but associated organization of the American section of the Theosophical Society.

By 1911 Stokes had begun a periodical, the O. E. Library Critic, which became his means of livelihood for the rest of his life. After his break with Marsland he conceived the Critic as an independent theosophical periodical serving the larger cause of Theosophy. All was fine for a few years, but in the wake of the founding of the theosophically based Liberal Catholic Church in 1916, he turned on the church and especially bishops Charles W. Leadbeater and James I. Wedgwood. Stokes attacked Leadbeater for the new teachings he was introducing into the society and condemned the homosexual preferences of Wedgwood. He went on to attack theosophical offshoots such as the Aquarian Foundation, the Arcane School, and the I A M Movement.

Stokes couched his criticism of the new trends in the theosophical movement under the slogan Back to Blavatsky, a phrase he first used in the November 14, 1917 issue of the Critic. He lauded the groups and independent lodges that still adhered to the writings of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, the co-founder of the Theosophical Society. He did not leave the international Theosophical Society and is credited with reintroducing Blavatsky’s writings to the general membership.

Stokes continued to edit the Critic until his death on September 20, 1942.

Sources:

Stolisomancy

Divination from the manner in which a person dresses. In ancient Rome the emperor Augustus believed that a military revolt was predicted on the morning of its occurrence when his attendant buckled his right sandal to his left foot.

Stomach, Seeing with the

A phenomenon occasionally observed by the followers of Franz Anton Mesmer in their somnambules (hypnotic subjects), referring to the horizontal lintel stones. The whole construction indicates remarkable astronomical skill in mining and transporting the huge stones. The Stonehenge site is composed of three distinct elements—an outer circle of local sarsen stones and two inner circles of blue stones from the Prescelly Mountains of Wales, 200 kilometers (125 miles) away. The first and third circles are capped with stone lintels, and the whole construction is encircled by the horizontal lintel stones. The name derives from the Old English words "sithon" ("sun") and "hangian" ("hung up"), referring to the horizontal lintel stones.

Sources:

Modern Stonehenge

In the 1980s Stonehenge became the center of another strange ritual every midsummer. Thousands of hippies, living a nomadic life in battered automobiles (often unlicensed), reminiscent of the American dust bowl days, descended on the fields surrounding Stonehenge and set up makeshift camps, intending to gain access to Stonehenge to celebrate the summer solstice. But the site has been fenced off with barbed wire and the solstice ceremony restricted to a modern revival Druid organization and no more than six hundred ticket-holding visitors. To prevent the hippies from overrunning the site, farmers annually barricaded paths and byways with trailers and machinery, while hundreds of police stood by in riot gear.

For many years there was a ritual battle between hippies and police. Rocks, bottles, and other objects were thrown, while police with helmets and batons forced back the intruders and arrested many of them. After the summer solstice, the hippies were obliged to retreat to their battered vehicles.

Stonehenge remains one of England’s most visited tourist sites in spite of the fence, which prevents visitors from walking among the stones.

Sources:

Stowe, John R. (1956– )

John R. Stowe, a spiritual teacher, cofounder of Gay Spirit Visions, and founder of EarthFriends, was born in 1956. He lived a closeted gay existence until 1979, when he began a quest to discover what it meant to live as an aware, spiritually-engaged gay man. As with many gay men, much of that struggle meant dealing with negative self images acquired from growing up in a world that does not accept homosexuality as a legitimate option amid the myriad options from which people can choose.

After coming out, he found employment as a bodyworker/ masseur and pursued his spiritual and self-understanding quest through a spectrum of alternative spiritual options from the gay-informed Christianity of Episcopal priest Malcolm...
Boyd to channeller Andrew Ramer. He eventually decided that people have the right to their own spiritual path and that personal spirituality begins in listening to the inner self. He found bodywork as one tool that assisted the exploration of the inner self, but also found help in Jungian reflections on archetypes.

He soon emerged as a spiritual teacher serving the gay community primarily in the Atlanta, Georgia, area. In 1990, Stowe joined with a small group of friends who had pursued similar spiritual journeys, including Ramer, to found Gay Spirit Visions. The primary program of Gay Spirit Visions is an annual conference where gay men gather to explore alternative spiritual options. The work of the group, which Stowe has described as mutual mentoring, provided the atmosphere for him to develop his focus on the archetypes that led to his book, Gay Spirit Warrior (1999). Gay Spirit Warrior was written to assist men begin an inner journey and start to experience the reality of the self, both positive and negative. Stowe views archetypes as universal characters that reside in the human consciousness. Each person carries the archetypes developed to a greater or lesser strength. By looking at each archetype successively, and assessing how each manifests in its particularity, one can come to new levels of self-understanding.

In 1984, Stowe had discovered flower essences, substances distilled from flowers and other plants by a particular method first discovered by Edward Bach, a British physician. Since Bach’s death in the 1930s, the number of flowers processed in the manner he discovered has greatly expanded, especially after the formation of the Flower Essence Society in 1979. Stowe began to make his own flower essences from flowers found in the Southeastern United States and use them in his bodywork sessions. In the mid-1980s he founded EarthFriends to manufacture and sell the essences he had developed. One line of products, Exploring Gayspirit Oils, is marketed primarily to gay men.

Sources:

Strange Magazine
Quarterly magazine featuring “all aspects of the inexplicable as it appears in science, art, literature, philosophy, technology, magic, religion and everything else we call reality.” It gives special attention to Fortean phenomena (i.e., scientifically anomalous phenomena of the kind originally cataloged by Charles H. Fort) and includes book reviews and news. Address: P.O. Box 2947, Rockville, MD 20847. The magazine is now accessible on the Internet at http://www.strangemag.com/.

Sources:

Stratton, F(rederick) J(ohn) M(arrian) (1881–1960)
Professor of astrophysics and a notable member of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London. He was born on October 16, 1881, in Birmingham, England. He studied at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge University (B.A., 1904; M.A., 1908). In 1928 he began his long tenure as professor of astrophysics and director of the Solar Physics Observatory, Cambridge (1928–47), with time out during World War II to serve with the Royal Corps of Signals. After the war he became president of Gonville and Caius College (1940–48).

An outstanding scientist of his day, Stratton took a great interest in spontaneous phenomena concerning psi and hauntings, and his reports appear in the Journal of the SPR. He was a member of the SPR for some 60 years and served as president (1953–55) and vice president (1955–60). He was also a charter member of the Parapsychological Association. He died September 2, 1960.

Sources:

Straub, Inge H(enriette) (1932– )
German parapsychologist and research associate in psychology. She was born on April 4, 1932, in Dresden, Germany, and studied at Freiburg University (M.A. psychology, 1956; Ph.D., 1958). While completing her doctorate she was a research associate at the Institut für Grenzgebiete der Psychologie und Physiologie, Freiburg (1956–58), and after graduation she became a research associate for the Department for Border Areas of Psychology at Freiburg University, where she stayed for many years. She served as managing editor of the Zeitschrift für Parapsychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie and was an associate member of the Parapsychological Association.

Her special interest in dream research resulted in her 1960 paper “Investigations into Various Stages of Dream Recall,” which became Report 22 at the 1960 Congress of Deutsche Gesellschaft für Psychologie. During 1961–62 she undertook a study tour in the United States and conducted electroencephalographical research on dreams at New York’s Mount Sinai Hospital and electroencephalographical studies of the neurological basis of psychic phenomena at the Parapsychology Foundation, New York. She also conducted quantitative research at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University.

Sources:

Strieber, Whitley (1945– )
Best-selling author of fantasy and horror stories, several of which, including Wolvof and The Hunger, have been adapted as successful movies. In 1987 he completed a nonfiction book, Communion, in which he relates his personal experiences in encounters with what he believes to be extraterrestrials. The encounters included an abduction and examination by strange creatures in a flying craft. The response led to two follow-up books on the same theme: Transformation: The Breakthrough (1988) and a novel, Majestic (1989). All three made the best-seller lists.

Strieber was born on June 13, 1945, in San Antonio, Texas. He was educated at the University of Texas (B.A., 1968) and the London School of Economics and Political Science (certificate, 1968). From 1970 through 1977 he wrote novels while working at an advertising company, becoming account supervisor and vice president.

The idea for his novel The Wolves (1978), later made into a successful movie, is said to have arisen from the experience of encountering a pack of feral dogs while walking through Central Park in New York. His other publications include Black Magic (1982), The Night Church (1983), Wolf of Shadows (1986) (with James W. Kunetka), and The Consequences of the Twentieth Century (1999).
Century (1986). His novel The Hunger (1981), notable for the very different twist it gave to the vampire myth, was made into a movie in 1985. Strieber has also designed games based on various periods of history, including a game about the late Middle Ages entitled “1480: Age of Exploration” and one covering computer games. He has participated in archaeological projects in Central America and has been involved with a scientific group attempting to authenticate the Turin shroud.

Soon after the publication of Communion, Strieber received more than five hundred letters, many claiming similar experiences of contact by extraterrestrials or other creatures. His experience was further publicized in an article in the International UFO Report (January/February 1987), in which Strieber characterizes such reports as “visitor experiences.”

Strieber eventually came to the conclusion that, in spite of the intrusive nature of the initial abduction experience, the extraterrestrials were a benevolent group. In 1989 he founded the Communion Foundation to assist in establishing a productive relationship with the space beings. Professional psychologists working for the foundation began to catalog similar reports in a database and follow-up studies involving mental and physical tests with selected volunteers were planned.

Strieber immediately ran into conflict with the ufological community, which draws a sharp distinction between the more negative abduction reports and the more positive claims of encounters with flying saucers, which are classified as contactee accounts. Strieber’s account began to sound more and more like a contactee story of the type that had been written off as either fraudulent or religious hyperbole. In 1991 he closed the Communion Foundation and returned to fiction writing. He reportedly is still interested in the field, however, and has continued having encounters with extraterrestrials.

Sources:

Striges
In Greek folklore, vampire women with the power to transform themselves into birds of prey or other sinister animals. The striges derived from the Roman strix, a night demon, named for the screech owl. It was believed to attack infants and drain their blood. The strix appears across southern Europe, where it is known variously as strega (Italy), striges (Greece), and strigon (Romania). The striges differed from other vampire creatures in that they were thought of as living members of the community rather than the returning dead.

Sources:

Strioporta
Frankish name for a witch. (See also France)

Stroboscopes
Devices that create light pulsations at intervals varying from one flash every few seconds to several flashes per second. They have become a familiar part of the atmosphere of excitement at some dance halls and discotheques, but in different situations they have proved of some assistance in inducing hallucinatory experiences, especially when seen with half-open or even closed eyes.

Pierre Janet did pioneering work with stroboscopes. He flashed lights at mental patients and saw some immediate breakthroughs in their health. The strobes work by a process called entrainment, in which the brain tends to align itself with the frequency of the flashing light. A beam flashed at the right frequency can induce a more relaxed state and cause the brain to change its frequency.

Sources:

Stroking Stones and Images
Cotton Mather (1662–1728) wrote that an Irish American witch produced pain and disease in others by merely wetting her finger with saliva and stroking small images, or sometimes a long, slender stone.

Stromberg, Gustaf (Benjamin) (1882–1962)
Astronomer, lecturer, and author of books on parapsychological subjects. He was born on December 16, 1882, at Gothenburg, Sweden, and studied at the University of Lund, Sweden (Ph.D., 1916). After assisting at the Stockholm Observatory during his school years (1906–13) as World War I began, he moved to the United States to become an astronomer at Mount Wilson Observatory in California, where he remained for the next three decades (1917–46). Above and beyond his astronomical work, he turned his scientific training toward explanations for psychic phenomena. In this endeavor he wrote a number of books and articles. He died January 30, 1962.

Sources:
———. The Soul of the Universe. N.p., 1940.

Strutt, Arthur Charles (1878–1973)
Vice-admiral of the British navy and for a quarter of a century (1933–58) the treasurer of the Society for Psychical Research, London. He was born on October 2, 1878, at Chelmsford, England. He entered the navy in 1892 and was named master of fleet during World War I. He later served as the director of navigation for the Royal Navy (1923–25) and as the naval officer in charge of Dartmouth College. He died in February 1973.

Sources:

Strutt, John William (3rd Baron Rayleigh) (1842–1919)
Physicist who was president of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London, 1919. He was born on November 12, 1842, at Witham, Essex, England, and was educated at Trinity College of Cambridge University (fellow, 1866). At the height of his outstanding career he was named Cavendish Professor of Experimental Physics at Cambridge (1879–84) and then professor of natural philosophy at the Royal Institution (1887–1905). He was also the secretary to the Royal Society for a decade (1887–96). In 1904 he received the Nobel Prize in physics for his isolation of argon. In 1908 he was named chancellor of Cambridge.

Lord Rayleigh became interested in psychical research after reading about the investigations of his colleague Sir William Crookes. He was present at sittings with Kate Fox and Eusapia Palladino. He died on June 30, 1919, a short time after delivering his presidential address to the SPR.

Sources:

Strutt, Robert John (4th Baron Rayleigh) (1875–1947)

Physicist and president of the Society for Psychological Research of London from 1937 to 1938. Strutt was born on August 28, 1875, at Witham, Essex, England, the son of John William Strutt. He was educated at Eton College and Trinity College, Cambridge, England (B.A. 1897, M.A. 1901) and, like his notable father majored in physics. He was variously a fellow of Trinity College (1900–1906), professor of physics at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, Kensington (1908–19), and president of the Royal Institution of Great Britain (1943–47). Financially independent, he was able to create a private laboratory at which he conducted research for much of his life. He published one of the first volumes on radioactivity. Also like his father, Strutt had an intense interest in psychic research, which gave the subject some standing with fellow scientists. He died December 13, 1947.

Sources:

Strutt, C(charles) E. (1907–1947)

Parapsychologist. He was born on December 5, 1907, in Pennsylvania and later attended Duke University (B.A., 1932; Ph.D., 1941). He became interested in the work of J. B. Rhine as an undergraduate at Duke and conducted ESP tests on himself and friends. He went on to become a research associate in the Parapsychology Laboratory in 1934, and his doctoral thesis dealt with experimental research in ESP. He was on the laboratory staff at Duke for the rest of his life except for two years at Stanford University (1942–44) as a fellow in psychic research. He took a special interest in psychological conditions and personality factors in relation to ESP, concerning which he wrote several papers. During his many years at the Parapsychology Laboratory he was frequently called upon to answer objections to the methodology of the early ESP experiments. He died March 23, 1947.

Sources:

Student’s International Meditation Society (SIMS)

Organization founded in 1965 to promote the transcendental meditation technique as taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. In the early years of the movement in the United States, SIMS and the Spiritual Regeneration Movement were the two major vehicles for spreading the maharishi’s teachings, which were mainly focused on college and university campuses. In 1972 the maharishi announced the World Plan, an overall strategy for sharing his teachings with the world and making them effective in the reformation of society. From that proposal, the World Plan Executive Council was formed to coordinate the different aspects of the plan. SIMS was continued as one of the five divisions of the executive council. The council had headquarters in Europe as well as the United States. Last known address: P.O. Box 590, Lake Shandelea Rd., Livingston Manor, NY 12758.

Studievereniging voor Psychical Research

The Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (Dutch Society for Psychical Research), the oldest of the Dutch parapsychological research facilities, was founded in 1920 by Gerardus Heymans and J. Zeeland. The organization was soon joined by a young psychology student at the University of Utrecht, W. H. C. Tenhaeff. In 1928 Tenhaeff and Paul A. Deitz founded the society’s journal, Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie. The early work of the society focused upon the study of the phenomena generated by the spreading Spiritualist movement in the Netherlands, but over the years laboratory parapsychology found its place in the society’s work. Among the impressive research reported by the society was the 1950 study of telepathy in schoolchildren conducted by J. G. Busschbach. Through the remainder of the decade parapsychology gained status in the country, as signaled by the holding of the First International Conference of Parapsychological Studies at Utrecht in 1953 and the establishment of a chair of parapsychology and a Parapsychology Institute at the University of Utrecht that same year.

Tenhaeff was named to the chair in parapsychology and given the directorship of the institute at Utrecht. From that time forward he came to dominate the society and resentment grew over his authoritarian leadership. The tension between Tenhaeff and some of the other leading members culminated in 1960 with the withdrawal of a group led by George A. M.
Zorab, who founded the Nederlandse Vereniging voor Parapsychologie.

During the 1960s Tenhaeff became famous both in the Netherlands and throughout the West because of his studies of and extraordinary claims for the psychic abilities of Gerard Croiset, the psychic who became well known for his work in assisting police to solve crimes, especially cases involving missing persons. Tenhaeff authored many articles and books that initially brought him some acclaim, but as people began to question his work closely scrutiny, it was discovered that he had falsified data in a number of cases. During the late 1970s his exaggerations, misrepresentations, and alterations of findings became a major scandal in European parapsychology. Tenhaeff tried to withstand the massive attack by calling the religious to his support and suggesting that Communists were behind the attacks upon him. However, by the time of his death in 1981, he had been rejected by his colleagues.

The Studievereniging voor Psychical Research survived the Tenhaeff scandal and was led by Henri van Praag from 1978–1986. Under his management the Parapsychology Institute was transformed into a private organization that existed independently from the university. In 1986, Douwe Bosga became the institute’s director and he was succeeded by Dick Bierman, who was appointed in 1991. The institute continued a program of lectures for the public and the publication of its journal, Tijdschrift voor Parapsychology. Address: Springweg 7, 3541 VH Utrecht, The Netherlands.

Stukeley, William (1687–1765)

William Stukeley, an antiquarian famous for his research on Stonehenge and related megalithic monuments in Western England, was born in Holbeach, Lincolnshire, England, on November 7, 1687, the son of a lawyer. As a youth, he collected and studied plants, and studied astrology. He entered Bennet College, Cambridge, in 1703 and received his degree in 1708. During his school days he made some notable contributions to the cataloguing of plant life.

After college he studied medicine and opened a medical practice in Lincolnshire in 1710. He moved to London in 1717, and soon became a member of the Royal Society. Meanwhile he continued formal studies in medicine and in 1719 received his medical degree from Cambridge. The following year he was admitted as a fellow to the College of Physicians.

While making his living as a physician, Stukeley also developed a spiritual quest centered upon a recovery of the mysteries from the ancients. He joined a speculative Freemasonry lodge in 1720, hoping to find there the answer to his questions. He also made a number of trips exploring ancient ruins in England, the first result being a book, Intermatiae Curiosae, published in 1724. His book on Stonehenge appeared in 1740.

Through the 1730s he had accepted the idea first broached by John Aubrey in the previous century touting Stonehenge and related stone monuments to ancient Druidism. He had read and made notes from Aubrey’s unpublished Monumenta Britanniæ, and in 1719 began to make annual visits to study the stone remains in Wiltshire. In 1717 a new Druidic order had emerged in England, and John Toland was named its first chief. Stukeley became the second chief following Toland’s death in 1722. He took the name Chyndonax and became known to his friends as the Archdruid. His 1740 book on Stonehenge argued that it was of Druid origin, and a later volume made a similar argument for the nearby formation at Avebury. While Aubrey had first broached the idea, it was Stukeley who popularized it and gave it substance with his publications.

In 1720 Stukeley moved back to Lincolnshire, where he laid out a temple to the Druids centered on an apple tree covered with mistletoe. His understanding of Druidism was consistent with his understanding of Christianity, and in 1730, he became a priest in the Church of England. In 1734 he published a book, Paleographia Sacra, in which he argued that Pagan mythology was derived from the biblical tradition.

He spent the rest of his life as a clergyman, though known for some unorthodox quirks. He is remembered for delaying a church service to allow his congregation to experience an eclipse of the sun and of preaching a sermon after receiving a new set of spectacles from a text in Paul’s letter to the Corinthians, “Now we see through a glass darkly.” He died on February 25, 1765, in Queen Square, Kent, where he had retired. Among the artifacts he left behind that were sold at auction in 1766 was a wooden model of Stonehenge he had carved.

Sources:

St. Winifred’s Well

St. Winifred’s Well, a holy healing well in northern Wales (United Kingdom), is a site related to ancient Celtic Christianity that has come back into prominence as a result of the contemporary Celtic revival. The legend of the well goes back to the fifth century C.E. and the movement of Christian hermits into the region. Among those who studied Christianity with the hermits was Winifred, the daughter of a Welsh chieftain. One day she was attacked by another chieftain and refused his advances. In his anger, he cut off her head. Where the severed head fell, a healing spring well gushed forth. Where her blood splattered the moss turned red and began to emit an odor like violets. The head rolled into a nearby chapel where Bueno, one of the hermits, retrieved it, carried it to the body, and prayed over Winifred. She returned to life. At a later date, Bueno blessed the well and promised that all who came to the well would receive an answer to their prayers.

While the story of Winifred and Bueno is set in the fifth century, it can be dated as a legend only to the twelfth century. Since that time the well has been in use as a healing spring and relics believed to belong to Winifred were placed in the church at Shrewsbury. During the Middle Ages, pilgrims would go to Shrewsbury and then to the well. Along the route they passed stones said to have been covered with her blood. The wife of Henry VII built a large building over the well in 1506. However, not long afterwards, the cult of Winifred was disrupted when King Henry VIII, who at one time had visited the well, moved... against the monasteries and pilgrimage sites across his land. The stones along the pilgrimage site were scattered and the relics lost. Only a single finger believed to be Winifred's survived and was hidden away in Rome until 1852, when it was sent back to England and divided between Shrewsbury and the well.

When the Church of England replaced the Roman Catholic Church as the official state religion, Winifred's Well remained a focus of Catholicism in England. Pilgrims continued to come to the site and reported healing through the years that Catholicism was officially outlawed in England. When the church was again given legal status in the middle of the nineteenth century, the well immediately became the scene of official pilgrimages. Today, both Anglicans and Catholics utilize the well shrine. The Church of England sponsors an annual pilgrimage for the handicapped. The Catholic priest in the church adjacent to the well blessed with Winifred's finger relic. Though it is not as famous as Lourdes, many healings have been reported from the shrine.

Sources:

Subconscious
A term used by some to describe a segment of the mind below the threshold of consciousness and by others as a collective term for mental phenomena dissociated from those directly or introspectively cognized. F. W. H. Myers, an early and prominent psychical researcher, ascribed various supernormal faculties to it. During the early twentieth century, theories involving such faculties eliminated for many any need to appeal to spirit agencies. Others, however, pointed to the subconscious as a means to reconcile mental activity with spirit agencies. The subconscious may be—as J. H. Hyslop pointed out—the very instrument for receiving and transmitting foreign transcendental stimuli, to which, on favorable occasions, it becomes sensitive.

Subjective Phenomena
"Subjective," as distinguished from "objective," is a classification for mental phenomena that are not capable of objective validation, as in the case of physical phenomena.

Subliminal
A term first used by A. H. Pierce of Harvard University for sensations beneath the threshold of consciousness, too vague to be individually recognized. F. W. H. Myers extended the meaning to cover all that takes place beneath the consciousness threshold—sensations, thoughts, and emotions that seldom emerge but form a consciousness quite as complex and coherent as the supraliminal one, since they demonstrate processes of mentation and exhibit a continuous chain of memory.

Nevertheless, Myers did not consider the subliminal consciousness a separate self but, together with the supraliminal (normal consciousness) one, a fragment of the larger self revealed through an organism that cannot afford it full manifestation. In this concept he came close to the Hindu Vedanta concepts of jiva (individual soul) as part of atman (collective soul).

Myers attributed most supernormal psychical phenomena to the subliminal self, but not as a complete explanation or exclusion of the spirit hypothesis. On the contrary, his inference was that if our incarnate selves may act in telepathy in at least apparent independence of the fleshy body, the presumption is strong that other spirits may exist independently of the body and may affect us in a similar manner.

Myers divided the influence of the subliminal on the supraliminal into three main areas: (1) When the subliminal mentation cooperates with and supplements the supraliminal, without changing the apparent phase of personality, we have genius. (2) When subliminal operations change the apparent phase of personality from the state of waking toward the direction of trance, we have hypnosis. (3) When the subliminal mentation forces itself up through the supraliminal, without amalgamation, as in crystal vision, automatic writing, and so forth, we have sensory or motor automatism.

Subliminal Self
A term formerly used in psychical research to denote that part of the personality is normally beneath the "threshold" separating consciousness from unconsciousness. The phrase owed its popularity largely to pioneer researcher F. W. H. Myers, who made use of it to explain the psychic phenomena he had observed. The view of Myers was that only a fraction of the human personality, or soul, finds adequate expression through the ordinary cerebral processes, because the brain and physical organism have not yet reached a very advanced stage of evolution. The soul, in short, is like an iceberg, with a fraction of its bulk above water but with a much greater part submerged.

The subliminal self, according to Myers, is in touch with a reservoir of psychical energy, from which it draws forces that influence the physical organism. Thus the inspiration of genius, the exaltation of the perceptive and intellectual faculties in hypnosis, and such exercises as automatic writing and table turning are caused by great influxes of these psychical forces rather than by any spirit influences.

These hypotheses have been advanced to explain telepathy and communication between the living and the dead, as well as hallucination, automatism, and all the phenomena of hypnosis. But the two former, even if they could be demonstrated, would have to be explained on other grounds, while the others, whose existence is undisputed, are more generally regarded as resulting from cerebral dissociation (i.e., the temporary dislocation of the connecting links between the various neural systems). (See also Subconscious)

Subterranean Cities
A persistent myth of modern occultism concerns the existence of societies residing underground. The myth takes many forms, including stories of underground caverns inhabited by malevolent deros (dwarfs) and subterranean cities inhabited by the survivors of Atlantis or Lemuria, or flying saucer pilots.

Much of this new mythology stems from the publications of the enterprising Raymond A. Palmer in Amazing Stories, Flying Saucers, and Search magazines. In 1945 Palmer introduced the readers of Amazing Stories to the fantasies of Richard S. Shaver, with whom Palmer collaborated in producing what were stylistically called to be factual “racial memories” of survivors from Atlantis and Lemuria, originally giants but now degenerated into malevolent dwarfs, influencing mankind by secret rays.

Palmer, who helped focus the first excitement about flying saucers in his magazine Fate in the spring 1948 issue, later went on to publish articles suggesting that saucers came from an underground world entered through the polar ice caps.

Other sources for subterranean mythology include the writings of Robert Ernest Dickhoff and Milindo S. Stevic. In Dickhoff’s book Agharta, he describes a vast network of underground tunnels radiating from Antarctica with openings in the United States, Brazil, Tibet, and Pacific islands. These underground strongholds are inhabited by descendants of Martians, who colonized the Earth in prehistory.
Stevic, a Yugoslav-born engineer, lectures about the extensive subterranean cities beneath New York, Tokyo, Leningrad, São Paulo, and large areas of the Atlantic Ocean. Survivors of Atlantis reside in this subterranean world, where they have built huge domes of fiberglass. There are millions of inhabitants, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.

In Livingston, Montana, W. C. and Gladys Hefferlin also publicized a Rainbow City in the Antarctic, founded two million years ago as the focal point of a network of underground tunnels. Heading the large population in Rainbow City are the An-

tients, who also contribute illegal immigrants to the United States. There are, apparently, secret entrances to the underground world through a number of churches, including, specifically, St. John the Divine at 103rd Street and Amsterdam in New York. Stevic also claims that Adolf Hitler did not die but reached the United States through a secret tunnel and now lives quietly in New Jersey.
The second [underground] chamber was the burial place of these high priests, and third that of the kings of Theozapotlan, whom they brought thither richly dressed in their best attire, feathers, jewels, golden necklaces, and precious stones, placing a shield in their left hand and a javelin in the right, just as they used them in war. And at their burial rites great mourning prevailed; the instruments which were played made mounful sounds; and with loud wailing and continuous sobbing they chanted the life and exploits of their lord until they laid him on the structure which they had prepared for this purpose.

The last [underground] chamber had a second door at the rear, which led to a dark and gruesome room. This was closed with a stone slab, which occupied the whole entrance. Through this door they threw the bodies of the victims and of the great lords and chiefains who had fallen in battle, and they brought them from the spot where they fell, even when it was very far off, to this burial place; and so great was the barbarous infatution of these Indians that, in the belief of the happy life which awaited them, many who were oppressed by diseases or hardships begged this infamous priest to accept them as living sacrifices and allow them to enter through that portal and roam about in the dark interior of the mountains, to seek the great feasting places of their forefather. And when anyone obtained this Onan the servant of the high priest led him thither with special ceremonies, and after they had allowed him to enter through the small door they rolled the stone before it again and took leave of him, and the unhappy man, wandering in that abyss of darkness, died of hunger and thirst, beginning already in life the pain of his damnation; and on account of this horrible abyss they called this village Liyobaa, The Cavern of Death.

When later there fell upon these people the light of the Gospel, its servants took much trouble to instruct them to find out whether this error, common to all these nations, still prevailed, and they learned from the stories which had been hand-d down that all were convinced that this damp cavern extend-red more than 30 leagues underground, and that its roof was supported by pillars. And there were people, zealous prelates anxious for knowledge, who, in order to convince these ignorant people of their terror, went into this cave accompanied by a large number of people bearing lighted torches and fire-brands, and descended several large steps. And they soon came upon many buttresses which formed a kind of street. They had prudently brought a quantity of rope with them to use as a guiding line, that they might not lose themselves in this confusing labyrinth. And the putrefaction and the dampness of the earth were very great and there was also a cold wind which blew out their torches. And after they had gone a short distance, fearing to be overpowered by the stench or to step on poisonous reptiles, of which some had been seen, they resolved to go out again and to completely wall up this back door of hell. The four buildings above ground were the only ones which still remained open, and they had a court and chambers like those underground; and the ruins of these have lasted even to the present day.

The Temple Hill at Jerusalem

The vast subterranean vaults under the temple hill at Jerusalem were probably used as a secret meeting place by the Templers during their occupation of the Holy City, and it was perhaps not strange Eastern rites of Baphomet that they later affected were first celebrated.

In his book Recent Discoveries on the Temple Hill (1884), Rev.
James King gives the following account:

On the occasion of a visit to the Noble Sanctuary, the author had an opportunity of examining the ancient masonry inside the wall at the south-east corner, as well as the vast subter-renean vaults popularly known as Solomon’s stables. A small doorway, under a little dome at the south-east corner, as well as by a flight of steps to a small chamber known as the Mosque of the Cradle of Our Lord, from the existence of a hollowed stone which somewhat resembles a cradle, and that a tradition that the Virgin Mary remained in this chamber for some time after her purification in the Temple. Passing through the chamber, the spacious vaults, which extend over an acre of ground, are reached. These subterranean substructures consist of one hundred square piers arranged in fifteen rows, each pier being five feet wide and composed of large marginal drafted stones, placed singly over each other. The rows are connected by semi-circular arches, the intercolumniations of which range from ten to twenty-three feet. The floor of these vaults is about forty-feet below the Haram Area, and more than a hundred feet above the great foundation corner-stone. They are called Solomon’s Stables by the Franks. But the Moslems call the place, Al Masjad al Kadim, that is, The Old Mosque. These vaults were used as stables by the Frank kings and the Knights Templar, and holes in which rings were fastened can still be traced on some of the piers.

"Since the floor of Solomon’s Stables is upwards of a hundred feet above the foundation stone, it seems highly probable that this foundation was dug down that all were convinced that this damp cavern extends from the rock upwards is not likely to be filled with solid earth.

Some allusion seems to be made to these vaults in the writings of Procopius, a Greek historian of the sixth century. He was born at Caesarea, in Palestine, about 500 A.D., and as a young man went to Constantinople, where his eminent talents brought him under the notice of the Emperor Justinian. In 529 A.D. Justinian built a splendid church on the Temple hill, in honour of the Virgin Mary, and in the writings of Procopius there is a full and detailed account of the edifice. The historian relates that the fourth part of the ground required for the building was wanting towards the south-east, the builders therefore laid their foundations on the sloping ground, and constructed a series of arched vaults, in order to raise the ground to the level of the other parts of the enclosure. This account is eminently descriptive of the subterranean vaults at the south-east portion of the Haram, and, according to an author-ty, the stone-work of these vaults certainly belongs to the age of Justinian. (See also Subterranean Cities)"

Subud

A spiritual movement that has grown up around the Indonesian mystic Muhammad Subuh, known as "Bapak" (spiritual father). Beginning in Java, it spread to Europe and elsewhere, after winning support from the Gurdjieff disciples at Coombe Springs, England, led by J. G. Bennett. Gurdjieff himself had predicted that there would be an Indonesian teacher to bring emotional warmth to his system. Subud gained public recognition in 1959 when the movement held an international congress in England. Soon afterward, the Hungarian actress Eva Bartok was initiated and claimed to be healed from childbirth complications.

The basis of the Subud movement is the latihan, an initiation ceremony for newcomers and a spiritual exercise for those already initiated. A "helper" prepares the initiate for "opening" or receptivity to the descent of spiritual energy. This often causes pronounced convulsions, similar to the "shakes" or "jerks" elicited by nineteenth century evangelists at camp meetings, or the onset of kundalini energy in traditional Hindu mysticism.

This energy is seen as having a purifying function and reportedly brings intense feelings of peace when there is submission to divine will. Subud has no creed, dogma, rules, or regulations but makes available the experience of the latihan to initiates. Subud groups meet regularly in members' homes or in rented halls. The movement does not advertise or proselytize.

More than 70 North American cities have Subud centers, and there are many in the United Kingdom. Address in North America: Subud USA, 13701 Bel-Red Rd., Ste. B, Bellevue, WA

1506
Subuh, Muhammad (1901–1987)

Indonesian mystic whose spiritual mission led to the formation of the movement known as Subud. Following some years of searching for spiritual guidance in Sufi and other movements, Subuh had an initiatory experience in 1925 on his twenty-fourth birthday when a sphere of light appeared in the night and seemed to enter his head, filling him with vibrating energy and light. Three years later this strange energy source stopped abruptly, and Subuh continued his everyday life as a government official and married man, while passing through the equivalent stage of the Western mystical “dark night of the soul.” On his thirty-second birthday he had an enlightenment revealing his spiritual mission, and he devoted himself to his work.

The name Subud derives from an abbreviation of three words: susila (morality in line with divine will), budhi (enlightenment in man), and dharma (attitude of submission and sincerity toward God). Subuh’s own name actually means “sunrise,” but he is known to his followers as “Bapak,” an affectionate Javanese term meaning “father” often applied to a spiritual teacher.

Prior to 1956 Subud was little known outside Indonesia, but after that it attracted European interest. When Subuh visited the Gurdjieff headquarters of Coombe Springs in Britain, its director, J. G. Bennett, and followers were won over by his emotional and spiritual vibrancy. During his lifetime, Gurdjieff had made mysterious allusions to a forthcoming Indonesian teacher, and Bennett led many Gurdjieffian students in accepting Subuh as that teacher.

By 1960 interest in the group died out and Subuh returned to Indonesia where he died in 1987.

Sources:

Succubus

A demon who takes the shape of a woman, stealing the vitality of men during sleep. Old rabbinical writings relate the legend of how Adam was visited over a period of 130 years by female demons and had intercourse with demons, spirits, specters, lepers, and phantoms.

Another legend relates how under the reign of Roger, king of Sicily, a young man was bathing by moonlight and thought he saw someone drowning and hastened to the rescue. Having drawn from the water a beautiful woman, he became enamored of her, married her, and they had a child. Afterward she disappeared mysteriously with her child, which made everyone believe she was a succubus.

In the fifteenth century, the succubus and the male demon, the counterpart incubus (which takes the form of a man, to seduce women), were associated with witchcraft, and witches were assumed to have intercourse with demons. The historian Hector Bocce (1460–1536), in his history of Scotland, related that a very handsome young man was pursued by a female demon, who would pass through his closed door and offer to marry him. He complained to his bishop, who enjoined him to fast, pray, and confess, and as a result the infernal visitor ceased to trouble him.

The witchcraft judge Pierre de Lancé (1553–1631) stated that in Egypt an honest blacksmith was occupied in foraging during the night when a demon in the shape of a beautiful woman appeared to him. He threw a hot iron in the face of the demon, which at once took flight.

The succubus was generally believed to appear most frequently during sleep, especially in nightmares. Roman Catholic theologian Thomas Aquinas argued for the objective existence of the incubus/succubus and believed that such intercourse could lead to the pregnancy of a woman. Twentieth-century psychology tends to see such creatures as dream symbols of repressed sexual feelings.

Sources:

Sudre, René (1880–?)

Scientific writer and parapsychologist. Sudre was born April 19, 1880, at Angoulême, France. He received degrees from Poitiers Academy and the University of Paris.

As a writer and teacher he held a variety of positions between the world wars. He was a scientific commentator for Radiodiffusion Française (1926–40), a writer on psychic research for Merveille de France (1924–28), a professor at École des Hautes Études Sociales, Paris (1931–40), and a scientific writer for the Journal des Débats (1935–40). After the war he worked for the French Ministry of Information, the Foreign Ministry (1945–56), and for the Revue des Deux Mondes. Beginning in 1949, he won a number of awards for his writing.

Sudre experimented in many fields of parapsychology and spent many years attempting to show that psi phenomena were a matter for science. He argued for a coherent theoretical approach to psi and believed that the universe was permeated with a creative power that accounted for all psychic phenomena. He believed that the assumptions of Spiritualism were erroneous and that all living creatures possessed some extrasensory faculty. He was a corresponding member of the National Laboratory of Psychological Research, London University; secretary of French committees for international conferences on parapsychological research in Copenhagen (1929) and Warsaw (1925); and a member of the Society for Psychical Research, London. Besides his own books, he translated into French various books on parapsychology by William James, Sir William Barrett, J. B. Rhine, and T. K. Oesterreich and contributed numerous articles to such journals as Psychic Research (1926–31) and Revue Métapsychique (1922–26).

Sources:
Sufism

A mystical movement of Islam. The name derives from the woollen clothing (suf) worn by Sufis as a token of penitence, similar to the Christian penitent tradition of wearing hair shirts. In medieval times Sufism was characterized by a complex system of striving for spiritual attainment and divine grace. The spiritual stages involved include conversion, abstinence, renunciation, poverty, patience, trust in God, and contentment; with spiritual states of meditation, nearness to God, love, fear, hope, longing, intimacy, tranquility, contemplation, and certainty. Much of this is analogous to the yama and niyama of Hindu yoga.

There were four orders of Sufis: the Qadiriyya, an orthodox wing emphasizing devotional exercises leading to spiritual experience; the Suhrawardiyya, less orthodox and with a suggestion of pantheism; the Shadhiliyya (widespread in Egypt and North Africa) with intense devotion and utter dependence on God; and the Mevlevi order, founded by the poet Rumi, which developed the special mystical dance of the dervishes.

Sufism has influenced religious movements in India, Java, and elsewhere and played a part in the development of such unorthodox prophets as Baha’u’llah of the Baha’i faith and the mystic Meher Baba. The major emphasis in Sufism is intense love for God, expressed in the perfection of the soul.

A Western Sufi organization is the Sufi Order (headed by Pir Vilayat Inayat Khan), whose traditions are said to predate Islam and to have become incorporated in it. In 1910 the Sufi Order was established in Europe and the United States through the lectures of Hazrat Pir-o-Murshid Inayat Khan. The order stresses that God is one and that there are no barriers between religions. Address: Sufi Order Secretariat, Box 574, Lebanon Springs, NY 12114. British branch: Barton Farm, Pound Lake, Bradford-on-Avon, Wiltshire, England.

A separate group of the Sufi movement is the Sufi Islamia Ruhaniat Society. Address: The Mentorgarten, 10 Precita Ave., San Francisco, CA 94110.

Another Sufi group is the Sufi Cultural Center in London, established in 1971. It places great emphasis on the mysticism of music, and encourages the teaching of classical Indian music with the more modern adjunct of health foods and alternative healing. (See also Idries Shah)

Sources:

Suggestion

Sensitivity of an entranced subject to suggestion is the characteristic and invariable accompaniment of the hypnotic state and is also a distinctive feature of hysteria. Indeed, many scientists gave to hypnotism the name “suggestion.” An abnormal suggestibility implies some measure of cerebral dissociation. In this state every suggestion advanced by the operator, whether conveyed by word, gesture, or even unconscious glance, operates with abnormal force in the brain of the subject, which becomes relieved from the counterexertion of other ideas and stimuli.

In the view of psychologist Pierre Janet, all suggestibility implies a departure from perfect sanity, but this, although perhaps true in the strictest sense, is somewhat misleading, since all individuals are more or less amenable to suggestion. In hypnotism and hysteria, however, the normal suggestibility is greatly exaggerated, and the suggestion, meeting with no opposition from the recipient’s critical or judicial faculties (because there are no other ideas with which to compare it), becomes, for the time, the subject’s dominant idea. The suggestion thus accepted has a powerful effect on both mind and body; hence the value of suggestion in certain complaints is incalculable.

The miracles of healing claimed by Christian Science, New Thought, and other groups, the efficacy of a pilgrimage to Lourdes, the feats of healing mediums—all testify to its powerful effect.

Posthypnotic suggestion is the term applied to a suggestion made while the subject is entranced but which is to be carried out after awakening. Sometimes an interval of months may elapse between the utterance of a command and its fulfillment, but almost invariably at the stated time or stipulated stimulus the suggestion is obeyed, the recipient usually being unaware of the source of the impulse.

Autosuggestion does not proceed from any extraneous source, but arises in one’s own mind, either spontaneously or from a misconception of existing circumstances, as in the case of a person who is persuaded to drink colored water under the impression that it is poison and exhibits every symptom of poisoning. Autosuggestion may arise spontaneously in dreams, the automatic obedience to such suggestion often giving rise to stories of “veridical” dreams.

The outbreaks of religious frenzy or ecstasy that swept Europe in the Middle Ages were examples of the results of mass suggestion (i.e., suggestion made by a crowd, and much more potent than that made by an individual). Cases of so-called collective hallucination may have the same cause.

Psychical researchers have been interested in suggestion because it involves abnormal conditions of mind and body. It may be an aspect of healing by faith, for suggestion can cause and cure diseases and bad habits, remove inhibitions, mitigate deficiencies of character, stimulate the imagination, vivify the senses, and heighten intellectual powers.

William James described suggestion as “another name for the power of ideas, so far as they prove efficacious over belief and conduct.” According to F. W. H. Myers, the power is exercised by the subliminal self. He defined suggestion as “successful appeal to the subliminal self.” It is well known that dreams may be influenced by external stimuli applied to the sleeper, such as whispering in the ear or moving the limbs. Suggestion is also a powerful factor in advertising, particularly in the use of persuasive repetition and “subliminal suggestions” in television commercials.

Sukias

Central American witches.

Sullivan, Erin (1947–) Erin Sullivan, a notable contemporary Canadian astrologer, was born in Vancouver, British Columbia, on November 9, 1947. She took up the study of astrology in her late teens and soon developed a thriving practice. She married and became the mother of two daughters. She also became a popular author, contributing articles to a variety of astrological periodicals. She was among the founders of the Association for Astrological Networking and the Cross Canada Council for the Fraternity of Canadian Astrologers. During the 1980s she had a radio show that originated in Victoria, British Columbia. In 1989, Sullivan moved from Canada to the United Kingdom. She established a private practice and associated with the Centre for Psychological Astrology, for whom she taught classes in London and Zürich, Switzerland. She also travels to Australia annually to teach. Shortly after moving to London, she succeeded Howard Sasportas as editor of the Arkana Astrology series published by Viking-Penguin, and she contributed two of her own works to the series, Saturn in Transnet: Boundaries of the Mind, Body and Soul (1990) and a second volume offering a psychological reevaluation of the phenomenon of retrograde planets, Retrograde Planets: Traversing the Inner Landscape (1992). Retrograde planets were a major problem for premunitions astrologers, who assumed an earth-centered astronomy. While they moved steadily through the sky on their course, at times they appeared to come to a complete stop and begin to move backward. This unusual action came to be seen as an indication, according to a Mesopotamian astronomy, a plained retrograde planets as an illusion created by the relative movements of the earth and other planets around the sun. Psychologically considered, retrograde became symbolic of challenges presented to the inner self.

Sources:

Summerland

The land of bliss of spirits, so named by Andrew Jackson Davis, similar to the “Plane of Illusion” described by the claimed spirit of F. W. H. Myers in the book The Road to Immortality by Geraldine Cummins (1932). Summerland is the Spiritualist equivalent to the Christian heaven.

Summers, Montague (1880–1948)

Author who wrote about occult history and folklore. Alphonse Joseph-Augustus Montague Summers was born on April 10, 1880, near Bristol, England. He attended a private academy that prepared him to enter Clifton College. In 1899 he entered Trinity College, Oxford, and then went on to Lichfield Theological College to prepare for the Anglican priesthood. He received his B.A. in 1905 and an M.A. the following year. After a brief stay in Italy, in 1908 he was ordained a deacon and assigned to a Church of England congregation in Bath. He later served in Bitton, a suburb of Bristol. Soon after his ascertainment there, he and another clergyman were accused of homosexual activity. Although acquitted, he left the church and became a Roman Catholic. At some point, he seems to have been ordained as a priest.

He spent a year in a parish for a brief period but in 1911 became a teacher. Over the next decades he pursued the life of an independent scholar, which led him to become a respected authority on the literature and drama of the Restoration era and on the occult. A deep expertise emerged fully in the 1930s with a series of texts—The Restoration Theatre (1934), A Bibliography of Restoration Drama (1935), The Gothic Quest: A History of the Gothic Novel (1938), and A Gothic Bibliography (1940).

Summers reached a more popular audience with his interest in the occult and some of the more esoteric areas of folklore. Once he retired from his teaching post in 1925, he devoted his full time to research and writing. His first important book, and possibly still his best known, A History of Witchcraft and Demonology, appeared in 1926. It was followed by Geography of Witchcraft (1927). He moved on to complete his massive surveys of vampirism: The Vampire: His Kith and Kin (1928) and The Vampire in Europe (1929). He also edited English editions of Malleus Maleficarum (The Witch’s Hammer, 1928), Compendium Maleficarum (1929), Demonolatry (1930), and Reginald Scot’s The Discoverie of Witchcraft (1950). His occult interests continued with his study of The Werewolf (1933) and Witchcraft and Black Magic (1946).

Summers wrote as a conservative Catholic who retained pre-Enlightenment views concerning the reality of evil supernaturalism. Such views distracted from his otherwise scholarly perspectives on witchcraft and vampires, both of which he believed existed.

Summers died August 10, 1948, in England. He wrote an autobiographical study, which was published in 1980 as The Galanty Show.

Sources:

Summit Lighthouse See Church Universal and Triumphant

Summons by the Dying

It was once maintained by theologians that if anyone who was unjustly accused or persecuted should, with his dying breath, summon his oppressor to appear before the supreme tribunal, the person thus summoned would die on the day fixed by his innocent victim. Thus the grand master of the Templars cited the pope and the king of France to appear before God on a certain date, and as the story goes, both died at the appointed time.

François I, duke of Brittany, hired assassins to murder his brother in 1450. The dying prince summoned his murderer before the highest of all courts, and François shortly expired. Yet another instance is that of Ferdinand IV of Spain, who was summoned by two nobles whom he had condemned unjustly; he died at the end of 30 days.

Many more examples could be quoted to show how firmly rooted was this belief in the power of the dying to avenge their death by supernatural means. Fear, and possibly remorse, acting on the imagination of the guilty person might well cause him to expire at the stated time, and authenticated accounts of death caused by these agents are not unknown. This conclusion is further borne out by the fact that if the condemned man was guilty—that is, if the judge’s conscience was clear—the summons had no effect.

An old story tells of Gonzalo of Cordova (1453–1513), who sentenced a soldier to death for sorcery. The soldier exclaimed that he was innocent and summoned Gonzalo to appear before God. “Go, then,” said the judge, “and hasten the proceedings.
My brother who is in heaven, will appear for me.” Gonzalo did not die at that time, as he believed he had acted justly and had no fear of the consequences of the summons.

Sundari, T(irunelveli) A(vudaippan) (1934—)

School psychologist who has also taken an active interest in parapsychology. She was born on December 25, 1934, at Dindigul, Madras State, India. She studied at Presidency College, Madras, and Madras Christian College (M.A., 1959). After her graduation she went to work as a psychologist for the Government Girls’ Approved School and the Vigilance Home, Madras. Her master’s thesis was titled “Experimental Studies in Time Perceptions” and she has attempted to draw subjects in precognition. She has also collected data relating to clairvoyance and telepathy.

Sources:

Sunderland, La Roy (1804–1885)

Methodist minister, abolitionist, and magnetist. Sunderland was born May 18, 1804, in Exeter, Rhode Island. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker. He became converted to Methodism and became a revivalist preacher at the age of 18. He had a reputation as an orator of great power and was prominent in the temperance and antislavery movement, presiding at the meeting in New York in October 1834 when the first Methodist antislavery society was organized. He was a delegate to the first antislavery convention at Cincinnati in 1836 and the World Convention in London in 1843.

In 1853 he withdrew from the ministry and two years later became one of the founders of Zion’s Watchman, the antislavery periodical for the Methodist abolitionists in New England. He edited the tabloid for the next seven years. In 1842 he joined a number of his socially active colleagues in withdrawing from the Methodist Episcopal Church and founding the Wesleyan Methodist Church. However, at the same time, he was undertaking a crisis of faith. A noted evangelist, he had come to feel that his abilities were a result of hypnotic powers. He had concluded that conversion was a spontaneous, not a supernatural, action. His line of reasoning led him to the conclusion that religion was a fraud.

In 1842 he founded and also edited the Magnet in which he expounded his beliefs in mesmeric power and suggestion. He made a special study of animal magnetism and mesmerism, and in 1843 published Pathetism; With Practical Instructions: Demonstrating the Falsity of the Hitherto Prevalent Assumptions in Regard to What Has Been Called “Mesmerism” and “Neurology,” and Illustrating Those Laws Which Induce Somnambulism, Second Sight, Sleep, Dreaming, Trance, and Clairvoyance, with Numerous Facts Tending to Show the Pathology of Monomania, Insanity, Witchcraft, and Various Other Mental or Nervous Phenomena. Sunderland was also an exponent of phrenology. Of special interest is the fact that he sometimes exhibited painless tooth extraction with entranced subjects, and on two occasions even the dentist was hypnotized. Sunderland’s ideas were mentioned by James Braid, whose term “hypnotism” eventually won general consent.

In 1868, Sunderland’s doubts about spirit phenomena returned, and in his book The Trance and Correlative Phenomena he states that neither mediums nor spirits have ever been able to show where human actions end and the real spiritual begins in phenomena.

In the last years of his life he became an infidel and advocated atheism. He died in Quincy, Massachusetts, on May 15, 1885, reportedly having a happy end in spite of his disbelief in any afterlife.

Sources:
Sunderland, La Roy. “An Appeal on the Subject of Slavery.” Zion’s Watchman (December 5, 1834).
———. Pathetism; With Practical Instructions: Demonstrating the Falsity of the Hitherto Prevalent Assumptions in Regard to What Has Been Called “Mesmerism” and “Neurology,” and Illustrating Those Laws Which Induce Somnambulism, Second Sight, Sleep, Dreaming, Trance, and Clairvoyance, with Numerous Facts Tending to Show the Pathology of Monomania, Insanity, Witchcraft, and Various Other Mental or Nervous Phenomena. Boston: White and Potter, 1847.

Suns Ahman Ishrael—I:A:O: (Organization)

A religious/magic organization drawing upon Mormon traditions. It was founded in 1981 by presiding Patriarch David Asia Israel and four other former members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. The group believes that angels continue to visit and deliver messages to humans, and David Israel claims to receive regular revelations in the form of morning and evening oracles. Besides the Bible and the Book of Mormon, the Suns Ahman Ishrael (SAI) accepts a wide variety of materials as scripture, including ancient apocryphal writings (Gospel of Thomas, Gospel of Philip, Book of Enoch, writings from Nag Hammadi) and modern Mormon revelations (Oracles of Mohonri, The Order of the Sons of Zadok). The group believes in a secret oral tradition passed from Moses to the Essenes, to the Gnostics, and eventually to Joseph Smith Jr. That tradition is believed to be preserved in mystical books such as the Pistis Sophia and Sepher Yetzira.

A 22-item statement of SAI beliefs posits a heavenly hierarchy consisting of the Heavenly Father and Mother; their son, Jesus Christ; the Holy Spirit; angels and archangels; and ministers of the flame (righteous humans made perfect). Human beings are the literal offspring of the heavenly parents and have come into earthly existence to experience the mystery of mortality. Redemption for humans comes only through surrendering their life to Yeshu-Maria the Christ and subsequently developing a relationship with the heavenly hierarchy in the holy temple ordinances and ritualistic ceremonies. The SAI also follows the Old Testament feasts and holy days.

The SAI is headed by a presiding patriarch and matriarch under whom function (when the organization is at full strength) a first presidency, twelve apostles, seven “arch seventies,” and twelve “stake princes.” Each stake is headed by twelve high counselors, a “quorum of seventy,” and twelve bishops. The church endorses the practice of polygamy, but also believes in perfect equality of the sexes. Women are accepted into the priesthood on an equal basis with men.
SAI publishes a monthly periodical, Stone Magazine. During the 1980s the group developed an international following in England, Norway, Japan, and the Netherlands. Address: Chevrah B’Qor Community, HC 65, Box 535, Canedbeds, AZ 86022.

Superet Light Doctrine Church

The Superet Light Doctrine Church is an international religious movement that developed from the spiritual teachings of its founder, Dr. Josephine De Croix Trust (d. 1957), called Mother Trust within the movement. She is described as a Light Scientist who rediscovered Jesus’ religion because of a special gift she had to see the light, vibrations, and aura of Jesus’ words. According to Mother Trust, she was able to see auras, or the light emanations that psychics claim to see around all objects, from the age of four. As a teenager she developed tuberculosis, at that time an incurable disease, but she claimed she was healed by Jesus, who appeared to her in a vision. When she was a young woman living in New York City, she gained a reputation as a miracle healer. Important for her future teaching work, she discovered while reading the Bible that Jesus’ words, and only Jesus’ words, shone with a light.

In a later revelation she was given the secret of the Holy Spirit as the Mother God, a doctrine not previously revealed because males looked upon females as little more than breeders. In addition, the Holy Spirit told her, “This is the new name, Superet, which is the everlasting Fire in God’s sacred purple Heart.”

The Superet Science taught by Mother Trust is the manifestation of God’s light through our light atom aura. All substances that possess magnetism, especially all life, have an aura. As an aura scientist, Mother Trust was able to see both the inner (light of the soul) and outer aura. We produce the light atom aura, which is capable of receiving God’s light, by developing our inner soul aura. We can then use that light for healing and to become successful in life.

The Superet Light doctrine is presented in the more than 25 books written by Mother Trust and in several sets of lessons. The Superet Light also founded the Prince of Peace Movement, an interreligious peace movement, on Christmas Day 1938 in Bethlehem, the site of the Nativity.

The church has congregations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, Panama, and Nigeria. It issues the biennial Newsletter of the Superet Brotherhood and Sisterhood. There are Prince of Peace clubs in the United States, Nigeria, Panama, Mexico, Trinidad, and the Bahamas. It is headquartered at 2516 W. Third St., Los Angeles, CA 90057.

Sources:

Super-Extrasensory Perception

Term used by parapsychologists for the hypothesis that some individuals may have unlimited powers of acquiring information from living persons or objects, thus making the conventional Spiritualist explanation of disincarnate entities unnecessary.

Supernatural

An occurrence in violation of the known laws of nature. This was a concept that developed as the idea of a law-abiding nature was developed in the Middle Ages. The supernatural realm included both the heavenly world of God and the angels and the world of Satan and demons.

Many leaders of the Enlightenment of the eighteenth century were exponents of Deism, a view that drew a sharp line between the natural and supernatural realms and denied that the two interact. Spiritualism reacted to such a view: it suggested that phenomena that had previously been viewed as supernatural actually happened, and it also suggested that they occurred in accordance with natural laws, laws as yet unknown or defined by science.

Now, the term “paranormal” is more generally used to describe such extraordinary phenomena.

Supernormal

A term substituted in psychical research for “supernatural.” It was coined by F. W. H. Myers and is applied to phenomena that are beyond what usually happens—beyond, that is, in the sense of suggesting unknown physical laws. While supernormal phenomena point to new powers, abnormal phenomena indicate the degeneration of powers already acquired. The term “paranormal” is now preferred.

Supersensonic

Term devised by New Age teacher Christopher Hills to indicate a science of subtle energy therapeutics, involving radionics, radionomics, homeopathy, Bach flower remedies, and related fields.

Supreme Council of the Independent Associated Spiritualists

Founded in 1925 as a federation of churches and groups of churches concerned with Spiritualism. It participated in research on psychic phenomena, psychic photography, and spiritual healing. It was affiliated with Duke Research Foundation. Last known address: 7230 Fourth St. North, #2304, St. Petersburg, FL 33702.

Survival

The continued possession of personality after the change called death. It is a fundamental doctrine of Spiritualism that Spiritualist phenomena demonstrate survival, and the investigation of that phenomena has been a major aspect of psychical research. The emergence of parapsychology represented, in part, a distinct reorientation of priorities away from survival research.

The basis of survival is the contention that mind can exist independently of the brain, that thought is not the result of changes in the brain, but that these changes (as William James suggested in his book Human Immortality, 1903) merely coincide with the flow of thought through it. The brain fulfills the role of an instrument of transmission. Thought transference and experiments in telepathy furnished the first scientific support of this contention.

The trance communications received through the mediumship of Leonora Piper convinced many famous skeptical investigators that the communicators had survived the change of death. Even Eleanor Sidgwick admitted in her brilliant but extremely skeptical study of Piper’s phenomena: “Veridical communications are received, some of which, there is good reason to believe, come from the dead, and therefore imply a genuine communicator in the background." (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 28, December 1915, p. 204.) The arguments for and against survival are mainly centered around the evidential value of such communications. The first and most powerful point of attack is made on the subconscious front. The communicating personality is said to be artificial, a masquerading secondary self, and that supernormal information lies-out artificially within the bounds of acquisition of the subconscious mind.

It is also pointed out that many of the communications are erroneous, of a living nature, uncharacteristic of the dead, and easily obtainable by fraudulent means.

Those who argue for survival deny the sufficiency of subconscious powers as an explanation for communications, pointing to the distinct personalities of the communicators, their greatly differing abilities to communicate, their recognition of old friends, their knowledge of current events, their temper, memories, and ability to give information outside the mind of everybody present and perhaps of everybody living.

They also point out the inconsistency of the telepathic theory in that it gradually leads to the supposition of a cosmic mind that is tapped by the telepathist, forming thereby a more far-reaching and less justified theory than individual survival. As evidence against telepathy, the results of some cross-correspondences and book (and newspaper) tests are quoted.

Philosophic speculation has often supported the concept of survival. P. G. Tait and Balfour Stewart posit in their book, The Unseen Universe (1875), that the main realities of the universe are not in matter at all, but in the ether of space. Although the concept of the ether has since been refuted, the enigma of the relationship between matter and consciousness remains, and it is feasible that consciousness continues to survive the death and disintegration of the physical body. This implies that consciousness is a superior system to matter.

According to Sir Oliver Lodge, “the marvel is that we are associated with matter at all . . . I used to say that death was an adventure to which we might look forward. So it is; but I believe that really and truly it is earth-life that is the adventure. It is this earth-life that has been the strange and exceptional thing. The wonder is that we ever succeeded in entering a matter body at all. Many fail.” (Phantom Walls, 1929). In the same book he also considers the possibility of grades of survival, stating: “Now survival only applies to things that really exist. If there is no individuality, then there is nothing to persist. Whether all human beings have sufficient personality to make their individual persistence likely is a question that may be argued. Whether some of the higher animals have acquired a kind of individuality, a character and wealth of affection which seem worthy of continued existence, may also be argued. There may be many grades of personality, and accordingly there may be many grades of survival.”

The subjective experience of out-of-the-body travel or astral projection is often cited as presumptive evidence that the personality can exist independently of the body.

Sources:

Baird, Alexander T. One Hundred Cases for Survival After Death. New York: Bernard Ackerman, 1944.

Survival Joint Research Committee Trust

British organization founded in 1963, “exclusively concerned with survival of human personality after bodily death.”

In November 1987, the trust held a one-day E. J. Dingwall Memorial Conference on “Science and Survival.” The trust meets regularly to discuss experimental design and conduct experiments, and may be contacted at 47 Mayfield Rd., Hornsey, London, N8 9LL, England.

The Survival League

British organization founded in London by Mrs. C. A. Dawson-Scott in October 1929 to affirm the unity of all religions and spread the knowledge of the scientific demonstrability of survival after death. The first chairman was Spiritualist author H. Dennis Bradley. The Survival League of America was an affiliated organization. The league published Survival Magazine. The organization did not survive World War II.

Survival Research Foundation

Incorporated in 1971 by author and psychical researcher Susy Smith and attorney Frank C. Tribble, a long-time leader in the Spiritual Frontier Fellowship. The foundation engaged in scientific research into anomalous phenomena that lie outside the traditional disciplines of science.

The foundation works in the field of end of life care and support as well as develops protocols designed to communicate with comatose patients to determine their wishes with respect to the withdrawal or withholding of life support. The foundation also promotes a cipher test devised by Arthur S. Berger to help lessen grief during the bereavement process.

The foundation may be reached c/o the current president, Arthur Burger, P.O. Box 63-0026, Miami, Florida 33163-0026.

Swaffer, Hannen (1879–1962)

Journalist, drama critic, author, and publicist for Spiritualism. He was born on November 1, 1879, in Lindfield, Sussex, England, and was educated at Stroud Green Grammar School. The family moved to London, where young Swaffer discovered that his neighbor was a journalist; he immediately decided that this would be his profession. Many years later, that neighbor worked for Swaffer on the Weekly Dispatch.

Swaffer joined the Daily Mail in 1902 and spent a number of years working under Lord Northcliffe, becoming, in succession, news editor, art editor, night editor, and assistant editor of the Daily Mirror. He originated a gossip column in the Daily Sketch that was soon extensively copied by other newspapers. He also worked on the Daily Herald and was drama critic for the Daily Express. He was editor of the Weekly Dispatch, and later he was editor of The People. For many years, “Swaff” was a familiar and eccentric figure in London’s Fleet Street, center of the national newspaper offices. He affected somewhat Bohemian dress, as befitted a drama critic, and was popularly known as "The Poet."

He became convinced of survival in 1924, through attending direct voice sittings with the medium Gladys Osborne Leonard in the circle of H. Dennis Bradley. These sittings were strongly evidential of the survival of Swaffer's old chief Lord Northcliffe, who had died in 1922. Swaffer published accounts of the séances in The People and created a sensation with his book Northcliffe's Return (1924).

He became an indefatigable propagandist for Spiritualism, and argued that Spiritualism and socialism were two halves of one great whole. He succeeded Sir Arthur Conan Doyle as honorary president of the Spiritualists' National Union and the Spiritualist Community, and he was connected with other practitioners of direct voice phenomena.

In 1932, Swaffer was one of the three cofounders of the well-known British newspaper Psychic News—the other two were his accountant Jack Rubens and his friend Maurice Barbanell (who was editor for many years). He died January 16, 1962.

Sources:
Driburg, Tom. "Swaff": The Life and Times of Hannen Swaffer.
Northcliffe's Return. London: Hutchinson, 1925.

Swain, Marcia M. (1819–1900)
Voice medium of a rescue circle in Buffalo from 1875 to 1900 under the direction of Leander Fisher, a music teacher and medium. Daniel E. Bailey, a wealthy man, took interest in the work and at his death made provision for the support of Swain for the rest of her life. She was never a public medium and did not give séances for money. The activity of the rescue circle was largely devoted to making the dead realize their true condition.

Sources:

Swaminarayan, Shree (1781–1830)
Famous saint of nineteenth-century India, born as Nilakantha at Capaiya, near Ayoodya. He developed a revised form of the traditional Vedanta Vedanta of Shree Ramanujan and traveled all over India for 30 years with his disciples, initiating a religious revival that had an impact upon the masses in Gujarat, Saurashtra, and Kutch. The movement eradicated violence, drunkenness, and lawlessness among those who responded to it and attracted favorable notice from both the Christian bishop Heber and the British rulers.

Shree Swaminarayan performed miracles and was accepted by his followers as an incarnation of the Divine, the first of a succession of such incarnations, of which His Holiness Shree Pramukh Swami is the current living representative. Modern followers of Shree Swaminarayan number hundreds of thousands, and prior to the expulsion of Asians from Uganda, this faith was widespread among Indian people throughout East Africa. The Swaminarayan faith has a popular following in Great Britain and North America among Asian immigrants.

Sources:
Dave, H. T. Life and Philosophy of Shree Swaminarayan,

Swann, Ingo (1933– )
Prominent American psychic research subject, parapsychologist, and author. Born September 14, 1933, at Telluride, Colorado, he studied at Westminster College, Salt Lake City,
Utah, receiving a double bachelor's degree in biology and art.
He enlisted in the U.S. Army and served three years in Korea, after which he worked for twelve years at the United Nations Secretariat while pursuing an independent art career.

Swann's active participation in parapsychology research began in 1969 when he was 36 years old. During the next twenty-ty years he worked only in controlled laboratory settings with scientific researchers. Although he lectured widely on the importance of psychic faculties and potentials, he has never publicly demonstrated his abilities. Because of his participation in hundreds of thousands of experimental trials, author Martin Ebon wrote of him as "parapsychology's most tested guinea pig," and Psychic News and other media often refer to him as "the scientific psychic."

During the 1950s and 1960s, because of psychic potentials partly evident in childhood, he became actively interested in occult and parapsychological literature and in a variety of novel mind-development programs which took positive approaches to the enhancement of ESP potential.

Swann early distinguished between psychic phenomena and psychic mind-dynamic processes. He especially noticed that while parapsychology researched the existence of paranormal phe-omena (such as ESP, telepathy, and psychokinesis), there was little interest in the mental processes involved in producing evidence of them. From this distinction he slowly developed unique theoretical approaches to process enhancement of psi perceptions, which was in keeping with ancient descriptions of Saddhis as found in various Eastern Yoga literature and Abraham Maslow's developmental abilitism theories.

In 1970–71 Swann experimented with Cleve Backster in attempting to influence plants by mental activity. In 1971–72 psychokinetic experiments involved successfully influencing temperature recorded in a controlled setting devised by parapsychologists Gertrude Schmeidler and Larry Lewis at City College, New York. This involved PK effects upon target thermis-tors (temperature measuring devices) in insulated thermos bottles at a distance of 25 feet from Swann. (For a report, see G. R. Schmeidler, "PK Effects Upon Continuously Recorded Temperature," Journal of the American Society for Psychical

Swann was also the subject of experiments in out-of-thebody travel, or psychic perception at a distance. These took place during 1971–73 at the American Society for Psychical Research. They involved Swann sitting in a chair and attempt-ning to project his consciousness into sealed boxes on a small platform several feet above his head, in which there was a target symbol completely shielded from view. Swann was monitored by electrodes that would have recorded any movement from the chair.

Under these difficult laboratory conditions, Swann nevertheless scored significant successes in describing the targets. In one test he was actually able to project correctly a light that should have illuminated the target was inoperative. There was no normal way of ascertaining this fact without opening the box.

In 1972–73, at the American Society for Psychical Research, Swann began suggesting experimental protocols to test for the existence of mind-dynamic processes that would enhance ESP perceptions. Together with Dr. Karlis Osis, Dr. Janet Mitchell, and Dr. Gertrude Schmeidler, he coined the term "remote-viewing" to describe the experiments in which subjects attempted to view targets at a far distance. His original remote-viewing protocols were later utilized and expanded upon in collaboration with the researchers Dr. Harold E. Puthoff and Russell Targ. Other laboratories ultimately repeated various kinds of remote-viewing experiments.
Swann, William F(rancis) G(ray)

Swann’s successes on the East Coast attracted the attention of the quantum physicist, H. E. Puthoff, at the Stanford Research Institute, in Menlo Park, California (later renamed SRI International). From late 1973 until 1989 Swann worked primarily at SRI’s “psychoenergetics project” established by Puthoff to examine important psi faculties (rather than psychic phenomena per se).

One of the first most remarkable experiments involved a successful attempt to influence the stable magnetic field of a super-cooled Josephson junction inside a quark detector (a complex apparatus designed to detect subatomic particles). The apparatus was completely inaccessible, being encased in aluminum and copper containers and buried in five feet of concrete. When Swann mentally visualized the hidden target, significant variations were recorded in sine waves. This PK effect was reproduced at a conference on quantum physics and parapsychology.

On April 27, 1973, in another extraordinary experiment, Swann “visited” the planet Jupiter in a joint “psychic probe” shared by fellow psychic Harold Sherman. Swann’s drawings made during the experiment showed a “ring” of tiny asteroids around the planet which scientists at the time said did not exist. The existence of the ring was later scientifically confirmed in 1979.

From the first experiments, Swann was increasingly considered a very unique test subject because, at the command of the experimenters, he could reproduce and sustain the desired effects over time at a significant rate of success. Throughout the history of parapsychology, other test subjects had been temporarily or spontaneously successful. But these subjects typically suffered from the well-known “decline effect” or “psi-missing effect” which statistically erased the successes, and thus permitted skeptics to believe that the successes were due to some outside factor other than claimed human psi abilities.

Most books and articles written after 1973 about parapsychology and psychic matters refer to Swann’s work in some way. Many analysts of science and parapsychology generally concede that his work and the high levels of official sponsorship it received a very unique test subject because, at the command of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism at the Carnegie Institute, Washington, D.C.; the University of Minnesota (1918–23); the University of Chicago (1923–24); and Yale University (1924–27). His interest in parapsychology was by way of physics and philosophy. He died January 29, 1962, in Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

Sources:

Swann, William F(rancis) G(ray)

(1884–1962)

Physicist and educator who wrote on parapsychology. He was born on August 29, 1884, at Ironbridge, Shropshire, England. He studied at the Royal College of Science, London; University College; King’s College; the University of London; and City and Guilds of London Institute. Swann was an authority on cosmic radiation and atomic structure and was head of the Bartol Research Foundation of Franklin Institute at Swarthmore for 32 years. He had previously taught at the Royal College of Science, London and at the University of Sheffield.

Early in his career he was successively employed at the head of the physical division of the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism at the Carnegie Institute, Washington, D.C.; the University of Minnesota (1918–23); the University of Chicago (1923–24); and Yale University (1924–27). His interest in parapsychology was by way of physics and philosophy. He died January 29, 1962, in Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

Swastika

One of the most important and widespread symbols in ancient religion, mysticism, and magic is the swastika or tetraskele. Essentially, it is a Greek cross with arms of equal length, each with four arms at right angles, either right-handed (notated as a male symbol implying good fortune) or left-handed (female symbol). The right-handed form is sometimes known as gammadion, i.e., formed from joining four gamma letters. The swastika is generally regarded as a symbol of the power of the sun, and it may have been derived from a circle divided into four by crossed lines. A variation of the swastika is the triskele (“three-legged”) form, often found on Sicilian coins and used as the emblem of the Isle of Man off the coast of Britain. The swastika dates back to the Neolithic Age, when it was engraved on stone implements, but it has also been found in many cultures—in ancient Britain, Ireland, Mycenae, and Greece, as well as among the Etruscans, Celts, Hindus, Germanic peoples, Central Asians, and pre-Columbian Americans. The Buddhists regarded it as a chakra or wheel of the law; the Tibetans called it Yan-tran or path of life. The swastika has traveled from the ancient Greek cities of Troy and Mycenae down to the 9th century in Ireland, as well as to Persia, China, North Africa, and Scandinavia.

Some authorities have interpreted the swastika as a symbol of the deity during the Iron Age, and others have associated it with agriculture, compass points, and the origin of the universe. No doubt this universally diffused symbol has acquired many secondary associations in addition to its main association with the sun wheel.
The name “swastika” derives from a long-established use in India, where the expression Su-asti means “Be well,” implying auspiciousness and good fortune. Hindu parents mark the symbol on the breast and forehead of a baby, and a swastika formed of ears of wheat is made in the birth chamber. Hindu writers often place a red swastika at the beginning and end of manuscripts; the sign is also marked on floors and paths at weddings. There is a hatha yoga sitting position known as “Swatikasana” or the auspicious posture, in which the legs are crossed and the feet rest on opposite thighs.

The use of the swastika as a Nazi symbol may have derived from German scholarship in the field of Hindu folklore and religion, distorted by such pseudo-mystical occultists as Guido von List, who originated theories of Germanic and Nordic folklore as early as the 1870s. According to List, the swastika was the symbol of secret adorers of the sun, or “children of the sun,” who flourished in ancient times. It may also have been reputable scholarly discussions of the Indo-European migrations of ancient peoples and cultures that were perceived to the antisemitic doctrine of an Aryan master-race. Before World War I, the use of the swastika symbol was popular among romantic youth folklore movements like the Wandervögel. It was continued by political revolutionaries who had been Wandervögel members and called the Armanen or “children of the sun,” which flourished in the post-war period.

The Nazi swastika was designed by Friedrich Krohn, formerly a member of the Germanen Order, a secret order founded by followers of Guido von List. Krohn’s design was adopted around 1920. Ever since, this ancient Hindu sacred symbol of auspiciousness has become inextricably associated with the perverse dogmas of the German Nazis.

Swawm

Burmese vampires. (See also Myanmar)

SWEDEN

Witchcraft

In 1649, Queen Christina banned witch trials, stating that witchcraft confessions of women were due to illusions or disorders of health. However, there was an extraordinary outbreak of witchcraft hysteria between 1669 and 1670 at Mora, in Dalecarlia, resulting in the burning of 85 individuals accused of transporting no fewer than 300 children by magical flights to a witches’ sabbat on the island of Blockula. On July 5, 1668, the pastor of Elfide in Dalecarlia stated that Gertrude Svensen, aged 18, had been accused by Eric Eric- sen, aged 15, of stealing children for the devil. There followed similar charges. Then in May 1669, King Charles XI appointed a commission to look into the matter and attempt to redeem the accused by prayers rather than punishment or torture. However, the prayers resulted in mass hysteria among the 3,000 people who had assembled. The commissioners claimed to have discovered 70 adult witches, who were all burned, together with 15 children. Lesser sentences were given to 56 other children who were punished by having to run a gauntlet or be lashed with rods.

The witches were said to have carried the children on goats, sticks, and the backs of sleeping men, even flying through windows. One writer recorded that “being asked how they could go with their Bodies through Chimenyes and broken panes of Glass, they said, that the Devil did first remove all that might hinder them in their flight, and so they had room enough to go.” They assembled for their sabbat in a large meadow, where they feasted, danced, and performed diabolical rituals.

Commenting on the affair, Bishop Francis Hutchinson states in his book An Historical Essay Concerning Witchcraft (1718):

“It is not plain that the people had frightened their children with so many tales, that they could not sleep without dreaming of the devil, and then made the poor women of the town confess what the children said of them.”

Other witchcraft persecutions followed, and between 1674 and 1675, individuals were burned or beheaded in three parishes. There was also a witchcraft mania in Stockholm in following years, but when it was discovered that accusations were due to the malice or greed of young informers, Charles XI once again prohibited witchcraft prosecutions.

Spiritualism and Psychological Research

Spiritualism entered Sweden at the end of the nineteenth century and progressed slowly. In the decades following World War I, there was a general apathy, and in some areas a marked hostility to Spiritualist frauds and claims of psychic gifts. On March 14, 1931, a bill was presented to the Swedish Parliament with the intention both of regularizing mediumship and legitimizing psychological research. It did not succeed and Spiritualism was still actively discouraged. However, there was a revival of interest after World War II. In spite of the hostility to psychic research, the Sällskapet for Parapsykoloskog Forskning was established in Stockholm after World War II. It has carried out valuable experimental work. Gosta Rodhe, the president, has now been succeeded by Rolf Evjejärdi. The former secretary, Eva Hellström, well known as a clairvoyant, was succeeded by Eric Ugglä. The society maintains a good research library, has organized lectures and meetings, and has carried out research in psychometry and precognition. Another important experimenter was Haakon Forwald (1897–1978) of Ludvika, who in the 1950s began research in psychokinesis. More recently, a branch of the Churches’ Fellowship for Psychic and Spiritualist Studies was organized, and may be reached c/o Mrs. Eva Lejam, St. Sodergatan 17, Lund.

Sources:

Swedeborg, Emanuel (1688–1772)

Swedish seer. He was trained as a scientist and became the country’s leading expert in mining and metallurgy. He was also a military engineer, learned astronomer, reputed physicist, zoologist, anatomist, financier, political economist, and biblical student.

He was born January 29, 1688, at Stockholm, son of a professor of theology at Upsala, after Bishop of Scara. Swedenborg graduated from Upsala University in 1710 and then traveled in England, Holland, France, and Germany, studying natural philosophy. He studied and was influenced by the work of the most famous mathematicians and physicians—Sir Isaac Newton, Flamsteed, Halley, and De Lahire. He made sketches of inventions as varied as a flying machine, a submarine, a rapid-fire gun, an air pump, and a fire engine. He wrote many expositions in Latin, and when after five years of study he returned to Sweden, he was appointed assessor of the Royal College of Mines.

Originally known as Swedberg, nobility was bestowed upon him by Queen Ulrica, and he changed his name to Swedenborg. He sat in the House of Nobles, his political utterances having great weight, but his tendencies were distinctly democratic. He busied himself privately in scientific gropings for the explanation of the universe. He published at least two works dealing with cosmology remembered primarily as foreshadowing many scientific facts and ventures of the future. His theories regarding light, cosmic atoms, geology, and physics were distinctly ahead of their time.

In 1734 he published Prorumus Philosophie Ratiocinatorum de Infinito, about the relation of the finite to the infinite and of the soul to the body. In this work he sought to establish a definite connection between the two as a means of overcoming the difficulty of their relationship. The spiritual and the divine appeared to him as the supreme study of man. He searched the countries of Europe for the most eminent teachers and the best books dealing with anatomy, for he considered that science the locus of the germ of the knowledge of soul and spirit. Through his anatomical studies he anticipated certain modern views dealing with the functions of the brain.

At the height of his scientific career he resigned his office to devote the rest of his life to spreading spiritual enlightenment, for which he believed himself to have been specially selected by God. He showed signs of psychic power as a child. Even at an early age he could cease breathing for a considerable period and freely enter an altered state of consciousness, possibly a trance. In his book Dreams of a Spirit Seer philosopher Immanuel Kant narrates several paranormal experiences from Swedenborg’s early life. He had gifts of clairvoyance. Kant also investigated and reported as authentic the story that in Gothenburg Swedenborg observed and reported a fire that was raging in Stockholm, 300 miles away.

Swedenborg’s real illumination and intercourse with the spiritual world in visions and dreams began in April 1744. He claimed that wakening his consciousness wandered in the spirit world and conversed with its inhabitants as freely as with living men.

In later experiences he heard wonderful conversations and sensed the eyes of his spirit were so opened that he could see heavens and hells and converse with angels and spirits. He claimed that God revealed himself to him and told him that he had chosen him to unveil the spiritual sense of the whole Scriptures to man. From that moment, according to Swedenborg, he eschewed worldly knowledge and worked for spiritual ends alone. Through the next three decades, he lived in Sweden, Holland, and London.

After initially reviewing his knowledge of the Hebrew language, Swedenborg began his great works on the interpretation of the Scriptures, which were to dominate the rest of his life. A man of few wants, his life was simplicity itself, his food and drink consisting of the most part of bread, milk, and coffee. He was in the habit of lying in a trance for days, and day and night seemed to have no distinction for him. He regularly conversed with angels in broad daylight, he said. At other times, his vision was so great that evil spirits so terrified his servants that they would seek refuge in the most distant part of the house.

Swedenborg speaks of the nature of his visions and communications with the angels and spirits in his book Heaven and Hell.

“Angels speak from the spiritual world, according to inward thought; from wisdom, their speech flows in a tranquil stream, gently and uninterruptedly—they speak only in vowels, the heavenly angels in A and O; the spiritual ones in E and I, for the vowels are the principle of the speech, and by the tone the emotion is expressed; the interruptions, on the other hand, correspond with creations of the mind; therefore we prefer, if the subject is lofty, for instance of heaven or God, even in human speech, the vowels A, E, I, O, etc. Man, however, is united by means of the word, and forms thus the link between heaven and earth, between the divine and the natural.

But when angels speak spiritually with me from heaven, they speak just as intelligently as the man by my side. But if they turn away from man, he hears nothing more whatever, even if they speak close to his ear. It is also remarkable that several angels can speak to a man; they send down a spirit inclined to man in such a manner that he hears them united.”

From his ongoing conversations with the angelic beings, he wrote a number of books. These may be divided into expository books, notably The Apocalypse Revealed, The Apocalypse Explained, and Arcana Celestia; books of spiritual philosophy, such as Intercourse between the Soul and the Body, Divine Providence and Divine Love and Wisdom; books dealing with the hierarchy of supernatural spheres, such as Heaven and Hell and The Last Judgment; and books outlining the teachings of the new church, such as The New Jerusalem, The True Christian Religion, and Gavons of the New Church.

Of these works, his Divine Love and Wisdom most succinctly presents his entire religious system. God he regarded as the divine man. Spiritually God consists of infinite love, and corporeally of infinite wisdom. From the divine love, all things draw nourishment. The sun, as we know it, is merely a microcosm of a spiritual emanating from the creator. This spiritual sun is the source of nature; but whereas the first is alive, the second is inanimate. There is no connection between the two worlds of nature and spirit unless in similarity of construction. The causes of all things exist in the spiritual sphere and their effects in the natural sphere, and the purpose of all creation is that man may become the image of his creator, and of the cosmos as a whole.

Swedenborg believed that man possesses two vessels or receptacles for the containment of God—the will for divine love, and the understanding for divine wisdom. Before the Fall, the flow of these virtues into the human spirit was perfect, but through the intervention of the forces of evil, and the sins of man himself, it was interrupted. Seeking to restore the connection between himself and God, he turned to his solitude. And Man, for if he had ventured on Earth in his unveiled splendor, he would have destroyed the hells through which it was necessary for him to proceed to redeem man, and this he did not wish to do, merely to conquer them.

The unity of God is an essential of Swedenborgian theology, and Swedenborg thoroughly believed that God did not return to his own place without leaving behind him a visible representative of himself in the word of Scripture, which is an eternal tripartite incarnation—natural, spiritual, and celestial. Of this Swedenborg was the apostle. Nothing seemed hidden from him; he claimed to be aware of the appearance and conditions of other worlds, good and evil, heaven and hell, and of the planets. “The life of religion,” he stated, “is to accomplish good. . . . The kingdom of heaven is a kingdom of uses.”

Central to understanding his system is the doctrine of correspondences. There are two realms of created existence, the spiritual, which is real and substantial, and the physical, a mere reflection of the spiritual, according to this doctrine. Everything visible, Swedenborg argued, is the shadow of an appropriate spiritual reality. Between the two realms is an exact correspondence.

The work of explaining the correspondences, said Swedenborg, begins with the Scriptures; hence the prodigious amount of time he devoted to his voluminous Scripture commentaries. Swedenborg died in London on March 29, 1772, at Prince’s Square, in the parish of St. George’s in East London, on the very day he had earlier predicted in a letter to Methodist leader John Wesley, who had sought an audience with him. In April 1808 his bones were removed, at the request of the Swedish government, for reburial in Stockholm.

Swedenborg wrote at a time when heretical ideas were taken seriously by state and church officials. To avoid any sanctions for his increasingly divergent ideas he initially published his works without his name. It was not until 1760, with the publication of the Treatise on Four Doctrines, that his authorship was acknowledged on the title page. Also, he wrote in Latin and argued that he was writing for the intelligentsia and church leadership and had no intention that his new approach would have a following until judged by his colleagues. Nevertheless, in his later years he found it convenient to reside outside his native land.

In England Swedenborg’s ideas found some popular support, and beginning in the 1770s his major works were transl-ed. The Church of the New Jerusalem was founded there in 1774, moving to the United States in 1792 soon after the Revolution.

Sources:

Swedish Foundation Newsletter See Logos

Swedenborg Society

Founded in London, England, in 1810 to translate, print, and publish the works of Emanuel Swedenborg (1688–1772). The society organizes meetings and conferences and assists the needs of the New Church, which has grown up around Swedenborg's teachings, by keeping Swedenborg's writings in print. The society maintains a reference and lending library, with a reading room, at the London headquarters, 20 Bloomsbury Way, London, WC1A 2TH. Website: http://www.swedenborg.org.uk.

SWITZERLAND

For material on ancient Switzerland, see the entry on the Teutons.

Witchcraft and Demonology

Switzerland was by no means free from the witchcraft mania of Europe. About the year 1400, there were secular trials of people accused of sorcery, malevolent magic, in the Alps region now constituting southern and western Switzerland. During the same period, the Inquisition was pursuing heretics in neighboring valleys. One of the most active secular judges was Peter of Berne (Peter von Freyzer) in Simmenthal. Jeannette Charles was arrested as a sorceress in Geneva in 1401, and after torture she admitted evoking the devil. In Basel, in 1407, various women from well-to-do families were prosecuted for alleged sorcery in love affairs. In 1423, at Nieder-Hauenstein, near Basel, an alleged witch was condemned after a peasant testified that she had ridden on a wolf.

In the Valais area in 1428, the Bishop of Sion headed early systematic persecutions involving torture by secular authorities. Some 200 alleged witches were burned. There were many more tortures and burnings throughout the fifteenth century. The records of the judge Peter of Berne tell of a witch named Staedelin in Boltingen (Lausanne) who confessed after torture to killing seven unborn babies in one house and preventing births in cattle. Also in Lausanne, certain witches were said to have cooked and eaten their own children, and 13 children were said to have been devoured by witches in Berne. Witches confessed to killing unhatched children and afterwards digging up the remains and boiling them, making a transmutation ointment from the flesh.

Jakob Sprenger (1436–1495), co-author with Heinrich Kramer of the infamous Malleus Maleficarum, published in the 1480s, was born in Basel (part of German-speaking Switzerland), where he grew up in a Dominican house. While his main work was in Germany, after he was established at the University of Cologne, and his writings became the handbook of the great European witchcraft persecutions, some of which occurred in Switzerland.

The Protestant movement begun in Zurich by Ulrich Zwingli (1484–1531) did not slow the prosecution of witchcraft in Switzerland, in fact, some of the Zwinglians were active propagators of the cause. Typical of such attitudes was the book Magologium by Bartholomäus Anhiron (Basel, 1674) which endorsed the demonology of M. A. Del Rio and others. The last legally executed witch in Switzerland appears to have been Anna Goldi, who was hanged in the Protestant canton of Glarus in 1782.

Demonic Possession

A remnant of the witchcraft persecutions appeared in the nineteenth century in the form of an extraordinary outbreak of paranoia over possible demonic possession. This took place in the parish of Morzine, a beautiful valley of the Savoy near Lake Geneva, during 1866. [The following account is drawn from reports in the Corinville Magazine, London daily journals, the Review Spirit, and an article by William Howitt titled ‘The Devils of Morzine.’] Morzine was quite remote, and was seldom visited by tourists before 1860. Being shut in by high mountains, and inhabited by a simple, industrious, and pious peasantry, Morzine might have appeared to a casual visitor the very center of health, peace, and good order.

The first appearance of an abnormal visitation was the conduct of a young girl, who, once quiet, modest, and well-conducted, suddenly began to exhibit what her distressed family and friends supposed to be the symptoms of insanity. She ran about in the most singular and aimless way, climbed high trees, scaled walls, and was found perched on roofs and cornices that it seemed impossible for any creature but a squirrel to reach. She soon became wholly intractable, was given to fits of hysteria, violent laughter, passionate weeping, and general aberration from her customary modest behavior.

While her parents were anxiously seeking advice in this dilemma, another and still another of the young girl’s ordinary companions were seized with the same malady. In the course of ten days, more than 50 females ranging from seven to fifty years of age were reported as having been seized in this way, and were exhibiting symptoms of the most bewildering mental aberration. The crawling, climbing, leaping, wild singing, furious swearing, and frantic behavior of these women soon found crowds of imitators. Before the tides of this frightful affliction had passed beyond the district in which it originated, several hundred women and children, and scores of young men, were writhing under the contagion. The seizures were sudden, like the attacks. They seldom lasted long, yet they never seemed to yield to any form of treatment, whether harsh, kind, medical, religious, or persuasive.

The first symptoms of this malady do not seem to have been noted with sufficient attention to justify giving details that could be considered accurate. It was only when the number of the possessed exceeded 2,000 persons and the case attracted multitudes of curious inquirers from all parts of the Continent, that the medical men, priests, and journalists of the time began to keep and publish constant records of the progress of the situation.

One of the strangest features of the case, and the one that most constantly baffled the faculty, was the appearance of rugged health and freedom from all physical disease that distinguished this malady. As a general rule, the victims spoke in hoarse, rough tones unlike their own, used profane language, such as few of them could ever have heard, and imitated the motions of crawling, leaping, climbing animals with ghastly fidelity. Sometimes they would roll their bodies up into balls and distort their limbs beyond the power of the attendant physicians to account for or disentangle.

Many among them reportedly experienced levitation in the air, and in a few instances, the women spoke in strange tongues, manifested high conditions of exaltation, described glorious visions, prophesied, gave clairvoyant descriptions of absent persons and distant places, sang hymns, and prayed in strains of sublime inspiration. It must be added that these instances were very rare and were only noticeable in the earlier stages of the series of events.

It is almost needless to say that the tidings of what was happening in Morzine attracted multitudes of witnesses, as well as the attention of the learned and philosophic. When the attempts of the medical faculty, the church, and the law had been tried again and again, and all had utterly failed to modify the ever-increasing horrors of this malady, Louis Napoleon, the French emperor, under whose protecto...
Sources:

Sword of Dyrnwyn
Periodical issued sporadically since 1977 by the Association of Gwynnwy Wicca and the Church of Y Tywyth Teg, devoted to Welsh pagan traditions; includes articles on ley lines, astrology, megaliths, magic, ecology, and other occult subjects. It is issued by Camelot Press at PO Box 674884, Marietta, GA 30066-0006. Website: http://www.tywythteg.com.

Sycomancy
Divination by the leaves of the fig tree. Questions or propositions were written on fig leaves. If the leaf dried quickly after the appeal, it was an evil omen, but it was a good sign if the leaf dried slowly.

Symbolism (Metapsychical)
A term used by psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano in relation to: ‘... cases in which, by subconscious or mediemistic methods, an idea is expressed by means of hallucinatory perceptions, or ideographic representations, or forms of language differing from the ideas to be transmitted, but capable of suggesting them indirectly or conventionally. In other words, there is metapsychical symbolism every time an idea is transmitted by means of representations which are not reproductions.’

F. W. H. Myers included one instance of such symbolic communication in his book, Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death (1903): A botanical student passing inattentively in front of the glass door of a restaurant thought he saw "Verbascum Thapsus" printed on it. The real word was "Bouillon," and that happens to be the trivial name in French for the plant Verbascum Thapsus. The actual optical perception was thus subliminally transformed. Symbolism often occurs in occultism, particularly in prophetic dreams, which are sometimes represented in visual or etymological puns. Sigmund Freud drew attention to such symbolic imagery in his psychoanalytical theory of dreams. Many psychics find their visions of future events occur in symbolic form. Traditional astrological predictions used to be presented in symbolic pictures called hieroglyphs.

Symmes, John Cleves (1780–1829)
Born November 5, 1780, Symmes was a captain in the U.S. Army in the war of 1812–14, nephew of the jurist of the same name. He served with distinction at the battle of Niagara and in the sortie from Fort Erie. He later devoted himself to philosophical pursuits. In 1818, he promulgated his theory that the Earth is a hollow sphere, habitable within, open at the poles to admit light, and containing within it six or seven concentric hollow spheres also open at the poles.

In May 1818, he mailed prominent people in various countries a manifesto of his theories, asking for an expedition to be equipped for exploration at the poles. He lectured widely and his convert James McBride was responsible for the anonymously published Symmes’ Theory of Concentric Spheres; Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open About the Poles, by A Citizen of the United States (1826). It was not favorably received, but later influenced other hollow Earth theorists.

In 1820, a pseudonymous book by “Captain Seaborn” titled Symzonia described a steamship voyage to the south polar opening. The ship goes over the rim and enters the continent of “Symzonia,” where the inhabitants live in a socialist utopia. This concept may have influenced Edgar Allan Poe’s story “Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym.”

Symmes died May 28, 1829, at the early age of 49, but his theories were revived by his son Americus Vespucius, who published The Symmes’ Theory of Concentric Spheres (1878).

Sources:
A Citizen of the United States [James McBride]. Symmes’ Theory of Concentric Spheres; Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open About the Poles. Cincinnati, Ohio: Morgan, Lodge, and Fisher, 1826.

Symmes, Americus, ed. The Symmes’ Theory of Concentric Spheres; Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open About the Poles. Louisville, Ky.: Bradley and Gilbert, 1878.

Symonds, John (1914– )
British novelist, writer of children’s books, and author of important works on occultism. He met Aleister Crowley in 1945 and tried to assist publication of his writings in the last two years of Crowley’s life. He became Crowley’s literary executor, and he is the author of the standard biography of Crowley: The Great Beast (1951). He went on to write several books about Crowley—the most recent appeared in 1989—and with Kenneth Grant he edited The Confessions of Aleister Crowley and Crowley’s own book Magic (1973). Symonds was a member of the editorial board of Man, Myth, and Magic (1970) and wrote other books on occult topics, the most notable being his biography of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky: Madame Blavatsky: Medium and Magician (1960).

Sources:

Sympathy
A mutual attraction or identity of feeling between individuals and also animals, the opposite of the reaction of antipathy. The term “sympathy” has a special significance in mesmerism or animal magnetism, where it is used to indicate the rapport between operator and subject, by means of which the operator could influence and control the perceptions of the subject. It has also been suggested that a condition of sympathy might exist between agent and percipient in telepathy, particularly in the transmission of emotions.

Synchronicity
A connecting principle, expressing the linkage of events without a cause-and-effect relationship in time. In addition to the normal cause-and-effect connections observed in nature, there appears to be another principle expressed in the simultaneous arrangement or connection of events. A theory of synchronicity was developed by psychotherapist Carl G. Jung and related to certain ESP phenomena. In recent decades the concept has been widely borrowed by occultists in support of their worldview. As an illustration of this principle, some, such as astrologer Dan Rudhyar, suggest a relationship between astrological positions and events in the life of individual human beings. The human events are not necessarily caused by the position of heavily bodies, only linked in a causal relationship.

Sources:

Synchronicity Foundation

Synchronicity Foundation, known for its support of an innovative high-tech form of meditation, was founded in 1983 by Master Charles, a mystic and former leading disciple of Swami Paramahansa Muktananda (1908–1982), one of the most popular spiritual teachers from India to build a following in the West in the 1970s. He taught a form of kundalini yoga. Master Charles was born on March 14, 1945, in Syracuse, New York, and raised in a Roman Catholic family. As a child he began to have mystic and visionary experiences and developed a special devotion to the Virgin Mary. He attended a Roman Catholic high school and at one point considered entering a Roman Catholic order, but became disenchanted with the church as an institution.

As he moved into adulthood, he began to explore the alternative spiritualities, especially Eastern forms, that were flowing into the country at the time. Then in 1970, some friends who had been to India showed him a photo of Swami Muktananda. He had an immediate reaction to the picture. He discovered a copy of Guru, Muktananda’s autobiographical book, and laid plans to go to India himself. His meeting with Muktananda confirmed the awakening of divine energy he already experienced. He became a disciple and was given the name Arjuna. He eventually became Muktananda’s private secretary.

Shortly before his passing in 1982, Muktananda instructed Arjuna to return to the West and create a form of the teachings not bound in an Indian cultural format. Thus, in 1982, Arjuna changed his name to Brother Charles and settled in rural Virginia. He began to attract a few disciples, and as his following grew he founded the Synchronicity Foundation. The name of the foundation grew out of his understanding that meditation is an experience that synchronizes the activity of the two halves of the brain. When the brain is unsynchronized, one experiences the duality of the world. When they are synchronized, one experiences the underlying unity of the Source of all.

Brother Charles (now known as Master Charles) has also considered the scientific advances in the West and the understanding of the role sound played in enhancing the meditation experience. He discovered that certain patterns of sound aid one experiences the underlying unity of the Source of all.

Brother Charles (now known as Master Charles) has also considered the scientific advances in the West and the understanding of the role sound played in enhancing the meditation experience. He discovered that certain patterns of sound aid one experiences the underlying unity of the Source of all. He had an immediate reaction to the picture. He discovered a copy of Guru, Muktananda’s autobiographical book, and laid plans to go to India himself. His meeting with Muktananda confirmed the awakening of divine energy he already experienced. He became a disciple and was given the name Arjuna. He eventually became Muktananda’s private secretary.

Shortly before his passing in 1982, Muktananda instructed Arjuna to return to the West and create a form of the teachings not bound in an Indian cultural format. Thus, in 1982, Arjuna changed his name to Brother Charles and settled in rural Virginia. He began to attract a few disciples, and as his following grew he founded the Synchronicity Foundation. The name of the foundation grew out of his understanding that meditation is an experience that synchronizes the activity of the two halves of the brain. When the brain is unsynchronized, one experiences the duality of the world. When they are synchronized, one experiences the underlying unity of the Source of all.

Brother Charles (now known as Master Charles) has also considered the scientific advances in the West and the understanding of the role sound played in enhancing the meditation experience. He discovered that certain patterns of sound aid one experiences the underlying unity of the Source of all.

Synchronicity Research Unit

See SRU

Szekely, Edmond Bordeaux (1945–1980)

Edmond Bordeaux Szekely, the proponent of a modern spiritual pathway he ascribed to the ancient Essenes, was born in Hungary early in the twentieth century. He was the grandson of the poet Alexander Szekely. His father was the Unitarian bishop of Cluj, Transylvania (now in Romania), and his mother was a French Roman Catholic. His primary education was at a parochial school, and as a young man he was sent to study in Rome. There around 1925, in the Vatican Archives, he reportedly discovered the lost gospel written in Aramaic, the language Jesus actually spoke. He also reportedly discovered a Hebrew fragment of the text in Monte Cassino. (Szekely left little information about the manuscripts and no one else has been able to locate them.) Szekely also claimed to have found a copy of the manuscript written in Old Slavonic in Vienna, but again few details have been left concerning the find or its present location.

Szekely published a section of the manuscript in 1957 as the Gospel of Peace by the Apostle John. It was later republished as the Essene Gospel of Peace, the name by which it is currently best known. Given the vague information on its discovery and the failure in locating the original manuscripts, critics have suggested that the ancient texts never existed and that the Essene Gospel is an entirely modern product of Szekely’s imagination. In spite of these criticisms, many have found the book of great inspirational value.

Shortly after the publication of the Gospel, Szekely founded several communes in France which attempted to embody its teachings. However, as Hitler rose to power, Szekely left for the Americas. He settled in Tecate, Mexico, south of San Diego, and eventually became a Mexican citizen. He purchased a rural estate and opened the Essene School, built upon the idea that Jesus and the first Christians were Essenes. Here he began to systematically teach his principles for healthy living, which he termed biogenics. Keys to the system were vegetarianism and the use of whole fresh foods. His estate, Rancho la Puerta, became famous as a health spa, attracting many wealthy and famous people.

In 1958 Szekely opened the Golden Door, a health spa in Escondido, California, that became one of the most famous of the era. It was especially favored by Hollywood stars. From his base in the Essene School he founded the International Biogenic Society to perpetuate his health perspective and authored numerous books. He also founded the Academy of Creative Living, which published many of his books, including the second and third installments of the Essene Gospel of Peace (1974). He spent the last years of his life in Cartago, Costa Rica, where he died in 1980.

Following his death, his wife continued as head of the International Biogenic Society. It may now be contacted at P.O. Box 849, Nelson, BC, Canada V1L 6A5. A spiritual community emphasizing the Essene teachings was created in 1982 by his colleague Garry White in San Diego, California, as the First Christians’ Essene Church (now the Essene Foundation), headquartered at 2536 Collier Ave., San Diego, CA 92116. More recently, the Essene New Life Church founded by Rev. Dr. Charles A. Thomas in 1993 is headquartered at 110 Smith St., Ste. A, Mount Shasta, CA 96067-2636. It, and its associated Awareness Institute, is the only group to have a website, to be found at http://www.awarinist.com.

Sources:

Table-turning (or Table-tipping)

A form of psychic phenomena in which a table rotates, tilts, or rises completely off the ground by the mere contact of the fingertips of an individual or group of individuals. In exceptional cases tables have been known to move or even levitate without direct contact. The familiar form of séance in table-turning is that in which the sitters place their fingertips on the table; then the table moves without conscious exercise of muscular force. By relating the raps or tilts of the table to the alphabet it becomes possible to receive intelligent messages. (See movement)

Historical Background

Table-turning is the simplest and oldest form of communication with extraneous intelligences or the subconscious self. In ancient times tables were used for purposes of divination as "mensa divinatoriae." In fourth-century Rome, Ammianus Marcellinus described a table with a slab, engraved with the letters of the alphabet, above which a ring was held, suspended by a thread; by swinging to certain letters, messages were spelled out. Tertullian (ca. 155–ca. 222) appears to have been one of the first who knew of table communications with the unseen world.

Table-turning in modern Spiritualism dates from the mid-nineteenth century and seems to have originated in America soon after the Rochester rappings of 1848. At that time, there was considerable interest in animal magnetism or "electro-biology," stemming from the mesmerism of Europe.

Mesmerism established the convention of groups of individuals arranged in a circle with a variously named magnetic fluid linking them. After the phenomena of rappings in the presence of the Fox sisters became widely known, groups gathered around other individuals who possessed the same ability to generate raps.

Table-turning and rapping spread like an epidemic throughout America and was brought to England by such professional mediums as Maria B. Hayden, who came to London with a lecturer on electro-biology in 1852. Advantage of table-turning was that it did not require a paid professional medium. Amateur groups could sit round a table and obtain the intelligent rappings which had been manifest only to specially talented individuals, i.e., mediums.

In 1852 afternoon social invitations to tea and table-turning were common. Table-turning was even more successful in France, with its tradition of mesmerism and animal magnetism. One widespread jest was that people no longer asked after each other's health, but asked instead how the table was. "Thank you, mine turns beautifully, and how goes yours?"

Mesmerists welcomed table-turning as a demonstration of animal magnetism or odic force, while Fundamentalist ecclesiastics denounced it as due to Satanic agency. Scientists and doctors thought that the new craze would be a danger to mental health and a committee was formed to find a non-Spiritualist explanation for the phenomenon. They reported in the Medical Times and Gazette on June 11, 1855, that the motion of the table was due to unconscious muscular action.

A few weeks later the great chemist and physicist Michael Faraday reported experiments with a simple apparatus to demonstrate that the movements of the table were due to unconscious muscular action of the part of the sitters, who were by implication the automatic authors of the messages claiming to come from the spirit world. Faraday's apparatus consisted of two thin wooden boards with little glass rollers between them. The contraption was whole bound together with rubber bands and so contrived that the slightest lateral pressure on the upper board would cause it to slip a little way over the other. A hays-talk or a scrap of paper served to indicate any motion of the upper board over the lower.

The conclusion drawn from these experiments was that when the sitters believed themselves to be pressing downward, they were really pressing obliquely in the direction they expected the table to rotate. Other investigators also held the expectation that the operators had much to do with the motions of the table. James Braid pointed out in the appendix to his book Hypnotic Therapeutics (1853) that someone generally announced beforehand the direction they expected the table to rotate.

Among the earliest investigators of the phenomenon of table-turning were Count Agenor De Gasparin and Prof. Marc Thury of Geneva, who held séances and were satisfied that the movements resulted from a force radiating from the operators, to which they gave the name of ectonic force.

The public, on the whole, ignored the conclusions of Faraday and others, preferring the more popular Spiritualist explanation or the pseudo-scientific theories of "electro-biology." Other explanations offered included od or odic force, galvanism, animal magnetism, and the rotation of the Earth. Revs. G. Sandfly and C. H. Townshend claimed to have experienced a feeling of fatigue after a table-turning séance as though they had been hypnotizing someone. They reported a tingling sensation in their fingertips, while Townshend claimed somewhat vaguely that spirit rappings might be caused by a "disengagement of Zugen (an unidentified force in nature) from the System."

Meanwhile various Evangelical clergymen insisted that table-turning was Satanic. Revs. N. S. Godfrey, E. Gillson, and others held séances in which the "spirit" confessed themselves to be either spirits of worthless persons of evil inclination or devils. Both of the "spirits" confessions caused the reverent gentleman to demolish the whole practice of table-turning. One of them purposely mentioned the Faraday experiments, stating that the phenomena "appear to be whatever the investigator supposes them to be"—a saying which aptly characterized his own attitude.

The psychical researcher Camille Flammarion, whose exhaustive experiments and scientific attainments gave considerable weight to his opinion, offered an explanation of the various phases of table-turning phenomena. Simple rotation of the table he ascribed to an unconscious impulse given by the operators; other movements of the table while the fingers of the sitters rested upon it were ascribed to similar causes. The tilting of the table on the side furthest away from the operator was explained by muscular action. The vibrations in the wood of the table, its levitation under the fingers, or extent, its rotation without contact of the operator's hands, he attributed to a force emanating from the body. In the latter case, the operator was capable of acting at a distance by means of ether-waves. This force, the result of a cerebral disturbance, was greater than that of the muscles, as is seen by the levitation of tables so weighty that the combined muscular strength of the operators would not suffice to lift them.

To the dictating of messages and other intelligent manifestations somehow gave like the back of a dog, six force, which is obedient to the will and desires, or even, in some cases, identical with Thury’s “ecteric force,” or “psychoe,” and which is obedient to the will and desires, or even, in some cases, the subconscious will of the operator. Flammarion did not consider this a spirit hypothesis necessarily.

It is possible that some fraud may have crept into the séances investigated by Flammarion, as it has done in so many other cases. There are, of course, those among the most qualified of spirits who deliver messages which seem to negate the hypothesis of unconscious muscular action or deliberate fraud a satisfactory explanation of the phenomena.

The Mechanics of Table-Turning

One common procedure followed by those engaged in table tipping began with those in attendance forming a circle around the table. They placed hands lightly, with fingertips touching, on the leaf, and with lowered lights or in complete darkness, waited for the manifestations. According to reports, if someone with psychic powers was present the table might show signs of animation. The first such sign was often a quivering motion under the sitters' hands; it increased until the table pulsed with a mysterious energy. The wooden surface appeared to come to life as it moved as if to act as a reservoir of externalized nervous force.

The psychological researcher Hereward Carrington said that in his séances with Eusapia Palladino the table appeared to be some to act as a reservoir of externalized nervous force.

After the vibratory stage the table might jerk, tilt, stumble about, and eventually become entirely levitated. Apparently, there was believed to be an intelligence behind these movements. If the letters of the alphabet were called over in the dark, the table, by tilting, knocking on the floor, or tapping, indicated certain letters that connectedly spelled out a message, often claiming to come from someone deceased. The intelligence that manifested had personal characteristics. In repeated settings it was soon noticed by observers that the skill with which the table was manipulated or the eccentricities of its behavior were indications of the presence of the same entity. The strange, stolid, or clumsy behavior of the table immediately denoted that a new visitant was tampering with the contact.

But the table might disclose much more than that. Its movements could express humor, emotion, and personality. It might climb up into the sitter’s lap as a mark of affection; it might be thrust.

Eusapia Palladino insisted on a séance table built entirely of wood. She considered soft pinewood the best to absorb vital magnetism. She allowed no metal in the construction of the table, considering soft pinewood the best to absorb vital magnetism. She allowed no metal in the construction of the table, its levitation under the fingers, or extent, its rotation without contact of the operator's hands, he attributed to a force emanating from the body. In the latter case, the operator was capable of acting at a distance by means of ether-waves. This force, the result of a cerebral disturbance, was greater than that of the muscles, as is seen by the levitation of tables so weighty that the combined muscular strength of the operators would not suffice to lift them.

To the dictating of messages and other intelligent manifestations somehow gave like the back of a dog, six force, which is obedient to the will and desires, or even, in some cases, identical with Thury’s “ecteric force,” or “psychoe,” and which is obedient to the will and desires, or even, in some cases, the subconscious will of the operator. Flammarion did not consider this a spirit hypothesis necessarily.

It is possible that some fraud may have crept into the séances investigated by Flammarion, as it has done in so many other cases. There are, of course, those among the most qualified of spirits who deliver messages which seem to negate the hypothesis of unconscious muscular action or deliberate fraud a satisfactory explanation of the phenomena.

The Mechanics of Table-Turning

One common procedure followed by those engaged in table tipping began with those in attendance forming a circle around the table. They placed hands lightly, with fingertips touching, on the leaf, and with lowered lights or in complete darkness, waited for the manifestations. According to reports, if someone with psychic powers was present the table might show signs of animation. The first such sign was often a quivering motion under the sitters' hands; it increased until the table pulsed with a mysterious energy. The wooden surface appeared to some to act as a reservoir of externalized nervous force.

The psychical researcher Hereward Carrington said that in his séances with Eusapia Palladino the table appeared to have some spirit entered it. He noted that the table appeared to be some to act as a reservoir of externalized nervous force.

After the vibratory stage the table might jerk, tilt, stumble about, and eventually become entirely levitated. Apparently, there was believed to be an intelligence behind these movements. If the letters of the alphabet were called over in the dark, the table, by tilting, knocking on the floor, or tapping, indicated certain letters that connectedly spelled out a message, often claiming to come from someone deceased. The intelligence that manifested had personal characteristics. In repeated settings it was soon noticed by observers that the skill with which the table was manipulated or the eccentricities of its behavior were indications of the presence of the same entity. The strange, stolid, or clumsy behavior of the table immediately denoted that a new visitant was tampering with the contact.

But the table might disclose much more than that. Its motions could express humor, emotion, and personality. It might climb up into the sitter’s lap as a mark of affection; it might be thrust.

As a test of spirit return: "First the chair spelt out my name and showed me a disposition to get into my lap; then it spelled out 'George, you ought to know me as I am Jim.' But I didn't, and so did. Then without my looking at the board, it spelled out 'Long Island, Jim Rowe' and 'Don't you remember I used to carry you when you were a little fellow,' or words to that effect. I had to acknowledge the truth of it, and also to say that as he was an ignorant man he possibly intended 'carry' for carry. I must own I was puzzled for a moment. To make sure of his power I asked that he count the pickets in the fence. Somehow he could not agree to this, and even the medium objected. As a last resort I asked how long he had been in the spirit land and the answer came, between thirteen and fourteen years. Now to the sequel. First it occurred to me a day or two later, that while all the incidents given were correct the name should have been given as Roe instead of Rowe. Second I was upon Long Island this summer, and the matter coming to my mind I inquired how long Jim Roe had been dead, and was informed he died last winter; so when I received this test so convincing to the believers the man was not dead.

The material from which the chair or table was made seemed to make no difference once the available power was sufficient to manifest. The reason why a table was used for spirit communication was primarily convenience; it was piece of generally available furniture which allowed contact around it for a large number of people. Some Spiritualists also thought its surface acted as a receptacle for the generated force and compared the space underneath the table to a medium's cabinet, especially if it was surrounded by a deep hanging table cloth. In the early days of Spiritualism, they often used a table with a hole in the middle through which "materialized hands" could be thrust.

Eusapia Palladino insisted on a séance table built entirely of wood. She considered soft pinewood the best to absorb vital magnetism. She allowed no metal in the construction of the table.

The color of the table made no difference. Joseph Maxwell found an advantage in covering it with some white material of light texture. He also insisted that the table should, if possible, be fastened with wooden pegs instead of nails since mediums, supposedly, are sometimes extremely sensitive to metals.

It was reported that with a powerful medium the movement of the table could occur at any time and disclose a tremendous force in operation. Thus Gambier Bolton, writing in Psychic Force (1904) observed, “During any meal with Mrs. Elgie Corner [i.e., Florence Cook] in one’s own house, and whilst she herself is engaged in eating and drinking—both of her hands being visible all the time—the heavy dining table will commence first to quiver, setting all the glasses shaking, and plates, knives, forks and spoons in motion, and then to rock and sway from side to side, occasionally going so far as to tilt up at one end or at one side; and all the time raps and tappings will be heard in the table and in many different parts of the room. Taking a meal with her in a public restaurant is a somewhat serious matter.”

In experiments conducted by psychical researcher Harry Price, powerful and rhythmic vibrations of tables were obtained, and on one occasion, after violent movements of a table, it suddenly snapped, the top breaking into two pieces, and the legs breaking off.

Table-Turning and Dowsing

The various theories about the rationale of table-turning parallel those advanced for the phenomena of dowsing and radiesthesia, where there is meaningful movement of a water-witching rod or a pendulum or similar indicator. The actual force moving the indicator is still a matter of controversy. It is generally assumed that unconscious muscular action or nervous energy plays a significant part, but it is still far from clear how information on underground water, minerals, or buried objects is conveyed to the mind, or from the mind to the indicator.

One of the earliest investigators to link the action of table-turning with divining rods or pendulums was the French chemist Michel Eugène Chevreul, in his book De la baguette divinatoire, du pendule dit ex-plorateur et des tables tournantes, au point de vue de l’histoire, de la critique et de la méthode expérimentale (1854).

In modern times, table-turning is a laborious method of establishing contact with unseen intelligence. Planchette and ouija board are more satisfactory and faster. Also, while a number of prominent mediums such as Betty White began their career with a ouija board, they quickly moved beyond. Messages obtained by such methods are often misleading or false. Again, the communications received at circles in general tend to reflect the general interest level of the sitters.

Sources:

Chevreul, M. E. De la baguette divinatoire, du pendule dit explorateur et des tables tournantes, au point de vue de l’histoire, de la critique et de la méthode expérimentale. Paris, 1854.

Godfrey, Nathaniel S. Table Turning the Devil’s Modern Masterpiece; Being the Result of a Course of Experiments. U.K.: Thames Ditton, 1853.

Morgan, R. C. An Inquiry Into Table Miracles. Bath and London, 1853.

Prichard, John. A Few Sober Words of Table-talk about the Spirits. Leamington, UK, 1853.

Taboo (or Tabu or Tapu)

A Polynesian word meaning “prohibited” and signifying a prohibition enforced by religious or magical power, which has come to be applied to similar usages among primitive peoples all over the world. It also has parallels in the religious codes of sophisticated societies, as in the early Hebrew term Kherem (“set apart” or prohibited), and in the highly developed social etiquette of modern society. Taboo, or prohibition, was enforced in the cases of sacred things and unclean things. In the first instance, the taboo was placed on the object because of the possession by it of inherent mysterious power. But taboo might be imposed by a chief or priest. It would be used for the protection of important individuals, the safeguarding of the weak, women, children, and slaves from the magical influence of more highly-placed individuals, against danger incurred by handling or coming in contact with corpses, or eating certain foods, and the securing of human beings against the power of supernatural agencies, or the depredations of thieves.

Taboo could be sanctioned by social use or instinct. The violation of a taboo made the offender taboo; taboos, like various kinds of social uncleanness, were transmissible, but the taboo could be thrown off by magical or purificatory ceremonies. It might last for a short period, or be imposed for eternity.
It may be said that the practice of taboo was instituted through human instinct for human convenience. This applies of course merely to the most simple type of taboo. It was, for example, forbidden to reap or steal the patch of corn dedicated to an agricultural deity, for the simple reason that his wrath would be incurred by so doing. Similarly it was taboo to devour the flesh of the totem animal of the tribe, except in special circumstances with the object of achieving communion with him. It was taboo to interfere in any manner with the affairs of the shamans or medicine men, also a type of the imposed taboo for the convenience of a certain caste. It was prohibited to marry a woman of the same totem as oneself, because all the members of a totemic band are supposed to be consanguineous; such a union might incur the wrath of the patron deity. A very strict taboo was put upon the witnessing of certain ritual instruments belonging to some primitive tribes, but this only applied to women and uninitiated men. It was considered a degradation for women to behold sacred implements.

If taboo does not spring directly from the system known as totemism, it was strongly influenced by it—that is, many intricate taboos arose from the totemic system. There was also the taboo of the sorcerer; it in effect was merely a spell placed upon a certain object, which makes it become useless to others. Taboo, or its remains, can still be found even in modernized communities. From its use the feeling of reverence for ancient institutions and those who represent them is undoubtedly derived.

Sources:

Tabori, Paul (1908–1974)

Hungarian-born British novelist, journalist, political writer, screenwriter, and psychical researcher. Some of his books were published under the pseudonyms “Christopher Stevens” and “Paul Tabor.” Tabori was born on August 5, 1908, in Budapest, Hungary. He was educated at Kaiser Friedrich Wilhelm University (Ph.D., 1930) and Pazmany Peter University (Doctor of Economics and Political Science). He worked in various journalistic positions in Hungary (1926–1937) and London (1937–1960). Beginning in the 1920s, Tabori wrote a number of books on various political and other subjects. He lived in the United States for several years as a 1966 visiting professor at Fairleigh Dickinson University (1966) and the City College of New York (1967). He also translated a number of books and authored 32 feature films and over a hundred television films and plays.

Sources:

T'ai Chi Ch'uan

A system of ancient Chinese physical movements, designed to build up subtle energy in the body, resulting in spiritual development. For centuries it was secret taught only to males in certain families, but by the middle of the nineteenth century it was openly taught in Peking.

The roots of T'ai Chi Ch'uan are said to go back to the breathing exercises of Taoist monks in the 2nd century B.C. The purported founder of the actual T'ai Chi Chuan system was a fifteenth century monk named Chang San-feng.

The yielding, supple philosophy behind T'ai Chi Ch'uan is summarized in the Tao Te Ching:

“A man is born gentle and weak, at his death hard and stiff. Green plants are tender and filled with sap, at their death they are withered and dry. Therefore the stiff and unbounding is the disciple of death. The gentle and yielding is the disciple of life. Thus an army without flexibility never wins a battle. A tree that is unbounding is easily broken. The hard and strong will fall. The soft and weak will overcome.”

In addition to the philosophy there are 37 basic exercises and postures that are repeated with variations, culminating in some 65 or 108 exercises fusing energetic with relaxed movement. During practice, it is important to be concerned with centering the body with meditation and relaxation. T'ai Chi Ch'uan is often linked with the study of the I Ching to enhance the philosophical aspects of the system.

Although T'ai Chi Ch'uan has been facetiously referred to as “shadow boxing.” It often resembles a slow-motion ballet, and has been described as “yoga in movement.” Like the asanas of hatha yoga, T'ai Chi Ch'uan takes the names of its... forms from animals or events occurring in nature: "White Crane Spreads Its Wings," "Meteor Runs After Moon," or "Brush Dust Against the Wind." Both hatha yoga and T'ai Chi exercises encompass focused concentration and special breathing patterns. But while the graceful, flowing movements of T'ai Chi seem to superficially contrast with the asanas, developing forms of yoga movement bring the two regimens closer together.

T'ai Chi has become popular in the United States, as Americans realize the great health benefits of the practice. Most often the elderly do these exercises to regain strength and balance, greatly decreasing their chances of injuries from falls. The slow movements of T'ai Chi make it easy for everyone to practice and still gain health benefits.

Sources:

Takata, Hawayo (1900–1980)

Hawayo Takata, the teacher who brought Reiki healing to the West, was born on December 23, 1900, to a Japanese family in Hawaii. At the age of 16, she married Sachi Takata. She gave birth to two daughters and she settled into the quiet life as a housewife in the growing Hawaiian Japanese-American community. Following her husband’s death in 1930, she sought employment at a nearby plantation. She worked her way up to become the owner’s housekeeper and then bookkeeper within a few years.

However, during the early 1930s Takata’s health deteriorated. When in 1935 her sister died and it became her duty to travel to Japan to take the news of the death to her parents personally, she used the occasion to seek out some Japanese doctors. She located a surgeon, but just before she was to submit to an operation, she decided against it. Instead, she asked for a referral to an alternative doctor who did not do surgeries. As it happened, the sister of the surgeon was a Reiki healer. The doctor referred Takata to Chujiro Hayashi (1878–1941), a former naval officer who had opened a clinic based on Reiki. After four months she was healed.

Takata asked Hayashi to train her as a healer. At first he refused, as she was considered an American. However, her persistence was rewarded, and in the spring of 1936, she included her and several others in a class for basic Reiki training. The following spring she was able to take Reiki Master training, from which she emerged as the 13th and last Reiki Master he initiated.

Soon after becoming a Master, Takata returned home and opened a small clinic similar to Hayashi’s in Kapaa, Hawaii. Hayashi visited at the beginning of 1938, and while in Hawaii named Takata as his successor. A few months later, she took the opportunity to come to the mainland as the translator for a group of Buddhist ministers making a tour of the West Coast. She stayed behind to attend the National College of Drugless Physicians, a naturopathic school in Chicago, Illinois.

Hayashi died in 1941. Meika operat-ed quietly through the World War II (1939–45) and postwar years, during which time the Hawaiian Japanese received much of the anger for the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Takata continued as a Reiki healer in Hawaii for several decades. It was only with her aging without a successor that Takata decided to start teaching others as Reiki healers. More importantly, she opened those teachings to those outside of the Japanese American community. In the fall of 1973 she traveled to Puget Sound to offer a first class on Reiki for mainland students. This class launched her brief public career and introduced the public to the Reiki system. Two years later she took the additional step and for the first time trained a new Reiki Master.

The decision to train Masters became one of her more controversial actions. She concluded that the Master status was a thing of value and that the best way to communicate its worth to Westerners was to charge for it. She asked a fee of $10,000.00 U.S. During the remaining five years of her life, she initiated 22 Masters.

In 1979, the year before she died, she named two of the Masters as Grand Masters, her daughter Phyliss Furumoto and Barbara Ray a healer from Atlanta, Georgia. Takata died on December 11, 1980.

Sources:

“Tales of Terror”

Title of an anonymous collection of Gothic style ballads, usually ascribed wrongly to Matthew Gregory Lewis. There are actually two books with this title. The first, published in 1799, included three of Lewis’s ballads, together with others by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Southey, but does not appear to be compiled by Lewis. The three ballads later appeared in his book Tales of Wonder (1801).

A second Tales of Terror (1801) is a coarse and grotesque collection that contains parodies of the work of Lewis and others, and does not therefore seem to be compiled by Lewis either. (See also English occult fiction.)

Talisman

An inanimate object which is supposed to possess a supernatural capacity of conferring benefits or powers, in contradistinction to the amulet, the purpose of which is to ward off evil. Talismans are common in ancient Egypt and Babylon, and have been popular in magical communities to the present. Originally, talismans were usually a disc of metal or stone engraved with astrological or magical figures. In recent centuries, among practitioners of ceremonial magic, talismans inscribed in parchment have been favored.

Traditionally, three varieties of talisman have been recognized: 1. The astral talisman, having the characters of the heavily signs or constellations; 2. the magical, with extraordinary figures, occult words, or the names of angels; and 3. the mixed, engraved with celestial signs and barbarous words. To this list Thomas D. Fosbrook, in his Encyclopaedia of Antiquities (1825), added two others: 4. The sigilla planetarium, composed of Hebrew numeral letters, used by astrologers and fortune-tellers and 5. one with Hebrew names and characters.

As an example of the most powerful of the latter may be the sacred name of Jehovah. The famous tephillin or phylacteries, used in Jewish devotion, which were bound on the head, the arm, and the hand, may be regarded as talismans. They were the subject of many traditional ceremonies. There is also the mezuzah or schedules for doorposts; another article of this description mentioned in the following quotation from the Talmud: “Whoever had the tephillin bound to his head and arm, and the tisitith thrown over his garments, and the mezuzah fixed on his door-post, is protected from sin.”

On astrological talismans the figure of Mercury, engraved upon silver, which is the corresponding metal, and according to the prescribed rites, gave success in merchandise; that of Mars gave victory to the soldier; that of Venus, beauty, and so of the rest. All such talismans were seen as more powerful during the hour of their planet’s ascendency.

Writing of talismans in his book The Occult Sciences (1891), A. E. Waite stated:

“1. The Talisman of the Sun must be composed of a pure and fine gold, fashioned into a circular plate, and well polished on either side. A serpentine circle, enclosed by a pentagram must be engraved on the obverse side with a diamond-pointed graving tool. The reverse must bear a human head in the centre of the six-pointed star of Solomon, which shall itself be surrounded with the name of the solar intelligence Pi-Rhê, written in the characters of the Magi. This talisman is supposed to insure to its bearer the goodwill of influential persons. It is a preservative against death by heart disease, hysteria, aneurism, and epidemic complaints. It must be composed on a Sunday during the passage of the moon through the first ten degrees of Leo, and when that luminary is in a favourable aspect with Saturn and the Sun. The consecration consists in the exposure of the talisman to the smoke of a perfume composed of cinnamon, incense, saffron, and red sandal, burnt with laurel-wood, and twigs of desiccated heliotrope, in a new chafing-dish, which must be ground into powder and buried in an isolated spot, after the operation is finished. The talisman must be afterwards encased in a satchel of bright yellow silk, which must be fastened on the breast by an interlaced ribbon of the same material, tied in the form of a cross. In all cases the ceremony should be preceded by the conjuration of the Four, to which the reader has already been referred. The form of consecration, accompanied by sprinkling with holy water, may be rendered in the following manner:

“In the name of Elohim, and by the spirit of the living waters, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.

“Presenting it to the smoke of the perfumes:—By the brazen serpent before which fell the serpents of fire, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.

“Breathing seven times upon the talisman:—By the firmament and the spirit of the voice, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.

“Lastly, when placing some grains of purified earth or salt upon the pentacle:—In the name of the salt of the earth and by virtue of the life eternal, be thou unto me as a sign of light and a seal of will.”

“2. The Talisman of the Moon should be composed of a circular and well-polished plate of the purest silver, being of the dimensions of an ordinary medal. The image of a crescent, enclosed in a pentagram, should be graven on the obverse side. On the reverse side, a chalice must be encircled by the duadic seal of Solomon, encompassed by the letters of the lunar genius Pi-Job. This talisman is considered a protection to travellers, and to sojourners in strange lands. It preserves from death by drowning, by epilept, by dropsy, by apoplexy, and madness. The danger of a violent end which is predicted by Saturnian aspects in horoscopes of nativity, may be removed by its means. It should be composed on a Monday, when the moon is passing through the first ten degrees of Capricornus or Virgo, and is also well aspected with Saturn. Its consecration consists in exposure to a perfume composed of white sandal, camphor, aloes, amber, and pulverized seed of cucumber, burnt with desiccated stalks of mugwort, and symbol of a sword in the centre of a pentagram must be engraved on the obverse side. A lion’s head surrounded by a six-pointed star must appear on the reverse face, with the letters of the name Erotosi, the planetary genius of Mars, above the outer angles. This talisman passes as a preservative against all combinations of enmities. It averts the chance of death in brawls and battles, in epidemics and fevers, and by corrugating ulcers. It also neutralizes the peril of a violent end as a punishment for crime when it is foretold in the horoscope of the nativity.

This talisman must be composed on a Tuesday, during the passage of the moon through the ten first degrees of Ariés or Sagittarius, and when, moreover, it is favourably aspected with Saturn and Mars. The consecration consists in its exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of dried abrinth and rue burnt in an earthen vessel which has never been previously used, and which must be broken into powder, and buried in a secluded place, when the operation is completed. Finally, the talisman must be sewn up in a satchel of red silk, and fastened on the breast with ribbons of the same material folded and knotted in the form of a cross.

“4. The Talisman of Mercury must be formed of a circular plate of fixed quicksilver, or according to another account of an amalgam of silver, mercury, and pewter, of the dimensions of an ordinary medal, well-polished on both sides. A winged caduceus, having two serpents twining about it, must be engraved in the centre on the obverse side. The other must bear a dog’s head within the star of Solomon, the latter being surrounded with the name of the planetary genius, Pitermes, written in the alphabet of the Magi. This talisman must be composed on a Wednesday, when the moon is passing through the ten first degrees of Gemini or Scorpio, and is well aspected with Saturn and Mercury. The consecration consists in its exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of benzoine, mace, and storax, burnt with the dried stalks of the lily, the narcissus, fumitory, and marjoline, placed in a clay chafing-dish which has never been devoted to any other purpose, and which must, after the completion of the task, be reduced to powder and buried in an undisturbed place. The Talisman of Mercury is judged to be a defence in all species of commerce and business industry. Buried under the ground in a house of commerce, it will draw customers and prosperity. It preserves all who wear it from epilepsy and madness. It averts death by murder and poison; it is a safeguard against the schemes of treason; and it procures prophetic dreams when it is worn on the head during sleep. It is fastened on the breast by a ribbon of purple silk folded and tied in the form of a cross, and the talisman is itself enclosed in a satchel of the same material.

“5. The Talisman of Jupiter must be formed of a circular plate of the purest English pewter, having the dimensions of an ordinary medal, and being highly polished on either side. The image of a four-pointed crown in the centre of a pentagram must be engraved on the obverse side. On the other must be the head of an eagle in the centre of the six-pointed star of Solomon, which must be surrounded by the name of the planetary genius Pi-Zéous, written in the arcane alphabet.

“This talisman must be composed on a Thursday, during the passage of the moon through the first ten degrees of Libra, and when it is also in a favourable aspect with Saturn and Jupiter. The consecration consists in its exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of incense, ambergris, balm, grain of Paradise, saffron, and macis, which is the second coat of the nutmeg. These must be burnt with wood of the oak, poplar, fig tree, and pomegranate, and placed in a new earthen dish, which must be ground into powder, and buried in a quiet spot, at the end of the ceremony. The talisman must be wrapped in a satchel of sky-blue silk, suspended on the breast by a ribbon of the same material, folded and fastened in the form of a cross.

“The Talisman of Jupiter is held to attract to the wearer the benevolence and sympathy of everyone. It averts anxieties, favours honourable enterprises, and augments well-being in proportion to social condition. It is a protection against unforeseen accidents, and the perils of a violent death when it is threatened by Saturn in the horoscope of nativity. It also preserves from death by affections of the liver, by inflammation of the lungs, and by that cruel affection of the spinal marrow, which is termed tabes dorsalis in medicine.

“6. The Talisman of Venus must be formed of a circular plate of purified and well-polished copper. It must be of the ordinary dimensions of a medal, perfectly polished on both its sides. It must bear on the obverse face the letter G inscribed in the alphabet of the Magi, and enclosed in a pentagram. A dove must be engraved on the reverse, in the centre of the six-pointed star, which must be surrounded by the letters which compose the name of the planetary Genius Suroth. This talisman must be composed on a Friday, during the passage of the moon through the first ten degrees of Taurus or Virgo, and when that luminary is well aspected with Saturn and Venus. Its last and most singular quality is its power to change the animosity of an enemy into a love and devotion which will be proof against every temptation, and it rests on the sole condition that such a person should be persuaded to partake of a liquid in which the talisman has been dipped.

“7. The Talisman of Saturn must be composed of a circular plate of refined and purified lead, being of the dimensions of an ordinary medal, elaborately polished. On the obverse side must be engraved with the diamond-pointed tool which is requisite in all these talismanic operations, the image of a sickle enclosed in a pentagram. The reverse side must bear a bull’s head, enclosed in the star of Solomon, and surrounded by the mysterious letters which compose, in the alphabet of the Magi, the name of the planetary Genius Tempha. The person who is intended to wear this talisman must engrave it himself, without witnesses, and without taking any one into his confidence.

“This talisman must be composed on a Saturday when the moon is passing through the first ten degrees of Taurus or Capricorn, and is favourably aspected with Saturn. It must be consecrated by exposure to the smoke of a perfume composed of alum, asa-foetida, camonée, and sulphur, which must be burnt with cypress, the wood of the ash tree, and sprays of black hellebore, in a new earthen chafing-dish, which must be reduced into powder at the end of the performance, and buried in a deserted place. The talisman must, finally, be sewn up in a satchel of green or rose-coloured silk, which must be fastened on the breast by a band of the same material, folded and tied in the form of a cross.

“The Talisman of Venus is accredited with extraordinary power in cementing the bonds of love and harmony between husbands and wives. It averts from those who wear it the spite and machinations of hatred. It preserves women from the terrible and fatal diseases which are known as cancer. It averts from both men and women all danger of death, to which they may be accidentally or purposely exposed. It counterbalances the unfortunate presages which may appear in the horoscope of the nativity. Its last and most singular quality is its power to change the animosity of an enemy into a love and devotion which will be proof against every temptation, and it rests on the sole condition that such a person should be persuaded to partake of a liquid in which the talisman has been dipped.”
Talking Mongoose

A celebrated paranormal phenomenon from Cashen's Gap on the Isle of Man, United Kingdom. It was investigated by psychical researchers Harry Price and R. S. Lambert in the 1930s. Named “Get,” the mongoose manifested to the Irving family, and there is some doubt whether it was a real creature or a poltergeist phenomenon.

Sources:

Tallmadge, Nathaniel Pitcher (1795–1864)

United States senator from 1833–34, governor of Wisconsin from 1844–46, and one of the early converts to Spiritualism. His experiences with the Fox sisters, recounted in a letter to a friend under the date April 12, 1853, were published in most of the newspapers of the time. He stated that he had received messages in direct writing from the spirit of John Calhoun and also witnessed very strong physical manifestations, notably the levitation of a table with himself on top of it. He also reported experiences in his own household. His thirteen-year-old daughter, who never touched the piano, began to play classical works and popular airs in trance.

In April 1854, a memorial was presented in Congress by James Shields, asking for an inquiry into the truth of Spiritualism. Tallmadge’s name topped the list of the 13,000 signatures that were attached. Tallmadge contributed an introduction to The Healing of the Nations by automatic writing medium CharlesCNTont, published in 1855 by The Society for the Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge. He died November 2, 1864.

Sources:

The Talmud

From the Hebrew tanah, to learn, the Talmud is the name of the great code of Jewish civil and canonical law. It is divided into two portions—the Mishna and the Gemara; the former constitutes the text and the latter is a commentary and supplement. But besides being the basis of a legal code, it is also a collection of Jewish poetry and legends.

The Mishna is a development of the laws contained in the Pentateuch. It is divided into six sedarim or orders, each containing a number of tractates, which are again divided into perqim or chapters. The sedarim are:

1. Zeraim, which deals with agriculture;
2. Moed, with festivals and sacrifices;
3. Nashim, with the law regarding women;
4. Nezahin, with civil law;
5. Qalashin, with the sacrificial law; and
6. Tohoroth or Tah, with purifications.

The Mishna is said to have been handed down by Ezra and to be in part the work of Joshua, David, or Solomon, and originally communicated orally by the Deity in the time of Moses.

There are two recensions—the Talmud of Jerusalem and the Talmud of Babylon. The latter, besides the sedarim already mentioned, contains seven additional treatises that are regarded as extra-canonical. The first is supposed to have been finally edited toward the close of the fourth century, and the second by Rabbi Ashi, president of the Academy of Syro in Babylon, sometime in the fourth century. Although revised from time to time before then, both versions have been greatly affected through the interpolation of traditions, and reinterpretations in the light of rabbinical discussions. The rabbinical decisions in the Mishna are entitled halcathoth and the traditional narratives haggadah.

The cosmogony of the Talmud assumes that the universe has been developed by means of a series of cataclysms—world after world was destroyed until the Creator made the present earth. E. Deutsch, commenting on the Talmud in the Quarterly Review, (1867) noted:

"The how of the creation was not mere matter of speculation. The co-operation of angels, whose existence was warrant ed by Scripture, and a whole hierarchy of whom had been built up under Persian influences, was distinctly denied. In a discussion about the day of their creation, it is agreed on all hands that there were no angels at first, lest men might say, 'Michael and his angels' up under Persian influences, was distinctly denied. In a discussion about the day of their creation, it is agreed on all hands that there were no angels at first, lest men might say, 'Michael and his angels' to escort him, but their address is not couched in any spirit of consolation or encouragement."

The Talmud is the supreme repository of Jewish moral and spiritual law; it also enshrines a wealth of historical, geographical, philosophical, and poetical traditions. It is one of the great documents of human history and the central focus of Jewish law.

It has been considered by some authorities that a great many of the traditional tales in the Talmud have a magical basis, and that magical secrets are contained in them, but this depends entirely upon the interpretation put upon them, and the subject is one which necessitates close study. An English translation of the Jerusalem Talmud was published in 1871, and of the Babylonian Talmud (35 vols.), 1953–52.

Tamlin, Sarah (ca. 1848)

One of the very early American rapping mediums, soon after the famous Rochester rappings of the Fox sisters. E. W. Capron visited Tamlin and attended one of her séances at which raps were heard. A table moved in various directions and "was held down to the floor so that it required the whole strength of a man to move it from its position." At that time, the phenomenon of raps spread like a contagion. Harriet Beebe, a girl of sixteen, visited Tamlin and on returning to her own home twenty miles away, the raps broke out again in her presence. And, according to Capron's account, about fifty mediums were soon operating in private circles.

Sources:

Tanagras, Angelos (1875–ca. 1970)

An admiral in the Greek Navy who took an active interest in parapsychology. He was born on May 20, 1875, in Athens, Greece. Through his life he authored a number of books on Greek history and legends.

As a young man he became a corresponding member of the Society for Psychological Research, London, as well as various European psychical research societies. He founded and served as the first president (1923 on) of the Hellenic Society for Psychological Research; he edited and contributed to the society's journal, Psychic Research. Tanagras organized the Fourth International Congress of Psychic Research in Athens during 1930, when he worked closely with Hans Driesch and Sir Oliver Lodge.

Tanagras took part in experiments in long distance telepathy, collaborating with Rene Warcollier in France and Gardner Murphy in the United States, as well as experimenters in Italian and British psychic research societies. He studied psychometry in Greece, and contributed various articles on parapsychological subjects to different psychological research journals and one book.

Sources:

Tannhäuser

A medieval German legend about how a minstrel and knight of that name, who passed by the Hörseberg (Hill of Venus) and entered therein in answer to a call. He remained there with an enchantress and lived an unholy life. After a time he grew weary of sin, and longing to return to normal living, forsook the worship of Venus and left her.

He then made a pilgrimage to Rome to ask pardon of the Pope, but when he was told by Urban IV himself that the papal staff would as soon blossom as such a sinner as Tannhäuser be forgiven, he returned to Venus. Three days later, the Pope's staff did actually blossom, and the Pope sent messengers into every country to find the despairing minstrel, but to no purpose. Tannhäuser had disappeared.

The story has a mythological basis that has been overlaid by medieval Christian thought, and the original hero of which has been displaced by a more modern personage, just as the Venus of the existing legend is the mythological Venus only in name. She is really a German earth-goddess, Lady Holda.

Tannhäuser was a minnesinger (love-minstrel of the middle of the thirteenth century). He was very popular among the minnesingers of that time. The restless and intemperate life he led probably marked him out as the hero of such a legend as has been recounted.

He was the author of many ballads of considerable excellence, which were published in the second part of the Minnesinger of Friedrich H. von der Hagen (Leipzig, 1838) and in the sixth volume of Moriz Haupt's Zeitschrift für deutsches Alterthum (1841). The most authentic version of this legend is given in J. L. Uhland's Alle hoch und niederdeutsche Volkslieder (Stuttgart, 1844–45).

Tantra

A science or sadhana (spiritual practice) based on a vast collection of religious and occult Hindu scriptures that emphasize the shakti (energy of the deity), usually called kundalini, which comes from the goddess. The scriptures are generally in the form of a dialogue between the god Shiva and his wife Parvati. In treatises where Shiva answers the questions, they are called agama; where Parvati answers it is a nagama.

The tantra scriptures represent a cumulation of knowledge dating to ancient times. The majority of texts are written in Sanskrit, but are also found in Pali, Prakīrti, Hindi, and Bengali. They are considered encyclopedias of esoteric wisdom, covering topics such as creation and destruction of the universe, worship of the gods, spiritual disciplines, rituals, occult powers, and meditations. The tantras also discuss the subtle anatomy of the body including the chakras (spiritual centers) and the connection paths between them through which the kundalini energy travels. The tantras are also supposed to be specially relevant to Kali Yoga (the present age of devolution).

As vast and varied as the scriptures appear, however, they all have one characteristic in common: "an integrative approach to sadhana, with the objective of making the best use of all available resources within and without." Tantra can be considered the holistic approach to spiritual practice.

In opposition to traditional Judeo-Christian and aesthetic Eastern practices, Tantra does not seek to sublimate the flesh to the spirit, the physical to the metaphysical. Instead, tantra seeks to reintegrate all aspects of life, to "dissolve boundaries we've created, the separateness, the disconnectedness and become more connected with all of life."

Since the tantra's purpose is to integrate all aspects of life, it is a practice where numerous varieties of sciences can blend: hatha yoga, pranayama, meditations, rituals, kundalini yoga, nada yoga, mantra, yantra, mandala, visualization of deities, alchemy, Ayurveda, and astrology can all comfortably fit within the realm of tantra. But because so many intricate sciences and techniques can be employed, it is usually advised that the tantra practitioner is studied under a competent master, who can lead the student through the complex weave of ideas and procedures.

In the West, tantra is often identified with sexuality and sexual practices. Tantric ideas are often used to help individuals and couples transform love making into a more satisfying experience, on the physical, emotional, and spiritual realm. By integrating the male and female aspect of the individual and the couple, tantra is used to fuse the sexual union to a reflection of the mystical union between the shiva and shakti aspects of the divine.

1529
Tantric Yoga

A popular knowledge of tantric anatomy came to the West through Theosophy. Western scholar Sir John Woodroffe (1865–1936) wrote several pioneering books on tantra and translated tantric scriptures under a pseudonym, Arthur Avalon. The various systems of tantric yoga based on the tantras have spread in the West through the twentieth century.

Sources:
—. Shakti and Shaktta. 3d ed. Madras, India: Ganesh, 1929.

Tantric Yoga

A system of Hindu yoga which emphasizes the shakti (sexual energy) associated with the female principle and usually characterized as kundalini.

There are essentially two concentrations of tantric yoga, which can be called the pragmatic and the aesthetic.

The pragmatic level focuses primarily on the sexual act and promotes a sacred style of sexuality which promotes communication, breath, and energy. In concert with the Tantra philosophy, this concentration seeks to enhance the sexual experience through integration of the male and female (shiva/shakti) aspects of each individual, and of the couple together. Hatha yoga (postures), raja yoga (meditation), pranayama (breathing techniques), and other techniques such as coitus reservatus (ejaculation control) and amrita (female ejaculation) are employed to enrich the sexual act. Participants are taught to expand their focus from the second (sexual or svadhisthana) chakra to all seven chakras throughout the body. This cultivates sensitivity and kundalini (sexual energy) associated with the female principle and usually characterized as kundalini.

The second concentration focuses on raising the kundalini energy to encompass several areas of life, including the sexual. It follows the philosophy of tantra (meaning to weave, to expand, to spread) by integrating all aspects of life. In this concentration there is no separation of the physical from the metaphysical, the female to the male, of the animate to the inanimate, of the corporeal to the corporeal. The corporeal is not seen as a barrier to spiritual growth, as in many Judeo-Christian traditions, but instead as another source of divine energy. “Whatever is in the body is also in the universe.”

In addition to these concentrations of tantric yoga there exists a specifically left-hand or occult pathway of tantric yoga, known as tantrism, that involves a taboo-breaking ceremony with a female assistant. This form of tantrism tends to oppose ascetic forms of yoga that align spiritual development with the denial of the things of the world. Instead of avoiding those things normally eschewed by a sannyasin (a person living the renounced life), the tantric uses those things and converts them into a tool of tantric development. The generally avoided items, called the five “M’s” consist of: Mudra (flesh), Mantra (fish), Mudra (a term implying both paruced grain and mystic gesture), and Mudra (sexual intercourse). From Hinduism, tantric beliefs and practices passed into Buddhism and became a notable part of Tibetan Buddhism.

Knowledge of tantric yoga began to appear in the West in the early twentieth century within the writings of Sir John Woodroffe (who wrote under the pseudonym Arthur Avalon). However, it was not until the 1970s, when the volume of Omar Garri son, that details of the rituals of the left-hand path were written down and published in the West. Subsequently, a number of texts have appeared. A measurable number of modern tantric teachers first became familiar with tantric yoga through Bhagwan Rajneesh (later known as Osho). Through the twentieth century, a form of sexual occultism usually associated with magician Aleister Crowley arose out of Western ceremonial magic. Because of the common use of sexual intercourse as a means of spiritual attainment in both tantra and Western sex magic, many have assumed that the two are related. As knowledge of the rituals and teaching of each system was made public through the 1980s, however, scholars are now aware that the two practices are quite different in operation and purpose and have very different historical roots.

Although there is acknowledgment between the differences between Western sex magic and tantric yoga, there must exist an understanding that the philosophy of Tantra is missing in most Western tantric yoga. Most often tantric yoga is used as a sort of sexual or marital therapy, which is ultimately missing the goal of enlightenment. News of sexual enhancement advantages has even lured such celebrities as Sting to explore the benefits of tantric yoga.

Besides Western exploitation of tantra there is also controversy surrounding teachers who allegedly take sexual advantage of students. Swami Rama of the Himalayas, for example, faced several allegations of sexual misconduct with his students, prior to his death in 1997. There have been numerous other accounts of sexual improprieties between tantric yoga teachers and their students. These stories act as a reminder of the delicate and often vulnerable relationship that can exist between the spiritual master and the student.

Sources:
Tao

Term used in ancient Chinese religious philosophy, signifying “the Way” or “pathway of life.” The Tao is understood as a unity underlying the opposites and diversity of the phenomenal world. Ch'eng Shun Li (cosmic energy) is manifest in the duality of yin and yang (negative and positive), female and male principles in nature. Yin and yang are also energies in the individual human body and the balancing of these energies is one of the tasks of life. The correct harmony between yin and yang may be achieved through diet, meditation, and a life of truth, simplicity, and tranquillity, identifying with the Tao of nature.

Taoism

Taoism teaches union with the law of the universe through wisdom and detached action. Special techniques of Taoist yoga normalize and enhance the flow of vital energy in the human body. This yoga is variously named K'ai Men (open door), Ho P'ing (emptiness), and Ho Hsüeh (harmony). K'ai Men implies opening the path to the channels of mind, spirit, and body so that they reflect the balance of yin and yang and a harmony with the energy of the cosmos.

Taoist yoga is very similar to the kundalini yoga systems of India, and it is not clear whether such a parallel system originated by direct influence of traveling mystics or by spontaneous rediscovery of basic truths. Both Indian and Chinese yogas are concerned with the control of vital energy, seen as the force behind sexual activity, but which may be diverted into different channels in the body for blissful expansion of consciousness. For centuries the techniques of Chinese yoga were little known in the West; teaching manuals were closely guarded and not translated into Western languages. Teachings were usually transmitted orally from teacher to pupil.

During the twentieth century, and especially since the Chinese Revolution, teachers of Taoism and Chinese yoga have established schools in the United States and published translations of basic Chinese yoga texts. Modern teachers of Chinese yoga include Charles Luk (Lu K'uan Yu) of Hong Kong, who has translated various Chinese Buddhist and yoga texts, and Mantak Chia from Thailand, who studied with Taoist and Buddhist masters and has created a synthesis of their spiritual techniques, in conjunction with classical techniques of T'ai Chi Ch'üan. Together with his wife Maneewan Chia, Mantak Chia has been instrumental in establishing Healing Tao Centers in the United States and Europe that offer a basic self-development course of what is termed Taoist Esoteric Yoga.

In distinction to the philosophical esoteric concept of the Tao, but growing out of it, Taoism as a religious system complete with temples and popular worship, became one of the three major religious systems of China, together with Confucianism and Buddhism.

Sources:

Taoism

One of the three major religious systems of ancient China, together with Confucianism and Buddhism. Early Taoism derives from the Tao ("the road" or "the way") teachings of Lao Tzu. The origins and background of Lao Tzu is uncertain; in fact, most details of his life are legendary. Some sources claim Lao Tzu was said born of poor parents in Tao (Honan) under the Emperor Ting of the Kau dynasty (ca. 605 B.C.E.). Others believe he was a philosopher who became disillusioned with the world and became a pessimist, later resigning his position in the Record Department and retiring to a monastery. He also allegedly met and was taught by Gautama Buddha, and held discussions with Confucius. The name, Lao Tzu (meaning "Old Master"), may not be an actual persons name but a pseudonym for the philosophers and teachers who developed Taoism as it is known today.

Lao Tzu’s book Tao-te-Chang was regarded as a sacred work in North and Central China, but was burned with other writings in 290 B.C.E. It reappeared under the Han dynasty and was reinforced by the teachings of Chuang-Tzu, another Taoist classic. It is believed to have been the work of a philosopher of the same name. Lao Tzu was the first to formalize Taoism while Chuang-Tzu developed a more mystical school, stressing physics, and epistemology. Chuang Tzu’s teachings of the Tao is considered to be transcendental, while Lao-Tzu’s is considered to be a natural form.

Taoism was originally an esoteric philosophy, concerned with the unity underlying the opposites and diversity of the phenomenal world. Taoism taught union with the law of the universe through wisdom and detached action. The union of cosmic and individual energies is reminiscent of the Vedanta teachings of India.

As central to the Taoist tradition as the concepts of yin and yang are the ideas of Tao and Te ("the power"). Like yin, Tao is often identified with the passive (or wu wei); because the way is often given preeminence over the power. It is said a real seeker of wisdom knows the power (Te) but seeks the way (Tao). One should not strive for wealth or prestige and that aggression is to be avoided.

As part of the Taoists' practice, followers have incorporated lifestyle rituals, such as vegetarianism, herbal and tactile medical approaches, good moral conduct, and the use of appropriate incantations, amulets, and charms. T'ai Chi Ch'üan, with its fusion of energetic and relaxed exercise, has provided a means of increasing and enhancing chi (or Qi), the vital force of life. The overall goal of Taoists' life is to attain harmony with the Tao. This means one must desire nothing, live simply, and act by not acting. It is a practice where solitude and individualism is cherished and where the “upper classes” of social standing are rejected.

Taoism has also developed its own yoga techniques, which parallel the ancient Hindu system of Kundalini yoga. These individual alchemy was variously named K'ai men (open door), ho p'ing (unity), or ho hseih (harmony).

The extraordinary parallels between ancient Indian and Chinese Taoism in its various forms and Hinduism (Vedanta and yoga) do not appear to have been documented by historians. The yoga teachings of China descended from teacher to pupil; it is only in recent times that basic texts have been translated into English. There are now teachers of Chinese yoga in Western countries and centers for instruction. There are also many translations with commentaries of the earlier Tao teachings in the Tao-te-Chang.
Target

Term used by parapsychologists to indicate the object (mental or physical) to which a subject attempts to respond paranormally. A mental target would relate to extrasensory perception, a physical target to psychokinesis.

Tarnas, Richard Theodore (1950– )

Richard Theodore Tarnas, a psychologist and intellectual historian best known for his work with the Esalen Institute, was born on February 21, 1950, in Geneva, Switzerland. His parents were Americans and he grew up in Michigan. His father, a professor of law, encouraged his intellectual pursuits and he completed his high school work at the University of Detroit Preparatory School, operated as a day school. He entered Harvard in 1968 and graduated with an A.B. (cum laude) in 1972. He then entered the doctoral program at Saybrook Institute, the graduate school of psychology in San Francisco, California, and completed his Ph.D. in 1979.

Tarnas was able to travel for several years before settling at Esalen, where he was able to interact with some of the leading minds of the human potentials movement including Stanislav Grof, James Hillman, and Rupert Sheldrake. In 1979 he became Esalen’s director of programs and education. While at Esalen he became known for his work on psychedelic therapy. In 1982 he married Heather Malcolm, a Canadian, and the following year left Esalen to enter private practice and to write.

The major product of this period was The Passion of the Western Mind (1991), a narrative history of the Western worldview from the ancient Greek to the postmodern.

More recently Tarnas has joined the faculty of the California Institute for Integral Studies in San Francisco, where he became the founding director of the Philosophy, Cosmology, and Consciousness program. The program is indicative of his broad eclectic interests which include the evolution of consciousness, depth psychology, psychodermic research, astrology, and gnosticism. He has, for example, contributed essays furthering the psychological interpretation of astrology and arguing for the importance of astrology in understanding the evolution of the Western mind.

Sources:

Tarot (or Tarots)

French term for a special pack of playing cards popularly used for the purpose of divination. These cards enjoyed a boost in popularity as a self-discovery tool of the New Age and a development tool among Wiccans and ritual magicians. The derivation of the word tarot is still debated. Some suggest that these cards were named because of the tarots on the back, that is, the plain or dotted lines crossing diagonally. Some confirmation of this theory is indicated by the German form of the word, a tarot-karte being a card checkered on the back.

Tarot cards form part of an ordinary pack in countries of southern Europe and the name tarocchi is given to an Italian game. In its familiar form, the tarot pack consists of a pack of 78 cards, comprising four suits of 14 cards each (the extra court card in each suit being the Cavalier, Knight, or Horseman) and 22 symbolic picture-cards as aces or trumps. The four suits, related to the modern hearts, clubs, diamonds, and spades, are swords, cups, coins, and batons (earlier represented as swords, cups, rings, and wands).

The 22 symbolic cards generally picture the Juggler or Magician, High Priestess or Female Pope, Empress, Emperor, Hierophant or Pope, Lovers, Chariot, Justice, Hermit, Wheel of

Sources:

Fortune, Strength or Fortitude, Hanged Man, Death, Temperance, Devil, Lightning-struck Tower, Star, Moon, Sun, Justice, Prudence, Temperance, Hanged Man, Death, Temperance, Devil, Lightning-struck Tower, Star, Moon, Sun, Justice. These interpretations also vary according to different authorities. In addition, the other cards in the pack are considered to the seasons of the year, 52 weeks, and the symbolic rulers of the court cards. Some writers have connected the pack with the ancient Egyptian origins of the game of chess, with its comparable king, queen, and knight. However, within the occult community, many have looked to an origin in ancient Egypt. According to such popular lore, the priests of ancient Egypt invented the tarot cards to represent their secret doctrines and teachings. They escaped the destruction of the Christian era because the book burners did not know what they were. Later, some Egyptians brought them to Rome, and they survived in the courts of the popes and passed to France during the period when the papacy was headquartered in Avignon.

This story of the Egyptian lineage first appeared in the French occult community of the eighteenth century, having been invented by a Protestant minister, Antoine Court de Gebelin (1719–1784). De Gebelin, an occultist and Martinist, had become an early supporter of Franz A. Mesmer's ideas of animal magnetism and an amateur Egyptologist. In 1781, before this Egyptian hieroglyphics had been deciphered, he published an eight-volume tome Le monde primitif (1781) with his speculative notions. Tarot cards had existed for several centuries in Europe with no speculation about any mystical connection. But De Gebelin argued, with little evidence, that the word "tarot" actually meant royal road, a derivation he made from the Egyptian words "ta" or "way" and "toshi" or "royal." It should be noted that no such words have been found in the Egyptian language. Along with his essay on the deck, De Gebelin also published another essay by an anonymous friend, the first to label the cards the "Book of Thoth," Thoth being one name for the Egyptian god Horus.

As a result of widespread reading of Le monde primitif, the tarot cards began to be used as divination devices in Paris, though the spread of the practice was slow. It was significant that Francis Barrett did not include any mention of the deck in his 1801 catalog of magical practice, The Magus.

The next important step in the establishment of the occult tarot occurred in the mid-nineteenth century when Eliphas Levi encountered a deck during his massive reworking of the magical tradition in light of Mesmerist thought. He identified their magical power with animal magnetism, a theory still popular to the present.

In 1853 Levi published Dogma de la haute magie, in which he first laid out his ideas tying the tarot to the ancient Egyptian teacher Hermes Trismegistus, the legendary author of the Hermetic magical writings. He then tied the cards to the Hebrew magical/mystical Kabala (which he spelled "Qabalah"). He identified the numbered cards with the ten sephiroth. The court cards represented the stages of human life, and the suits symbolized the tetragrammaton, the four letters that made up the Hebrew name of God. The 22 trump cards were tied to the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet, and all of the Kabbalistic content earlier ascribed to each letter was plowed into the tarot cards.

Levi used the Marseilles tarot deck, but grew increasingly dissatisfied with it. His early efforts to produce a new deck did not come to fruition, but Levi did promote his project with an English Mason, Kenneth Mackenzie (1835–1886). Mackenzie, as a leader in the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, taught tarot to the group of men who were to found the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn (OGD), the organization most responsible for the modern magical revival.

S. L. MacGregor Mathers and his wife, Moina, collaborated on the OGD deck to go along with the order's rituals, most of which he also wrote. He produced one original, which was given to each member as they reached the grade of Minor, who in turn made their own personal copy. It is this deck that was described by Aleister Crowley in his journal, The Equinox. It was finally published in 1978. Possibly the most important deck to come out of the OGD was that produced by Arthur Edward Waite in collaboration with Pamela Coleman-Smith. It was released in 1910 to accompany Waite's The Key to the Tarot (later reissued as The Pictorial Key to the Tarot) and went on to become the most popular deck for divinatory purposes in the twentieth century. Paul Foster Case (1884–1954), an OGD member who later founded the Builders of the Adytum, developed a deck, based in large part upon the Waite-Smith cards, in collaboration with Jessie Burns Parks. The deck was published in 1931.

Finally, in 1938, Aleister Crowley (1875–1947), who left the OGD and published many of its secrets, began a collaboration with Freda Harris to embody the thelemic magick of the Ordo Templi Orientis. They used both the OGD and Waite-Smith deck, but both the art and concepts went far beyond either. While the original art work was displayed at an art gallery during World War II, and a limited edition of 200 decks appeared in 1944, the Crowley-Harris tarot did not reach the public until it was finally published in 1969 by Samuel Weiser. This deck is the only one to challenge the Waite-Smith deck's popularity.

Gypsy Origins

One hypothesis, which paralleled the idea of Egyptian origins and has likewise been largely disproved, concerned the mysterious Gypsies. The idea that the tarot was introduced into Europe by the Gypsies of the Middle Ages was first suggested by an anonymous friend of de Gebelin's in the eighteenth century. It was championed in the next century by J. F. Vaillant, who had lived for many years among the Gypsies and who had been instructed by them in their traditional lore. He tied the word "tarot" to the Hungarian Gypsy tar (pack of cards), and claimed that ancient esoteric symbolism found its way throughout Europe through Gypsy migrations. Vaillant incorporated what he had been told in his books Les Rênes, histoire vraie des vrais Bohémiens (1857), La Bible des Bohémiens (1860), and La Clé Magique de la Fiction et du Fait (1863). Vaillant's theory was endorsed by the French writer "Papus" (penname of Gédéon Encave) in his book Le Tarot des Bohémiens: Le plus ancien livre du monde (1899) (English edition as The Tarot of the Bohemians, 1919) in which he claimed that the tarot was the absolute key to occult science. Papus notes, "the Gypsy pack of cards is a wonderful book according to Court de Gebelin and Vaillant. This pack, under the names of Tarot, Thora, and Rota, has formed the basis of the synthetic teaching of all the ancient nations successively."

The British legal authority De l'Hoste Ranking, writing in 1908, adds: "I would submit that from internal evidence we may deduce that the tarots were introduced by a race speaking an Indian dialect; that the form of the deck were invented by a race of a country where the orthodox Eastern Church predominated; and the form of head-dress of the king, together with the shape of the eagle on the shield, shows that this was governed by Russian Grand Dukes, who had not yet assumed the Imperial insignia. This seems to me confirmatory of the widespread belief that it is to the Gypsies we are indebted for our knowledge of playing-cards.

In 1865, E. S. Taylor added his support to the same hypothesis in his book The History of Playing Cards. However, W. H. Wilshires, in his book A Descriptive Catalogue of Playing and Other Cards in the British Museum (1876), questioned Taylor’s conclusion, on the ground that “whether the Zingari [Gypsies] be of Egyptian or Indian origin, they did not appear in Europe before 1417, when cards had been known for some time.” But this objection is nullified by the fact that the presence of Gypsies in Europe is now placed at a date considerably before 1417. There was, for example, a well-established feudum necrogarum, or Gypsy barony, in the island of Corfu in the fourteenth century. It is also believed that the Gypsies themselves were originally the ancient chandola caste of India.

Coincident with the occult revival referred to as the New Age movement, the tarot has enjoyed an unprecedented period of popularity. New Agers have seen the tarot as an important additional tool for personal transformation and have interpreted the symbolism as a new map of the unconscious. The New Age approach has spurred the production of a variety of decks that explore different symbolic worlds, offer variant interpretations from the psychological to the Wiccan, and present a broad scope of artistic styles. Traditional tarot cards have gone high-tech, with digital decks for sale on the Internet for those who are curious and willing to spend a few dollars. Some of these digital decks have replaced the customary card suits and symbols (i.e., cups, wands, pentacles, swords, priestesses, magicians) with characters representing modern themes. For example, a “king” in a traditional tarot deck is replaced by a “businessman” in a contemporary deck. These modern versions may attract a broader audience to tarot, however, many will take the practice less seriously than with the more traditional decks.

Sources:

Tarot Network News

Tart, Charles Theodore (1937– )
Psychophysicologist and parapsychologist. He was born on April 29, 1937, in Morrisville, Pennsylvania. He studied for two years at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) before moving to the University of North Carolina (B.A., 1966; M.A., 1962; Ph.D., 1963). During his student years he also was a research assistant at the Psychophysiology Laboratory, Department of Psychiatry, Duke University Hospital (1958–60). Following his graduation he became a lecturer at Stanford University (1964–65) and at the University of Virginia, School of Medicine (1965–66). This was prior to joining the faculty at the University of California, Davis in 1966. He is currently a professor of psychology at Davis, and the publisher of a quarterly The Open Mind.

Tarret’s interest in parapsychology manifested while a student in North Carolina when he became a frequent visitor at the Parapsychology Laboratory at nearby Duke University. He became a member of the American Society for Psychical Research and in the 1970s associated with Russell Targ and Harold E. Puthoff in their research at the Stanford Research Institute. He was elected president of the Parapsychology Association in 1977.

Tarret’s research has ranged across the field of parapsychological concerns and been the subject of numerous papers, but he is possibly most respected for his studies of states of consciousness and transpersonal psychology. This research resulted in two classic volumes Allerred States of Consciousness (1969) and Transpersonal Psychologies (1975). Less known, Tart proposed an instrument for automatic testing of ESP, which was constructed at the University of Virginia and named the “ESP-TEACHER.” It was set up in the Research Laboratory of the American Society for Psychical Research.

Tarot Network News

A journal serving the community of tarot card readers, Tarot Network News was founded in 1983 by Gary Ross. Ross had anticipated the new burst of enthusiasm for tarot cards largely because of the New Age movement and the neopagan Wicca movement. Throughout the twentieth century the tarot deck designed by Pamela Coleman Smith and Arthur Edward Waite and published by Rider & Co. in London (1910) has been the most popular deck. Some alternative decks were based on the Rider-Waite deck, but new designs were increasingly based on different psychologies and worldviews. Several decks adopted Egyptian motifs (including one by Oscar Ichazo, the founder of Arica), and others operated from such widely divergent realms as tantrism, the 1960s counterculture, and surrealism. Whereas Wiccans adopted tarot decks as simply part of their magic worldview, New Agers began to see the tarot as an important tool for personal transformation. Both movements created an environment in which creation of new tarot decks was seen as an important personal exploratory activity, and readers were encouraged to find a deck that suited their individual personality and concept of truth.

Tarot Network News, 12 issues of which had appeared by 1994, reviews new decks as they appear, discusses the meaning of the cards of the major arcana, and celebrates the expansion of the world of tarot cards. The News also sponsors the Bay Area Tarot Symposium twice annually. Gary Ross continues as editor of the News, which is published by Jack and Rae Hurley. Address: c/o TAROCO, P.O. Box 104, Sausalito, CA 94966.

Sources:

Tart, Charles Theodore (1937– )
Psychophysicologist and parapsychologist. He was born on April 29, 1937, in Morrisville, Pennsylvania. He studied for two years at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) before moving to the University of North Carolina (B.A., 1966; M.A., 1962; Ph.D., 1963). During his student years he also was a research assistant at the Psychophysiology Laboratory, Department of Psychiatry, Duke University Hospital (1958–60). Following his graduation he became a lecturer at Stanford University (1964–65) and at the University of Virginia, School of Medicine (1965–66). This was prior to joining the faculty at the University of California, Davis in 1966. He is currently a professor of psychology at Davis, and the publisher of a quarterly The Open Mind.

Tart’s interest in parapsychology manifested while a student in North Carolina when he became a frequent visitor at the Parapsychology Laboratory at nearby Duke University. He became a member of the American Society for Psychical Research and in the 1970s associated with Russell Targ and Harold E. Puthoff in their research at the Stanford Research Institute. He was elected president of the Parapsychology Association in 1977.

Tart’s research has ranged across the field of parapsychological concerns and been the subject of numerous papers, but he is possibly most respected for his studies of states of consciousness and transpersonal psychology. This research resulted in two classic volumes Allerred States of Consciousness (1969) and Transpersonal Psychologies (1975). Less known, Tart proposed an instrument for automatic testing of ESP, which was constructed at the University of Virginia and named the “ESP-TEACHER.” It was set up in the Research Laboratory of the American Society for Psychical Research.
Tarthang Tulku

One of several Tibetan lamas known as a Tulku (incarnated being) who brought traditional Tibetan Buddhist teachings to the West in the wake of the Chinese takeover of the country. He came to the United States and settled in the San Francisco Bay area early in 1969, bringing with him his wife and a collection of rare Tibetan sacred texts.

With the help of a small group of students, he soon established the Tibetan Nyingmapa Meditation Center in Berkeley. Nyingmapa is one of four Tibetan Buddhism sects with an ancient tradition. It was founded in the eighth century C.E. by Guru Padmasambhava and Shantirakshita. The literature of Nyingmapa is classified as Kama (oral tradition from master to disciple) and Terma (secret books originally concealed by Padmasambhava, such as The Tibetan Book of the Dead.).

Known generally as Rinpoche (precious master), Tarthang Tulku teaches the advanced system of Buddhist doctrine known as Vajrayana. It embodies some teachings of tantra, but is essentially directed at enhancing degrees of understanding and awareness.

Tasseography

A formal term for the branch of fortune-telling of divination by tea leaves.

Tattvic Yoga

Term for the ancient Hindu science of breath, as expounded in one of the earliest texts presenting Hinduism to the West, The Science of Breath and the Philosophy of the Tattvas (1897) by Pandit Rama Prasad. The “breath” referred to is the life-giving breath of Brahman and in it are contained, according to Prasad, the five elementary principles of nature, corresponding to the five senses of man. These principles are known as tattvas, and from them the body and the physical world is composed.

The knowledge of the tattvas is believed to confer wonderful power and to this end all undertakings must be commenced at times that are known to be propitious for the movements of the tattvas or vital currents in the body.

Tavibo

Tavibo, a Native American of the Paiute people, emerged among them around 1869 as a prophet and visionary. He resided in Mason Valley, north of Virginia City, Nevada, in mountainous territory. It was common for the men to go to the mountains to seek vision and revelations from various spirit entities. Whites began to move into the area in the 1860s and the various chiefs and religious leaders among the Paiute were confronted, as had Native people before them, with the problem of losing their land to the new settlers.

Accounts of Tavibo vary, but all agree that he received a new revelation in a set of spiritual visions that offered hope to his contemporaries that the Earth would rise up and consume the whites and the land would be returned to its original state before their arrival. These visions most likely occurred in 1869 or 1870. In possibly the best account, left by a Captain J. M. Lee, an infantry officer on duty in the area in the 1870s, Tavibo had gone into the mountains and had an initial vision in which he was told that the Paiute’s situation would be relieved by an earthquake. The Earth would open up and consume the white people. He enlarged upon this prediction in a second vision that suggested that all the humans in the area would be taken into the ground by the quake but that after a short while the Native people would be resurrected.

In a final third revelation, Tavibo said that only those who believed in the prophecy would be resurrected. Unbelievers would join the whites in eternal damnation. Each new revelation brought him some additional followers; however, before he was able to firmly establish his teachings, he died. His movement appeared to die with him and little was heard of it for some two decades. However, in the 1890s, his son Wokova emerged as a new prophet, teaching a variation of his father’s message and what became popularly known as the Ghost Dance.

Sources:

Taxil, Leo

Pseudonym of Gabriel Jogand-Pagès, a French journalist of the nineteenth century, who sustained a prolonged occult hoax alleging devil-worship amongst French Freemasons.

Taylor, Gordon Rattray (1911–1981)

A British author and broadcaster who served as a member of the Society for Psychical Research, London (1976–81). He was born in Eastbourne on January 11, 1911, and educated at Radley College, Trinity College, and Cambridge University. He worked as a journalist beginning in 1935 and in 1958 joined the British Broadcasting Company where he wrote and devised science television programs. In 1966 he became a full-time author. He had authored a number of books over his lifetime. Taylor died December, 7, 1981.

Sources:

Taylor, John (Gerald) (1931— )

Professor of applied mathematics at King’s College, London, England, who was the first British scientist to investigate the phenomena of Uri Geller. Taylor was born on August 18, 1931, in Hayes, Kent. He won his way into Christ’s College, Cambridge at age 16; at 18 he enrolled at Mid-Essex Technical College, where he took his B.Sc. in general science. He completed a three-year mathematics degree course in two years at Cambridge and passed with first class honors. His academic career has included visiting professorships in the United States as well as being Professor of Theoretical Physics at the University of Southampton and a post at King’s College, London.
When Uri Geller visited Britain in 1974, Taylor conducted scientific tests of Geller’s feats of metal bending and interference with a Geiger counter. Taylor also experimented with some of the children and adults who manifested paranormal abilities after seeing Uri Geller’s appearances on British television programs. Taylor’s interest in such phenomena was not only in its scientific validation, but also in investigation of the way in which such phenomena take place and the nature of the forces involved. He suggested the phenomena may be some low-frequency electromagnetic effect generated by human beings.

Through the 1970s Taylor was regarded as fully endorsing the paranormal metal bending of Uri Geller, but gradually has made more guarded statements; then in 1980 he largely retracted his support for Geller’s paranormal talents. In 1974 he noted, ‘The Geller effect—of metal-bending—is clearly not brought about by fraud. It is so exceptional it presents a crucial challenge to modern science and could even destroy the latter if no explanation became available.’ Taylor then spent three years careful investigation of such phenomena as psychokinesis, metal bending, and dowseing, but could not discover any reasonable scientific explanation or validation that satisfied him. He was particularly concerned to establish whether there is an electromagnetic basis for such phenomena. After failing to find this he did not believe that there was any other explanation that would suffice. Most of his experiments under laboratory conditions were negative; this left him in a skeptical position regarding the validity of claimed phenomena.

In contrast to the endorsement in his first book on psi, Superminds, he published a paper expressing his doubts in a paper in Nature (November 2, 1978) titled “Can Electromagnetism Account for Extra-sensory Phenomena?” He followed this with his book Science and the Supernatural (1980) in which he expressed complete skepticism about every aspect of the paranormal. In his final chapter he stated: “We have searched for the supernatural and not found it. In the main, only poor experimentation [including his own], shoddy theory, and human gullibility have been encountered.”

Taylor’s new position seems to stem from his failure to find an electromagnetic explanation for paranormal phenomena. In his new book he stated: “We therefore have to accept that when science faces up to the supernatural, it is a case of electromagnetism or bust.” In contrast, John Hasted, another British scientist who has tested Uri Geller, continues to support the reality of the Geller effect and also believes that there is evidence of an electromagnetic field in the phenomenon.

Sources:

Tea Leaves, Divination by

One of the most popular forms of fortune-telling, depending largely upon psychic intuition. After a cup of tea has been poured, without using a tea strainer, the tea is dunked or poured away. The cup should then be shaken well and any remaining liquid drained off in the saucer. The diviner now looks at the pattern of tea leaves in the cup and allows the imagination to play around the shapes suggested by them. They might look like a letter, a heart shape, or a ring. These shapes are then interpreted intuitively or by means of a fairly standard system of symbolism, such as: snake (enmity or falsehood), spade (good fortune through industry), mountain (journey or hindrance), or house (changes, success).

With the popularity of tea bags, divination by tea leaves has declined somewhat, but the bags can be opened and placed in a teapot and brewed in the old-fashioned way. The system can also be used for coffee grounds. This long established popular form of fortune-telling has been given the formal name of tasseography.

Sources:

Tears Painted on Shutters

It was mentioned in Thomas Pennant’s book A Tour in Scotland (1769) that in some parts of Scotland it was the custom, on the death of any person of distinction, to paint on the doors and window-shutters white tadpole-like shapes on a black ground. These were intended to represent tears, and were a sign of general mourning.

Techter, David (1932— )

Museum worker who has written widely on parapsychology. Born October 5, 1932, at Morristown, New Jersey, he studied at Yale University (B.S. geology, 1954). He was an assistant in fossil vertebrates at the Chicago Natural History Museum from 1955 on. He was a member of the American Society for Psychical Research, an associate member of the Parapsychological Association, and an organizer and executive secretary of the Illinois Society for Psychical Research.

He has conducted tests for extrasensory ability with schoolchildren and written many reviews of books on parapsychological subjects.

Sources:

Teesing, H(ubert) P(aul) H(ans) (1907–1973)

Dutch professor of German literature and former president of the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (Dutch Society for Psychical Research). He was born on March 6, 1907, in Amsterdam, the Netherlands. He spent his college career at the University of Groningen (B.A., 1932; M.A., German philology and literature, 1935; Ph.D., 1948). After graduation he became a grammar school teacher of German (1935–32) before assuming a position as a professor of German literature and literary theory at the University of Utrecht in 1952. He died in August 19, 1973.

Sources:

Telekinesis

A term denoting the claimed faculty of moving material objects without contact, presumably by psychic force. The movement of objects, without contact or with only limited contact was frequently observed in the séance room. Phenomena included rappings, table-turning, levitations, the conveyance of apports, and other material phenomena. Spiritualists believed these were caused by the intervention of discarnate spirits. Magnetists believed in the existence of some kind of fluidic or energetic emanation as the cause of such movements. Others, discounting those phenomena that were the result of fraud, suggested some form of telekinetic theory, which held that all these varied feats are accomplished by the thoughts of mediums and sitters, independent of muscular energy, whether direct or indirect.

The term has more recently been supplanted by psychokinesis or PK.

Telepathy

Term coined by British psychic researcher F. W. H. Myers in 1882, as a result of his joint investigation with Edmund Gurney, Henry Sidgwick, and William F. Barrett into the possibilities of thought-transference. It was applied to the researchers’ concept of “a coincidence between two persons’ thoughts which requires a causal explanation,” and it was defined as “transmission of thought independently of the recognized channels of sense.”

Though the researchers never implied such a connotation, the public assumed that telepathy was an agency of communication between mind and mind, that it was a mysterious link between conscious and subconscious minds, and that it could be used to select intelligence by which incidents from the memories of persons present and familiar or distant and unknown.

The public concept of telepathy became a rival of the spirit hypothesis. This misconception spread so widely that many people considered telepathy to be distinct from thought trans-ference, advancing the following argument:

“In telepathy the transmitter is often unaware that he acts as an agent and the receiver does not consciously prepare himself for the reception. Telepathy cannot be made a subject of experiments, while thought-transference can. Thoughttransference is a rudimentary faculty. Telepathy is a well-developed mode of supernormal perception and is usually brought into play by the influence of very strong emotions.”

The need for differentiation was acknowledged by the old school of telepathists, too, when they spoke of spontaneous telepathy as distinct from experimental telepathy. Frank Pod-more—a hardened skeptic—in his The Neeriy Spiritualism (1910) suggests that: “Whilst the attempt to correlate the two kinds of phenomena is perhaps legitimate, we can hardly be justified in making the spontaneous phenomena the basis of a theory of telepathy.”

Myers argued that telepathy as a faculty must certainly exist in the universe if the universe contains any disembodied intelligence at all. Prayer could be telepathic communion with higher beings, and the basis of sympathy and antipathy may be telepathy. Monitions of approach appear to be telepathic messages. The knowledge of victory or disaster in war that so inexplicably occurred among ancient Greeks may have been telepathically acquired.

Origins of Modern Telepathic Theories

The theory of thought transference is not a new one. Like the theory of gravitation, it is a daughter of astrology, but while gravitation may be readily demonstrated and never fails to give definite results, experiments in telepathy cannot be dependent upon to succeed uniformly even under the most favorable conditions. Nevertheless, the experiments that have been conducted from time to time have more than justified the public interest in telepathy.

In 1882 the Society for Psychical Research (SPR), London, came into being, numbering among its members some of the most distinguished men of the era. Its goal was to elucidate the so-called supernatural phenomena that were exciting so much popular interest and curiosity. Foremost among these were the phenomena of thought transference.

Viewing their subjects in a purely scientific light, trained in handling of evidence, and resolved to pursue truth with open and unbiased minds, members of the SPR did much to bring a purer and more dignified atmosphere to the study of psychic phenomena. They recognized the untrustworthiness of human nature in general, and the prevalence of fraud, even where nothing was to be gained but the gratification of a perverted vanity. Their experiments were conducted under the most rigid conditions, with every precaution taken against conscious or unconscious deception.

Among the most valuable evidence obtained from experimental thought transference was that gleaned by Professor Henry Sidgwick and his wife Eleanor Sidgwick from their experiments at Brighton in 1889 to 1891. In this series the percipients—clerks and shop assistants—were hypnotized. Sometimes they were asked to visualize, on a blank card, an image or picture chosen by the agent. At other times, the agent would choose one of a bundle of cards numbered from 10 to 90, and the percipient was required to state the number on the chosen card, which was done correctly in a surprising number of cases.

Curiously enough, the results varied in proportion as the agent and percipient were near or far apart, and were affected by the intervention of a door or even a curtain between the two.
This was ascribed to a lack of confidence on the part of the per-cipient, however, or to such physical causes as fatigue or boredom, rather than to the limited scope of the telepathic principle. On the whole it seems probable that chance alone did not account for the number of correct replies given by the hyponitized subject.

Toward the end of the nineteenth century, criticism was leveled at these experiments by F. C. C. Hansen and A. Lehmann, of Copenhagen, who believed that the phenomenon known as “ involuntary whispering,” combined with hyperesthesia on the part of the percipient, would suffice to produce the results obtained by the Sidgwicks (see Journal of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 9, p. 113).

This suggested explanation has some merit. If hypnotism causes such a refinement of the senses, may not some elements of hyperesthesia linger in the subconscious of the normal individual? If dreams contain such unusual examples of deduction, may not the mind in waking moments follow a process of reasoning imperceptible to the higher consciousness?

It seems that the “other self,” which is never quite as much in the background as we imagine, sees and hears a thousand things of which we are unconscious and that come to the surface in dreams. There is no reason to suppose that it might not see and hear things too slight to be perceived in a grosser sphere of consciousness, and thus account for some cases of thought transference. On the other hand, there is evidence of telepathy acting at a distance where subconscious whispering and hyperesthesia are obviously out of the question.

Unusual Kinds of Telepathy

An example of audibly received telepathy is recorded in an early issue of the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 1, p. 6): “On September 9, 1848, at the siege of Mooltan, Major-General R. C. B., the commanding officer, was severely wounded, and thought himself to be dying, and requested that his ring be taken off and sent to his wife. At the same time she was in Ferozepore (150 miles distant), lying on her bed between sleeping and waking, and distinctly saw her husband being carried off the field, and heard his voice saying: "Take this ring off my finger and send it to my wife." The facts of the case were verified and all the names were obtained by the SPR.
Telepathy

The journalist and pioneer Spiritualist William T. Stead often received automatic writing from the living. Thinking of a lady with whom he was in such communication more than once, his hand wrote:

"I am very sorry to tell you that I have had a very painful experience of which I am almost ashamed to speak. I left Haslemere at 2:27 P.M. in a second-class carriage, in which there were two ladies and one gentleman. When the train stopped at Godalming, the ladies got out, and I was left alone with the man. He offered to give me my umbrella, not his. I seized his umbrella and struck him, but it broke, and I was beginning to fear that he would strike me. I got frightened, let up at Guildford Station. He got frightened, let go of me, and before the train reached the platform he jumped out and ran away. I was very much upset. But I have the umbrella.

Stead sent his secretary to the lady with a note that he was very sorry to hear what had happened and added, "Be sure and bring the man's umbrella on Wednesday." She wrote in reply: "Lady... very sorry you know anything about it. I had made any mind to tell nobody. I will bring the broken umbrella, but it was my umbrella, not his." The lady's decision not to tell of the painful evidence suggests that a telepathic message may not only be unconscious, but may directly counteract the desire of the conscious mind.

In many instances of cross-correspondence, where two or more people receive part of a message that only becomes clear when the parts are placed together, telepathy between the receivers would furnish an alternative to the spirit hypothesis.

The working of telepathy is apparently demonstrated in certain cases of suggestion. Hypnotization has been claimed to be effected at a distance. Myers called it telepathic hypnotism.

The Wave Theory

In his presidential address to the British Association for the Advancement of Science in September 1898, Sir William Crookes said:

"If telepathy takes place we have two physical facts—the physical change in the brain of A, the suggester, and the analogous change in the brain of B, the recipient of the suggestion. Between these two physical events there must exist a train of physical causes. . . . [and] with every fresh advance in knowledge it is shown that ether vibrations have powers and attributes abundantly equal to any demand—even to the transmission of thought."

He believed that these ether waves were of small amplitude and greater frequency than x-rays and continually passed between human brains, arousing an image in the second brain that is similar to the image in the first.

Damaging to this theory is the fact that the intensity of waves—any waves—diminishes with distance and that the telepathic image may not only be very vivid despite the remoteness of the events, but is often modified or symbolic. A dying man may appear to the percipient in a normal state of health. As Myers noted: "Mr. L. dies of heart disease when Mr. N. J. S. sees Mr. L. standing beside him with a cheerful collar."

In cases of selective reception, an added difficulty is presented. Why should only a few people in a room be sensitive to the waves and other strangers outside the room not at all receiveable? Why should a crystal gazer get a telepathic message at the time of his own choosing, when he happens to look into the crystal? How can the pictures in the crystal sometimes be seen by others if they are only produced in his brain through telepathy?

In his book The Survival of Man (1909), Sir Oliver Lodge asserts that the experimental evidence was not sufficient to substantiate the nonphysical nature of thought transference. He had no doubt of its reality, and as early as 1903 he stated in an interview to the Pall Mall Magazine: "What we can take before the Royal Society, and what we can challenge the judgment of the world upon, is Telepathy."

Hereward Carrington suggested that telepathic manifestations may take place through a superconscious mind, that there may be a "mentiferous ether," as some writers have suggested, that carries telepathic waves, and that there is a species of spiritual gravitation uniting life throughout the universe, as physical gravity binds together all matter.

In the 1920s the Italian researcher Prof. F. Cazzamalli of the University of Milan conducted experiments that appeared to show that the human brain emits short waves of high frequency under the stress of emotion. In an insulated all-metal room, he carried out a number of experiments inducing, by means of suggestion, an emotional crisis in his subjects. Delicate receivers placed in the room registered cerebral radiation in the form of waves, which were also recorded on photographic plates. The reports were published in the Revue Métapsychique, but were severely criticized. The wave theory of telepathy remains unproved, and psychical researchers have now largely discarded it, although a few modern Soviet investigators suggested an electromagnetic theory of telepathy.

Animals and Telepathy

There is some evidence indicating that telepathy is not restricted to humans. Among the better cases of telepathy from animal to man is one furnished by the novelist H. Rider Haggard in the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research (October 1904). Mrs. Haggard heard her husband groaning and emitting muffled sounds like the meaning of a wounded animal during the night of July 7, 1904. She woke him and her husband told her his dream. It consisted of two distinct parts:

In the first, the novelist only remembered having experienced a sense of grievous oppression, as though he were in danger of suffocation. Between the moment when he heard his wife's voice and that in which he regained full consciousness, the dream became much more vivid. He states: "I saw good old Bob [his dog] lying on his side among brushwood by water. My own personality seemed to me to be arising in some mysterious manner from the body of the dog, who lifted up his head at an unnatural angle against my face. Bob was trying to speak to me, and not being able to make himself understood by sounds, transmitted to my mind in an undefined fashion the knowledge that he was dying."

Bob was found dead four days later, floating in the river, his skull crushed in, and his legs broken. He had been struck by a train on a bridge and thrown into the water. His bloodstained collar was found on the bridge the morning after the dream.

William J. Long, in his book How Animals Talk (1922), produces many examples of a telepathic faculty in animals. He notes that if a mother wolf cannot head off a runaway cub because there is too much distance between them, she simply stops quiet, lifts her head high, and looks steadily at the running cub. He will suddenly waver, halt, whirl, and speed back to the pack. The famous case of the Elberfeld horses also suggests that telepathy may operate between animals and humans, and as collective, in his book Thought Transmission or What?—in Birds (1931), records many observations on the subject from bird life.
Telepathy vs. Survival

Obviously the role of telepathy is of some importance to any understanding of the paranormal, but those who tried to find in it an all-inclusive solution to paranormal manifestations faced great difficulties. If a telepathic message is followed by motor movements—for instance, the announcement of a death in automatic writing—the question is, Who executes the movements—the subconscious self or the agent who sends the message? Similar uncertainty applies if the reception of a telepathic message is accompanied by telekinetic movements.

Frank Podmore, the author of Apparitions and Thought Transference (1894)—which deals with the accumulated evidence for telepathy—said that the great exponent of the theory that all apparitions could be explained as "telepathic hallucinations." F. W. H. Myers, on the other hand, was among the first to argue that telepathy was an insufficient explanation for apparitions. Being forced to concede that collective perception of phantasmal appearances called for something objective, he worked out a theory of "psychical invasion"—the creation of a "phantasmogenetic" center in the percipients' surroundings.

The theory was midway between telepathic and spirit explanations, and it accounted for many freakish phantasmal manifestations for which no satisfactory solution had yet been offered.

Early in the twentieth century, the problem of whether to admit telepathy could occur in both the living and the dead plagued researchers. Apparitions of the dying border between telepathy with the living and telepathy from the dead. A similar phenomenon that lacks all the conditions for evidence of telepathy is visions of the dead appearing to the dying. The strain on the telepathic theory grew with instances that made the acquisition of certain knowledge by telepathic process wildly improbable but were easily understood on the basis of the survival theory. The question was not only how certain information could have been acquired, but also why it was associated with definite personalities or disclosed in a personified form.

In the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 35, 1926), S. G. Soal tells how, in a séance with Blanche Cooper, a voice came through, claiming to be his deceased brother. As proof of identity the voice told him that a year before in a play at home he had buried a lead disk which he would probably find if he dug there. Soal was satisfied that none of his brother's surviving acquaintances knew of the incident, and dug and found the disk.

Nevertheless, he argued that this might have been a case of telepathic transmission in his brother's earthly life, the knowledge having remained latent in his own subconscious mind. If yet another person had been in the telepathic chain it would have been an example of the so-called three-way telepathy first advanced by Andrew Lang in his discussion of the case of the medium Leonora Piper (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 15, pp. 48–51). Hugh J. Browne's book The Holy Truth (1876) contains the story of his two sons, who drowned. One, in a communication with the medium George Sprigg, told the detailed story of their fatal cruise and added that his brother's arm had been torn off by a great shark. This information could not have been telepathically conveyed by anyone living, except by the shark, yet it was found to be true. The shark was caught two days later, and a man testified to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle that he cut the shark open and found an arm, part of a waistcoat, and a watch, which were identified as belonging to the dead youth. The watch had stopped at the exact hour at which the brothers were engulfed by the sea.

There are many cases on record in which missing wills and other lost property were found through alleged spirit intervention. F. Bligh Bond's in The Gate of Remembrance (1920) records an incident in which an entire chapel was found. The Glastonbury Abbey was in ruins; every trace of the Edgar Chapel was lost, and very little was known about its location and pre-}

---

Telepathy

Telepathy vs. Survival

Obviously the role of telepathy is of some importance to any understanding of the paranormal, but those who tried to find in it an all-inclusive solution to paranormal manifestations faced great difficulties. If a telepathic message is followed by motor movements—for instance, the announcement of a death in automatic writing—the question is, Who executes the movements—the subconscious self or the agent who sends the message? Similar uncertainty applies if the reception of a telepathic message is accompanied by telekinetic movements.

Frank Podmore, the author of Apparitions and Thought Transference (1894)—which deals with the accumulated evidence for telepathy—said that the great exponent of the theory that all apparitions could be explained as "telepathic hallucinations." F. W. H. Myers, on the other hand, was among the first to argue that telepathy was an insufficient explanation for apparitions. Being forced to concede that collective perception of phantasmal appearances called for something objective, he worked out a theory of "psychical invasion"—the creation of a "phantasmogenetic" center in the percipients' surroundings.

The theory was midway between telepathic and spirit explanations, and it accounted for many freakish phantasmal manifestations for which no satisfactory solution had yet been offered.

Early in the twentieth century, the problem of whether to admit telepathy could occur in both the living and the dead plagued researchers. Apparitions of the dying border between telepathy with the living and telepathy from the dead. A similar phenomenon that lacks all the conditions for evidence of telepathy is visions of the dead appearing to the dying. The strain on the telepathic theory grew with instances that made the acquisition of certain knowledge by telepathic process wildly improbable but were easily understood on the basis of the survival theory. The question was not only how certain information could have been acquired, but also why it was associated with definite personalities or disclosed in a personified form.

In the Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 35, 1926), S. G. Soal tells how, in a séance with Blanche Cooper, a voice came through, claiming to be his deceased brother. As proof of identity the voice told him that a year before in a play at home he had buried a lead disk which he would probably find if he dug there. Soal was satisfied that none of his brother's surviving acquaintances knew of the incident, and dug and found the disk.

Nevertheless, he argued that this might have been a case of telepathic transmission in his brother's earthly life, the knowledge having remained latent in his own subconscious mind. If yet another person had been in the telepathic chain it would have been an example of the so-called three-way telepathy first advanced by Andrew Lang in his discussion of the case of the medium Leonora Piper (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 15, pp. 48–51). Hugh J. Browne's book The Holy Truth (1876) contains the story of his two sons, who drowned. One, in a communication with the medium George Sprigg, told the detailed story of their fatal cruise and added that his brother's arm had been torn off by a great shark. This information could not have been telepathically conveyed by anyone living, except by the shark, yet it was found to be true. The shark was caught two days later, and a man testified to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle that he cut the shark open and found an arm, part of a waistcoat, and a watch, which were identified as belonging to the dead youth. The watch had stopped at the exact hour at which the brothers were engulfed by the sea.

There are many cases on record in which missing wills and other lost property were found through alleged spirit intervention. F. Bligh Bond's in The Gate of Remembrance (1920) records an incident in which an entire chapel was found. The Glastonbury Abbey was in ruins; every trace of the Edgar Chapel was lost, and very little was known about its location and pre-cise dimensions. Nevertheless, in automatic writing a series of communications came through, giving detailed information. When excavations were undertaken in 1908, a year after the communications were received, the chapel was found. (For a critical view of this case see G. W. Lambert's "The Quest of Glastonbury" in the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research, June 1966).

The personal element puts insurmountable obstacles in the way of telepathic explanation in the following case recorded by the psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano in notes on the July 14, 1928, sitting at Millsemo Castle, Italy. An unknown voice, in Genoese dialect, addressed sitter Gino Gibelli, saying, "I am Stefano's father. You must tell my son that I insist on his giving the message to Maria with which I entrusted him. He has not carried out my request in the slightest degree." Signor Gibelli explained that he had been in Genoa a month before. In a séance there the father had communicated with the son and charged him with a message to his mother. Very probably the young man had not dared to carry out this request. Gibelli stated that he had completely forgotten the incident, that he had nothing to do with him personally and did not interest him in the slightest degree. He was not thinking of Stefano's father, whom he did not know in life, and was unaware that the request that the father had made to his son had not been carried out.

Some aspects of spirit communication strongly suggest that telepathy was not the means by which the medium gained knowledge. Telepathy makes no allowance for false or confused information, and it does not explain the communicator's loss of the concept of time, nor the individual style of the different spirit controls (i.e., the biblical manner of "Imperator," or "George Pelham's" impatience as he spoke through Leonora Piper). In spirit communications, names are often spelled inaccurately, giving, for instance, "Margaret" instead of "Maggie." Telepathy cannot reveal coming events, and it cannot explain how the spirits of children, if recently dead, ask for their toys and act childishly, yet behave years later as adults although no such memory of them is retained in any living mind.

If a medium operated by means of telepathy, he would have to be omniscient. There is no need for the supposition of omniscience if a telepathic message may originate as well from the dead as from the living. Once this admission is made one can well understand the futility of the "brain wave" theory. A discerning spirit has no physical brain. The message must come from the spirit and not from the percipient. If it may come from the spirit as an agent, it may be received by the medium's spirit and transmitted to his brain.

The insufficiency of the telepathic explanation has also been demonstrated by hundreds of strange cross correspondences and newspaper and book tests.

Many post-mortem letters have been preserved by the Society for Psychical Research and will not be opened until after a communication revealing their contents comes through a medium after the writer's death. It is unlikely that this evidence will ever be conclusive, since in one instance the content of the letter was revealed, apparently through telepathy, by the medium while the writer was still living. The telepathist may always argue that the contents of the letter were subconsciously transferred into another brain while the writer was preparing it.

As proof of survival, cross correspondences are far more conclusive, since the partial messages coming through several mediums are by themselves nonsensical and can only be explained away by the supposition of a conspiracy between several subconscious minds.

The Arguments of James H. Hyslop

Telepathy became a rival of the spirit theory because, according to James H. Hyslop, early twentieth-century head of the American Society for Psychical Research, of the word transmission in the definition of telepathy. He preferred to define telepathy as "a coincidence excluding normal perception, between the thoughts of two minds." It was the word trans-Telepathy—The Result of Spirit Agency?

Hyslop was not averse to the possibility that spirits might furnish the explanation of telepathy between the living. He stated that Myers saw this implication at the very outset of his investigations and therefore, he had said that only transmissive theory was told in the report on the experiments of Miss Miles and Miss Ramsden in long-distance telepathy (Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, vol. 21, pp. 60–93). Miles was all-round psychic, and in her correspondence with Hyslop she revealed that she could always tell when her telepathy was successful by the raps that she heard. She said she concentrated on the object Ramsden was to perceive until she heard raps. Raps are not telepathic phenomena, however, and carry an entire different connotation.

Further, Hyslop stated that in communications through the medium Mrs. Willis M. Cleveland (also known as Mrs. Smead), the deceased Frank Podmore purported to say that telepathy was actually messages carried by spirits and that they could perform it instantly. Had Smead known Podmore, such a misstatement could not have occurred—Podmore always pressed the theory of telepathy between the living to the exclusion of spirits.

The purported spirit of F. W. H. Myers also made a strange allusion through the medium Minnie Minerve Soule (“Mrs. Chenoweth”), saying telepathy “all depended on the carrier.” When Hyslop asked for an explanation, the answer was: “There was a message carried by the spirits.”

A more interesting and elaborate statement reportedly came from the spirit of Margaret Verrall: “I said yesterday that I would write more about the telepathic theory as I now understand it. The concept of thought through space as I was once, and I had begun to question the method by which thought was transferred to the deceased before I came here, but you will recall that I had some striking instances of what seemed telepathy tapping a reservoir of thought direct, and the necessity for an intervening spirit was uncalled for; but there were other instances where the message was transposed or translated and the interpolation of another mind was unquestionably true. I tried many experiments and I think you must know about them. I will say that I found more people involved in my work than I had known and there seemed more reason to believe that I was a medium carried upon than I operated, in other words, the automatic writing was less mine than I had supposed.”

The dividing line between clairvoyance and telepathy is vague. The telepathic message may take the form of visual or auditory sensation. If the content indicates future events, clairvoyance should be suspected. Past events may be both telepathic communications and the result of a reading by psychometry.

A constructive and evidential resume of experiments in telepathy is given by Walter Franklin Prince in an appendix to the sixteenth Bulletin of the Boston Society for Psychical Research, published under the title “The Sinclair Experiments Demonstrating Telepathy” (1932).

Parapsychology and Telepathy

From the 1920s on, psychical researchers in both Great Britain and the United States investigated telepathy through intensive laboratory experiments. Card-guessing was a favored testing tool, but it was not until the 1950s, after J. B. Rhine popularized the Zener Cards, a pack of five simple symbols (star, cross, circle, rectangle, and wavy lines), that statistical evaluation of experiments was simplified.

Using the Zener cards, experimenters attempted to obtain significant quantitative tests under laboratory conditions. In the experiments by C. W. Olliver with playing cards over some twenty thousand trials, a distinction was made between telepathy (between agent and percipient) and clairvoyance (perception without an agent).

In the modern period of parapsychological research, many aspects of telepathy have been investigated, including such questions as expectation, emotions, incentives, and the parapsychological aspects of telepathy, in addition to the completion of many quantitative and qualitative experiments. So far, researchers have not summarized their findings in a way that will definitely establish telepathy as a scientific fact, repeatable on demand. There is reasonable evidence that some telepathy has occurred under laboratory conditions, however.

Certain basic problems remain, such as the disparity in telepathic faculty between different participants, and the problem of assessing spontaneous telepathy. In the former Soviet Union there was considerable interest in telepathy because of its possible practical applications, and experimenters gave special attention to methods of intensifying visualization on the part of the agent sending impressions to a percipient. In the United States researchers like Andrija Puharich have experimented with high-speed strobe lights on the closed eyes of subjects in order to heighten telepathic impressions.

Sources:

Telephone Calls (Paranormal)

Telephone Calls (Paranormal)

The extraordinary claimed phenomenon of telephone calls from the dead, one of a variety of new forms of contact with the dead using modern technology, was raised by parapsychologists D. Scott Rogo and Raymond Bayless in their 1979 book Phone Calls From the Dead. Their research had been stimulated by a report in the September 1976 Fate Magazine from Don B. Owens of Toledo, Ohio, concerning his close friend Lee Epps. They had lived in the same neighborhood for years before Lee moved away and their contact became limited to occasional meetings or telephone calls.

On October 26, 1968 at 10:30 p.m., Don’s wife Ethel answered a telephone call and immediately recognized the voice as that of Lee. He said: “Sis, tell Don I’m feeling real bad. Never felt this way before. Tell him to get in touch with me the minute he comes in. It’s important, Sis.” Ethel tried to ring him back but got no answer; neither did Don when he came in. That evening Don learned that Lee was in a coma in hospital, six blocks from their home and died at 10:30 p.m. It would have been impossible for Lee to have made the call himself in his condition, yet Ethel had immediately recognized his voice. Although this case was purely anecdotal, without firm supporting evidence, Rogo and Bayless were sufficiently intrigued to follow up the phenomenon of “phone calls from the dead.” After collecting a few cases, they wrote an article in the October 1977 issue of Fate Magazine titled “Phone Calls from the Dead?” More cases came to hand and led to a two-year investigation of the claimed phenomenon. It proved peculiarly difficult to establish in a manner acceptable to the present standards of psychical research, since the accounts dealt with spontaneous events, usually without the opportunity of rigid factual verification. Moreover, it was difficult to rule out coincidental hoaxes. Rogo and Bayless concluded, however, that such paranormal phone calls actually did occur and might even be more common than supposed.

A satisfactory theory to explain such cases presents difficulties. On the face of things, if one grants that mediumistic communication is possible through a direct voice, the use of a telephone earpiece is hardly more far-fetched, but the prior ringing of the telephone announcing a call is another matter. Is there an actual PK manipulation of the telephone apparatus, or are the ringing tone and the voices actually in the subject’s mind? Many individuals have experienced the hallucination of “phantom bells” when they think they hear a door bell or a telephone ringing but find no one there.

In some of the cases examined by Rogo and Bayless, it seemed that the call was placed in a normal way through an exchange that caused the phone to ring. In other cases the phone calls appeared to be placed through long-distance operators. Some subjects reported hearing the familiar “click” at the end of the call as the communicator apparently hung up. Rogo and Bayless suggested PK-mediated electromagnetic effects and discussed the possible relevance to the related phenomenon of Raudive voices or electronic voice phenomenon.

Sources:

Teleplasm

An alternative term for ectoplasm.

Teleportation

The paranormal transportation of human bodies through closed doors and over a distance is a comparatively rare but still a thoroughly documented occurrence. It is a composite phenomenon fitting between levitation (frequently reported) and apports (objects which were frequently reported in séances in generations past but which were almost totally fraudulently produced). According to the testimony of the Bible, teleportation is no means new in human experience. We find in Ezek. 11:1, “Moreover the spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the East gate of the Lord’s house which looketh eastward.” Elijah, walking with Elisha, was carried away by a whirlwind. Habbakuk was carried from Judea to Babylon to bring food to Daniel in the lion’s den, then carried back to Judea through the air.

In the Acts of the Apostles 5:23, the warders of St. Peter’s prison testify: “The prison house we found shut in all safety, and the keepers standing before the doors; but when we opened we found no man within.” When St. Philip baptized the Ethiopian, the author of the Acts of the Apostles notes (6:39–40), “And when they were come up out of the water, the spirit of the Lord caught away Philip that the eunuch saw him no more. . . . But Philip was found at Azotus.” The distance between Gaza, the scene of the baptism, and Azotus was 30 miles.

Reports of this phenomenon reappeared very early in modern Spiritualism. J. B. Ferguson said from his observation of the Davenport brothers:

From as good testimony as I have of any fact that I can accept without personal knowledge, I believe that these young men have been raised into the air so many marvels.

In England, accounts of transportation were published in the Spiritualist press between 1871 and 1874 of Agnes Guppy-Volckman, Charles Williams, and Frank Herne (Spiritual Magazine, July 1871); of Lottie Fowler (The Spiritualist, March 15, 1872); and of F. W. Monck (Spiritual Magazine, 1875), the latter reportedly making an aerial journey from Bristol to Swindon.

Thomas Blypton writes in his reminiscences in Light (April 11, 1951):

“I was present on one occasion at a private home séance at Hackney in London, when without warning or preparation, in total darkness, Mr. Frank Herne was suddenly placed in the midst of the sitters; and after recovering from our surprise and remaining the séance, Mr. Herne’s overcoat, hat and umbrella were dropped on the table. John King, speaking in the direct voice, explained that his band of spirit people had found an unexpected opportunity to transport Mr. Herne from where he had been with friends, witnessing a theatrical play that evening; on his appearance at Hackney he was in a semi-conscious condition.”

Grave suspicion surrounds the mediumship of Herne and Williams, however, the latter being exposed in fraud on two occasions. In 1876 Monck was imprisoned after his fake materializations were discovered.

Very little evidential value can be attached to the episode in Catherine Berry’s Experiences in Spiritualism (1876), according to which, at the studio of Frederick A. Hudson, the spirit photographer, between the hours of 2 and 5 P.M., in the presence of Frank Herne and herself:

“Mr. Williams was seen to descend from the roof of the studio; he fell on the ground very gently. I do not think he was hurt, but sadly frightened. The spirit ‘John King’ was rather vexed with him for not obeying a summons to come into the studio, and told Mr. Williams that the roof bodily was done as a punishment, and he hoped it would teach him not to disobey in the future. We all went immediately to see if there was an opening in the roof, but there was none, and the boards had all the appearance of not having been disturbed.”

Guppy-Volckman’s transportation must also be called into question. It occurred on June 3, 1871. There were ten witnesses, including the two fraudulent mediums, Williams and Herne, and eight sitters. It was a sequel to Herne’s previous questionable transportation to Guppy-Volckman’s house. In answer to a witty expressed wish of a sitter, in a moment of time Guppy-Volckman was carried bodily from her home in Highbury (North London) to the house of Williams on Lamb’s Conduit Street (West Central London), a distance of over three miles.

The case was the occasion of much facetious comment in the daily press. The Echo printed the only serious report. The story was summed up on the basis of the sitters’ written testimony by Abraham Wallace in Light (1918, p. 259) as follows:

“Neither door nor window could have been opened without the admission of light. After various phenomena usual in dark sérances had taken place someone asked Katie King, one of the controls, to bring something. Another member of the circle observed, in a joking sort of way, ‘I wish you would bring Mrs. Guppy.’ Upon which a third remarked, ‘Good gracious, I hope not, she is one of the biggest women in London.’ Katie’s voice at once said ‘I will, I will, I will.’ Then John’s voice was heard to exclaim, ‘Keep still, can’t you? In an instant somebody called out: ‘Good God, there is something on my head’ simultaneously with a heavy bump on the table and one or two screams. A match was struck, and there was Mrs. Guppy on the table with the whole of the sitters seated round it closely packed together as they sat at the commencement. Mrs. Guppy appeared to be in a trance, and was perfectly motionless. Great fears were entertained that the shock would be injurious to her. She had one arm over her eyes, and was arrayed in a loose morning gown with a pair of bedroom slippers on and in a more or less décolléte condition. When telling me the story, Mrs. Volckman very naturally said how much she disliked having been brought in such a state into the presence of strangers. There was a pen in one hand, which was down by her side. From the first mention of bringing her to the time she was on the table three minutes did not elapse. It seems that Mrs. Guppy had a pen in one hand and an account book in the other. She had been making up her weekly accounts and had just written the word ‘onions,’ the ink still being wet on the page.”

After Guppy-Volckman had shaken off the effect of the shock, the séance was continued with her presence. During the last part of the séance, her boots, hat, and clothes arrived from her home, as well as lots of flowers. Both Herne and Williams were levitated and disappeared in turns.

After the séance one Mr. Harrison, editor of The Spiritualist, together with three of the sitters, offered to escort Guppy-Volckman to her home. Then their inquiries convinced them that Guppy-Volckman was really sitting in the room with Miss Neyland, writing her accounts at the time that one of the séance sitters wished her to be brought. Her husband also bore testimony to the fact that his wife, shortly before her disappearance, had been up to the billiard room where he was playing with a friend. This visitor corroborated his statement.

Regarding this visit of inquiry, Frank Podmore states in his book Modern Spiritualism (1902):

"They there learnt from Miss Neyland, a friend of Mrs. Guppy’s, who had come out as a medium under her auspices, that an hour or two previously she had been sitting with Mrs. Guppy near the fire making up accounts when suddenly looking up she found that her companion had disappeared, leaving a slight haze near the ceiling."

The report of this marvelous phenomenon gave rise to repetitions.

In another case, the authenticity of which is difficult to establish, the subject of transportation was a sitter in Guppy-Volckman’s house. His name was Henderson. Ten sitters held the séance on October 2, 1873. Suddenly it was discovered that Henderson broke the séance chain and disappeared. The doors and windows of the room were locked. About the same moment of his disappearance, he was discovered at a distance of a mile and a half in the backyard of the house of his friend, Mr. Stoke. Nine people noticed his sudden arrival. The night was wet. His boots and clothes were “almost” dry.

There is one transportation case associated with William Eglinton (also cited as a fraudulent medium). It occurred on March 16, 1878, at Mrs. Mkdougall Gregory’s house. Two other mediums, Arthur Colman and J. W. Fletcher, were present with five sitters. One of the sitters suggested that Colman should be taken through the ceiling. Almost immediately Eglinton disappeared. The noise of a violent bump was heard and Eglinton was found in the room above on the floor in a trance.

Several cases were put on record in the first years of the present century. The story of one is recounted in the Annals of Psychic Science (vol. 9). The place was San Jose, Costa Rica, the date between 1907 and 1909 and the persons concerned were the children of Buenaventura Corralès. The oldest child, Ophelia Corralès, was 18 years old. There were two younger sisters and a brother. Separately and together the children frequently vanished from the séance room, found themselves in the garden and returned, to their great delight, in the same mysterious manner.

To quote from the account of Alberto Brenes, a professor at the Law Academy: "A few minutes passed in absolute silence. Suddenly we heard knocks coming from the pavilion; we turned up the gas and found the children were no longer there. The doors were examined and found to be completely closed. Two persons were deputed to look for the children. When the door of the room was opened they were found standing in a row, talking and laughing at what had taken place."

"They said that they had been brought there, one by one; first little Flora, then Berta, and finally Miguel—their respective ages being seven, twelve and ten years."

"They then asked them how they had been carried and they replied that they had felt a pressure under the arms, then they were lifted up in the air and placed where they were found, but they could not tell us anything more."

The two investigators then asked the spirits to repeat the translation in the reverse direction; they recommended the children to remain silent where they were, and locking the door, returned to the séance room to give an account of what had taken place.

"We resumed the séance after taking the necessary precautions of locking the doors. Then ‘Ruiz’ came and after recommending all to keep up their spirits, said in a clear and energetic voice: ‘Let the children come.’ Immediately one of them called out: ‘We are here.’ The light was turned up and the three children appeared in a line in the same order in which they had been previously found. On this occasion all three had been transported at the same time."

Again, we must add, considerable suspicion surrounds the mediumship of Ophelia Corralès.

Joseph Lapponi, medical officer to Popes Leo XVII and Pius X, recorded in his Hypnotism and Spiritism (1906) the case of the Pansini brothers, Paul and Alfred, eight and ten years old respectively. They experienced mysterious transportation in a half hour from Ruvo to Mollesta. Another time, at 12:30 P.M., they disappeared from Ruvo and at one o’clock found themselves on a boat at sea near Barletta, making towards Trinitapoli. Once they disappeared from the square of Ruvo and found themselves, ten minutes later, before the house of their uncle Jerome Maggiore in Trani. Several other mysterious flights took place to Gios, Biseglie, Martotta, and Terlizzi. Once they disappeared in Bishop Berardell’s presence while he was discussing these phenomena with their mother. The windows and doors were closed. In another volume, Spedizione e Spirito, the same author told of the flying brothers of Bari who could transfer themselves over a distance of 45 kilometers in 15 minutes.

Henry Llewellyn had a series of sittings with the medium F. G. F. Craddock at Burslem, Staffs. The medium sat in a corner of the room from which a door led into a cellar beneath. The door was completely covered with a curtain tacked around the opening, so that any disturbance there would have been at once detected. The curtains were drawn over the medium.

Some time later, the medium was discovered in a cataleptic state suspended horizontally across the top of the curtained corner of the room, with his feet and head lodged on each end of about six inches of ordering. The curtain was opened so that all present could see the sight for themselves, and then closed in the hope that the medium would be put safely on the floor again. Hearing no movement for some time the curtain was opened again, when to the bewilderment of the experimenters it was found that Craddock was gone. The cellar door and its curtain were undisturbed. Shortly afterward they heard someone moving about in the next room; when the door of that room was unlocked, the medium walked out of it with his hands still tied behind him. On another occasion Craddock was found to be missing and was discovered in the bedroom directly over the place in which they were sitting. This case must also be treated with reserve, since Craddock was also exposed in fraud on several occasions.

A report of Willi Reichel’s experiences with C. V. Miller, the California materialization medium, as given in Psychische Studien (January–February 1906) states:

“‘Betsy,’ the principal control of Mr. Miller, called Herr Reichel first into the cabinet in order that he might assure himself of the presence of the medium asleep. He examined all again and considers it impossible that the medium could have quitted the cabinet in a normal way; in front of the curtains were seated the 27 persons who formed the circle on that evening, and the windows looked out on a much frequented street. The weather, moreover, was very windy and wet, and it would have been impossible, he says, to open a window without causing a current of air to be felt at once. After about four minutes ‘Betsy’ told him to go with three other persons to the first floor and Mr. Miller’s housekeeper gave them the keys. They found the medium breathing heavily on a chair; they brought him back into the séance room, where he awoke, remembering nothing.”

Franz Hartmann, the well-known Theosophist and writer on occultism, employed the term “magical metathesis.” In Occult Review (July 1906), he quoted the case of a Dr. Z., of Florence, a friend of his, who was reportedly transported from Livorno to Florence (100 kilometers) in 15 minutes and deposited in a closed room.

Stepping into the realm of occult magic, the book of Harry de Windt, From Paris to New York by Land (1904), may be cited for an ancient transportation case in which a medicine man, while he was closely watched, disappeared from a tent and was found in an unconscious condition in a tent half a mile away.

The medium Ada Besinnet was said to have been several times the subject of transportation, but there is no evident record of the feat. Reporting on the Polish medium Franek Kluski in Psychic Science (October 1925, p. 214), one Professor Pawlowski writes:

"The most extraordinary case related to me by the members of the circle is that of Mr. Kluski having been fetched by the apparitions, or disappearing from the sealed and locked séance room. The astonished sitters found him in a rather distant room of the apartment quietly sleeping on a couch. I report the case upon the responsibility of my friends, whom I have no reason to distrust."

Harald Nielsson states in Light (November 1, 1919), in an account of his experiences with Indridi Indridason, the Icelandic medium:

"We have had on several occasions the experience of matter being brought through matter, and one evening the medium himself was taken through the wall into a room which was locked and in darkness. This sounds incredible, but many things occur in the presence of physical mediums which must seem absurd to men who have not themselves investigated them. But they are nevertheless true."

In Psychic Research (March 1930), an account was published by Harry Price and H. Kohn of the poltergeist persecution of an Indian boy, Damodar Ketkar, of Poona, India. According to Kohn, who was a lecturer in law at the government Deccan College (Bombay University), Poona, the following transportation case occurred in April 1928 during the most violent period of the manifestations:

"At 9:45 a.m. on April 23, my sister says in a letter, the elder brother (his brother, Ramkrishna Bapat) suddenly materialised in front of [her]... He looked bright but amazed, and said 'I have just come from Karjat.' He didn't come through any door. My sister describes the posture of the boy as having been most remarkable. When she looked up from her letter-writing she saw him bending forward; both his arms were hanging away from his sides, and the hands hanging limp—his feet were not touching the floor, as she saw a distinct space between his feet and the floor. It was precisely the posture of a person who has been gripped round the waist and carried, and therefore makes no effort but is gently dropped at his destination."

This account is unique, as in no other case was the actual arrival of the transported individual seen.

Two accounts of transportation are to be found in the amazing case of Carlos Mirabelli, the South American medium. On the basis of the original Portuguese documents, psychical researcher E. J. Dingwall, in Psychic Research (July 1930), recounts:

"... the transportation of the medium from the railway station at Luz [São Paulo] to the town of S. Vincente, a distance of some 90 kilometers. The report states that at the time the medium was at the station at Luz in company with a number of people and was intending to travel to Santos. Shortly before the train started he suddenly disappeared to the astonishment of everybody, his presence in S. Vincente being ascertained 15 minutes later by telephone, it being proved that he was met in the town exactly two minutes after his disappearance. ... On one occasion when the medium had been secured in his armchair of various ligatures he vanished utterly from his position, the doors and windows remaining both locked and firmly secured. Five sitters remained in the séance room whilst the rest went in search of the missing man. He was soon discovered in a side room lying in an easy chair and singing to himself."

A well-documented case was the transportation of Marquis Carlo Centurione Scotto, at Millesimo Castle, on July 29, 1928. Psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano reported on his investigation of the case in Luce e Ombra (September–October 1928). It can be summarized as follows:

"During the course of the sitting, the medium Marquis Centurione Scotto exclaimed in a frightened voice: 'I can no longer feel my legs!' The gramophone was stopped. An interval of death-like silence followed. The medium was addressed, without answer, then felt for. His place was empty. The sitters turned on the red light. The doors were still securely locked with the key on the inside but the medium had disappeared. "All the rooms of the castle were searched without result. Two and a half hours passed when it occurred to the sitters to ask Gwendolyn Kellett Hack to try and get into communication, through automatic writing, with her spirit guide ‘Imperator.’ After several attempts in which the sitters were only told, ‘Do not be anxious, we are watching and guarding’ and that the ‘medium is asleep,’ the correct information came through: ‘Go to the right, then outside. Wall and Gate. He is lying—hay—on soft place.’ The communication was signed by the cross of ‘Imperator.’"

The place indicated a granary in the stable yard. The great entrance door was locked, and the key was not in the lock. They ran back to fetch it and found a small door that had been previously overlooked. This door was also locked, but the key was in the keyhole on the outside. They opened it with the greatest caution. On a heap of hay and oats, the medium was comfortably lying, immersed in profound sleep. When he first regained consciousness and found himself lying in the stable he feared that he had gone out of his mind and burst into tears. The authenticity of the phenomenon was unexpectedly confirmed by a message from New York from the spirit guide ‘Bert Everitt,’ who, manifesting in a sitting with the medium George Valantine, referred to the Millesimo experiments and stated that he had helped Cristo d’Angelo [the spirit guide] to carry out the phenomenon of the transport of the medium into the granary. This was received a whole month before a report of the case had been published in Italy or elsewhere.

The marquis himself described his impressions as follows: ‘At this instant I could not feel my legs any more, having the impression of going into trance. I asked Fabienne for her hand, which I took willingly to reassure myself. After having taken the hand I felt something descending over my brain and my face—and I felt myself light... light... light... but of such lightness... I felt myself as if fainting and I... Then I recall nothing more. Nothing, nothing.’

Many cases have been reported in the hagiographic literature of the transportation of saints, and sometimes their relocation (simultaneous appearance in different places over a great distance) is noted. (See Gambier Bolton; Psychic Force)

Sources:

Telergy
Term used by psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers to denote the force that is manifest in telepathy and perhaps in other supernormal operations.

Telesomatic
Term used by psychical researcher Alexander N. Aksakof for materialization.

Teleesthesia
 Perception from a distance through psychic rapport with the place or environment. It is less than clairvoyance since it is restricted to the perception of material things or conditions. The word was coined by psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers.
in 1882 to express sensation at a distance after it was found that the communication between distant persons is not a transfer of thought alone, but also of emotion, of motor impulses, and of many impressions not easy to define. Frequent instances were described during World War I. The experience of a Mrs. Fussey of Wimbledon on November 4, 1914, was typical. At home she suddenly felt in her arm the sharp sting of a wound. She jumped up and cried. There was no trace of an injury. Fussey continued to suffer pain and explained: "Tob [her soldier son] is wounded in the arm. I know it." On the following Monday, confirmation arrived.

Telluric

M. Benedict’s term for the rhadic force that presumably moves the divining rod.

Tellurium

A name applied by Dietrich G. Kieser (1779–1862) to animal magnetism. He was one of the early scientific investigators who supported the reality of the phenomenon and drew attention to its legal aspects. “Teméraire,” Charles (or Charles the Bold) (1433–1477) Duke of Burgundy (1467–1477) in the fifteenth century. During his reign the state enjoyed its height of political, economic, and cultural power. According to legend, he disappeared after the battle of Morat on June 22, 1477, when he was defeated. It was said by his chroniclers that he was carried off by the devil; others maintained that he had withdrawn to a remote spot and become a hermit.

More sober accounts state, however, that he perished in the battle and that his mutilated body was discovered several days later. Charles was introduced into two novels by Sir Walter Scott—Quentin Durward and Anne of Gerstein. The latter novel contains an account of the battle of Nancy, before the fatal encounter at Morat.

Temperature Changes

Marked changes of temperature sometimes occur in the séance room, usually a sudden lowering. (See also Winds)

Templars

The Knights Templars of the Temple of Solomon were a military order founded by Hugues de Payns of Burgundy and Godfrey de St. Omer for the purpose of protecting pilgrims journeying to the Holy Land. They were soon joined by other knights, a religious chivalry speedily gathered around this nucleus. Baldwin I, king of Jerusalem, gave them as headquarters a portion of his palace, contiguous to a mosque that tradition asserted was part of the Temple of Solomon, and from this building they took their name.

One of the purposes of the society was to convert and render useful knights of evil living. So many of these entered the order as to bring it under the suspicion of the church, but there is every reason to believe that its founders were instigated by pious motives. The fact that they lived in a condition near poverty, notwithstanding the numerous rich gifts that were showered upon them, is the best evidence of their motivations.

They had properly constituted officials, a grand master, knights, chaplains, sergeants, craftsmen, senseshals, marshals, and commandants. The order had its own clergy, who like other clergy in orders were exempt from the jurisdiction of diocesan rule, and its chapters were held as a rule in secret. The dress of the brotherhood was a white cloak with a red cross for unmarried knights, and a black or brown cloak with a red cross for the others. The discipline was very strict and the food and clothing rough and not abundant.

By the middle of the twelfth century, the new order had firm footing in nearly all the Latin kingdoms of Christendom. Its power grew, and its organization became widespread. It formed a nucleus of the Christian effort against the paganism of the east. Its history may be said to be that of the Crusades. Moreover it became a great trading corporation, the greatest commercial agency between the east and west, and as such amassed immense wealth.

On the fall of the Latin kingdom in Palestine, the Templars were forced to withdraw from that country. Although they continued to harass the Saracen power, they made little headway against it, and in reality appeared to have undertaken clerical pursuits in preference to those of a more warlike character.

The Attack Upon the Templars

When the Temple was at the high point of its power, its success aroused the envy and avarice of Philip IV of France (1285–1314), who commenced a series of attacks upon it. Pope Clement V, who was devoted to Philip’s interests, denounced the order for heresy and immorality and gave Philip his chance.

For several generations before this time, rumors had been circulating concerning the secret rites of the Templars, which were assisted by the very strict privacy of their meetings. They were usually held at daybreak with closely-guarded doors. It was alleged that the most horrible blasphemies and indecencies took place at these meetings, that the cross was trampled underfoot and spat upon, that an idol named Baphomet (Baphenethios, baptism of wisdom) was adored, or even that the devil in the shape of a black cat appeared. Other tales told of the roasting of children, and the smearing of the idol with their burning fat. And even wilder rumors spread through the uneducated populace.

A certain Esquian de Horian pretended to betray the “secret” of the Templars to Philip, and they were denounced to the Inquisition. Jacques de Molay, the grand master, who had been called from Cyprus to France, was arrested with 140 of his brethren in Paris and thrown into prison. A universal arrest of the Templars throughout France followed. The wretched knights were tortured en masse, as was usually the case, and confessed to the most grotesque crimes. The most damning confession of all was that of the grand master himself, who said that he had been guilty of denying Christ and spitting upon the cross, but repudiated all charges of immorality in indignant terms.

The process dragged on slowly for more than three years, in consequence of the jealousies that arose among those interested in its prosecution. The pope wished to bring it entirely under the jurisdiction of the church, and to have it decided at Rome. The king, on the other hand, mistrusting the pope, resolved on the destruction of the order so that none but himself should reap advantage from it. He decided it should be judged at Paris under his own personal influence.

The prosecution was directed by his ministers, Nogaret and Enguerrand de Marigny. The Templars asserted their innocence and demanded a fair trial, but they found few advocates who would undertake their defense. They were subjected to hardships and tortures, which forced many of them into confessions dictated to them by their persecutors.

During this interval, the pope’s orders were carried into other countries, authorizing the arrest of the Templars and the seizure of their goods. Everywhere the same charges were brought against them. The same means of imprisonment and torture were used to procure their condemnation, although they were not subjected to the same severity as in France.

The Destruction of the Order in France

At length, in the spring of 1316, the grand process was opened in Paris. An immense number of Templars, brought from all parts of the kingdom, underwent a public examination. A long act of accusation was read; they denied Christ (and sometimes they denied expressly all the saints) declaring that he was not God truly but a false prophet and that they...

Templars Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed.

1546

some said it was of wood, and others of metal; one witness described it as having three faces; another as a frightful head, with long beard and sparkling eyes; others said it must have been proved by the depositions of witnesses, namely the Templars who died during the process were condemned heretics. Burial in consecrated ground was refused to their remains.

A great number of knights agreed to the general points of the Templar trial. It seems probable that they denied Christ and spat and trod upon the cross. The alleged words of the denial were “Je reney Deu” or “Je reney Jhesu,” repeated thrice. Most of those who confessed having gone through this ceremony declared that they did it with repugnance and spat beside the cross, not on it. The reception took place in a secret room with closed doors; the candidate was compelled to take off part or (in rare instances) all of his garments, and then he was kissed on various parts of the body.

One of the knights examined, Guiscard de Marzici, said he remembered the reception of Hugh de Marhau, of the collegiate church of Lyons. He saw him being taken into a small room, which was closed up so that no one could see or hear what took place within. After some time, he was let out; he was very pale and looked as though he were troubled and amazed. In conjunction with these strange ceremonies, however, there were others that showed a reverence for the Christian church and its ordinances. A knight received at Rome in a chamber of the palace of the Lateran, gave a somewhat similar account.

The historian Jules Michelet (1798–1874), who carefully investigated the materials relating to the trial of the Templars, suggested an ingenious explanation for these anomalies. He imagined that the form of reception was borrowed from the tabula picta (Vienna, 1811). The suggestion of Baphomet being related to the rituals of Ophite and Gnostic heresies has some plausibility.

The confessions with regard to the mysterious cat were much rarer and more vague. Some Italian knights confessed that they had been present at a secret meeting of 12 knights held at Brindisi. There a grey cat suddenly appeared among them and they worshipped it. Some Templars declared they had been present at a chapter at Montpellier at which the devil appeared to them in the form of a cat and promised them worldly prosperity. They added that they saw devils in the shape of women. An English knight, who was examined at London, deposed that in England they did not adore the cat or the idol to his knowledge, but he had heard it positively stated that they worshipped the cat and the idol to parts beyond the sea. English witnesses deposed to other acts of “idolatry.”

Such accounts suggest the witchcraft accounts of the appearance of the devil at what were basically pagan rituals. Agnes Lovelace stated she had heard that at a chapter held in Dineslee (Dyennesley, in Hertfordshire), the devil appeared to the Templars in a monstrous form. It had precious stones for eyes, which shone so bright that they illuminated the whole chapter; the brethren, in succession, kissed him on the posteriors and marked there the form of the cross. She was told that one young man, who refused to go through this ceremony, was thrown into a well, and a great stone was cast upon him.

Another witness, Robert de Folde, said he had heard that 20 years ago, in the same place, the devil came to the chapter once a year. He flew away with one of the knights, whom he took as a sort of tribute. Two others stated that certain Templars confessed to them that at a grand annual assembly in the county of York, the Templars worshipped a calf. All this is mere hearsay, but it shows the popular opinion of the conduct of the order.

A Templar examined in Paris, named Jacques de Treces, said he had been informed that at secret chapters held at midnight, a head appeared to the assembled brethren, and “had a private demon, by whose counsel he was wise and rich.”

The wretched aim of King Philippe was successful. He seized the whole treasure of the temple in France and became rich. Those who ventured to speak in defense of the order were browbeaten and received little attention. Torture was employed to force confessions. Fifty-four Templars who refused to confess were carried to the windmill of St. Antoine, in ... group to build a separate temple facility.

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology  5th Ed. Temple Beautiful homosexuality directed against the order were basically lies. Writers on the order have agreed that charges of witchcraft and Templars, especially in the last two centuries. Contemporary temporaries. There has been a steady stream of writings on the answers of a number of the knights under torture were in numerous instances that the confessions wrung from the cases they were acquitted in Castile, Aragon, Portugal, and in Switzerland in 1994. Apparently they were killed by their leaders, who then killed them.

1547

A second neo-Templar tradition began in Germany in the 1890s with the founding of the OTO, the Ordo Templi Orientis (or Order of the Eastern Temple), which spread from Germany to Switzerland and through Aleister Crowley to Great Britain and the United States.

Sources:

Temple Beautiful

Temple Beautiful is a channeling group currently headquartered in South Africa. It was founded in the United States by Ilona Linda Day who began to channel St. Germain and other of the ascended masters associated with the Theosophical Society and the “I Am” Religious Activity. Day passed the leadership of the group to a woman named Phaeryn. In the 1980s, tapes of Day’s and Phaeryn’s channeling messages were received in South Africa by Mienke Riemens, a resident of Rondebosch, a suburb of Cape Town. Riemens held meetings in her home where she played the tapes for those assembled.

At one point in the early 1990s, Phaeryn visited South Africa and gave a channeled reading to Chris Erasmus, a young man who had joined the group around 1990. During the reading, St. Germain asked Erasmus to be his channel in South Africa. He began channeling in 1994 and has established special contact with St. Germain and Serapis Bey. Prior to joining the group, he had been on a spiritual search that had led him to transcendental meditation. Shortly after Erasmus began channeling, the group grew to operate in France, Belgium, and Spain. The group currently heads several neo-Templar organizations that spread through the French-speaking world. In 1805 a Frenchman, Bernard-Raymond Fabré-Palpeb, founded a reconstituted Templar order with himself as the head. He also created a gnostic church to compete with Roman Catholicism and conse-crated Ferdinand-Francois Chatel as the first bishop. After the death of Fabré-Palpeb in 1838, the order split. It developed even more factions in every generation. At present more than 30 operate in France, Switzerland, Belgium, and Spain. The members of these neo-Templar groups, the Solar Temple, became the subject of interest when nearly 50 of its members were mur-dered in Switzerland in 1994.

Modern Templarism

It has been asserted that on the death of Jacques de Molay, a conspiracy had for its ends the destruction of papacy and the various kingdoms of Europe. This tradition was supposedly hand-ed on through generations of initiates through such societies as the Illuminati and the Freemasons, who in the end brought about the French Revolution and the downfall of the French throne.

After the French Revolution, people claimed the Templar tradition and founded several neo-Templar organizations that spread through the French-speaking world. In 1805 a Frenchman, Bernard-Raymond Fabré-Palpeb, founded a reconstituted Templar order with himself as the head. He also created a gnostic church to compete with Roman Catholicism and conse-
The Temple Beautiful is organized as a mystery school. It is designed to assist people in making a connection to their higher self and places initiates in a position to receive direct guidance. Temple Beautiful is located in suburban Cape Town.

Sources:

Temple Church (London)
The Church of the Knights Templars in London, consisting of two parts, the Round Church and the Choir. The Round Church (transition Norman) was built in 1185. The Choir (early English style) was finished in 1240.

Hargrave Jennings, in his book The Rosicrucians, their Rites and Mysteries (1870), states that the Temple Church in London presents many mythic Rosicrucian figures. One figure signifies the Virgin Mary, and displays the cross as rising like the pole or mast of a ship (argha) out of the midst of a crescent moon (navis biprora), curved at both ends.

The staff of the grand master of the Templars displayed a curved cross of four splays, or blades, red upon white. The eight-pointed red Buddhist cross was also one of the Templar ensigns.

The church’s arches abound with stars with wavy or crooked flames. The altar at the east end of the Temple Church has a cross on a field of wavy stars; to the right is the Decalogue, surmounted by the initials A.O. (alpha and omega); on the left are the monograms of the Saviour, I.C., X.C.; beneath is the Lord’s Prayer. The winged horse, or Pegasus, is the badge of the Templars.

The tombs of the Templars, disposed around the circular church in London, are of that early Norman shape called dos d’ane; their tops are triangular; the molding passes through the temples and issues out of the mouth and horned skull of a mask. The head at the top is shown in the cover of the tomb. There is much hidden meaning in every curve of these Templar tombs.

Temple of Set
The Temple of Set emerged during the period of internal discord that almost destroyed the Church of Satan in the early 1970s. In 1972, Michael Aquino, an officer in the U.S. Army and a priest in the church, critiqued the authoritarian leadership of church founder Anton LaVey as well as his understanding of Satanism. Claiming LaVey to be an atheist who did not believe in the literal existence of Satan, Aquino left the church. Three years later, in response to Aquino’s invocation, Satan appeared under the guise of Set, the ancient Egyptian deity. Set gave Aquino a mandate in the form of a book, The Book of Coming Forth by Night, which authorized Aquino to found the Temple of Set as the Church of Satan’s successor. The temple is dedicated to Set, the corrupted legends of whom became the basis of the Christian devil.

The temple teaches that the universe is a nonconscious environment possessed of mechanical consequences. However, the deity Set can on occasion violate the laws. Over the millennia, Set has altered the genetic makeup of human beings in order to produce an enhanced nonnatural intelligence. The temple works to identify and develop this enhanced ability in selected individuals. It is governed by a Council of Nine, which appoints the high priest of Set. Members are organized into six initiatory degrees: Setian, Adept, Priest(ess) of Set, Master of the Temple, Magus, and Ipissimis.

The Temple of Set may be contacted at P.O. Box 470307, San Francisco, CA 94147. It publishes the newsletter Scroll of Set. While the work occurs primarily on the individual level, the temple provides a variety of resources for the individual to develop as a Setian.

Sources:

Temple of the Holy Grail (THG)
The Temple of the Holy Grail (THG) is a small initiatory mystery school based upon the belief that what are now known as the “Grail” mysteries (and hence associated with the cup used by Christ at the Last Supper) existed in Western Europe long before the first century and the advent of Christianity. They were a as a graded path of initiation comparable to the Lam Rim of Tibetan Buddhism. Through the centuries, the mysteries evolved into an esoteric Christian school, the primary work being attributed to the legendary Graalmeister Treverezert in the ninth century C.E. It was later associated with chivalric orders, and the alchemical and Gnostic schools.

The Temple of the Holy Grail began its history at the end of the nineteenth century with a secret English Templar order that possessed an ancient Jewish terra-cotta cup believed to be the true Eucharistic vessel of the Last Supper. The cup was en-cased in gold, with two ancient silver auxiliary “grails,” prepared in 1888 to do the sacred Grail Rites as had been done once each century by the order and its predecessors in the 88th year (88 being a mystical number in the Christian Kabbalah). The rite (a theurgical Eucharist) was performed with the understanding that it would reempower a channel for Divine Blessing upon the planet for the coming century and protect humanity from being overwhelmed by dark forces. However, in 1888, the elderly abbot of the order had some concern that the chalices would be stolen by people who wished to use them for less altruistic magical purposes.

The chalices were secretly transported to London, where the centennial ceremony was to be performed. However, in spite of all precautions, the three chalices were stolen and used for black magical purposes. When the primary chalice was eventually recovered, the gold was melted down, and the pottery cup smashed into the earth. (Later, one of the auxiliary chalices turned up at an antiquities auction in Antioch where it was pur-chased by the Metropolitan Museum in New York; it is now ex-hibited as the “Chalice of Antioch” with legends of it having been the Holy Grail. The third chalice was never found.)

The actual founding of the Temple of the Holy Grail as it presently exists began in the 1960s with the magical preparation undertaken by a solitary magician. He was not aware of the prior history of the destruction of the Grail and not formally connected with any traditional Grail order. However, through interior guidance, he was led over several years to construct a new chalice using white magical and theurgical preparations. Following that same guidance, in August of 1988 he traveled over 1,000 miles to a sacred site in Canada, where he used the new chalice for a theurgical Eucharist to bless the planet and humanity. Only after this event, which he performed quite unaware of its full implications, did he while returning home hear an interior voice naming him the “Grailmaster.” He was unfamiliar with the term. Subsequently, he received teachings telepathically in lucid dreams from a Tibetan Lama that eventually became the First Empowerment of the First Order of THG. Shortly after this, he discovered a written account of the events of 1888. He then began to understand the impulse that led him to prepare the new vessel and transmit the 1888 centennial rite.

Soon after these events, Bishop George Bower of the Sanctuary of the Gnosis in London contacted the new Grailmaster and transmitted to him all of the documents and information necessary to reestablish and preserve the esoteric European lineages deriving from the Grail tradition. The new Grailmaster subsequently brought forth new initiatory materials (by the process commonly called channeling) and led Bishop Boyer in undergoing them.

The new Grailmaster has also received the authority provided by both the traditional apostolic lineages passed through the Christian bishops over the centuries and newer lineages begun by bishops claiming ordination from occult realms. Various independent bishops have consecrated the new Grailmaster in 18 historical Apostolic and 22 European esoteric lineages. Additionally, the Grailmaster and Temple are Keepers of the True Grail, which is the Divine Royal Blood (San Greal in Christian esoteric tradition, and not to be confused with the Grail Chalice itself). For believers, the Grail is the normally invisible and intangible energy that nurtures evolutionary unfoldment in the physical universe and among beings developing in the physical level of existence. The Grail power sanctifies matter, and is identified with the Philosopher’s Stone that transforms the lower into the Higher, expands consciousness, and mediates inspiration, guidance, selfless service, and Divine Love.

The THG exists solely for a small number of individuals wishing to undertake private advanced esoteric training in order to anonymously serve human and planetary evolution. A relationship to the order is offered by invitation to people already ordained or otherwise advanced in recognized groups, or to individuals who, having prepared themselves apart from organizations, manifest a devotion to the spiritual unfoldment of humanity and of the planet. Members of the order proceed through the mysteries it perpetuates, the content of which is not disclosed to nonmembers, in an ordered sequence.

The Temple of the Holy Grail may be contacted through the Grailmaster at P.O. Box 3816, Santa Cruz, CA 95063-3816 or through Bishop George Boyer, Bishop Templar, 33 College Rd., Colliers Wood, London, UK SW19 8BP. Information on the temple may be found at its website: http://www.hometemple.org/.

Sources:

Temple of the People

The Temple of the People formed out of the American Theosophical Society in Syracuse, New York, in 1898. The American Theosophists had broken with the international theosophical movement under William Q. Judge, who died just a few years later. Judge was succeeded by Katherine Tingley, who enjoyed strong but less than universal support. Members of the Syracuse lodge were among those who broke with Tingley and established the independent temple.

The Temple of the People was led by Dr. William H. Dower (1866–1957), known by members as “Red Star,” and Francis A. LaDue (1849–1922), known as “Blue Star.” The pair channelled the masters of the Great White Brotherhood, that group of advanced souls believed by Theosophists to guide the destiny of humankind. They had a special relationship to “Hilarion,” the master of the fifth, or red, ray. The channelled sessions were published in the massive book Theogenesis, which came to be regarded as the third volume of Madame Blavatsky’s magnum opus, The Secret Doctrine, Volume 1: Anthropogenesis, and Volume 2: Cosmogenesis. Dower outlived LaDue as the leader of the temple and was succeeded by Pearl F. Dower and Harold Forgostein. When Forgostein died in 1990, he was succeeded by Eleanor Shumway, the present guardian-in-chief. The temple may be contacted at Box 7100, Halcyon, CA 93421. It has some 200 members worldwide.

Sources:

Temple of Universal Law

The Temple of Universal Law is a Spiritualist church founded in 1956 by the Rev. Charlotte Bright. Bright was a medium whose spirit guide “Master Nicodemus” was considered to be a member of the Great White Brotherhood, that group of evolved disembodied entities who are believed to guide the destiny of the human race. Under the brotherhood’s direction, Bright erected a church on Chicago’s North Side in 1956. She pastored the church until her death in 1989, when she was succeeded by her son, Rev. Robert E. Martin. Before her death she oversaw the establishment of a second congregation in Wisconsin.

The temple affirms the beliefs of metaphysical Christianity, including a belief in a God who expresses himself as a Trinity; God the Father as the universal law of life that creates, sustains, and progresses to eternal life; Christ as the perfect demonstration of divine mind; the Holy Spirit as the action of divine mind within; the variety of forms of worship; the discovery of spiritual truth in the Bible and all spiritual truths; and the immortality of humans. The church teaches that it is the essential duty of people to look within and begin to awaken the Christ Spirit. As one comes to understand universal law, oneness with God can be attained.

Address: 5030 N. Drake, Chicago, IL 60625.

Tempton-teloris (Ship of the Dead)

Among the Dayaks of Borneo, the ship of the dead, the vessel that carried the souls of the departed in search of the hereafter, was generally represented in the shape of a bird, the hornbill (rhibinoplax vogti). Accompanying the souls on their journey through the fiery sea were all the stores that had been laid out at the feast of the dead (trenwhik), and all the slaves who had been killed for that purpose. After some chain of events in the fiery sea, the ship of the dead, with Tempton-telorn at the helm, reached the golden shores of the blessed.

Some of these beliefs echo the ancient burial rites of Egypt as portrayed in the Book of the Dead.

Tenaille, Jean (1882–1962)

Engineer who was active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on April 16, 1882, in Paris, France. He followed various occupations through his life: ranching in Canada, importing and managing a department store in Paris, and managing several industrial plants near Amiens, France (1931–39). After World War II he operated as an acoustical engineer. Toward the end of his life he wrote one important book, Civilisation occidentale (Western civilization, 1957), awarded the Académie Francaise prize for history in 1958. He contributed several articles to the French parapsychological journal Revue Métapsychique, including “A propos des sourciers” (Concerning dowsers, 1952). He died December 31, 1962.

Sources:

Dutch parapsychologist, for some years director of the Parapsychology Institute of the State University of Utrecht, Netherlands (which he founded), now known as Parapsychological Division of the Psychological Laboratory. Tenhaeff was born on January 18, 1894, in Rotterdam, the Netherlands. He studied at the University of Utrecht (Ph.D. psychology, 1933). His doctoral thesis Paragnostie en infinieren was the first on parapsychology in the Netherlands.

Tenhaeff had a full career as a respected parapsychologist. He was a lecturer on psychology (1932–53), lecturer on parapsychology (1933–53), professor of parapsychology, and director of the Parapsychology Institute, University of Utrecht (1953 on). He was founder (1928) and for many years editor (1928 on) of Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie, the journal of the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (the Dutch Society for Psychical Research). He served as secretary (1929–38) of the Dutch Society for Psychical Research prior to World War II and as an advisor afterward. In 1960 a number of leading parapsychologists withdrew from the society due to his autocratic disposition and established the rival Nederlandse Vereniging voor Persapsychologie.

Tenhaeff showed an interest in parapsychology from an early age, and conducted investigations and reported on psychometry, clairvoyance, precognition, unorthodox healing, the divining rod, and the structure of personality in sensitive. Through his career he lectured in many countries on parapsychological subjects, published numerous articles in Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie and other journals, and wrote a number of books. In 1945 he commenced a long and detailed investigation of the clairvoyant Gerard Croiset. In the years after the 1960 break in the society, people began to look into his extraordinary claims for the psychic abilities of Croiset and discovered that he had been systematically doctoring data in his research. The fraud called his whole career into question. Because of his own popularity with the media and public, he was able to hold off the critics for some years, but eventually all of his colleagues acknowledged his fall. Tenhaeff died July 9, 1981, in the Netherlands; no major parapsychological journal carried an obituary.

Sources:

Tenskwatana (1775–1836)

Tenskwatana, a Native American prophet of the Shawnee people, was the brother of the famous war chief Tecumseh. He grew up in the shadow of his more famous brother, and was a somewhat alienated soul who did not take part in traditional male activities such as hunting and fishing. At some point he also lost the use of his right eye. He compensated for this physical defect by wearing jewelry from his pierced ears and nose. He did have some oratorical abilities.

He arose out of obscurity in the first decade of the nineteenth century as American settlers moved into traditional Shawnee territory in the Midwest. He had become a medicine man in his brother’s tribe and claimed additional status as a prophet after being visited by the Great Spirit in a dream. The new settlers labeled him “The Prophet.” People took him seriously after he successfully predicted a solar eclipse in 1806. Especially younger Shawnee were drawn to this new leader and his new religion. He told them to reject white culture and adhere to their traditional ways. He also urged them to follow his example and give up the use of alcohol.

The white settlers, however, were more interested in his broad message that North America was a land that was held in common by all the tribes. Hence, no particular Indian group had the right to sign away its territory to the U.S. Government. It was not theirs to give. Tecumseh accepted the idea and used it to build a confederation of tribes. Meanwhile, Tenskwatana gathered his most dedicated followers and created a new village called Tippecanoe, at the point where the Wabash and Tippecanoe Rivers met. The settlers called it Prophet’s Town. As the movement focused in Tenskwatana grew, anxiety over Indian resistance to further settlement was focused on Prophet’s Town.

In the fall of 1811, Tecumseh headed south to gather the support of additional tribes for his confederacy to resist further white encroachments. Indiana governor William Henry Harrison decided to seize the opportunity and remove the heart of the movement. He sent soldiers to Prophet’s Town and in what came to be known as the Battle of Tippecanoe, destroyed the village. Though not a great battle, it was later used by Harrison in his quest for the American presidency. It also led to the downfall of Tenskwatana. Former residents of Tippecanoe almost killed him, and his influence as a man of magical power and prophetic ability waned from that moment. However, the idea of the confederation of tribes was still very much alive the next year and was used by the British to enroll Indians as allies in the War of 1812.

After the war, Tenskwatana lived in Canada on a British pension. He returned to the United States in 1826 and attempted to reassert his authority among a group of Shawnees who were being moved from Ohio and eventually settled in Kansas. He died there in 1856.

Sources:

Tephillin

In Hebrew, tephillin means “attachments.” They were originally prayer thongs worn by Jews at morning prayer—one on the left arm and another on the head. They came to be regarded as talismans and were used in many traditional ceremonies. The Talmud states: “Whoever has the tephillin bound to his head and arm . . . is protected from sin.”

Tephramancy

A mode of divination in which sacrificed victims from a fire are used.

Teraphim

These appear to have been ancient images of household gods. They were relatively small in size and easily carried. The teraphim were taken away from Jacob by his daughter Rachel (Gen. 31). They were probably seen as bringers of good luck. They are mentioned throughout the earlier record of Hebrew society, but beginning with the prophet Samuel (I Sam. 15:23) were condemned by association with sorcery and idolatry.
When Josiah conducted his reforms (II Kings. 23:24), the destruction of the teraphim was included among his actions. They were still being used, however, after the period of the Babylonian exile (Zech. 10:2).

Tesla, Nikola (1856–1943)

Eccentric scientific genius whose inventions in the field of electrical apparatus stemmed from inspirations received in extraordinary visions of a paranormal character. Unlike most innovators in the fields of engineering and electricity, his inventions did not require patient experiment and trial-and-error testing of models. The ideas flashed into his mind as working units, complete to the final details of component design and size. For example, as a young student of electrical engineering and physics, at a time when the concept of alternating current was considered a fallacy of the perpetual motion type, he knew that he could solve this problem. After only a few years of consideration of the problem, the complete detailed vision of an alternating current motor using a rotating magnetic field came to him while he gazed at a sunset.

He was born in July 10, 1856, in the village of Smiljan in the Austro-Hungarian border area of Lika (now in Slovenia). Even as a boy, he was inventive; at the age of nine he constructed a 16-bug power motor by harnessing June bugs to a thin wooden wheel. He was educated at an elementary school, then had four years at Lower Realschool, Gospic, Lika, which was followed by three years at the Higher Realschule, Carlstadt, Croatia. He graduated in 1873. Tesla was a student for four years at the Polytechnic School, Graz, Austria, studying mathematics, physics, and mechanics. Afterward he enrolled in philosophy studies for two years at the University of Prague, Bohemia (now the capital of the Czech Republic).

He commenced his career as an inventor in Budapest, Hungary, in 1881. There he constructed a telephone repeater and engaged in various branches of engineering and manufacture. In 1884 he immigrated to the United States, later becoming a naturalized citizen. For nearly a year he worked for inventor Thomas A. Edison, who was impressed by his skill and hard work, but the two men were diametrically opposed in temperament and method. Tesla was a visionary who solved problems in a flash of insight, whereas Edison relied on patient trial-and-error in practical experiments. Tesla insisted on the superiority of alternating current and its applications, whereas Edison believed that direct current would have the advantage due to the appearance of images, which were often accompanied by strong flashes of light. Then I began to take mental excursions beyond the small world of my actual knowledge. Day and night, in imagination, I went on journeys—saw new places, cities, countries, and all the time I tried hard to make these imaginary things very sharp and clear in my mind.

“...then the wonderful thing is, that if I do feel this way, I roam around in my imagination and think about the problem for many years with the idea in the back of my head. Whenever I feel like it, I roam around in my imagination and think about the problem without any deliberate concentration. This is a period of incubation.

“There follows a period of direct effort. I choose carefully the possible solutions of the problem I am considering, and gradually center my mind on a narrowed field of investigation. Now, when I am deliberately thinking of the problem in its specific features, I may begin to feel that I am going to get the solution. Then I feel that I am going to perform this operation. And the wonderful thing is, that if I do feel this way, then I have really solved the problem and shall get what I am after.

“...the feeling is as convincing to me as though I already had solved it. I have come to the conclusion that at stage the actual solution is in my mind subconsciously, though it may be a long time before I am aware of it consciously.

“Before I put a sketch on paper, the whole idea is worked out mentally. In my mind I change the construction, make improvements, and even operate the device. With a pencil and a blank sheet of paper I can give the measurements of all parts to workmen, and when completed all these parts will fit, just as certainly as though I had made the actual drawings. It is immaterial to me whether I run my machine in my mind or test it in my shop.

“The inventions I have conceived in this way have always worked. In 30 years there has not been a single exception. My first electric motor, the magneto, a gasoline engine and many other devices have all been developed in exactly this way.”

Tesla went on to invent new apparatus involving original principles. He was responsible for many important innovations: the system of electricity conversion and distribution by oscillatory dischargers, generators of high frequency current; the Tesla coil or transformer, a system of wireless transmission of intelligence; mechanical oscillators and generators of electrical oscillation; research and discoveries in radiation, material streams, and emanations; and high-potential magnifying transmitting. One of his most spectacular achievements was harnessing the water power of Niagara Falls. In 1895 the Westinghouse Electric Company installed a gigantic hydroelectric project, using the Tesla polyphase system of alternating current.

Tesla opened up many important avenues of scientific development and has rarely been properly acknowledged by later historians. His experiments with electromagnetic waves formed the basis of the development of radio. He stated that cosmic rays were responsible for the radioactivity of radium, thorium, and uranium and predicted that other substances would be made radioactive by bombardment. He thus anticipated the basic principles of X-ray apparatus and the electron microscope. In his work with wireless controlled automata he anticipated radio-controlled rocket missiles.

Not surprisingly, he had one or two blind spots. He did not accept for many years that atomic fission would produce energy. He misunderstood the mechanism of vision; he believed that visual images perceived by the brain were returned to the retina of the eye, and might be amplified or projected. However, there was no mistaking his own extraordinary visionary faculty and the discoveries associated with it. In an article titled “Making Your Imagination Work For You,” he wrote:

“During my boyhood I had suffered from a peculiar affliction due to the appearance of images, which were often accompanied by strong flashes of light. Then I began to take mental excursions beyond the small world of my actual knowledge. Day and night, in imagination, I went on journeys—saw new places, cities, countries, and all the time I tried hard to make these imaginary things very sharp and clear in my mind.

“This did constantly until I was 17, when my thoughts turned seriously to invention. Then, to my delight, I found I could visualize with the greatest facility. I needed no models, drawings, or experiments. I could picture them all in my head.

“Here, in brief, is my own method: After experiencing a desire to invent a particular thing, I may go on for months or years with the idea in the back of my head. Whenever I feel like it, I roam around in my imagination and think about the problem without any deliberate concentration. This is a period of incubation.

“...there follows a period of direct effort. I choose carefully the possible solutions of the problem I am considering, and gradually center my mind on a narrowed field of investigation. Now, when I am deliberately thinking of the problem in its specific features, I may begin to feel that I am going to get the solution. And the wonderful thing is, that if I do feel this way, then I have really solved the problem and shall get what I am after.

“...the feeling is as convincing to me as though I already had solved it. I have come to the conclusion that at stage the actual solution is in my mind subconsciously, though it may be a long time before I am aware of it consciously.

“...Before I put a sketch on paper, the whole idea is worked out mentally. In my mind I change the construction, make improvements, and even operate the device. With a pencil and a blank sheet of paper I can give the measurements of all parts to workmen, and when completed all these parts will fit, just as certainly as though I had made the actual drawings. It is immaterial to me whether I run my machine in my mind or test it in my shop.

“The inventions I have conceived in this way have always worked. In 30 years there has not been a single exception. My first electric motor, the magneto, a gasoline engine and many other devices have all been developed in exactly this way.”

1551
Tesla’s friend and biographer John J. O’Neill stated that Tesla “was unquestionably an abnormal individual, and of a type that does have what are known as ‘psychic experiences.' He was emphatic in his denial that he ever had experiences of that sort; yet he has related incidents that clearly belong in the psychic category.” According to O’Neill, Tesla was fearful that admitting to having psychic experiences might cause him to be misunderstood as supporting Spiritualism or theories that something operates in life other than matter and energy.

In his later years, Tesla suffered financial difficulties and was unable to construct some of his most ambitious inventions. He claimed he had discovered an inexhaustible source of energy that could be transmitted anywhere in the world without wires or loss of power. He correctly foresaw that at some future time “it will be possible for nations to fight without armies, ships, or guns by weapons far more terrible, to the destructive action and range of which there is virtually no limit.” Tesla is credited with having discovered a protective radiation principle of the kind popularly termed “death ray.”

Tesla refused the Nobel Prize because it was to be awarded jointly to himself and Thomas A. Edison; instead the award went to the Swedish scientist Gustav Dalen.

In an unpublished article entitled “Man’s Greatest Achievement,” O’Neill in his biographical Prolonged Genius, 1968, Tesla writes:

“Long ago he [the human being] recognized that all perceptible matter comes from a primary substance, or tenuity beyond conception, filling all space, the Akasa or luminous ether, which is acted upon by the life-giving Prana or creative force, calling into existence, in never ending cycles, all things and phenomena...”

This is the language of Theosophy or Hindu metaphysics. Tesla’s states of higher consciousness, achieved by intense concentration and a celibate life, resemble Hindu concepts of cosmic energy in the universe, aroused in the human body under the name of kundalini through yoga disciplines and meditation, resulting in expanded consciousness and access to an infinity of cosmic intelligence.

Tesla died in poverty in New York on January 7, 1943. Soon afterward, FBI operatives opened the safe in his room and took away papers reputedly containing details of a secret invention, search was being conducted. The week after the detonation of the first bomb in Japan, understanding the full nature of the project, he resigned. He returned to psychology by taking a course with Carl Rogers, then on his way to psychological fame with what was termed client-centered therapy, a new form of psychotherapy that allowed the analysis to arise from the patient’s growing self-understanding rather than from the more common analysis offered by Freudian systems. He went on to complete his Ph.D. at the University of Chicago in 1949. He held several positions through the 1950s before becoming the director of the Psychology Department at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York City in 1958. Within a few weeks, another person with whom he was to intimately related also joined the staff, Helen Schucman, who had just graduated from New York University.

Tetford and Schucman were very different personalities, and their relationship was sporadically filled with anger and hostility. However, in 1965, Tetford suggested that they work on their relationship and attempt to change it. He had been reading metaphysical literature from which he offered the discipline of meditation as a tool to assist them. They began meditating and Schucman began to receive a series of vivid images. Tetford encouraged her to keep a record of whatever she received. However, on October 21, 1965, she heard a voice say to her, “This is a course in miracles. Please take notes.” Tetford encouraged her to continue to record what she heard. Schucman recorded what she heard in shorthand. She read it to Tetford, who turned it into typescript.

The result of their collaboration over the next seven years was A Course in Miracles (ACIM). During this period, Schucman frequently expressed trepidation over her channeling work, but Tetford continually calmed her fears and doubts. It was published in 1975. Tetford, a quiet, somewhat passive man, was uncomfortable being in the public eye and allowed others to operate out front on the dissemination of the books and their teachings. In 1978 he moved to Tiburon, California, where the Foundation for Inner Peace, the corporation assigned the task of publishing the Course, had relocated. There he lived a quiet existence using much of his time trying to make the teachings on self-forgiveness real in his life. In 1986, he moved to LaJolla, California, and resided there for the last two years of his life. In the years since his death, his essential role in bringing forth A Course in Miracles has been widely recognized.

Sources:

Teutons

Little can be gleaned from the writings of classical authors on the subject, but manuscripts of the Middle Ages by such writers as Snorri Sturluson and Saemund Sigfússon (The Eddas) and Saxo Grammaticus, and such epic or pseudohistories as The Nibelungenlied, shed some light on Teutonic magic practice and beliefs.

From these writers one can arrive at several basic conclusions: (1) that magic with the Teutons was nonhierophantic, and was not the province of the priesthood, as with the Celtic Druids, for example; (2) that women were its chief conservators; and (3) that it principally resided in the study and elucidation of the runic script. In the same manner as in early Egypt it was part and parcel of the ability to decipher the hieroglyphic characters. It seems that all kinds of people dabbled in the practice of magic, and, to a great extent, sorcery was principally the province of women. Perhaps only those who could read the runes— that is, those who could read at all—were able to undertake the study of the occult, and therefore the undidactic, and restless to study was barred from all participation in the subject.

Women in all ranks of life seem to have been addicted to the practice of sorcery, from the queen on the throne to the wise- woman of the community. Thus the first letter pictures the head and horns of an ox, and the elucidation was left to the curious, the ambitious, to women and girls, to the unlettered warrior too.

Runes

In its various forms—German rune, Anglo-Saxon run, Icelandic run—the word is derived from an old Low German word runen (to cut or to carve), since the runes in ancient times were invariably carved instead of written. It later came to designate the characters themselves. Comparatively few people were able to decipher the runes, and the elucidation was left to the curious, the ambitious, among the females, and the leisureed few in general, perhaps including priests and lawmen. Consequently the power to decipher runes was a mysterious gift venerated among ordinary people who believed that the ability to elucidate them meant the reader possessed magic powers. The possessors of this ability maximized it so the belief in their prowess would flourish. A certain amount of patience and natural ability were necessary for mastery of such an intricate script, and the tradition that they were connected with sorcery lingered long in some parts of Iceland. In later times the word runes came to be applied to all the alphabetical systems employed by the Teutonic peoples before the introduction of Christianity. Their origin is obscure; some authorities deny that it is Teutonic and assert that the runes are merely a transformation or adaptation of Greek characters, others that they have a Phoenician or even cuneiform origin.

That they are of non-Teutonic origin is inferred from their strong resemblance to other scripts. It has also been argued that it was unlikely that they could have been invented by the Teutonic race given their state of organization and training. Thus the first runes first came into general use. Runes have been divided into three systems—English, German, and Scandinavian—but the difference between these is merely accidental, and the distinction that they were connected with sorcery lingered long in some parts of Iceland.

Runes were usually found on stone monuments, weapons, implements, and personal ornaments and furniture. In England, runic inscriptions are found in the north only, where Scandinavian influence was strongest.

The first symbols of the runic alphabet are for the letters f, h, ð, ð, ð, and ð(t). For this reason the order of the runes letters is not called an alphabet but a futhark. The system is symbolic. Thus the first letter pictures the head and horns of an ox, and is called foðr after that animal; the second is called wo, the word for bull; the third, thoðr (tree), then os (door); red (saddle); and enor (torch). The runes were probably derived or evolved from a purely pictorial system in which the figures of the animals or objects stood for the letters of the alphabet.

Since runes were carved, some connection may be possible between the Anglo-Saxon seergan (to say), and the Latin word secare (to cut), especially since secret signatures were made by merely cutting a chip from a bark manuscript. The old meaning of the word spell was "thin chip or shaving." The Roman historian Tacitus mentioned that in Teutonic divination, a rod cut from a fruit-bearing tree was cut into slips, and the slips, having marks on them, were thrown onto a white garment to be taken up with prayer to the gods and interpreted as they were taken. A special use of light cuttings for such fateful cross-readings, or "Virgilian lots," may have given the word spells its particular association with the words of the magician.

Belief in Nature Spirits

Among the lesser figures of mythology who were believed to have direct contact with ancient Teutonic peoples and assist them, or were connected with them in the practice of magic, were the duergar, or dwarfs, trolls, undines, nixies, and other spirits. Belief in them was distinctly animistic. The people believed that dwarfs and trolls inhabited the recesses of the mountains, caves, and the underworld. Nixies and undines were said to dwell in the lakes, rivers, pools, and inlets of the sea. In general these were friendly to humans, but objected to more than occasional intercourse with them.

Witchcraft

Witchcraft was much more in favor among the northern Teutons than it was in Germany, and this circumstance has been attributed to their proximity to the Finns, a race notorious for its propensities toward magic. In Norway, Orkney, and Shetland, the practice of sorcery seems to have been almost exclusively in the hands of Finnish women. There is little doubt that the Finns exercised upon the Teutons of Scandinavia the mystic influence of a conquered race; that is, they took full advantage of the terror inspired in their conquerors by an alien and unfamiliar religion and ritual in which magic was an integral element.

The principal activities of Teutonic witchcraft were the raising of storms, the selling of pieces of knotted rope (each knot representing a wind), divination, and prophecy, and acquiring invisibility. Since the sea was the element of the people, it became the chief element of the witch of the northern Teutons. Thus in the saga of Froðsfjöll, the two sea witches Heyde and Ham ride the storm and are sent by Helgi to raise the tempest that will drown Frithjof. They take the shapes of a bear and a storm eagle. In the saga of Guðrún the Strong, a witch-wife, Thúrid, sends adrift a magic log that comes to Grettir's island. The log leads to his downfall.

In the north of Scotland, the Teutonic and Celtic systems of magic may be said to have met and fused, but not to have clashed, since their many points of resemblance outweighed their differences.

Animal transformation also played a considerable part in Teutonic magic and witchcraft. In early Germany the witch (hexe) seems to have also acquired the characteristics of a vampire.

Second Sight

The Teutons seem to have excelled in prophecy and divination; the practice was more widespread among the northern Teutons than the southern. Prophetic utterance was usually induced by ecstasy, but it was not the professional diviner alone who was capable of supernatual vision. Anyone under stress of excitement, and particularly if near death, might become fuy (prophetic), and great attention was invariably paid to utterances made while the person was in this condition. (See also Holland and Germany)

Sources:

Thanatology

The formal study of the nature of death and dying. Prior to the demarcation of thanatology as a new area of specialization, the study of various aspects of death had been included in psychology and parapsychology. Parapsychological research has concentrated on three human experiences that seem to be part of the death experience: 1) the sensation of floating out of the body; 2) feelings of peace or wholeness; and 3) meetings with someone who has died previously. Studies of what today is called the near-death experience have been made by psychical researchers since the nineteenth century, often under the label death-bed experiences.

Significant in defining the new field of thanatology has been the work of physician Elisabeth Kübler-Ross, author of the book On Death and Dying (1970), whose work began with a concern for the grief process she frequently encountered in counseling with dying patients. Her continued interest led her to questions of survival of death, traditionally an area of psychical studies. She is the founder of Shanti Nilaya, a healing and growth center in Virginia. Among the leading centers focused on research in thanatology are the International Institute for the Study of Death in Florida and the International Association for Near-Death Studies.

Sources:

Thau Weza

Burmese wizards, literally “wire-man who works in wire.” (See also Myanmar)

Thayer, M(ary) B(aker) (ca. 1887)

Well-known professional apport and slate-writing medium of Boston, who chiefly produced flowers and fruits, sometimes live birds. In the Banister of Light (1875) there is an account of a canary apport in answer to a mental request. In the report of the Seybert Commission, a slate-writing séance attended by one Professor Fullerton was considered a failure. There was a description of another séance, at which 30 people were present. The Seybert Commission was represented by Drs. Koenig and Leidy.

According to the Leidy’s account:

“. . . sounds were heard of objects dropping on the table, and from time to time matches were lit and exposed, shown before the company, cut plants and flowers. These were all of the kind sold at this season by the florists, consisting of a pine bough, fronds of ferns, roses, pinks, tulips, lilies, callas and smilax. At one time there fell on the table a heavy body, which proved to be a living terrapin, at another time there appeared

Sources:

Texas Monthly UFO Report

A former periodical concerned with the technical aspect of UFO investigation for individuals with some scientific background. It also included reports on parapsychological research. It was published at the Texas Scientific Research Center for UFO Studies in Waco.

Thackeray, William Makepeace (1811–1863)

This noted novelist was introduced to the phenomena of Spiritualism during a lecture tour in the United States, when he attended a séance with the famous medium D. D. Home. He also observed the rapping phenomena of Ann (Leah) Underhill, one of the Fox sisters. His sympathetic reaction was described in Underhill’s book The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism (1885). This experience and subsequent observations with Home led Thackeray to endorse the sincerity of the anonymous account (written by Robert Bell) “Stranger Than Fiction.” It was published in the Cornhill Magazine and edited by Thackeray. He was severely criticized for this apparent endorsement of mesmerism.

However, it seems that, in fact, his attitude was somewhat ambiguous. In a letter to his friends Mrs. Thomas F. Elliot and Mrs. Thomas F. Elliot and Wife, he states:

“...I have seen the Rappers, and the table moving, and heard the Spirits. The moving of tables is undoubted, the noises and knocks (continual raps following the person who has heard the Spirits. The moving of tables is undoubted, the noises and knocks (continual raps following the person who has

Both Thackeray and his friend Charles Dickens had the highest regard for John Elliotson, a pioneer of mesmerism who was later converted to Spiritualism after initial skepticism. Thackeray based his character “Dr. Goodenough” in Pendragon and The Newcomes on Elliotson, and dedicated the former novel to him.

Sources:

Thackeray, William Makepeace (1811–1863)

This noted novelist was introduced to the phenomena of Spiritualism during a lecture tour in the United States, when he attended a séance with the famous medium D. D. Home. He also observed the rapping phenomena of Ann (Leah) Underhill, one of the Fox sisters. His sympathetic reaction was described in Underhill’s book The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism (1885). This experience and subsequent observations with Home led Thackeray to endorse the sincerity of the anonymous account (written by Robert Bell) “Stranger Than Fiction.” It was published in the Cornhill Magazine and edited by Thackeray. He was severely criticized for this apparent endorsement of mesmerism.

However, it seems that, in fact, his attitude was somewhat ambiguous. In a letter to his friends Mrs. Thomas F. Elliot and Kate Perry, he states:

“...I have seen the Rappers, and the table moving, and heard the Spirits. The moving of tables is undoubted, the noises and knocks (continual raps following the person who has the gift of eliciting them) some natural unexplained phenomenon but the Spirits is of course due to humming and imposture. They try to guess at something and hit or miss as may be. 1000 misses for one hit—It is a most dreary and foolish superstition. ... But the physical manifestations are undoubted. The table lifting up and men even lifting up the ground to the ceiling so some are ready to swear—but though I do not believe in this until I see it; I wouldn’t have believed in a table turning 3 weeks ago—and that I have seen and swear to.

Both Thackeray and his friend Charles Dickens had the highest regard for John Elliotson, a pioneer of mesmerism who was later converted to Spiritualism after initial skepticism. Thackeray based his character “Dr. Goodenough” in Pendragon and The Newcomes on Elliotson, and dedicated the former novel to him.

Sources:

Thayer, M(ary) B(aker) (ca. 1887)

Well-known professional apport and slate-writing medium of Boston, who chiefly produced flowers and fruits, sometimes live birds. In the Banister of Light (1875) there is an account of a canary apport in answer to a mental request. In the report of the Seybert Commission, a slate-writing séance attended by one Professor Fullerton was considered a failure. There was a description of another séance, at which 30 people were present. The Seybert Commission was represented by Drs. Koenig and Leidy.

According to the Leidy’s account:

“. . . sounds were heard of objects dropping on the table, and from time to time matches were lit and exposed, shown before the company, cut plants and flowers. These were all of the kind sold at this season by the florists, consisting of a pine bough, fronds of ferns, roses, pinks, tulips, lilies, callas and smilax. At one time there fell on the table a heavy body, which proved to be a living terrapin, at another time there appeared a pigeon which flew about the room. . . . The proprietor of the house declared that the flowers and the other objects brought to view in the séance were not previously in the room, and their appearance could not be explained unless through spiritual agency."

In a footnote to his translation of Adolphe d’Assier’s book Posthumous Humanit (1887) Henry S. Oclott writes:

"While she [Mrs. Thayer] was enclosed in a large bag, sealed closely at her neck, and all possibility of trickery guarded against, I have seen a long table, quite covered with vines, plants and flowers, dropped out of space. I marked a certain leaf of a rare plant in the garden without her knowledge, and the same evening, in response to my mental request, it dropped upon the back of my hand, with which I was at the moment holding the medium’s two hands. The above occurred in the dark; but once a tree branch was brought me in full daylight, through her mediumship, in the house of a gentleman whose guest I was."

Due to the nature of her work with apports and slate writing and the fact that her only supporter was a lady such as Oclott, who was never known for his critical approach to such phenomena, Thayer is considered likely to be one of the fraudulent mediums of the era.

Thee Satanic Church

Thee Satanic Church was a small Satanic organization in Chicago during the 1970s. It was formed in 1974 as a breakaway group of Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilum Rite.
Evelyn Paglini, one of the original founders of the Nethilum Rite group, established Thee Satanic Church, opened an occult book store in Chicago, and began the periodical Psychic Standard.

The group gradually dropped their Satanic elements, the Psychic Standard ceased publication in 1980, and shortly afterwards the church was dissolved.

Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilum Rite

Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilum Rite was founded around 1970 in Chicago by High Priest Terry Taylor and Evelyn Paglini and went public in 1971. The church opposed the Satanism of Anton S. LaVey and the Church of Satan, founded in 1966, contending that LaVey did not believe in the actual existence of Satan. In contrast, the Nethilum Rite church taught that Satan was the epitome of God’s creation who possessed all of the power and knowledge of the universe. Members of the church sought to acquire as much of Satan’s knowledge and power as possible. Magical rituals and psychic development were the primary tools for accessing Satan.

By 1973 the church claimed 538 members. It split in 1974 when Paglini led a group out of the church and founded a rival organization, Thee Satanic Church. The Nethilum Rite church ceased to exist in the mid-1970s.

Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth (TOPY)

Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth (TOPY) grew out of the magical philosophical thought of rock musician Genesis P. Or-ridge, formerly with the band Throbbing Gristle. He wished to explore the possibilities of human potential and saw performane art as a fruitful means for his work. In 1981 he formed a new band, Psychic TV, and TOPY. He soon reached the conclusion that humans possessed an infinite potential and were limited only by the restraints imposed upon it. That idea brought him close to one of the major tenets espoused in The Book of the Law, the Thelemic magical text that had been received by Aleister Crowley in 1904. “The word of sin is restriction,” Orridge also began to identify what he was doing with magic.

Orridge identified the human problem as the narrowing of choice by society and the movement of most people into a sleep-like state in which they lose awareness of their vast potential. He believes that religion and politics are vast systems that operate to put people to sleep. Temple members are those who have begun to awaken to their potential and are attempting to explore it even as they become more aware. A first step is coming to grips with one’s mortality. Members also seek to discover their True Will (a basic concept of Thelemic Magic) and generally accept the basic Thelemic notion, “Do What thou Will shall be the whole of the Law.” TOPY has generally prescribed an intuitive approach to life rather than the following of rules, laws, and regulations.

Integrals to living intuitively is sexual expression, which should follow one’s wants and desires rather than social mores, according to TOPY. Correlatively, sexual magic is the single best tool for raising the energy need for liberation. TOPY has matured into a ritual magic group that espouses all of the trad-tional teachings of magic, though in a most modern fashion.
Unlike traditional magical orders, there is no initiatory grading system, hierarchical organization, or secret rituals. TOPY is or-organized as a fellowship of equals with various complementary talents and abilities.

Its egalitarian stance and the constant striving of members to expand their individual potential has contributed to TOPY’s indistinguishability as an organization. On several occasions it has been reported defunct. However, at least in a minimal way, it has survived. The TOPY North American headquarters is at P.O. Box 1212521, Tacoma, WA 98411-1521. It has a website at http:// www.uncarved.demon.co.uk/topy.htm.

Sources:

Burton, Tina. "Intuitive Magic?": A Study of the Temple ov Psy-Religions Collection, Davidson Library, University of California—Santa Barbara, 1989.

An Introduction to Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth. Brighton,

Theobald, Morell (1828–1908)

British Spiritualist and author of Spiritualism at Home (1884) and Spirit Workers in the Home Circle (1887), the latter describing a series of curious psychic manifestations in his home that lasted for many years.

Some of Theobald’s family members reportedly possessed psychic gifts—his grandfather and father saw spirits. His own friendship with the author William Howitt and family initiated him into writing and mediumship in 1855. The psychic ties were further strengthened by intimacy with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Everitt, and the two families held seances together for many years. Not surprisingly, the loss of three children increased the receptivity of the Theobald family. A sitting following their death led to rapping phenomena, which, in the precence of three living children, developed into movements of a heavy dining table and, eventually, intelligent communications.

The book by Theobald’s sister titled Heaven Opened, or, Messages for the Bereaved from Their Little Ones in Glory (1870) contains records of these experiences. The contact with the beyond was, at this period, threefold—the elder boy fell into trance and was controlled by the deceased children and others; Theobald psychic, his wife wrote spontaneously; and Mrs. Everitt produced direct voice manifestations for the family.

The strange phenomena of later years were first heralded during a joint excursion with the Everitt family to Cornwall in 1871. To quote from Spirit Workers in the Home Circle:

“As we sat on woodland slopes we had the curious sensations of rapping beneath the solid earth on which we sat. If we took a basket of sandwiches, that was moved about by our sportive invisible friends. At an inn where we stayed with our hamper of provisions we expected the waiter would be scared, for raps resounded on the window, walls and wainscoted panelling, while our hamper was bodily taken off by invisible hands into one corner of the room and there opened and partly unpacked for us.

In 1882 Mary, a new cook, was discovered to have clairvoyant powers. When Tom, the youngest son, complained that his hair was being pulled by invisible beings, Mary saw and described the phantom visitors. Because of her gifts Mary was soon advanced to the standing of a trusted friend of the family. After the maid left, Nellie Theobald and Mary occupied the same bedroom and looked jointly after the household duties. Morell Theobald employed many tests to verify strange occurrences in the house; he often got up in the middle of the night in an attempt to catch the perpetrators in the act, but he was unsuccessful.

For some time, Theobald resisted every request of competent psychic investigators to take Mary to their own rooms for investigation. In this resolve he was strangely strengthened by spirit writing. The limited investigation of Frank Podmore and Frank S. Hughes of the Society for Psychical Research (SPR) was finally allowed to continue in the Theobald home in 1884, and cast considerable doubt on many of the marvelous occurrences, especially on the spirit writings, which appeared in every conceivable place—on the ceiling, on the walls, on locked drawers and receptacles, on marked papers, and came in many languages: old French, Latin, Hebrew, Greek, and Rarotongan, among others.

The SPR investigators were never able to witness the actual performance of the various phenomena and found many circumstances that suggested human origin in the spirit writings. The letters were regularly formed and of normal size when they appeared in places accessible to persons of ordinary stature but became straggling and irregular on higher places as if they had appeared in places accessible to persons of ordinary stature. The Theobald house besides myself and my wife knowing of its existence.''

The findings of the two investigators were strongly criticized in "Light" (January, February, and March 1885). The editor concluded that the investigation was incomplete and hasty and that fraud could not explain the extraordinarily varied phenomena of the Theobald house.

Morell Theobald admitted that "many of the writings...are comparatively feeble compositions" and that he found the source of the most puzzling pieces of direct writing (i.e., the Lord's Prayer as used in the twelfth century and the Rarotongan Script) in a volume he had given Mary as a Christmas present. He refused to seek a normal explanation to the diversified styles of handwriting, even when the scripts were handed out in a direct writing. A piece of paper could easily be slipped in through a crack.

The investigators also contended that the small characters in certain pieces of spirit writing could have been written by anybody with a sharp pencil and patient practice. They found many crude mistakes in the Latin and Greek scripts and discovered finally the facts contained in the communications coming from "Saadi" had been published in an article, "Persian Poetry in the Past" in Part 6 of Chamber's Repository of Instructive and Amusing Tracts. It also appeared that "Wamik," who claimed to have been "Saadi's" friend and contemporary poet, was a fictitious entity, the imaginary hero of the poem to which he subscribed his name. In the end it appeared that Mary was the mundane source of much if not all of the phenomena.

There was no better evidence for deep-rooted unshakable faith than Theobald's account of the test undertaken on behalf of the SPR in 1886. He was handed two sealed envelopes by E. T. Bennett, assistant secretary of the SPR, in order to have the hidden contents deciphered by spirit agency. After some weeks, writing was obtained on the outside of the envelopes that proved to be a fairly good counterpart of the inside. Theobald was then handed a third envelope, which was in his careful keeping for some months, according to him "no one in the house besides myself and my wife knowing of its existence."

Again the contents were revealed, but instead of triumph, a very painful accusation was made against the Theobald family: the SPR claimed that all the envelopes had been opened and gummed up again. To make matters worse, the handwriting on all three was identical in character with the well-known scripts. Theobald believed mischievous and fraudulent spirits had spoiled the tests. He said that the family had broken the essential condition of trust and thereby had opened the door to such evil influences. This conviction of Theobald's was apparently borne out by psychometric readings of the envelopes through a clairvoyant and by many mediumistic communications. One of the readings was obtained through the mediumship of William Eglinton, who was on more than one occasion caught in mediumistic fraud. It is a very legitimate inference that the atmosphere of blind faith that pervaded the Theobald family had allowed serious deception.

Sources:

"Theologus"
One of the spirit controls of William Stainton Moses, "Theologus" was said to be St. John the Divine.

Theomancy
The aspect of the study of the Kabala that deals with the mysteries of divine majesty and seeks the sacred names. He (and only males over 40 could engage in this study) who possessed this knowledge knew the future, commanded nature, had full power over angels and demons, and could perform miracles.

The Hasidic masters (zaddik) claimed that it was by this means that Moses performed so many marvels: that Joshua was able to stop the sun; that Elias caused fire to fall from heaven and raised the dead; that Daniel closed the mouths of the lions; and that the three youths were not consumed in the furnace. Even today, the leaders of some Hasidic groups are reputed to have mastered at least part of this material and are known for their miracle-working abilities.

Sources:

Theon, M(ax) (1850–1927)
Max Theon, the enigmatic occultist whose work initiated the Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor in the mid-1880s, was born Louis Maximilian Binsstein into a Jewish family in Poland. He appears to have first received knowledge of the occult world in the thriving Hasidic communities of his homeland. As a young man he began to travel the world, but in 1873 settled in England at Saint John's Wood, in the northern section of London. He made his living as a psychic healer and advertised himself in the Spiritual periodicals as able to cure cholera.

In 1882 he began to work with a young Scotsman named Thomas Dalton (1855–1905), later known under his pseudonym, Thomas H. Burgoyne. In their three years' association, he awakened Burgoyne's spiritual vision and put him in touch with some preternatural entities, the adepts who were acknowledged as the Interior Circle, the real founders of the Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor. The brotherhood’s existence was announced in 1884 in a small advertisement placed in the back of an English translation of the Divine Pymander of Hermes Mercurius Trismegistus. It invited contact with Bimstein under his magical name, Theon. Theon was named Grand Master of the Exterior Circle, the human agents who carried out the instructions of the Interior Circle.

Within a short time Theon retired from any active involvement with the brotherhood, which he left to the care of Burgoyne and the Rev. William Alexander Ayton. He married a medium, Mary Christine Woodroffe Ware. Ware was the founder of the Universal Philosophical Society in London, at which she offered Spiritualist lectures. In 1866 Theon, along with his wife and secretary, Augusta Rolfe, moved to Paris and then in 1888 to Algiers.

His activities in the 1890s are largely unknown, though he probably continued to support himself as a healer and worked with his new wife in protecting her mediumship. In 1899 he surfaced to write for the Journal du Magnétisme et de la Psychologie against the philosophy of the French Spiritists led by Allan Kardec.

Around the turn of the century Theon reappeared in Tlemcen, Algeria, and in 1901 began to issue a magazine, Cosmic Philosophy, whose content seems to have been derived from material channeled by Madame Theon. The same publication shortly after her death in 1908. In Algeria he also took students, among whom was Mira Alfassa (1878–1973), who as Mira Richard became the student and companion of Sri Aurobindo Ghose (1872–1950), the famed Indian spiritual teacher. Known as “The Mother,” she ran the Aurobindo Ashram for many years.

Theon passed away in March of 1927 in Algiers.

Theosophical History

Theosophical History (Journal)

A quarterly journal founded by Leslie Price in January 1985 that reports on the historical study of the expansive theosophical movement, including individuals and impulses associated with but not a part of the Theosophical Society. The journal has an independent stance and is neutral to various expressions of Theosophy. It seeks to promote the common historical enterprise by Theosophists and non-Theosophists interested in the development of the movement.

The journal seeks to aid historical assessment of such pioneers of Theosophy as Alice Bailey, Annie Besant, William Quan Judge, J. Krishnamurti, C. W. Leadbeater, and G. R. S. Mead. By arrangement with the Society for Psychical Research, London, early issues of the journal carried items from its files on theosophical phenomena.

In 1989 funding became a problem after the death of its prime donor and subsequent difficulties with the Theosophical Publishing House, there was a brief lapse of publication in 1989 until James Santucci, a professor at California State University in Fullerton, California, commenced publication with the January 1990 issue. Santucci built a new editorial board (which includes Price) and continued publication with the same independent stance and high standards as Price originally envisioned.

Theosophical History may be ordered from Dr. James Santucci, Department of Comparative Religion, P.O. Box 6808, California State University, Fullerton, CA 92834-6808. Website: http://idt.net/~pdeveney/.

Theosophical Society

The major modern organization advocating gnostic-esoteric teachings. The Theosophical Society was founded in New York in 1875 by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, Henry Steel Olcott, William Quan Judge, and others. It grew out of interest in the occult generated previously by the magnetist movement and especially Spiritualism, in which both Blavatsky and Olcott had participated. The society proposed a different direction, including attention to a distinct philosophical stance drawn from Eastern teachings.

Both Blavatsky and Olcott were closely concerned with Spiritualist investigations, and they met at the house of the Eddy brothers in Vermont. They were also concerned in the claimed phenomena of the mediums Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Holmes of Philadelphia, who were accused of cheating. The Holmes partnership involved the alleged manifestation of the spirits “Katie King” and “John King,” associated with the British medium Florence Cook. Blavatsky eventually disowned the Holmes phenomena, but endorsed the reality of the spirit “John King.”

In May 1875 Blavatsky and Olcott formed the Miracle Club, which offered an alternative to prevailing scientific materialism, but the organization languished. Soon Olcott began to receive messages through Blavatsky from a mysterious “Brotherhood of Luxor,” prototypes of the famous Mahatma letters of later years. These messages claimed the support of hidden masters of wisdom in the spreading of truth.

In November 1875 the Theosophical Society was founded with Olcott as president, Blavatsky as corresponding secretary, and Judge (a lawyer) as counsel. There were approximately 20 original members. The term “theosophy” was proposed by Charles Sotheran, a well-known bibliophile and editor of the American Bibliophile. The preamble to the society’s bylaws states: “The Title of the Theosophical Society explains the objects and desires of its founder: they ‘seek to obtain knowledge of the nature and attributes of the Supreme Power, and of the higher spirits by the aid of physical processes.’ In other words, they hope, that by going deeper than modern science has hitherto done, into the esoteric philosophies of ancient times, they may be enabled to obtain, for themselves and other investigators, proof of the existence of an ‘Unseen Universe,’ the nature of its inhabitants if such there be, and the laws which govern them and their relations with mankind. Whatever may be the private opinions of its members, the society has no dogmas to enforce, no creed to disseminate. It is formed neither as a Spiritualist schism, nor to serve as the foe or friend of any sectarian or philosophic body. Its only axiom is the omnipotence of truth, its only creed a profession of unqualified devotion to its discovery and propaganda. In considering the qualifications of applicants for membership, it knows neither race, sex, color, country nor creed.”

The stated objects of the society were “to collect and diffuse knowledge of the laws which govern the universe.” To the society, these laws involved a search, including attention to a distinct philosophical stance drawn from Eastern teachings.

This preoccupation with the miraculous, which has also been the popular focal point in the establishment of great world religions, proved to be the strength as well as the weakness of the society. Over the next two years, there was a shortage of unusual phenomena and the society seemed doomed to failure, many members dropping out.

Meanwhile, Blavatsky was preparing her book Isis Unveiled, a compilation and survey of esoteric religious and occult traditions through the ages. This book, together with the amalgamation of the Theosophical Society with the Arya Samaj of Swami Dayananda Saraswati in 1878, stimulated new interest in the society.

In 1879 Blavatsky and Olcott toured India, establishing new contacts and developing an aura of the mystic East. India was traditionally associated with the supernormal feats of yoga and the esoteric wisdom of the Vedas and Upanishads. In the coming years, the society in Adyar, Madras. Although the marvels associated with Blavatsky brought new and important supporters for the society, they also excited opposition and accusations of fraud, even from Swami Dayananda, who publicly repudiated Blavatsky and the society in April 1882.

Through the years the Theosophical Society suffered from various controversies and schisms. Most notable was the controversy over the so-called Mahatma letters, which Blavatsky claimed were supernormally produced messages from Masters of Wisdom, some of which were fraudulently written in 1884; in the same year Richard Hodgson of the Society for Psychical Research, Britain, went to the headquarters of the Theosophical Society at Adyar, Madras, to conduct an on-the-spot investigation. He reported the discovery of a shrine with a false back, used with the connivance of Madame Coulomb, an employee of the society, as a fake mailbox for the letters. The confession of fraud by Coulomb was dismissed by loyal members of the society as a Christian plot to discredit Blavatsky and the society. Coulomb's disclosure of the different methods by which the "miracles" were produced and Hodgson's own discovery of various fraudulent events proved more conclusive to most.

Blavatsky left India and settled in England, leaving the society in Olcott's hands. There she drew a group of students, and an internal controversy arose in the society over the establishment of an esoteric section for the study of arcane doctrines and practices. Meanwhile, Blavatsky worked on her massive presentation of theosophical teachings, which finally appeared as The Secret Doctrine.

Meanwhile, following the transfer of international headquarters to India, Judge had organized and was leading the American section. After Blavatsky's death in 1891, disputes arose over the production of further Mahatma letters by Judge. These letters supported his claim to take charge of the esoteric section, which Blavatsky had bequeathed to newcomer Annie Besant.

While there was a temporary agreement for Besant and Judge to share leadership, tension between Judge and the society leadership outside of the United States continued; in 1895-96 he led the great majority of the American lodges in the establishment of the Theosophical Society in America as a separate entity. Judge died a short time later and E. T. Har grove was elected president of the Theosophical Society in America. But like Blavatsky, Judge had found a talented protege, and Katherine Tingley's abilities were recognized by the membership and she became president of the American society—a post she would hold for the rest of her life. She led in the establishment of a Theosophical community at Point Loma, San Diego, California.

Meanwhile, Annie Besant succeeded Olcott (d. 1907) as president of the international Theosophical Society. A capable orator and administrator, she helped the society and built it into a worldwide organization. While the society continued to suffer from the scandals attached to Blavatsky, Besant attempted to put that history in the past. However, one of her colleagues, Charles Webster Leadbeater who impressed Besant as one possessed of occult abilities, was involved in several scandals that involved some young boys. Eventually he was exiled from India to Australia, though not before he and Besant had produced some of the standard theosophical texts. Leadbeater cost the society the considerable support of the scholarly community as well as the A.C. Parkers and some 700 other members in England who left in 1908 and established a rival organization.

Besant adopted, with the aid of Leadbeater, a young Brahmin boy named Jiddu Krishnamurti, whom they claimed would be the vehicle through whom the future "World Teacher" would manifest. After World War I, as Krishnamurti matured, Besant promoted him and took him on speaking tours around the world. The society's membership peaked at about 34,000 in 1913; by 1916 the presence and both Besant and the members were devastated in 1929 when he resigned and renounced the role she had assigned him. Krishnamurti went on to become an independent teacher in his own right with a considerable following.

Theosophy's teachings had been given to Blavatsky by a group of exalted masters. Following her death, various people, such as Leadbeater, also claimed to be in spiritual contact. One who made such claims was Alice A. Bailey, a member living in southern California. She claimed that she was the amanuensis of Djal Khul, usually called the Tibetan. Her claims eventually led to her separation from the society and the establishment in the 1920s of another offshoot of Theosophy—the Arcane School.

In spite of its controversial background, the Theosophical Society itself has had a considerable influence on the spiritual and intellectual life of many individuals in India, Europe, and the United States. One of the principal factors that increased the society's appeal was the popularity of Madame Blavatsky, whose magnetic personality and evident knowledge of the occult and esoteric traditions of the world have continued to fascinate the world. The society has influenced many other religious movements, such as The Anthroposophical Society, the Liberal Catholic Church, the Anthroposophical Society, the Alice Bailey movement, and the I Am Movement. Almost a hundred different organizations, some of which rival the parent Theosophical Society in size, have emerged from these offshoots. Less directly attached to Theosophy, but owing much to its initial impulse, is the modern magical revival whose initial major organizational expression was the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, but which has found contemporary expression in the O.T.O. and the popular neo-pagan witchcraft movement. The single most popular expression of Theosophy has been the...
New Age movement of the 1980s, which brought literally millions of people into esoteric studies. The main theosophical bodies, i.e., those that have a specifically theosophical heritage, are the Theosophical Society (with international lodges and headquarters at Adyar, Madras, India); the Theosophical Society, American Branch (with international headquarters at Altadena, California); and the United Lodge of Theosophists (headquarters in Los Angeles, California). The American affiliate of the international society headquartered in Adyar is the Theosophical Society in America, with headquarters in Wheaton, Illinois on an estate called Olcott; the British affiliate is the Theosophical Society at 50 Gloucester Pl., London, W1H 3HJ, England.

Sources:
Solovyov, V. A. A Modern Priestess of Isis. London: Longmans, Green, 1895.

Theosophical Society in America

The American affiliate of the international Theosophical Society, which is headquartered in Adyar, Madras, India. It continues the tradition of Theosophy established in 1875 in New York. The American branch was organized in 1880 but became separate from the international movement in 1895. The few American lodges still loyal to the international headquarters in Adyar reorganized and eventually became the dominant segment of the society in the United States. The society is headquartered in Wheaton, Illinois, where it maintains a library of more than 20,000 volumes and publishes books through the Theosophical Publishing House. It issues a magazine, Quest. Headquarters are located at 1926 N. Main St., Wheaton, Ill. 60187. The American branch of the Esoteric Section is headquartered in a small theosophical community in Ojai, California. The complex also houses a large library as well as an educational facility known as the Kryon Institute. Theosophical literature is distributed through Quest bookstores, outlets being located in several cities, including Wheaton and Ojai.

Theosophical Society of Agrippa

The famous occultist and alchemist Agrippa (1486–1555) established in Paris and other centers a secret theosophical society, the rites of admission to which were of a peculiar character. Upon the death of Agrippa, the Universal Brotherhood was established in London in 1510, and there he established a branch of the order in that city.

Theosophy

Term derived from the Greek theos (god) and sophia (wisdom), denoting a philosophical-religious system that claims absolute knowledge of the existence and nature of the deity, and is not to be confused with the later system evolved by the founders of the Theosophical Society.

This knowledge, or theosophy, it is claimed, may be obtained by special individual revelation, or through the operation of some higher faculty. It is the transcendent character of the godhead of theosophical systems that differentiates them from the philosophical systems of the speculative or absolute type, which usually proceed deductively from the idea of God. God is conceived in theosophical systems as the transcendent source of being, from whom human beings in their natural state are far removed.

Theosophy is practically another name for speculative mysticism. Thus Kabalist and Neoplatonic conceptions of divine emanations are in reality theosophical, as are the mystical systems of Jakob Boehme and Baader.

Theosophy has also come to signify the tenets and teachings of the founders of the Theosophical Society. This society was founded in the United States in 1875 by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, Col. H. S. Olcott, and others. Its objectives were to establish a nucleus of the Universal Brotherhood of Humanity, to promote the study of comparative religion and philosophy, and to investigate the mystic powers of life and matter.

The conception of the Universal Brotherhood was based upon the oriental idea of one life—that ultimate oneness underlies all diversity, whether inward or outward. The study of comparative religion had materialized into a definite system of belief, the bounds of which were dogmatically fixed. It was set forth in the theosophical system that all the great religions of the world originated from one supreme source and that they are merely expressions of a central “Wisdom Religion” vouchsafed to various races of the earth in such a manner as is best suited to time and geographical circumstances.

Underlying these was a secret doctrine or esoteric teaching, which, it was stated, had been the possession for ages of certain Mahatmas, or adepts, in mysticism and occultism. With these Blavatsky claimed to be in direct communication, and she herself manifested occult phenomena, producing the ringing of astral bells, and so forth.

On several occasions these effects were unmasked as fraudulent, but many people believed that Blavatsky was one of those rare personalities who possess great natural psychic powers, which at times failing her, she augmented by fraudulent methods.

The evidence for the existence of the Great White Brotherhood of Mahatmas, the existence of which she asserted, was unfortunately somewhat inconclusive. It rested, for the most part, on the statements of Blavatsky, Olcott, A. P. Sinnett, Charles W. Leadbeater, and other committed Theosophists, who claimed to have seen or communicated with them.
With every desire to do justice to these upholders of the theosophical argument, it is necessary to point out that in occult, or pseudo-occult experiences, the question of hallucination enters very largely, and the ecstatic condition may be responsible for subjective appearances that seem real enough to the visionary.

Again, the written communications of the Mahattas—the Mahatma letters—give rise to much doubt. One Mahatma employed the American system of spelling, and this was accounted for by the circumstance that his English had been sophisticated by reading American books. A study of these letters leaves little doubt that they were written by an adept. One Mahatma spoke of his personal experiences, and of the causal evolution of the soul. He referred to the brain, so that all his acts are the result of his consciousness. In the absolute, he exists above and outside the soul. In the absolute, he does not pretend to knowledge of its attributes. In the absolute, he is in the highest degree, the decoy of one's life, one's reward, one's punishment.

Theosophy has numbered among its members many persons of high ability, whose statements and exegesis of their faith has placed it upon a much higher level and more definite foundation.

The system was constructed in a manner akin to genius, and evolved on highly intricate lines. It has, to a great extent, pieced together after the death of the original founder of the society, on which event a schism occurred in the Brotherhood. Theosophy is a religious philosophy that holds the germs of all other, and is more or less independent organizations founded in England.

A brief outline of the tenets of Theosophy may be stated as follows. It postulates a rational belief in its views rather than blind faith, and allows for individual differences of opinion. It professes to be a religious philosophy that holds the germ of all others. It has also its aspect as a science—a science of life and of the soul. The basic teaching is that there are three absolute truths cannot be lost, but yet may remain silent for lack of speech.

(1) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. (2) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. (3) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. (4) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. (5) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. (6) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. (7) The soul of humanity is immortal and its future is the future of the thing, whose growth and splendor has no limit. body, none of the possibilities of the grosser bodies can manifest themselves.

The mental body is built up of matter of the four lower subdivisions of the mental world, and expresses the individual’s concrete thoughts. Its size and shape are determined by those of the causal vehicle.

While on Earth the personality wears the physical, mental, and astral bodies all at once. It is the astral that connects one with the astral plane during sleep or trance. It is easy to see how the doctrine of reincarnation arose from this idea. The ego must travel from existence to existence, physical, astral, mental, until it can transcend the mental world and enter the higher spheres.

The Theosophical path to the goal of Nirvana is derived from Buddhist teaching, but there are also other elements in it—Kabalistic and Greek. The path is the great work whereby the inner nature of the individual is consciously transformed and developed. A radical alternation must be made in the aims and motives of the ordinary mortal. The path is long and difficult, and as has been said extends over many existences. Morality alone is insufficient to the full awakening of the spiritual faculty, without which progress in the path is impossible. Something incomparably higher is necessary.

The physical and spiritual exercises recommended by Theosophy are those formulated in the Hindu philosophical system known as raja yoga. The most strenuous efforts alone can impel the individual along the path, and thus to mount by the practice of vidya, that higher wisdom that awakens the latent faculties and concentrates effort in the direction of union with the absolute.

The way is described as long and difficult, but as the disciple advances he or she becomes more convinced of ultimate success, by the possession of transcendental faculties that greatly assist in overcoming difficulties. But these must not be sought for their own sake, as to gain knowledge of them for evil purposes is tantamount to the practice of black magic. (See also Kabbala)

Theta (Journal)

Scholarly journal of parapsychology published quarterly by the Psychical Research Foundation. Its title derives from the initial letter of the Greek word, Thanatos (death) and its concern is mainly with research on the problem of survival of bodily death. It was edited for many years by William G. Roll. Theta has been published since 1963. The publication can be reached c/o Dr. Andrew Nichols, P.O. Box 142193, Gainesville, FL 32614-2193.

THG See Temple of the Holy Grail

Thian-ti-hwii

The Heaven and Earth League, an ancient esoteric society in China, said to have still been in existence in 1674. The society professed to continue a system of brotherhood derived from ancient customs.

Sources:

Third Eye

The mystical center behind the forehead between the eyes, which is a focus for Oriental mystical meditation. It is known in yoga philosophy as the ajna chakra (center of command) and its activation or opening through meditation is often the preliminary to activation of other chakras. The initial experience of the third eye, the seeming presence of a screen inside the head at the front of the brain, can be had by anyone who simply shuts his eyes and attempts to reach a focus.

The idea of “opening” the third eye is a common one in psychic and metaphysical circles. An interesting variation of the idea is found in the popular book The Third Eye (1956) by Th. Lobsang Rampa (pseudonym of Cyril Hoskins). It states that this chakra may be opened by a physical operation. Rampa’s story was a hoax and the operation complete fiction. No such operation is featured in Hindu or Tibetan mysticism (or any other system of occult thought) and it must be regarded as an imaginative fantasy.

Thomas, Charles Drayton (1867–1953)

British clergyman who was an active member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, for many years. He was a Council member from 1916–53 and one of the first regular sitters with the medium Gladys Osborne Leonard. He reported on her phenomena in the society’s Journal and Proceedings.

He worked with W. Whateley Carington in the quantitative study of trance personalities. Many of his articles and several books indicate an interest in psychical research as a means of supporting his belief in life after death.

His books include: Some Evidence for Human Survival (1922), Life Beyond Death with Evidence (1928), The Mental Phenomena of Spiritualism (1930), An Amazing Experiment, Beyond Life’s Sunset (1931), From Life to Life (1946), In the Dream Beyond Death, and Precognition and Human Survival (1948).

Thomas died July 14, 1953.

Sources:

Thomas, John F(rederick) (1874–1940)

Psychologist and educator who studied parapsychology. He was born on July 22, 1874, in Parker City, Pennsylvania. He attended the University of Michigan (LL.B., 1898; M.A., 1915) and after a break of two decades, he went to Duke University to pursue a doctoral program (Ph.D., 1935). Thomas was a member of the Michigan Education Association (president in 1940), the National Education Association, Boston Society for Psychical Research, and Society for Psychical Research, London.

During much of his career Thomas worked for the Detroit public school system. However, he had been interested in psychical research for many years, but did not become actively involved until the 1920s when he sat with the Boston medium Minnie M. Soule (also known as “Mrs. Chenoweth”); she produced what he perceived as strong evidence of survival. He went on to sit with Gladys Osborne Leonard and Eileen J. Garrett. Sittings in 1932 formed the subject of his Ph.D. thesis at Duke, An Evaluative Study of the Mental Content of Certain Trance Phenomena. This was also the first doctoral thesis dealing with parapsychology and the first of several books and articles he contributed to the field. Thomas died November 21, 1940.

Sources:
Sources:

Thomas Aquinas (ca. 1225–1274)

One of the most profound scholars and subtlest logicians of his day. Aquinas was born around 1225 in Roccasecca, Italy. He was educated under the Benedictine Monks of Monte Cassino and in the University of Naples, and entered the Society of Preaching Friars, or Dominicans, at 17 years of age. His mother, indignant that he should take the vow of poverty and thus remove himself from the world for life, employed every means in her power to induce him to change his mind. In order to remove Aquinas from her influence, the friars relocated him from Naples to Terracina, from Terracina to Anagnia, and from Anagnia to Rome.

His mother followed him in all these changes of residence but was not permitted to see him. At length she induced his two elder brothers to seize him by force. They kidnapped him while he was traveling to Paris, where he had been sent to complete his course of instruction, and they carried him off to the castle of Aquino, where he had been born. Here Aquinas was confined for seven years, but he found a way to correspond with the superiors of his order, and he finally escaped from a window in the castle.

Aquinas exceeded most men in the severity and strictness of his metaphysical dispositions and thus acquired the name of “Seraphic Doctor.” He was canonized by Pope John XXII in 1323.

Because of his association with Albertus Magnus, he shared many legends of magical powers. For example, it was said that because his study was placed in a great thoroughfare where the grooms exercised their horses, Aquinas found it necessary to apply a magical remedy to this nuisance. He made by the laws of magic a small brass horse, which he buried two or three feet underground in the middle of this highway so that horses would no longer pass along the road. The grooms were compelled to choose another place for their daily exercises.

Another legend claimed that Aquinas was offended by the perpetual chattering of an artificial man made of brass, constructed by his tutor Albertus Magnus, and he dashed the automaton to pieces. Aquinas was also supposed to have written some tracts on alchemy.

However, his credulity regarding demonology and witchcraft had an unfortunate influence on witchhunters, and he was later cited as an authority by such writers as Heinrich Kramer and Jakob Sprenger, authors of the infamous Malleus Maleficarum. Although Aquinas did not accept the concept of a pact with the Devil, he endorsed the belief of diabolical association, and the incubus and succubus. He echoed Albertus Magnus in claiming that when Satan tempted Christ on the mountain-top, he carried Christ on his shoulders, and this belief was used by later witchhunters to endorse the theory of transvection, or magical transport of witches through the air. Aquinas also believed in the power of the evil eye used by old women who had an association with the Devil. His argument that heretics should be burned was later used to justify the burning of witches.

It should be stressed that Aquinas’s credulity was characteristic of his time, and his theses concerning the Devil reflected the conclusions of theological dogmas of his day. Nevertheless, his discussions were used by later and lesser individuals to justify the witchcraft delusion.

The major works of Aquinas include the Summa Theologica and the Summa contra Gentiles. His great intellectual and theological achievements have somewhat overshadowed the mystical side of his character, and it should be remembered that he ended his life as a contemplative mystic.

He died March 7, 1274, in Fossanova, Italy.

Sources:

Thomas the Rhymer (fl. 1220)

Scottish soothsayer (prophet) of the thirteenth century. It is impossible to name the exact birth date of Thomas the Rhymer, who is well known for figuring in a ballad included in Sir Walter Scott’s Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

Thomas is commonly supposed to have lived at the beginning of the thirteenth century, that period being assigned because the name “Thomas Rimor de Ercildoun” is appended as witness to a deed, whereby one “Petrus de Haga de Bemersyde” agreed to pay half a stone of wax annually to the Abbot of Melrose, and this “Petrus” has been identified with a person of that name known to have been living about 1220.

Ercildoune or Ercildun is simply the old way of spelling Earlston, a village in the extreme west of Berwickshire, near the line demarking that county from Roxburgh.

It would seem that Thomas held estates in this region, for he is mentioned as a land owner by several early writers, most of whom add that he did not hold his lands from the Crown, but from the Earls of Dunbar. Be that as it may, Thomas probably spent the greater part of his life in and around Earlston, and a ruined tower there, singularly rich in ivy, is still pointed out as having been his home, and bears his name, while in a wall of the village church there is a lichened stone with the inscription:

“Auld Rhymer’s Race Lies in this Place.”

According to local tradition, this stone was removed to its present resting place from one in a much older church, long since demolished.

Nor are these things the only relics of the soothsayer, a lovely valley some miles to the west of Earlston being still known as “Rhymer’s Glen.” It is interesting to recall that the artist J. M. W. Turner painted a watercolor of this place, and no less interesting to remember that Sir Walter Scott, when buying the lands that eventually constituted his estate of Abbotsford, sought eagerly and at last successfully to acquire the glen in question. Naturally he loved it on account of its associations with the shadowy past, and his biographer J. C. Lockhart stated that many of the novelist’s happiest times were spent in this romantic place. Lockhart related that the novelist Maria Edgeworth visited it in 1825, and that thenceforth Scott used always to speak of a certain border in the glen as the “Edgeworth stone,” the writer whom he admired so keenly having rested there. It seems probable, however, that the glen was named “Rhymer’s Glen” by Scott himself.

It is thought that Thomas died in 1297, and it is clear that he had achieved a wide fame as a prophet, many references to his skill being found in writers who lived comparatively soon after him. A Harleian manuscript in the British Museum known to have been written before 1320 disclosed the significant phrase, “La Comtesse de Donbar demanda a Thomas de Essendone quant la guere descose prendret fyn,” but the lady in question was not a contemporary of the prophet. In Barbour’s
Bruce, composed early in the fourteenth century, we find the poet saying:

“Sekerly
I hop Thomas Prophecy Off Hersledoun sail veryfyl be.”

The historian Andrew of Wyntoun in the Origine Cronykil of Scotland, also mentions Thomas as a redoubtable prophet, while Walter Bower, the continuator of Fordun’s Scalacronica, recounts how once Rhymer was asked by the Earl of Dunbar what another day would bring forth, wherupon he foretold the death of the king, Alexander III, and the very next morning news of his majesty’s decease was heard.

Blind Harry’s poem Wallace, written midway through the fifteenth century, likewise contains an allusion to Thomas’s prophesying capacities.

Coming to later times, Sir Thomas Cray, constable of Norham, in his Norman-French Scalacronica, compiled during his captivity at Edinburgh Castle in 1555, spoke of the predictions of Thomas, which like those of “Banaster ou de Thomas de Erclidoune . . . furounz ditz en figure.”

A number of predictions attributed to Thomas the Rhymer are still current, for instance that weird verse Sir Walter Scott made the motto of his novel The Bride of Lammermoor and also a saying concerning a family with which, as we have seen, the soothsayer was at one time associated:

“Betide, betide, whate’er betide There’ll aye be Haigs at Bemersyde.”

It will be observed that these lines are in poetic meter, yet there is really no sure proof that the soothsayer was a poet. It is usually supposed that he acquired the nickname “Rhymer” because he was a popular minstrel in his day, but the fact remains that “Rymour” had long been a comparatively common surname in Berwickshire, and, while it may have originated with Thomas, the assumption has but slight foundation.

Again, the prophet of Earlston has been credited with a poem on the story of Sir Fristram belonging to the Arthurian cycle of romance, and the Advocate’s Library contains a manuscript copy of this probably written as early as 1300. However, while Sir Walter Scott and other authorities believed in this ascription, it is quite likely that the poem is only a paraphrase from some French troubadour.

For generations, however, the Scottish peasantry continued to be influenced by the sayings attributed to “True Thomas,” as they named him, as evidenced by the continuing publication of books and chapbook pamphlets containing his prophecies until well into the nineteenth century. For a detailed study, see The Romance and Prophecies of Thomas Erceldoune, edited by J. A. H. Murray for the English Text Society, London, 1875.

A beautiful legend credits Thomas with obtaining his prophetic powers after visiting fairyland. The ballad of “Thomas Rymer and the Queen of Elland” in its various forms is classified as no. 37 of the collection of English and Scottish Popular Ballads, edited by Francis James Child, published in five vols., 1882–98.

Thompson, Rosina (1868— ?)

British trance medium, whose abilities developed at Frederick Myers’s Delphic Circle at Hertford Lodge, Battersea, London. In her early sittings in 1897 and 1898, the records of which in Light refer to her as Mrs. T., she exhibited startling physical phenomena, raps, movements of objects, luminous phenomena, elongation of the human body, direct voice, apparitions, scents, and materializations.

Her physical manifestations were discouraged by F. W. H. Myers and she was persuaded to give her services to the Society for Psychical Research as a trance medium from 1898 onward. Her chief control was her deceased daughter, Nelly, who had died in infancy. Another communicator of importance was a Mrs. Cartwright, the teacher of the school where Thompson was educated. Her trances were much lighter than those of Leonora Piper and occasionally they were scarcely distinguishable from the state of normal wakefulness. Many instances of her paranoid perceptions were recorded in the waking state.

Richard Hodgson, after six sittings, formed an unfavorable opinion of her powers; it was the skeptical Frank Podmore who hurried to Thompson’s defense. He considered Hodgson’s conclusion that Thompson was untrustworthy to go beyond the warrant of the facts. Podmore expressed his opinion in plain words: “I should perhaps add that the supernormal source of much of the information given at Mrs. Thompson’s séances seems to me to be almost beyond dispute.”

The reports of Frederik van Eeden contained many curious accounts. The results of Frederik van Eeden were very convincing. He came from Holland with an article of clothing that belonged to a young man who first cut his throat and then shot himself. He obtained dramatic communications, and Thompson spoke in Dutch (a language she did not know) with the young man.

Margaret Verrall had 22 sittings with Thompson. She made statistical calculations and found that out of 238 definite statements referring to things past and present, 35 were false, 64 were unidentified, and 141 (approximately 59 percent) were true. Of these 141 true statements, 51 could not have been ascertained from normal sources. Verrall’s general opinion of the controlling personalities was that although their characteristics were not very marked, all bore strong resemblance to the waking Thompson, the voice was hardly to be distinguished from hers, and the words and phrases were such as she herself used in the normal state. She nevertheless, admitted that many personalities bore, for the sitters, the marks of independent individuality.

Myers’s belief in survival was chiefly founded on experiments with Thompson following the death of his great love, Annie Marshall. He and his friends had 217 sittings, about two thirds of which he personally attended. After Myers’s death on January 17, 1901, Thompson, who had previously suspended sittings altogether, gave two sittings to Sir Oliver Lodge. In both of them, communications characteristic of Myers were forthcoming. She also took part in the cross-correspondence sittings.

Sources:

Thompson, William Irwin (1938— )

Author of books analyzing society in the light of contemporary New Age movements and founder of Lindisfarne Association, a commune based on a “new planetary culture.” Thompson was born on July 18, 1938, in Chicago, Illinois. He was educated at Pomona College (B.A., 1962) and Cornell University (M.A., 1964, Ph.D., 1966). He became an assistant professor of humanities at Massachusetts Institute of Technology for several years (1965–68). Afterward, he joined the faculty at York University, Toronto, in 1968 and remained there for many years.

In the 1970s, Thompson began to explore the possibility of a new culture emerging in the light of occult, spiritual, and new consciousness movements. In Passages About Earth (1974), he analyzed the alternative cultures of Paolo Soleri, H. G. Wells, Werner Heisenberg, Aurelio Pecci and his Club of Rome, the Integral Yoga of Sri Aurobindo, the Institute for World Order and W. Warren Wagar, C. F. von Weizäcker of the Max Planck Institute, and the Kundalini yogi Pandit Gopi Krishna. The book contains observation into the nature and impact of various New Age movements and lifestyles of the established technological nation-states.

Thompson was most favorably impressed by the alternative culture of Findhorn Foundation, the pioneering Scottish New Age community established by Peter and Eileen Caddy in 1962 as "a training center for the embodiment of universal consciousness in those who recognize their path is one of world service." He also visited the ruins of Lindisfarne, a monastery on Holy Island off the coast of Northumberland, England; it was founded by St. Aidan in 635 C.E. Later, Thompson founded the Lindisfarne Association in Southampton, New York, as an educational community for cultural transformation in a new synthesis.

In Thompson's view, the original Lindisfarne typified a historic clash between esoteric Christianity and ecclesiastical Christianity—between religious experience and religious authority. As with Eileen Caddy's experiments at Findhorn, Thompson's Lindisfarne has great significance as an attempt to extend intellectual theories by practical community work. In such a setting, occultism and higher consciousness movements are integrated into a truly New Age "planetary culture" rather than a counterculture.

Sources:

Thorogood, Brackett K(irkwood)
(1881–1965)
Engineer and educator who wrote on parapsychological subjects. He was born on December 21, 1881, at Cambridge, Massachusetts and educated at the Chauncy Hall School, the Lowell Institute, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In 1922 he became a technical and technological consultant and then beginning in 1958 to 1957 was the director of the Franklin Technical Institute.

Thorogood had more than a passing interest in mediumship and became involved in the latter stages of the controversy over the mediumship of Mina Crandon (i.e., "Margery"). He also served as a consultant to American Society for Psychical Research during the turbulent years of the 1930s. He died November 1965.

Sources:

Thoughtforms
The existence of thoughtforms has been claimed by occultists, especially theosophists. The idea of thought-forms has supplied a realm for some interesting and curious speculations by psychical researchers as they investigated the substance of their designated study. The suggestion of psychical researcher Sir William F. Barrett that the operator may so stimulate the mind of the subject that he is able to see the thought-shape in the former's mind is similar to what theosophist A. P. Sinnett claimed in his book The Occult World (1882): "An adept is able to project into and materialize in the visible world the forms that his imagination has constructed out of inert cosmic matter in the visible world. He does not create anything new, but only utilizes and manipulates materials which Nature has in store around him.

And there are other similarities. James H. Hyslop, in his book Psychical Research and The Resurrection (1908), quoted a curious communication from a private source. The communicator, while commenting on the peculiarities of his spiritual life, stated that he "sometimes saw, for instance, a man reading a book, but when he approached to talk with him he found it was only a thought." Hyslop, however, did not agree with the thought-form theory and suggested that the instance was a case of veridical, or subjective hallucination, in the spiritual life.

James T. Fields wrote in a lecture on "Fiction and its Eminent Authors," said: "Dickens was at one time so taken possession of by the characters of whom he was writing that they followed him everywhere and would never let him be alone for a moment. He told me that when he was writing The Old Curiosity Shop the creatures of his imagination haunted him so that they would neither let him sleep or eat in peace."

Vincent Turvey wrote in his book The Beginnings of Seership (1911; 1969) about a discussion that took place between him and a man from Christian Evidence Society on psychic matters. The man insisted that Turvey's psychic gifts were from the devil and prayed that the devils should leave him.

"On lying down in the afternoon in order to rest and meditate, I suddenly saw three or four 'devils' in the room—typical orthodox fiends. Men with goats' legs, cloven hoofs, little horns just over their ears, curly hair, ... tails and clawlike hands. In colour they were entirely brown, like ordinary brown paper. I candidly profess that I was 'a bit shaken' ... I pulled myself together and rose into the 'higher state of consciousness.' In this state I was able to see not only their fronts, but also their backs. To my utter astonishment they were all hollow at the back, like embossed leather, or the ordinary papier maché mask. Then my guardians caused me to make a sign, say a word, or think a sentence—what I do not know; but directly it was done or said, these forms disintegrated or dissolved and vanished.

Thoughtforms are often perceived in the hypnotic state. Dr. Lindsay Johnson, the celebrated British ophthalmic surgeon, described in the May 21, 1921, issue of the Spiritualist journal Light an experiment of Professor Koenig of Berlin, in a Paris hospital at which he assisted. A peasant woman was hypnotized. It was suggested that she saw an imaginary picture on a plain sheet of paper. Twenty identical sheets of paper were produced and a picture was suggested for each; a record was kept of the picture and tiny identification marks added on the back of each sheet. Johnson added five more sheets, shuffled them, and handed them back one after the other to the subject. She described the suggested picture in every case, but saw nothing on Johnson's sheets.

A Russian investigator, Dr. Naum Kotik, made similar experiments in Wiesbaden with a fourteen-year-old girl Sophie and drew the following inference: "Thoughtforms are frequently called psycho-physical. Originating in the brain, it passes to the extremities of the body. It is transmitted through air with some difficulty, more easily through a metallic conductor and can be fixed on paper." Koenig's and Kotik's experiments echo the experience of the engineer and psychical researcher René Warcollier. One evening, partially waking, he saw a large quadrangular corded package in a yellow packing paper on a chair. He inquired about the package. There was no package on the chair but it had been there some time before as described. If the image of a package can impress a chair it is no more improbable that thoughts may similarly impress a sheet of paper.

Hypolite Baraduc informed the Academie de Médecine in May 1896 that he had succeeded in photographing thought. He experimented with many people. The subjects placed their hands on a photographic plate in the dark room and were asked to think intently of the object they wished to impress upon the plate. Many curious markings were obtained, some of them representing the features of persons and the outline of objects.

Baraduc also contended that thought photography was possible from a distance. He quoted the case of a Dr. Istrati who promised a friend of his that he would appear on a photographic plate at Bucharest on August 4, 1895, while he slept in Cambrai. The distance was 30 kilometers. Before closing his eyes, Istrati wished that his image should impress the plate with which his friend went to bed. The result was achieved. The plate showed a luminous spot, in the midst of which the profile of a man could be traced.

Commandant Darget, of Tours, France, obtained several good thought photographs in 1896. His procedure was to gaze attentively at a simple object for a few moments in order to engrave it fully on the mind, then go into the dark room and (1) place a photographic plate with the glass side against the forehead for a quarter of an hour, mentally picturing the object decided upon and strongly desiring to make an impression on the plate, (2) Place the hand on a plate (or hold the plate in the hand) for a quarter of an hour, operating as before, (3) Put the plate into a developing bath, placing the fingers of one hand on the edge of the plate for ten minutes. There should always be the desire to imprint on the plate the picture of the object which is very strongly thought of.

An interesting case was quoted by James Coates from the November 1895 issue of the Amateur Photographer. W. Inglis Rogers, the experimenter, gazed for a minute at a postage stamp and then went into the dark room and gazed at a sensitive plate for twenty minutes. When the plate was developed two images of postage stamps were plainly visible.

Tomochichi Fukurai, a professor of Kohyasan University, carried out important experiments with Ikuko Nagao. If she looked as if the cloud had not been duplicated. The image of the moon was once obtained previous to the experiment. On the night of September 7, 1911, the medium was much impressed by the superb sight of the starry heavens, and particularly by the full moon, which she looked at for some time with admiration. On the following day, instead of the little hand, which was desired, a full moon appeared on the plate against a background of white cloud. The cinematograph representations of the eclipse of the moon on April 17, 1912, showed the image of the moon slightly flattened in the direction of the axis of rotation. This characteristic appeared in the radiograph of September 7. The impression was double and it looked as if the cloud had not been duplicated.

Some have suggested that the psychic extras obtained by spirit photographers may be the thoughts of the sitters (though most now agree that they were more likely the product of fraud). Hereward Carrington offered some curious evidence out of his experiences with Mrs. A. E. Deane as did Frederick Bligh Bond, who experimented with the same medium. Bond prepared a diagram of four by three squares and made, in one of the twelve squares, a cross of two diagonal lines and drew a small circle over the crossed lines. After he deposited this diagram with the principal of the British College of Psychic Science, he went to meet Deane. She drew upon a blackboard a similar diagram and asked for a perfect circle over the center of the two intersecting lines.

The camera was loaded by Carrington and he did the development himself; Deane simply placing her hand during the exposures on the camera top. The first plate showed the diagram alone; the second had a sort of localized fog over the square in question; the third, possessed a circular spot of intense blackness, exactly over the intersection.

In a second trial, Bond hung a small picture frame upon the wall of the studio and asked that an image, the exact character of which he did not specify, might be recorded on the space within the frame. The idea was to preclude any successful pre-exposure of a plate for the purpose of fraud. He obtained a cloud of small size that on the first two plates was not quite rightly centered, but was well within the center of the third plate.

A Mr. Warrick, a manufacturing chemist, repeated the experiments but used no camera, only sheets of paper that he had specially sensitized. By impressing upon Deane the exact nature of the image he wanted, and placing the paper beneath Deane's hands or feet, he obtained circles, squares, triangles, or more complex images. Bond believed that his part in the success was dependent upon a power of mental visualization that he had special opportunities to cultivate.

Sources:

Thoughtography

Term devised by a Japanese experimenter Tomobichi Fukurai for thought photography, the impressing of mental images on photographic plates. His researches were embodied in his book Clairvoyance and Thoughtography (1911, English translation 1930). Modern Japanese experimenters now use the term “Nenography.”

Sources:

Thought-Reading

Thought-transference from the reverse aspect. The agent attempts to picture the contents of the subject’s mind, i.e., to “read it,” instead of impressing it with his own transmitted ideas.

In more modern society, where outbursts of ecstatic frenzy are and were ascribed to “demonic” possession, ecstasies are often credited with the power to read thoughts. Various psychic functions were supposed to possess the same faculty. In the religious revivals of the sixteenth century among the so-called Tremblers of the Cevennes, for example, thought-reading was one of the minor but very practical miracles that occurred. It was used for the detection of spies who frequently attended the meetings of the proscribed devotees.

In the fifteenth century, Paracelsus had observed the phenomenon of thought-reading, and it was also reported by early experimenters in animal magnetism. More recently, Robert Baxter, a member of the Irvingite congregation, seized with Pentecostal fervor in 1831 and recorded that when he was possessed by tongues he could often read the unspoken thoughts of his hearers. Sydney and Lesley Piddington and Julius and Mrs. Zancig were two couples who also became well-known for their thought-reading abilities.

Thought-reading may occur through rapport with or the positive perception of the ideas existing in another mind. Musical strings furnish an analogy to the first mode. A note struck on one string will be taken up and echoed by another. In cases of mass panic, the sense of fear is communicated to surrounding people who may be ignorant of the original cause of the terror. It is often difficult, however, to differentiate between psychic contagion and the transmission of emotions or ideas by subconsciously perceived signs such as facial expressions and postures.

The advent of Spiritualism gave thought-reading a new driving force. It was now the spirits who read the thoughts of the sitters and replied to them with raps and table-turning messages. Sergeant E. W. Cox, an early investigator of the phenomena of Spiritualism, speculated:

“If the Darwinian theory of life is right, there must have been a time when man had no articulate speech. For intercommunication with his kind he must have possessed some other faculty than language. Most probably that was what the intercourse of animals is, and the abnormal cases of thought reading that occur among ourselves may be possibly the survival of a faculty which has now almost vanished, because it has gradually fallen into disuse.”

The term “thought-reading” is also popularly used for demonstrations by stage performers who actually use subtle codes for apparent telepathic communication, a practice described in a number of books such as Stuart Cumberland's 1888 text, Thought-Reader's Thoughts. It is possible that some tricks of stage performers may be similar to methods employed subconsciously by ordinary individuals who appear to manifest thought-reading or telepathic faculty. Some performers can do muscle reading, perceiving the subtle muscular movements when holding the hand of a subject or even pick up subconscious whispering. (See Rev. Edward Irving)

Sources:

Thought-Transference

This claimed faculty was baptized telepathy in 1882 by the Society for Psychical Research, London. In the fifteenth century, for example, Paracelsus observed, “By the magic power of the will, a person on this side of the ocean may make a person on the other side hear what is said on this side... the ethereal body of a man may know what another man thinks at a distance of 100 miles or more.”

The Swedish seer Emanuel Swedenborg (1688–1772) clearly stated that spiritual or sympathetic states of consciousness conquer time and space: The state of rapport discovered by the mesmerists of the nineteenth century demonstrated transference of thoughts and emotions. They sought the mechanism in a “magnetic fluid.” Somnambulic (hypnotic trance) induced from a distance seemed to indicate direct action between mind and mind. The possibility that this condition might have been brought about by conscious or subconscious suggestion was not immediately apparent.

Many experiments in thought transference were recorded in Germany in the beginning of the nineteenth century. A valuable series was published by Dr. Van Ghert, Secretary of the Royal Mineralogical Society at Jena in the Archive für den tierischen Magnetismus and by H. M. Weserman, the Government Assessor and Chief Inspector of Roads in Düsseldorf with his Der Magnetismus und die allgemeine Weltsprahe (1822)

William F. Barrett read a paper on the subject before the British Association in 1876. Psychical researchers Barrett, Edmund Gurney, and F. W. H. Myers concluded in 1881 in their first report on thought-transference: “The possibility must not be overlooked that further advances along the lines indicated may, and we believe, will, necessitate a modification of that general view of the relation of mind to matter to which modern science has long been gravitating.”

It must be admitted, however, that these experiments were severely criticized for not excluding fruschr. In an 1883–84, extensive series of experiments in Liverpool, England, conducted by Malcolm Guthrie and James Birchall with a Miss Ralph and a Miss Edwards, concluded that impressions of objects and sensations of taste and pain were successfully transmitted. Sir Oliver Lodge participated in some of these experiments and initiated some original ones at a later period.

The experiments of Eleanor Sidgwick and her more famous husband, Henry Sidgwick, in 1889–90 were classic. In thousands of experiments, a high percentage of success was registered in transferring simple images. The increase of distance, however, apparently had a marked effect on the results. According to Frank Podmore, only Dr. Gilbert’s and Professor Janet’s experiments with “Leonie” at Havre in 1885 and 1886 could compare in competence, care, and precision to the results with these. In the latter case, the effect aimed at was the induction of hypnotic sleep.

Clarissa Miles and Hermione Ramsden experimented through an intervening distance of 20–300 miles in transferring complex images and obtaining cross-correspondence of thought-transference. The results were carefully noted down; in many cases, an agreement was found between the impressions of the two parties (see the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research vol. 12 and 13, and the Proceedings vol. 25).

The psychical researcher Cesare Lombroso found 12 neurotics who registered success in thought-transference experiments. In some cases, transmission was facilitated by alcoholic drinks or coffee stimulating the nerve centers. He assigned great importance to the “hysterical” state and expressed the opinion that the disequilibrium of sensibility in hysterical persons was an essential condition for the production of the phenomena. This is because these individuals imply a greater accumulation of nervous energy in certain points of the cortex of the brain, and a diminution in others. He did not, however, exclude the possible influence of other causes and held, in alluding to transmission of thought in the dying, that the greater accumulation of energy in the cortex during the period of future death may be due to ptomaines that become lodged in it.

In reviewing this theory, Dr. Giuseppe Vanzeno speculated (Annals of Psychic Science, January 1906) that the causes of the accumulation of greater energy in the centers of intelligence must be manifold and diverse and that disequilibrium of sensibility does not constitute more than one among these many causes. He concluded that: (1) Mediumship favored the development of the phenomenon of transmission of thought, (2) In mediumistic séances, the thought formulated by the agent may be carried out even by material actions absolutely independent both of the medium and of the experimenters, (3) Under special circumstances, thought may be transmitted to the medium, and to a spectator, in a séance—even at a considerable distance—from a person outside the séance (telepathy), (4) The unconscious transmission of thought was possible.

Lodge’s experiments of the Society Psychical Research (1918), Margaret Verrall reviewed 504 previous experiments in thought-transference. The Proceedings (1924) also contained Eleanor Sidgwick’s report on the experiments of Gilbert Murray, which she considered “perhaps the most important ever brought to the notice of the society both on account of their frequently brilliant success and on account of the eminence of the experimenter.” The percipient of these experiments was Murray himself.

On February 16, 1927, V. J. Woolley, research officer of the Society for Psychical Research, arranged interesting experiments through radio. He and the agents were in the society’s office, with no means of communication with anyone outside it. Sir Oliver Lodge sat in the broadcasting office at the microphone and directed the radio listeners to record any impressions they were able to form of the objects willed. They were shown three minutes each with an interval of two minutes. The only information given to the listeners was that the first and fourth objects were playing cards of unusual design; second was a Japanese print of a skull with a bird on top; the third was a bunch of three sprays of white lilac; the fifth was of Woolley himself wearing a bowler hat and a grotesque mask. The agents remained in the society’s premises through the night without access to a telephone.

The morning mail brought in 24,659 answers. According to Woolley’s summary in Proceedings, vol. 38 (part 105), the card test gave no evidence of telepathic transmission but the answers disclosed the peculiarity of a strong tendency to choose an ace, especially the ace of spades and that there was a marked preference for odd-numbered cards as against even-numbered ones. Of the third object, five listeners gave a skull as the description of the picture, one adding the interesting detail that it represented a skull in a garden, and a sixth noted a human head. Of these six records, no less than three gave flowers as the third object. Of the last object of the test, five answers gave the impression of Mr. Woolley, 146 of someone present, 236 of someone dressed up or masquerading, 73 of masks or faces, 202 of hats, and 499 of feeling of amusement.

Woolley, however, believed that these numbers in themselves were of little importance as there was no definite chance of expectation with which to compare them. The number of double successes was very small. “There does seem to be an indication of a supernormal faculty,” stated Woolley, “on the part of a few of those who took part, though their successes are swamped by the very large mass of failures on the part of others.”

The first attempt to link thought-transference with radio was staged in Chicago some years previous to the Society for Psychical Research experiment by Gardner Murphy while at Harvard. At a later date he conducted a second similar experiment with the assistance of J. Malcolm Bird in Newark. Murphy did not publish a complete record though the Necokit tests were reported in the Scientific American (June 1924).

Interesting results in thought-transference have been obtained in cross-correspondence experiments. The principle is that two people at a stated time sit down at the same table and sit down and post it to find out whether their thoughts correspond.

Charles Richet outlined the steps for successful experiments in transferring drawings or cards: (1) The agent must be absolutely motionless and have his back turned to the percipient, (2) The choice of the number, the card, or the drawing must be made by pure chance. (3) No result, whether success or failure, should be told to the percipient before the end of the sitting. (4) Not more than twenty trials should be made on any one day. (5) All results, whatever they may be, should be stated in full. (6) The percipient must be unable to see anything, directly or indirectly; it is best that his eyes should be bandaged and his back turned.

It had been found that the success of thought-transmission depended upon the moods and health of the experimenters. Lodge observed that the transference of drawings was much more distinct when tactual contact was maintained between the agent and the percipient. He discovered as early as 1883 that when two agents are acting, each contributes to the effect; the result is due to both combined. He put down between two agents a double opaque sheet of thick paper with a square drawn on one side and a St. Andrew's cross on the other. Each agent looked on one side without any notion what was on the other. One percipient declared that "the thing won't keep still ... I seem to see things moving about. ... First I see a thing up there and then one down there." Finally the percipient drew a square and drew a cross inside from corner to corner saying afterward "I don't know what made me put it inside."

He also attempted to find out what is really transmitted—the idea, or name of the object or the visual impressions. He observed the transmission of irregular drawings was very difficult and that in some cases the idea or name, and not the visual impression at all, was the thing transferred.

Engineer and psychological researcher Rene Warcollier made an interesting table of the comparative facility in transmission. He found the percentage of color transmission 70 percent; of attitudes, 55 percent; drawings, 45 percent; objects, 38 percent; ideas 37 percent; mental images, 10 percent; words and figures 10 percent. Russian experimenter Dr. N. Kotik found that the percentage of successes increased when the agent and percipient were linked by a wire.

Objections to the reality of thought-transference is primarily two-fold: chance and natural parallelism of kindred minds. Stage demonstrations of thought-transference are known to be explained by a secret code. Sometimes, however, more subtle sensitivity may be present. The stage performer Mrs. Zancig, for instance, was found by James Hewat McKenzie in experiments at the British College of Psychic Science to possess a marked gift of clairvoyance to the degree of reading passages in closed books.

Sources:

Thouless, Robert Henry (1894–1984)

Psychologist, parapsychologist, and president of the Society for Psychical Research, London, from 1942–45. He was born July 15, 1894, in Norwich, England. He studied at Cambridge University, England (B.A. hons., 1914; M.A., 1919; Ph.D., 1922). After serving in World War I, he was a lecturer of psychology at Manchester University in 1921 and moved on to Glasgow University in 1926, and the Department of Education, Cambridge University in 1938.

His initial interest in parapsychology began about 1934 and was stimulated by contact with the experimental work of J. B. Rhine. After that, parapsychology became a prominent theme for half a century of his life. He published nearly ninety articles and book reviews in the Journal and Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research.

Through the years, Thouless conducted many experiments in card-calling, psychokinesis, and other areas of parapsychology. He created many of the current terms used in parapsychology out of the realization that some of the original terms, such as "extrasensory perception," carried with them a suggestion of their operation—in this case "perception." He coined the less-committal term "psi." He and his colleague B. F. Weiser also coined the terms "psi Gamma" and "psi Kappa" to replace ESP and PK.

In distinction to parapsychologists who disparaged the study of spontaneous phenomena, Thouless maintained that it had value in structuring experimental methods:

"The special function of the study of spontaneous cases is to serve as a guide to the problems to be investigated by experimental methods. . . . [The] choice is not between statistics and experiment on the one hand and observation of spontaneous cases on the other. Let us have much more of both. . . . New problems for experimental investigation may be suggested by new observations of spontaneously occurring phenomena."

On the question of survival, he proposed a cautious optimism, and about 1948 devised a cipher test of survival which he believed was his most significant contribution to parapsychology. The test used a standard method of encipherment with a secret key passage. It consisted of two coded sequences: INXPH CJRM JIRPR FBCVY WYWS OEACN SCVHE GVRJQ TEBJM TgxAT TWPHE CNYBC FNXPF LEXRX WQXQ and BTYRR OOFHL KCDXK FWPZ KTADR GFHKA HTYXO ALZUP PYPFV AYMMF SDLR UVUB. The key to the first sequence was a passage of poetry or prose indicated by reference to its title, and the key to the second sequence consisted of two words. The key passage necessary to cipher the test might have been transmitted posthumously as a proof of survival of consciousness. This method obviated the objection that a claimed posthumous communication might be read by clairvoyance if left in a sealed envelope. The Thouless test did not involve any sealed message and only the correct key would solve the enciphered message. In the event of a claimed posthumous message, percipients were asked to contact the Society for Psychical Research so that it might be keyed into the society's computer program to see if it yielded a correct message.

Thouless was an active member of the Society for Psychical Research and served on its council. He was elected president in 1942. In the end he was willing to consider the religious implications of psi and argued that parapsychology pointed to a more interesting world in which God and what has been termed the supernatural play their part. Thouless died at the age of 90 on September 25, 1984.

Sources:
3a Visao

3a Visao (3rd Vision) is one of two newsstand periodicals serving the psychic and esoteric community of Portugal. Launched in 1997, it is designed to cover issues in the areas of mysticism, parapsychology, spiritualism, astrology, unconventional science, and natural medicine. Each issue includes a set of feature articles that cover psychic experiences, esoteric sciences (astrology, numerology, etc.), health, and the personal appropriation of esoteric truth (an inner vision). The esoteric community in Portugal, while having a long history, remains relatively small, though it has been bolstered by the influx of immigrants from Asia and the Middle East during the last decades of the twentieth century. The older theosophical and Spiritualist organizations have been joined by groups promoting new religions, Asian healing techniques, and channeling. As the great majority of the Portuguese public is unfamiliar with the occult world, many of the articles are presented at an introductory level. While a range of literature available in Portuguese is advertised, the magazine does not include a book review column.

3a Visao is a full-color magazine published by 3a Visao Editores and edited by a man who goes by the single name of Palalus. He is assisted by a staff of writers drawn from the Portuguese-speaking communities in Brazil and India. 3a Visao also cosponsors events in Portugal aimed at promoting its general area of interest. 3a Visao may be contacted at its editorial offices at Rua Almirante Cesar Augusto Campos Rodrigues, n.16–13 Esq., 2795 Carnaxide, Portugal.

Sources:
3a Visao, Carnaxide, Portugal, n.d.

3D Nibiruan Council

The 3D Nibiruan Council is one of several channeling organizations that, like the Ashtar Command, claim contact with a set of extraterrestrial beings. Its earthly presence dates from 1992 and a traumatic experience in the life of a trainer and entrepreneur named Jocelyn. While in the hospital for an abortion, she lost consciousness, and a second personality who called herself Jelaila emerged in her place. The new personality described herself as a walk-in. Jelaila assumed the role of mother to Jocelyn’s daughter Daniele.

Jelaila describes her pre-embodied life as that of a 9th-dimensional being. When she walked in, she was unaware of her mission but in May 1995 made contact with Devin, the head of the 9D Nibiruan Council. He began training her and awakening her to her role as a channel and voice of the Nibiruan Council on earth.

The Greater Nibiruan Council is seen as the largest council of the Galactic Federation (the interplanetary authority mentioned and described in flying saucer contactee literature beginning since the 1950s). It serves as the primary governing organization and sponsor of seminars and workshops. The 3D Council was formally organized in 1996 in Kansas City, Missouri, and moved to Los Angeles in 1998. That same year, Jelaila married John Starr. In December 1998, John Starr experienced a walk-in was replaced by an entity personality named Jehowah, a 9D Council member and brother of Divan who had trained Jelaila.

The Nibiruan Council is one of a spectrum of groups that see the human race preparing for ascension to a higher dimension in the near future and who see a key to that ascension being the recordings of the individual’s DNA. It offers training in what is termed the Accelerated DNA Recording Process. This training among its many benefits, releases painful memories of the past. The Council also offers training in the realization and manifestation on compassion.

A more complete description of the larger Nibiruan Council and a presentation of its program are found on its website at http://www.nibiruancouncil.com/.

Sources:

3HO Foundation

Educational branch of the Sikh Dharma, a Sikh religious group founded by Shri Singh Bhai Sahib Harbhajan Singh Khalsa Yogiji, popularly known as Yogi Bhajan in Los Angeles in the late 1960s. “3HO” means “Healthy, Happy, Holy Organization,” and is based on the idea that it is everyone’s birthright to obtain these three characteristics. The foundation provides teacher training courses, lectures, and demonstrations in all types of yoga, with special emphasis on kundalini yoga.

The group is also focused on “the uplift of the dignity and respect of womanhood.” Programs such as the Khalsa Women’s Training Camp and Young Women’s Camp are specialized to unleash the inner potential of women. Publications include a journal Prosperity Paths Address: P.O. Box 2357, Espanola, NM 87532. Website: http://www.3ho.org/.

Sources:

Thule Society

German occult society founded in Munich in 1918 by Adam Glauer (1875–1945) who styled himself Rudolf, Freiherr von Sebottendorf. This was an anti-Semitic society that had links with Adolf Hitler through the German Workers’ Party (later National Socialist German Workers Party). The activities of the Thule Group were as much political as occult, and their sphere of influence included judges, police chiefs, professors, and industrialists with various descriptions.

Dietrich Eckart, a central figure in the Thule Group, also played a prominent part in the committee of the German Thurston, Herbert Henry Charles (S. J.)  (1856–1939)

Roman Catholic priest, historian, and writer on parapsychological subjects. He was born on November 15, 1856, in London. He was educated at Séminaire St. Malo, France; Mount St. Mary’s, Derbsyhire, England; Stonyhurst, Lancashire, England; Manresa House, Roehampton; and the University of London. He became a novice in the Society of Jesus in 1874. During his lengthy career he authored over 700 articles, essays, pamphlets, and translations.

In 1919 he joined the Society for Psychical Research, London, and was active in its deliberation for the rest of his life. He became one of its most widely read members, which compensated for the fact that as a practicing Roman Catholic he could not attend séances, even as an observer. He was particularly interested in poltergeist phenomena and Spiritualism, and also made a study of miraculous and paranormal events associated with holy people and saints in Roman Catholicism. While his opinions in general represented a minority opinion in parapsychological circles, he was a well-respected scholar.

His books include: Bewarung and Other Apparitions (1934), The Church and Spiritualism (1935), Ghosts and Poltergeists (1953), The Memory of Our Dead (1915), Physical Phenomena of Mysticism (1955), Supernatural (1955), and Surprising Mystics (1955). He died November 3, 1939.

Sources:

Thury, Marc (1822–1905)

Swiss psychical researcher, professor of physics and natural history at the University of Geneva, and a pioneer of investigations into telekinesis phenomena. In a small pamphlet Les Tables tournantes (1855) he reviewed Count de Gasparin’s experiments and detailed his own observations with a circle of private friends under test conditions. He was the first exponent of the theory of ectoplasm. He named the substance that he believed to be a link between the soul and body “psychoele,” and the force that manipulated it “ectonic force.” This force, he believed, was subject to the will powers of the medium.

While De Gasparin repudiated Spiritism as absurd and contrary to moral truth, Thury contended that while “the known facts are not as yet sufficient for the demonstration of the spirit theory,” yet “the absurdity of the belief in the intervention of spirits has not been scientifically demonstrated.” He asserted that there may exist in this world wills other than those of man and the animals, wills capable of acting on matter.

Sources:

TIBET

Historical Background
Tibet is a country with ancient religious and mystical traditions that, over the last two centuries, have become the focus of occult legends. The peaceful accumulation of data on Tibet was abruptly altered following the Chinese communist invasion in October 1950, when Tibet lost its independent status. On May 23, 1951, Tibetan leaders were obliged to sign a Sino-Tibetan agreement for “the peaceful liberation of Tibet.”

Tibetans had formerly been a separate people with a distinctive language, culture, and religion, but had been in an uneasy relationship with China since 1720, when the Manchus entered Tibet to help drive out Mongol invaders and used the situation to become overlords. Over the subsequent period, the acknowledgment of Chinese suzerainty was the price of Tibetan autonomy, but for practical purposes Tibet was an independent state.

The 1950 invasion was justified by the Chinese as necessary in order to destroy inequitable feudalism in Tibet and to bring progress, education, and social justice. In practice, this involved suppression of the Buddhist religion, destruction of monasteries and their libraries, and the public humiliation of priests. Tibet was a theocratic society and any reorganization of its governmental system would necessarily involve the destruction of the power held by the Buddhist religious functionaries.

In all fairness, it must be said that these and other reported violations of human rights were largely paralleled by similar excesses in China itself in the early period of the communist revolution and the upheavals of the Cultural Revolution. Since then, however, the age-old Buddhist religion of Tibet has been largely suppressed and related occult practices replaced by practical socialism and exploitation of Tibetan resources and territory.

Religion and Superstition
Buddhism came to Tibet from India in the eighth century C.E. and it pushed aside the earlier polytheistic and magical religion of the Tibetan people. However, the price of the conquest was the integration of many of the old deities, beliefs, and occult practices into the unique form of Buddhism that emerged in the land. Also moving into Tibet from India was a form of Hindu tantra, with its emphasis upon the subtle energies of the body and ritualized sex. Strong superstitions, belief in ghosts, demons, and magic coexisted with deep mystical thought.

The apostle of Buddhism in Tibet was named Padmasambhava and entered the country in the 1740s. As Buddhism developed, it divided into various sects, the degree of acceptance of the local religion being an important differentiating factor. The four main groups are popularly distinguished by the color of the hats their followers wear. The older Red Caps or Ningmapas, for example, follow the Adi-Yoga or path of the Great Perfection, founded by the guru Padmasambhava, while the Yellow Cap sect or Gelugpas follow a Middle Way Buddhism; the Kargyutapas, or Followers of Successive Order (deriving from the great Tibetan saint Milarepa, died 1135, successor of the revered gurus Marpa, Tilopa, and Naropa) follow the way of Mahamudra or Great Symbol. As with the various sects of Hindu religious philosophy, with their many subtle emphases, the general overall philosophy of the four groups is the same. By the fifteenth century a teaching had emerged in Tibet that the heads of all of the many monasteries were bodhisattvas, highly evolved beings who were refraining from entering Nirvana to assist other souls in their spiritual pilgrimage. The monastic rulers, or lamas, thus attained a unique role in Tibetan Buddhism as well as significant political power as temporal rulers.

The present spiritual leader of Tibet, the fourteenth Dalai Lama, who escaped to India in 1959, and the other lamas and their successors, are dedicated to keeping alive the spiritual traditions and the political aspirations to independence of the Tibetan people. Like his predecessors, the Dalai Lama is claimed as a living incarnation of the Divine Spirit, which issues forth from the Dalai Lama over the whole of Tibet. As Tibetan Buddhism has spread to the west and lamas have died in the west, the search for successors has also been conducted in the families of Western converts and several European children have been "identified" as reincarnated lamas.

The title "Dalai Lama" is from a Mongolian term meaning "Wide Ocean," and is not normally used by Tibetans among themselves, who prefer such terms as "Precious Protector" or "Precious Ruler," of Khanden (Presence), implying spiritual association. The first Dalai Lama was Tsong Ka-pa, born in Am-do in 1358. His disciples became the Yellow Hat sect, as distinct from the earlier priesthood of the Red Hat.

In addition to the regular monastic disciplines of complex prayer, meditation rites, and regular religious festivals, lamas traveling through Tibet were expected to act as oracles, fortune-tellers, and healers for the ordinary people. Prayer wheels with the mystic mantra "Om mani padme hum" (Om, The Jewel in the Lotus) and rosaries were in use all over the country, and groups of prayer-flags fluttered around the villages. In the monasteries, tankas (complex symbolic mandala banners) became important for mystical meditation.

It is not difficult to understand why Lamaism should be permeated with demonology in view of the vast and terrifying grandeur of the Tibetan environment, in which the forces of nature appear to have the power of supernatural beings. Belief in magic was once universal. The Dalai Lama came under attack in 1998 when he publicly announced that Dorje Shugden practices should no longer be performed by any sect of Tibetan Buddhism. Shugden has been regarded as a protector spirit of the Geluk sect, to which the Dalai Lama himself belongs. However, after studying ancient texts and consulting the state oracle, the Dalai Lama is convinced that Shugden is a hungry spirit and therefore incorrect to worship and regard as a protector for the Buddhist. Due to the Dalai Lama's opposing view, he is accused by some Buddhists for being a religious censor. Since the Tibetan culture and religion is thought to be near extinction, the Dalai Lama attempted to set a level of commonality between all sects of Buddhism. The great controversy that resulted from this attempted act of unification, may have also been the cause for the deaths of three monks in the Dalai Lama’s inner circle. Dissent within the Tibetan culture may be the result of the larger issues that still exist between Chinese and the Tibetan government-in-exile. The Chinese government seeks to control, and ultimately squash, the Tibetan Buddhism religion. Ultimately the set-up of the religious hierarchy may become the demise of the religion itself. The Dalai Lama exists as the highest, top authority, while the Panchen Lama is the second in command, and the Karmapa is the third in power. Presently the Panchen Lama, a boy of ten years, will be the one to choose the next Dalai Lama. However, with the aging Dalai Lama living in India, the Panchen Lama is still being held under Chinese supervision. This is a direct example of the Chinese wishing to control the Buddhist chain of command, and influence the continuity of the religion. The Chinese government has conducted the search for this present Panchen Lama but the Dalai Lama announced their discovery publicly before ever having met him. The boy has never even been in Dharamsala, India.

The Karmapa, third in command, has been raised to heed the Chinese government as well. However, on December 28, 1999, he made his escape from Tibet to India to be united with the Dalai Lama. The two men met "...as if a father was meeting his dear son after a long separation..." The Dalai Lama reported his spirit as clear and strong saying after proper instruction he will be able to make great contributions. The struggle between Tibet and China continues and therefore the outcome of the survival of Tibetan Buddhism.

David-Neel's Psychic Sports

For centuries, Tibet was a forbidden territory to Westerners, and only a handful of Europeans succeeded in penetrating the country, usually in disguise. From 1912 on, an intrepid Frenchwoman, Alexandra David-Neel, began a series of travels throughout Tibet over fourteen years. She acquired the rank of lama.

An Oriental scholar, David-Neel learned Sanskrit and Tibetan and studied the various forms of Buddhism and Lamaism. She became the first European woman to penetrate the holy city of Lhasa. Although skeptical regarding the supernatural, she gained firsthand experience of Tibetan ghosts and demons and saw the paranormal feats of mystics. In her book With Mystics and Magicians in Tibet (1931), she revealed how Tibetan mystics acquired the ability to live in naked in zero temperatures by generating a protective body heat (tummo), how they learned to float in air and walk on water, and how they brought corpses back to life or created thoughtforms that had independent existence.

She described such feats as "psychic sports," acquired by special mind and body training. Amongst such feats was the lung-gom training of "inner breathing" and meditation, which enabled an individual to travel at high speed for days and nights without stopping, sometimes with the feet hardly touching the ground. David-Neel herself witnessed a lung-gom-pa or swift traveler. She described the special training necessary for feats of levitation and for thought-reading and telepathy ("sending thoughts on the wind").

She successfully experimented in the creation of a tulpa or phantom thoughtforms. After a period in isolation following special concentration techniques, she claimed that she succeeded in creating a phantom monk, who became a guest in her party, seen and accepted by the others. But in the course of time, this phantom monk became lean, mocking, and somewhat malignant, and it was necessary for her to concentrate on special techniques to destroy a phantom, which was beginning to take on independent life.

She explained that Tibetans believed that such psychic phenomena were the result of utilizing natural forces by the powers of the mind. Her experiences seem to have been the result of a long and intimate association with Tibet and its peoples in a period when magic and mystery were more common. Few subsequent travelers have reported such remarkable phenomena, and her books survive as a unique record of a Tibet that has largely been destroyed. However, they helped create the image of Tibet as a place where the most successful mastery of the occult arts had been made. The spread of Buddhist masters to the west has done much to offer a more mundane picture of Tibetan life.
Tibetan medicine, the fundamentals virtually unchanged for 2,000 years, is completely intertwined with Tibetan Buddhism, in that they are based on the most essential Buddhist belief, that of karma. Thus, unhealthy human actions, such as, greed, hatred, and desire can be the cause of disease. Like karma, disease can be caused from present as well as past actions. Disease is also thought to be caused by an imbalance of the three basic humors of the body—air, bile, and phlegm. Diagnosis consists of three techniques, visual observation, pulse reading, and questioning. Simply put, Tibetan medicine is highly holistic in the areas of diagnosis and treatment. Treatments are usually always of the non-invasive variety. Lifestyle changes are recommended, medicines are made of herbs, and "surgery" consists of acupuncture, cauterization, hot and cold compresses, hot springs and vapor treatments.

A lot can be learned from Tibetan medicine by Western countries, as it and its practitioners listen and are aware of the individual body, as an extension of religion. The body then exists as only part of the whole scheme of the universe. It is still too early to predict whether the upheavals of the last half of the twentieth century will involve a permanent loss of spiritual and psychic identity for the Tibetan people. Those many Tibetans who moved into exile have established strong enclaves of traditional Tibetan culture and many people have given of their time, energy, and financial resources to see that the manuscripts and artifacts taken out of the country are preserved.

Sources:

“The Tibetan”

The Master, known in theosophical circles as Dhwal Khul (under various spellings) who first spoke to Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, and in the early twentieth century spoke through Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949). Bailey, formerly a member of the Theosophical Society, withdrew in the 1920s and established the Arcane School in New York.

Tibetan Foundation

The Tibetan Foundation began in June of 1982 when Janet McClure established contact with the Ascended Master Djwal Khul. He asked her to assist him in his work of helping people in their own spiritual progress and bringing about the coming New Age. Previously she had studied with the Brotherhood of the White Light, from whom she received a doctorate degree, and was happy to join in the work. Djwal Khul is the same master who was originally identified by Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831–1891) as one of the spiritual hierarchies and later was credited with channeling a number of volumes through Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949). Bailey generally referred to Djwal Khul as The Tibetan.

While McClure was generally thought of as channeling The Tibetan, she spoke of his overshadowing her. Overshadowing is a special connection by which they became permanently linked. The Tibetan was thought to be anchored in McClure’s head. He could speak through her without the necessity of her entering a trance state.

The foundation was established in Youngstown, Arizona, but soon developed affiliate centers in Colorado and California. Once launched on her new endeavor, McClure channelled a considerable amount of material from The Tibetan that was published in a number of booklets. She also began to channel from other beings such as Vywamus and Lenduce. She was among the first of the channels to receive material from both the spiritual hierarchy and the space hierarchy led by Ashtar. Receiving from both hierarchies would become common in the 1990s. The channels associated with the foundation would become part of the post-New Age Movement that was focused in the Sedona Journal of Emergence. McClure channelled only eight years before passing away in 1990. However, by that time other channels had become associated with the Tibetan Foundation and had begun to channel the various masters previously channelled by McClure, especially The Tibetan and Vywamus. Light Technology Publishing, the parent company that produces the Sedona Journal of Emergence, published many of McClure’s volumes of channelled material and keeps them in print at present.

Sources:

Titi

A Polynesian vampire.

Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie

Major Dutch journal of parapsychology, founded and edited for many years by W. H. C. Tenhaeff (1894–1981) and more recently edited by Dick J. Bierman. It functions as the journal of both the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (the Dutch Society for Psychological Research) and the Parapsychology Institute. Address: Springweg 7, 3511 VH Utrecht, The Netherlands.

Tillyard, Robin John (1881–1937)

British psychical researcher and biologist, vice president of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research in 1926. He was born in Norwich, England, on January 31, 1881. He was educated at Dover College, and Queen's College, Cambridge University (M.A., Sc.D.). Following his graduation in 1903 he migrated to Australia and taught at the Sydney Grammar School for a decade (1904–13) before becoming a Fellow in Zoology at Sydney University (1914–17) and then a lecturer in zoology in 1917. In 1920 he became Chief Entomologist to the Commonwealth of Australia.

He traveled to England and the United States in the 1920s to sit with mediums, especially Mina Crandon (“Margery”). This sitting convinced him of survival of bodily death. He published his convictions in 1928 in Nature. In a “solus” sitting with “Margery” in Boston, he obtained apparent fingerprints of “Walter,” the control. In his enthusiastic letter to Sir Oliver Lodge he stated: “This séance is, for me, the culminating point of all my psychical research; I can now say, if I so desire, mano mimetico, and go on with my own legitimate entomological work.” However, there now seems little doubt that this particular phenomenon was fraudulent.

During his association with psychical researcher Harry Price at the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, Tillyard also investigated the phenomena of Eleonore Zügun and Stella C.

In his book Confessions of a Ghost Hunter (1936; 1974), Harry Price described a visit to Jeanne Laplace, a French clairvoyant, who gave a remarkable series of correct statements about Tillyard through simply holding a letter from him (without seeing the letter itself). The impressions included the prediction, later fulfilled, that he would die in a railway accident.

Sources:

Time Pattern Research Institute
horoscopes ran to ten thousand words, including character analysis and future trends, and the company merchandized hundreds of thousands of horoscopes, using department stores as outlets. The service provided by the institute became obsolete as the slew of astrological computers permeated the market. (See also Astroflash)

Tingley, Katherine (Augusta Westcott)

(1847–1929)

Prominent American Theosophist who founded a Theosophical community at Point Loma, California. Tingley was born on July 6, 1847, at Newport, Massachusetts, and was educated at a public school in Newburyport and under a private instructress. She took an early interest in social work before becoming active in the fields of Spiritualism and later Theosophy. In 1887, she formed the Society of Mercy (concerned with emergency relief work on New York’s East Side). At this time she became known as a Spiritualist medium.

Through her social work she met theosopher William Q. Judge, who made a profound impression on her. With the sponsorship of Judge, one of the co-founders of the Theosophical Society, she quickly became an important figure in the American branch.

After the death of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky in 1891, Judge led the majority of American Theosophists in a secession from the international society then headed by Annie Besant and Henry S. Ollcott. Judge died in March 1896, and his independent Theosophical Society in America stated that he had nominated a successor, referred to in symbolic language as “The Purple Mother.” A month later, E. T. Hargrove, then president of the Theosophical Society in America, confirmed that “The Purple Mother” was Katherine Tingley.

Soon afterward, Tingley began a World Crusade for Theosophy, during which she claimed to have encountered a theological master in Darjeeling. Upon returning to the United States, she founded the School for the Revival of the Lost Mysteries of Antiquity, at Point Loma, California. She also founded the Universal Brotherhood organization, and after taking charge of the Theosophical Society, she merged it with the Universal Brotherhood. Permanent headquarters were established at Point Loma, San Diego, California, in 1900.

During the Spanish-American War, Katherine Tingley organized the War Relief Corps and established an emergency hospital on Long Island for soldiers wounded in Cuba. In 1899 the International Brotherhood League, a department of the Theosophical Society, undertook relief work in Cuba. Later, Tingley visited Cuba and brought a group of children to Point Loma for education. She was first obliged to prove the financial and moral competence of the society to take charge of the children. She was funded by the U.S. government to establish hospitals in Cuba, and in 1925 was awarded the Medal of Honor of the German Red Cross. In 1924 she established a summer school for children at Visingsoe, Sweden, and in the following year, she opened seven new Theosophical Centers in Europe.

Tingley was editor of Theosophical Path, published at Point Loma, as well as other Theosophical magazines in Holland, Germany, and Sweden. She also founded The New Way, a monthly magazine for free distribution to prisoners in penitentiaries and jails.

She died July 11, 1929, in Sweden, after an automobile accident in Germany, and was succeeded at the Point Loma community by Dr. Gottfried de Purucker. The community survived until World War II when a combination of financial difficulties and the strategic position of the community’s land on the Point Loma peninsula led to its sale. The property is now the site of a college.

Sources:

---

Tischner, Rudolf

(1879–1961)

Ophthalmologist of Munich, who entered the ranks of leading German psychical researchers in 1919 with the publication of his Uber Telepathie und Hellssehen, one of the groundworks on the subject (translated into English as Telepathy and Clairvoyance, 1925). It was followed in 1920 by a small book on the clairvoyant Ludwig Aub. Einführung in den Okkultismus und Spiritualismus, and Monismus und Okkultismus. Tischner was also the author of many small monographs and of a large historic work: Geschichte der okkultistischen Forschung, Von der Antike bis zur Gegenwart (1924), which was published as the second volume to August F. Ludwig’s Geschichte der okkultistischen Forschung bis zur Gegenwart . . . Mitte des 19. Jahrhunderts. It is a comprehensive and careful survey of the history of psychical research. The Society for Psychical Research, London, honored this work by making Tischner a corresponding member. He published a study under the title Fenfuhlen und Memorons, (1923) which deals with the experiments of Eugène Rochas on the exteriorization of sensibility.

With his research, lectures, and propaganda work Tischner did a great deal for the advancement of psychic science in Germany prior to the disruptions of the Nazi era.

His later books included: Der Okkultismus als Natur und Geisterwissenschaft (Occultism as a Natural and Philosophical Science, 1926), Ergebnisse Okkulten Forschung (Results of Occult Research, 1950), and Geschichte der Parapsychologie (History of Parapsychology, 1960). Tischner was among the first to use the term “extrasensory perception” before it was adopted by J. B. Rhine. He died April 24, 1961 at Viehöfen, Germany.

Sources:

---

Tissot, James Joseph Jacques

(1836–1902)

Well-known French painter of the life of Christ, chiefly remembered in Spiritualism for his mezzotint “Apparition Medianimique,” which portrayed his impressions of a materi- alization séance in 1885 with the medium William Eglinton. He saw the apparition of his departed fiancée accompanied by “Ernest,” the guide of the medium. The painting was acquired by the London Spiritualist Alliance.

TM

Initialism for Transcendental Meditation, the popular Hindu meditation system taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.
Tocquet, Robert (1898–?)

Professor of chemistry who published books on parapsychology and the occult. He was born on June 5, 1898, in Saint-Oulph (Aube), France. He taught at the École des Travaux Publics and the École d'Anthropologie de Paris. In addition to his many books on chemistry and science, he published Encyclopédie pour la jeune, a five volume encyclopedia for young people.

Tocquet had a strong interest in psychology and was a member of the board of the Institut Métapsychique International. He authored a number of articles and several books on occult topics. His titles include: Les Calculateurs prodiges et leurs secrets (The Magic of Numbers, 1957), La Médecine se tait (When Medicine is Silent, 1954), Phénomènes de mediums (Phenomena of Mediumship), Les Pouvoirs secrets de l'Homme (The Secret Powers of Man, 1965), and Tout l'Occultisme dévoilé (Secrets of the Occult Revealed, 1952).

Today's Astrologer

Monthly bulletin of the American Federation of Astrologers available to members of the federation. The bulletin contains news of classes, lectures, and events connected with the AFA, and substantive articles on various aspects of astrology of a professional nature. The headquarters of the federation may be reached at P.O. Box 22040, Tempe, AZ 85285 or through their web site at http://www.astrologers.com.

Token Object

An object associated with the subject, held by the psychic giving a reading. It might be a slip of paper with a name on it, unseen to the psychic, who gives information relative to that named person while holding the paper. It might alternatively be an object that the psychic holds while giving impressions through psychometry, i.e., apparently being sensitive to impressions from that object.

Toland, John (1670–1722)

John Toland, first chief of the revived Druid movement in England, was born on November 30, 1670, near Londonderry, Ireland. Originally named Junius Janus, he took the name John to avoid being a butt of jokes by his youthful schoolmates. Though raised a Catholic, he converted to Protestantism as a teenager. Some Irish Protestants saw to his education and eventually sent him to Glasgow. He earned his M.A. at Edinburgh in 1690. He completed his education in Leyden, Holland.

By the early 1690s, he had begun to hold liberal opinions that questioned the orthodoxy of his teachers. In 1696 he published his most famous work, Christianity not Mysterious, now considered an early classic of the Deist movement, a movement that not only denied the Christian doctrine of the Trinity, but challenged the idea of God’s continued activity in the world. He soon became the subject of sermons denouncing his thought. After the Irish House of Commons voted to burn the book and sent out orders for his arrest, Toland moved to England. He made his living as an editor and writer on a variety of subjects. Though he would often attempt to distance himself from his work, he was never successful, as he basically continued to believe. However, his beliefs would lead in a different direction.

In 1717, a number of delegates from what have been described as Druidic circles across the British Isles and Brittany met in Covent Gardens (London) at the Apple Tree Tavern. There they organized the Mother Grove of a revived Druidic order, a group continuing the ancient Druidic traditions as an early writer on Druidism whom Toland had met in 1694, from Toland’s term as the Druidic leader there is an organizational continuity of modern Druidism.

Sources:

———. Pantheiston. Putney, 1720.

Tocquet, Stanislawa (Mrs. Everard Feilding) (ca. 1920)

Non-professional Polish medium, the subject of the experiments of Julien Ochorowicz in 1908–9, at Wisla, Poland. Tomczyk was regularly hypnotized by Ochorowicz for therapeutic purposes, when she became controlled by an entity called “Little Stasia.” She could produce movement of objects without contact (telekinesis), stop the movement of a clock in a glass case, and influence a roulette wheel to the extent that the numbers chosen by the medium turned up more often than justified by chance.

Ochorowicz hypothesized that the physical movements were performed by rigid “rays” projecting from the fingers of the medium. The medium’s hands were thoroughly examined and washed before each séance. A small object, such as a ball, cork, matchbox, or scissors, was placed before her on a table. The medium then placed her fingers about six to eight inches from the sides of the object. The object would move and eventually rise in the air, floating between the medium’s fingers on each side.

Sometimes investigators claimed to feel a subtle “thread,” but it was a psychic line of force, not a material thread. Ochorowicz stated: “I have felt this thread on my hand, on my face, on my hair. When the medium separates her hands the thread gets thinner and disappears; it gives the same sensation as a spider’s web. If it is cut with scissors its continuity is immediately restored . . . it is then seen to be much thinner than an ordinary thread.” These observations are similar to those of Léon Fix, who also claims to have witnessed the moving of objects by means of a thread called the od, the claimed “odic force” of Baron Karl von Reichenbach, which sensitive individuals claimed to see in a darkened room issuing from the fingertips. However, Tomczyk’s phenomena took place in good light.

“Little Stasia” was a mischievous entity who played many tricks on the medium. She said herself that she was not the spirit of any dead person. The medium considered her, at first, as her double. This was Ochorowicz’s opinion, too, until he was shaken in this view by having obtained Little Stasia’s photograph, as announced by her, in an empty room with all light excluded, while the medium in a normal condition was with him in an adjoining room.

Theodore Flournoy witnessed a séance in Paris in 1909. It left him “in no doubt as to the reality of simple telekinesis.” However, at a later series of sittings at Geneva to which, besides Flournoy, Professors Clarapède, Cellerier, Batelli, and Tomczyk’s son were invited, the expectations of the sitters were not fulfilled.

In 1910, Tomczyk was investigated at the Physical Laboratory in Warsaw by a group of scientists. She produced remarkable physical phenomena under strict test conditions. Baron Schrenck-Notzing described the experiments in his Physikalische Phänomene des Mediumismus, München, 1920. Charles Richet quoted his own observations in his book Traité de Métapsychique, (1922) (translated as Thirty Years of Psychical Research, 1923).
In 1919, Tomczyk married the distinguished British psychical researcher F. H. Everard Feilding (1867–1936), and seems to have discontinued séances.

Sources:

Tomga

Familiar spirits among the Eskimos.

TOM Religious Foundation

The TOM Religious Foundation is a Spiritualist organization founded in the 1950s by Rev. Ruth Johnson in Velarde, New Mexico. The headquarters were moved to Canon City, Colorado, in 1970, and more recently they moved back to New Mexico. The teachings are based upon Johnson's own study and exploration of her past lives, which are disseminated primarily through correspondence lessons, “Moon Time Studies in Spiritual Culture.” These lessons cover subjects familiar to occult students, including psychic development, dreams, ESP, Atlantis, the Bible, and what is said to be original Christianity. According to Johnson, God is the divine One, Spirit, or Whole, who knows, loves, and cares for us and manifests that love through divine guidance. Students may pursue ordination and receive charters to establish churches. Address: P.O. Box 52, Chinmayo, NM 87522.

Tongues, Speaking in Vocalization that sounds like a language but is devoid of semantic meaning or syntax; also known as glossolalia. Glossolalia is a protolanguage based on the everyday spoken language of the person, but lacking enough sounds (vowels and consonants) to convey from the shock before the English commenced."

The phrases were mostly taken from the Scriptures and repeated again and again. The actual words of the tongues were not recorded. Baxter believed them to be a jargon of jargons. However, the possessed also spoke with extraordinary fluency in languages with which they were but imperfectly acquainted. The utterances were supposedly grandiose both in manner and diction.

In a pamphlet, Drei Tage in Gros Almerode (Three Days in Great Almerode), J. Busching, a theological student at Leipzig, Germany, described ten cases of glossolalia at a religious revival in 1907 at Almerode, a small town in Hesse. The phenomena began with a hissing or peculiar gashing sound. It was said that these sounds were produced when the subject, not wishing to disturb the order of service by interrupting a prayer already commenced, tried to repress the inward impulse acting on the speech organs; but the sounds had to come out, and the momentarily repressed glossolalies only burst forth with increased vigor.

Modern American Pentecostalism began in 1901 with the speaking in tongues that occurred at the Bethel Bible School in Topeka, Kansas. While away during the Christmas season of 1900, the school’s founder set a task for the students: investigate the “baptism of the Holy Spirit” and discover what, according to the Bible, is the sign(s) of its presence. When he returned on New Year’s Eve, he asked what the students had discovered. They replied, “speaking in tongues.” Shortly after reaching a consensus on that point, the group retired to the chapel, where they entered a time of prayer. Then, on New Year’s Day, 1901, Agnes Osman became the first person in modern times to ask for and receive the gift of the Holy Spirit with the accompanying sign of speaking in tongues.

Usually accompanying speaking in tongues is the additional phenomenon of the “interpretation of tongues,” in which a reputed “translation” of the glossolalia is offered. An interpretation of tongues does not always occur even when it is prayed for. When it does occur, the speaker may either envision a written translation or hear it inwardly, or perceive directly the meaning of the foreign words.

Receiving the “baptism of the Holy Spirit” accompanied by speaking in tongues became the distinguishing mark of Pentecostalism. The movement spread from Topeka to Houston, Texas, and then to Los Angeles, California, from where it spread around the world.

Although Pentecostals were denigrated as “Holy Rollers” through much of the twentieth century (see George B. Cutten’s Speaking with Tongues, in the 1960s Pentecostalism began to spread through the mainline Christian churches first in North America and then in Europe. This new charismatic movement, as it was called, brought a new respectability to Pentecostalism and resulted in the acceptance of Pentecostals into the larger Evangelical movement. It also led to new attention to glossolalia by social and behavioral scientists and historians. While supernatural explanations still dominate among Pentecostal believers, a more mundane perspective has emerged from those who have observed glossolalia widely.

A few detractors put forth the idea, a remnant of religious prejudice from earlier in the century, that glossolalia was a sign of psychopathology. This idea was possibly the first laid to rest as it was based on empirical data. In fact, quite the opposite was found to be true, in that Pentecostals seemed to have a higher level of mental health than that of the general population.

Other detractors suggested that glossolalia was simply gibberish; however, linguistic studies, most prominently that of William Samarin, have suggested that it is in fact a very structured speech, easily distinguishable from gibberish or attempts to imitate glossolalia. It is also said to be a protolanguage, highly structured and derived from the everyday language of the speaker.

Its relation to everyday language suggests that it too, like everyday language, is a learned behavior, and experimental data, testing people’s ability to learn glossolalia in a nonreligious setting, provides some substantiation of this hypothesis. Others have also suggested that glossolalia is related to altered states of consciousness. Glossolalia is not generally associated with severe alteration of consciousness as in trance or hypnosis, but it seems to involve lightly altered consciousness such as that which occurs in daydreaming.

Historians have noted the widespread appearance of glossolalia in various religious traditions from ancient Greece to modern Spiritualism, although certainly the great majority of recorded cases are in Christianity. Some Christians have countered the obvious implications of cross-cultural studies by arguing that some tongues speaking is simply a ruse by the devil to imitate the actions of the Holy Spirit.

Sources:

Toolemak

Familiar spirits among the Eskimos.

TOPY See Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth

Totemism

A form of religious and social organization among tribal peoples that associates groups of persons with particular animals or objects. The term derives from the language and practice of the Ojibway tribe of Native Americans, but the Ojibways’ own form of totemism was not typical of the use of the term as adopted by anthropologists. A totemic tribe consists of a number of totem groups, each closely related to a totem, which may be an animal or an inanimate object. That totem is specific for that particular group, thus while every member of the tribe has a characteristic totem, it will differ from those of other totem groups within the same tribes in the same area. Plants are used as totems in some parts of the world, and other totems are sometimes only a token part of an animal (i.e., a buffalo tongue instead of a buffalo).

A totem implies some kinship between the animal or object and the members of the group, sometimes a belief in descent from an animal totem. Masks and images may reinforce this association. Members of a particular totemic group respect the animal or object used as totem, and place a taboo on its being destroyed by members of that group, although their taboo does not apply to other members of the tribe.

Totemism is practiced around the world, among Australian aborigines, some African societies, certain North and South American Indian tribes, and among the peoples of Indonesia and Melanesia. Among Australian aborigines, totemism is related to a belief in the constant reincarnation of the spirits of primary animal forms into human beings.

In North America, the totem pole, used by Native American tribes of the Northwest coast of Canada and the United States, is the most widely recognized example of totemism. These poles or pillars are carved and painted with symbolic animals or spirits to represent ancestry or to tell family legends.

Sources:

Touches, Psychic

Tactile sensations represent an allied phenomenon to the paranormal movement of objects. Spiritualists claim such touches are intentional, just as the movement of objects is characterized by perfect localization; the touch is invariably meant for the one who receives it.

While the objects by which the sitters are touched may be recognized, in psychic contacts the case is different, as there is no apparent material means for their production. If the touches are produced by rods of ectoplasm, they may cause an immense variety of sensations according to the manipulation of this substance. The tactile sensation is often announced in advance, affected by psychic lights or luminous structures, and is visible to others.

The effect of the sensation may be as though coming from a soft object, for example, a rubber ball, an animal’s paw feathers, gloves, fur, powdery puff, cobwebs, flowers, or fingers. The touch itself may be sharp, soft, dry, wet, clammy, or cold. It may be a tap, a caress, a stroke, a slap, a kick, a prick, a punch, a kiss. The invisible operator may pull or rumple your hair, she may rub your legs and search your pockets.

In 1905, in the Annales des Sciences Psychiques, psychical researcher Charles Richet translated a Latin chronicle from 1656 dealing with the phenomena that happened to a young girl named Regina Fischerin of Presburg, Hungary. The chronicle, which is still part of the records of the Venerable Chapter in the Archbishopric of Pest, gave report on the apparitions of Jean Clement of Presbourg, who led an evil life. The chronicle contained the following dramatic passages:

"Therefore, fearing that she might be the victim of an illusion, Regina asked of the spirit, if it were truly a spirit, to touch her with its finger. Immediately it touched her right arm and she felt the contact instantly. There appeared immediately a blister, giving her the same sensation of pain as though it had been a burn; moreover, fully to attest the phenomenon, the blister remained upon the skin a long time, and all the servants of the house saw it. Thereafter, desirous to be sure that this was not the work of an evil spirit, Regina demanded as proof that the visitor was a good spirit to make the sign of the cross. 'Here then,' said the phantom 'what you ask!' At once a flaming cross appeared outside the cloak which enveloped the figure, and with it burned deeply the hand of the young girl, leaving thereon a branded cross which everyone could see. . . ."

"A little later this spirit of Jean Clement recalled with remorse a crime which he had committed during his life, declaring that the money which had been secured from this crime was not all spent [this proved afterwards to be true]; that part of it had been used for his subsistence, another part had been otherwise spent, but that some still remained and that this should be restored from the possessions which he had left.

"Regina demanded yet other proofs. Surely the proof of the cross burned on her hand, and on her mantle was sufficiently strong, but it did not suffice for the young woman, who, in order to be absolutely sure that the strange visitant was truly a good spirit, insisted that it should make the same Sign of the Cross on a piece of money. The spirit obeyed, took a coin, threw it on the ground, and snatching a piece of cloth from the girl's left hand, threw this upon the coin; then, taking Regina's hand violently in his grasp, searing her deeply as before, burned thereon a branded cross which everyone could see. "

"This affair seems extraordinary to us, firstly because a cross and an exact form of the hand have been marked in every detail; secondly, because this brand of burning did not extend beyond limits of the marks, though, upon linen material, fire has a tendency to spread. Finally, the right hand which was thus branded with couch and cloth, was the right hand of Clement, just as though he had been operating by his own dead physical hand. And the proof of this is that, during life, the tip phalange of Clement's forefinger had been amputated by a surgeon for a disease which was then known as 'Worms' and an exact form of the hand have been marked in every detail, though, upon linen material, fire has a tendency to spread."

"A little later this spirit of Jean Clement recalled with remorse a crime which he had committed during his life, declaring that the money which had been secured from this crime was not all spent [this proved afterwards to be true]; that part of it had been used for his subsistence, another part had been otherwise spent, but that some still remained and that this should be restored from the possessions which he had left.

"Regina demanded yet other proofs. Surely the proof of the cross burned on her hand, and on her mantle was sufficiently strong, but it did not suffice for the young woman, who, in order to be absolutely sure that the strange visitant was truly a good spirit, insisted that it should make the same Sign of the Cross on a piece of money. The spirit obeyed, took a coin, threw it on the ground, and snatching a piece of cloth from the girl's left hand, threw this upon the coin; then, taking Regina's hand violently in his grasp, searing her deeply as before, burned thereon a branded cross which everyone could see. "

"This affair seems extraordinary to us, firstly because a cross and an exact form of the hand have been marked in every detail; secondly, because this brand of burning did not extend beyond limits of the marks, though, upon linen material, fire has a tendency to spread. Finally, the right hand which was thus branded with couch and cloth, was the right hand of Clement, just as though he had been operating by his own dead physical hand. And the proof of this is that, during life, the tip phalange of Clement's forefinger had been amputated by a surgeon for a disease which was then known as 'Worms' and the absence of the finger-tip is clearly indicated by a surgeon for a disease which was then known as 'Worms' and the absence of the finger-tip is clearly indicated."

"Instantly, while every eye was fixed upon her, she sank back in her chair in a swoon and there, in the broad glare of the sunlight, appeared on her face, which the moment before was perfectly white and colorless, a large patch of wet, recking blood, one of her cheeks being marked exactly as if struck with a bloody hand. On approaching the swooning figure, a second patch appeared on the other cheek; and as she stretched out from every finger when he became angry at their resistance to his wishes. Still more, when he touched the Bible it smoked, and the marks of his thumb and finger shrivelled up the leather of the binding where he held it, and also the paper where he pointed out the place in the hymn 'From guilt of blood deliver me' was black and singed. The Bible with these marks is preserved in the family, and many creditable persons have seen it and may still see it.

"Howitt added:

"The fiery touch of the spirit which induced the father and son to believe it a bad one, modern spiritualists can testify to belong to many spirits. How then, was it somehow done with burning, even from the finger of a medium? How often have spirits, before shaking hands with you, desired you, at Mr. Home's, to lay your handkerchief over your hand first? How often have you felt the touch of spirit fingers prick as from the sparks of electricity?"

Under the mediumship of the Rev. William Stainton Moses there are two instances of somewhat similar character. According to his note dated April 18, 1874, a psychic light touched his fingers, which resulted in the skin being broken up and the joint swollen. Mrs. Speer stated in her account in Light that a spirit of low order was responsible for the injury.

In the second instance, W. B., a friend of Stainton Moses, figured he had committed suicide. His portrait appeared on a plate on May 16, 1876, when Moses sat for spirit photography. On May 20, Moses woke up in the night with a jump with a horrible feeling that there was someone in the room. An icy hand pressed against her face. The next moment her sister cried out and complained of a violent burn on her cheek. "The gas having been turned up higher, we saw on one side of her face, a very vivid red mark, which rapidly took the form of a hand, with fingers open."

The psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano analyzed this and many similar cases in the journal The Sear (1931) under the title 'Spirit Hands of Flame,' and drew attention to the fact that there was sometimes the room. An icy hand pressed against her face. The next moment her sister cried out and complained of a violent burn on her cheek. "The gas having been turned up higher, we saw on one side of her face, a very vivid red mark, which rapidly took the form of a hand, with fingers open."

The psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano analyzed this and many similar cases in the journal The Sear (1931) under the title 'Spirit Hands of Flame,' and drew attention to the fact that there was sometimes the room. An icy hand pressed against her face. The next moment her sister cried out and complained of a violent burn on her cheek. "The gas having been turned up higher, we saw on one side of her face, a very vivid red mark, which rapidly took the form of a hand, with fingers open."

In a séance with Heinrich Melzer, the Dresden apport medium, as reported in the June 1906 issue of Die Unbersinnliche Welt, a plant was apported. The sitter, at the very same instant that he received the plant, felt the sensation of burning on the thumb. When the light was switched on, the mark of a burn was clearly seen and a blister formed immediately.

Emma Harding Britten in her book Modern American Spirituality (1870), vouched for the following occurrences in the family of a well-known merchant of San Francisco in a séance with the eldest daughter:

"Instantly, while every eye was fixed upon her, she sank back in her chair in a swoon and there, in the broad glare of the sunlight, appeared on her face, which the moment before was perfectly white and colorless, a large patch of wet, recking blood, one of her cheeks being marked exactly as if struck with a bloody hand. On approaching the swooning figure, a second patch appeared on the other cheek; and as she stretched out her hand as if to ward off an invisible foe, another wet and reeking stain instantaneously became manifest on its palm.

"The ladies present procured a washbowl and removed the stains from the young woman's face and hand; but though they replaced her in the chair, restored her to consciousness and never for one moment lost sight of her, nor suffered a single movement to escape them, this terrible phenomena was repeated five times in less than an hour."

The house in which this occurred was haunted, and the scene of frightful disturbances at night. The younger children always insisted that these frightful marks were made "by a Spirit that is unwilling to leave the house"; but though they had her throat cut. Another apparition who helped to make the marks was their mother whom they represented as reproaching her daughter with an infamous lie. The fluid was several times analized, and proved to be human blood. The phenomena lasted for many months. Finally the police interfered and the circles were terminated.

The issue of psychic touches has actually been discussed but it is such an allusive phenomena that little can be concluded from its occurrence. It has been noted that records of such occurrences in modern séances have usually be in conjunction with other fraudulent phenomena such as apports and materiizations; the mundane action of a sitter or accomplice in a darkened room could account for the overwhelming psychic touches. A variety of body sensations, from the ordinary to the spectacular, can also be ascribed to actions completely internal to the person himself. It can even be argued that some cases of burns and bleeding might be ascribed to autosuggestion (or hypnotism).

Tower of London

Ancient British fortress on the east side of the city of London, England, scene of many executions, once used for imprisonment of high-ranking traitors. With its grim history, it is not surprising that various ghosts are associated with it.

The jewelroom at the Tower of London is reported to be haunted and in 1860 there was published in Notes and Queries by Edmund Lenthal Swift, Keeper of the Crown Jewels, an account of a spectral appearance witnessed by himself in the tower. He stated in October 1817, he was having supper with his wife, her sister, and his little boy in the sitting room of the jewel house. Swift stated: "He offered a glass of wine and water to my wife when, on putting it to her lips, she exclaimed, 'Good God! what is that?'

I looked up and saw a cylindrical figure like a glass tube, seeming from underneath the jewel room door. He thrust at it with his bayonet which stuck in the door. He dropped in a fit and was carried senseless to the guardroom. . . . In another day or two the brave and steady soldier died."

On February 12, 1957, a young Welsh Guardsman was on duty, and at 3 A.M. saw a "white shapeless form" forty feet up on the battlements of the Salt Tower. He called for a search party, who found nothing; although another guardsman later admitted to seeing a shapeless white apparition. The time and the date was in conjunction with the execution of Lady Jane Grey, four hundred and three years earlier.

Trance

An altered state of consciousness, either spontaneous or induced, bearing some ansome, or the ordinary sleep state, but differing from it in certain marked particulars. Among tribal peoples, trance states have been common since ancient times, used by the shaman, medicine man, or other religious practitioners for demonstrations of paranormal knowledge. Such shamans were forerunners of the modern Spiritualist mediums.

The term is loosely applied to many varied mental states (e.g., hypnotism, ecstasy, catalepsy, somnambulism), which take the person out of his ordinary waking state and allow him to perceive or react in ways that are difficult or impossible in ordinary consciousness. In trance, there is a partial suspension of the vital functions; generally, there is insensitivity to pain and to any stimuli ap-piled to the sense organs. The main distinguishing feature of trance is that the person retains consciousness and gives evidence of intelligence, either his or her own normal intelligence or, as in cases of possession and impersonation, some foreign intelligence.

In hypnosis, the subject, although indifferent to sensory stimuli, has been known to exhibit a curious sensitivity to such stimuli applied to the hypnotist's body (see Community of Sen-tation). In ecstasy, which is frequently allied with hallucination, the subject remains in rapt contemplation of some transcendent vision, deaf and blind to the outside world. It was formerly considered to indicate that the soul of the ecstatic was viewing some great event distant in time or place or some person or scene from the celestial sphere. Today such a state is believed to be brought about by intense and sustained emotional concentration on some particular mental image, by means of which hallucicination may be induced.

The mediumistic trance is recognized as being similar to hypnosis, for the hypnotic trance, induced many times in the same subject, may become spontaneous. It then strongly resembles the trance of the medium.

Some Spiritualists have objected to the term trance being applied when there is no sign of spirit possession. The enthranc-ced medium (who seems able to produce this state from the spirits of deceased persons) is said to come from the spirits of decased persons, and this assertion is often supported by the medium's exhibiting the voice, appearance, or known opinions of the dead friend or relative.

Trance representations supply a large part of the evidence on which the structure of Spiritualism rests. In cases of fraud, however, the information concerning the deceased was probably obtained by normal means, or, in some cases, obtained telepathically from the minds of the sitters. While there is some strong evidence for a Spiritualist view, there are also many cases when other explanations seem more appropriate.
Subjective Aspects of Trance

Some light can be shed on the nature of trance from the reports of those who have experienced it. The great medium D. D. Home, for example, described his movement into trance before a committee of the London Dialectical Society in 1869: “I feel for two or three minutes in a dreamy state, then I become quite dizzy, and then I lose all consciousness. When I awake I find my feet and limbs cold, and it is difficult to restore the circulation. When told of what has taken place during the trance it is quite unpleasant to me, and I ask those present not to tell me at once when I awake. I myself doubt what they tell me.”

Lord Adare, who studied Home’s mediumship, observed, “The change which takes place in him is very striking; he becomes, as it were, a being of higher type. There is a union of sweetness, tenderness and earnestness in his voice and manner which is very attractive.”

W. Stainton Moses, himself a medium, added his observations:

By degrees Mr. Home’s hands and arms began to twitch and move involuntarily. I should say that he has been partly paralysed, drags one of his legs, moves with difficulty, stoops and can endure very little physical exertion. As he passed into the trance state he drew power from the circle by extending his arms to them and mesmerizing himself. All these acts are involuntuntary. He gradually passed into the trance state, and rose from the table, erect and a different man from what he was. He walked firmly, dashed out his arms and legs with great power and passed round to Mr. Crookes. He mesmerized him, and appeared to draw power from him.”

“I feel a cold shivering,” stated Annie Fairlamb, “a sensation as of water running down my back, noise in my ears, and a feeling as if I were sinking down into the earth; then I lose consciousness.”

Leonore Piper noted: “I feel as if something were passing over my brain, making it numb; a sensation similar to that experienced when I was etherized, only the unpleasant odour of the ether is absent. I feel a little cold, too, not very, just a little, as if a cold breeze passed over me, and people and objects become smaller until they finally disappear; then, I know nothing more until I wake up, when the first thing I am conscious of is bright, a very bright light, and then darkness, such darkness. My hands and arms begin to tingle just as one’s foot tingles after it has been asleep, and I see as if from a great distance, objects and people in the room; but they are very small and very black.”

It is interesting to note that when the Seeress of Prevorst (Frederica Hauffe) awoke from trance, she said that the persons around her looked so thick and heavy that she could not imagine how they could move.

Objective Aspects of Trance

On awakening from trance, Piper often pronounced names and fragments of sentences that appeared to have been the last impressions on her brain. After that, she resumed conversations at the point where they were broken off before she fell into trance. It is significant to quote from among the numbed remarks during her return to consciousness, “I came in on a cord, a silver cord.” Before she became conscious she heard a snap, sometimes two. They were physiological experiences. She said she heard “sounds like wheels clicking together and then snap, sometimes two. They were physiological experiences. After half an hour or so after the trance had disappeared the medium continues slightly dazed and only partly herself. . . . A record was also made of the remarks of Mrs. Piper during the period of awaking from trance. . . . part of them nearly always consisted of expressions of admiration for the state of experience she was leaving, and of repulsion—almost disgust—at the commonplace terrestrial surroundings in which she found herself. Even a bright day was described as dingy or dark, and the sitter was stared at in an unrecognising way, and described as a full and ugly person. . . .”

Piper’s trances seemed to have three distinct stages—subliminal 1, in which the medium was partly conscious of her surroundings but saw things distorted and grotesque; subliminal 2, in which she was possessed by spirits and lost contact with the material world; and subliminal 3, a deep trance in which the loss of consciousness was complete, the body became anaesthetic, and automatic writing began.

William James found Piper’s lips and tongue insensible to pain while she was in trance. Richard Hodgson later confirmed this by placing a spoonful of salt in Piper’s mouth. He also applied strong ammonia to her nostrils.

James also led what became a series of more intrusive experiments, once making a small incision in Piper’s left wrist during trance the wound did not bleed and no notice was taken of the action. It bled freely afterward and the medium bore the scar for life. In England, Lodge pushed a needle into her hand. At another time, Charles Richet inserted a feather into her nostril. Harsh experiments in 1909 resulted in a badly blistered and swollen tongue that caused the medium inconvenience for several days, while another test resulted in numbness and partial paralysis of her right arm for some time afterward. Although these scientific experiments were of great importance, it is obvious that the experimenters overstepped the mark in causing inconvenience and pain to the medium.

The trance of the medium Eusapia Palladino was described by Italian researcher Cesare Lombroso: “At the beginning of the trance her voice is hoarse and all the secretions—sweat, tears, even the menstrual secretions are increased. Hyperaesthesia is succeeded by anaesthesia. . . . Reflex movements of the pupils and tendons are lacking. . . . Respiratory movements . . . passing from 15 inspirations to 12 and 12 a minute . . . heartbeats increase from 70 to 90 and even 120. The hands are seized with jerks and tremors. The joints of the feet and the hands take on movements of flexure or extension, and every little while become rigid.

“The passing from this state to that of active somnambulism is marked by yawns, sobbing, perspirations on the forehead, passing of insensible perspiration through the skin of the hands, and strange physiognomic expressions. Now she seems a prey to a kind of anger, expressed by imperious commands and sarcastic and critical phrases, and now to a state of voluptuous erotic ecstasy. In the state of trance she first becomes pale, turning her eyes upward and her sight inward. . . . exhibiting many of the gestures that are frequent in hysterical fits. . . . Toward the end of the trance when the more important phenomena occur, she falls into true convulsions and cries like a woman who is lying-in, or else falls into a profound sleep while from the aperture in the parietal bone in her head there exhalas a warm fluid or vapour, sensible to the touch.”

“After the séance Eusapia is overcome by morbid sensitiveness, hyperesthesia, photophobia and often by hallucinations and delirium (during which she asks to be watched from harm) and by serious disturbances of the digestion, followed by vomiting if she has eaten before the séance, and finally by true paresis of the legs, on account of which it is necessary for her to be carried and to be undressed by others.”
Trances did not always come at will and occasionally appeared when not desired. In Cambridge, England, at the request of F. W. H. Myers, Piper looked into a crystal before going to bed. She saw nothing but looked exhausted the next morning and said that she thought that she had been entranced during the night. The next time when she went into a trance, her spirit control "Phinuit" said that he came and called but no one answered. Piper's trances generally lasted about an hour. On one occasion, in Sir Oliver Lodge's experience, it lasted only for a minute.

The trance, as a rule, is continuous. In the mediumship of Mrs. J. H. Conant, much discomfort was caused at an earlier stage by the medium's return to consciousness as soon as the control had left. She had to be entranced again for the next communicator. Each change took about ten minutes. In the case of Rudi Schneider, the trance was similarly intermittent but the same entity, "Olga," remained in control.

To be roused from trance by a materialized spirit is exceptional. The spirit form "Katie King" was said to have roused the medium Florence Cook when the time of her farewell arrived and a tearful scene was witnessed between the two. The novelist Florence Marryat, who was present at this séance, describes a similar experience with the medium Mary Showers in her book There is No Dead [1891]: "The spirit 'Peter' tried to rouse Rosie by shaking her and calling her name, holding me by one hand as he did so. As Miss Showers yawned and woke up from her trance, the hand slipped from mine, and 'Peter' evaporated. When she sat up I said to her gently, 'I am here! Peter had brought me in and was sitting on the mattress by my side till just this moment.' "Ha, ha!" laughed his voice close to my ear, 'and I'm still here, my dears, though you can't see me.'"

The medium F. W. Monck was once apparently awakened by the common consent of the materialized spirit and the sitters. However, controversy surrounds the mediumship of Florence Cook, Mary Showers, and Monck, and these unusual occurrences seem to be but further confirmation of the fraud engaged in by the three mediums.

Usually the medium has no remembrance of what has passed in the trance. To all intents and purposes he or she is an entirely distinct being while in that state, with physiological functions totally different from the normal ones. Florence Marryat wrote that the medium Bessie Williams ate like a sparrow, and only the simplest things, "Dewdrop" (her guide), on the other hand, liked indigestible food and devoured it freely, yet the medium never felt any inconvenience from it.

About 1846 the limbs of Mary Jane, servant girl of Dr. Larkin of Wrentham, Massachusetts, were, under the spirit influence of a rough sailor, thrown out of joint in several directions in a moment and without pain. Larkin was often obliged to call in the aid of his fellow doctors and two or three strong assistants to replace them. On one occasion the girl's knees and wrists were thrown out of joint twice in a single day. These painful feats were always accompanied by loud laughter and hoarse, profane jokes.

On the testimony of S. W. Turner of Cleveland, Ohio, in December 1847, the Spiritual Telegraph reported the peculiar adventure of a medium called William Hume. In a trance state and under the control of "Capt. Kidd," Hume threw himself into the lake to recover a ring and was brought out of the water, still in trance, after swimming for 15 to 20 minutes, without injury to his health.

Trance in Animal Magnetism and Hypnotism

The first surgery on a subject in mesmeric trance was performed in France in 1809 by M. Claret de Moncey, a 64-year-old woman who suffered from an ulcerated cancer in the right breast. The operation lasted 10 to 12 minutes. The patient's pulse and breathing remained unchanged. She was not awakened until several minutes later. The case was reported to the Section of Surgery of the Academy. In 1836 a Dr. Hammond invited a member of the academy, M. Oudet, to extract... a tooth from a somnambulistic patient. The operation was a success.

In England the first operation in mesmeric trance took place in 1842, in Nottinghamshire, on James Wombell, whose leg was amputated above the knee. W. Topham, a London barrister, was the mesmerist, and the operation was performed by Squire Ward, M.R.C.S. James Esdaile records a number of similar incidents in his book, Mesmerism in India (1846).

There is one instance on record in the mediumship of F. L. H. Willis, who later acquired a medical degree and became professor of materia medica in New York, when not the patient, but the operator was in trance. Controlled by the spirit of "Dr. Mason," Willis successfully performed a difficult operation.

Apart from Swedenborg, the first modern conversation with spirits of the departed through the use of trance was recorded in May 1778 by the Société Exégetique Philantropique of Stockholm. A 40-year-old woman was controlled in trance by her own infant daughter and another young child of the town, who gave accounts of both their Earth lives and their existence in the spirit world.

The somnambulistic state in mesmerism was the discovery of the Marquis Chastenet de Puységur. Franz Anton Mesmer himself was aware of something unknown in the "magnetic sleep" and warned against deepening it. The use of animal magnetism was primarily for healing power, and the possibility of intercourse with spirits was largely avoided. It cropped up as early as 1878 in Tardy de Montravel’s writings, but he opposed it. Kaleph Ben-Nathan admitted the possibility in 1795 but contended that spirits with which a somnambule might hold intercourse would be spirits of an inferior order and that magnetists practiced sorcery and divination.

Dr. Alexandre Bertrand recorded the exclamation of his young somnambule: "There are no spirits, they are stories, yet I see them, the proof is perfect." J. P. F. Deleuze conceded in 1818 that the phenomena of clairvoyance established the spirituality of the soul, but he did not consider spirit intercourse proven by the phenomena of somnambulistic trance. In later years, however, under the effect of Dr. G. P. Billot’s experiments, he appeared to have changed his belief. Billot’s somnambules were mediums in the present-day sense. The spirits who possessed them proclaimed themselves to be their guardian angels and on occasion produced physical phenomena.

Louis-Adphonse Cahagnet recorded fully developed trance communications through the early medium Adèle Maginot. Before Cahagnet’s appearance, an official acknowledgment of trance took place in 1831 when an investigating commission of the Royal Academy of Medicine reported on the phenomena of animal magnetism and found it genuine and the state of somnambulism, although rare, well authenticated.

In Germany the theory of spiritual intercourse in trance took a quicker hold on the imagination of mesmerists. Jung-Stilling (J. H. Jung) founded the school with the theory of the psychic body and its elements, based on the luminiferous ether. Auguste Müller, of Carlsruhe, appears to have been the first somnambule whose spirit communications and other phenomena were carefully recorded; Fränlein Römer, the second. Müller was the first interplanetary traveler, making claimed clairvoyant excursions to the moon. The most stirring account of intercourse with the spirit world was the story of the Seeress of Prevorst, Frederica Hauffe, published in 1826 by Dr. Justinus Kerner.

Sources:

Fahnestock, W. B. Statucolism, or Artificial Somnambulism. Chicago, 1871.

Trance Personalities

Trance messages claiming to come from the medium’s spirit control do not always reveal a definite personality. The control often reflects the thoughts and opinions of the medium and the sitters, possesses little knowledge that they do not possess, and is an artificial personality. Yet, frequently a trance medium is controlled by a spirit of distinct or distinguished personality, whose education level appears to be more extensive and culture of a much different quality than the medium’s and whose ideas and opinions appear independent.

Such spirits are generally given distinguishing names. They may control the medium alternately with other controls. On the other hand, the medium has generally a monopoly of one or more of these spirits, though sometimes one control may seemingly appear to be shared by several mediums.

Among those who may justly be regarded as the common property of dubious mediums are the spirits of certain great men—Virgil, Socrates, Shakespeare, Milton, Benjamin Franklin, Victor Hugo, Swedenborg, and so on. The messages delivered through their control seldom resemble anything they wrote or said during their lives.

Not all the mediums involved in such counterfeit personalities are frauds; some are self-deluded. Others exhibit the faculty of the subconscious mind to weave fantasies like the characters and incidents of a novelist. Similar artificial personalities sometimes manifest in the claimed reincarnation experiences of subjects in hypnotic regression as in the famous "Brady Murphy" case (see Morey Bernstein).

Some trance personalities assume pseudonyms, suggesting the possibility that the personality of everyday life, which is modified from year to year, may suffer radical change after death, losing the distinctive nature that the physical body, memories, and emotions normally reinforce.

Some of the most well-known pseudonymous trance personalities were those of the Rev. William Stanton Moses—"Imperator," "Rector," "Mentor," "Prudens," and others. "Imperator" and "Rector" were also among the controls of the medium Leonora E. Piper in subsequent years and indeed much of her automatic discourse did not come directly from communicating spirits, but was dictated by them to "Rector." It was suggested, however, by Sir Oliver Lodge and other investigators, that Piper’s controls were not identical with those of Stanton Moses but were merely masqueraders.
Piper had, however, several interesting trance personalities of her own without borrowing from anybody. One of her earliest controls was "Sebastian Bach;" but before long he gave place to a spirit calling himself "Dr. Phmu," who was an influence for a considerable time, then succumbing in his turn to George Pelham ("G. P."). Pelham was a young author and journalist who died suddenly in 1892. Soon after his death he supposedly controlled Piper, and indeed gave many striking proofs of his identity. He constantly mentioned intimate details of the affairs of Pelham, recognized his friends, and gave to each their due welcome. He never failed to recognize an acquaintance, or give a greeting to one whom he did not know. Many of Pelham's old friends did not hesitate to recognize in him that which he claimed to be.

Only on one occasion, when asked for the names of two persons who had been associated with him in a certain enterprise, the spirit "G. P." refused, saying that as there was present one who knew the names, his mentioning them would be referred to as telepathy. Later, he gave the names—incorrectly. When "G. P." was asked to communicate as the principal control of Piper, his place was taken by "Rector" and "Imperator," as mentioned above.

Another well-known trance medium, Rosina Thompson, had as her chief control "Nelly" (a daughter of hers who had died in infancy), a "Mrs. Catswright," and others. Thompson's controls were said not to have shown any individual characteristics, but to resemble Thompson herself strongly both in voice and manner of speech, although Margaret Verrall, one of the sitters, stated that the impersonations gave an impression of separate identity to the sitter. Thompson's early trance utterances were controlled by another band of spirits, with even less individuality than those mentioned.

Frequently mediums and investigators themselves, when reaching the discarnate plane, seem to become controls in their turn. The psychical researchers F. W. H. Myers, Edmund Gurney, Richard Hodgson, and Henry Sidgwick claimed to speak and write posthumously through many mediums, notably through Piper, Thompson, Verrall, and Alice K. Fleming (i.e., Mrs. Holland). Many of the statements made by these controls were correct; some matters revealed were apparently outside the scope of the medium's normal knowledge. At the same time several fatal discrepancies were found to exist between the controls and those they were supposed to represent.

Thus the script produced by Fleming contained grave warnings, seeming to come from Myers, against the medium Eu sapia Palladino and her physical phenomena, whereas Myers was known to hold opinions favorable to the physical manifestations.

On the whole, such trance personalities show themselves influenced by the personality of the medium. In cases where the latter was acquainted with the control, the trance personality was proportionately strong. When there was no personal acquaintance, it was often of a neutral tint, and sometimes had guesses were made, as when Fleming represented the Gurney control as of a harsh and almost discourteous temperament.

But such instances must not be taken as impeaching the medium's good faith. Instances in which the trance personality is patently the product of the medium's own consciousness do not in themselves suggest that there is any intentional deception. In some of the most definite cases, there is evidence suggesting the operation of a discarnate intelligence, evidence that has proved convincing to careful investigators.

Among the most important pieces of evidence in evaluating the separate existence of trance personalities as spirit entities is the case of "Philip." In 1972-73, members of the Toronto Society for Psychical Research, Canada, deliberately created an artificial séance entity named "Philip," with a history, personal characteristics, and an appearance decided upon by the group in a quite mundane manner. The experimenters soon obtained raps from the séance table and communications from "Philip." It seems that in many instances, a spirit control may simply be a convention of personality. In other cases, however, convincing evidence of true personality survival has been established.

Sources:

Garrett, Eileen J. My Life as a Search for the Meaning of Medi

Transcendental Meditation (TM)

A popular Hindu meditation technique first taught in the West by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, an Allahabad University physics graduate who, in the 1940s and 1950s studied among monks in the Himalayas. Emerging with his teachings in 1958, the Maharishi's transcendental meditation spread across the United States and Europe by the mid-1960s. Due largely to the endorsements of celebrities such as the Beatles, Jane Fonda, and Mia Farrow, TM became one of the first forms of Eastern meditative practices to receive widespread media attention in the West. Essentially, TM is a streamlined form of the ancient Hindu initiation of bestowing a mantra, or sacred Sanskrit word or phrase, for the pupil to meditate upon for a short period each day.

A number of personal and social benefits have been claimed as a result of meditating. In fact, the movement has cited 508 individual scientific studies conducted since the 1970s, measuring psychological and physiological differences between meditators and non-meditators. The reports laud the physical and mental benefits of transcendental meditation, citing increased creativity, broader comprehension, improved perception, lowered blood pressure, reduced anxiety, and decreased medical visits among the meditators.

In 1977, studies such as those conducted by Fales and Markovskiy at the University of Iowa question the validity of claims made by TM studies. Particularly, the analysis examines the phenomenon known as the Maharishi Effect, which asserts the effect advanced TM meditators can exercise over the social serenity of local communities. The scientific work on TM has been criticized within the academic community for methodological flaws, vague definitions, and loose statistical controls.

It has been argued that the effects attributed to TM are the same effects produced by any number of yogic and meditative techniques; this places TM in the context of goals and results of traditional meditation.

The TM movement has also been criticized for lifting the time-honored Hindu practice from its religious context, mass producing it as a contemplative quick-fix for western consumers.

Critics have argued that TM is disjointed from the Hindu mysticism from which it emerged, as well as from the other great world religions that have emphasized the need for pa-
Transfiguration

The metamorphic power ascribed to certain mediums to assume facial or bodily characteristics of deceased people for their representation. The phenomenon was described in detail in the account of William J. Erwood in The National Spiritualist, at a séance in 1931 with a Mrs. Bullock, a Chicago medium. In the light, which showed every movement of the medium, he claimed to have seen more than forty faces in an hour and a half.

He writes:

"It was as though the medium's face were of plastic material being rapidly molded from one form to another by some master worker in plastics. Oriental faces, Indians, calm, dignified, serious, spiritual, in short, almost every type of face was depicted during the most unusual séance. One of the most striking was the impersonation of a paralysed girl whom I had known in the States. The medium's entire body, as well as face, was twisted out of all semblance of its normal state, to depict the condition of this victim of paralysis."

H. Dennis Bradley, in his book The Wisdom of the Gods (1925), described an experience with the medium Mrs. Scales:

"Gradually the whole of the expression of the medium's face changed completely. It was a transformation, while the outline remained, the eyes and the expression became beautiful... At first it was only with very great difficulty that the first few words were articulated. It was as if they were produced with considerable effort. Within a little while, however, the power strengthened considerably, and the spirit of my sister was able to assume complete control. It was her spirit, using the organism of another physical body, and speaking to me in her own voice."

Joseph Maxwell vowed for the following case of transfiguration in sleep, narrated by one of his colleagues in the magistracy:

"On January 1, 1903, my father began to feel the first attacks of the painful disease from which he died after six months of terrible suffering... I watched him as he slept, and was not long in noticing that his physiognomy gradually assumed an aspect which was not his own. Finally I observed that his face bore a striking resemblance to that of my mother. It was as though the mask of her face was placed over his own. My father had no eyebrows for a long time, and I noticed above his closed eyes the very marked black eyebrows which my mother had retained to the last. The eyelids, the nose, the mouth, were those of my mother... My father wore his moustache and a pointed, but rather short beard. This beard and moustache, which I saw, helped, contrary to what might have been expected, in forming the features of my mother. The appearance lasted for ten or twelve minutes; then it gradually disappeared, and my father resumed his habitual physiognomy. Five minutes later he awoke, and I immediately asked him if he had not been dreaming, especially about his wife. He answered in the negative."

The phenomenon was witnessed by a woman servant who came into the room while it lasted. She was told: "Jeanne, look at Monsieur sleeping!" She cried out, "Oh, how he resembles poor Madame. It is striking; it is quite extraordinary!"

In the experiences of Allan Kardec, founder of French Spiritism, there was an extraordinary case of a young girl of fifteen whose metamorphic power extended to the duplication of the stature, mass, and weight of deceased persons, especially of her brother, Kardec recorded that another metamorphic medium, a Ms. Krooke, saw one evening her own face change. She observed a thick black beard and by her son-in-law recognized his dead father. A little later, her face changed into that of an old woman with white hair. She preserved her consciousness in the meantime, yet felt through her entire body a prickling like that of a galvanic battery. No such miracles are recorded in modern experience.

Transfiguration is most often reported as occurring in séances in conjunction with materializations. It involves grave risks for the medium, but no records of any harm have been reported. There is an observation based on several accounts including an experiment at the British College of Psychic Science, a Spiritualist organization, with the medium Ada Besinnet in 1921. A light was flashed on a face that was illuminated by a spirit lamp. The medium was leaning over the table and illuminated her own face with light held in her hand. The light quickly vanished, as did the white drapery which draped over her head. When awakened, she was in trance and complained of great pain in the pit of her stomach; for three days she was shaken with muscular contractions.

There are some past experiences on record of the disappearance of the medium during materialization. In such cases, Spiritualist argue, the entire bodily substance of the medium is believed to have been withdrawn for the purpose of building up phantom bodies. Such occurrences are also known as transfigurations. More rational approaches to the séance have ascribed more mundane causes to such occurrences.

Sources:

Kanelakos, Demetri P., and Jerome S. Lukas. Psychobiology of Transcendental Meditation: A Literature Review. W. A. Benjamin, 1974.

Transylvanian Society of Dracula

The Transylvanian Society of Dracula emerged at the end of the 1990s as the largest vampire-interest organization in the world. It was founded in the early 1990s by a group of writers, Romanian scholars, tourist experts, and others interested in Dracula and vampire folklore in Romania and initially announced its existence through the sponsorship of the World Dracula Congress in 1995. Taking the lead was Nicolae Paduraru, formerly with the Romanian Ministry of Tourism. During that conference both an American and a Canadian chapter were established by J. Gordon Melton and Elizabeth Miller respectively, and a short time later an Italian chapter was founded by Massimo Introvigne. Each is a scholar in vampire studies and the author of multiple titles in the field.

The Canadian and American chapters joined with the Count Dracula Fan Club to sponsor Dracula 97, the centennial celebration of the publication of the novel Dracula, that brought some 100 scholars and more than 600 participants to Los Angeles, California, August 14–17, 1997. For three years, the two chapters cosponsored The Transylvanian Journal (1996–98). Currently, the Canadian chapter issues a newsletter, "Sabbat, Seeing with the Stomach, Seeing with the TREAT

See Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma

Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma (TREAT)

A center focusing on UFO (unidentified flying object) abduction phenomena, TREAT was founded in 1989 by psychiatrist Rima E. Laibow. It held its first conference May 12–14, 1989, at Fairfield University in Connecticut. Laibow has suggested that such "abductions," which she considers "experienced anomalous trauma," are the result of an unknown factor, possibly one outside the realm of conventional psychological explanation. However, even though the cause remains unknown, it is possible to treat the effects (symptoms) which are themselves well known.

Although Laibow initially maintained a friendly relationship with ufologists, for whom abduction phenomena had emerged as a major issue of research, tension soon developed. Laibow broke with leading abduction spokespersons Budd Hopkins and David M. Jacobs and removed them from participation in TREAT. She also disagreed with other ufologists by asserting the dominant role of mental health professionals, as opposed to a cooperative (essentially equal) role between psychologists and ufologists.

In spite of the problems, TREAT has continued to function. It holds annual meetings in the United States, paralleled by a series of regional meetings in Europe and Russia. Such meetings between professionals and interested parties are intended to create a nexus of collaborators and colleagues worldwide to further research and investigate UFO and parapsychological phenomena. Address: 13 Summit Terr., Dobbs Ferry, NY 10522.

Sources:

Tree Ghosts

Tree spirits of the Indian subcontinent were among the many mythological spirit entities described by William Crooke in his book Religion and Folklore of Northern India (1926).

These tree ghosts are, it is needless to say, very numerous. Hence most local shrines are constructed under trees; and in one particular tree, the Bira, the jungle tribes of Mirzapur locate Bagheswar, the tiger godling, one of their most dreaded deities. In the Konkan, according to Mr. Campbell, the mediun or Bhagat who becomes possessed is called fluid, or "tree," apparently because he is a favourite dwelling-place for spirits.

"In the Dakkhin it is believed that the spirit of the pregnant woman of Churel lives in a tree, and the Ahors and Pahams of East Bengal believe that spirits in trees kidnap children. Many of these tree spirits appear in the folk-tales. Thus, Devadatta worshipped a tree which one day suddenly split in two and a nymph appeared who invited him to go inside the tree. In there was a heavenly palace of jewels and Vidyatprabha, the maiden daughter of the king of the Yakshas [supernatural beings]; in another story the mendicant heard inside a tree the Yaksha joking with his wife."

Sources:

The Tree of Life, and The Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil

Two of the trees said to have been planted by God in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 2:17; 3:24). They were believed by St. Ambrose to be of mystical significance. The former is understood to be the manifestation of God, and the latter of the worldly wisdom to which our human nature is too apt to incline.

Tremblers of the Cevennes

A Protestant caste of convolutionaries, who during the sixteenth century grew in numbers from their center in the Cevennes (south of Lyon, France), over almost the whole of Germany. They possessed many points of resemblance with cases of obsession and possession, and are said to have been insensible to thirsts and blows with pointed sticks and iron bars, as well as to the oppression of great weights. They had visions, communicated with good and evil spirits, and are said to have performed many miraculous cures similar to the apostolic miracles. They made use of modes of treatment called graves se cors or se cors missetries, which were authenticated by the reports of eyewitnesses and by judicial documents.

Although they were belabored by the strongest men with heavy pieces of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them. The Tremblers even bore as many as a hundred blows with a heavy piece of wood and bars of iron weighing at least thirty pounds, they complained of no injury, but experienced a sensation of pleasure. They also were covered with boils, on which as many as twenty men stood without its being painful to them.
“... spasmodic convulsions maintain themselves against outward attempts, and even the greatest violence, with almost superhuman strength, without injury to the patient, as has often been observed in young girls and women, where anyone might have almost been induced to believe in supernatural influence. The tension of the muscles increases in power with the insensibility of the power, so that no outward force is equal to it; and when it is attempted to check the paroxysm with force, it gains in intensity, and according to some observers not less psychical than physical. ... I have observed the same manifestations in children, in Catholics, Protestants and Jews, without the least variation, on which account I consider it to be nothing more than an immense abnormal and inharmonic lusus naturae." (See also Convulsionaries of St. Médard)

Trenc, (William) Brinsley Le Poer (1911–1995)

Distinguished British authority on UFOs. He is the 5th Earl of Clancarty and a member of the House of Lords, where he introduced a serious debate on UFOs January 18, 1979. This was a historic occasion—the first on which this subject had been discussed by the British Parliament.

Born September 18, 1911, Trench is the fifth son of the fifth Earl of Clancarty and of Mary Gwatkin. He was educated at Nautical College, Pangbourne. His interest in UFOs extends over thirty years. After World War II, he noticed many reports of UFO sightings and began to collect press cuttings on the subject. Through a meeting with Desmond Leslie, he was encouraged to attend a lecture on flying saucers at Battersea Polytechnic, London.

Trench, Derek Dempster (aviation correspondent of the British newspaper Daily Express), and other interested individuals founded a company named Flying Saucer Service Ltd. and commenced publication of a magazine Flying Saucer Review. The first edition appeared in spring 1955 with Derek Dempster as editor, followed by Trench in September 1956, then in September 1959 by Wavener Girvan. When Girvan died, the magazine was edited by Charles Bowen. After 25 years of publication, this remains the first authoritative British publication on the subject of UFOs. It is now included in the House of Lords library.

In 1967, Trench founded Contact International, a worldwide UFO organization with members in 37 different countries. His interest led to his writing a variety of books including some which moved from ufology to a consideration of the ancient astronaut hypothesis.

He died May 18, 1995.

Trent, A. G. (1789–1850)

Pseudonym of philologist and author Richard Garnett, assistant keeper of printed books at the British Museum Library. He used this alias for his writings at astrology, at a time in which his professional reputation might have suffered if it had been known that he was actively interested in such a subject.

Trevelyan, Sir George (Lowthian) (1906–1996)

Fourth Baronet, born November 5, 1906, eldest son of the Rt. Hon. Sir C. P. Trevelyan who was Minister of Education in Ramsay MacDonald’s first Labour Government in Britain. Sir George grew up with a background of liberal politics and progressive thought. He was educated at Sidcot School and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He also worked as an artist-craftsman with Peter Waals workshops 1930–1.

For four years (1932–36), he trained and worked in the Alexandre Technique, the psychophysical healing system developed by F. M. Alexander. Then until World War II, he taught at Gordonstown School and Abinger Hill School. During the war, he was a Home Guard Training Captain and following the war taught at No. 1 Army College, Newbattle Abbey (1943–47). On retirement for the Army, he became principal of Attingham Park, the Shropshire Adult College, where he did pioneering work in the teaching of spiritual knowledge as adult education.

On his retirement in 1971, he founded the Wrekin Trust, one of the pioneering New Age organizations, concerned with dissolving the barriers between science and religion. The trust held important conferences on science in relation to mysticism, with papers from such distinguished individuals as Prof. Glen W. Schaefer, Prof. Joseflyn Godwin, and Pir Vilayat Inayat Khan. These conferences provided a nexus of early New Age networks. As the new age developed Trevelyan authored a number of books reflecting on the growing vision and offering the movement his mature insights.

He died February 7, 1996.

Trévisan, Bernard of (1406–1490)

Italian alchemist seeking to discover the philosophers’ stone. Trévisan began at an early age to spend large sums of money on the pursuit.

Trévisan was born at Padua. His father was a doctor of medicine, so it is probable that Bernard received his initial training in science at home. At the age of fourteen he devoted himself to alchemy. He read the works of Eastern philosophers Gerber and Rhasis. Trévisan augmented his learning with the writings of Sacrobosco and Rupecissa. He engaged in a long course of reading and praying.

Trévisan heard that Henry, a German priest, had succeeded in creating the philosophers’ stone. He went to Germany, accompanied by other alchemists. Henry claimed he would disclose all if they would supply a certain sum of money to procure the necessary tools and materials. After Henry proved fraud Trévisan decided to abandon his search. However, he visited Spain, Great Britain, Holland, and France, trying in each of these countries to learn more about creating the philosophers’
Triad Group

Nonprofit organization founded by author Whitley Streiber to catalog and study "visitor experiences"—claims of contacts with extraterrestrials or other creatures. The project followed Streiber's claimed experiences detailed in his book Communion (1987). After the formation of the organization, rather than joining his cause, many believers in unidentified flying objects claimed Streiber was an amateur. After several years, he dissolved the group.

Triad Society

An ancient esoteric society of China. The candidate was taken to a dark room by two members to kneel before the president. He was given a living cock and a knife and took an oath to assist his brethren in any emergency, even at the risk of his life. He then cut off the head of the cock, mingled its blood with his own, and the three assisting individuals added some of their own blood.

After being warned that death is the punishment should he divulge the secrets of the society, he was initiated and given the triad signs of recognition. For example, a member had to lift any object with three fingers only. This society, originally altruistic, later became political.

Various Triad societies were revived in Hong Kong to operate criminal extortion and protection rackets. Cinema protection was a specialty of these gangs and usually involved Triad members being employed as ushers, ticket-sellers, or sub-managers.

Financial operations involve magic numerals, symbolic of the particular Triad society. For example, protection money may be demanded in sums relating to the figure 8, the lower half of the numeral, or to the sum of 26 or 62, used by some Triad societies. The numeral 3 denotes heaven, earth, and man. The word Triad originally was used as a mystical symbol.

In the 1970s, the Triad racketeering operations in Hong Kong resulted in the publication of a police manual, Triad Societies of Hong Kong, restricted to police personnel. In 1976, the Triad societies spread their operations to Britain, where cities like Birmingham, Bristol, Liverpool, Portsmouth, Southampton, Manchester, and London with large Chinese populations could be victimized. Triad protection rackets even operate in the West End cinemas and clubs of London, where vicious fights have been reported involving meat cleavers.

A member in the Shing Wo Triad is known as "426," a numerical symbol for "Red stick" or "enforcer." In some British cities, the protection racket is being partially reduced by closing down illegal gambling clubs where Triad members meet or convert their funds.

Sources:

Triangles (Network)

Network funded by the Lucis Trust, formed to propagate the teachings of Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949), former Theosophist who founded her own Arcanum Society. The Triangles Program was inaugurated in 1937 by Bailey in which she called upon people to form groups of three who would daily unite to channel spiritual energy to the world. Address: 120 Wall St., 24th Fl., New York, NY 10005. British headquarters are at Ste. 54, 3 Whitehall Ct., London, SW1A 2EF, England. Website: http://www.lucistrust.org/.

Trilite Seminars

Trilite Seminars is a Canadian channeling organization built around the activity of a walk-in personality named Shaari. Prior to 1989, she had been a professional in computer graphics who was also a trance medium who led personal growth workshops. That year she was in a car accident. During her period of recovery, she decided that she had completed her life work and requested that she end her incarnation. However, rather than let her body die, she offered it for the use of someone else. That someone came to be known as Shaari.

According to Shaari, she is a commander in the Star Command, which she has worked with for more than 750 years. She had an unusual birth as a Pleidadian/Arcturan hybrid. She was not born of normal parents but created as a result of action by a Pleidadian and Arcturan council. In her early years, she traveled the universe studying various cultures. She had a family with her husband Mishar.

During what on Earth was the 1980s, she had traveled to the planet Ur to assist the development of consciousness of a primitive life form. On the return journey, she stopped at the Ashtar Command headquarters near Earth. This area is under the command of Veyares and operates under the strict directives of Ashtar, the Star Command, and the Intergalactic Council of Twelve. While here, she was offered the opportunity to assist in the leap of consciousness of Earth and humanity by consciously integrating into another life form. The Earth mission was to last 30 years, at the conclusion of which she would take over the post currently held by Veyares.

Shaari channels Abraham, a member of the Light Brotherhood and Intergalactic Command, as well as Malaya, a feminine consciousness. Together she and these two entities form the triad for which her organization is named. These two entities had previously been channeled by the person whose body she took over. The Trilite organization offers seminars and retreats, and Shaari channels in private sessions for individuals. Several times a year she leads travel seminars to power spots in order to provide a focus for the healing of the planet.

Trilite is headquartered at P.O. Box 22040, Brentwood Bay, BC, Canada, V0S 1R0. It does not have a website, but information can be found on the Internet at http://members.spiritweb.org/Spirit/et-journey.htm.

Sources:

Trintzius, Rene (1898–1953)

A writer and unorthodox healer, born July 29, 1898, at Rouen, France. He became a novelist and playwright and wrote... biographical studies of Rousseau, Charlotte Corday, Jacques Cazotte, and John Law. His books include: L’Astrologie à la portée de tous (Astrology for All), Lises dans vos mains (Palmistry), La Magie a-t-elle raison (Is Magic on the Right Lines?), Les Guérissons supranormales (Supernormal Cures), Les Pouvoirs inconnus de l’Homme (Man’s Unknown Powers), La Voyance et ses supports (Clairvoyance and Its Supports), and Au seuil du Monde invisible (On the Threshold of the Invisible World). He died in 1953.

Triskaidekaphobia Illuminatus Society

A defunct organization founded in 1984 concerned with superstitions about the number 13. Membership was comprised of individuals who believed the number 13 had the ability to affect the balance of world power and political structure through the “Illuminati” (persons who are or who claim to be unusually enlightened). The society sought to isolate seemingly unconnected events caused by the numerical forces inherent in the number 13, correlate the meanings of these events, and develop solutions and strategies.

The society promoted the organization of illuminated task forces for the elimination of Triskaidekaphobia (fear of the number 13) from society. It operated a think tank, bestowed an annual award for contributions concerning the “power” of the number 13, and maintained an archive collection of media clippings and videotapes from television shows. The society published The 13th Illuminated Stratagem (newsletter, two to five per year); Thirteen, an editorial report issued at irregular intervals; and Fear to Feel: the Illuminated Network of 13 Concealed Phantoms, a book. The society disbanded around 1990.

Trithemius (Johann) (1462–1519)

Alchemist and magician. The son of a German vine grower named Heidenberg, he received his Latin name from Trittenheim, a village in the electorate of Trêves, where he was born. He lost his father when he was a year old, and his mother remarried. Trithemius worked all day in the vineyards and studied at night. He read whatever books he could beg or borrow. With his share of the patrimony bequeathed by his father, Trithemius went to Trêves, entered as student at the university, and assumed the name of Trithemius.

By the age of 20, Trithemius had acquired the reputation of a scholar. In the winter of 1482, he left Trêves and returned to Trittenheim to visit his mother.

On arriving at Spanheim, Trithemius found the roads impassable due to snow. He went to a neighboring Benedictine monastery. There he stayed for several days. He liked the monastery and voluntarily took the monastic vows and retired from the world. In the course of two years, he was elected abbot and devoted himself to the repair and improvement of the monastery.

After 21 years as abbot, the monks elected another abbot. Trithemius left Spanheim and wandered from place to place, until finally elected abbot of St. James of Wurzburg, where he died in 1519.

Trithemius devised a shorthand called stenoganographia, stigmatized as a Kabalist and necromantic writing, concealing his most fearful, occult secrets. He wrote a treatise on the subject, another on the supposed administration of the world by its guardian angels, translated into English in 1647 by the astrologer William Lilly. He wrote a third book on geomancy, or divination by means of lines and circles on the ground, a fourth upon sorcery, and a fifth on alchemy. In his work on sorcery, Trithemius made an early mention of the popular story of Faust, and recorded his experiences with the spirit named Hulcin.

Reportedly, Trithemius gave the Emperor Maximilian a vision of his deceased wife, the beautiful Mary of Burgundy. Reportedly, he defrayed the expenses of his monastic establishment at Spanheim by resources obtained from the philosophers’ stone.

Trivah

Among the Dayaks of Borneo, the trivah, or feast of the dead, was celebrated after a death had taken place. A panel containing a representation of the temponteloris (ship of the dead) was generally set up at the trivah, and sacrifices of fowls were offered to it. It was believed that until the trivah had been celebrated, the souls were unable to reach the golden shores. (See also Book of the Dead: Egypt)

Trollope, Thomas Adolphus (1810–1892)

British novelist, author on travel, biography, history and frequent investigator of the medium D. D. Home. In 1855, Trollope opposed Sir David Brewster when the latter published a denial of having witnessed Home’s psychic phenomena.

Eight years later, in a letter to The Athenaeum (April 1863), Trollope testified to “having seen and felt physical facts, wholly and utterly inexplicable, as I believe, by any known and generally received physical laws. I unhesitatingly reject the theory which considers such facts to be produced by means familiar to the best professors of legerdemain.”

The report by a committee of the London Dialectical Society contained his written testimony on an apport of jonquil flowers through the mediumship of Agnes Guppy-Volckman in his own home in Florence, Italy.

Geophysicist, director of the Bioclimatological Research Center, Leiden, Netherlands, and writer on parapsychological subjects. Tromp was born on March 9, 1909, at Djarkarta, Indonesia. He moved to Europe for his education and earned his Ph.D. at the University of Leiden in geology in 1932.

After military service (1932–33), Tromp was a field geologist for oil companies in Indonesia and Egypt from 1933 to 1940. During World War II, he worked as an advisor on oil explorations for the Turkish Government (1940–43) and then joined his country’s war effort as the director of economic warfare, Netherlands Army (1943–45). After the war he held a variety of positions as an economic geologist. Related to his geological interests, Tromp specialized in the study of phenomena connected with dowsing (water divining) about which he wrote several articles and books. He died March 17, 1983, in the Netherlands.

Sources:

Tron, Giorgio (1884–1963)

Italian physician who studied parapsychology. Tron was born on September 12, 1884, in Turin, Italy. He studied at the University of Pavia (M.D., 1910; teaching diploma in hygiene, 1924). He was staff doctor at the Hospital for Infectious Diseases, Milan (1915–20), hygiene officer at Milan (1927–38), and director of the Instituto Sierotepapoico Italiano, Naples (1940–53). Tron was a member of the Società Italiana di Parapsicologia and served as the society's secretary (1955–59).

In addition to his writings on medical subjects, Tron contributed articles to the Bulletin of the Società Italiana di Parapsicologia. He also wrote a chapter on unorthodox healing in the book Studia Parapsychologica (1956) and on physical mediumistic phenomena in Nuovi Problemi di Metapsichica (1955). He died February 5, 1963, in Rome.

Sources:

Trophonios

Trophonios, a legendary Greek hero who was eventually considered a god-like being, was credited with building the original temple housing the Oracle at Delphi. At a later date, the Oracle at Delphi is said to have ordered the building of an oracle site to be established at Lebadea, known today as the town of Livadia dedicated to Trophonios. The site would become one of the prominent oracular centers in ancient Greece, and accounts of it survive in the writings of Pausanias.

Those who consulted the oracle at Labadea followed a pattern common in the ancient world. They took up residence at the center for several days, during which they offered sacrifices of various animals. Following the sacrifices, soothsayers were present to read the entrails of the animals (a practice termed extispicy), specifically determining if Trophonios would receive the inquirer graciously or not. The night before entering the cave where the god dwelled, the person would receive a bath and was anointed with olive oil. The priests then took him to water springs where the water of forgetfulness (for the loss of memory of all that was past) and the water of memory (to recall all that would be seen) were consumed. It is believed that these waters contained doses of hallucinogenic drugs.

The inquirer was taken to the entrance of the cave and supplied with a ladder by which he went down into a room. In the floor was a small opening through which the person entered into the actual oracle space. Here the person had both visionary experiences and encounters with the deity (possibly one of the priests acting as a medium). Upon his return, the person was seated on the Throne of Memory and questioned as to what he had been or heard.

The site of the Trophonion oracle is well known, though modern explorers of the area have been unable to locate the entrance to the caves used for divination in ancient times. Some believe that a complex of interconnected caves exist in the area.

Sources:

True World Order (TWO)

Movement started by Swami Vishnudevananda, disciple of the late Swami Sivananda of Rishikesh, India, and believer in hatha yoga.

TWO is dedicated to promoting world peace and understanding, good health, and happiness through yoga harmony and a vegetarian diet. For information: International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Center, 673 8th Ave., Val Morin, Quebec, Canada J0T 2R0.

Trumpet

A funnel-shaped device of cardboard, aluminum, or other lightweight material used at Spiritualist séances for the manifestation of direct voice communication from spirits. Jonathan Koons, the nineteenth-century American farmer medium, appears to have been the first to use a trumpet.

Spiritualists have suggested the trumpet serves as a condenser of psychic energy and increases the volume of the spirit voice. Reportedly, weak, or inexperienced spirits often have to use the trumpet. It is seldom necessary for a spirit guide. Some mediums also wet the trumpet with water, in the belief this facilitates the phenomena.

The trumpet is usually coated with a marking of luminous paint. Supposedly at séances in dark rooms the trumpet is seen levitating when there is sufficient psychic force and moving around the circle, conveying personal messages to individual sitters.

Reportedly as a safeguard against fraud, psychical researchers have devised techniques and apparatus to attempt to exclude the possibility of a medium employing ventriloquism in producing voices ostensibly from the trumpet. One method is to fill the medium’s mouth with water. During the investigation of the medium Mina Crandon (better known as “Margery”), Mark Richardson of Boston invented a “Voice Control Machine.”

The American direct voice medium Elizabeth Blake used a double trumpet with a saucer-shaped extension at the small end to be placed on the ear of the sitter and on her own. Another trumpet, the “Shastaphone,” was developed through a psychic communication in Australia, but does not appear to have been widely used.

Trungpa Rinpoche, Chogyam (1940–1987)

Throughout the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, teachers of the occult have portrayed Tibet as an outpost of the highest occult wisdom. However, it was not until after the Chinese invasion of Tibet in 1959 that Tibetan teachers arrived in the West, making firsthand encounters with Tibetan Buddhism available to more than a few adventurous explorers. Among the first to arrive was Chogyam Trungpa, the eleventh Trungpa Tulku. He was born in February 1929 in Geje, Tibet. Designated the reincarnation of a famous lama as an infant, he was raised in a monastery and trained in Tibetan Buddhism. He fled Tibet at the time of the invasion, and in 1963 received a Spaulding grant to attend Oxford University. While in England he wrote his autobiography, Born in Tibet (1966), and established a center in Scotland.

In 1970 Trungpa renounced his monastic vows to marry. He moved to the United States that same year and founded Karme Choling, a seed center of what would grow into Vajradhatu, an international center of his studies. He presented his version of Tibetan Buddhism in a number of books, including Mudra (1972); Cutting through Spiritual Materialism (1973); Visu- al Dharma, the Buddhist Art of Tibet (1975); The Dawn of Tantra (1975), with Herbert Gunther; and The Myth of Freedom (1976). He found ready acceptance among one segment of people who appreciated his total dedication to his spiritual teachings and his simultaneous ability to enjoy life, manifested through his hatha yoga.

True Black Magic, Book of the

A grimoire (manual of ceremonial magic) that is an adapted version of the Key of Solomon the King.
love of alcohol and women. He was also a patron of the arts, especially poetry, and founded a school, Naropa Institute, which offers an alternative curriculum with college-level instruction. The institute has taught the likes of Allen Ginsberg and Ram Dass.

Trungpa possibly became best known for his denunciation of "spiritual materialism," manifest in the spiritual seekers of alternative religions who seemed preoccupied with collecting as many varied spiritual experiences as possible. Such seekers never settle down long enough to have their search rewarded with real insight, he said.

In 1981 Trungpa expanded his teachings to Canada, where he established a community in Halifax. He died at these Canadian headquarters on April 4, 1987 of cardiac arrest and respiratory failure. He was succeeded by Osel Tenzin, his chief disciple.

Sources:

Truth Journal
Publication of the Center for Spiritual Awareness (CSA), a kriya yoga organization developed from the teachings of Swami Paramahansa Yogananda and headed by Roy Eugene Davis. CSA may be contacted at P.O. Box 7, Lakemount, GA 30552-0001. The center's website is http://www.csa-davis.org/.

Sources:
March 8, 2000.

Truzzi, Marcello (1935– )
Contemporary sociologist and scholar of parapsychology and the occult. Truzzi was born on September 6, 1935, in Copenhagen, Denmark. He attended Florida State University (B.A., 1957), the University of Florida (M.A., 1962), and Cornell University (Ph.D., 1970). He taught at several universities before settling permanently in the sociology department at Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti. He chaired the department for 12 years (1974–86).

Born into a prominent circus family, Truzzi has interests encompassing folklore, stage magic, the history of science, popular culture, and parapsychology. He has been most identified with anomalous phenomena and coined the term anomnodistics to designate the field of study.

In 1972 Truzzi began to issue a small newsletter, Explorations, renamed The Zetetic two years later. In 1976 The Zetetic was offered to the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal, cofounded by Truzzi, as its official publication. Within a short time, Truzzi, who viewed himself as a true skeptic, found himself in conflict with the majority of the committee members. As a skeptic, he expressed his doubts about unproven claims and withheld judgement pending definitive evidence. The majority of the committee proved themselves to be debunkers who opposed all discussion of the paranormal. Truzzi broke with the committee when it was discovered that members had falsified data that tended to support Michel Gauquelin’s views on astrology.

After separating from the committee, Truzzi founded the Center for Scientific Anomalies Research and began a new periodic, the Zetetic Scholar. He edited the Zetetic Scholar for a decade (1978–87). Besides his more conventional books on sociology, Truzzi has ventured into the sociology of witchcraft and the occult and co-writen (with Arthur Lyons) the definitive text on the use of occult powers in solving crimes, The Blue Sense: Psychic Detectives and Crime (1991).

Sources:

The Tsitsith
An article of Jewish religious apparel, the fringe or tassels attached to the outer garment, which are believed to be endowed with talismanic properties. In modern times, the fringe has survived in the praying shawl named talith and in a garment worn on the chest. A sentence in the Talmud states: "Whoever has the tephillin bound to his head and arm, and the tsitsith thrown over his garments . . . is protected from sin." (See also Tephillin)

Tubby, Gertrude Ogden (1878–1967)
Teacher, author, and psychic researcher. Born June 18, 1878, at Kingston on Hudson, New York, Tubby studied at Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts (B.S., 1902). In 1907 she became the special research assistant to James H. Hyslop, then president of the American Society for Psychical Research (ASPR) and remained in that position for the rest of Hyslop’s life. The society split in 1925, with dissident members forming the Boston Society for Psychical Research. Tubby, who had control of Hyslop’s papers, continued to work for the ASPR as a secretary and as editor of its journal until 1924. However, after a dispute with the leadership of the society she refused to give them the Hyslop collection for their archives. Eventually she turned that material over to the Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship).

Also, as a result of working as Hyslop’s assistant, Tubby investigated a wide range of psychic phenomena, including mediumship, telepathy, clairvoyance, psychokinesis, and survival. After his death, she collected communications apparently from him from various mediums. These messages are discussed in the book James H. Hyslop—X, His Book (1929). She also published the book Psychics and Mediums, A Handbook for Students (1935; British ed. 1938), as well as various articles in the Journal and Proceedings of the ASPR.
She died July 1967.

Tulku
Term for a Tibetan entity recognized in a present incarnation. Tibetan Buddhism teaches that highly evolved individuals become spiritually liberated by abandoning the sense of ego or separate identity, but the spiritual forces comprising such an individual may still elect to be reborn for the benefit of other people. It is believed they are only illusory manifestations sustained by the sense of ego.
Traditional tests exist for the identification of tulkus, especially in the case of the Dalai Lama. Other contemporary tulkus include Chogyam Trungpa (1939–1987), author of the book Born in Tibet (City Lights, 1966) and Tarthang Tulku, both popularly known by their disciples as “Rinpoche,” a title meaning “precious master.”

Tulpa

Tibetan term for a phantom form generated by mental concentration. In her book With Mystics and Magicians in Tibet (1931), Alexandra David-Neel describes how she created a tulpa of a monk, who supposedly became a recognizable member of her party during a journey. Reportedly in the course of time this phantom took on an independent life of its own. David-Neel claimed it took six months of intense concentration to dissolve this phantom.

A tulpa may also double as the magician who created it, employed for protective purposes by appearing instead of its creator. A tulpa should be distinguished from a tulku, which is either the reincarnation of a saintly individual or the incarnation of a non-human entity, such as a god, demon, or fairy.

Sources:

Tumah

According to the Kabala, the term refers to physical or moral uncleanness. The latter is divided into three main divisions—idolatry, murder, and immorality. Sin has rendered humanity imperfect, but also affected the whole of nature, even to the sphere of angels and the divinity. In physical uncleanness, there is a coarser and subtler form. The latter causes a diminishment in the soul felt by those who are nearest to sacred things. Organic matter that comes into contact with the human body is more liable to tumah than remoter things. The human corpse is more unclean than lower animals, because its body is more liable to tumah than remoter things. The human corpse is more unclean than lower animals, because its more complex nature involves more decay.

Tumo

The mystical practice from Tibet of generating bodily heat, so that a hermit may spend winter naked in a cave amid snow and freezing temperatures at an altitude between 11,000 and 18,000 feet. Adepts have supposedly distinguished various types of tumo: exoteric arises spontaneously in the course of mystical raptures; esoteric keeps a hermit comfortable on a snowy hill; and mystic produces experiences of paradisiacal bliss.

According to Alexandra David-Neel, tumo “is also the subtle fire with which warms the generative fluid and drives the energy in it, till it runs all over the body along the subtle channels.” This has some similarity to the Hindu teachings of the nature of kundalini energy—possibly aroused in subtle physical channels, related to the energy of sexual activity, and productive of either heat or cold in the body.

Sources:
hence his complaint in 1389. Pope Clement resolved the matter by declaring that Geoffroy II could continue exhibiting the shroud provided that it was always stated that it was only "a figure or representation" of Christ’s cloth, and that d’Arcis must keep silence in the matter under pain of excommunication.

This affair has often been revived as "proof" that the shroud was a forgery, but the accusations of d’Arcis were never proved, and the original campaign against the genuineESS of the shroud had started on the somewhat flimsy grounds that if such a cloth imprinted with an image of Jesus Christ had really existed, it would have been mentioned in the Gospels, and that the exhibition at Lirey was all part of a plot to hire persons for pretended miracles of healing. The statement that diligent inquiry had revealed a cunning artist remains unconvincing, since the artist was never named or punished.

After the death of Geoffroy II, his widow Margaret claimed that the relic had only been loaned to Lirey by her grandfather, but she was eventually obliged to give it up.

In 1452, it passed into the keeping of the Duke of Savoy. In 1532 it was kept in the sacristy of Sainte Chappelle, France, where it was nearly destroyed in a fire. It was then taken to the monastery of St. Clair where it was patched by nuns. It was brought to Saint Charles Borromeo in Turin, Italy, in 1578, and for more than four centuries remained the property of the ruling House of Savoy from which came the kings of Italy. It was exhibited annually until it was feared that frequent handling might damage it. By the end of the nineteenth century it was exhibited only on very special occasions.

In 1946, Umberto II, former king of Italy and the owner of the shroud, was exiled. He settled in Portugal and in the ensuing years, the Catholic Church, in the person of the archbishop of Turin, became its custodian. In 1978 it was disclosed that Umberto was leaving the shroud to the Pope, an event that the currend in 1983 with Umberto’s passing, Italy did not challenge the will or claim the shroud for itself. Since that time, the Roman Catholic Church has had the power to respond directly to any requests for viewing the shroud definitively tested by modern scientific methods.

Description of the Shroud

The shroud always had vague markings indicating the outlines of a body, but these took on a special significance only at the end of the nineteenth century. Modern interest in the shroud dates from 1898, when Secundo Pia obtained permission to photograph it for the first time and discovered that his negative plate revealed a perfect image of a noble and majestic face with forehead wounds suggesting a crown of thorns, and a body with wounds in the hands and side.

The supposition is that in some unknown way, emanations from the body laid in the shroud reacted with the spices used for burial in such a way as to cause an image on the cloth, rather like a photographic negative. Although the shroud had been venerated for centuries, nobody had formerly realized that the markings might be more revealing than supposed. Pia’s negative plate showed a positive picture, virtually a full-length photograph of the occupant of the shroud.

The publication of Pia’s negative caused great excitement, and led to a scientific investigation by Paul Vignon, professor of Biology at the Institut Catholique in Paris. With his co-worker Yves Delage he presented his findings, favorable to the authenticity of the shroud, to the French Academy of Science. The collaboration was a strange one, since Delage was an agnostic and Vignon a Catholic. Since then, the shroud has received increased attention and scholarship, and Vatican experts spent some years studying and verifying historical documents connected with it.

On September 6, 1936, Pope Pius XI offered his opinion of the cloth: "These are the images of the Divine Redeemer. We might say they are the most beautiful, most moving and dearest we can imagine."

The name sindonology has been given to studies of the shroud, and in 1959 the first Sindonological Congress was held in Turin. The Centro Internazionale di Sindonologia was created, drawing upon the highest academic, scientific, and ecclesiastical authorities.

In August 1978, the Holy Shroud was publicly exhibited again in the Cathedral of Turin, Italy. Because Turin had been a flashpoint for Red Brigade terrorism, special precautions were taken to protect the relic. In addition to extra police protection, the shroud itself was housed in a special display case with bulletproof glass. Archbishop Anastasio Ballestrero of Turin insisted that the shroud was not in the custody of Turin and that the cost of the new protective case was born by a Turin exposition fund launched in the United States.

In October 1978, at the end of the exposition, a special Shroud Congress was held in Turin and attended by scientists from around the world. Advanced techniques of image analysis were discussed, including infra-red photography, photomicrography, high contrast photography, X-ray fluorescence, radiographic examination, and carbon dating.

Unfortunately much of the scientific analysis and discussion resulted in controversy and confusion. Many issues were hotly debated, such as whether the amount of iron oxide on the shroud indicated genuine bloodstains or artificial ones. The main issue of dating the shroud was delayed through the reluctance of the authorities to permit destruction of a sample piece of the material for carbon dating. For a presentation of scientific views for and against the authenticity of the shroud, see the book The Image on the Shroud by H. David Sox (1981) and more recently The Mysterious Shroud by Ian Wilson (1986).

A significant breakthrough in the study of the shroud occurred in early 1987, when Pope John Paul II finally approved a plan to test fragments of the cloth in laboratories for radio-carbon content. Tests had been scheduled to begin in 1986, but were halted at the last minute by the Bishop of Turin.

Three major laboratories—in Switzerland, the United States, and Britain—were involved in these carbon-14 dating tests. Three other institutions were involved in statistical analysis of the results of tests, which included scientific controls using pieces of linen from known sources, ancient and modern. These included fragments of medieval cloth and a specimen from ancient Egypt, as well as modern cloth. The scientists involved did not know which cloth they were being provided with for testing until the results were correlated by the British Museum Research Laboratory and evaluated at the Vatican in Rome.

Edward Hall, of the Research Laboratory for Archaeology and Art at Oxford University, England, was one of the scientists involved in testing. He used an Accelerator Mass Spectrometer, generating a charge of two million volts. This massive new tool for radio-carbon dating is said to have influenced the Vatican decision to go ahead with the tests on actual fragments of the Turin Shroud. Earlier apparatus would have required the destruction of a sample about the size of a pocket handkerchief, whereas the new machine required a sample of only about a quarter of an inch.

In a report by Pearson Phillips in The Times, London, (April 13, 1987), Hall was quoted as stating: "If we get a medieval dating then we shall know it is a forgery and we can relax and forget the whole business. Although there will still be a mystery about how anyone in medieval times could have produced such a complex and effective fraud," Hall turned an agnostic viewpoint, stating: "My view of Christ as a historical individual is that he was obviously a powerful personality, I suppose it is possible that, in some way we do not currently fully understand, some kind of impression from him as transferred to the shroud. But if we produce a carbon date around the start of the first century A.D., the fat will really be in the fire. As a scientist, I would then find it difficult to dismiss the shroud’s authenticity."

An official report on October 13, 1988, revealed that the three laboratories in Oxford, Zürich, and Arizona had independently carbon dated the cloth fragments as medieval, and not from the time of Jesus Christ. There was close agreement on the possible dates, giving an estimated span of circa 1260–1390. For most skeptics, this established once and for all that the shroud was a medieval forgery.

Die-hard believers in the authenticity of the shroud either questioned the accuracy of the scientific evidence or propounded fantastic theories to account for the dating of the cloth, e.g., that the image was formed by a burst of divine radiant energy that somehow altered the texture of the cloth.

The close concurrence in dating of three independent scientific laboratories, with the best and most accurate apparatus, cannot be dismissed lightly. The normal margin of error in carbon dating is considered to be about 100 years either way.

It is unlikely that these tests can resolve the enigma of the shroud. Critics of the carbon testing have noted that scientific tests of any kind sometimes overlook anomalies revealed by later research. In the case of the dating of the shroud, there is no reason to doubt the good faith and accuracy of reputable scientific laboratories, but it is good to remember that the centuries-old shroud has been through many vicissitudes, and we are dealing with minute fragments of material.

In 1532, for example, when the shroud was kept in a silver casket at the church of Sainte Chappelle in Chambery, France, a fire broke out in the sacristy, melting drops of silver, which fell on the shroud and burned through folds in the cloth. In 1534, the burns on the cloth were patched by nuns at the monastery of St. Clair. The shroud has also suffered damp stains, and may have been washed or cleaned with oil at some time. Could the samples tested for carbon dating have been contaminated with threads or solutions from the later history of the shroud?

Moreover, carbon dating, accurate or misleading, cannot explain the extraordinary and awe-inspiring character of the image on the shroud as disclosed by the camera negative of Second Pia in 1899. There are no apparent brush marks, and other theories of production of the marks, however ingenious, hardly do justice to the beauty and accuracy of the icon. Common sense suggests that even a medieval forger of genius would be unlikely to have the prescience to produce a perfect and noble image in negative. What the pilgrims of that period in an out-of-the-way French district would surely have expected to see would have been a stylized rudimentary positive image, more like the icons in stained glass windows or the paintings in churches.

Dr. Robert Otle, of the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell, had hoped that his famous laboratory would be included in the carbon dating tests, and later commented: “It is most unfortunate—entirely unnecessary when you put the amount of material to be taken in context. It will lead to a result which will be wide open to criticism and sadly will not be seen as definitive.” It is clear that the story of the shroud has not come to an end. True believers in its authenticity have found ways to ignore and question the carbon dating evidence, while many fully accept the carbon dating results as conclusive.

Sources:

---

Turner, Ann

A nineteenth-century English reputed witch. (See also England)

Turner, M(alcolm) Ed(ijah) (1929– )

Biometician who experimented in the field of parapsychology. Turner was born on May 27, 1929, in Atlanta, Georgia. He studied at Duke University (B.A., 1952) and North Carolina State College (M.S. experimental statistics, 1955; Ph.D., 1959). After graduation he joined the faculty at the Medical College of Virginia. He joined the faculty of Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia, in 1963.

In the field of parapsychology, Turner experimented in model-building and statistical inference. He collaborated with Ann B. Turner and Elizabeth McMahan in experiments relating to the effects of time and distance on card-calling. Turner also worked with Karlis Osis on experiments in extrasensory perception over distance and developed a statistical model to evaluate ESP over spatial distances.

Sources:

---

Turloff, Stephen

Contemporary British spiritual healer who practices psychic surgery. His healing is through an entity claimed to be “Dr. Joseph Kahn,” whose healing resembles that of Philippine healers. At times, a real scalpel is manipulated; at other times, an invisible syringe or other apparatus is involved. Purported healings effected through Turloff’s mediumship include cases of fibroids in the womb, infected lungs, and liver tumors. “Dr. Kahn” is said to be one of a team of 18 spirit helpers. Turloff has demonstrated his healing before members of the Noah’s Ark Society for Physical Mediumship.

Turquoise

A number of ancient beliefs surround this stone. J. B. Van Helmont stated: “Whoever wears a Turquoise, so that it, or its gold-setting touches the skin, may fall from any height; and the stone attracts to itself the whole force of the blow, so that it cracks, and the person is safe.” Medieval writers stated that turquoise became paler if its owner was ill, lost color entirely at his or her death, but recovered color when placed upon the finger of a new and healthy owner. It was believed to be a good amulet for preventing accidents to horsemen or becoming tired. Another belief was that turquoise moved itself when any danger threatened its possessor. Turquoise originally came from Persia, where it would sometimes be engraved with a motto or a verse from the Koran. The stone was also prized by Native American healers.

Turvey, Vincent Newton (1873–1912)

A British seer who refused to be classified as a medium since he was never entranced or controlled, did not develop his gifts (which he was born with), functioned not by mental passivity but mental activity, and instead of being controlled was able to control others, as a spirit might. Supposedly Turvey saw phantoms as a child. One such experience was a vision of his father while singing in church as a choir boy; the father died at the same time three hundred miles away. At the age of ten Turvey lost his visionary faculty.

Turvey studied engineering. In 1902, while engaged in his profession, he suffered a serious accident. For many years, he lived alone in his garden, in a tent, and spent ten or twelve hours a day reading, writing, and meditating on occult things.

The result is described in his own words:

“After forty thousand hours on one topic, I think I can claim to be, in a small way, a yogi. My illness and my meditation have produced, or awakened, my psychic gifts; and all the Yoga-Vedic and Gnostic teachings which I now read (and much more besides) seem to be familiar to me. I seem to have evolved them in my own mind, during meditation from a sort of ‘memory.’ In fact I often pitch a book away and say ‘Why, I know all this,’ and yet I had not read it before. Many Eastern forms come and argue with me, and, of course, I learn from them; but they do not come to teach me as a guru would. They come ‘to help you to teach yourself in this present life.’ In a word, I am ‘Self-taught’; but I owe a great deal to Eastern forms, many of whom visit me and give tests of their identity by talking to me in their own languages; and I get the messages translated.”

Turvey affiliated with Spiritualism. The Bournemouth Society of Spiritualists, of which he was vice president from 1908, gave demonstrations of clairvoyance at the end of their Sunday service. Turvey announced from the platform the presence of spirit visitors before the service was over, so that those who recognized them could stay for a closer communion. Supposedly these spirits came to Turvey days before and impressed their appearance on his mind. Once a visitor appeared by the side of his bed, which was only a few inches from the wall. Turvey wrote: “Sometimes, they will come at dead of night and wake me up; at other times they will come when I am alone in the tent in my garden, or in my drawing room, or, what is still more obliging of them, they will look in while passing when I have earthly visitors with me who can bear witness that I described the visitants to them, before I went to the hall!”

Turvey’s 1911 book records his experiences in long-distance clairvoyance, out-of-the-body travel, predictions, spirit seeing, and a variation of clairvoyance he termed “phone-voynance.” A voucher was printed in the book by four men who testified to having inspected the original documents and controlled their reproduction. The journalist and Spiritualist W. T. Stead, declared “Mr. Turvey is a man of truth, that his testimony is trustworthy evidence as to what is within his own knowledge, and that the witnesses’ letters which are held for the scrutiny of inquirers are the genuine epistles of credible witnesses.”

Sources:

Tutankhamen Curse

On November 26, 1922, in the Valley of the Kings, the tomb of Tutankhamen, the boy king of Egypt, was discovered. After three thousand years, four burial chambers were uncovered with nearly five thousand objects of gold, alabaster, lapis lazuli, and onyx, in addition to the mummy of the king and his gold mask. These treasures have expanded modern understanding of the art, life, religion, and history of ancient Egypt.

Two men were responsible for this discovery—Howard Carter, a British painter and archaeologist; and Sir Andrew Herbert, fifth Earl of Carnarvon. A few weeks after the excavation, Lord Carnarvon died suddenly, and this event, together with the deaths of various other individuals associated with the Tutankhamen tomb, started the story of a “Curse of the Pharaohs.”

One writer claimed the curse was responsible for the lives of some three dozen scientists, archaeologists, and scholars.

Who Was Tutankhamen?

It has been claimed that Tutankhamen was a great king because his tomb contained such treasures. Others have suggested he was the pharaoh of Exodus and it was his wife, Ankhnesepa-Aten, who found Moses in the bulrushes and raised him. In fact, both claims are incorrect. Tutankhamen reigned during the Eighteenth Dynasty of the New Kingdom. He was a boy of nine when he came to the throne and his reign lasted nine years, from about 1334 to 1325 B.C.E. He was not the ruler of Egypt during the exodus described in the Bible.

It is believed Tutankhamen’s name was originally Tutankh ("perfect life of Aten"). He married Ankhnesenpa-Aten when a child. He was a daughter of King Amenhotep IV (1372-1334 B.C.E.) who had earlier attempted to supplant the god Amun by the Aten, in the process changing his name to Akhenaten ("pleasing to the Aten"). At that time, the priests of Amun had more power than the ruler, so as Akhenaten he reinforced his rule and suppressed worship of Amon.

During the reign of Tutankhamen, the priesthoods dissolved by Akhenaten were partially reinstated and new images installed in temples. However, in giving pride to Amun, there was no attempt to destroy the worship of Aten, only a displacement of Aten’s former status as principal or sole god. Many of the treasures from the tomb of Tutankhamen indicate tolerance toward former gods. One inscription on a golden throne calls Tutankhamen “image of Ra, beloved of the gods;” and a cabinet inscription states “eldest son of Aten in heaven.” The memory of Akhenaten is also preserved in tomb objects such as a box bearing the name of Akhenaten, and an artist’s palette that belonged to Akhenaten’s eldest daughter Meritaten.

Tutankhamen died before a grand burial tomb could be prepared. Its importance lies in its contents—chariot bi-panes, state chairs, gilded couches, royal apparel, trinkets, cosmetics, statues, alabaster vessels, even food, and the golden mask of Tutankhamen himself. Most of the other royal tombs had been ravaged by robbers over the centuries.

The Excavators

Credit for discovery of the tomb was given to Howard Carter. Born May 9, 1875, in Swanfield, Norfolk, England, he was the son of a watercolor painter. At the age of 17, he was hired by Percy E. Newberry of the Egyptian Museum of Antiquities to work at the British Museum, London, to make finished drawings of Egyptian inscriptions. Carter later became assistant to Sir William Flinders Petrie, an Egyptologist, traveling in Egypt and recording in watercolors the paintings and inscriptions in temples. In 1899, at the age of 25, Carter became inspector of monuments in Upper Egypt and Nubia, employed by the Antiquities Service, which was then administered by the French authorities. In 1904, Britain and France partitioned North Africa, the French assuming control of Morocco, and the British of Egypt. But French rights in archaeology continued, and authorization to excavate tombs required the investigator be accompanied by an inspector of antiquities and share the finds with the Antiquities Service on behalf of the Egyptians. While Carter was an inspector of monuments, he worked for several seasons excavating the Valley of the Kings with American millionaire Theodore M. Davis. After opposition from the Egyptians, the French, and the newspapers, Carter lost his position as an inspector in 1903 due to an incident in a tomb at Saqqara.

For a time, Carter sold watercolor paintings to tourists and made paintings for Theodore Davis. In 1907, he stated working for the amateur archaeologist Carnarvon. George Edward Stanhope Molyneux Herbert became fifth Earl of Carnarvon on the death of his father in 1890. After an automobile accident he was advised by physicians to avoid the damp English winter and spent a year in Egypt, where he first became attracted to archaeological excavation.

The joint explorations of Carnarvon and Carter began in the winter of 1907–08, with excavations in the Valley of Der al-Bahrain. The Theban Tombs, from 1910–11, they discovered the unfinished temple of Hatshepsut and other remains. In 1911–12, new ground was broken with excavations of Nios near the Nile delta. It was thought by 1922 that there were no more royal tombs in the Valley of Kings, but Carter argued otherwise, and in December 1922 discovered the tomb of Tutankhamen.

On November 6, Carter sent a telegram to Carnarvon in England: "AT LAST HAVE MADE WONDERFUL DISCOVERY IN VALLEY. A MAGNIFICENT TOMB WITH SEALS IN-TACT. RE-COVERED SAME FOR YOUR ARRIVAL. CONGRATULATIONS." Carnarvon went to Egypt and 29 days later the entrance to the tomb was finally excavated and Carter entered, accompanied by Carnarvon, Lady Evelyn Herbert (Carnarvon’s sister), and an assistant.

On February 17, 1923, Carter and Carnarvon entered the main burial chamber of Tutankhamen and found a wall of gold. The work of describing, classifying, and removing the shrine contents, including the mummy of the pharaoh himself, could not take place for another season. There were also disputes between Carter and the Egyptian authorities, notably with the Frenchman Pierre Lacau, appointed head of the Antiquities Service in Cairo in 1917. These disputes concerned the ownership of the antiquities in the Tutankhamen tomb—Carnarvon and Carter claiming rights to a proportion of them and Lacau maintaining all the contents were the property of the Antiquities Service and the Cairo Museum.

In March 1935, Carnarvon and Evelyn left for Cairo so that Carnarvon could negotiate for a “proper division” of the tomb antiquities. However, Carnarvon did not live to see the conclusion of the dispute or even the removal of the golden funerary mask of the Tutankhamen mummy. In April, he became seriously ill after his razor nicked a mosquito bite. Infection set in, followed by pneumonia. He died on April 6. The newspapers printed a story that he was a victim of the “Curse of the Pharaohs.”

The Legend of the Curse of the Pharaohs

Curses were certainly known in ancient Egypt, usually invoking the wrath of the gods against those seeking to embezzle funds for guards, occasionally against thieves. Many tombs were robbed by grave robbers over the centuries. An inscription of the Fifth Dynasty of the Old Kingdom, made over five thousand years ago, reads: “As for any people who shall take possession of this tomb as their mortuary property or shall do any evil thing to it, judgment shall be had with them by the great God.”

In his book The Curse of the Pharaohs (1975), Philipp Vandenberg states there were 22 other “mysterious” deaths of individuals associated with the tomb. The American archaeologist Arthur Mace, who had assisted Carter in opening the tomb, suffered from exhaustion after the death of Carnarvon and died into a deep coma, dying in the same hotel as Carnarvon. George J. Gould, son of the financier, visited the tomb and died the next day after a high fever ascribed to bubonic plague. Joel Wood, a British industrialist who visited the tomb, died of a high fever on the ship carrying him back to England. Archibald Douglas Reid, a radiologist who worked on the Tutankhamen mummy, suffered from weakness, and died after returning to England.

Other fatalities associated with the tomb included a Professor Winlock, a Professor Foucart, and archaeologists Barry Davies, Edward Hurkett, and Douglas Heseltine. Lady Alimina, died in 1929, apparently from an insect bite, and Carter’s secretary Richard Bethell died the same year with a circulatory collapse. When Bethell’s father heard the news, he committed suicide, and reportedly his hearse ran over a boy on the way to the cemetery.

Vandenberg further claimed Carter had found a clay tablet in the ante-chamber with an inscription that said “Death will slay with his wings whoever disturbs the peace of the pharaoh.” However, such a tablet was never cataloged and there is no trace of it.

One newspaper reported there was a hieroglyphic curse on the door of the inner shrine: “They who enter this sacred tomb shall wither and he comes in, I am for the destruction of the deceased and I will kill all those who cross this threshold,” but the last phrase was another invention.

“The Curse of the Pharaohs” became a newspaper topic for many years and every death of an individual even distant associated with the tomb long after the excavation was solemnly recorded as another victim of the curse.

Some of these claims were remote. They included the friend of a tourist who had entered the burial chamber; the friend was knocked down by a Cairo taxi cab. An associate curator of Egyptology at the British Museum in London died peacefully in his bed, while an Egyptologist in France died of old age—both were reported as curse victims. A workman in the British Museum was said to have died suddenly while labeling objects from the tomb—although the British Museum did not have any of the Egyptian antiquities. For some time, such stories panicked collectors of Egyptian antiquities, who hurriedly donated their souvenirs to museums.

Carnarvon’s son was interviewed on NBC Television in New York on July 14, 1977, and questioned about the “curse.” Carnarvon’s son stated he “never believed it nor disbelieved it,” but added that he would “not accept a million pounds to enter the tomb of Tutankhamen in the Valley of the Kings.” A New York Daily News report claimed that the same evening, the younger Lord Carnarvon was attending a dinner in an apartment high above Manhattan and looked out over the city and saw all the lights flicker and black out. After candles were lit, he said to his hosts: “It is again the curse of Tutankhamen.” However, Carter lived for 17 years after his great discovery, dying March 2, 1939, in his mid-sixties.

For decades, relics of Tutankhamen remained in the Cairo Museum, limited by space, and many objects were not even displayed. In June 1974, President Richard M. Nixon visited Egypt, where President Anwar Sadat suggested an exhibition of the masterpieces of Tutankhamen in the United States could affirm the friendly accord and goodwill between the two nations.

The subject of “King Tut’s Curse” has been raised from time to time and still has believers. The term is also used by travelers in the Middle East to describe the hazard of diarrhea, also known in Mexico as “Montezuma's Revenge.”

Sources:

Tuttle, Hudson (1836–1910)

American seer of the early days of Spiritualism. Tuttle was born October 4, 1836, in Berlin Heights, Ohio, and spent his early years in a wilderness on the southern shores of Lake Erie. His father’s house was the headquarters for itinerant Unitarian preachers and the atmosphere was burdened with dogmatic disquisitions. As a result young Tuttle became at an early age skeptical of organized religion.

Tuttle attended his first Spiritualist séance at the home of a retired Congregational minister who had heard of the Rochester rappings and called in a few friends for an experiment. Tuttle fell into trance and wrote spirit messages automatically. Simultaneously with his trance work, he began a scientific work, automatic writing, raps developed and the table moved. The séances were free. The communicators, in hours of seclusion, were his teachers. “It was my only source of knowledge,” he wrote in the preface to his book Arama of Spirituition (1871), “for I had access to few books. I had attended school eleven months in all, six of which were at a district school, and five at a small academy.”

In 1857, he married Emma Rood, writer, lecturer on education, composer of songs, and a frequent contributor to the Spiritualist press.

The first article Tuttle published was on prayer in The Spiritual Telegraph. He often wrote and rewrote a script several times before the communicator would declare the result satisfactory. He began writing a story founded on spirit life. It was entitled Scenes in the Spirit World (1855). In England it was published under the title Life in Two Spheres (1855). After completing it, he began a scientific work, Arama of Nature, 178.

His impression was that the French naturalist Lamarck and Alexander von Humboldt, along with other intelligences, were associated in the production of the book. But he knew nothing of the great minds. He was only entering his eighteenth year.

When the book was completed, his spirit guides declared it to have been written by great minds. He was only entering his eighteenth year. Both Büchner and Darwin were unacquainted with the medium “Mrs. Chenoweth” (see Tuttle’s. She had strongly wished him to communicate through her. All this furnished an ideal condition for subconscious production.

Twain, Mark (1835–1910)

Pseudonym of author Samuel Langhorne Clemens. Throughout his life, the great humorist and observer of the world around him often reflected upon the psychic and metaphysical events of which he was aware. In 1880 he wrote an article on “mental telegraphy” that related a personal experience of telepathy. He also had a vivid premonitory dream of the death of his brother Henry. Twain was an early and long-term member of the Society for Psychical Research, London.

After his death, various posthumous communications were written. In 1917, the story Jap Herven was published in New York, purporting to come from the discarnate Mark Twain, as received by Emily Grant Hutchings and Lola V. Hays. Hutchings, the recorder of the Patience Worth material of Pearl Lenore Curran of St. Louis, was herself an author who greatly admired Mark Twain. She had a keen sense of somewhat similar humor and a strong tinge of melancholy like Mark Twain’s. She had strongly wished him to communicate through her. All this furnished an ideal condition for subconscious production.

James H. Hyslop resolved the problem by interesting cross-reference experiments. The two women received the communications through the ouija board; the presence of both of them was necessary to operate it. They were brought by Hyslop to Boston. He gave each woman, at separate times, five sittings with the medium “Mrs. Chenoweth” (see Minnie M. Soulé). But he did not admit them to the séance room until “Mrs. Chenoweth,” who knew nothing of them, went into trance, and he made them sit behind her where they could not be seen.

Instead of the usual family relatives, Mark Twain purported to communicate with each of them. He used many of the same expressions that came through the ouija board, mentioned incidents in his life to prove his identity, described what he gave to Hyslop in a St. Louis sitting.

Twain, Mark

“The outcome of the experiments,” concluded Hyslop in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (July 1917), “is that there is abundant evidence that Mark Twain is behind the work connected with his name, though the student of psychology would probably find abundant evidence that it was colored more or less by the mind through which it came.” The conclusion also applied to Brent Roberts, another posthumous Mark Twain novel that the two women received.

In Hyslop’s Contact with the Other World (1919), a long chapter was devoted to other evidential spirit communications from Mark Twain.

Sources:
Mark Twain. ———. ———. ———.

Tweedale, Charles L(akeman) (d. 1944)
Prominent British writer on Spiritualism. He was educated at Durham University, England, and became the Church of England vicar of Weston, Orely, York. Tweedale, a versatile man, he was an astronomer, musician, and inventor. He published books on astronomy and discovered a comet. He was also a close friend of psychic photographer William Hope, whom he defended against hostile criticism. He died June 29, 1944.

Sources:

Tweedale, Violet (1862–1936)
British novelist, granddaughter of author Robert Chambers, and a convinced Spiritualist. She attended séances with Lord Haldane, Arthur Balfour, and his brother James Balfour, W. E. Gladstone held sittings in her house. Most of her experiences came through the mediumships of Charles Will-liams and Cecil Husk.

She was a powerful witness in the famous trial when trance speaker Meurig Morris sued the Daily Mail for libel in 1932. In addition to many poems and novels, she published over 30 books on Spiritualist subjects. She died December 10, 1936.

Sources:

Twigg, Ena (1914–ca. 1984)
Well-known British medium. Born in Kent, England, January 6, 1914, she was a member of a psychic family in which the parents and other children had sensitive ability. She played with spirit children at the age of seven and at 14 predicted the death of her father. Her psychic gifts disturbed her marriage to Harry Twigg.

After a serious illness, spirit visitors assured her that she would be restored to health; when she was eventually healed she made a decision to devote her life to helping other people. She became a member of the Marylebone Spiritualist Association and in due course opened her own healing clinic.

Sources:

Twins
It has long been believed that there is a special relationship between identical twins, a belief that has become the subject of contemporary research from a variety of approaches. Research has suggested that there are startling correspondences between twins’ temperaments, personalities, lifestyles, and even sensitivity to names.

In 1979, the University of Minnesota began a study of identical twins in which twins separated for years were investigated and subjected to medical and psychological tests. The results of nine identical twin studies, involving over 15,000 questions, demonstrated affinities between the subjects.

For example, unknown to each other, Jim Spring and Jim Lewis were raised in different Ohio towns. Both married and divorced women named Linda and chose women named Betty as second wives. Each of the two Jims named his son James Allan and had a favorite dog named Toy. Both twins had remarkable similarities in medical profiles, including identical blood pressures and sleep and heartbeat patterns. Both also suddenly put on 10 pounds at the same time in their lives. At the age of 18, both Jim twins suffered similar syndromes of intermittent migraine headaches. Their drinking and smoking habits were also identical, and both chewed their fingernails. Another pair of identical twins, Jack and Oscar, were raised apart with completely different backgrounds. Jack was brought up as an American Jew by his father after his parents separated; the mother took Oscar back to Germany (where she had been born) where he was raised as a Catholic, later joining the Nazi Youth party. In adult life, Jack ran a store in San Diego, while Oscar became a factory supervisor in Germany. But both men wore wire-rimmed eyeglasses and mustaches and two-pocket shirts with epaulets. Both were absentminded and had other matching idiosyncrasies, such as storing rubber bands on their wrists.

Bridget and Dorothy were identical British twins who were raised apart after being separated soon after birth, yet when they met in 1941, each wore two bracelets on one wrist, and a watch and bracelet on the other. Each sister also wore seven rings. Each twin had married and had a family of a boy and a girl. The sons had been christened Richard Andrew and Another pair of identical twins, Jack and Oscar, were raised apart with completely different backgrounds. Jack was brought up as an American Jew by his father after his parents separated; the mother took Oscar back to Germany (where she had been born) where he was raised as a Catholic, later joining the Nazi Youth party. In adult life, Jack ran a store in San Diego, while Oscar became a factory supervisor in Germany. But both men wore wire-rimmed eyeglasses and mustaches and two-pocket shirts with epaulets. Both were absentminded and had other matching idiosyncrasies, such as storing rubber bands on their wrists.

Bridget and Dorothy were identical British twins who were raised apart after being separated soon after birth, yet when they met in 1941, each wore two bracelets on one wrist, and a watch and bracelet on the other. Each sister also wore seven rings. Each twin had married and had a family of a boy and a girl. Each twin had married and had a family of a boy and a girl. The sons had been christened Richard Andrew and Another pair of identical twins, Jack and Oscar, were raised apart with completely different backgrounds. Jack was brought up as an American Jew by his father after his parents separated; the mother took Oscar back to Germany (where she had been born) where he was raised as a Catholic, later joining the Nazi Youth party. In adult life, Jack ran a store in San Diego, while Oscar became a factory supervisor in Germany. But both men wore wire-rimmed eyeglasses and mustaches and two-pocket shirts with epaulets. Both were absentminded and had other matching idiosyncrasies, such as storing rubber bands on their wrists.

Sources:
Watson, Peter. Twins: An Investigation Into the Strange Coinci-

Twichell, (John) Paul (ca. 1918–1971)
Founder of the ECKANKAR, a spiritual movement teaching the “ancient science of soul travel.” ECKANKAR is derived from the Radhasoami religion of the Punjab area of India. Twitchell was born in Paducah, Kentucky, around 1918. He joined the navy during World War II and then pursued a career as a journalist and the life of spiritual seeking after the war.

His spiritual search led him to the Church of Absolute Monism, a Hindu offshoot of the Self-Revelation Fellowship. He became editor of the church’s periodical, The Mystic Cross, but came into conflict with the church’s founder, Swami Premamanda, in 1955. Shortly after leaving, he became a disciple of Kirpal Singh, a teacher in the Radhasoami tradition and head of the Ruhani Satsang. He also became involved with the recently founded Church of Scientology.

In 1964 Twitchell and his wife, Gail Atkinson, moved to San Francisco, where he became an independent Radhasoami teacher, and the following year founded ECKANKAR and announced that he was the Living ECK Master. He claimed that he had originally heard of soul travel from his foster father, who learned about it from an Indian holy man, Sudar Singh, originally from Allahabad, whom Twitchell later met in Paris, France. He further claimed that he had been taught soul travel by a mysterious Tibetan master named Rehbaz Tarzs, who first appeared to Twitchell in 1944 while Twitchell was serving on a U.S. Navy vessel in the Pacific. He visited India after World War II and upon returning to the United States began writing books allegedly dictated by Rehbaz Tarzs.

Twitchell authored a number of books in the years after the founding of ECKANKAR. He died unexpectedly on September 17, 1971, by which time ECKANKAR had become a successful new religion. He was succeeded by Darwin Gross as the new Living ECK Master.

During the 1980s David Christopher Lane made serious charges of plagiarism against Twitchell. He suggested that Twitchell not only took his basic teachings from the Radhasoami tradition but also plagiarized lengthy passages from the books of several prominent authors. Lane’s well-documented charges caused much dissension within the movement and a reappraisal of Twitchell’s career.

Sources:

TWO See True World Order

Two Worlds (Magazine)

Spiritualist monthly magazine, founded in 1887 as a weekly newspaper in Manchester, England, by Emma Hardinge Britten. Another weekly paper under the same title was started in London in 1858 at the beginning of the movement in England but lasted for only a brief period. It was, for many years, the voice of Spiritualists in the north of England (the movement being dominated at the time by the London centers). It was edited for some time by Ernest W. Oaten. Beginning in the 1930s it had as its major rival Psychic News, the newspaper edited by Maurice Barbanell in London. However, in 1966 the editorial offices of the two periodicals were united. Two Worlds was transformed into a monthly magazine, and Barbanell edited both until his death in 1981. Tony Ortzen is the current editor. Address: 7 The Leather Market, Weston St., London, SE1 3ER England. Website: http://www.users.globalnet.co.uk/~tortzen/.

Sources:

March 8, 2000.

Tyl, Noel (1936–)

American astrologer, born in West Chester, Pennsylvania, on December 31, 1936. Tyl attended Harvard University and received his B.A. in psychology in 1958. He worked in business for more than a decade before becoming a writer-astrologer in 1970. He developed a relationship with Llewellyn Publications, a leading publisher of astrology literature, which, beginning in 1973 with Horoscope Construction, released a 12-volume series entitled The Principles and Practice of Astrology. The series largely established his reputation in the field. Through the 1980s he edited Astrology Today, Llewellyn’s astrology magazine.

In addition to operating as a consulting astrologer, Tyl has continued to write. Additional titles include The Horoscope as Identity (1974), The Missing Moon (1979), and Holistic Astrology: The Analysis of Inner and Outer Environments (1980). He has worked to redefine astrology as a psychological counseling practice.

Sources:

Typtology

The science of communicating with spirits by means of raps, various codes being arranged for the purpose. The sitters may read the alphabet aloud, or slowly pass a pencil down a printed alphabet, and the rappings will indicate letters that form a message or an answer to some question. One rap may be made to mean “yes,” two “no,” and so on. Some relationship seems to exist between such rapping and the use of the divining rod and pendulum in dowsing.

Tyromancy (or Tiromancy)

An old form of divination based on interpretations from cheese. Unfortunately, the method does not appear to have been recorded.

Tyrrell, G(orge) N(ugent) M(erle) (1879–1952)

Mathematician and parapsychologist. He was a member of the council of the Society for Psychological Research (SPR), London (1940–52), and was elected its president in 1945. Born in 1879, he was educated at Haileybury School, Seafield Engineering College, and London University (where he attained degrees in physics and mathematics). A pioneer in the study of wireless telegraphy, Tyrrell worked under Guglielmo Marconi. He served in the British Army during World War I.

Tyrrell joined the SPR in 1908. After conducting a series of experiments in telepathy and precognition with Gertrude Johnson, he devoted himself exclusively to parapsychical research. He undertook further experiments with Johnson in 1924, using quantitative methods, and invented mechanical devices to randomize selection and scoring. His apparatus, unfortunately, was destroyed during an air raid in World War II, and in the years after the war he concentrated on the theoretical and philosophical aspects of extrasensory perception. Out of this period came possibly his single most important volume, Apparitions (1953), cited for its clarity in integrating data. He died October 29, 1952.

Sources:

——. Grades of Significance. N.p., 1930.

U.S. Psychotronics Association

Founded in 1975 for persons interested in the study of psychotronics, “the science of mind-body-environment relationships, concerned with the interactions of matter, energy and consciousness,” psychic phenomena, free energy systems, radionics, and alternative health methodologies.

It provides a forum for the exchange of current research developments in psychotronics; seeks to maintain high standards of ethical, humanitarian, and scientific practices in the study and application of psychotronics; promotes standardization in investigation, testing, reporting, and evaluation of psychotronics; and preserves the history of the field.

The association promotes continuing education and training of members, presents members’ views to the government, the public and other organizations, bestows research awards, and makes available cassette recordings of conference lectures. Research areas include: anti-gravity, agri-radionics, free energy, psychic detectors, psychic instrumentation (hardware types), radionics, and tesla waves. It publishes a quarterly newsletter and can be contacted at PO Box 45, Elkhorn, WI 53121. Website: http://www.elknet.net/uspa.

Übersinnliche Welt, Die (Journal)

Former German Spiritualist monthly, founded in 1893. It changed into a biweekly in 1902 and merged with Psyche under the title Psyche und die Übersinnliche Welt.

Udumbara (Center)

Alternative name for the Minnesota Zen Meditation Center and also the title of their biannual periodical.

UFO See Unidentified Flying Objects and the Occult

UFOCAT

Computerized files of reports of UFOs and related material, maintained by the Center for UFO Studies and Dr. Donald A. Johnson. UFOCAT99 contains over 109,000 UFO reports and related information, which may be retrieved by date, geographic location, and special features. The files are available at minimum cost to serious researchers. Inquiries concerning UFOCAT should be directed to the J. Allen Hynek Center for UFO Studies, 2457 W. Peterson Ave., Chicago, IL 60659.

The UFO Examiner (Journal)

Former quarterly publication of Private UFO Investigations, a group concerned with UFO reports and international sightings, headquartered in Hazelton, Iowa.

UFOIN See UFO Information Network

UFO Information Network (UFOIN)

Name adopted in the late 1970s by the Page Research Library. It published a newsletter, which merged with Ohio Sky Watcher in 1979 to become UFO Ohio. UFOIN, which existed only a few years, collected and collated information on UFOs and other Fortean phenomena. It was headquartered in Rome, Ohio.

UFO Information Retrieval Center

Founded in 1966 to collect, analyze, publish, and disseminate information on reports of unidentified flying objects and related anomalies. The center compiles statistics, conducts research programs, maintains a library and an on-line data base, runs children’s and students’ services, and gives referrals. From time to time it publishes Reference for Outstanding UFO Sighting Reports. Address: 3131 W. Cochise Dr., No. 158, Phoenix, AZ 85051-9501.

UFO Investigator (Newsletter)

Longtime monthly newsletter of National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena. It was discontinued in 1980, a short time before the organization folded.

UFO Magazine

UFO Magazine, the primary English-language UFO newsstand periodical as the twenty-first century begins, was founded in 1985 as a quarterly California UFO periodical, but quickly moved to national prominence as the abduction phenomenon renewed public interest in extraterrestrial explanations of UFOs. Editor Vicki Ecker also demonstrated both a knowledge of the field and a genuine interest in reporting the news. Several other newsstand periodicals, since defunct, played to outlandish and sensational accounts of UFOs and contactees, and were not above fabricating stories to fill space. The magazine has adopted an objective approach that is nevertheless sympathetic to the ufological enterprise.

Each issue of UFO Magazine is built around a half-dozen or more feature articles that highlight spectacular sightings, interview celebrities concerning their views on UFOs, focus on issues of government involvement in (and cover-up of) UFO research, debate controversies within the ufological community, and inform readers on various related topics such as time travel or conspiracy theories. The magazine covers more prominent UFO conventions, especially those on America’s West Coast, and provides a synopsis of presentations and pictures of participants. Regular columns review new UFO books, highlight prominent websites, and provide contact information on UFO organizations.
In the late 1990s, the magazine launched its own website at http://www.ufomag.com/. It provides space for timely items of interest, guest opinions, an archive of past articles from the magazine, and editorials by Ecker, her husband Don Ecker, the magazine’s research director, and publisher William J. Birnes. Also, Peter Robbins continues his timely surveys of other UFO-related websites in a regular page on the UFO Magazine website. UFO Magazine may be contacted at 5455 Centinela Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90066.

Sources:
- UFO Magazine. Los Angeles, California. n.d.

UFO Magazine New Bulletin
Former quarterly publication reporting UFO sightings, with critical analyses, published in Cleveland, Ohio.

UFO Nachrichten (Journal)
German bimonthly publication concerned with UFOs. Last known address: Karl L. Veit, Deutsche UFO-Studienvereinigung, Verlag Postfach 13185, 6200 Wiesbaden 13, Germany.

UFO Newsclipping Service
Monthly publication that reproduces North American and other newspaper reports of UFOs and other related unexplained phenomena. It may be ordered from 2 Caney Valley Dr., Plummer, AR 72127-8725.

UFO-Nyt (Journal)
Danish-language quarterly periodical dealing with unidentified flying objects. It is published by Skandinavis UFO Information, Postbox 6, DK-2820, Gentofte, Denmark. Website: http://www.ufo.dk.

UFO Quebec (Periodical)
Bilingual (French and English) Canadian quarterly concerned with UFOs. Last known address: Claude McDuff, BP 53, Dollard-des-Ormeaux, PQ Canada H9G 2H5.

UFO Reporter (Journal)
Former bimonthly publication reporting UFO sightings and related events, published in La Mesa, California.

UFO Research Newsletter
Former monthly journal edited by Gordon I. R. Lore from Los Angeles, California.

Uhlund, Ludwig (1787–1862)
Famous German poet who figured posthumously in an interesting lawsuit in Berlin over ownership of a holograph parchment apront obtained in a séance with Else Arneheim in 1920. The medium, in trance, described the presence of Ludwig Uhlund. There appeared in her hands, which were tightly clasped by a well-known German author, a yellowed piece of parchment with two short verses scrawled on it, signed: “Uhlund, 1920.”

The handwriting was pronounced identical to that of Uhlund’s, the parchment was of his era, and the verses were in genuine Uhlund style. A clairvoyant, to whom Uhlund’s handwriting and the parchment were shown, declared after touching both papers that they were written by the same hand but that a long interval had elapsed between the writing of them.

The German author whose hand had encircled the medium’s when the parchment appeared claimed the paper. Since witnesses stated that it had been thrust into the medium’s hand, the court decided that the parchment belonged to the medium.

UHSC See Universal Hagar’s Spiritual Church

Ullman, Montague (1916– )
Psychiatrist, parapsychologist, and trustee of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was born on September 9, 1916, in New York City and studied at the City College of New York (B.S., 1935), New York University College of Medicine (M.D., 1938), and New York Medical College (1948). After graduation, he joined the psychoanalytic faculty of New York Medical College (1950-62). Having encountered psi events in his counseling work, he began to work with Gardner Murphy in exploring ESP experimentally. With Murphy and Laura Dale, he helped establish the medical section of the ASPR. The section lasted until 1953.

That same year, the REM (or rapid eye movement) stage of sleep was discovered. Ullman soon had the idea of using REM sleep in a controlled experiment in telepathy. With funds provided by the Parapsychology Foundation, Ullman, Karlis Osis, and E. Douglas Dean carried out the initial experiments. Murphy then arranged for a large grant for the establishment of the famous Dream Laboratory at Maimonides Hospital in New York City. Ullman became its initial director and an associate professor of psychiatry at Downstate Medical Center, State University of New York. The work of the dream laboratory produced some striking results, leading Ullman to conclude that altered states of consciousness, such as dreaming, were associated with ESP.

In 1966 Ullman was elected president of the Parapsychological Association. He is the author of numerous papers and several books, the most important for parapsychology being his work on dream telepathy.

Sources:

Umbanda
A contemporary Afro-Brazilian religion. Like Santeria, it is basically a possession religion in which members assume the form of deities both for worship and magic. It was founded in 1920, at a time when a wave of anti-European feelings was sweeping through the country, fanned by the inspiration of a young man, Zélio de Moraes, by an alleged Indian spirit. Among the initial leaders were former Spiritist mediums who became known for receiving spirits of cabelos, Brazilian Indians, and pretos velhos, former African slaves.

Umbanda's stronghold is Rio de Janeiro and the surrounding area in the south of Brazil. Worship is lively with much clapping, singing, and dancing.

Sources:

Ummo Hoax

Ummo is a planet that reputedly circles the star Iumma located some 14.6 light-years from Earth. Knowledge of this planet and the associated star emerged in 1965 through Spanish contactee Fernando Sesma, president of the Society of the Friends of Space, headquartered in Madrid. In 1967 Sesma let it be known that a spacecraft would appear near the city on the evening of June 1. Contact with the Ummites was quite different. Sesma had neither direct physical contact nor telepathic contact. Instead he was contacted via the mail or by telephone. He had received several lengthy documents in typescript that included descriptions of Ummo and insights into a variety of scientific, psychological, technological, and socio-political issues.

The messages from Ummo intersected with a series of UFO sightings that began on February 6, 1966. Several people saw the saucer near Alauche, Spain, and one, José Luis Jordan Peña, drew a sketch and reported it to the newspapers. The saucer was distinguished by a peculiar symbol. A second sighting occurred on June 1, 1967, at which time pictures were taken. One picture showed the same symbol Jordan had reported the previous year. Copies of the pictures were recovered by a Madrid newspaper photographer from an anonymous source. Adding to the mystery, a flyer signed with the name Henri Dagousset was circulated, suggesting that the 1967 UFO had left behind some small cylinders and asking anyone who found one to make contact through the general post office. One of these was sent anonymously to UFO author Marius Leuget. Inside the object was a piece of paper with the mysterious symbol.

In the days after the announcement of Sesma’s contact with the Ummites others began to report intriguing but anonymous contacts with people who also claimed to be from Ummo. In the meantime the lengthy messages from the Ummites continued to appear. By 1985 the number had grown to some 6,700.

While written from a knowledgeable standpoint, the Ummo communications were always troubling because of their lack of a means of independently verifying that they were from Ummite. None of those who wrote and circulated the documents allowed any direct contact. In addition, none of the other people who claimed contact were ever located. Then, the U.S.-based Ground Saucer Watch examined the pictures of the Ummo symbol and determined that they were taken of a small object held close to the camera. The saucer appeared to be an eight-inch plate with the symbol painted on it in ink.

In spite of the finding concerning the photographs and the lack of independent verification of either the sightings or the documents, the latter have been published in both English and Spanish. The Ummo material has subsequently been integrated into the large body of flying saucer contactee material and several websites have been placed on the Internet, including one detailing the Ummite philosophy at http://perso.wanadoo.fr/ummo.textes-essentiels/anglais/016.htm (as of December 1999).

Sources:

Underhill, Leah

Married name of Leah Fox, the eldest of the famous Fox sisters, who launched American Spiritualism. She became Mrs. Underhill by her third marriage. She published the book The Missing Link in Modern Spiritualism (1885; reprinted 1976).

Understanding Cults and Spiritual Movements (Research Publication Series)

A short-lived research journal published three times a year in the 1980s and designed to promote his perspective.

Understanding Cults and Spiritual Movements is . . . interested in promoting rational inquiries into the entire cult phenomenon. Editorially, it does not hold to any particular religious doctrine, nor does it have any church affiliation. Thus, in this way, it is an open system of study primarily concerned with documented appraisements which help in developing a keen sense of critical discrimination.”

Lane established a high standard of scholarly reporting and investigation. Lane has become a leading authority on the history of the Radhasoami spiritual movement, and much of the emphasis of Understanding Cults and Spiritual Movements was directed to an examination of the new religions that emerged out of that tradition. Most of the writings originally published in the 1980s have been republished as a book, Exposing Cults. Lane now teaches in Los Angeles.

Sources:

Understanding Magazine

Journal published into the 1980s by Daniel W. Fry, author of the book White Sands Incident (1954), in which he claimed contact with a UFO. Understanding explored the metaphysical ideas that grew out of Fry’s claimed contacts. It was the organ of World Understanding, the religious group Fry founded to promote his perspective.

Underwood, Peter

British writer on occultism and psychical investigation. He has also written on the cinema. He is a member of the Society for Psychical Research, the vice president of the Unitarian Society for Psychical Studies, and a former member of the Research Committee of the Psychic Research Organization. Underwood took part in investigations into a haunting, conducted worldwide tests in telepathy and ESP, and has compiled comprehensive files of hauntings in the British Isles. He has been president and chairman of the "Ghost Club" for many years. He has written a number of books, has lectured extensively on psychic matters, and made several hundred television appearances and radio broadcasts. His interests have reached far beyond ghosts and hauntings to include horror movies, vampires, and the occult in general.

Sources:

Unguents

Unguents

General term for ointments used in anointing ceremonies in various religions from Christianity to witchcraft. There are many kinds of magical unguents, each with its peculiar properties. Christians ascribed these compounds to the devil, who they believed invented them in order to harm the human race. According to medieval mythology, for example, one such unguent was composed of human (or even baby) fat and was said to be used by witches to enable them to fly through the air.

Many old recipes exist for unguents to induce sleep or visions, and these unguents were made from various obscure ingredients. Some of them are described in Des Science Occultes by Eusèbe Salverte (1829).

Sources:

Unidentified Flying Objects and the Occult

UFOs entered popular consciousness as “flying saucers”—the name of an anonymous wire-service reporter gave to the silvery discs Americans were reporting by the thousands in the last week of June 1947. At 3 p.m. on June 24 private pilot Kenneth Arnold, passing over Mount Rainier, Washington, spotted nine shiny disc-shaped objects flying in formation at what he conservatively estimated to be 1200 mph. The worldwide publicity resulting from his sighting, plus the other sightings that came in its immediate wake, brought the UFO age into being.

Since then UFOs have been the focus of furious controversy. Many dispute their existence, claiming that unexplained reports exist only because of inadequate investigation or insufficient data. Proponents counter that some of the best cases have withstood the most thorough scrutiny. The debate that began in earnest in 1947 continues, with essentially the same arguments being recycled endlessly.

Early Reports of UFOs

The UFO phenomenon did not spring abruptly into being one summer afternoon in 1947. In fact, the first UFO book, Charles Fort’s The Book of the Damned, was published in 1919. An eccentric social critic and keen satirist, Fort collected accounts of anomalous physical phenomena, including extraordinary aerial objects, and joked at scientists’ somewhat laborious efforts to account for them in prosaic terms. In The Book of the Damned and two subsequent books, New Lands (1929) and Lo! (1931), he theorized that visitors from other worlds are observing Earth.

Although it is often claimed that the phenomenon has been part of human history for many centuries, reports of anything resembling modern UFOs do not appear in print until the early decades of the nineteenth century. UFOs, in other words, seem to be a product of the modern age. In the twentieth century UFOs were called, successively, “airships,” “foo fighters,” and “ghost rockets” before “flying saucers” and (starting in the late 1940s, in U.S. Air Force memos) “unidentified flying objects” and (in the early 1950s) “UFOs.”

Postwar UFO Investigations

Between 1947 and 1969 the U.S. Air Force ran three successive public UFO projects. The first was code-named Sign, followed by Grudge (1949–52) and Blue Book (1952–69). A faction within Project Sign concluded by mid-1948 that UFOs were extraterrestrial spacecraft, but air force Chief of Staff Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg rejected its report. Reorganized as Grudge, the project took a pronounced anti-UFO line. Expecting a period for between 1951 and 1953, when Capt. Edward J. Ruppelt, neither pro- nor anti-UFO but committed to open-minded inquiry, directed the project (renamed Blue Book in March 1952), Air Force UFO investigations sought to debunk sightings and to explain them, if not always persuasively, as arising from misidentifications and hoaxes.

In 1966 the Air Force entered into a contract with the University of Colorado ostensibly to conduct an independent investigation under the leadership of physicist Edward U. Condon but in fact to find a way of ridding itself of its UFO albatross. The Condon committee, as it was called informally, soon became embroiled in controversy as Condon’s view, which echoed the Air Force’s in dismissing UFOs as nonsense, were known. Released in January 1969, the Condon Report (formally titled Scientific Study of Unidentified Flying Objects) declared the phenomenon nonexistent and further research pointless. The National Academy of Sciences endorsed the report’s conclusions, and in December 1969 the Air Force cited them when it announced it was closing Blue Book. To many it appeared as if the UFO controversy had ended.

Yet the Condon Report had its critics, including University of Arizona atmospheric physicist James E. McDonald and Northwestern University astronomer (and longtime Blue Book consultant) J. Allen Hynek, who pointedly observed that fully one-third of the cases in the report were listed as unsolved. They also contended that even some of the “explained” cases had been inadequately accounted for. In November 1970 a UFO subcommittee of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, explicitly rejecting Condon’s conclusions, remarked on the “small residue of well-documented but unexplainable cases which form the hard core of the UFO controversy.”

Hynek’s 1972 book The UFO Experience argued for renewed inquiry into what he thought might prove to be “not merely the next small step in the march of science but a mighty and totally unexpected quantum leap.”

A wave of sightings in the fall of 1977 served to revive popular interest. By the 1980s much of the fascination focused on abduction stories, reported in such widely read books as Budd Hopkins’s Missing Time (1981) and Whitley Strieber’s Communion (1987), and on alleged official cover-ups of UFO secrets, including the crash of an unidentified object near Roswell, New Mexico in 1947. In 1994 the Air Force acknowledged its cover-up of the so-called Roswell incident but said authorities at the time had been trying to conceal a classified project, Mogul, in which balloons were sent aloft to monitor possible Soviet nuclear tests. Three years later, in a follow-up study, it theorized that the humanoid bodies associated with the crash were "anthropomorphic test dummies that were carried aloft by U.S. Air Force high altitude balloons for scientific research"—though such tests had not occurred until six years later.

Though polls have consistently found that a significant plurality of Americans "believe" in UFOs, the scientific establishment continues to treat the phenomenon as illegitimate. In the fall of 1997, however, an international panel of scientists met in Tarrytown, New York, to examine a body of UFO evidence, mostly cases involving physical evidence, presented by a small group of ufologists. The panel's report, released in June 1998, cautiously stated that "unexplained observations" exist—and that further evidence of the best cases is worth science's time. Nonetheless, UFOs remain a fringe subject. Most scientific investigations of the phenomenon since the Condon period have been conducted by individuals acting on their own or in concert with such civilian groups as the J. Allen Hynek Center for UFO Studies (CUFOS), the Mutual UFO Network, and the Fund for UFO Research. CUFOS, founded by Hynek in 1973 (Hynek died in 1986), publishes the Journal of UFO Studies, the one refereed scientific journal devoted exclusively to the subject.

Schism: Science vs. the Occult

The controversy about UFOs and their meaning has generated innumerable books, scientific papers, popular articles, specialist periodicals in many languages, and Internet websites. Much of this writing, especially in mainstream magazines, newspapers, and journals, has been from a skeptical perspective. Active UFO proponents worldwide probably number no more than several thousand, and they range from the intellectually careful to the wildly credulous. The literature they have produced since the 1940s documents a variety of approaches to the questions raised by UFO reports.

Early on, active proponents divided themselves into two camps. The first, who in the 1950s started calling themselves "ufologists," held a relatively conservative view. In their reading of the phenomenon, UFOs were unexplained occurrences that merited conscientious study. Scientific procedures and logical analysis of the evidence would eventually yield a solution, which probably would validate the notion of extraterrestrial visitation. Ufologists thought communication with UFO intelligences might occur in the future but rejected claims that such contacts were already taking place.

The second camp consisted of individuals sometimes called "saucerians." Saucerians typically were enthusiasts of occultism and the paranormal. Many had backgrounds as active Theosophists, Spiritualists, or followers of other esoteric doctrines. Some believed—even before the Arnold sighting putting flying saucers on the world stage—that contact with otherworldly beings not only was possible but already had been accomplished. Such beliefs were not restricted to the spirit realm. The astral world (or all of these), were on the whole advanced and benevolent, concerned about the fate of the lowly, violent human race and engaged in efforts to guide our spiritual evolution. Moreover, paranormal investigators had already broached the idea that evil space and spirit entities, operating in concert with terrestrial allies, sought to exert malevolent influences over life on Earth.

Newcomers Fort's books, especially the collective omnibus The Books of Charles Fort (1941), influenced many individuals who would go on to become ufologists. If Fort had alerted them to reports of unusual aerial phenomena, he had also piqued their interest in other mysteries of the physical world: "falls" from the sky, monsters, archaeological anomalies, and more. The Fortean Society continued to collect and chronicle accounts of "Fortean phenomena" after Fort's death. In the early UFO age a few ufological theorists, most notably Morris K. Jessup (in The Case for the UFO, [1955], and The Expanding Case for the UFO, [1957]), sought a sort of unified field theory of anomalistics. Jessup wrote that spillage from "celestial hydroponic tanks" in alien spacecraft causes falls of fish, frogs, and other organic matter, and in his view archaeological evidence indicates that Earth once housed an advanced civilization which has now returned to its ancestral home in flying saucers.

Both ufologists and saucerians read Fate magazine, the first issue (Spring 1948) of which featured a long article by Kenneth Arnold. A digest-sized pulp quarterly which went bimonthly in 1949 and then monthly in 1952, Fate became the only national magazine to cover UFOs on a regular basis. It also reported on Fortean occurrences. Its main interest, however, was the psychic. Even ufologists who had no particular interest in such matters could not help being exposed to material on ghosts, poltergeists, ESP, and psychokinesis.

The most important early saucerian theorist was California occultist N. Meade Layne, founder of the Borderland Sciences Research Foundation. Layne, who tied the old occult idea of an "etheric world" to the new phenomenon of flying saucers, UFOs were "ether ships." They and their occupants, the "ether-people," came from a fourth dimension of existence or atomic vibration. They enter our realm by lowering their vibratory rates. Their realm exists as an etheric counterpart of our world. Their inhabitants are also our ethereal counterparts, but they are far more advanced than we are. In the Borderland publication Round Robin and in his book The Ether Ship and Its Solution (1950), Layne brings forth an eclectic mix of Theosophy, Swedenborgianism, Spiritualism, and Fortean events. Much of the material came from San Diego medium Mark Probert, who channeled teachings from alleged discarnates, among them the 500,000-year-old Himalayan philosopher Yada Di' Shī'tē.

Saucerians embraced Layne's ideas, and favorite Layne phrases such as "mat" (materialization) and "demat" (de-materialization) quickly entered their vocabulary. To southern California's contactee subculture, which arose in the early 1950s in the wake of claimed contacts (physical and telepathic) with space people by George Adamski, George Van Tassel, and others, Layne was an intellectual hero. To ufologists, who despised the contactees and all they stood for, he was just another crackpot. Yet a modified version of his idea, called the 4D (fourth-dimensional) theory, found favor among some ufological theorists. Here science fiction, another important influence on first-generation ufologists, was at least as much an inspiration as watered-down Borderland doctrine.

Generally speaking, ufologists and saucerians existed in separate universes, the former as would-be (and sometimes actual) scientists, the latter as more or less open occultists. In the 1960s, however, the lines began to blur, and occultism became a major force in ufology. Before then, ufologists had assumed that they were dealing with a reasonably straightforward issue. As they saw it, the UFO phenomenon consisted of credible observations of anomalous lights and structured objects in the sky. A number of prominent ufologists went further and included reports of humanoid occupants (later called "close encounters of the third kind") in their definition of the phenomenon. Unlike the golden-haired, angelic "space brothers" of contactee lore, these entities were both uncommunicative and strange—alien—to frighten those who encountered them. Such reports were consistent with the conservative version of the extraterrestrial hypothesis ufologists championed.

By the mid-1960s, however, new developments challenged ufology's dominant view that UFOs are space visitors. For one thing, UFO encounters seemed to be getting weirder. Persons of ostensible sanity and sincerity claimed to have been abducterved into UFOs and communicated with their crew, who gave odd, conflicting accounts of themselves, their motives, and their origins. Monstrous creatures showed up in areas where UFOs were being seen. UFO witnesses sometimes complained of postsighting visits by odd-looking, dark-suited individuals like the menacing "men in black" in saucerian literature. Some close-encounter percipients told investigators of poltergeistlike infestations in their homes.

Ultraterrestrials: A Malevolent Genesis

Many of these claims seemed incompatible with extraterrestrial theories, which started to fall out of favor in some circles of ufology. The principal figure in this revisionist ufology, at least initially, was writer John A. Keel, whose investigations in New York, West Virginia, and Ohio elicited scores of incredible tales that could not be shrugged off as the creations of lunatics and charlatans. On the other hand, these were extraordinary claims without extraordinary—or even ordinary—proof. Some more cautious would have hesitated to use such material, which existed only in testimony (admittedly, for all its fantastic qualities, at times compelling testimony), to construct a phantasmasgorical explanatory scheme. Brash and opinionated, Keel had no such reluctance.

Keel credited Layne with having "worked it all out in the early 1950s;" unfortunately, Keel added, "nobody would listen to him." But ufologists, Forteans, and psychic enthusiasts were listening to Keel, whose writing and pronouncements accorded traditional ufology as the domain of "buffs" who lacked the courage, the imagination, or even the mental health to face the truth. The truth according to Keel was that "ultraterrestrials" from the "superspectrum" (Keel's term for the etheric realm) are entering our world and doing terrible things to us: "We are biochemical robots helplessly controlled by forces that can scramble our brains, destroy our memories and use us in any way they see fit," he wrote. "They have been doing it to us forever." Here he parted radically from Layne, who believed the ethereans to be largely benevolent.

To Keel the contact claims loved by saucersians were not the hoaxes suspected by ufologists; they were actual experiences, but not the sort contactees thought they were. According to Keel, "The quasi-angels of Biblical times have become magnificent spacemen. The demons, devils, and false angels were recognized as liars and plunderers by early man. These same impostors now appear as long-haired Venusians."

He holds that Homo sapiens came into existence because of a war waged between ultraterrestrial factions. One faction took on human form so that it could more easily communicate with Neanderthals, whom this ultraterrestrial group wanted to enlist in its "physical army." An unintended consequence of this assumption of physical form was erotic desire. Sexual intercourse between the ultraterrestrials and the protohuman Neanderthals created the modern human race. As Keel tells the tale in Our Haunted Planet (1971), "This produced strange responses in the offspring's materialized nervous system. Emotions were born. Frequencies were changed. The direct control of the subconscious was driven from their bodies. They were trapped on Earth, unable to ascend the electromagnetic scale of consciousness and seek to affect human affairs. Though Vallee sees nothing inherently evil in this, his idea is strikingly like Keel's.

If Vallee at first looked less paranoid than Keel, elements of paranoia would slowly show up soon enough. In such subsequent books as Messengers of Deception (1979) and Revelations (1991), Vallee speculates that a shadowy human group, intent on manipulating societal consciousness (for reasons Vallee never explains), may be producing fraudulent UFO encounters and paranormal occurrences. It is even conceivable, Vallee hints, that this group has some kind of link with Magonia itself. This group or the UFO phenomenon or both—again Vallee is unclear—comprise a "control system" which communicates with us on a subliminal level, employing a symbolic language of "metalogic" as well as a "schedule of reinforcement." In his view, "UFOs can never be analyzed or conceived because they are the means through which man's concepts are being rearranged."

In time, Vallee persuaded his friend and onetime mentor Hynek that the quest for nuts-and-bolts extraterrestrial UFOs was doomed to certain failure. Particularly in his later years, Hynek's pronouncements took on an increasingly occultish cast. Sober material continued to appear, but increasingly Creighton's extremism had so alienated more conventional ufologists that the literary flagship of British ufology, the Fortean, and paranormal phenomena, and they are doing all manner of harm to the human race. Among other atrocious acts they are responsible for the AIDS epidemic. (Comparable views figure in the writings of Salvador Frizexdo, sometimes called the Latin American John Keel, and of California ufologist Ann Druffel.)

By 1984 Creighton's extremism had so alienated more conservative ufologists that one of them, John Rimmer, was led to observe, "No journal espousing the bizarre beliefs that are now emanating from [FSR]'s pages can be considered worthy to be the literary flag-ship of British ufology. From now on, it seems, it will be of interest largely to paranoid cultists, conspiracy-mongers, and students of fringe literature." FSR's readership and influence have declined markedly during Creighton's tenure.

More UFO Theories

Not all proponents of occult ufology and anomolists went as far as Creighton, but the notion that UFOs and other strange phenomena may be related, and all the product of paranormal forces, continued to have a wide appeal. Two popular British writers, Janet and Colin Bord, argued the case for a unified paranormal theory in a number of books. In Alien Animals (1981) they chronicle worldwide reports of anomalous creatures. All such reports, in their view, “have features in common which suggest they are all aspects of a single phenomenon, together with UFOs and other weird apparitions.” These otherworldly entities may feed on electrical power and “earth energies.”

Another theorist in what may be termed the parapsychological school, the late F. W. Holiday (author of The Dragons and the Disc, 1973), held that all through history good and evil entities have fought for the soul of the human race. To the ancients the disc represented the benevolent forces, the dragon the destructive ones, and the two have a sort of symbiotic relationship. Creatures such as the Loch Ness Monster are dragons in the literal sense—supernatural and evil. Discs, of course, are flying saucers. On June 2, 1973, accompanied by Holiday, the Rev. Dr. Donald Omand exorcised Loch Ness and subsequently other British and European lakes in which serpent-like beasts traditionally are believed to dwell.

Parapsychologist D. Scott Rogo offered a different sort of parapsychological theory to explain UFOs and Fortean occurrences. They are, he wrote, the product of mass psychic energy. If the psychokinetic energy emanated by the unconscious of a single individual can produce something so dramatic as a poltergeist, what might the psychokinetic of the entire human race produce? Rogo speculated in The Haunted Universe (1977) that “our entire culture may be projecting UFOs psychically” in response to our “needs and expectations.”

Psychologist Michael Grosso calls these psychokinetically generated entities “psychoterrestrials.” Their function is to affect the evolution of human consciousness, specifically to break down modern humanity’s excessive focus on materialism and rationalism. Grosso borrows here from the prominent Swiss psychologist-philosopher Carl G. Jung who, in Flying Saucers: A Modern Myth of Things Seen in the Skies (1959), characterizes the appearance of UFOs as indicative of “psychic change . . . which may be expected when the spring-point enters Aquarius.” According to Grosso the UFO image inspires fantasies and dreams and, more profoundly, draws archetypal material from deep within the collective unconscious. Symbolically the disc shape of the flying saucer represents psychic wholeness, a resolution of the conflict between rational (conscious) thought and intuitive (unconscious) feeling.

To Jung, however, the notion of a “materialized psychism”—Grosso’s “psychoterrestrial”—“opens a bottomless void under our feet” and “surpasses our comprehension.” It is absurd to propose that “psychic projections throw back a radar echo.” Since some UFOs seem to do just that, Jung wrote it is more probable that the “appearance of real objects affords an opportunity for mythological projections.” These “real objects” may be spacecraft whose presence only now is being noticed because our “earthly existence feels threatened [and] unconscious contents have projected themselves on these inexplicable heavenly phenomena and given them a significance they in no way deserve.”

But in Grosso’s more radical version of Jung’s hypothesis, psychic projections do show up on radar. “If UFOs are psychic events, he writes, “it is not absurd to suppose that their physical effects fit the UFO construct. To look like real spaceships, they obligingly affect radar.” Psychoterrestrials also manifest as religious visions, monsters, men in black, angels, and more—all “forces of rebirth” in the service of the consciousness transformation that will save us from otherwise certain self-destruction.

Unlike Jung, but in common with Grosso and other occult-oriented theorists, folklorist Peter M. Rojcewicz rejects extraterrestrial UFOs in favor of the psychoterrestrials Grosso describes. “In the narrative accounts born of the ongoing human interaction with other worldliness,” he writes in The Boundaries of Orthodoxy (1984), “we see the articulation over time of a mental argument, both for a more cooperative and harmonious existence on the one hand, and on the other, [for] a transcendent dimension of human will and imagination.” Rojcewicz defines “UFO phenomenon” as virtually any sort of encounter with paranormal entities. He argues, “The ‘UFO Phenomenon,’ so other, so here and now, reveals to us ourselves triggered by the embarrassment of unanswered longing and passionate collective desire.”

As UFO abduction stories came into prominence in the 1980s, they inspired a new round of both extraterrestrial and occult hypotheses. Among proponents of the latter, Grosso, Rojcewicz, and Dennis Stills quickly identified the abducting entities as psychoterrestrials, while Whitley Strieber, Kenneth Ring (The Omega Project, 1992), and John E. Mack (Abduction, 1994) believe them to be visitors from supernatural intelligences bent on human betterment. In this view, abduction experiences were a variety of contact claim. The aliens may be odder-looking than the ones who figure in classic contact tales, and they may not come from outer space, and their methods may be bizarre and even cruel in the short term, but their mission is the same.

Not all ufologists have embraced occultism. Indeed, occult ufology reached its peak in the late 1970s and early 1980s, when, with Keel and Vallee growing less active and publishing little, it was no longer a significant element of mainstream ufology. Meantime, extraterrestrial theories underwent something of a revival.

Just as significantly, by the late 1970s and early 1980s some disillusioned proponents of paranormal ufology had radically altered the occult model in a way that made it possible for them to deal with extreme experiential claims without also having to embrace unverifiable supernatural explanatory schemes. This was born the “psychosocial” school, which proposed what were represented as psychological solutions to entity encounters. Though these solutions were themselves often speculative, they were certainly not occult-based; yet they borrowed ideas from Vallee, Grosso, and Rojcewicz, especially the relationship between alleged human needs and encounter experiences. Essentially the psychosociologists disagreed with the occults on only point, albeit a crucial one: they did not believe dreams and visions could have physical properties.

Over time the psychosocial approach has evolved into more conventionally defined skepticism. It is more popular in Britain and the European continent than in the United States. Critics of occult ufology within the UFO literature have focused on its speculative nature and unfalsifiability. Beyond that, Keel and Vallee have been accused of using dubious material, including rumors and “false claims later exposed as hoaxes,” and arguing their cases. Critics have also objected that the evidence linking UFOs to other anomalous and paranormal manifestations is slight. In the Journal of UFO Studies Thomas E. Bullard writes of Rojcewicz and others: “Claims about reality demand proof on the same terms that we treat other scientific claims. What do we find instead? The phenomenological theories of alternate realities handicap themselves with a well-worn fatal combination of poor corroborative methodology and unsound structural components, and no algebra of apologetics can transform these two minuses into a plus. Speculations about the psychoid properties of archetypes cannot explain why the psychic effects are genuine, then prove to me first that archetypes exist and can have physical effects, or I will look for simpler and more direct solutions elsewhere. Using one unproven theory to support another is just a more sophisticated tautology, more verbose but ultimately no more informative about the physical world than identifying a bald man as hairless. In one sense this tack is even less informative. It clouds the basic questions with confusing masses of theory, distracting participants in the dialogue to talk only about theories and forget the real issues.” sort out the right from the wrong simply underscores the danger that we may become more deeply mired in sophistry than the Athenian Academy.

Another critic complained (in International UFO Reporters, January/February 1994) that occult theories turn the UFO argument on its head. The extreme experiential claims on which occult ufologists have been fixated comprise the least compelling evidence for the existence of UFOs. The best evidence—in the form of radar tracking, landing traces, photographs—suggests that at least some UFOs may be technological devices. The extreme claims, even when related by apparently sincere persons, amount only to stories. He went on:

“The fantastic entities described—fairies, merfolk, Blessed Virgins, apparitions of all kinds—do not bless us with physical evidence or even coherent pictures of themselves, their behavior, or their mission. Of such things we can say only that experiences of them are possible, but the question of whether these experiences are events is another matter altogether. If events—in other words, occurrences amenable to incorporation into consensus acceptance via traditional methods of scientific documentation—they would force us to reinvent the world, and they would give us real reason to believe fourth dimensions, ethereal realms, superspectrums, and Magonias are more than words without meaning or attempts to redesign God. Nothing we have seen so far calls on us to embark on so daring an undertaking.”

Meanwhile, the saucerian movement, which in its present form began in 1952 with contactees Adamski and Van Tassel, goes on. The flamboyant figures of the early years, often suspected (and often with reason) of conscious charlatanry, are gone, but channelers and visionaries in the thousands still claim to commune with space and extradimensional personalities. An enormous literature of contactee lore and philosophy circulates in books and newsletters and now on the Internet.

Sources

after which Moon selected a spouse for them. Most marriage partners were drawn from a different country or race. The church spawned a number of organizations, some evangelistic arms and others designed to carry out social policies. The church also made friends with many scholars and intellectuals. Most of the church’s programs are now organized into two structures, the International Cultural Foundation and the International Religious Foundation. The former has sponsored possibly the most successful program involving nonchurch members, the International Conference on the Unity of the Sciences.

The church has spread internationally and is active in over 150 countries. It has approximately five thousand members in the United States, and thousands in the hundreds of thousands worldwide. Address: HSA-UWC, 4 W. 43rd St., New York, NY 10036. Website: http://www.unification.org/.

Sources:

Union Esperista Cristiana de Filipinas, Inc.

The Spiritualist church to which many of the psychic surgeons in the Philippines belong. Current address unavailable.

Union Spirite Bordelaise (Journal)

Nineteenth-century Spiritualist journal, published in Bordeaux, France, incorporating other journals.

Union Spirite Francaise

French Spiritualist organization, active in the 1930s, founded by Léon Chevreuil, its president, and Jean Meyer, its vice president. It published Le Bulletin de l’Union Spirite Francaise from its headquarters at the Maison des Spirites, 8 Rue Copernie, Paris, a center founded by Jean Meyer.

United Lodge of Theosophists

The United Lodge of Theosophists is an independent theosophical organization founded in 1909 by Robert Crosbie (1849–1919). Crosbie belonged to the theosophical community created by Katherine Tingley at Point Loma, San Diego, California, in the early 1900s. Before long he argued that the community had lost its direction as originally established. He moved to Los Angeles, opened the United Lodge, and founded a publishing facility, the Theosophy Company. The first issue of Theosophy Magazine appeared in 1912.

Among the people attracted to the United Lodge was B. P. Wadia, an Indian who had held a high position in the Theosophical Society. Wadia eventually succeeded Crosbie as head of the lodge and is credited with turning it into an international organization. More recently a leadership role was assumed by Nandini, Iyer heads the lodge’s Santa Barbara group and founded Concord Press, which has developed an extensive publishing program of theosophical and related materials.

Sources:
United Spiritualist Church

The United Spiritualist Church was founded in 1967 by Rev. Floyd Humble, Edwin Potter, and Howard Mangan. Humble had earlier served a variety of independent Spiritualist congregations. The church affirms belief in Spiritualism and mediumship, both spiritual and physical, and the example of Jesus as a teacher, healer, and prophet. Humans are immortal and will bring the kingdom of God to Earth as they develop their spiritual sides.

The United Spiritualist Church differs from most Spiritualist churches by its development of a centralized form of government. Most Spiritualists have been organized into very loose fellowships of autonomous congregations. The United Church is headed by a presidency consisting of a president, first adviser-secretary, and second adviser-treasurer. They oversee the board of governors, which in turn guides the boards of publication, education, and church extension and missions. The board of governors is elected by the general conference. The church publishes a periodical, the Spiritual Outlook. Address: 813 W. 165th Pl., Gardena, CA 90247.

Sources:

Unity-and-Diversity World Council

An international coordinating body devoted to linking metaphysical and New Age groups. It was originally formed as the International Cooperation Council, and it has been led for three decades by its coordinator Leland Stewart. The council seeks to coordinate cultural and religious organizations that, in their own ways, "foster the emergence of a new universal person and a civilization based on unity in diversity among all peoples." Formed to propagate ideals of unity during International Cooperation Year, it was voted into being in 1965 by the General Assembly of the United Nations. The Unity-and-Diversity World Council continues its work of publicizing the aims and ideas of humanitarian groups that bring together the methods and discoveries of modern science with the insights of religion, philosophy, and the arts. Much of this synthesis is concerned with developing areas of awareness in human consciousness and unorthodox healing techniques.

In its early period, the council took part in a New Age Institute directed toward public and private education. A World-View Exploration Seminar, formed in spring 1969, grew out of the Fifth Annual International Cooperation Festival, composed primarily of professionals from the fields of science, religion, art, education, and philosophy, who met on the campus of the California State College at Los Angeles to explore "the meaning of the new universal person and the world civilization."

In place of the magazine The Cooperator, the Unity-and-Diversity Council now issues the monthly newsletter Spectrum and also publishes a World Directory of affiliated organizations from its headquarters at 5521 Grosvenor Blvd., Ste. 22, Los Angeles, CA 90066-6915.

Univercoelum (Journal)

Early Spiritualist periodical started by Andrew Jackson Davis in December 1847, in New York, for "the establishment of a universal system of Truth, the Reform and Reorganization of Society." It ran for a year and a half before being absorbed in July 1849 by W. M. Channing's The Present Age.

Univercolian (Magazine)

Quarterly publication growing out of former Pyramid Guide Newsletter, concerned with earth mysteries, featuring articles on such subjects as Easter Island, Stonehenge, Atlantis, UFOs, and energy centers. Its mailing address is P.O. Box 292, Dalton, MA 01226.

Universal Balm

An elixir sought by alchemists that was supposed to be a remedy for every malady and would even bring the dead back to life. (See also elixir of life).

Universal Christ Church

The Universal Church is a small fellowship of Spiritualist congregations in Southern California. It was founded in 1970 by Rev. Anthony Benik and was unique in its acceptance of an element of ritualism in its worship. It operates out of a Spiritualist perspective and reincarnation is accepted. Most of the churches are in the Los Angeles area, but there is one large congregation reported in Australia. In the 1970s there were five congregations in the greater Los Angeles area, but recent attempts to contact the church have failed. Its present status is unknown.

Universal Church of the Master

The Universal Church of the Master, one of the largest Spiritualist churches in the United States, especially on the West Coast, was founded in 1908 in Los Angeles by Dr. B. J. Fitzgerald (d. 1960) and others. The church was incorporated in 1918 and during its first generation was largely confined to congregations on the West Coast. Fitzgerald was the author of the church's basic textbook, A New Text of Spiritual Philosophy and Religion. In 1930 the church's headquarters moved to Oakland, California, and then in 1966 to San Jose. The church was headed for many years by Birdie Peterson, who passed away in 1994.

The church has a statement of faith that affirms the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; the necessity of living in harmony with nature; life after death; communication [through mediumship] with the unseen world; the Golden Rule; individual responsibility; the continual possibility of improvement; prophecy; and the eternal progress of the soul. The implication of the emphasis on the laws of nature defies any supernaturalism in the communication with the dead or other psychic phenomena. The church also suggests the use of The Aquarian Gospel of Jesus the Christ, a channeled work by Levi Dowling, as a resource for teachings.

In the 1980s it had over 300 associated congregations. The church is headquartered at 501 Washington St., Santa Clara, CA 95050.

Sources:

Universal Faithists of Kosmon

The Universal Faithists of Kosmon is one of several groups founded by believers in the authority of Oahspe: A New Age Bible, Oahspe was channeled by John Ballou Newbrough (1828–1891) and published in 1882. The first convention of Faithists, held in 1883, planned the formation of a community in New Mexico called Shalam. Initially successful, it was destroyed by a flu epidemic, which took many of its leaders, including Newbrough.

The Faithist cause has been kept alive by a variety of independent groups, the Universal Faithists being the oldest of the several presently existing organizations. It has assumed responsibility for preserving Faithist communication. The movement has had some alignment with the New Age movement, since Oahspe was originally described as a “New Age” Bible. It describes the evolution of the human race into the Kosmon Era, a time of worldwide peace and joy.

The Universal Faithists publish the periodical Kosmon Voice. The organization may be contacted at the Oahspe Information Service, Mesilla, New Mexico 88046-0891.

Sources:

Stowes, K. D. The Land of Shalam: Children's Land. Evansville, Ind.: Molinet Print Shop, n.d.

Universal Hagar’s Spiritual Church (UHSC)

The Universal Hagar’s Spiritual Church (UHSC), a Spiritualist church operating primarily among African Americans, was founded in 1923 in Detroit, Michigan, by George Willie Hurley (1884–1943). Hurley moved to Detroit from Georgia in 1891 and affiliated with the Triumph Church and Kingdom of God in Christ and rose to become the leader of the church in Michigan. A short time later he became involved with the esoteric, left his position in 1920 to join a Spiritualist church, and three years later founded his own church. In 1924 he established the School of Mediumship and Psychology, and as new congregations developed, each also had a school attached to it. Hurley conceived of the school as a branch of the Great School of the Prophets, which he believed to be the school Jesus attended during the 18 years between his appearance in the temple in Jerusalem and the beginning of his public ministry at the age of 30.

UHSC was one of the main bodies spreading Spiritualism through the African American community in the twentieth century. Like other spiritual churches, (spiritual was the name adopted by Spiritualism in the black community), UHSC altered traditional Spiritualism by blending Catholic ritual, Holiness preaching, and elements of the folk magic culture or voodoo. Hurley also drew upon Ethiopianism, a belief that identified black people (Ethiopians) with the ancient Israelites; astrology; and insights from The Aquarian Gospel of Jesus Christ, a channeled book that purports to tell of Jesus’ lost years. Unlike many spiritual leaders, Hurley took a strong stand on social issues and was an early supporter of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The church planted congregations across the Northeast and Midwest during Hurley’s lifetime. As the church expanded, Hurley acquired an increasingly grandiose self-understanding. He told his followers that his carnal flesh had been transformed into the flesh of Christ and that he had become the “God” of this Aquarian Age, just as Jesus had been the God of the previous Piscean Age. Since Hurley’s death, the UHSC has been led by Prince Thomas Surbacher, Mother Mary Hatchett, Prince Alfred Bailey, and Rev. G. Latimer, Hurley’s daughter. Hurley welcomed women to the ministry, and they have always been well represented on the Wiseman’s Board, the church’s ruling structure. Some prophets are called princes, a term taken over from Triumph the Church and Kingdom of God in Christ. In recent years the church has spread into the Southwest and California.

Current address unavailable.

Sources:

Universal Harmony Foundation

The Universal Harmony Foundation is a Spiritualist church founded in New York in 1942 as the Universal Psychic Science Association. The founders, Revs. Helene Gerling and J. Bertram Gerling, were both prominent mediums at Lily Dale, the Spiritualist camp near Rochester, New York. Association headquarters were soon moved to Saint Petersburg, Florida. Helene Gerling wrote several books and a set of correspondence lessons and also opened a seminary for training mediums, through which students could receive ordination and charters for churches. Ordained positions include ministers, healers, missionaries, and teachers.

The church strives for a universal philosophy and draws insight from revelation and the teachings of all religions and prophets. Church belief is premised upon the religious and scientific demonstration of the talents and powers of the Living Spirit, that is, mediumship. The foundation affirms the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the eternalness of life, the power of prayer, spiritual healing, and the importance of soul growth as the purpose of life, and that the way of life is fraternal service.

Helene Gerling led the foundation for almost a half century. She retired in 1988 and was succeeded by Rev. Nancy Castillo, a Wurzburg housewife, received an awakening experience in 1970 when she saw the spirit of her deceased mother. Concerned of “survival of bodily death,” she began visiting a local medium, then operated as a channel herself for several years before going public with the messages she was receiving. Wittek emphasized the indwelling kingdom of God and taught a method of going within to open the kingdom and experience God in one’s innermost being. She advised people to learn to live God’s laws as expressed in the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount.

The mission operated for seven years, and in 1984 was superseded by Universal Life—The Inner Religion. Wittek now taught that, given the contact with God, it was possible to put the Sermon on the Mount into operation immediately. She encouraged those formerly associated with the mission to form businesses that would operate on the principles of the Sermon on the Mount. Toward the end of the decade, a school based on the same principles was opened.

During these years, the mission-turned-religion spread across Europe and into North and South America. By the early 1990s, the teachings had been translated into ten languages, and over 130 Inner-Spirit-of-Christ churches opened. Universal Life publishes the periodical Christ State-International and may be contacted through its world headquarters, Universelles Leben, Postfach 5643, 8700 Wurzburg, Germany. In the United States the address is Box 3579, New Haven, CT 06525.
Universal Religion of America

Sources:
Mission of Jesus Christ, 1983.
The Divine Mystical Method of Instruction of the Homebringing
A Formerly Spiritually Unknown Person on the Path to God: The Course of Life of the Prophetess in the Homebringing Mission of Jesus

Universal Religion of America

The Universal Religion of America was a Spiritualist movement founded in 1958 in Kenosha, Wisconsin, by the Rev. Mar-nie Koski. Koski was formerly a minister with the Spiritual Science Mother Church. She was known by the members of her church as Soraya (“Solar Ray”) as a result of the channeled messages she receives from Jesus.

During the 1960s, Koski left the Kenosha congregations under the leadership of her students and moved to Florida, first to Rockledge and then to Merritt Island. The Universal Religion had some 500 members in its two centers. Last known address: Christ Universal Church, 295 North Tropical Trail, Merritt Island, FL 32952.

Sources:
Koski, Marie. Personal Talks with Jesus. Washington, DC: ES-

Universal Spiritualist Association

The Universal Spiritualist Association is an association of Spiritualist churches and clergy. It was originally founded in 1956 by Clifford Bias to issue credentials for Camp Chesterfield, which housed the seminary where many Spiritualist ministers and healers were trained and licensed. Until 1956, the Spiritualist Episcopal Church was in charge of the seminary. At that point the leaders of the new association, mostly former Spiritualist Episcopalian, assumed the administrative and faculty roles at the Chesterfield school, an arrangement that was cordial until 1970, when a dispute erupted between the camp and the association. The school reverted to the control of the Chesterfield staff, and the Universal Spiritualist Association conducted its own seminary. In 1985 the association moved to the Maple Grove Spiritual Retreat near Pendleton, Indiana, and opened the Institute for Holistic Studies. In 1993 the association moved headquarters once again to the Universal Institute for Holistic Studies at Ball State University, Muncie, Indiana.

The Universal Spiritualist Association provides limited demonstrations of the physical phenomena of spiritualism for their institute registrants and candidates for the clergy, primarily for lack of demand.

Clifford Bias served as first president of the association until his death in 1986. He organized the Ancient Mystical Order of Seekers, the esoteric society for the association’s ministers and more serious lay students. Bias’ successor was Warren Smith, who retired in 1990. The association is presently led by T. Ernest Nichols. The president heads the association’s general board, which charters churches and licenses ministers. A board of regents oversees the Institute for Holistic Studies. Both boards are elected at the annual membership-at-large meeting.

In 1990 the association reported 512 members in 14 churches, including one in Windsor, Ontario, Canada. It publishes the magazine Banner of Light, and may be contacted at the Universal Institute for Holistic Studies, 4905 W. University Ave., Muncie, IN 47304-3460. Website: http://

Sources:
Bias, Clifford. The Way Back. York Beach, Maine: Samuel Universal Spiritualist Manual. Universal Administration, muncie, Ind.: Universal Spiritualist Association, n.d.
Wallace, Austin D. Thistle Presents Prince Nikeritis. Eaton Rap-

Universe Quarterly

Former quarterly journal of the Vortex Institute of Fairbanks, Alaska, concerned with spiritual life in Alaska, self-growth techniques, and meditation.

Universities (Occult)

In many works on the occult sciences, allusions are made to schools and universities and the instruction of those who were drawn to them. The idea for such schools derived from the philosophical schools and academies of the ancient Greek teachers. In the early Christian era, Gnosticism was taught in such schools. Since that discipline was centered upon gnos or knowledge, a school (rather than a temple or church) was the natural form that its group life assumed.

While a few similar schools might have existed in the Dark Ages, the idea of such institutions was largely a myth used to credential otherwise informally and self-taught occultists or to refer to the places where alchemists and occultists quietly gathered to consult with each other. It was the practice of those on the faculties of the universities and those who operated independently to draw students around them, and professors of the occult sciences were no different.

There is no doubt that during the Middle Ages many lecturers taught alchemy and kindred subjects at great universities.
Thus Paracelsus lectured on alchemy at the University of Basel, and he was preceded and followed there and elsewhere by others who taught that and other occult arts.

Louis Figuier, in his book L’alchimie et les alchimistes (1854), alluded to a school in Paris frequented by alchemists that he himself attended in the middle of the nineteenth century. The school—an ordinary chemical laboratory during the day—became in the evening a center of the most elaborate alchemi-cal study, where Figuier met alchemical students, visionary and practical.

The novelist Balzac alludes to an occult school in the story
“The Secret of Ruggier,” which he placed at the time of Cathrine de Medici. He stated: “At this epoch the occult sciences were cultivated with an ardour which put to shame the incredulous spirit of our century. . . . The universal protection accorded to these sciences by the ruling sovereigns of the times was quite remarkable.”

He goes on to say that at the beginning of the sixteenth century, Ruggier was a member of a secret university for the study of the occult sciences, where astrologers, alchemists, and others studied several branches of hidden knowledge. Balzac gives no details as to its locality, or as to the exact nature of its curricuum.

The College of Augurs in Rome and the Celmenc of ancient Mexico are distinct examples of institutions for the study of div-imation, and in this connection, the House of Wisdom of the Isaelite sect at Cairo, Egypt, may be mentioned.

Helena Petrovna Blavatsky insisted that a great “school” of illuminated occult adepts flourished in Tibet, but nobody except herself and her immediate friends ever saw them or had any dealings with them. Prior to 1959, Tibet was the home of a large number of monasteries that were also the schools of Tibetan Buddhism and its esoteric practices.

Instructional centers for people who studied the occultism integral to Hinduism, Buddhism, and other Asian systems di-exist (and continue to exist) across Asia. These centers, remote and mysterious prior to the transportation and communications revolution of the twentieth century, took on a mythical character in the occult literature of the nineteenth century. Those associated with these Asian schools were rumored to have extraordinary occult prowess.

In the nineteenth and twentieth centuries attempts have been made to recreate these ancient occult schools. For example, the School for the Development of the Lost Secrets of Antiquity flourished for a generation in San Diego, California. It was founded by Katherine Tingley late in the nineteenth century and taught Theosophy. A decade earlier, Blavatsky founded the Esoteric Section of the Theosophical Society, an organization carried on by Theosophists associated with the Theosophical Society.

One modern equivalent of ancient occult universities are the secret magical orders, such as the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, where occult and mystical subjects are taught to students, with grades of advancement. Many such orders, based in part on a format adopted from Freemasonry, exist.

One outstanding attempt to recreate the ancient Gnostic schools, with an intense course in esoteric training, is Ramtha’s School of Enlightenment in Yelm, Washington, opened in 1988 by JZ Knight. Ramtha, a channeled entity, instructs students through the entranced Knight.

University Books, Inc.

One of the most influential imprints in occult publishing from the 1950s on, the corporation was founded by Felix Morrow, who played a major role in the modern occult revival by reprinting rare and important scholarly works of occultism and mysticism that had long been unavailable.

In addition to being sold to libraries, the books reached a large general public through the Mystic Arts Book Club. The spokespersons of the occult revival of the 1960s and 1970s drew heavily from these texts. In 1966, the company was absorbed by Lyle Stuart, Inc., which continued occult publishing under the Citadel Press imprint.

University of London Council for Psychological Investigation

A reorganization of the National Laboratory of Psychological Research, which had been founded by psychical researcher Harry Price in 1926. The National Laboratory passed under the direction of the University of London Council on June 6, 1934. At that date the organization was still at the National Laboratory address, but by the end of 1936 the large library assembled by Price was moved to University College, London.

Later the National Laboratory’s séance room and laboratory equipment were transferred to the administrative offices of the University Council, but all experimentation ceased with the outbreak of World War II. After the death of Harry Price in 1948, the library was bequeathed to the University of London.

A short-title catalogue of the library was issued as volume I, number 2 of the Proceedings of the National Laboratory of Psychological Research, and a supplement was issued as the first bulletin of the University of London Council for Psychological Investigation. A second publication was issued by the University of London Council as Bulletin II, A Report on Two Experimental Fire-Walks; Bulletin III, Preliminary Studies of a Vaudeville Telepathist.

Last known address: University of London, Senate House, Male St., London.

University of the Trees

An experimental New Age school community for world change through consciousness research and related spiritual development. The main thrust of teaching was directed towards self-discovery and creative individual change, and in addition to community life courses, teaching was also maintained through correspondence with students all over the world. Courses were wide-ranging, including art, literature, environmental studies, changing, transpersonal awareness, alternative energy systems, health and yoga, healing, history and neurology of consciousness, philosophy, mysticism, radiational physics, and what is termed “supersensonsics” (which includes radesthesia, dowsing, pyramid research, and psychotronics).

The university granted degrees in consciousness research, but aimed to provide students with methods of study that deepen their inner awareness. The term “the Trees” denoted the nerve dendrites in the brain, and the “Tree of Life” of the nervous system that can combine with knowledge to enhance direct perception of truth.

The community was founded in 1973 and grew out of the teachings of Christopher Hills, a New Age teacher, researcher, and yogi who directs the work of the university. Associated with the university is a Research Institute for Supersensonsic Healing Energies. Last known address: P.O. Box 844, 13121 Pine St., Boulder Creek, CA 95006.

The Unknown (Magazine)

Former British monthly magazine “exploring strange phenomena.” The first issue, published July 1985, included discussions at a popular level of spontaneous combustion, ley lines, wolf children, lost civilizations, sea serpents, alchemy, and the Fatima apparitions.

The Unknown World (Journal)

Occult and metaphysical journal founded by James Elliott and edited by Arthur Edward Waite (1857–1942). Eleven issues appeared from August 1894 to June 1895. It was devoted to “The Occult Sciences, Magic, Mystical Philosophy, Alchemy, Hermetic Archaeology, and the Hidden Problems of Science, Literature, Speculation and History.”

Sources:

Unknown Worlds (Newsletter)

Bimonthly newsletter reporting strange phenomena of a Fortean kind. It was published by World Investigators of Strange Phenomena. Last known address: Rte. 2, Box 159, Vina, Al. 35593.

Upanishads

The Upanishads, literally teachings received while sitting at the feet of a master, are a set of writings produced in the first millennium B.C.E. in India, which had been the most important in defining the general perspective of that set of religions generally referred to as Hinduism. Transmitted to the West in the nineteenth century, they became a major source for contemporary belief in karma and reincarnation, and through Theosophy were integrated into the teaching of Western occult thought.

The first era of Indian thought was built around the Vedas, writings which suggest that India’s ancient culture was built around the celebration of nature, the activity of the deities in the world, and the propitiation of the gods in acts of devotion, temple sacrifice, and the following of rules. The Upanishads represent a radical shift in perspective that developed around 1600 B.C.E. The authors of the Upanishads launched a search for the unifying reality behind the visible universe.

There are 13 Principle Upanishads, which summarize the whole of the teachings, and numerous lesser supportive documents. They critique the Vedas and are often referred to as the Vedanta, or “end of the Vedas.” Rather than outward acts of temple worship, the Upanishads call for an inward search for the ultimate principle of reality (called Brahman) and a mystical union with that principle. Brahman is the source of the visible world that goes through a continuous process of being created, sustained, and destroyed. Brahman is hidden by maya (illusion), that aspect of the world that conceals reality from us.

The essential mystical insight offered by the Upanishads is the identification of Brahman with Atman. Atman is the essential core of the individual self. The implication is that to reach the inner essence of oneself is to discover ultimate reality. It is upon this identification that disciplines of concentration and meditation and ultimately the practice of yoga are based.

According to the Upanishads, individuals are trapped in maya. Lost in maya, we face a continuous series of incarnations, the exact nature of any incarnation being the result of the consequences of our actions in prior lives (karma). To escape maya one must focus upon reality, the yogic path being the ideal process for pursuing that focus. It is also recognized that such a focus can lead to selfishness. To prevent such an error, the Upanishads recommend the cultivation of virtues such as detachment and self-control, and call for the performance of one’s social duties.

The Upanishads now exist in several translations in English and other Western languages, though the 1879 translation by world religions scholar Max Müller was the important early one which built support for Indian perspectives in the West. In 1893, Swami Vivekananda brought the teachings of the Vedanta to the West and established it throughout the Vedanta Societies that grew out of his work. Through the twentieth century, numerous commentaries on the Upanishads were published and circulated by the many Indian religions operating in the West. Equally important, insights from the Upanishads, freed from the texts, have permeated Western esoteric and metaphysical groups through which they have been popularized among a public unaware of their origin.

Sources:

Uphoff, Walter (1913–1998)
Professor of economics who has also written and lectured extensively in the field of parapsychology. He was born February 28, 1913, in Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, and studied at the University of Wisconsin (B.S., 1934; Ph.D., 1935). In 1938 he married Mary Jo Weiler, who co-authored some of his writings on parapsychology. He worked in business for many years before joining the faculty of the University of Minnesota in 1951. He moved to the University of Colorado in 1961. He retired in 1976 and until his death pursued the interest in psychical research that he developed during his student days.

Uphoff and his wife founded the New Frontiers Center and he served as its president. He was a member of the American Society for Psychological Research, International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, and the Society for Psychological Research, London. He was a board member of ESP Research Associates Foundation and a member of the former Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine. One of Uphoff’s books concerns the early experiments with Masao Naoi, the metal-bending psychic who admitted that he had fraudulently accomplished his remarkable PK effects. Uphoff died September 26, 1998.

Sources:

The Upright Man
In the sixteenth century, the vagabonds and beggars of Britain were organized into unions with rules and grades. Of these grades, the order of the “Upright Man” seems to have had some special significance and authority, and it is believed by some authorities to have descended from the folk adherents of paganism, the “Old Religion,” or witchcraft.

Ura
A Babylonian spirit. (See also Babylonia)

Uranian Astrology
Uranian astrology is an innovative system of astrology developed early in the twentieth century by Friedrich Seyggrün (1877–1951) and Alfred Witte (1878–1943), two pioneers of the contemporary astrological revival. The system is sometimes referred to as the Hamburg School, a reference to Witte’s main teaching centre in Germany.

The Uranian system was distinguished from traditional astrology at several points. First, traditional astrology bases many of its interpretations of the chart on the angles formed between planets in the charts. Important relationships or aspects are formed when planets are apart as 0° (conjunct), 90° (quadrature), 120° (trine), and 180° (opposition). There are also a set of lesser aspects. Some aspects have traditionally been regarded as beneficial and others as more malevolent. These latter, now termed the hard aspects, include the square, semisquare, and opposition. The Uranian system emphasized the role of hard aspects.

Second, the Uranian system introduced the idea of midpoints to astrological interpretation. As the name implies, a midpoint is a spot halfway between any two planets pictured on the horoscope. The midpoint is the place where the combined energies of the two planets manifest. The two planets and their midpoint form a planetary picture. The calculation of said midpoints requires an additional level of mathematical skill by the astrologer drawing up the chart, a fact that limited the spread of the Uranian approach.

Third, the most questionable aspect of the Uranian system was the introduction of hypothetical planets to the chart. Prior to the advent of space travel and the development of various means of verifying the existence of otherwise unknown planets, the existence of different as yet undiscovered planets was proposed. Such speculation was encouraged by the discovery of Uranus and Neptune and heralded the discovery of Pluto (1930) and Chiron (1977), a comet originally believed to be a planet.

Uranian astrology was unique in suggesting the existence of no less than eight hypothetical planets that were given the names Cupido, Hades, Zeus, Kronos, Apollon, Admetos, Vul- canos, and Poseidon. Each of these planets was assigned its particular role in the chart.

Uranian astrology enjoyed its greatest success in German-speaking countries during the first half of the twentieth century. It also gave birth to cosmobiology, an astronomical system started by Reinhold Ebertin, one of Witte’s students. It has had little success outside of German-speaking countries, though Witte’s most important book, Rules for Planetary Pictures, was published in an English edition in 1939. Also, modern advances in astronomy made the addition of hypothetical planets to the horoscope an increasingly dubious endeavor.
URANTIA

A lengthy nineteenth-century channeled message published in The URANTIA Book (1955). It explains that the true name of Earth is Urantia and that we are part of the universe of Nebo-don, or the larger universe of Orvonton, whose central committee of Uversa dictated the work. The book presents its own unique view of human origins, including the precursors of Adam and Eve and a claimed more accurate version of the life and teaching of Jesus (said to have been really Michael of Nebo-don, one of the myriad sons of the Eternal Son). The miracles are given largely natural explanations.

The book owes its publication to William S. Sadler (1875–1969), former Seventh-Day Adventist minister, who served as a surgeon in Adventist hospitals before leaving the movement. Although skeptical of psychic phenomena, he became involved with the Urantia writings, which proceeded from an unnamed individual who “became a clearing house for the coming and going of alleged extraplanetary personalities.” These channeled communications were first studied in the 1920s by a group of individuals named The Forum. The URANTIA Foundation was formed in 1950 in Chicago, Illinois, and published The URANTIA Book five years later. The foundation promotes the study of the book and sponsors study groups of interested people. It is located at 533 Diversey Pkwy., Chicago, IL 60614, and publishes the URANTIA NEWS . . . from URANTIA Foundation.

Sources:

URANTIA Brotherhood Association

The URANTIA Brotherhood Association was founded in 1989 to continue the work of the URANTIA Brotherhood, founded in 1955. That year people attracted to the teachings of The URANTIA Book, a large volume of channeled material first published in 1955, organized to nurture their learning experience. Over the years the URANTIA Brotherhood formed a number of groups around the country. They operated in harmony with the URANTIA Foundation, the corporation established in 1950 to publish and hold the copyrights and trademarks associated with the book. However, in 1989 the brotherhood and the foundation had an irreconcilable disagreement, and the foundation withdrew the use of the name URANTIA and the associated symbols from the brotherhood. Committed to the book, the brotherhood reorganized as the Fifth Epochal Fellowship. Those students still in relation to the foundation organized a new structure, the URANTIA Brotherhood Association. It may be contacted at 529 W. Wrightwood Ave., Chicago, IL 60614. Website: http://urantiafoundation.org/.

Sources:

Urban, Hubert Josef (1904– )

Professor of neuropsychiatry who investigated areas of parapsychology. He was born on June 4, 1904, in Linz, Austria. He studied at the University of Vienna (B.A., 1923; M.D., 1929). He pursued post-graduate studies at several locations and in 1938 became a professor of neuropsychiatry at the University of Innsbruck, Austria. Urban took special interest in telepathy, clairvoyance, and mediumship as related to psychiatry, and studied the question of extrasensory ability before and after shock treatment or narcoanalysis. Between 1948 and 1958, he made visits to India to conduct field work in psychiatry, which allowed observation and research on spontaneous psi phenomena. He published articles on connections between psi, psychiatry, and medicine in various journals.

Sources:

Urim and Thummim

Literally “lights and perfections,” a means of divination employed by the ancient Hebrews. The objects were placed on a breastplate, which bore the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, that was worn over the heart of the high priest when he went before the Lord (Ex. 28:30). It was believed to consist of a species of casting lots.

The use of Urim and Thummim was not for determining questions concerning individuals, only for questions of national import. Answers were usually given in a brief fashion, yes or no, or the designation of one tribe out of the twelve. There is no mention of the Urim and Thummim after the time of King David. Their form and method of use is uncertain, but from passages in the Hebrew Bible, it seems probable that they were used somewhat like dice to cast lots (1 Sam. 10:19–22 and 14:37–42).

The Urim and Thummim reappeared in the nineteenth century in the form of two divining stones possessed by Joseph Smith, Jr., prophet and founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, whose followers are commonly called Mormons. Smith used the stones to “translate” the Book of Mormon from what was claimed to be golden tablets with writing in a reformed Egyptian text.

Urine

Urine has long been credited with magical and medicinal properties. It has been featured in black magic rituals. It has been mixed with wine, herbs, or oils; used as an ointment and in pills; employed in amulets, talismans, and charms; and used in aphrodisiacs and fertility potions.

Medicinally, urine has unusual properties. It contains ammonia, which can neutralize acids, and is usually free from bacteria, thus has disinfectant properties. Women have drunk urine from their husbands to speed up childbirth or have been given their own urine to relieve hysteria. Male urine contains androsterone, a male hormone, and it has long been believed that drinking one’s own urine improves health and virility.

Moraji Desai, former prime minister of India, openly admitted to drinking a small quantity of his own urine each morning for health reasons.

USSR See RUSSIA

Usui, Mikao (1865–1926)

Mikao Usui, the creator of the Reiki system of healing, a Japanese healing discipline that became a global phenomena during the years of the New Age Movement, was born on August 15, 1865, in Yago, Yamgata district, Gifu Prefecture, Japan. As a young man he married Sadako Suzuki, with whom he fathered two children. For a while he was associated with a Japanese Spiritualist group, Rei Jyutsu Kai, whose headquarters was west of Kyoto at the base of Kurama Kai, a holy mountain. However, he spent most of his life as a Buddhist. He completed the study and reflection that led to his creation of Reiki in 1914. Then, following a mystical experience he had while meditating on Kurama, he was led to found an organization, Usui Reiki Ryoho Gakkai, to disseminate the teachings and practice of Reiki.

Reiki, a Japanese word roughly translated as “universal en-energy,” is a healing system based upon the subtle energy system (variously called qi, chi, or ki) within the human body as developed in Taoist China. It is the same system that underlies acupuncture, and pictures energy flowing through the body vertically from the head downward through a set of channels or meridians. The Reiki system teaches a method of attuning to the energy and assisting its flow in the body of the patient.

After developing Reiki, Usui worked in a poorer section of Kyoto for several years, but around 1921 moved to the Harajaju section of Tokyo. There he set up a school/clinic. His students would move into the school and work with Usui until they had learned the system, though occasionally he traveled to other parts of the country to teach. Anticipating a practice later popularized in the New Age Movement, Usui is remembered as using crystals in his healing work. He taught the Reiki system to some 2,000 students, several of whom opened clinics and centers around the country. Usui also wrote a brief handbook which included a description of Reiki healing (though without mentioning any of the particulars of the method), the answers to some frequently asked questions, and some poems composed by the emperor designed to advise people on a worthy life.

Usui died on March 9, 1926, of a stroke. He was buried at Saihoji Temple, a traditional Buddhist temple in a Tokyo suburb. Leadership of Usui Reiki Ryoho Gakkai was passed to a Mr. Ushida, and continues to the present. Among his last students was Dr. Chujiro Hayashi, a retired naval officer. He in turn taught Ms. Hawayo Takata, a Japanese-American who had traveled to Japan in the mid-1930s to seek help for her failing health. Hayashi named her his successor. Toward the end of her life, she initiated the first non-Japanese into Reiki and through the Reiki Masters she initiated, Reiki became a global phenomenon.

Sources:
Valentine, Basil

This German adept in alchemical philosophy is commonly supposed to have been born at Mayence toward the close of the fourteenth century. As a young man he became a Roman Catholic priest and entered the Abbey of St. Peter, at Erfurt. He eventually became its prior, but otherwise very little is known concerning him, and even the date of his death is not known. His very existence is believed to be mythical by some authorities.

He appears to have been a very modest person, for according to Olaus Borrichius, the author of De Ottu et Progressa Chymiae, Valentine hid all the manuscripts of his writings inside one of the pillars of the Abbey Church where they might have remained for an indefinite period, but they were discovered during a thunderstorm, when a flash of lightning dislodged them from their curious hiding place. Valentine's reluctance for his work to be known may have been prompted by fear of the Inquisition discovering his researches in alchemy.

Valentine's works in alchemy certainly mark him as a very shrewd man and a capable scientist. Unlike much other medi eval literature, his treatises are not all in Latin, some of them being in high Dutch and others in German. Prominent among those in his own language is The Triumphant Charlot of Antimony, first published at Leipzig in 1624. In this work, Valentine extolled antimony as an excellent medicine. The volume also embodies a lengthy metrical treatise on the philosophers' stone, the writer contending that whoever should discover and use this must do charitable deeds, mortify the flesh, and pray without ceasing. Among the alchemist's further writings are Apocalypsis Chymica, De Macrocosmo deum Magna Mundi Mysterio et Medecina Homini et Philosophiia, and Practica unà cum duodecim Clavibus et Appendix. All these were originally published in Germany at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and various passages in them demonstrate that the author understood the distillation of brandy and was acquainted with the method of obtaining hydrochloric acid from saltwater. Reverting to his faith in alchemy appeared to lend itself to this manifestation. "Bert Everett" found assistants in other controls: "Dr. Barnett," who often gave medical prescriptions, "Hawk Chief" and "Kokum," two Native Americans with booming voices and "Black Foot," another Native American, the last usually speaking in deep tones from the center of the floor.

In 1923 The Scientific American of New York offered a prize of $2,500 for the production of genuine physical phenomena. Valiantine was one of the mediums tested. Gardner Murphy of Columbia University and Kenneth Andrews of The New York World visited him at Wilkes-Barre for two preliminary sittings. Both sittings were successful and they returned with an initial favorable impression. Thereupon Valiantine came to New York.

During his first two séances before the committee of The Scientific American, eight distinct spirits manifested and spoke to the sitters. For the third séance, an electrical control apparatus had been secretly fixed to the medium's chair. It was meant to disclose to observers in another room whether the medium left his chair during the séance, under the cover of darkness, to reach for the trumpet. The apparatus did not register the medium's full weight for fifteen seconds on one occasion and from 1–14 seconds on other occasions.

For this reason, although the voices admitted came from high in the air and carried on prolonged conversations, the result, in the report published in the July 1923 issue of The Scientific American, was ruled out as evidence. Over the construction of the report, which conveyed the impression that Valiantine was actually caught in fraud, a controversy arose between psychological researcher J. Malcolm Bird and British author H. Dennis Bradley, who pointed out the weaknesses of the report and its important admissions, which, however, were not sufficiently emphasized.

On several occasions, Bradley vigorously defended Valiantine. He met him at Arlena Towers, Ramsey, New York, in the home of Joseph de Wyckoff, a wealthy American financier who had been in close association with Valiantine for some years. In November 1925, Wyckoff received long scripts from Valiantine which Valiantine said he had obtained through direct writing in his home. They were signed by "Everett" and "Dr. Barnett," and referred to a project involving an expedition to Guiana. Wyckoff discovered by chance that Valiantine's handwriting showed striking resemblance to the spirit scripts and took them to a handwriting expert who pronounced them identical. Wyckoff showed the report to Valiantine. He insisted that he did not do the writings. A test séance was arranged at his own house at Williamsport, Valiantine, at his request, was tied up. The séance was a failure. Wyckoff thereupon broke off his relations with Valiantine.

Not long afterwards, Wyckoff went to Europe. He met Bradley, who convinced him, by showing indirect evidence that he obtained in sittings with Gladys Osborne Leonard, that his evaluation of the Valiantine communications was unjust. Thereupon Wyckoff cabled to Valiantine from Europe and invited him to come and join him. Valiantine arrived in February...
1924 and gave séances almost daily for five weeks in Bradley’s home.

In the presence of more than fifty prominent people, over one hundred different spirit voices manifested and carried on long conversations in Russian, German, Spanish and even in idiomatic Welsh. Caradoc Evans, the Welsh novelist, spoke with his father’s spirit in Cardiganshire Welsh.

But the seeds of suspicion had been sown. Wyckoff soon leveled a second charge against Valiantine, which grew out of a sitting in the St. Regis Hotel in New York on April 19, 1924. When the sitting was closed by the address of “Dr. Barnett,” it was revealed that the trumpet had fallen sideways between Valiantine’s legs, with the small end against the edge of the chair. As the medium was setting it upright, Wyckoff struck a match and scolded him for his action. Moreover, as Malcolm Bird pointed out in a letter to Light, “examination of the trumpet developed the facts that it was quite warm at the point where a human hand would naturally and conveniently grasp it, and that the mouthpiece was damp.”

Bradley answered that this is exactly what would happen with independent voice phenomena. In his own séances, in which a luminous trumpet was seen sailing about the room, at the finish the inside was found moist, according to Bradley, for the simple reason that it is necessary for a spirit to materialize the vocal organs and breathe in order to produce its voice. Bradley also added that the trumpet could not be accounted for them. He was also satisfied that the movement of the shell horn was blown on occasion. The sitters tried it but were convinced that Mr. Valiantine’s lips were entirely closed, and I was able also to distinguish the words ‘Father Woolley’, but nothing further.”

The Coming of Confucius

But the most important phase of Valiantine’s mediumship was yet to come. Strange languages were heard in séances in New York, and it was decided to test their nature by inviting a scholar. Dr. Neville Whymant, an authority on Chinese history, philosophy, and ancient literature, who happened to be in New York, was requested by J. and Mrs. Cannon to come to a séance. He was slightly amused, but accepted. To quote from his notes:

“Suddenly, out of the darkness was heard a weird, cracking, broken little sound, which at once carried my mind straight back to China. It was the sound of a flute, rather poorly played, such as can be heard in the streets of the Celestial Land but nowhere else. Then followed in a low, but very audible voice the words ‘K’ung-fu Tu’ ¹zü.‘ Few persons, except Chinese, could pronounce the name correctly as the sounds cannot be represented in English letters. The idea that it might be Confucius himself never occurred to me. I had imagined that it might be some-body desirous of discussing the life and philosophy of the great Chinese teacher.”

When, however, correct personal information was given, Whymant decided to test the matter. He said: “There is among your writings a passage written wrongly; should it not read thus?” At this point, Whymant began to quote as far as he knew, that is to say, to about the end of the first line. At once the words were taken out of his mouth, and the whole passage was recited in Chinese, exactly as it is recorded in the standard works of reference. After a pause of about fifteen seconds, the passage was again repeated, this time with certain alterations which gave it a new meaning. “Thus read,” said the voice, “does not its meaning become plain?” Previous to the voice of “Confucius,” Whymant heard a Sicilian chant and conversed with one of the controls, “Cristo d’Angelo,” in Italian.

At the next séance at which Whymant was present, after having been absent through illness, “Confucius” again manifested and, omitting all ceremonious expressions, referred to Wyckoff’s indisposition, saying “the weed of sickness was growing beside thy door.” This metaphor was used in ancient Chinese literature but it is no longer current in the language. Nor was the dialect in which “Confucius” spoke any longer used in the Chinese Empire.

There are only about twelve Chinese sounds of which it can be definitely said that it was known how the Chinese of Confucius’ time would have pronounced them. The voice which claimed to be that of Confucius used these archaic sounds correctly. Moreover, there were at that time only about six Chinese scholars in the world whose knowledge would have been equal to the one displayed by the direct voice. None of them was in America at the time.

In 1927, when Valiantine paid a third visit to England further tests of importance took place. Countess Ahlefeldt-Laurvig brought an ancient Chinese shell to a sitting in the apartment of Lord Charles Hope. At the top of the shell, circular folds were taken out of his mouth, and the whole passage was recited by the one displayed by the direct voice. None of them was in America at the time.

From H. Dennis Bradley’s summary of this strange occurrence it is interesting to quote: “I have heard the K’ung-fu T’ae voice speaking on two or three occasions in archaic Chinese. I have also heard the same voice with its peculiar intonation, speaking to me personally in English. The voice has spoken slowly, but with quite beautiful cadences. It possessed an extraordinary dignity.”

New Controversies

In his books Towards the Stars (1942) and The Wisdom of the Gods (1925), Bradley published many important accounts of sittings with Valiantine. On several occasions he heard Valiantine speak simultaneously with the voices. He listened to the voices of the controls of Valiantine in séances with other mediums and heard “Feda,” the control of Gladys Osborne Leonard, and “Cristo d’Angelo,” who later associated himself with the Marquis Centurione Scotto, speak through Valiantine.

Including the 1927 period, Bradley conducted over a hundred experiments of which he deemed 95 percent successful.
This high percentage of success was undoubtedly partly due to the powerful direct voice mediumship which Bradley and his wife themselves developed after the first sittings with Valiantine in New York. But the physical manifestation was only part of the evidence. Bradley observed of Valiantine in his book...

And After (1931),

"He is a man of instinctive good manners but it is essential to state that he is semi-iliterate. He possesses no scholastic education whatever, beyond the ordinary simplicities; he is ill-versed in general conversation and ideas. I mention these facts because many of the communications which have been made in the séances and on the telephone have been brilliant in their expressions and culture."

On April 26, 1929, Valiantine arrived for the fourth time in England from America. He spent one day with Bradley and then proceeded to Berlin. The sittings were held in a Ms. von Dirksen's house. Bradley considered them comparatively poor in result. Some members of the Berlin Occult Society, for which the séances had been arranged, subsequently claimed imposture and supported their assertions by referring to Bradley's and Valiantine's refusal to permit strict control.

These charges were published five months afterward by Dr. Kroner in the Zeitschrift für Parapsychologie. Kroner attended only three of the sittings. Two later sitters made direct allegations of fraudulent movements on Valiantine's part. However, no definite proof of having caught Valiantine in fraud was brought forward.

In May 1929, Valiantine gave a series of séances at the house of the Marquis Centurione Scotto in Genoa. One of the sittings, held in the presence of psychical researcher Ernesto Bozzano, was rigorously controlled. Valiantine was fastened to his chair and an adhesive bandage secured over his mouth. The knots were sealed, the doors were locked.

The results were excellent. The enthusiasm, however, was soon marred by a charge made by Rossi and Scotto. Rossi claimed to have distinctly felt Valiantine in one of their sittings lean forward and speak into the trumpet. He also said that Castellani caught hold of Mrs. Bradley's hand which was touching the back of his (Castellani's) head. Both of them were furiously indignant and left immediately. Castellani later withdrew his allegation against Mrs. Bradley and Rossi also became wavering. (These allegations charged the Bradleys with being Valiantine's accomplices. Evidence that such was the case would be forthcoming.)

As Bradley pointed out there was a truly bizarre aspect in the situation:

"The Marquis Centurione Scotto, Mr. Rossi and Madame Rossi, unknown before to me or to Valiantine, visit me in England in 1927. The Marquis, to his astonishment, speaks to his [dead] son in Italian. The Marquis and Mrs. Rossi then develop voice mediumship entirely from, and because of, their meeting and initiation with Valiantine, then, in 1929, visits them in Italy and is accused of being a fraud. The poet is right when he declares 'It is a mad world.'"

In 1931, Valiantine was again invited to England. This visit ended on a tragic note. Bradley asked him to devote six evenings to experiments for psychic imprints (molds). Striking previous successes were recorded in the book The Wisdom of the Gods. Since then, famous people whom Bradley knew had died and their original left and right hand imprints were in the possession of Noel Jaquin. Scientifically, therefore, the experiments held potential promise. The claimed spirits of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Lord Dewar, and Sir Henry Seagrave all apparently complied with Bradley's eager request, but the plastic substance used in the seances, unknown to Valiantine, was chemically prepared. A stain was found on Valiantine's elbow and expert examination disclosed that the spirit thumbprint of "Sir Arthur Conan Doyle" was exactly similar to the print of Valiantine's big toe. On his right foot, a spirit thumbprint of "Lord Dewar" to that of Valiantine's left big toe... a spirit fingerprint of "Sir Henry Seagrave" to the print of Valiantine's middle finger and another spirit impression to that of Valiantine's elbow.

Ex-Chief Detective Inspector Bell, the head of the fingerprint department at New Scotland Yard, declared that in a court of law the resemblance would be sufficient to hang a man charged with murder. According to Bradley, when Valiantine was confronted with this evidence, he broke down completely and sobbed. He would not, however, admit fraud. His only answer to questions was: "I cannot understand it."

Bradley believed that the rapid accumulation of money and fame as a professional medium did not have a beneficial effect upon Valiantine's character. He found that he had progressively changed, becoming a conceited and arrogant man. Yet "his reason for attempting these imprint frauds will remain incomprehensible. He received no money from me, and for him to imagine that in the presence of imprint experts he could commit palpable fraud and escape detection was a sign of sheer lunacy."

Besides Valiantine, his controls were also compromised, as on the night, just near the end of the sitting, when "Bert Everett" spoke in his usual shrill tones, announcing that an imprint had been made which was excellent. Mr. X., with whom Valiantine stayed during the visit, obtained the fingerprint of "Walter Ramsden" control of the American medium Mina Crandon (known as "Margery"). This print was identified by Noel Jaquin as identical to that of the middle finger of Valiantine's left hand.

After the exposure, Valiantine gave twelve sèances to Dr. Vivian. The report stated that while two voices were speaking, Valiantine was simultaneously heard to draw the attention of the sitters to the two voices. Surgeon Admiral Nisso had two sittings in daylight. The voice that he heard to come distinctly from within the trumpet gave intelligent and evidential communication. In the presence of a second doctor, the voices were heard again, speaking distinctly and intelligently. During the phenomena, the doctors kept Valiantine's face under acute observation but they did not discover any movement whatever on it.

The experiences of Whymant with the voice of "Confucius" came before the Society for Psychological Research in 1927. Whymant delivered a lecture, played the phonograph record of the voice, and submitted his account of twelve séances. No action was taken. Thereupon the records were the subject of a book by Whymant, published in 1931 under the title Psychic Adventures in New York. In Proceedings of the Society for Psychological Research (vol. 40, pt. 125), the report of Lord Charles Hope on his sittings in 1927 concluded: "I was disappointed at the lack of evidence for survival which the voices had given me. I was left uncertain whether Valiantine was a genuine medium or not." (For other cases of imprints and molds, see plastics.)

Sources:
Bradley, H. Dennis... And After. London: T. Werner Laurie, 1931.

Valiente, Doreen (1922–1999)

Doreen Valiente, poetess and one of the founders of modern Wicca, was born on January 4, 1922, in London, England. During World War II (1939–45) she married a soldier who had been wounded fighting for the Free French and had been sent to England to recuperate from his wounds. Her rise out of obscurity began in 1952 when she was introduced to Gerald B. Gardner, who was in the process of creating a new Goddess-oriented religion that he called Witchcraft. Following her initiation into the Craft, she worked with Gardner to perfect the rituals he had assembled. Among her most important contributions was a poetic piece called "The Charge to the Goddess." After four years with Gardner, she left to become the priestess of her own coven, and in 1962 authored her first book, a small volume describing the new Wicca religion. In 1964 she accepted a second Witchcraft initiation from Robert Cochrane.

Valiente worked quietly through the 1960s but became an object of controversy in the 1970s as Wicca emerged as a popular counterculture religion and various researchers began to explore the literary origins of the Pagan rituals. This controversy grew in the 1980s after Gardner’s papers were sold to Ripley’s Believe It or Not. The papers indicated that Gardner had not inherited the Witchcraft rituals, but had created them with the assistance of various people, especially Valiente.

Valiente began to emerge into her own in the 1970s when she wrote a set of popular books on Witchcraft, An ABC of Witchcraft Past and Present (1973), and Witchcraft for Tomorrow (1978). Then, as the controversy on Gardner heated up, and speculations concerning her own role in the development of the Gardnerian rituals were rife, she published her account of the story confirming much of what had been said about the discontinuity of Gardner’s work with any folk survivals of the Craft from previous centuries. At the same time, she documented one of the major aspects of Gardner’s story, that he had been initiated into Witchcraft in 1939 by a woman named Dorothy Clutterbuck. Some had speculated that Clutterbuck had never existed. Valiente tracked her birth and death records and found a copy of her will. All of this material was included in her most important book, The Rebirth of Witchcraft (1989). Besides being a significant contribution to modern religious history, the book established her place in the creation of modern Wicca.

During the last decade of her life, Valiente was widely acknowledged as a matriarch within the Wiccan community internationally though she lived quietly and made few public appearances. She died on September 1, 1999.

Sources:

Valkhoff, Marius (1905— ?)

Professor of Romance studies who investigated areas of parapsychology. He was born on January 7, 1905, at Zwolle, the Netherlands. He studied at the University of Amsterdam (D.Litt., 1931), taught at Amsterdam University for many years (1932–1950), and then moved to South Africa to become head of the Department of Romance Studies and a professor of French at the University of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa. In South Africa he became chair of the South African Society for Psychical Research and published various articles on parapsychology in Tydskrif vir Parapsyologie and various publications of the South African Society for Psychical Research. He experimented with psychokinesis and with drug-induced states related to extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Vallee, Jacques Francis (1939— )

French scientist and authority on Unidentified Flying Objects. He was born September 24, 1939, in Pontoise, France and attended the Sorbonne (B.S. mathematics, 1959), Lille University (M.S. astrophysics, 1961), and Northwestern University (Ph.D. computer science, 1967). He organized a computer company in northern California, and became a member of the editorial board of Telecommunications Policy.

While at Northwestern he became an associate of J. Allen Hynek and authored two important works in ufology, Anatomy of a Phenomenon (1965) and Challenge to Science: The UFO Enigma (1966). Vallee was quickly hailed as one of the most important theorists in the field and was said to be the original of the character "Jacome" in Steven Spielberg’s popular movie Close Encounters of the Third Kind.

Several years later, Vallee released Passport to Magonia (1969) in which he directed attention to the similarity of UFO reports to folklore. This volume was followed by others in the 1970s which tied some of his speculations concerning the nonphysical nature of UFOs to political conspiracy theories and occultism. The Invisible College (1975) and Messengers of Deceit (1979) largely marginalized Vallee in the ufological community. There he remained through most of the 1980s, but he returned to the center with Confrontations (1990), an account of investigations of UFO-related deaths and various physical evidence cases.

Sources:

Vambéry, Arminius (1832–1913)

Hungarian historian and world traveler who may have communicated to author Bram Stoker the facts and legends concerning the real Prince Dracula (Vlad V), who supplied the inspiration for Stoker’s famous occult thriller. Stoker and Vâmbély met at the Beefsteak Club on April 30, 1890, after a performance of Henry Irving in the play The Dead Heart, and also two years later at Trinity College, Dublin, where Vâmbély was presented with an honorary degree.

Sources:

Vampire

Russian vampyr, South Russian upar, probably from the root v, to drain, with the prefix va, on v A dead person who returns in spirit form from the grave for the purpose of sucking the blood of living persons, or a living sorcerer who takes a special form for destructive purpose. Webster's International Dictionary nary defines a vampire as "a blood-sucking ghost or reanimated body of a dead person; a soul or re-animated body of a dead person believed to come from the grave and wander about by night sucking the blood of persons asleep, causing their death."

The belief in vampires is an ancient one. It was found in ancient India, Babylonia, Greece, and for a time accepted by early Christians. The conception of the vampire was common among Slavonic peoples, especially in the Balkan countries and in Hungary, Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia. In these territories from 1730 to 1735, there was a claimed epidemic of vampires; but it was no means of the effect.

In Russia and the Ukraine it was believed that vampires were generally wizards or sorcerers, but in Bulgaria and Serbia it was thought that any corpse over which a cat or a dog jumped or over which a bird flew was liable to become a vampire. In Greece, a vampire was known as a broncolat or boru słowakos, which was identified with the Slavonic name for "werewolf," vl-kodlak, or vukodlak. The vampire, too, was often supposed to steal the heart of his victim and to roast it over a slow fire, thus causing interminable amorous longings.

Marks of Vampirism

Vampirism is said to be epidemic in character; where one instance is discovered it is almost invariably followed by several others. It is believed that the victim of a vampire pines away and dies and becomes in turn a vampire after death, and so duly infects others.

After the disinterment of a suspected vampire, various well-known signs are looked for by experienced persons. Thus, if several holes about the breadth of a man's finger are observed in the soil above the grave, the vampire character of its occupant may be suspected. The corpse is usually found with wide-open eyes, ruddy, life-like complexion and lips, a general appearance of freshness, and shows no signs of corruption.

It may also be found that the hair and nails have grown as in life. On the throat, two small livid marks may be observed. The coffin is also very often full of blood, the body has a swollen and gorged appearance, and the shroud is frequently half-full of blood. The coffin is also very often full of blood, the body has a swollen and gorged appearance, and the shroud is frequently half-full of blood. Bones, while the carcasses themselves, like leeches, are filled with blood to such a degree that it comes out at all the apertures of their body. This notion has lately been confirmed by several facts.

Examples of Vampirism

Many tales of vampirism have been recorded. Charles Ferdinand de Schertz, in his work Magia Posthuma, printed at Olmutz in 1706, related several stories of apparitions of this sort. One, among others, was of a herdsman of the village of Blow near the town of Kadam in Bohemia, who visited several persons who all died within eight days.

At last, the inhabitants of Blow dug up the herdsman's body and fixed it in the ground with a stake driven through it. The man, even in this condition, laughed at the action of the people about him and told them they were very obliging to furnish him with a stick with which to defend himself.

The same night, he extricated himself from the stake, frightened persons by appearing to them, and caused the deaths of many more individuals. He was then delivered into the hands of the hangman, who put him into a cart in order to burn him outside the town. As they went along, the carcass shrieked in the most hideous manner and moved as if it were alive, and upon being again run through with a stake, it gave a loud cry, and a great quantity of fresh blood issued from the wound. At last, the body was burned to ashes.

Augustine Calmet, in his Dissertation on Vampires appended to his Dissertation upon the Apparitions of Angels, Demons, and Ghosts (English translation, 1759), gave several instances of vampirism.

"It is now about fifteen years since a soldier, who was quartered in the house of a Haidamack peasant, upon the frontiers of Hungary, saw, as he was at the table with his landlord, a stranger come in and sit down by them. The master of the house and the rest of the company were strangely terrified, but the soldier knew not what to make of it. The next day the peasant died, and, upon the soldier's enquiring into the meaning of it, he was told that it was his landlord's father who had been dead and buried above ten years that came and sat down at table, and gave his son notice of his death.

"The soldier soon propagated the story through his regiment, and by this means it reached the general officers, who commissioned the count de Cabreras . . . to make an exact enquiry into the fact. The count, attended by several officers, a surgeon, and a notary, came to the house, and took the deposition of all the family, who unanimously swore that the spectre was the landlord's father, and that all the soldier had said was strictly true. The same was also attested by all the inhabitants of the village.

"In consequence of this the body of the spectre was dug up, and found to be in the same state as if it had been but just dead. . . . The count de Cabreras ordered its head to be cut off, and the corpse to be buried again. He then proceeded to take depositions against other spectres of the same sort, and particularly against a man who had been dead above thirty years, and had made his appearance there several times in his own house at meal-time. At his first visit he had fastened upon the neck of his own brother, and sucked his blood; at his second, he had treated one of his children in the same manner; and the third time, he fastened upon a servant of the family, and all three died upon the spot.

"Upon this evidence, the count gave orders that he should be dug up, and being found, like the first, with his blood in a fluid state, as if he had been alive, a great nail was drove through his temples, and he was buried again. The count ordered a third to be burnt, who had been dead above sixteen years, and was found guilty of murdering two of his own children by sucking their blood.

"The gentleman who acquainted me with all these particulars, had them from the count de Cabreras himself, at Fribourg in Brisgua, in the year 1730."

Other cases alluded to by Calmet are as follows:

"In the part of Hungary . . . on the other side of the Tisibus, . . . the people named Heydukes have a notion that there are dead persons, called by them vampires, which suck the blood of the living, so as to make them fall away visibly to skin and bones, while the carcasses themselves, like leeches, are filled with blood to such a degree that it comes out at all the apertures of their body. This notion has lately been confirmed by several facts.

"About five years ago, an Heyduke, named Arnold Paul, an inhabitant of Medreiga, was killed by a cart full of hay that fell upon him. About thirty days after his death, four persons died suddenly, with all the symptoms usually attending those who are killed by vampires. It was then remembered that this Arnold Paul had frequently told a story of his having been tormented by a Turkish vampire, in the neighbourhood of Cassova, upon the borders of Turkish Servia (for the notion is that those who have been passive vampires in their time-life become active ones after death; or, in other words, that those who have had their blood sucked become suckers in their turn) but that he had been cured by eating some of the earth upon the vampire's grave, and by rubbing himself with his blood. This precaution, however, did not hinder him from being gored quite through the body of the deceased, and to let it pass through his heart, which is attended with a hideous cry from the carcasses, as if it had been alive. This ceremony being performed, they cut off the head, and burnt the body to ashes. After this, they proceeded in the same manner with the four other persons that died of vampirism, lest they also should be troublesome. But all these executions could not hinder this dreadful prodigy from appearing again last year, at the distance of five years from its first breaking out. In the space of three months, seventeen persons of different ages and sexes died of vampirism, some without any previous illness, and others after languishing two or three days. Among others, it was said, that a girl, named Stanoska, . . . went to bed in perfect health, but awoke in the middle of the night, trembling, and crying out that the son of the Heyduke Millo, who died about nine weeks before, had almost strangled her while she was asleep. From that time she fell into a languishing state, and died at three days’ end. Her evidence against Millo’s son was looked upon as a proof of his being a vampire, and, upon digging up his body, he was found to be such.

“At the consultation of the principal inhabitants of the place, . . . it was considered how it was possible that the plague of vampirism should break out afresh, after the precautions that had been taken some years before: and, at last, it was found out that the original offender, Arnold Paul, had not only destroyed the four persons mentioned above, but had killed several Karats, which the late vampires, and particularly the son of Millo, had fed upon. Upon this foundation a resolution was taken to dig up all the persons that had died within a certain time. Out of forty were found seventeen, with all the evident tokens of vampirism; and they had all stakes drove through their hearts, their heads cut off, their bodies burnt, and their ashes thrown into the river.”

Methods of Extermination

The commonest methods of extermination of vampires are beating the suspected corpse, taking out the heart, impaling the corpse with a white-thorn stake (in Russia an aspen), and burning it. Sometimes more than one or all of these precautions is taken.

Instances are on record where the graves of as many as thirty or forty persons have been disturbed during the course of an epidemic of suspected vampirism and their occupants impaled or beheaded.

Persons who dread the visits or attacks of a vampire sleep with a wreath made of garlic round the neck, as garlic is supposed to be especially obnoxious to the vampire.

When impaled, the vampire is usually said to emit a dreadful cry, but it has been pointed out that intestinal gas may be forced through the throat by the entry of the stake into the body, and that this may account for the sound.

The method of discovering a vampire’s grave in Serbia was to place a virgin boy upon a coal-black stallion which had never served a mare and to mark the spot that the horse refused to pass. An officer quartered in Wallachia wrote to Calmet, giving him an instance of this method.

A Bulgarian belief was that a wizard or sorcerer may entrap a vampire by placing some food for which the vampire has a passion in the grave, and force it to come out to eat it.

Scientific Views of Vampirism

The British custom of piercing a suicide’s body with a stake would appear to be a remnant of the belief in vampirism. Such beliefs were also to be seen in the Polynesian tiu, the Malayan hantu parokadum (a dog-headed water demon), and the hephen of the Karens, which devoured human souls.

The English anthropologist E. B. Tylor considered vampires to be “causes conceived in spiritual form to account for specific facts of wasting disease.” The Russian folklorist Alexander N. Afansyev regarded them as thunder gods and spirits of the storm, who sleep during winter in cloud coffins and rise again in spring.

Calmet’s difficulty in accepting vampires was that he could not understand how a spirit could leave its grave and return there with matter in the form of blood, leaving no evidence that the surface of the earth above the grave had been stirred. But this view might be combated by the theory of the precipitation of matter.

In modern times, it is easy to understand how individuals in an unrecognized condition of cataleptic trance might have been prematurely buried alive and upon regaining consciousness have struggled to escape their horrible plight. Their bodies would have exhibited many of the signs associated with vampires.

It is now also generally known that some individuals suffer from a morbid fascination with human blood, and it would have been easy in the past to associate such unnatural appetite with vampirism. The infamous Countess Elizabeth Bathory of Transylvania (d. 1614) was reputed to have murdered nearly 700 young women in the belief that their blood would keep her young.

No doubt the observed activities of the various types of vampire bats (Desmodus Rufus, D. Velatus, Diphylla Euhodtii, Desmodus Rotunda) in sucking blood from cattle and horses have helped to spread legends of vampires. The vampire bat drinks 20 ccs of blood per day and has been known to attack human beings. It also spreads rabies, thus enhancing stories of a vampire plague.

Psychic Theories of Vampires

Some individuals seem to have the ability to draw some kind of psychic energy from others. Every stage performer or public speaker is aware of the rapport which exists between performer and audience, and many have become expert at gaining confidence and power through some instinctive techniques of centralizing and transforming psychic or nervous energy.

The common experience of out-of-the-body travel or astral projection has sometimes been associated with visits to other individuals, as well as contacts with frightening elementals on the astral plane. Some occultists appear to have mastered techniques by which they can astrally project, and visit their victims while asleep and drain their vitality from them.

During the nineteenth century, the French Spiritualist Z. J. Piearart attempted to reconcile the theory of premature burial with astral projection by those who died after being buried alive. He wrote:

“Poor dead cataleptics, buried as if really dead in cold and dry spots where morbid causes are incapable of effecting the destruction of their bodies, the astral spirit enveloping itself with a fluidic ethereal body, is prompted to quit the precincts of its tomb and to exercise on living bodies acts peculiar to physical life, especially that of nutrition, the result of which, by a mysterious link between soul and body which spiritualistic science will some day explain, is forwarded to the material body lying still within the tomb, and the latter is thus helped to perpetuate its vital existence.”

Adolphe d’Assier, in his book Posthumous Humanity (1887), admitted that the body of the vampire may be dead but the spirit earthbound and obsessed with the idea that the physical body must be saved from dissolution. Consequently the dense astral body feeds on human victims and, by some mysterious process, conveys the blood into the tomb.

Both speculations furnish explanations of the attestation of numerous ancient chronicles that fresh blood was found in the exhumed and uncorrupted body of dead people suspected of vampirism.

Following the occult boom of the 1950s, Bram Stoker’s powerful but much neglected masterpiece Dracula was taken up again, examined by critics and found to be as full of vitality as during Stoker’s own lifetime. Almost by contagion, it has generated a plethora of horror movies, plays, and other vampire thrillers.
In Britain, the Dracula Society, with its general interest in Gothic themes, pioneered tourist expeditions to Transylvania, and in Stoker’s Ireland, a Bram Stoker Society was founded to honor a much neglected Irishman. Through the 1980s and 1990s, the most active organization was the Count Dracula Fan Club, headquartered in New York City. However, in 1999, the club announced its closing.

Much of the interest in vampires has also been carried by fan clubs that have grown out of television series. “Dark Shadows” fandom, from the 1960s, had retained its vitality for over 30 years and still attracts 400-600 members to its annual meeting. Another set of fan clubs sprang up from “Forever Knight,” the series featuring a vampire policeman from Toronto. As the century ended, vampire fandom received an unexpected boost from the successful series, “Buffy the Vampire Slayer.”

In the 1990s, interest in vampires shifted largely to the Internet where thousands of sites cover all aspects of the vampire world. Over 2000 sites alone were devoted just to the “Buffy the Vampire Slayer” show in 1999. Vampire Quarterly, formerly a fan magazine, was one of the first to make the transition to the Internet and emerged as one of the most complete guides to vampires. (See also Dracula; Magia Posthumna; Monsters)

Sources:
---. Harenburg, Johann C. Von Vampyren. N. p., 1739.
---. Mannhardt, W. Uber Vampirisimus. (see vol. 4 of Zeitschrift für Deutsche Mythologie und Sittenkunde) Göttingen, 1858.

Vampire Information Exchange

Vampire interest group founded by Eric Held and Dorothy Nixon in 1978. In 1979 they began a newsletter which Held has continued over the years as Nixon moved on to other interests. Held has also published an annual Calendar of Vampire Events and a bibliography of vampire books for its members. For information on membership, write to Eric Held, Dir., P.O. Box 290328, Brooklyn, NY 11229-0328.

Sources:

The Vampire Journal

Former publication devoted to the subject of vampires that served as the organ of the now defunct Dracula and Company, a vampire interest group headquartered in the New Orleans suburb of Metairie, Louisiana.

Vampire Quarterly (Magazine)

Magazine devoted to the subject of vampires formerly published from Toms River, New Jersey.
Vampire Studies

Founded in Chicago in 1977 as the Vampire Studies Society by Martin V. Riccardo, the organization was the first vampire fan club to use the word “vampire” in its name (there had previously been several organizations built around Dracula). For several years the society published a Journal of Vampirem. The word “society” was dropped in 1990 and Vampire Studies now exists as a correspondence network and information clearinghouse for people interested in all aspects of vampire lore. Those interested may contact Riccardo at P.O. Box 151, Berwyn, IL 60402-0151.

Sources:
- Van de Castle, Robert L(eon) (1927– ). Clinical psychologist and parapsychologist. He was born on November 16, 1927, at Rochester, New York, and studied at Syracuse University (B.A., 1951), the University of Missouri (M.A., 1953), and the University of North Carolina (Ph.D., 1959). While in North Carolina he was a research associate at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University (1954–55). Following graduation in 1959 he joined the faculty in psychology at the University of Denver where he remained until he became the director of the Sleep and Dream Laboratory at the University of Virginia in 1967. He is now a psychologist at the Blue Ridge Hospital in Charlottesville, Virginia.
- While in Denver he did research with members of the Cuna tribe as part of research on whether people from a non-technological society would score significantly on ESP tests. He went on to conduct dream research with Calvin Itall at the Institute of Dream Research in Miami, publishing a joint work The Content Analysis of Dreams (1966). He also studied personality correlates in extrasensory perception and psychokinesis, and conducted experiments relating psychological tests to extrasensory ability, on grants from the Parapsychology Foundation. He was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association, since 1969 a council member, and was elected its president in 1970.

Sources:
- Van de Castle, Robert L. “Development and Validation of a Perceptual Maturity Scale Using Figure Preferences.” Journal of Consultative Psychology 29 (1965).

Vandermeulen Spirit Indicator

One of various devices invented to facilitate communication with spirits through mechanical means. It consisted of two glass prisms—one plain, the other resinous—fixed face-to-face on a board. Between them hung a very light triangle of wire. The prisms were connected to the positive and negative poles of a dry cell battery.

If the hanging triangle swung out and touched the positive wire, the circuit was closed and the bell rang. The spirits were expected to generate electricity in the prisms. If this was done, the hanging triangle wired to the negative pole would be repelled by the negative prism and attracted to the positive wire. The bell would ring, which was taken as an indication that a spirit desired to communicate, and the observers would rush to the ouija board to obtain the message.

The young inventor died in 1930 before his apparatus could be tested properly, but it was revived by a Mr. Rutot, a Belgian professor and a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences. Rutot claimed that by means of the apparatus he had been able to contact the dead inventor. The apparatus, which came to be known as Rutot’s Spirit Indicator, was described in Revue Métapsychique (May–June, 1930, p. 236) and Rutot’s own experiences were published in the Bulletin du Conseil de Recherches Métapsychiques de Belgique (July 1930). An English-language de-cription of the apparatus, with detailed instructions for construction, was published by Robert J. Strong in his book Spiritual Engineering (1951).
For a detailed report of tests, with photographs, see the chapter “Rutot’s Triangles” in Laboratory Investigations into Psychic Phenomena by Hereward Carrington (n.d.). It was not possible for Carrington to confirm the “instrumental communication with the dead” claimed by Rutot. Mechanical faults were not ruled out, and it was suggested that Rutot’s claimed results may have been due to experimenters with mediumistic or telekinetin powers. (See also electronic voice phenomenon)

Van Eeden, Frederik (1860–1932)
Dutch physician, author, and poet, who was also actively interested in psychiatry and psychical research and was acquaint-aced with Frederic William Henry Myers. He conducted important research with the non-professional British medium Rosina Thompson and also made valuable contributions to the study of dreams. He coined the term “lucid dreams” to denote dreams in which the sleeper is aware of dreaming, i.e., some degree of waking consciousness persists in the dream state, often in response to out-of-the-body (OOB) experiences. He appears to have had some OOB experience himself, since he described it in one of his novels (The Brile of Dreams, 1918). He also obtained cross-correspondences between his own dreams and the trance utterances of “Nelly,” Thompson’s control, while Van Eeden was in Holland and Thompson in England.

Sources:
Pleasant, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsycholo-Van Eeden, Frederik. “A Study of Dreams.” Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research 26 (1913).

Vanga
The unenrolled members of the Ndembo secret society of the Lower Congo. (See Ndembo)

Van Gelder Kunz, Dora (1904–1999)
American psychic and leader in the Theosophical Society.
She was born on April 28, 1904, in Java, where she grew up on her father’s sugar plantation. Here she saw and communed with fairies, unaware that this was a special psychic faculty. At the age of eleven, she left Java for Australia, where she studied with an Anglican priest who also possessed unusual psychic abilities. At the age of twenty-two, she married an American and moved to the United States, where she became president of a corporation concerned with teaching materials, while her husband became head of an educational foundation.
Van Gelder had never been a professional paid medium nor publicized her psychic abilities but instead worked unobstrusively with physicians on difficult cases for diagnostic and healing purposes. She showed a natural ability to see the psychic energy patterns in human beings and their relationship to conditions of health and disease. She also claimed the unusual ability of being able to predict specific illness, sometimes as early as eighteen months in advance.
She said she never lost her ability to commune with fairy life.
When she was a young woman she wrote about her fairy experiences. This early manuscript was revised and published as The Real World of Fairies (1977). She stated that fairy life is still apparent, but becoming less evident with the growing pollution of cities and urban life. She even reported seeing fairies in Central Park, New York.

Van Helmont, Jean Baptiste (1577–1644)
Belgian physician, chemist, and physiologist, whose research was associated with occult theories. He was born to an aristocratic family in Brussels. Studying at Louvain, he attained early distinction in mathematics, lecturing on physics at the age of 17. Before he was 22, he had read Hippocrates and the Greek and Arabian authors, had become eminent in the doctines of Aristotle and Galen, and had practiced medicine, according to Vopiscus and Plempius.
In the year 1599, he received his Ph.D. in medicine. After this, he spent some years in the practice of medicine, but meeting a follower of Paracelsus, he became interested in the theories of chemical medicine to such a degree that he retired to the castle of Vilvorde, near Brussels, to spend the rest of his life in the study of experimental chemistry, on which he wrote various treatises, becoming famous throughout Europe for his scientific knowledge.
He revolutionized medicine as known in his day, turning aside from the theories of Galen and the Arabs, and creating an epoch in the history of physiology, being the first to recognize the functions of the stomach and its relation to the other organs of the body.
Van Helmont’s many and varied experiments led him to deal with aerial fluids, to which he gave the name of gas—carbonic acid gas being his discovery—and it is said that without him the chemistry of steel in all probability would have been unknown to science.
Van Helmont is remembered as an alchemist more than a scientist. Alchemy, with its visions of the elixir of life and the philosophers’ stone, presented itself to him as another field of experiment and research. Although he never pretended to the art of making the transmuting powder, he testified his belief in the transmutation of metals, claiming to have seen the experiment performed many times.
Among other things he became a firm believer in mineral and human magnetism, anticipating Franz Anton Mesmer in almost the very terms of the later exponent of the theory, and basing his argument on the observed sympathy or antagonism that seems to spontaneously arise between individuals and the influence exerted by a firm will over a weak imagination.
In 1609, he retired to Vilvorde, near Brussels, and devoted himself to medical practice and chemical experiments. He declined to leave his retirement, although his fame brought him flattering invitations and offers from the Emperor and the Elector Palatine. Almost unknown to his neighbors, he attended anyone stricken by illness without accepting any fees for his services.
His published writings included: De Magneta, Variae naturae lage et Legitima Curatione (1621), De aquis Leondensiis medicant (1624), Opuscula Medica inaudita (1641), and Februm doctrina maudita (1642). Some of these were translated into Dutch, French, and German. English translations of his tracts include:
A Ternary of Paradoxes; The Magnetick Cure of Wounds; The Natu-ry of Tartar in Wine, The Image of God in Man (1650), and Deliramenta Catarhri: or the Incongruities, Impossibilities and Absurdities ouched under the vulgar opinion of Deceptions (1650).
He died December 30, 1644.

Van Hoof, Mary Ann (1909–1984)
Mary Ann Van Hoof, who reported apparitions of the Virgin Mary at Necedah, Wisconsin, for a quarter of a century be-going in 1949, was born Mary Ann Bieder on July 31, 1909, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She grew up in Kenosha County, Wisconsin, in a German-speaking family and attended

Sources:

Van Hoof, Mary Ann

1625
school only through the eighth grade. As a young woman she married Godfried Van Hoof, and together they had eight children. They moved to Necedah, Wisconsin, in 1942.

Van Hoof had her initial brief apparition of the Virgin on November 12, 1949, which happened to be the anniversary of the last apparition of a set of appearances by the Virgin that had occurred the previous year in Lippa, Philippines. The following spring, beginning on April 7 (Good Friday), Van Hoof experienced a set of apparitions that called for a large shrine to be established for Marian devotion. Subsequent apparitions occurred on May 28 (Pentecost Sunday), May 29 and 30, and June 6 (Trinity Sunday). By the time of the June apparition, many had heard of Van Hoof seeing the Virgin, and a large crowd gathered. With the announcement that Mary would return on August 15 (marked by Roman Catholics as the feast day of the Assumption of Mary into heaven) and October 1 (the feast day honoring the rosary), the story became news and articles began to appear in newspapers throughout the Midwest.

In the meantime, the local Roman Catholic priest became aware of the apparitions and sent an initial report to his bishop in La Crosse, Wisconsin. The bishop issued an initial statement decreeing any sensationalism associated with the apparitions and launched a study of Van Hoof’s claims. Van Hoof believed the apparition told her the American Catholics must reeducate themselves to prayer and pious, or the Korean War would be the beginning of the end for America. She also indicated that the Soviets would invade the United States and Alaska would be “the first stepping stone.” Prior to the August apparition, the diocesan paper called them into question. In spite of many bishops discouraging the faithful from attending, crowds estimated in the tens of thousands were present for the last two apparitions of 1950. Over the next few years the apparitions continued, and not only did people travel long distances to be present, but several hundred relocated their residence to Necedah. An organization emerged and the shrine that began at the location of the apparitions grew into a set of related shrines.

In 1955 the bishop gave a more definitive ruling. He suggested that Van Hoof’s claims to supernatural visitation were false and prohibited all religious worship at the shrine, now named after Mary’s appearance as the Shrine of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, Mediatrix of Peace. Van Hoof and her supporters were disappointed but continued in hope of a reversal of the ruling. Reminiscent of the apparition of Catherine Laboure in 1830, in 1957 Van Hoof was shown the design of a medal for the unity of church, home, and school, which was later struck and distributed.

Finally, in 1975, the bishop of La Crosse placed Van Hoof and her followers under an interdict, one step short of excommunication. They were denied access to all sacraments except confession. The interdict did not stop work at the shrine. Two years later Van Hoof announced plans to build a large sanctuary on her property, which she had inherited when her husband died in 1960.

In 1979, the final break with the Roman Catholic Church came as Van Hoof developed a relationship with Edward Michel Stehlik, the archbishop of a small independent church, the American National Catholic Church. She also pushed ahead with plans to build a home for infants and organized an order of nuns. Stehlik consecrated the shrine, which had grown into a sizable place of pilgrimage, but two years later Stehlik left the shrine. He denounced Van Hoof as a fraud and returned to the Roman Catholic Church. The scandal accompanying Stehlik’s departure hurt Van Hoof, but did not affect many who had come to support her apparitions. Her visions of the Virgin continued, the work of the shrine grew, and several books appeared with texts of the apparitions and accounts of Van Hoof by her supporters.

In 1978, Van Hoof married Raymond Hirt. By this time, a pattern of pilgrimages to the shrine on the anniversaries of the 1950 apparitions had been established. Van Hoof died on March 18, 1984. She was buried at the shrine her visions inspired.

Sources:

Van Peursen, C. (ornelis) A(thonie) (1920– )

Dutch professor of philosophy who has written on parapsychology. He was born July 8, 1920, at Rotterdam, Netherlands. His educational career was interrupted by World War II but he completed his doctorate in 1948 at the University of Leiden. After several years with the Netherlands Committee for the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) (1948–50), he taught successively at the University of Utrecht (1950–53), the University of Groningen (1955–60), and, since 1960, at the University of Leiden. He has shown an interest in psychic reality, was a member of the editorial board of a Dutch parapsychology journal.

Sources:

Van Praagh, James (ca. 1960– )

James Van Praagh, a Spiritualist medium and author of two best-selling books on his experiences with psychic reality, was born into a Catholic family in Bayside, New York, around 1960. As a youth he attended Sacred Heart School. Responding to his mother’s wish that he become a priest, he entered a junior seminary, Eymard Preparatory School in Hyde Park, New York. He stayed only one year, having concluded that neither the priesthood nor the Roman Catholic Church were for him. He completed his high school years in a public school.

As a child, Van Praagh had a variety of psychic experiences. One in particular stood out. At the age of eight, he had a vision of a giant hand above his bed one evening. He interpreted it as the Hand of God and from that time forward his belief in God never wavered. Also, on the first anniversary of singer Janis Joplin’s death he tried to contact her. Sitting before a candle, he called her spirit to manifest and immediately afterward the flame bent in a most unusual manner.

In 1978 Van Praagh left New York to attend San Francisco State University, where he majored in broadcasting. He hoped for a career in Hollywood as a screenwriter. Following his graduation in 1982, he moved to Los Angeles and took a menial job as he began working his way up. A colleague at his workplace invited him to visit Spiritualist medium Brian Hurst, who told him that one day he would also be a medium. He was intrigued enough with the prediction that he began to pick up books on psychic development and find ways to hone his skills. Within a year he was regularly receiving calls from friends and acquaintances asking him for advice.

Within a short time, he was spending so much of his time doing readings for people who valued his talents that he was forced to make a choice to either drop his spiritual work or his plans for a Hollywood career. He chose to continue with his spirit contact and soon emerged as a Spiritualist medium. Over the years he gave private readings, conducted many development classes, and traveled frequently. He founded Spiritual Horizons in Los Angeles to coordinate his activities.

In 1997, Van Praagh took a step upward with the publication of his first book, Talking to Heaven. The book became a best-seller and he became a public personality as a result of the subsequent radio and television appearances. It was followed by a sequel, Reaching to Heaven (1999), which also became a best-seller. Both books recount some of his more successful experiences of spirit contact, discuss the view of the universe they suggest, and offer means for individuals to develop their own clairvoyance and mediumistic abilities.

Sources:

---

Early flying saucer contactee and author of the pioneering flying saucer volume I Rode in a Flying Saucer (1952). As people responded to his claims of extraterrestrial contact and other contactees emerged, Van Tassel organized the Giant Rock Space Convention, held annually at Giant Rock Airport, near Yucca Valley, California. Van Tassel was proprietor of the airport and had some background in aeronautics.

Van Tassel was born on March 11, 1910, in Jefferson, Ohio. He went into aviation as a young man and worked for both Howard Hughes and Lockheed. He moved to the desert in 1947 where he opened a restaurant, an airport, and a dude ranch. In 1952 he began to receive psychic messages from extraterrestrials, primarily from a group of people who made up what was called the Ashtar Command. The Ashtar Command operated very much like the Intergation, designed to assist the development of extraterrestrials, primarily from a group of people who made up what was called the Ashtar Command. The Ashtar Command operated very much like the Masters of theosophical traditions, but were seen as authorities in this solar system.

Over the years Van Tassel claimed to have continued contact with the Ashtar Command telepathically. He often went into a trance in his circle of friends and communicated messages allegedly from UFO entities. Such communications were published in his journal, Proceedings of the College of Universal Wisdom, and became the basis for future books.

He constructed a round domed building called an “Intergation,” at Giant Rock, based on instructions from his outer space contacts. The Intergation was designed to assist the development of auras over time and travel. The Intergation was never finished.

Van Tassel also published Into This World and Out Again: a modern proof of the origin of humanity and its regression from the original creation of man. Verified by the Holy Bible. Revelations received through thought communication (1956).

Van Tassel died February 9, 1978, after a sudden heart attack. The work of completing the Intergation was continued by an associate designated as successor by Van Tassel in 1977 and the building was later purchased by the Christology Church, P.O. Box 4648, San Diego, CA 92104. The work of his College of Universal Wisdom was continued by Van Tassel’s widow, Doris Van Tassel.

Sources:

---

Van Vuurde, Wilhelm (1909–?)

Wilhelm van Vuurde, a famous subject of parapsychological research, was born and grew up in the Netherlands. As a young man he attempted to escape the coming war by migrating to South Africa, but wound up a prisoner of the Japanese. While a prisoner he suffered from extreme malnutrition and lost some of his sight. After the war he settled in South Africa.

Van Vuurde believed he had a talent for waking himself at any unknown and randomly chosen times. He developed an experiment to test himself using two clocks, one of which would be set before he went to sleep at an unknown position and the other set to run but with a string that could be pulled to stop the clock upon awakening. The next morning the two clocks could be checked to see if the times coincided. He tested himself over 200 times between 1951 and 1954 and published a report on his effort in 1956. As a result of his claim, A. E. H. Bleksley of the South African Society for Psychical Research conducted a series of experiments between 1959 and 1967, which produced a spectacular level of positive results. During the 1980s van Vuurde moved back to the Netherlands and has most recently been involved in a new set of experiments with Jeff C. Jacobs of the Sychronicity Research Unit. Van Vuurde has thus emerged as one of a very few subjects who have been able consistently to produce positive results over a long period of time in repeated experiments.

Sources:

---

Vardgor

A psychic double or forerunner that appears in advance to announce the arrival of an individual. Sometimes it may manifest simply as familiar sounds associated with the individual concerned. Occasionally it may appear to the individual himself or herself, as in the celebrated experience of the great German poet Johann Goethe, who met his double on the road to Drusenheim dressed in a garment which Goethe was to wear by accident eight years later on the same route. Little has been published on the curious phenomenon of the vardgor apart from an article in 1917 by Wiers Jensen, editor of the Norwegian Journal of Psychical Research.

---

Varley, Cromwell Fleetwood (1828–1883)

Renowned Spiritualist and consulting electrician of the Atlantic Telegraph Company and the Electric and International Telegraph Company. He was born at Kentish Town, London, April 6, 1828, and named after two of his ancestors, Oliver Cromwell and General Fleetwood. He was educated in South London, and went on to study telegraphy, joining the Electric and International Telegraph Company in 1846.

He was first attracted to Spiritualism in 1850. He investigated the hypothesis that table rapping was the result of an electric force and demonstrated that this hypothesis was altogether unfounded. In later years, he had many curious psychic experiences, discovered that he possessed mesmeric healing power, and effected cures on his wife. She in turn had clairvoyant visions and spells of trance in which she foretold the exact course of her illness. After the birth of a son, Varley was one night aroused by three tremendous raps. He felt impelled to go into his wife's room, where he found the nurse intoxicated and his wife rigid and in a cataleptic state. He later made the acquaintance of the famous medium Daniel Dunglas Home. Narrating his experiences before the committee of the London Dialectical Society in 1869, he concluded: “Since I was so astonished to be able to feel satisfied. Fortunately, when I got home, a circumstance occurred which got rid of the element of doubt. While alone in the drawing room, thinking intently on what I had witnessed, there were raps. The next morning I received a letter from Mr. Home, in which he said ‘When alone in your room last night you heard sounds. I am so delighted.’ He stated the spirits had told him they followed me, and were enabled to produce sounds. I have the letter in my possession now, to show that imagination had nothing to do with the matter.”

Varley gave account of other personal occurrences. In the winter of 1864, at Beckenham Kent, he was awakened during the night by raps. His wife was lying by his side in trance and he saw the transparent phantom of a man in military dress in the air. He asked him, through the voice of his wife, to deliver a message to his brother in Birmingham.

Varley also had other curious experiences. In a dream state, he saw and heard the double of his sister-in-law. Next morning she confirmed everything by narrating her own dream experience. At another time, having accidentally chloroformed himself, he had vivid out-of-the-body experiences which were similarly confirmed by his wife. In 1860, at Halifax, his double, unable to wake his physical self, made him dream of a bomb explosion; when the shock woke him he found the scene outside his window exactly corresponding to what his double saw.

In New York, he made the acquaintance of several mediums and conducted experiments in the home of C. F. Livermore, the banker, with the famous medium Kate Fox of the Fox Sisters. His efforts to find the laws that govern the physical phenomena of Spiritualism were fruitless. He began to suspect that powers other than electricity and magnetism were at work. On the basis of his varied experiences he was led to believe “that we are not our bodies; that when we die we exist just as much as before, and that under certain conditions we are able to hold communications with those on earth; but I also believe that many of the phenomena are often caused by the spirits of those whose bodies are present.”

When Sir William Crookes started his famous investigation into the phenomena of Spiritualism, Varley assisted him in devising means of electric control. For his outspoken stand he was subject to abuse from the skeptical W. B. Carpenter who, in the October 1871 Quarterly Review, assured readers that there were grave doubts of his scientific ability and that these misgivings of the learned world had kept Varley out of the Royal Society. At the time of this attack, Varley had been a fellow of the Royal Society for more than three months.

In addition to his researches in Spiritualism, Varley was renowned for his important part in the successful laying of the first Atlantic cable. He died at Bexley Heath, Kent, September 2, 1883.

Varma, Devendra P. (1923–1994)

Leading authority on the Gothic novel and author and editor of over two hundred books on the subject, Dr. Varma was born on October 17, 1923, in northeastern India, on the borders of the Himalayan Mountains. He has been a professor of English in Katmandu, Nepal, and taught at the University of Damascus in Syria and in Cairo. For many years he taught English at Dalhousie University in Halifax, Nova Scotia, specializing in the Gothic romance. He had taken a particular interest in the study of the vampire and discussed the subject in his introduction to the three-volume reprint of Varney the Vampire by James Malcolm Rymer (often mistakenly attributed to Thomas Prest), a mid-nineteenth-century vampire novel. In 1973, he traveled to Castle Dracula in Transylvania to investigate the background of Bram Stoker’s famous novel Dracula, first published in 1897.

Varma had kept in close touch with such Hollywood directors of horror movies as Curtis Harrington, Frank Cunnumham, Walter Doughty, and Forrest Ackermann and was friends with such actors as Christopher Lee and Vincent Price. He edited the seven volumes of the “horrid novels” mentioned in Jane Austen’s Northanger Abbey, the Gothic Studies and Dissertations Series in 36 volumes, and three series of Gothic Novels reprinted by Arno Press (including The Complete Works of Sheridan LeFanu) in 52 volumes. In 1977, he was awarded the Queen’s Silver Jubilee Medal in Britain for his contributions to education and the arts.

Sources:

Vasiliev, Leonid Leonidovich (1891–1966)

Soviet physiologist and parapsychologist. Born in Russia, he graduated from Petersburg University in 1914. He was a teacher of biological sciences at Ufa, Bashkir (1914–21), head of the Physiology Department, Bekhterev Brain Institute, Leningrad (1921–38), and a professor of physiology at Leningrad University from 1943 onward. Vasiliev pioneered parapsychology in the Soviet Union, and helped to establish the first parapsychology laboratory at Leningrad (now St. Petersburg). His work is both contemporaneous with and of equal quality as that of J. B. Rhine. He began by attempting to replicate some of the experiments of Pierre Janet, the nineteenth-century French psychologist. His spectacular success gave parapsychology some recognition in the highly politicized atmosphere of Stalinist Russia. He first developed a “politically correct” hypothesis of the material basis of telepathy, but his experiments to establish his theory proved quite the opposite. Financial support was withdrawn and Vasiliev’s work was not published until the 1960s, after Stalin’s death.

Sources:

Sources:

Sources:

enty-two spirits to be conjured up by magical evocation. Vassa-go is described as a prince in the hierarchy of genii, favored by those who would know the unknown; he could tell of the future and find anything lost or stolen. As with other princes among the spirits, Vassago could be conjured into a mystical triangle, but kings and emperors among the spirits could be conjured into a magical crystal. (See also crystal gazing)

Vasse, Christine M(aria) Piot (1922– )

Teacher who has written on parapsychology. Born December 8, 1922, in Salouel, France, Vasse received her college degree (B.A.) in 1941 and was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association.

She experimented in extrasensory perception with children, and studied teacher-student relationships in these tests. She collaborated with her husband on experiments involving dice placement and also plant growth. She is co-author of various articles with her husband Paul M. Vasse, and translator of French the Handbook of Tests in Parapsychology by Betty Humphrey Nicols.

Sources:
Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsycho-
Vasse, Paul M. and Christine M. Vasse. "Comparison of Two Subjects in PK." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1951).
"ESP Test with French First-Grade School Chil-
"Plant Growing Experiments." Revue Métapsychique
(April–June 1948).

Vasse, Paul M(arie) (1910– ?)

Physician who experimented in areas of parapsychology. He was born February 17, 1910, at Amiens, France, studied at the University of Paris (B.A., 1928; M.D., 1936), and was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association and the Ordre des Médecins. In collaboration with his wife, Christine M. Vasse, Vasse conducted experiments in dice placement and in the growth of plants and lectured on his results at the Institut Métapsychique.

Sources:
Pleasants, Helene, ed. Biographical Dictionary of Parapsycho-
Vasse, Paul M. and Christine M. Vasse. "Comparison of Two Subjects in PK." Journal of Parapsychology (December 1951).
"ESP Test with French First-Grade School Chil-
"Plant Growing Experiments." Revue Métapsychique (April–June 1948).

"Vates"

One of the spirit controls of William Stainton Moses.
"Vates" was an assistant to the control “Imperator,” said to have been the prophet Daniel.

Vaughan, Alan (1936– )

Author, editor, and psychic who has written widely on psy-chical and parapsychological topics. He was born on December 28, 1936, in Akron, Ohio, and studied at the University of Akron (A.B., 1958), Rutgers University (1958–59), the New School for Social Research (1966–67), and the University of Freiburg (1967–68). He held several editing jobs before going to work for Psychic magazine (later New Realities) in 1969. He was the editor of Psychic for five years (1972–77). From 1978 onward he was president of New Ways of Consciousness Foundation, San Francisco. He also started a Los Angeles-based computer software company called Mind Technology Systems.

Vaughan has worked in parapsychology, especially with the Dream Laboratory at Maimonides Hospital, and he is an associate member of the Parapsychological Association. He is also a psychic, having begun his development in Europe in the 1960s. In 1983 he began channelling an entity named “Li Sung” who claimed to be an ancient Chinese healer and herbalist. Vaughan reflected upon his unusual dual life:

“The transition from a skeptical science textbook editor to a parapsychologist and practicing psychic was a painful one. I had to give up the cherished idea of traditional science to discover the more important underlying realities of consciousness and its psychic effects. The research leading to Patterns of Prophecy opened up my own prophetic talent, and enabled me to teach others how to develop their latent psi gifts. . . . Each of us has a unique consciousness and a unique task in life. We also have unique problems to solve. But only our consciousness has the answers to our problems.
Your inner self has the wisdom of the universe locked up within it.
By finding the key to unlock that wisdom, you will enrich your life.”

Sources:
Berger, Arthur S., and Joyce Berger. The Encyclopedia of Parapsychology and Psychical Research. New York: Paragon
Vaughan, Alan. The Edge of Tomorrow. New York: Coward, McCann, 1982.
———. Incredible Conscience: The Baffling World of Synchroni-———. Patterns of Prophecy. New York: Hawthorn Books, Ullman, Montague, Stanley Krippner, and Alan Vaughan.
Vaughan, Alan, and James Bolem. Psychics. New York: Harper & Row, 1972.

Vaughan, Diana

The mythical figure in a famous nineteenth-century occult hoax initiated by Leo Taxil, pseudonym of Gabriel Jogand-Pagès, a French journalist. From 1885 to 1886, Taxil published a sensational story that one branch of Freemasonry was following a form of devil-worship called Palladianism, of which Diana Vaughan was the High Priestess. Allegedly, she was the descendant of the seventeenth-century alchemist Thomas Vaughan.

These revelations synchronized with Roman Catholic opposition to Freemasonry (based upon their support of democratic trends in nineteenth-century Europe) and were profitable for Taxil. Diana Vaughan was supposed to have repented to her Satanic background and embraced the Catholic Church. Her memories were read with satisfaction by the pope himself.

An announcement appeared that she would appear at a press conference on Easter Monday 1897. Instead, Taxil appeared and calmly revealed his hoax, stating that he was merely anxious to see how far he could dupe the church. News of this deception was badly received, the plot had lasted three or four years, and Taxil had to be smuggled away under police protection. In Britain, the hoax was exposed by occult scholar Arthur Edward Waite in his book Devil Worship in France (1896).

Sources:
Waite, Arthur Edward. Devil Worship in France; or, The Question of Lucifer: A Record of Things Seen and Heard in the Secret Societies According to the Evidence of Initiates. London, George Red-way, 1896.
Vaughan, Thomas (1622–1666)

British alchemist and poet, who wrote under the pseudonym Eugenius Philalethes. He was born April 17, 1622, at Newton, Breconshire, the younger twin brother of poet Henry Vaughan. He matriculated at Oxford and entered Jesus College, Oxford University, becoming a fellow of his college. In 1640, at the age of eighteen, he received the living (i.e., the income as parish priest) of St. Bridget’s [Church of England], Breconshire, and on February 18, 1642, the B.A. degree. He was a royalist during the Civil War and in 1638 was accused of “drunkenness, swearing, and incontinency, being no preacher,” and deprived of the living of St. Bridget’s. However, this may have been no more than high spirits. He became a devoted student of chemistry, following his research both in Oxford and London, under the patronage of Sir Robert Murray. He died February 27, 1666, at the rectory of Albury, Oxfordshire, allegedly from inhalation of fumes of mercury, upon which he was experimenting.

Vaughan was an ardent follower of Cornelius Agrippa, to whom, as he stated, “he acknowledged that, next to God, he owed all that he had.” He claimed to be a philosopher of nature rather than a vulgar alchemist. In one of his manuscripts he recorded strange dreams of premonitions that he had experienced and prayed for forgiveness of past errors, including former revels and drunkenness. Although he published a translation of a Rosicrucian work with a preface by himself, he explicitly stated that he was not a member of any such fraternity. Under the pseudonym of Eugenius Philalethes, he published a number of books including: Authorosophia Thaumagica, with Anna Magoia (London, 1650; Amsterdam, 1704); and in German, Leipzig, 1749; Magna Acendens; or the Antiquities of Magic (London, 1650, 1656; Amsterdam, 1704, in German), Lumen de Lumine (London, 1651; Hof, 1750, in German), Asa Lucis; or the House of Light (London, 1652), Euphrates; or the Waters of the East (London, 1655, Stockholm & Hamburg, 1689, in German), and The Chymists Key to shut, and to open; or the True Doctrine of Corruption and Generation (London, 1657). He contributed verses for Thomas Powell’s Elements Optick (1651), for the English translation of Cornelius Agrippa’s Three Books of Occult Philosophy (1651), and William Cartwright’s Comedies (1651). A collection of his Latin verses was included at the end of Henry Vaughan’s Thalia Redivova (1678).

Vaughan was falsely identified with the mystical writer “Eirenæus Philalethes” through the Diana Vaughan writings of Leo Taxil (pseudonym of Gabriel Jogand-Pagès), who also popularized a false legend of a pact between him and Satan.

Vaulderie

A term indicating connection with Satanic powers, so called from Robinet de Vaulx, a hermit, one of the first persons accused of the crime. In 1435, the Prior of St. Germain-en-Laye, Guillaume de l’Allive, a doctor of theology, was accused of Vaulderie, and sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Three years later there was burned at Lille a hermit named Alphonse, who preached heterodox doctrines. During the fifteenth century, many accusations of “witchcraft” were directed against those who followed the heretical sect of the Waldenses or Vaudois.

Such were the preludes of a persecution which, in the following year, the Vicar of the Inquisition, administrator of the Diocese of Arras, seconded by the Count d’Etampes, Governor of Artois, directed at first against loose women, but afterwards against citizens, magistrates, knights, and especially the wealthy.

The procedures against the accused had almost always for their basis some accusation of sorcery (i.e., malevolent magic). Most of the unhappy creatures confessed to having attended the Witch’s Sabbath, and the strange revelations wrung from them by torture gave some idea of the ceremonies that, according to the popular tradition, were enacted in the lurid festivals presided over by Satan.

The following are some extracts from the judgment pronounced at Arras in 1460 upon five women, a painter, a poet nicknamed “an abbé of little sense” and aged about seventy, and several others, who all perished in the flames, while tortured by barbarous ignorance and fed by a cruel superstition:

“...And the said Inquisition did say and declare, that those hereinafter named had been guilty of Vaulderie in manner following, that is to say:—That when they wished to go to the said Vaulderie, they, with an ointment given to them by the devil, anointed a small wooden rod and their palms and their hands; then they put the wand between their legs, and soon they flew wherever they wished to go, over fair cities, woods and streams; and the devil carried them to the place where they should hold their assembly, and in this place they found others, and tables placed, loaded with wines and viands; and there they found a demon in the form of a goat, a dog, an ape, or sometimes a man; and they made their oblation and homage to the said demon, and adored him, and yielded up to him their souls, and all, or at least some portion of their bodies; then, with burning candles in their hands, they kissed the rear of the goat-devil. . . . [Here the Inquisitor becomes untranslatable].

“...And this homage done, they trod and trampled upon the Cross, and feculiod it with their spittle, in contempt of Jesus Christ, and the Holy Trinity, then turned their backs towards heaven and the firmament in contempt of God. And after they had all eaten and drunk well, they had carnal intercourse all together, and even the devil assumed the guise of man and woman, and had intercourse with both sexes. And many other crimes, most filthy and detestable, they committed, as much against God as against nature, which the said Inquisitor did not dare to name, that innocent ears might not be told of such villainous enormities.”

The eagerness displayed by the inquisitor and his acolytes so excited the public indignation that at the close of the year 1460 the judges did not dare any longer to condemn to death the unfortunate wretches accused. It was said that the persecution was only for the purpose of depriving them of their property. As in the case of many great wrongs, a reaction set in favor of justice.

Thirty years later, when the country of Artois had been re-united to the Crown, the Parliament of Paris declared, on May 20, 1491, that these trials were “abusive, void, and falsely made” and condemned the heirs of the duke of Burgundy and the principal judges to an amend of 500 Parisian livres, to be distributed to a reparation among the heirs of the victims. The events as Arras stand behind the formal change of attitude toward witchcraft made by the Roman Catholic Church in 1484 in that it was redefined as Satanism. (See also Sabbath; Witchcraft)

Sources:

Vay, Baroness Adelma (1840–1924)

Authoress, medium, and pioneer of Spiritualism in Hungary. Her powers, inherited from her mother, the Countess Teleki, later Duchess Solm, first blossomed in 1865. She became clairvoyant; wrote, spoke and drew in trance; had the prophetic gift; and was credited with many cures. In 1873, with her husband, she formed the Hungarian Spiritualist Association of which they became the first presidents. Her books included: Spirit, Force and Matter (1869), Studies on the Spirit World (1874), From My Life (1900), and Pictures from the Beyond (1905).
Vedanta

Vedanta is the highest teaching of the Vedas, (veda means knowledge), the ancient Sanskrit scriptures of India. There are four Vedas: the Rig-Veda, the Yajur-Veda, the Sama-Veda, and the Atharva-Veda, which are comprised of hymns, ritual texts, and philosophical treatises that are regarded as divine revelation. Vedanta is considered one of the six darshanas (viewpoints) of orthodox Hinduism. However, it is not simply a formal instruction but a revelatory experience of transcendental consciousness.

In 1893, Swami Vivekananda appeared “like an Eastern comet in the Western spiritual sky” and made a startling appearance at the Parliament of Religions at the Chicago World’s Fair. With him, he brought news of yoga and Vedanta; since then, yoga has taken solid root in the Western soil, with an estimated 2 million participants outside India. Vedanta, on the other hand, has remained relatively unknown.

The Vedas, completed between 1500–500 B.C.E, were originally an oral tradition, later codified in scriptures called the Upanishads (meaning nearness to wisdom). Of the 108 Upanishads, created between 900–500 B.C.E, some ten out of twelve books are regarded as the principle ones. The Vedanta, like the New Testament of the Bible, not only serves as the end of the books, but the culmination of the scriptures.

Hindu scriptures differ from the sacred writings of other religions as they go beyond faith in particular deities (regarded as legal fictions, useful only at certain stages in life) to awareness of an Absolute, beyond time, space and causality. It is said the Vedanta’s two main themes are humanity’s true nature as divine, and this divinity as the aim of human life. The ideas of the Vedanta also introduce and reflect the traditional yogic paths.

There are three perspectives of Vedanta: One is dualistic (dvaita), the second is nondualistic (advaita), while the third is qualified nondualistic (vishishtadvaita). The advaita perspective proclaims there are no individual souls, but all are unified. It is called nondualistic because “it acknowledge[s] only one Spirit, a single underlying reality beyond which nothing else could possibly exist.”

Sources:

Vedanta Societies

American Vedanta Societies stem from the visit to the United States by Swami Vivekananda in 1893, when he lectured on Hinduism at the World Parliament of Religions held in Chicago. The Society founded the Vedanta Society of New York of 1896, followed by the Vedanta Society of San Francisco in 1900.

Swami Vivekananda became the foremost interpreter of Yoga and Hinduism in Western countries, basing his teachings on the inspiration of his master Sri Ramakrishna.

Vedanta comprises the supreme wisdom of the Vedas, the ancient Sanskrit scriptures of India, together with the Upanishads, which derived from them. This wisdom is manifest as a revelatory experience of strengths and weaknesses, either for the individual or for the whole of human nature. Vedanta provides a foundation for other spiritual disciplines (such as the various forms of yoga) in conjunction with scripture study under the guidance of a qualified guru or teacher.

There are now some sixteen Vedanta Centres in the United States which form branches of the Ramakrishna Order of India. Addresses: Vedanta Society of Northern California, 2323 Vallejo St., San Francisco, CA 94123; Vedanta Society of Southern California, 1946 Vedanta Pl., Hollywood, CA 90068. There are also Vedanta Centre/Ananda Ashrama communities providing spiritual retreats in both Massachusetts and Southern California. Addresses: Vedanta Centre, 130 Beechwood St., Cohasset, MA 02025; Ananda Ashrama, 5301 Pennsylvania Ave., CA 91214.

Vedic Astrology

Astrologers in India trace their art to the fifth millennium B.C.E. though a new shape was given to ancient astrological speculations by Parashara Muni around 1500 B.C.E. He is one of the first astrologers in the world known to have actually cast horoscopes, the personal birth charts for individuals. He also is known to have had a special interest in the application of astrology to health and longevity concerns. He wrote several books, the most important being the Brihat Parashara Hora Shastra, and composed hymns to the several planetary deities.

Muni’s work was expanded by Ranavira, who lived during the same era. Ranavira, who also operated as a clairvoyant seer, concentrated on the astrological correlated to compatible personal relationships, female astrology, and psychological astrology. Ranavira appears to be the fountainhead of Indian astrology’s continued interest in applying astrology to predicting successful marriages.

Astrology emerged in the context of the Vedas, the ancient holy writings of the Indian people, which through the Vedic hymns offered a positive worldview oriented to nature and the pastoral agricultural life. Astrology also reflects the (shining world of light), complemented this worldview in its attempt to shine the divine light on the individual’s life. As a teacher, astrological knowledge attempted to dispel the darkness of illusion and assist the person to understand the purpose of the soul’s present incarnation.

The birth chart pictures the consequences or karma that the person brings into this incarnation (Indians believing that the soul reincarnates in a series of embodied existences either as humans or animals). While at times, as in Western astrology, astrological interpretation has fallen into a fatalistic mode, contemporary Vedic astrologers, drawing on the optimistic spirit of the Vedic literature, specifically eschew such a view. They emphasize that the natal chart offers a picture of karmic influences but also shows indicative rather than deterministic forces active in the person’s life.

The Vedic birth chart differs from the traditional Western horoscope in several ways. Most importantly, Indian astrologers use what is termed the sidereal zodiac rather than the tropical zodiac. The sidereal zodiac is based upon the actual positions of the 12 signs of the zodiac in the sky. The tropical zodiac is based upon the position of the Sun as it rises at the spring equinox. Over the years, that point (called O’ Aires) shifts slightly year by year, one aspect of the phenomenon known as the precession of the equinoxes. Over the centuries, the two zodiacs have developed a difference of 23°, enough to throw most planets into an adjacent sign. Vedic astrologers cast a chart based upon the moment of birth (defined as the moment of the first cry of the newborn).

The most important elements in the individuals’ charts are the planets, which were in ancient times identified with lesser deities. Planets are termed graha, that which possesses a person, hence the planets are seen as symbolic of the illusions (maya) of earthly existence that obscure the individual’s divine nature. Each planet has acquired a set of associations and its particular placement in the chart indicates a variety of strengths and weaknesses. Generally, only the ancient visible planets are utilized by Vedic astrologers and thus one will not find Uranus, Neptune, or Pluto, not to mention the asteroids or hypothetical planets that occasionally appear as elements in Western horoscopes.

Besides the signs, planets, and houses that both Indian and Western astrology share, Vedic astrology also includes a unique set of divisions placed on the birth chart, the planetary periods. Vedic astrology not only divides the zodiac into the 12 signs, but it also divides it into 27 lunar mansions roughly defined by the movement of the Moon around the earth every 27 days. The planetary periods relate to the lunar mansions very much as houses relate to the traditional signs. The planetary periods are of varying lengths as they are related to the different planets. The place of the newborn in the cycle of periods is determined by the position of the Moon in the natal chart. The recognition of these periods provides Indian astrologers with an additional level of interpretation of the person's life not available to traditional Western practitioners.

The Western appropriation of Vedic astrology began early in the twentieth century but did not become prominent until the migration of large numbers of Indians to the West after World War II (1939–45) and the conquest of the Germans in a westward movement by numerous young spiritual seekers. The flux through which Western astrology has passed in the last decades of the twentieth century, during which time every aspect and boundary of traditional Western astrology was challenged, provided openings for the introduction of Vedic astrology. Many Westerners found it more appealing than the dominant system and a growing number of books explaining the system have been published in the West. Also, materials published in India have become freely circulated through the English-speaking world. During the 1990s, annual conventions of Vedic astrologers were held in North America.

Sources:

Vehm-Gerichte

A secret tribunal that during the Middle Ages, exercised a peculiar jurisdiction in Germany and especially in Westphalia. Its origin is uncertain. The sessions were often held in secret, and the uninitiated were forbidden to attend them on pain of death. Various stories have been circulated concerning the group, but these have been discounted by modern research. Far from dabbling in the occult, these courts frequented punishing persons convicted of witchcraft and sorcery (malevolent magic).

Veleda (ca. 70 C.E.)

A prophetess among the ancient Germans, of whom the historian Tacitus stated: “She exercises a great authority, for women have been held here from the most ancient times to be prophetic, and, by excessive superstition, as divine. The fame of Veleda stood on the very high and elevated level, for she foretold to the Germans a pernicious issue, but to the legions their destruction! Veleda dwelt upon a high tower, whence messengers were dispatched bearing her oracular counsels to those who sought them; she herself was rarely seen, and none was allowed to approach her. Cerialis is said to have secretly begged her to let the Romans have better success in war. In the reign of the Emperor Vespasian she was honored as a goddess.”

Veleda predicted the success of Claudius Civilis in the Bata-vian revolt against Rome (69–70 C.E.) and the fall of the Roman Empire.

Veligovsky, Immanuel (1895–1979)

Psychoanalyst and cosmologist who emerged as a major defender of catastrophism, the idea that the earth's history and prehistory have been distorted by significant catastrophes. Catastrophism stands over against uniformitarianism, the dominant postulate of geologic sciences that the earth has developed slowly by long-term processes which are still occurring and observable. About the time of the prophet Moses in 1500 B.C.E., a comet from the planet Jupiter is supposed to have collided with Mars, formed the planet Venus, and shifted the orbit of the earth, displacing the sun. The earth then cooled and became inhabited by men. Veligovsky was born on June 10, 1895, at Vitebsk, Russia. He attended the Medvednikov Gymnasium in Moscow, graduating with full honors. After a short period of study at Montpellier, France, he traveled in Palestine, where he first presented his ideas in scientific-occult lectures. While there, he met Albert Einstein, who edited the mathematical-physical volumes. Veligovsky then moved to Palestine, where he practiced as a physician for fifteen years. He then spent some time in New York researching a study of Freud’s own dreams and the relationship of Freud’s thought to such figures as Oedipus, Akhnaton and Moses, but in the course of his researches, he became intrigued by the suggestion that there might have been a catastrophe at the time of the Exodus of the Israelis from Egypt.

A new book began to develop, under the title Ages in Chaos, followed by a further manuscript, Worlds in Collision. The latter work was published in 1950 and created a storm in the scientific world, and the original publisher felt compelled to drop the book. The extraordinary campaign of suppression is fully documented in Alfred de Grazia’s book The Veligovsky Affair; the Warfare of Science and Scientism (University Books, 1966). Diehard and intolerant scientists were later infuriated when various hypotheses of Veligovsky, originally sneered at as “unscientific” and inaccurate, were eventually proved correct. Veligovsky correctly predicted the existence of geomagnetic planetary fields, the negative electrical charge of the sun, the high temperature of Venus, the existence of hydrocarbon clouds surrounding Venus, and emission of radio sounds from Jupiter—all vindicated by space probes and other recent scientific developments. (At the same time, of course, many other ideas proved completely false).

Veligovsky developed a small but loyal following in the scientific community and a large public response. Two journals, including the S. I. S. Review published by the Society for Interdisciplinary Studies, appeared in the 1970s to expand the discussion of his ideas, though support has noticeably declined since his death on November 17, 1979 in Princeton, New Jersey. During his lifetime, his ideas were attacked vigorously by many of the same writers who regarded psychological theories of Carl Sagan penned the most definitive refutation of Veligovsky’s ideas.

Sources:

Veltis
An evil spirit who assaulted St. Margaret of Cortona (died 1297), but was overcome by her. On being asked by St. Margaret who he was and whence he came, he replied:
"My name is Veltis, and I am one of those whom Solomon by virtue of his spells, confined in a copper cauldron at Babylon, but when the Babylonians, in the hope of finding treasure dug up the cauldron and opened it, we all made our escape. Since that time our efforts have been directed to the destruction of righteous persons, and I have long been striving to turn thee from the course thou hast embraced."

Verdelet
Said to be a demon of the second order, master of ceremonies at the infernal court. He was charged with the transport of witches to the Sabbath. He took the names of "Master Persil," "Sante-Buisson," and other names of a pleasant sound, so as to entice women into his snares.

Verdun, Michel (d. 1521)
A self-confessed werewolf, burned at Besançon, France, in 1521 together with his accomplice Pierre Burgot. They had stated that they had stripped naked and anointed themselves with a certain unguent, after which they changed shape and became werewolves, hunting and attacking children and adults. Verdun was discovered after attacking a traveler who wounded him while in animal form. Following the trail of the wounded creature, the traveler discovered Verdun, who had returned to human form, with his wife bathing the wound.

Sources:

Verographe
One of various modern devices for experimenting with aura-electronics or kírlian photography. It is small enough to be conveniently portable.

Veronica
A religious term for a cloth bearing the likeness of Jesus imprinted miraculously. The term was coined by St. Gregory of Tours (538–594 C.E.), deriving from the Greek icon (image) and Latin vera (true).

The story of veronica is that a woman of rank, living in the Via Dolorosa, broke through the procession of Jesus' crucifixion when it stopped for Simon of Cyrene to assist in carrying the cross. The woman, usually named as Seraphia (sometimes called Veronica), wiped the face of Jesus with a cloth, and the miraculous portrait became impressed from the blood and sweat. Other versions of the story claim that the woman simply handed the cloth to Jesus, who wiped his own face and returned the cloth. A detailed and highly circumstantial version of the incident was given by Anne Catherine Emmerich (see Germany) when in an ecstatic trance.

A claimed veronica was placed in a marble coffer on the altar of a chapel attached to St. Peter's in Rome during the period of Sixtus V, but it was moved in 1440 and is said to be deposited in the Vatican. Another cloth with a similar miraculous portrait was presented by two Fathers to the seventh synod of Nice, C.E. 787. Such miraculous likenesses not made by people are also known as Acheropites.

In 1813, when a vault was opened in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, England, one of the coffins, believed to be that of Charles I, was opened and a portrait found on the grave cloth which had wrapped the body. The myth which surrounds the Turin Shroud is quite similar to that of the veronicas.

Verrall, Arthur Woollgar (1851–1912)
Classical scholar, husband of the psychical researcher and medium Margaret de Gaudrion Verrall, and father of Helen Verrall Salter, the wife of W. H. Salter. After his death he was one of the purported communicators in the famous "cross-correspondence" tests of the Society for Psychical Research, in which wife and daughter participated by producing automatic scripts.

Verrall was born on February 5, 1851, in Brighton, England. He studied at Wellington College and Trinity College, Cambridge University, (B.A., 1873; M.A., 1874). He lectured at Trinity, where he became First King Edward VII Professor of English Literature in 1911. He died June 18, 1912.

Verrall, Margaret de Gaudrion Merrifield (1859–1916)
Prominent British psychical researcher, medium and lecturer in classics at Newnham College. She was born December 21, 1859, at Brighton, England, and educated at Newnham College, Cambridge University. She married A. W. Verrall, the well-known classical scholar, in 1882.

Verrall joined the Society for Psychical Research, London, in 1889. She wrote a number of papers for the Proceedings at the request of Frederic William Henry Myers, who held sittings with the medium Leonora S. Piper when she visited England, and was elected to the Council in 1901.

Eventually she developed psychic powers herself and in 1901 through automatic writing obtained the first significant results after the death of Myers. Afterwards she produced hundreds of scripts which often contained matter of paranormal interest. In 1906, she published an analysis of her own scripts in the society's Proceedings which formed the starting point of a serious study in cross-correspondence.

Sir Oliver Lodge paid the following tribute to Verrall in his book The Survival of Man (1909):
"The fame of Mrs. Piper has spread into all lands, and I should think the fame of Mrs. Verrall also. In these recent cases of automatism the society has been singularly fortunate, for in the one we have a medium who has been under strict supervision and competent management for the greater part of her psychical life, and in the other we have one of the sanest and acutest of our own investigators, fortunately endowed with some power herself, some power of acting as translator or interpreter between the psychical and the physical worlds."

After years of experiments and testing, Verrall concluded: "It cannot be denied that the 'communicator' of the Piper sittings and of my own scripts presents a consistent personality dramatically resembling that of the person he claims to be. I entirely acquiesce in this judgment. . . . The boundary between the two states—the known and the unknown—is still substantial, but it is wearing thin in places; . . . and we are at liberty, not indeed to announce any definite conclusion, but to adopt as a working hypothesis the ancient doctrine of a possible inter-course of intelligence between the material and some other, perhaps ethereal order of existence."

Versailles Adventure

One of the most famous psychic experiences reported at the beginning of the twentieth century. In August 1901, two English ladies, C. A. E. Moberly and E. F. Jourdain, took an afternoon walk in the Gardens of Versailles, France, and found themselves transported to the Trianon of 1789, complete with buildings and other people of the period. They described their experience with much corroborative detail in their 1911 book An Adventure. In the first edition their identity was concealed by the names “Miss Morison” and “Miss Lamont.”

The book went into many editions and generated much controversy, coinciding with rising British interest in psychic phenomena through the work of the Society for Psychical Research, London. In spite of many subsequent attempts to discredit the writers, the adventure still stands as a unique experience.

Sources:

Vervain

A sacred herb used to cleanse the table of Zeus before a feast in ancient Greece. In Rome it was also strewn on the altars of Jupiter, and water containing vervain was also sprinkled in houses to cast out evil spirits.

Among the Druids particularly it was employed in connection with many forms of superstition. They gathered it at daybreak, before the sun had risen. Later sorcerers followed the same usage, and demonologists believed that in order to evoke demons it was necessary to be crowned with vervain.

During the Crusades it was believed that when the nails were driven into the hands of Christ, vervain sprang upon Calvary.

The old herbalists recommended vervain to ease childbirth, and for jaundice, dropsy, gout, worms, stomach complaints, wound healing, ulcers and piles. Native Americans used vervain to cure menstrual disorders.

Vestigia (Organization)

Founded in 1976, with membership that consisted of scientists, engineers, technicians, and interested individuals, to investigate and conduct research into unexplained anomalous scientific phenomena of the kind usually associated with Charles Fort. Members are trained in investigative techniques and supply speakers to universities and organizations. The name of the group is the Latin word for “investigate,” which, in itself, means footprint.

The group sponsored charitable programs, maintained a library and biographical archives, compiled statistics, and offered computerized services. It had committees on photography and technical matters, and divisions on aerial phenomena, biological matters, earth sciences, and parapsychology, as well as published an annual newsletter. Last known address: 56 Brookwood Rd., Stanhope, NJ 07874.

Vett, Carl Christian (1871–1956)

Danish agriculturist and author, who played a leading part in organizing international cooperation and spread of information in the field of parapsychology. He was born September 25, 1871, in Aarhus, Denmark. Vett became a director of textile companies in Scandinavia. During World War I he was a diplomatic courier and cultural advisor to the Danish Ministry of Education on museum acquisitions. He was also a pioneer of biological agricultural methods.

Vett was intensely interested in psychical research as a proper scientific study, and it was largely through his efforts that the First International Congress on Psychic Research was held in Copenhagen in 1921, with researchers from fifteen different countries. He became general secretary of a permanent committee for the organization of later international congresses of this kind, held at Warsaw (1923), Paris (1927), Athens (1930), and Oslo (1955). A tribute was paid to his work at the First International Conference of Parapsychological Studies held in Utrecht, Netherlands, in 1953. In the years after World War II, Vett lectured and wrote on parapsychological topics. He died February 1, 1956, in Rome, Italy.

Sources:

Victoria, Queen (1819–1901)

Queen of England, Scotland and Ireland (1837–1901), Empress of India (1876–1901), who presided over the great days of the British Empire. She was known to be sympathetic to Spiritualism, and to have held séances with Prince Albert and other individuals. She approved of the book Our Life After Death by medium Robert James Lees and was said to have used Lees as a personal medium. Her belief in the possibility of communication between the spirit world and the living is illustrated by an entry in her journal commenting on the story that Princess Fecadora, when at the point of death, had talked about a beloved child who had died earlier: “Surely at the approach of death the veil is raised and such pure spirits are allowed to see a glimpse of those dear ones waiting for them.”

A short time before the death of Prince Albert, he had told the Queen: “We don’t know in what state we shall meet again, but that we shall recognize each other and be together in eternity I am perfectly certain.” After Albert’s death, Victoria relied heavily on the companionship of her personal servant, the rough Highlander John Brown. Rumors suggested both that he was her lover and that together they participated in Spiritualist séances. After his death in 1883, the Queen erected a statue to him at Balmoral.

The Queen’s Prime Minister W. E. Gladstone was also sympathetic to psychical research and was an early member of the Society for Psychical Research. London. He once summoned the famous palmist “Cheiro” to explain his theories and also sat with the medium William Eglinton.

Sources:

Vidya

In Theosophy, the knowledge by which man on the Path of Life can discern the true from the false and so direct his efforts correctly by means of the mental faculties which he has learned to use. It is the antithesis of avidya (ignorance). Both terms are borrowed from Hindu religious philosophy.

Viedma

A Russian name for a witch. (See Slavs)

Vila

Vili were nymphs who frequented the forests at the bases of the Eastern Alps. According to popular belief, they could be seen traversing glades, mounted on stags, or driving from peak to peak on chariots of clouds. Old Serbian ballads tell how Marko, the great hero of ancient Serbia, was joined in a bond of brotherhood with a Vila, who showed to him the secrets of the future. At that period, Serbia was a mighty nation, extending from the Alps to the Black Sea, from the Danube to the Adriatic.

Vinchon, Jean (1884–?)

French neuropsychiatrist who published books in areas of parapsychology. He was born on June 21, 1884, in the Department of the Somme, France. He received his M.D. in 1911 at Paris. He was successively the medical director of the Neuropsychiatric Center of the French Army of the East during World War I (1917–18), director of the clinic of Paris Medical School between the wars, and director of Army Neuropsychiatric Center, Paris Region as World War II began (1939–40). He then became a neuropsychiatrist at the War Veterans Ministry and a neuropsychiatric consultant at Hôpital de le Pitié.

Through most of his career Vinchon had a lively interest in psychic phenomena. He was a member and, for a period, president of the Institut Métapsychique. He authored several books growing out of his broad interests.

Sources:

Vintras, Eugène (1807–1875)

A Normandy peasant of great devoutness, who in the year 1839 was nominated by a strange sect named the Savoirs of Louis XVII as a fitting successor to their prophet Thomas Martin who had just died. The sect believed that the child of Louis XVII as a fitting successor to their prophet Thomas Martin who had just died. The sect believed that the child of Louis XVII who had just died. The sect believed that the child of Louis XVII who had just died. He became a visionary. He had bloody sweats, he saw hearts painted with his own blood appear on hosts, accompanied by inscriptions in his own spelling. Many believed him a prophet and followed him, among them several priests, who alleged that they partook of his occult vision. Doctors analyzed the fluid which flowed from the hosts and certified it to be human blood. While his enemies referred these miracles to the devil, a small band regarded Vintras as a new Christ.

But one follower named Gozzoli published scandalous accounts of his activities, alleging that horrible obscenities and sacrilegious masses took place in their private chapel at Tilly-sur-Seulles. The unspeakable abominations alluded to were contained in a pamphlet entitled Le Prophète Vintras (1851). The sect was formally condemned by the pope, and in response Vintras designated himself sovereign Pontiff.

He was arrested on a charge of exploiting his followers for money, tried at Caen, and sentenced to five years’ imprisonment. When freed in 1845, he went to England and in London resumed his leadership role. In the relative freedom provided in England, he carried on the group’s affairs for some time and eventually returned to France and settled in Lyons.

Sources:

Vishnu Devananda, Swami (1927–1993)

Disciple of the late Swami Sivananda, teacher of hatha yoga, and founder-president of the Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers, with branches in Canada, the United States, and Europe. He was born in Swamy Kuttan Nair, on December 31, 1927, in Kerala, India. He was a school teacher at the age of 17, then later joined the Indian Army in which he served for two years. By chance he read a pamphlet by Swami Sivananda which emphasized the importance of studying the Hindu scripture Bhagavad-Gita. He did so and felt a strong attraction to the Sivananda Ashram. In 1946, while on army leave, he went to Rishikesh and became a disciple of Sivananda’s. He decided to leave his family and become a renunciate. He was initiated, settled at the ashram, and became the professor of hatha yoga at the affiliated Yoga Vedanta Forest Academy.

At the suggestion of his guru, he undertook a tour of India, demonstrating hatha yoga asanas (positions) and training many hundreds of individuals. In 1957, he undertook a world tour, spending two years traveling throughout the U.S. and eventually settling in Canada, where he founded a Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Center. Of the several students of Sivananda operating in North America, he is the one recognized by the Divine Life Society, the Sivananda organization in India.

He became the first yoga instructor to obtain a pilot’s license and flew a private “peace plane” decorated by artist Peter Max to such disturbed areas of the world as Northern Ireland, West Pakistan and the Suez Canal, dropping peace leaflets. He established yoga centers in twenty-five communities, including a large yoga camp in Quebec, Canada, and another in the Bahamas. He also founded True World Order, an organization dedicated to yoga harmony, health, peace, and vegetarianism.

International headquarters of the Sivananda Yoga Ashram is at 675 8th Ave., Val Morin, PQ, Canada J0T 2R0. Swami Sivananda died of kidney failure in 1993.

Sources:

Vision (Ocular and Inner)

Ocular vision is the perception of material objects in accordance with optical laws from a definite point in space. Difficult to classify are those rare cases when the sense of sight is transposed and the subject “sees” with his elbow, forehead, finger-tips or stomach, since it is not clear what mechanism of vision is involved.

Inner vision is independent of space, objective existence, and, seemingly, optical laws. The simplest type of inner vision is presented by memory images, waking dreams, and images of imagination. The latter type may attain such an intensity as to emerge spontaneously and reach the pitch of hallucination.

Hallucination is the widest extent of inner vision. Dreams represent the primary type. They are hallucinations of low intensity. Generally, hallucinations appear to conform to all factors of outer vision—space, optical laws, objectivity. The images appear externalized in space.

Indeed, objectivity in some cases of hallucinations may be more than an appearance, as some believe that a camera may register an apparition when outwardly nothing is visible and the vision must have taken place internally (see psychic photography). A still stronger proof of objectivity is furnished by cases of veridical visions in which the perception is afterward found to be a true visual representation of incidents taking place at a distance.

On the other hand, no objectivity is discoverable in degenerative hallucinations, the dogs and snakes of the drunkard, the scarlet fire of the epileptic, or the visions of the psychotic.

Inner vision may be developed empirically in crystal gazing and afford fruitful study for the determination of what elements are externalized from the subconscious mind of the seer or of discerning intelligences. Visions may also be distinguished as either spontaneous or induced. (See also Transposition of the Senses.)

Vision Magazine

Vision Magazine, self-described as a “Catalyst for Conscious Living,” is a New Age networking tabloid serving San Diego and the surrounding counties in Southern California. Similar to other networking magazines, it attempts to keep readers informed of events and services in the constantly changing post-New Age scene. It seeks to offer a model for a more conscious, peaceful, and healthful world.

Each issue carries a series of short articles that highlight individuals and groups who are active in San Diego or who are visiting the area to put on special programming. Articles are organized so as to present the spectrum of reader interest from natural health to astrology and food. There are also one or two feature articles, often interviews conducted by one of the editors with leading figures in the national metaphysical or holistic health world.

Vision Magazine functions as a means for New Age practitioners to reach potential clients, and each issue devotes a significant amount of space to advertisements that inform readers where they may contact an astrologer, a meditation teacher, a hypnotist, a qigong teacher, or a spiritual community. Ads are selected from those organizations deemed to provide tools that are inspirational, solve problems, and provide dialogue on health, the environment, and the future course of society. The bulk of the ads are grouped into a “Monthly Calendar” and a “Community Resource Directory.” The advertising supports the magazine, which is distributed freely throughout Southern California.

Vision Magazine began in 1984 and is published monthly from its headquarters at 4452 Park Blvd., Ste. 211, San Diego, CA 92116. It is edited by Sydney Murray and Kendall Klug. Vision Magazine has also extended itself into the Internet with a site found at http://www.visionmagazine.com/.

Visions

Term derived from Latin visus, past participle of videre, to see, indicating the appearance to human beings of supernaturl persons or scenes. Of great frequency in early and medieval times, and among primitive or semi-civilized races, visions seem to have decreased proportionately with the advance of learning and enlightenment. Thus, among the Greeks and Romans of the classic period, they were comparatively rare, although visions of demons or gods were occasionally seen. On the other hand, among Oriental races, the seeing of visions was a common occurrence, and these visions took more varied shapes.

In medieval Europe, visions were almost commonplace, and directions were given by the church to enable men to distinguish visions of divine origin from false delusions which were either self-generated or the work of the demons and/or the devil.

Visions may be roughly divided into two classes—those which are spontaneous and those which are induced. The great majority belong to the latter.

In 1854, Joseph Ennemoser, in his work The History of Magic, enumerated causative factors in the appearance of visions to an individual: (1) a sensitive organism and delicate constitution; (2) a religious education and ascetic life (fasting, penance, etc.); (3) narcotics—opium, wine, incense, narcotic salves (witch-salves); (4) delirium, monomania; and/or (5) fear and expectation, preparatory words, songs, and prayers.

Among the visions induced by prayer and fasting and the severe self-discipline of the religious ascetic, must be included many historical or traditional instances—the visions of St.
Francis of Assisi, St. Anthony, St. Bernard Ignatius, St. Catherine of Siena, St. Hildegarde, and Joan of Arc. It may be noted that the convent has often been the special haunt of religious visions. A wave of apparitions of the Virgin Mary began in France early in the nineteenth century and several hundred incidents have been reported in the intervening decades to the present time. (See Garabandal; Medjugorje)

But the most potent means for the induction of visionary appearances are those discovered and used by indigenous people around the world. Over the ages people have indulged in narcotic substances, especially those with hallucinogenic properties, from opium and hashish to peyote. They have also used a variety of spiritual, psychic, and physical disciplines. Thus some fakirs, yogis, and other practitioners have been known to gaze for hours at a time at one object or remain for months in practically the same position, or practice various mortifications of the body, so that they may fall at length into a visionary state. Another ancient method of inducing visionary experience was staring into a shiny object such as a crystal or magic mirror.

Phyto-narcotic salves with which some anoint themselves are said to be similar to the witch unguents used in the Middle Ages, which induced in the witch the hallucination that she was flying through the air on a goat or a broomstick. Opium is also said to produce a sensation of flying, as well as visions of celestial delight. Alcoholic intoxication can induce visions of a more negative nature, most notably of insects or animals, as those who have experienced delirium can attest. Nitrogen may have a similar effect. The vapors rising from the ground in some places, or those found in certain caverns, are said to exercise an influence similar to that of narcotics.

Native Americans practiced external methods of inducing visions—solitude, fasting, and the use of salves or ointments. The vision quest was a popular activity of young men in many tribes. In some African, West Indian, and Arabic countries certain dances produced altered states of consciousness, helping participants toward the desired visionary ecstasy. Rhythmic and repetitive music also assisted this process.

Spontaneous Visions

Spontaneous visions, although less common, are yet sufficiently numerous to merit attention here. The difficulty is, of course, to know just how far “fear and expectation” may have operated to induce the vision. In many cases, as in that of the seer Emanuel Swedenborg, the visions may have commenced as “visions of the night,” hardly to be distinguished from dreams, and so from vision of an “internal” nature to clearly externalized apparitions. Swedenborg himself declared that when seeing visions of the latter class he used his senses exactly as when awake, dwelling with the spirits as a spirit, but able to return to his body when he pleased. The artist Benvenuto Cellini, like Swedenborg, had a number of spontaneous visions, though little of the same positive results.

Visions are by no means confined to the sense of sight. Taste, hearing, smelling, and touch may all be experienced in a vision. Joan of Arc, for instance, heard voices encouraging her to be the deliverer of her country. Examples may be drawn from the Hebrew Bible as the case of the child Samuel in the temple (I Sam. 3:4), and instances could be multiplied from all ages and all times.

The visions of John Pordage (1607–1681) and the “Philadelphia seer,” or as they called themselves later, the “Angelic Brethren,” a British organization stemming from the mysticism of Jakob Boehme in 1631, were noteworthy in this respect because they included the taste of “brimstone, salt, and soot.” In the absence of the “Angelic Brethren,” pictures were drawn on the windowpanes by invisible hands and were seen to move about.

Physiological explanations of visions have, from the earliest times, been offered. Plato observed: “The eye is the organ of a fire which does not burn but gives a mild light. The rays proceeding from the eye meet those of the outward light. With the departure of the outward light the inner also becomes less active; all inward movements become calmer and less disturbed; and should any more prominent influence remain they become in various points where they congregate, so many pictures of the fancy.”

Democritus held that visions and dreams are passing shapes, ideal forms proceeding from other beings. Of deathbed visions Plutarch said: “It is not probable that in death the soul gains new powers which it was not before possessed of when the heart was confined within the chains of the body; but it is much more probable that these powers were always in being, though dimmed and clogged by the soul’s contact with the corporeal bonds. And so, when the body is no longer constrained in them, the soul may experience the ceaseless changes andvicissitudes of the body as when awake, dwelling with the spirits as a spirit, but able to return to his body when he pleased. The artist Benvenuto Cellini, like Swedenborg, had a number of spontaneous visions, though little of the same positive results.

Visions are by no means confined to the sense of sight. Taste, hearing, smelling, and touch may all be experienced in a vision. Joan of Arc, for instance, heard voices encouraging her to be the deliverer of her country. Examples may be drawn from the Hebrew Bible as the case of the child Samuel in the temple (I Sam. 3:4), and instances could be multiplied from all ages and all times.

The visions of John Pordage (1607–1681) and the “Philadelphia seer,” or as they called themselves later, the “Angelic Brethren,” a British organization stemming from the mysticism of Jakob Boehme in 1631, were noteworthy in this respect because they included the taste of “brimstone, salt, and soot.” In the absence of the “Angelic Brethren,” pictures were drawn on the windowpanes by invisible hands and were seen to move about.

Physiological explanations of visions have, from the earliest times, been offered. Plato observed: “The eye is the organ of a fire which does not burn but gives a mild light. The rays proceeding from the eye meet those of the outward light. With the departure of the outward light the inner also becomes less active; all inward movements become calmer and less disturbed; and should any more prominent influence remain they become in various points where they congregate, so many pictures of the fancy.”

Democritus held that visions and dreams are passing shapes, ideal forms proceeding from other beings. Of deathbed visions Plutarch said: “It is not probable that in death the soul gains new powers which it was not before possessed of when the heart was confined within the chains of the body; but it is much more probable that these powers were always in being, though dimmed and clogged by the soul’s contact with the corporeal bonds. And so, when the body is no longer constrained in them, the soul may experience the ceaseless changes and vicissitudes of the body as when awake, dwelling with the spirits as a spirit, but able to return to his body when he pleased. The artist Benvenuto Cellini, like Swedenborg, whose spirit, he believed, could commune with discarnate spirits (the souls of the dead) as one of themselves. To this may be traced the doctrines of modern Spiritualism, which thus regarded visions as actual spirits or spirit scenes, visible to the ecstatic or entranced subject whose spirit was projected to discarnate planes.

The question whether or not visions are contagious has been much disputed. It has been said that such appearances may be transferred from one person to another by the laying on of hands. In the case of those Scottish seers who claimed second sight, such a transference may take place even by accidental contact with the seer. The vision of the second person is, however, less distinct than that of the original seer.

The same idea prevailed with regard to the visions of “magnetized” patients in the days of animal magnetism. Insofar as these may be identified with the collective hallucinations of the hypnotic state, there is no definite scientific evidence to prove their existence.

Visions occur to people of all cultures and all states and positions. They come to the religious and educated, and by no means have they been confined to the ignorant or the superstitious. Many men of genius have been subject to visionary appearances. While Raphael was trying to paint the Madonna, she appeared to him in a vision. The famous composition known as the “Devil’s Sonata” was said to have been dictated to Tartini by the devil himself. Johann Wolfgang von Goethe also had visions. William Blake’s portraits of the Patriarchs were done from visionary beings which appeared to him in the night. There have been a number of such instances.

Sources:

Visions (Magazine)

Monthly publication containing articles on psychic phenomena, energy fields, and unorthodox healing. It was published by the American National Institute for Psychical Research. Last known address: 11222 La Cienega Blvd., Inglewood, CA 90304.

Visitants

Another term for spirit apparitions.

Vitality

Vitality is a name given that force or principle possessed by living things. In the case of human beings, controversy has long raged between those who interpret vitality mechanistically as the energy derived from food and oxygen intake and those who support theories of vitalism, a doctrine that the origin and phenomena of life derive from a vital principle as distinct from a purely chemical or physical force.

Vitalists argue that the mechanistic view appears inadequate as a matter of everyday experience, since there are limits to the vitality obtainable from oxidation of food and air. At a certain point of eating and breathing one becomes tired, and it is impossible to regain vitality without rest and sleep. Exactly what happens in the sleep state to enhance vitality is still not entirely clear. It does appear, however, that the human body is not simply an internal combustion machine, but rather an energy transforming machine. Contrary to the energy combustion view is the fact that fasting may often enhance vitality rather than deplete it.

The mind also has a profound effect on the vital condition of the body, as, vitalists further suggest, is clear from one’s attitude to life, as well as the special phenomena of hypnotism and the profound effects which are possible through meditation techniques. It would seem that subtle processes are involved in energy transformation of food and air and the relationship of such transformation to the psychic life of human beings and their mental activities, states of consciousness, and sociological and spiritual aspirations.

Various great religions posit the existence of an individual soul as an essential principle of a human being, influenced by the physical and mental life as well as by environment and food intake, but independent from the physical body and surviving it after death. Spiritualists and psychical researchers have offered evidence for such survival, while materialists have argued that the phenomena presented as evidence of such apparent survival may be nothing more than mental artifacts. However, even this latter view also predicates mental life as capable of existing in a form almost as subtle as that of the claimed soul.

From a subjective point of view, the experience of out-of-the-body travel or astral projection has usually carried an overwhelming awareness of individuality as distinct from the body, which it apparently leaves, and for many individuals the experience has been one of deep religious conviction. J. Sylvan Muldoon, a pioneer writer on the subject, has argued in the light of his out-of-the-body experiences that the sleep state is a condition of vitality transfer between a “soul body” and the physical body, drawing upon some subtle life force outside the body.

Such a view is similar to the Polynesian concept of mana and the Hindu concept of prana, a subtle principle in the air and in food that is transformed into kundalini, energy in the body. A proportion of kundalini remains static in the body, but may become dynamic in sexual activity. It may also be diverted to subtle centers in the body through the spinal column by the practice of meditation in conjunction with the psycho-physical effects of purification of the mind and emotions, traditionally through self-purification and ethical living. Ancient Hindu treatises on prana have described at length the atomic structure of matter and its connection with the subtle currents of prana operating in the universe generally, as well as modified in the individual human being.

Sources:

Vitality (Magazine)

Vitality, the primary New Age networking periodical serving Toronto and surrounding communities in Ontario, Canada, emerged in the 1980s and during the 1990s grew into a substantive bimonthly magazine with more than 100 pages per issue. Vitality began as a self-described “wellness journal” primarily as an organ of the holistic health community and through the mid-1990s concentrated its attention on natural foods, herbs, nutrition, alternative psychologies, various body work therapies, and related other forms of drugless and noninvasive healing treatments. However, as the decade progressed, while the holistic health emphasis remains, the attention of the magazine grew to encompass all of the psychic and spiritual concerns of the post-New Age.

Vitality sees itself as an information organ. Each issue highlights the organizations and events that constitute holistic health and the New Age. As with most networking magazines, it is built around the advertisements placed by organizations that sponsor events and individuals who offer services to the public. Four times a year, Vitality publishes a pullout supplement, the “Vitality Resource Directory,” in which coming events and major holistic organizations are listed.

Each issue carries a set of feature articles, the majority on health issues. There are also a set of columns that treat astrology, New Age lifestyles, and meetings and gatherings in the Toronto area. Vitality sees its purpose as providing an antidote to the world situation by offering a positive vision of the New Age of wholeness and health for body and soul.

Vitality is distributed as a free magazine in metaphysical and health food stores in Ontario, but subscriptions for home delivery may be obtained at 356 Dupont St., Toronto, ON Canada M5R 1V9.
Vivekananda, Swami (1863–1902)

Hindu monk who became the leading interpreter of Yoga and Hinduism in the West; founder of the Ramakrishna Mission. Born as Narendra Nath Dutt in Calcutta in a Bengali family, January 12, 1863, he was educated at a Christian College in Calcutta. Here he was much impressed by the analytic and scientific methods of Westerners. For a time, Narendra was influenced by the Brahmo Samaj movement, but its rationalistic spirit did not altogether satisfy him.

When eighteen years old, he first met his spiritual teacher Sri Ramakrishna, who was much impressed by the boy’s beautiful singing. Within a couple of years, Narendra was won over by the deep spiritual realization of Sri Ramakrishna and became his follower.

He made a number of visits to Sri Ramakrishna at Dakshineswar, but after the death of his father he was obliged to take charge of family affairs and got a job in an attorney’s office. Eventually he persuaded Sri Ramakrishna to use his spiritual powers to ensure that his mother and brothers would never lack food and clothing, then renounced his worldly life.

Sri Ramakrishna died in 1886 and Narendra adopted the name Vivekananda in 1893, when he sailed from Bombay on May 31 to attend the Parliament of Religions held in Chicago in connection with the World’s Fair.

In his opening address he caused tumultuous applause by commencing “Sisters and Brothers of America,” and thereafter his simple trenchant style and his grasp of both Hindu and Christian beliefs won over many audiences. His book on Raja Yoga attracted the attention and respect of such enlightened thinkers as William James and Leo Tolstoy. Vivekananda lectured throughout Chicago, Detroit, Boston and New York for two years, then visited England, where he also aroused great enthusiasm, before returning to Calcutta in 1897.

Back in India, he took up the cause of ordinary people with realism as well as spiritual insight, stating: “The great national sin is the neglect of the masses and that is one of the causes of our downfall! No amount of politics would be of any avail until the masses of India are once more well educated and well cared for.”

Soon afterwards he established the Ramakrishna Mission for training young monks and preachers. In June 1899, he made a second journey to the West, but by now his strength was giving out. He spent some time in California, which was congenial to his health and his teachings, and in December 1900 returned to India, where he passed away July 4, 1902, in Behur Monastery.

Today there are Ramakrishna Vedanta Centers in a number of countries, and the books of Swami Vivekananda remain one of the best and clearest introductions to Hindu spiritual teachings and yoga. These books are constantly reprinted, and include such popular works as Jnana Yoga, Raja Yoga, Bhakti Yoga, and Karma Yoga. His Collected Works covers eight volumes. The standard biography is by Swami Nikhilananda: Swami Vivekananda; A Biography, Adrita Ashram, Calcutta, India, 1975.

Vjestica

A name for a witch among the Slavs.

Voices (Paranormal)

Paranormal voices may be objective or subjective. The latter category is covered by clairaudience. The former is on the borderline of apparitions, as in the biblical statement: “And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him: Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? . . . And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.” (Acts 9:4, 7).

According to Eusebius, a spirit voice was heard by the crowds at the martyrdom of Bishop Polycarp: “Be brave, Oh Polycarp.” St. Francis, praying in a little ruined church, heard a voice from the painted wooden crucifix before which he knelt: “Francis, seest thou not that my house is being destroyed? Go, therefore, and repair it for me.”

Joan of Arc was started on her mission by voices. “A very bright cloud appeared to her and out of the cloud came a voice.” The sentence of death was based on admission of her monitory voices. She heard them first at thirteen years of age. They came mainly when she was awake, but also roused her sometimes from sleep. They were not always intelligible. She believed in them implicitly. The predictions of the voices were usually fulfilled: the siege of Orleans was raised, Charles VII was crowned at Rheims and Joan was wounded, all as foretold. The preacher George Fox stated in his Journal:

“When my troubles and torments were great, when all my hopes in men were gone so that I had nothing outwardly to help me, nor could I tell what to do, then, O then, I heard a voice which said: ‘There is one, even Jesus Christ, that can speak to thy condition.’ When I heard it my heart did leap for joy.”

Dr. Edwin Ash, in his book Faith and Suggestion (1912), described the case of Dorothy Kerin, who, after a long illness and on the point of death, suddenly heard a voice say “Dorothy.” She woke up and saw the bed enveloped in light and a beautiful woman holding an Annunciation lily in her hand, saying “Dorothy, you are quite well,” putting the stress on “quite.” She became instantly well. For her own account, see Dorothy Kerin’s book The Living Touch (1919).

There are various types of clairaudience. As a conscious subjective phenomenon, many writers, from Socrates onward, have claimed that their works were dictated by an inner voice. In automatic writing, psychics and Spiritualist mediums are usually unaware what is being written through their hands. Many Spiritualist mediums go into trance and apparently transmit messages from the spirits of the dead through their own vocal organs, sometimes with the tones and mannerisms of the deceased, but often only an approximation. Inspirational speakers, or channelers, also occasionally speak with the voices of spirit entities, while at other time employing their own vocal mannerisms with only the message being dictated by inner inspiration.

In the case of a clairvoyant, images of the deceased are perceived and described by the mediums, sometimes in conjunction with clairaudient messages. Both clairvoyance and clairaudience are classified as mental phenomena, involving extrasensory perception. In such cases, the voices may be paranormal in origin, but not in manifestation, and sometimes they may be more reasonably credited to unconscious mental activity.

Much controversy has surrounded the phenomenon of “direct voice” in Spiritualist séances, where spirits are claimed to speak independently of the medium, either through a trumpet or through a “voice box” built up from ectoplasm, drawn from the medium. Both the use of trumpets and the idea of ectoplasm have been largely abandoned.

In line with modern technological developments, a new type of paranormal vocal phenomenon has emerged—“auditory voices,” or “electronic voice phenomenon.” It is claimed that messages, often individual words or phrases apparently from deceased individuals, have appeared paranormally on audiotape recordings. In spite of much research, the evidence is ambiguous, as some apparent successes might be due to a diurnalistic power of the investigator, rather than to some susceptibility of audiorecording to communications from deceased individuals.

A variant phenomenon which has been reported anecdotally in modern times is the “electronic visual (or video) phenomenon,” in which it is believed that paranormal images have appeared on videotape recordings. Much research remains to be done before such claims can be validated.

Sources:
- Lang, Andrew. The Devil’s Tragedy and Other Studies. London: Longmans Green, 1903.

Volguine, Alexandre (1903–1976)

Prominent French astrologer. In 1937 he founded Les Cahiers Astrologiques, a forum of French astrological research, which he edited until his death in 1976. He wrote a number of works on astrology, some of which have now been published in English translation.

Sources:

Vollhardt, Maria (Frau Rudloff) (ca. 1925)

A physical medium whom Dr. F. Schwab, author of Teleplasmas und Telekinese (Berlin, 1923) made the subject of searching studies for two years. Vollhardt, the wife of an official in the Berlin Postal Ministry, produced telekinesis (movements of objects at a distance), levitations, apports, ectoplasm and stigmata phenomena of a baffling character.

In his book My Psychic Adventures (1924), psychical researcher J. Malcolm Bird wrote of having seen a quantity of irritated-looking puncture wounds, some actually bleeding, appear in a rough square pattern on the medium’s hand. The only suggestion he could make for normal duplication was a battery of three or four forks or a section of nutmeg grater. The mystery of how such wounds were produced deepened when the sitters declared that they had seen on Vollhardt’s hand a small object, the shape of a bird’s beak, or claw. They put a pot full of farina on the table and asked for an imprint. They got it—in the shape of a chicken’s foot.

Once the medium’s hand was stigmatized across the hand of one of the sitters who was controlling her. At each puncture, the medium gave a sharp cry of pain. She stated that she felt as though an electric current had entered at the skin and passed through the body.

Schwab observed the phenomenon some fifty times outside the séance room in good light. When he made photographs with a stereoscopic camera he got a picture of a sort of claw of several branches, poised upon the perfectly controlled hand of the medium. He believed it was a materialized symbol of the medium’s subconscious notion of oppression and torture.

In 1925, Vollhardt figured in court proceedings. At a séance given to a number of scientists and doctors, her arms, linked up in the orthodox manner, were found, on the lights being turned up, encircled by two massive rings. Albert Moll refused to believe in the penetration of matter passing through matter and later declared in a book that the medium must have had the rings concealed under her sleeves. The medium retorted with libel proceedings and offered to demonstrate her powers before the Bench. The offer came to nothing as Moll insisted that the demonstration should be done in daylight.

Degner testified on behalf of Vollhardt. The court found Moll guilty of calumny, but acquitted him as his statement was made “in defense of justified interests.” The medium appealed against the acquittal and lost her case. Prof. Busch testified that the apports produced were fraudulently introduced by the medium while in a “semi-conscious condition.”

Sources:

Volometer

An instrument invented by Dr. Sydney Alrutz (1868–1925) of Uppsala University, Sweden, to measure will as a dynamic power.

Von Däniken, Erich (1935— )

Swiss writer whose 1969 book, Chariots of the Gods, gave focus to a wave of popular interest in the idea that in ancient times the earth was visited by extraterrestrials whose presence is documented in a variety of archeological remains. Born in Zofingen, Switzerland, April 14, 1935, he was brought up in a conservative Roman Catholic setting at St. Michel College in Fribourg. At an early age von Däniken was fascinated by “inconsistencies” between religious doctrine and the accounts of mysterious events in the Bible. After leaving school, he took various jobs in hotels, and this seasonal work left him with spare time that he spent in traveling and reading. He visited South America, Russia and Egypt, seeing firsthand many of the monuments of the ancient past.

In his reading, he was particularly impressed by the biblical account of Ezekiel’s fiery wheel and by Sumerian accounts of the coming of the Sun God in the ancient epic of Gilgamesh. Von Däniken began to evolve a theory of sky-borne gods in vehicles resembling accounts of flying saucers, built around the religious legends and myths of ancient civilizations. With the advent of American and Soviet space travel, such theories became much more plausible to many people.

In 1961, von Däniken started publishing articles about his theories and by 1966 had prepared a book, Erinnerungen an die Zukunft, which was published in Germany and serialized in the Swiss newspaper Die Weltwoche. This book was translated into English and published in England in 1969 and in the United States the following year under the title Chariots of the Gods? Von Däniken’s introduction stated:

“I claim that our forefathers received visits from the universe in [the] remote past. Even though I do not know who these extraterrestrial intelligences were or from which planet they came, I nevertheless proclaim that these ‘strangers’ annihilated part of mankind existing at the time and produced a new, perhaps the first homo sapiens.”

As evidence, von Däniken cited accounts of cosmic battles in ancient legends and inscriptions suggestive of space travel. In later books he supported his theories by further legends, traveler’s tales and photographs of ancient religious inscriptions.

Critics jumped upon von Däniken’s facile interpretations such as his claims that Mayan temple figures and inscriptions represent spacecraft at the controls of their vehicles. Such interpretations pulled odd artifacts out of their cultural context, revealed a significant misunderstanding of ancient cultural motifs, and falsely assumed that “ancient” astronauts would employ “twentieth-century” technology and design.

More crucial to his credibility, however, von Däniken admitted to falsifying his presentation. In an interview on the PBS
Nova science program on television in 1978, he confessed that he had not really explored an artifact-filled cave in South America as claimed in his book _The Gold of the Gods_ (1978). In fact the artifacts were brass, not gold. He admitted: "No that did not happen, but I think when somebody writes books in my style and in my sense, which are not scientific books, we call it in German ‘Sachbucher’. It’s a kind of popular book but it’s not science fiction, though all the facts do exist but with other interpretations. Then an author is allowed to use effects. So some little things like this are not really important because they do not touch the facts. . . ."

This astonishing defense of falsehood in order to strengthen a romantic interpretation of facts necessarily casts doubt on Von Däniken’s theories. Von Däniken has not appeared perturbed by adverse criticism from scholars and scientists. He believes that his unconventional interpretations of mythology and archaeology will be generally accepted in the course of time.

Von Däniken has found his strongest support in the writings of Zecharia Sitchin. His theories have been debunked by Ronald Story and Clifford Wilson. In light of the Wilsem criticism the idea of ancient astronauts received in the late 1970s, the wave of interest in the idea subsided and new books on the subject have become quite rare.

Sources:

Voudou

The African-based religion of Haiti. Voudou can be traced to the first Africans brought to Haiti in the sixteenth century. However, it was during the years of French acquisition of land in Haiti that the bulk of African people were brought to the island. Between 1641 and 1830 some 1,650,000 Africans arrived in Haiti. The dominant group came from Dahomey, and the Dahomean religion became the most important element in the emergence of Voudou.

The Africans brought with them beliefs found throughout West Africa, including a belief in a supreme deity or divine power. In Haiti that deity came to be known as le Bon Dieu (the Good God). This deity had largely withdrawn from human affairs, but under him were a number of greater and lesser deities. Among the major deities were Legba, Erzulie, and Damballah. The lesser deities (loas) are numerous, and are of two varieties, those of African origin (the Kala) and those of Haitian descent. Many of the African deities, especially those tied to local sites, did not survive the Atlantic crossing, and they were replaced with new local deities. The name Pétro derived, according to oral tradition, from a man named Don Pédro who according to oral tradition, from a man named Don Pédro who introduced a distinctive dance into Haitian religion.

The plantation owners in Haiti attempted to impose Catholicism on the slave population. One of the means by which Voudou survived was in the identification of the loa with various Catholic saints. Thus Legba was identified with Saint Anthony, Erzulie with the Virgin Mary, and Damballah with Saint Patrick. Damballah is pictured as a snake, and, as in Ireland, there are practically no snakes in Haiti. Hence the association with St. Patrick.

Voudou worship and practice is conducted by male (oungan) and female (mambo) priests. They operate out of a worship center called oulo. A pole that usually has a representation of Damballah coiled around it. Worship includes honoring the deities (which may involve the sacrifice of various animals), lively dancing with drum accompaniment, and the possession of priests or others in attendance by loas.

Like all West African religion, Voudou includes the practice of magic. Voudou has a particularly bad image, even among other African-based religions. Some people believe in malevolent magic, even to the extent of the calling forth of zombies, dead people brought back to life to handle menial labor in the fields.

The image of evil attached to Voudou in the popular imagination seems to have begun with what is known as the Affaire de Bizonto. On December 27, 1863, a little girl of the town of Bizonto was kidnapped and used in a sinister cannibalistic ritual. Eventually the perpetrators were caught, tried, and convicted. While the actions of the people who had killed the girl were offensive to all, in the popular press, especially the foreign press, the actions of the murderers were identified with the Voudou community. Besides the gruesome stories printed at the time, in the 1880s a volume on Haiti by Sir Spenser St. John describes the incident in vivid detail and uses it in a diatribe against Voudou. His work has been followed by a variety of writings, varying from the academic to the journalistic to the merely exploitive, that point a self-righteous finger at Voudou adherents.

There is, of course, an element of magic, even of black magic in Voudou, but it operates quite differently than outsiders have usually presented it. Besides the oungans and mambo, there are bokors (sorcerers), and caplata (lesser magical functionaries). Most magic is used to ward off evil. Charms ward off the evil eye and various loas are seen as the cause of the different ills people suffer. Magic will be applied to cure those responsible and the means of getting the loa to go away. There are also accounts of evil spirits, creatures such as vampires and werewolves.

During the eighteenth century, the ruling class did not take particular notice of Voudou. They tended to identify it with the nocturnal gatherings most notable for dancing. The dancing drums, however, served as a communication system across Haiti, and in 1804 they became the means of organizing a massive and successful revolt. Haitians were able to pull off the revolution without the aid of a great leader because they were united by their religious beliefs. Those beliefs, including the protection of the loas, allowed them to rise against the better-armed rulers.

The use of Voudou in this revolt led the first black ruler of Haiti to oppose it. Later rulers embraced Voudou, most notably Jean-Claude Duvalier, who promoted his own image as a great Voudou magician and his use of Voudou priests in his militia.

Voudou was brought to the United States in 1804 and the years following the Haitian revolt. It spread through the black population of New Orleans and the surrounding countryside. It found its most famous practitioner in Marie Laveau in the mid-nineteenth century. Legal measures were taken to curb its power in the years prior to the Civil War, but they merely drove the practice underground. It survives today, both in a public mode accessible to tourists and as a semisecret religious community. In the 1920s it provided inspiration for the development of African American Spiritualism and the Spiritual Church movement.

Sources:

Vril

A word invented by Edward Bulwer Lytton, famous novelist, politician and occultist, to describe a kind of psychic energy.

It was featured in his book Vril: Power of the Coming Race (1871), which told how “Vril” enabled a race to reach a high degree of civilization and develop a Utopian society without poverty, inequality, or war. Lytton himself had some connections with occultism and received the magician Éliphas Lévi at his house. The idea of Vril was very much in tune with ideas of magical power that Lytton had previously espoused in his books and which continue to be used by occultists to the present time. In prewar Germany there was a Vril Society founded in Berlin.

Sources:

Wafer (in Devil Worship)

The sacred wafer used in the Christian Eucharist is frequently cited as a prized item in devil worship for purposes of profanation. When Satanism was invented in the late fifteenth century by Roman Catholic inquisitors, no phenomenon existed which could be called Satanism. The inquisitors envisioned Satanism as a reversal of Christianity, the devil being the opposite of God. Devil worship, then, would be a reversal of Christian rituals, primarily the Roman Catholic Mass. Thus a Satanist would speak the Lord’s prayer in reverse. The idea of a cult that parodied and profaned Christianity was in all likelihood built out of incidents in which different individuals, over the centuries, actually performed individual sacrilegious acts.

It was rumored that Satanists would attempt to obtain consecrated hosts or wafers from the chalice of a church altar to be profaned in some manner. Sometimes, a turnip was said to be colored black and used to imitate a host wafer.

The practice of Satanism was recorded in the memory and documents of the Christian Church in the West but no actual incident of devil worship occurred until the time of Louis XIV of France, although it was alleged that in the house of the Irish sorcerer, Dame Alice Kyteler, a wafer of sacramental bread was found bearing the name of the Devil.

Sources:

Journalist and astrologer, born in Philadelphia on November 15, 1906. As a youth he moved with his family to Cleveland, Ohio, where he finished high school. In 1924 he went to work for the Cleveland Press. He emerged from obscurity to become an assistant to Harry Houdini in the exposure of Spiritualist frauds and charlatans. Houdini died in 1926 and Wagner turned his attention to astrology with the idea of publishing a Houdini-like exposé. In order to carry out that task, Wagner immersed himself in the subject, learning to cast horoscope charts and interpret them. In the process he was converted to a belief in astrology, and rather than write an expose, he became a professional astrologer. He affiliated with the Rosicrucian Fellowship and eventually moved to Oceanside, California, as the fellowship’s assistant superintendent of publications.

In the early 1950s Wagner established a business in Los Angeles and for two years published the National Astrological Journal (1933–35). In 1936 he began a nationally syndicated column, “Your Daily Forecast,” which continued until the general discontinuance of astrological columns during World War II (a voluntary gesture of the journalistic and astrological community due to Hitler’s use of astrology). Wagner served in the army during the war. In 1946 he established a weather forecasting business, but also became the editor-in-chief for Dell Publishing Company (1946–73). Dell published, amid its many astrological publications, Horoscope magazine. In 1973 Wagner was named consulting executive editor of Horoscope, and he was named editor emeritus in 1975. He died in May of 1982.

Sources:

A British scholar and historian of occultism and mysticism. Waite was born on October 2, 1857, in Brooklyn, New York, and brought to London, England, by his family when he was an infant. He was educated in Roman Catholic schools. As a boy, he cherished an affection for “penny dreadfuls,” the romantic popular pulp literature of the day.

Waite grew up during the first European renaissance of occultism which stretched from the end of the nineteenth century to the outbreak of World War I, and his personal friends included Arthur Machen and Ralph Shirley. He also met William Butler Yeats, Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, Annie Besant, Rudolf Steiner, Wynn Westcott, Algernon Blackwood, and Aleister Crowley.

Waite regularly contributed to Shirley’s Occult Review, and for some twenty years he edited anonymously its monthly “Review of Periodical Literature.” During this period he acquired a knowledge of the major current developments in occultism all over the world.

He was also a Freemason and authority on Masonic writings. He was responsible for the first British publication of many important occult and mystical texts. He translated and publicized the writings of occultist Éliphas Lévi (Alphonse Louis Constant).

In 1891 Waite joined the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn but quit in less than a year believing his time was better spent studying and translating alchemical texts. He developed a negative attitude toward all magical ritual and believed that rituals differed primarily in the amount of black magic they contained.

Waite became a devoted mystic and in the wake of the collapse of the Golden Dawn in 1915, he founded the Fellowship of the Rosy Cross. He believed that suitably constructed rituals, which he endeavored to write, that had a dramatic form but were of a religious (devotional) rather than magical (manipulative) format, could assist the mystical quest.

Waite was involved in the transition from the first to the second generation of the occult revival. He was a productive occult writer and produced some historical texts and translations. Because he critiqued the magical endeavor, he was disliked and denigrated by occultists, and orthodox mystics distrusted him because of his association with the occult. Recovery of his work has been assisted by the efforts of Robert Gilbert, who has produced a biography and a bibliography of his writings.
Through the twentieth century, Waite was known for his work with Pamela Coleman-Smith in the production of a deck of tarot cards (the Waite deck) and his commentary on the tarot, The Key to the Tarot (1910). Both the deck and the book remain popular in spite of the numerous new divinatory tarot decks that have been produced in the late twentieth century as expressions of the Wiccan and New Age movements.

Waite died May 19, 1942.

Sources:

Waldensians

The name of a proto-Protestant Christian sect that arose in the south of France late in the twelfth century. Peter Waldo, a prosperous merchant from Lyon, appeared about 1170 as a wandering preacher. He soon built a substantial following in Italy and Germany, it was carried by wandering preachers who had their origins in the south of France late in the twelfth century C.E. While the Waldensians had their origins in the south of France late in the twelfth century C.E., Peter Waldo, a prosperous merchant from Lyon, appeared about 1170 as a wandering preacher. He soon built a substantial following in Italy and Germany, it was carried by wandering preachers who had their origins in the south of France late in the twelfth century C.E.

Ancient Traditions

One of the great sources of Welsh legends is the Mabinogion, dating from medieval times, containing stories for oral recitation by bards in the halls of the ancient princes of Wales. Typical motifs in these tales are supernatural birth, visits to the Other World, and magic shape-changing. Rhiannon, the wife of Pwyll, possessed marvelous birds that came from the Unseen World, and their singing held warriors spellbound for 80 years. In another story, Lleuvelys helps his brother Lludd to eradicate three plagues that have devastated Britain—the Coramians, a strange race whose knowledge is infinite and who hear everything uttered, even the softest whisper; a horrifying shriek that penetrates every house on a May evening, caused by the battle between two dragons; and a great giant who carries off all the fruit from the king’s palace.

A well-known story is that of the birth of Taliesin, chief of the bards of the west. The hero, Gwion Bach, goes to the Land under Waves at the bottom of Lake Bala in North Wales. There he finds the giant Tegid the Bald and his wife Ceridwen, goddess of poetry and knowledge. Ceridwen owns an immense cauldron in which she brews a mixture of science and inspiration, with the aid of her books of magic. This great brew has to simmer for a year and a day, and she sets the blind man Morda to keep the fire going and Gwion to stir the brew. It is to yield three magical drops.

Toward the end of the year, as Ceridwen is picking herbs and making incantations, three drops of the brew spurt out of the cauldron and fall upon Gwion Bach’s finger. With the sudden heat on his finger, he puts it into his mouth to cool, whereupon the three drops instantly give him knowledge and means of all things, and he becomes aware that he must guard against Ceridwen’s cunning, so he flees to his own land. Meanwhile the cauldron bursts and the rest of the brew is a black poison that overflows into the waters, poisoning the horses of Gwyddno Garanhir.

Ceridwen seizes a billet of wood and strikes blind Morda on the head, but he declares that he is innocent and that it is the fault of Gwion Bach. She runs in pursuit of Gwion, who has come to catch fish in his net. Elphin recognizes him and carries into the weir of Gwyddno Garanhir and founds by himself into one of the grains. She turns herself into a black hare, scratches at the wheat and swallows him.

She carries him for nine months and is delivered of him, but because of his beauty, she casts him back into a leather bag and casts him into the sea to the mercy of God. He is carried into the weir of Gwyddno Garanhir and found by Prince Elphin, who has come to catch fish in his net. Elphin recognizes him, and the boy named Taliesin, which can mean "beautiful brow" or "great value."

Druids

Wales is also considered a center for the cult of the Druids (brought by the Celts), who came into Wales as early as 200 B.C.E. They were said to practice human sacrifice, although it has also been claimed that the victims were criminals. They also employed methods of divination.

The Druids are thought to have come from ancient Gaul, where they were suppressed in the Roman Conquest as a rival source of power and prestige. The historian Pliny the Elder recorded their association with the misletoe plant in their sacred rites.

He also mentioned a mysterious object used by the Druids, which he named the "serpent's egg." It was roughly the size and shape of a small apple, and it was said that a mass of hissing serpents threw this egg into the air. If it could be caught in a white cloak before touching the ground, it would convey powers of magic to the possessor, such as the ability to float against a river current, and success in legal undertakings.

Witchcraft and Demonology

Sir Dafydd Llwyd, who lived in Cardiganshire in the reign of Charles II, had studied black magic at Oxford. He practiced as a ploughman and was famous for his wonderful cure, but his skill was owed to a familiar spirit or demon that he kept locked up in a book of spells. One day, the story is told, he accidentally left this grimoire behind and sent his pageboy home to fetch it, commanding him to on no account open it. Like most lads, the boy could not resist being inquisitive; he lifted the cover and turned over the leaves, with their weird inscriptions.

Suddenly there came forth a huge demon who frowned and started singing revival hymns, suddenly stopped, turned on her terror, the boy had the wit to say, "Fetch me some stones out of the River Wye." In a few moments, stones and pebbles began hurrying through the air, when Sir Dafydd, aware that something evil was afoot, came hurrying back and conjured the spirit back into the book before any serious harm could be done.

As early as the twelfth century, Christian priests in Wales were warned about letting the Eucharistic Host get into the hands of magicians and witches, who might secretly slip it out who had bewitched their beasts. If two farmers had a serious quarrel, one of them went to the wise man to obtain a charm to injure his neighbor.

Phenomena at Religious Revivals

Welsh preaching is celebrated for its fervor, and the traditional hwyl or peroration of a sermon is said to have magic effects. During the nineteenth century, there were reports of mysterious luminous phenomena associated with revivalism, and such accounts were given again in 1904 and 1905 during the inspired revival campaigns of Mary Jones of Egryn. Jones was a happily married peasant woman with a family, when in December 1904 she received beatific visions instructing her to undertake the work of religious revival that had earlier been the mission of the preacher Evan Roberts in Glamorgan.

The first night of Jones' mission was marked by the appearance of a mysterious star and various lights. She herself reported seeing "a circle of small stars, encompassing a cross of diamond stars, and on this cross at times the draped figure of the Saviour." Strange luminous phenomena were witnessed by other individuals. A skeptical businessman was driving her home one evening from a meeting, and prayed that he might be accorded a sign if she was indeed a divinely ordained preacher. Immediately there appeared above the road, in front of the car, a misty star. As the man gazed a luminous cross was formed inside it, sparkling with diamonds, and upon this was a draped figure with bowed head.

On another occasion, Jones herself reported seeing the Devil, who first appeared in the form of a man, but when she started singing revival hymns, suddenly stopped, turned on her and became transformed into an enormous black dog. She prayed for strength, and the dog rushed growing into a hillside.

The star and the light were seen by many people from the first day of Jones' mission. The star seemed to rest above particular houses where converts later came to the meetings. It also followed her on her journeys. On her trip to Crickhowel, for example, the lights were witnessed by the people with her. At Bryncrug, a few miles inland from Town, the gallery of the chapel was flooded during the service by the mysterious light. After the service, the light, in front of the church, before casting its rays down to earth, was seen by a party of young quarrymen. Overtaking the light, which had stopped, they knelt down in the middle of the road and held a prayer meeting, bathed in the unearthly light.

Some of these lights and their movements are reminiscent of many modern accounts of UFOs.

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed. WALES

1645
The Gardnerian Revival

In the last generation, growing out of the initial work of Gerald B. Gardner (the witch of the Isle of Man), a new neopagan witchcraft or Wicca movement spread from England through the British Isles, the lands of the commonwealth, and the United States. As the movement grew and broke into numerous segments, there arose a number who attached themselves to Welsh witchcraft traditions. Among the early covens in the northeastern United States in the 1970s were the New York Coven of Welsh Traditional Witchcraft and the New England Coven of Welsh Traditional Witchcraft, which supplemented their Gardnerian rituals with material from folkloric, archeological, and anthropological texts on Wales. Several significant groups—the most notable possibly the Church and School of Wicca (Box 1502, New Bern, NC 28560) and the Cymry Wicca (Box 4196, Athens, GA 30605)—claim to draw on Welsh traditions. In addition, many modern witches, drawing on the Mabinogion, have chosen such names as Ceridwen and Taliesin as their religious names.

Sources:

Walker, Kenneth Macfarlane (1882–1966)

Surgeon and author of books relating to parapsychology and mysticism. Walker was born in 1882 in London, England. He studied at Cambridge University (M.A., M.B., Ch.B.), the Royal College of Surgeons, and the International College of Surgeons. He was a captain in the Royal Army Medical Corps during World War I (1915–19) and later a consulting surgeon at London hospitals.

As an adult Walker was introduced to the writings and work of George Santayana, a mystic. In England he studied with Maurice Nicoll and P. D. Ouspensky. He visited Gurdjieff in France in 1948–49 (a visit described in a 1952 article). He wrote both autobiographically of his time as a Gurdjieff student and about his philosophical conclusions. By the time of his death, January 25, 1966, he was a well-known exponent of Gurdjieff’s perspective.

Sources:

Walker, Roland (1907–1993)

Professor of biology who wrote on parapsychology. Walker was born on February 8, 1907, at Stellenbosch, South Africa. He studied at Oberlin College, Ohio (B.A., 1928; M.A., 1929) and Yale University (Ph.D., 1954). Following his graduation he began a long tenure in the biology department at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, New York. Walker developed a side interest in parapsychology and operated from a critical perspective. The primary product of that interest was an essay critical of fellow biologist J. B. Rhine’s understanding of extrasensory perception (ESP) and psychokinesis (PK). He died July 30, 1993.

Sources:

Walker, Thane (ca. 1890–?)

Founder (with Phez Kahill) of the Prosperos, a group stemming from the philosophy of mystic G. I. Gurdjieff. Walker was born in Nowaway County, Missouri. He claimed to have been one of America’s first psychologists and to have been imprisoned in a Nazi concentration camp after writing the article “I Saw Hitler Make Black Magic.” He was a Marine Corps officer and entertained American troops in Japan during the occupation in World War II.

As a former pupil of Gurdjieff, Walker became a Gurdjieff-style figure, teaching students through stories and disorienting activities, but also drawing upon Freudian and Jungian psychology and occult and astrological traditions. Walker believed students should wake from the misleading reality of everyday sensory experience and limited personality to a wider reality.

The Prosperos group was founded in Florida in 1956, but the organization has since moved its headquarters to California and reported some 3,000 members at the end of the 1980s.

Sources:

Walker, William

British spirit photographer, a member of the Crewe Circle associated with William Hope. Walker was the first to perform psychic photography on which spirit “extras” appeared in full color.

Walk-ins

In 1979 popular New Age author Ruth Montgomery identified an unknown phenomenon that had occurred to a variety of unrelated individuals. They reported that the soul originally inhabiting their body had vacated it so that another could “walk in” and take over. Montgomery wrote about walk-ins in her book, Strangers Among Us (1979), suggesting that at times people with otherwise perfectly healthy bodies no longer wished to live. If they were allowed to leave, the people would turn over their physically sound bodies to some advanced (though as yet unperfected) soul. In a subsequent book, Threshold to Tomorrow (1983), Montgomery related some 17 case histories of walk-ins, including New Age leaders Dick Sutphen and Carol Parrish-Harra.

The background of a person claiming to be a walk-in often contains a traumatic, even life-threatening, event through which the person passed to a new, transformed life. Some individuals suffered a medical crisis, often to the point of clinical death and revival. Others reached the conclusion that they simply no longer wanted to live. Because the new personality... emerging after the crisis retains the memory of the previous personality, some observers have suggested more mundane explanations of the walk-in experience, including a dramatic reintegration of a previously fragmented personality. The experience of walk-ins has also been compared to near-death experiences, which have led to similar life transformations, though without the feeling of being a different person.

Montgomery claims she received the concept of walk-ins from her "guides," a group of evolved entities from whom Montgomery had channeled material for many years. According to her guides, many of the world's leading figures have been walk-ins, including Moses, Joseph, and Jesus of Nazareth. More recent leaders include Muhammad, Christopher Columbus, Abraham Lincoln, Joseph Smith Jr., Mary Baker Eddy, and many of the founders of the American nation, notably George Washington, Alexander Hamilton, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and Abigail Adams.

None of the outstanding people from history identified by Montgomery as walk-ins left any hint of having experienced anything similar to the experiences of contemporary walk-ins. Montgomery believed the public nature of the contemporary phenomenon is related to the approaching New Age, which she believed would be initiated by a polar shift in the year 1999. In the past, walk-ins have not identified themselves as such, but in the light of the events of 1999, they need to know of each other so they can locate each other as the leaders who will build the new golden age.

Among the more interesting of the contemporary walk-ins is the couple who heads the Extraterrestrial Earth Mission. Over the last decade they have claimed to be inhabited by a series of extraterrestrial metaphysical teachers. In 1986, John, a metaphysical teacher in Seattle, Washington, abandoned his body to a personality known as "Avinash." Later that year he met another walk-in, then named "Arthea." During the next eight years Avinash would also depart and be succeeded by persons known as "Aktivar," "Alarit," "Savizair," and "ZaviRah." At the same time Arthea was followed by "Akria," "Polaria," "Sizarra," and "Ziva'rah." There is every expectation that further walk-in teachers will appear in the future.

Sources:

Wallace, Alfred Russel (1823–1913)
British naturalist, codiscoverer with Charles Darwin of the principles of biological evolution. Wallace was a philosophical skeptic, a materialist. His experience of Spiritualist phenomena overcame his skepticism.

In the preface to his book On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism (1874) Wallace writes:
"They compelled me to accept them, as facts, long before I could accept the spiritual experiences of them; there was at that time 'no place in my fabric of thought into which it could be fitted.' (Argument of Dr. Carpenter). By slow degrees a place was made.'

Wallace was led to believe 1) in the existence of numerous preternatural intelligences of various grades and 2) that some of these intelligences, although usually invisible and intangible to us, can and do act on matter, and do influence our minds. It was by the latter doctrine that he came to some of the residual phenomena in his work Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection (1870).

Wallace was born on January 8, 1823, at Usk, Monmouthshire. After leaving school he worked as a land surveyor and architect. Around 1840 his interest in botany began and he started a herbarium. In 1843, he was an English teacher at the Collegiate School, Leicester, where he met H. W. Bates, who influenced him to collect and study beetles.

In 1848, they commenced a joint naturalist expedition to the River Amazon. On the return journey, most of Wallace's collection was destroyed in a fire on the ship, but his book A Narrative of Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro appeared in 1853. He next traveled in the Malay Archipelago, and his large collection of species passed to Oxford University and the British Museum.

In February 1858, during a severe attack of fever, he was thinking about Malthus' Essay on Population when, to quote his own words: "Thus suddenly came to me the idea of the survival of the fittest." He drafted a theory which he posted to Charles Darwin a few days later. By coincidence, Wallace's paper was virtually an abstract of Darwin's own theory, written in 1842.

Wallace's earliest experiences relating to Spiritualism dated from 1844 when he was a schoolmaster in Leicester. Influenced by a lecture given by Spencer Hall on mesmerism, he tried similar experiments. Later, during twelve years of tropical wanderings in which he was occupied in the study of natural history, he heard occasionally of table-turning and spirit rapping. He decided to investigate them on his return.

His first opportunity came on July 22, 1865, in the house of a friend. After more than a dozen sittings he became satisfied that "there is an unknown power developed from the bodies of a number of persons placed in connection by sitting round a table with all their hands on it."

The next stage of his inquiry began in September 1865 and was devoted to the physical and mental phenomena of Mary Marshall. In broad daylight, Wallace observed levitation, movement of objects without contact (telekinesis), and the alteration of weight. Although unknown to Marshall, the place name "Para," where Wallace's brother died, his name and that of the last friend who saw him were spelled out. Messages came spelled backwards, through direct writing.

Impressed by these occurrences, Wallace investigated in his own home with the help of a medium. Phenomena were obtained and from November 1866 onward, Wallace had the opportunity to watch mediumship of Agnes Guppy-Volkman develop. A stout woman, she was lifted noiselessly off the top of the table while sitting in her chair, with five or six persons close around her. Musical sounds were heard without the presence of instruments. A German guest, a stranger, sang several songs and the strains of this music accompanied her throughout.

Guppy-Volkman supposedly had the ability to apport flowers and fruit. In midwinter, after she set for four hours in a small, warm, gas-lit room in the Wallace home, a quantity of flowers appeared upon a bare table—anemones, tulips, chrysanthemums, Chinese primroses, and several ferns. Wallace stated: "All were absolutely fresh as if just gathered from a conservatory. They were covered with a fine cold dew. Not a petal was crumpled or broken, not the most delicate point or pinnule of the fern was out of place."

Wallace stated that the phenomenon was repeated afterward hundreds of times. The flowers sometimes arrived in large quantities. They were often brought on request, fruits as well as flowers. A friend of Wallace asked for a sunflower, and one six feet high fell on the table, with a large mass of earth about its roots.

The naturalist formed a committee of the London Dialectical Society in 1869 and witnessed, under test conditions, a variety of telekinetic phenomena. When the possibility of spirit photography was first demonstrated in England in the studio of Frederick A. Hudson, Wallace was anxious to test this new phenomenon. Sitting with Guppy-Volkman he... obtained a communication by raps that his mother would try to appear on Hudson’s photographic plate.

He sat three times, choosing his own position, and found a male figure with a short sword on the first photographic plate, and a female figure on the two other plates. Reports, both of the latter images resembled his mother, and the second plate was unlike any known photograph previously taken of her. Under a magnifying glass, supposedly this second picture disclosed a special feature of his mother’s face.

In view of these experiences and the large amount of testimony in the literature of Spiritualism to similar occurrences, Wallace declared it was his opinion that the phenomena of Spiritualism did not require further confirmation. “They are proved, quite as well as any facts are proved in other sciences.”

His later attitude was in accordance with this conviction. He never missed an opportunity to test psychic phenomena. He made several attempts to convince the pillars of scientific skepticism and started by inviting W. E. Capac to attend some sittings in his own home. Carpenter came one evening. Raps were heard, and these were repeated, sounding, at request, in Walsch’s voice. Carpenter sat and made no comment.

He never returned to Wallace’s home.

The same thing happened with his colleague John Tyndall, another scientific skeptic. Wallace had sent Thomas Henry Huxley his paper “The Scientific Aspect of the Supernatural,” which was later included in On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism. Huxley responded to Wallace, “I am neither shocked nor disposed to issue a commission of lunacy against you. It may be true, for anything that I know to the contrary, but really I cannot get up interested in the subject.”

G. H. Lewes accepted an invitation to the Wallace home but never went.

Between 1870 and 1880, Wallace had many opportunities to witness interesting phenomena in the houses of various friends. Through a number of his own family, automatic writing was received in his own home, purporting to come from his deceased brother William and containing many predictions which were later fulfilled.

In 1874, Wallace was asked by the Fortnightly Review to write an article on Spiritualism. It appeared under the title “A Defence of Modern Spiritualism” and also later in On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism, first published in 1875. The volume also included two new chapters on the nature and purport of apparitions. Later editions would be enlarged with accounts of the author’s further personal experiences in séances with Katie Cook, W. Haxby, Francis Ward Monck, William Eglinton, and others. During much of the rest of his life, Wallace found himself defending mediums, who were increasingly seen as frauds. His defense would lead to a lively discussion with Eleanor Sidgwick in the Journal of the Society for Psychical Research in 1888.

Wallace defended Henry Slade and gave evidence of the genuineness of his phenomena at the trial in Bow Street Police Court, London, in 1876. In the same year, by casting his vote as president of the anthropological subcommittee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science he made possible the presentation of William F. Barrett’s paper on Spiritualism.

In the years 1886–87, during a lecture tour of America, Wallace stayed for some time in three centers of Spiritualism—Boston, Washington, and San Francisco. He attended materialization séances with a medium named Ross, and when it was rumored that she was caught in fraud he testified on her behalf in a letter to the Banner of Light.

In Washington, in the company of Elliot Coues, General Lippitt and D. Lyman, Wallace had remarkable experiences with the medium Pierre L. O. A. Keeler, and he sat in San Francisco at an outstanding slate-writing séance with Fred P. Evans in which writing was produced in five different colors and, on his impromptu suggestion, six crayon drawings were precipitated on six pieces of paper placed between a pair of slates, some of the drawings having personal relevance.

In later years, Wallace did not encounter much Spiritualist phenomena but he remained true to his convictions up to the end of his busy life. In 1910, he received the Order of Merit for his scientific researches, however, because of his advocacy of Spiritualism, his scientific contributions were largely ignored and have remained unheralded. He died at Broadstone, Dorset, on November 7, 1913.

Sources:

Wallis, E. W. (1848–1914)

British trance medium, inspirational speaker, healer, lecturer, and author. “Lightheart,” the spirit of a South American Indian, claimed responsibility for his mediumistic development. “Standard Bearer,” “Leader,” and “Tom Joyce” were others of his well-known controls.

Assisted by his wife, also a notable psychic, Wallis did propaganda work for many decades. He assisted Emma H. Britten in starting the journal The Two Worlds in Manchester, which he edited until 1899. In that year he came to London and became editor of Light, a position he held until his death.

As a medium, his wife did not enter deep trance. She could hear the words she spoke but reportedly could not prevent herself from saying them. Her mediumship began at the age of eighteen in 1872. A young Spanish Indian girl, “Veina Goree,” was her first control. From 1875 onward, she gave inspirational addresses at the Spiritual Institution founded by James Burns. While speaking there, she was suddenly controlled by “Morambó,” an African slave who died in South America.

Wallis produced physical phenomena for many years. His wife was associated with the London Spiritualist Alliance and answered questions on Spiritualism in afternoon meetings.

Walsch, Neal Donald (1943–)

Neal Donald Walsch, the channel for receiving the material in a three-volume best-selling metaphysical book Conversations with God, was born and raised in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He grew up in a Roman Catholic family and for a while considered the priesthood. Instead, he went to work at a local radio station and for the next 30 years worked in a variety of jobs that took him around the United States. He also married multiple times.

At the end of the 1980s he was in Ashland, Oregon, and went to work as a talk show host. Fired from one job, he landed a job at KOPE and became known locally as a radio personality under his public name, Bob White. In 1992 he experienced a period of frustration and depression. He was, in part, upset that the success in life that he had hoped for had eluded him. He fell back on a technique that had worked for him in the past. He composed a letter in which he poured out all of his anger in a series of questions. Previously, he would address such letters to individuals with whom he had problems. This time, he decided to direct the letter to God. As he finished the letter, he received an answer. Words formed in his mind and he wrote them down. God asked if Walsch wanted answers to his questions or whether he was merely venting. He responded that he was venting but in fact wanted answers to the questions.

Thus began a dialogue with God that would last over the next three years. Walsch would pose questions and God would reply. Walsch wrote the answers out in longhand. This process has traditionally been called automatic writing, and has more recently been seen as a variety of channeling. As the material was received, an initial batch of it was compiled as volume one of Conversations with God and published in 1995. It quickly became a best-seller and remained on the New York Times list for 91 weeks, and was subsequently translated into 27 languages. Volume two appeared in 1997 and it too reached the best-seller list. Volume three appeared in 1998.

As the response to the volumes grew Walsch founded ReCreation, an organization to put the idea of the books into action. ReCreation now sponsors a full range of lectures, workshops, retreats, and seminars across the United States and abroad. Beginning in the year 2000, it is organizing an annual Empowerment Week that includes a training session for leaders who wish to expand the work. Walsch also created the CWG in Action program to establish local centers for the work.

Walsch resides in Ashland and continues to lead ReCreation, which may be contacted at PMB #1150, 1257 Siskiyou Blvd., Ashland, OR 97520. His Internet site is at http://www.conversationswithgod.org/.

Sources:
Varble, Bill. "Former Rogue Valley Radio Host Finds Success in Conversations with God." Mail Tribune (Ashland, Ore.) (September 14, 1997).

"Walter"

The claimed spirit control of the medium Mina Stinson Crandon, popularly known as "Margery," the name used by those who investigated her early in the twentieth century. "Walter" was identified with Walter Stinson, the medium's brother, who had died in a railroad accident in 1911 at the age of 28. He manifested at a séance for the first time during his sister's visit to a clairvoyant. "Walter" furnished proofs of personal identity and took charge of Crandon's sittings.

"Walter" was described as a spirit communicator, active, having a keen sense of humor, showing no pretense of saintliness, and, on occasions, swore and cursed. He was supposedly highly intelligent and full of energy and curiosity. He never pretended to know whether he could accomplish something new, but was always ready to try and was gratified at his own achievements.

Supposedly, "Walter" gave the impression that he himself was learning about conditions while giving a demonstration. "I don't give a damn about convincing the public or anyone. You have no idea why I am here," he said once.

Reportedly, "Walter" often threatened the sitters: "When this is done I am going away, and I shan't come back. My crowd came here because we liked you people, and you kept us here working at this damned thing." However, he never kept this threat. It is believed the satisfaction that his increasing dexterity gave him in producing high-grade psychic phenomena was enough to bind him to the "Margery" circle.

He introduced many new features into the experiments, provided cross correspondences, and gave his fingerprints (see plastics). These fingerprints were later found to be those of another living individual, prompting accusations that Crandon's mediumship was partly or wholly fraudulent.

"Walter" was also manifested at Glen Hamilton's circle in Winnipeg, being the chief control of the medium "Mary M."

Sources:

Walter, William Grey (1910–1977)

Physiologist with special interests in the study of the neurophysiological correlates of such paranormal states as hypnosis, sleep, trance, and hallucination. Walter was born on February 19, 1910, in Kansas City, Missouri. He studied at Cambridge University (B.A., 1931, M.A., 1935; D.Sc., 1947). He was director of the Physiological Department at Burden Neurological Institute, Bristol, England, from 1939 onward, founder of the EEG Society, and the editor of EEG Journal. He wrote a number of books, the most famous being The Living Brain (1955), which was translated into several foreign languages. He died May 6, 1977.

Sources:

The Wandering Jew

A medieval German legend that takes several forms. Although writers and details differ, the essential features of the narratives that have been handed down to us are basically the same.

The legend is that as Christ was being dragged on his way to Calvary, he passed the house of a Jew and stopped there. Jesus, looking at him, said, “I shall stand and rest, but thou shalt go till the last day.” The Jew was compelled to wander over the Earth until this prophecy was fulfilled.

The legend of the Wandering Jew is regarded as the epic of the Semite people in the Middle Ages. Unfortunately it has often become a vehicle for crude anti-Semitic propaganda and persecution.

In some parts of Germany, the Wandering Jew theme has been identified with the wild huntsman myth, while in several French districts that mythical character is regarded as the wind of the night. This legend was treated in literary fashion by Eugène Sue in his novel Le Juif errant (10 vols., 1844–45) and by the British author George Cruikshank in his novel Salathiel: A Story of the Past, The Present and The Future (1829). Something of the same atmosphere also pervades the legend of the Flying Dutchman.

Sources:

Wang, Chung Yu (1880–1958)

Metallurgist, with interests in various aspects of parapsychology. Born in 1880 in Hong Kong, Wang studied at Queens College and Peiyang University and came to the United States for graduate work at the University of California and Columbia University (M.A. mining and geology). He was a member of the American Society for Psychical Research. He died August 30, 1958, in New York City.

Sources:

Wannein Nat

A Burmese evil spirit. (See also MYANMAR)

Warcollier, René (1881–1962)

Chemical engineer, author, parapsychologist, and president of the Institut Métapsychique International, Paris (1951–62). He was born on April 8, 1881, at Ormonville-la-Rogue, France. He studied at Ecole Nationale Supérieure de Chimie, Paris (Ch.E., 1903). He became interested in psychical research, especially in telepathy, in the 1920s and collaborated with such experimenters as Cesar de Vesme and Eugene Osty on investigations of clairvoyance and related phenomena. He oversaw the European end of an experiment in telepathy jointly conducted with Gardner Murphy. He was affiliated with the Institut Métapsychique, served as its treasurer (1929–38), and edited the Revue Métapsychique for two years (1938–40) until the beginning of World War II. He died May 23, 1962, in Paris, France.

Sources:

Ward, Arthur Henry (Sarsfield) (1883–1959)

Author who wrote under the pseudonym “Sax Rohmer” and created the celebrated fictional character Dr. Fu-Manchu. Ward was also a student of the occult. Born of Irish Catholic parents in Birmingham, England, on February 15, 1883, Ward had no formal schooling until the age of nine, when he attended a day school in London. As a youth, Ward stopped attending Mass and became an agnostic. His first job was as a bank clerk in London, after which he worked briefly as a newspaper reporter. He started writing short stories at the age of twenty and first used the pseudonym “Sax Rohmer” in 1912. He also wrote some successful songs for music hall comedians George Robey and Little Tich.

His famous character Fu-Manchu was based on reports of a Chinese master criminal operating an international opium racket, and the atmosphere of Limehouse, London’s Chinatown district, provided local color. The first Fu-Manchu book was published in 1913, but Rohmer did not immediately settle down to developing his character. Instead, he spent much time on his nonfiction study The Romance of Sorcery (first published London, 1914; E. P. Dutton, 1915). The book brought a letter from illusionist Harry Houdini, who soon afterward became a friend.

Rohmer is said to have become a member of the Hermetic society the Golden Dawn and may also have belonged to a Rosicrucian order. However, his occult interests were eventually overshadowed by the success of his Fu-Manchu books. In 1929, Paramount Pictures first brought the character to the screen with The Mysterious Dr. Fu-Manchu, starring Warner Oland and Jean Arthur. Rohmer died June 1, 1959.

Sources:

Warminster UFO News

Monthly publication through the 1970s of the British UFO Society, dealing with news and sightings in the Warminster district of Britain, where hundreds of local residents have reported UFO phenomena since the 1960s.

Warner, Abby

An illiterate American orphan girl who was instrumental in arousing lively interest in Spiritualism in Ohio soon after the phenomenon of the Rochester Rappings. Mrs. Kellogg of Massillon, in whose house Warner performed domestic services, discovered that raps were produced in the girl’s presence. Soon she was able to move into a trance state, and the uneducated girl, who at eighteen could only read printed characters, wrote with both hands at the same time on different subjects, while a third communication was spelled out by raps. Reports of the séances began to be widely circulated. Abel Underhill, a physician, took the girl into his family for medical treatment and wrote her history. The occurrences at St. Timothy’s Church on Christmas Eve, 1851, put her in the limelight. Supposedly, unusually powerful raps resounded in the church in her presence and attracted the attention of the whole assembly. The minister asked that “those knockings might cease.” Instead, they increased in vehemence.

Warner was arrested on a charge of disturbing a religious meeting and brought before a public tribunal. The trial commenced on December 27 and lasted for three days. As “not a single witness could be found who could swear that they perceived the slightest movement in the accused party,” on the contrary, when closely examined, those who professed to have scrutinized the action of the spirit rapper narrowly were compelled to admit that they could not detect the least perceptible motion, even of her dress, at the times when the knocks were most numerous and emphatic,” the defendant was discharged.

Following the acquittal, Underhill announced an investigation by a selected committee, under stringent test conditions, of the medium’s physical and mental phenomena. Four séances were held. The committee believed the phenomena wholly unaccountable and genuine evidences of an occult and intelligent force outside the medium.

Warner, Lucien (Hynes) (1900–1963)

Psychologist and opinion analyst who conducted surveys in parapsychology. He was born on September 9, 1900, at Irving-
Wart

Small skin lesions on face, fingers, or elbows, and sometimes on the genitals, caused by a virus, as distinct from moles, which are birthmarks. The general medical term for a wart is verruca, but warts on the genitals or around the anus are known as condylomas, or venereal warts.

Warts often appear and disappear without any obvious cause, and this characteristic tended to reinforce belief in many old folk cures or wart-charming. In eastern Massachusetts, central New York, and parts of England, it used to be believed that warts could be removed by rubbing them with spittle. Other widespread superstitions about warts:

To cure warts, wash hands in the moon’s rays in a dry metal basin, saying:

I wash my hands in this thy dish,
O man in the moon, do grant my wish
And come and take away this!

Water taken from a gravestone and rubbed on warts will cure them.

Striking warts with an undertaker’s hammer will cure them.

To remove warts from the hand, watch for a funeral procession to pass and as it goes by, say secretly: “If you sincerely wish that these warts will pass off my hands as that body decays in the ground.”

If a person steals an egg and secretly buries it in the ground, his or her warts will disappear when the egg decays.

Pick up an old marrow bone, touch it to your warts, walk off, throw it behind you, and don’t look back.

If you take as many pins as you have warts and give them to someone else, your warts will be transferred to the other person.

Take as many pebbles as you have warts and touch each wart with a pebble, then wrap the stones in cloth or paper and throw them away in the roadway. Whoever picks up the parcel of pebbles will get your warts, and you will lose them.

Take a piece of string and tie as many knots in it as there are warts and lay the string under a stone. Whoever treads on the stone will be attached to the warts.

Such superstitions are often very ancient. Pliny (23–79 C.E.) recommended that warts be touched with chick peas on the first day of the month, and that the peas then be wrapped in cloth and thrown away behind you. The pebble charm was known to Marcellus of Bordeaux in the fourth century, and it is cited in his book De Mendicamentis.

Apart from natural remission, it is possible that many wart cures worked through a process analogous to selfhypnosis. Other wart remedies were of a pseudomedical nature, such as rubbing warts with milkweed, or the fluid from grasshoppers, or the fresh blood of mice. Modern medical remedies involve treating warts with a substance that dissolves the hard layer and cauterizes the remainder, which is then scraped off.

During the witchcraft manias of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, warts and moles were considered “devil’s marks” if they did not bleed when pricked.

Washington Research Center and Parapsychology Group

The Washington Research Center and Parapsychology Group was founded in 1982 by Russian-American parapsychologist Larissa Vilenetskaya (b. 1948). Vilenetskaya had been involved in parapsychological research throughout the 1970s at the Research Institute of General and Pedagogical Psychology of the USSR Academy of Sciences. She moved to the United States in 1981. The center published a journal, Psy Research, which made an effort at informing an English-speaking audience of research being conducted in Russia, Eastern Europe, and China.
Wasserman, Gerhard Dietrich (1919–1986)

University lecturer in applied mathematics who experimented in the field of parapsychology. Wasserman was born December 12, 1919, at Leipzig, Germany. He studied at Queen Mary College, University of London (B.Sc. hons. math., 1942, Ph.D. quantum mechanics, 1946). In 1948 he began a tenure as an instructor in applied mathematics at King’s College Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Durham University.

In the field of parapsychology he has taken special interest in the construction of theoretical models for psi phenomena. His article “An Outline of a Field Theory of Organismic Form and Behavior” was published in a Ciba Foundation symposium on extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Wasson, Robert Gordon (1898–1986)

Journalist and writer who argued for “ethno-mycology,” the claimed relationship of wild mushrooms (especially hallucinogenic varieties) to various human cultures throughout history. Wasson was born on September 22, 1898, at Great Falls, Montana. He studied at the Columbia School of Journalism, and in 1926 he married Valentina Pavlovna Guerken, who shared his research in ethno-mycology.

Wasson worked as a reporter through the 1920s before becoming a prominent banker for the Guaranty Company of New York (1928–34) and later the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company. In the 1950s Wasson and his wife conducted field research in Mexico, studying firsthand the sacred mushroom ceremonies of the Mazatec Indians. Their record album Mushroom Ceremony of the Mazatec Indians of Mexico (Folkways Records, New York, 1957) was the first documented recording of its kind. Wasson’s researches influenced the psychedelic revolution of the 1960s.

Wasson concluded that the “soma” mentioned in the literature of ancient India was in fact the amanita muscaria mushroom. He suggested that Hindu mysticism arose from its priests’ intoxication from this mushroom, considered to be the elixir of immortality. This line of speculation was followed up by John M. Allegro in his book The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross (1970), which suggested the crucifixion story of Jesus was a myth, symbolic of the ecstasy of a drug cult. More recently it has been revived approvingly in the journal ReVision (vol. 10, no. 4, Spring 1988), together with the suggestion that amanita muscaria was the forbidden fruit from the tree in the Garden of Eden in the Old Testament story. Wasson’s research found little approval in the scholarly world. He died December 23, 1986.

Sources:

Waterfall Astrological Directory

An annual reference work for individuals involved in astrology formerly published by Tony Waterfall of Vancouver, British Columbia.

Proprietor and later director of Watkins Book Shop, a major London bookstore dealing in the literature (both new and used) of the occult, alternative religious traditions, and esoteric philosophy since 1894, when Watkins’ father John M. Watkins founded the company at the instigation of Theosophist Helena Petrovna Blavatsky. The bookshop has long been a meeting place for leading personalities in such subjects as metaphysics, mystical and hermetic studies, oriental and comparative religion, parapsychology, astrology, and the occult. John Watkins was a close friend of Blavatsky, who was co-founder of the Theosophical Society. Carl G. Jung, Aldous Huxley, William Butler Yeats, and magician Aleister Crowley were frequent visitors to the shop. Crowley was reputed to have caused thousands of books in the store to vanish and reappear by his occult powers, but, like other stories about Crowley and invisibility, this apocryphal story retains its element of tongue-in-cheek humor.

Watkins, who carried on his father’s tradition in the bookshop, was born June 7, 1896. He attended a private school in Heidelberg, Germany. Known to close friends as “Wattie” or “Nigel,” he was employed by British Intelligence in both World Wars. In World War I, his duties included interrogation of German officers who were prisoners of war. In World War II, he was concerned with the distribution of top-secret documents to appropriate government departments.

One of his closest friends was Christmas Humphreys, who was president of the Buddhist Society for many years and author of numerous books on Buddhism and Eastern philosophy. Humphreys acknowledged Watkins’ valuable assistance in the preface to his book Concentration and Meditation (1935).

Watkins took over running the bookshop when his father became blind. During his tenure running the bookshop international visitors most remembered him as a spiritual guide rather than a bookseller. Though specializing in selling occult books, he disliked the word “occultism” because of its perjorative connotations. His own special interests lay elsewhere, in depth psychology and the spiritual wisdom commonly called the “perennial philosophy,” a term popularized by Aldous Huxley in his book of that name.

Kathleen Raine stated in an obituary in Temenos (no.2, 1982) “Geoffrey Watkins was far more than a bookseller; indeed he was perhaps the only bookseller who made a practice of advising customers (many of whom were, or became, his friends) against purchasing books which he thought unsuitable for their particular interests, or too valuable to be entrusted to ignorant hands. . . . As to his courtesy, he welcomed his customers as his guests, assuming that we were seekers for wisdom, and meeting each of us at the level of our learning (or our ignorance) as he was well able to do. He seemed always to have time to listen. When we left, he saw us to the door of his shop like a courteous host.”

Reportedly, Watkins had an encyclopedic knowledge of books and was well-informed on all aspects of the groups, societies, and individuals in the fields of mysticism and occultism. He gave valuable information to many individuals who later became famous. Kathleen Raine, who has since published many works of poetry, literary criticism, and philosophy, acknowledged the help Watkins gave her in her special studies on Thomas Taylor the Platonist. Alan Watts also paid tribute in his autobiography In My Own Way (1972): “Nigel [Geoffrey Watkins] runs the most magical bookshop in the world, and is the most unobtrusively enlightened person.
I have ever known. . . . Nigel not only became my bibliographer on Buddhism, comparative religion, and mysticism, but also my most trusted adviser on the various gurus, pandits, and psychics. They were then flourishing in London. . . . In the Watkins bookshop one would expect at any moment, to come across a Mahatma or a high Lama visiting England on a secret mission to feel out academically accredited professors. Instead of giving lectures and holding seminars, he simply tells you what to read. . . . He never tries to convert anyone to a system. He is what the Japanese would call a bun-su; a man without affections, who has also compassion and clarity of mind."

With the death of Watkins, many regular customers at the bookshop felt they had lost a true friend and wise guide. Meanwhile, the bookshop started by his father continues to flourish.

Watkins Book Shop

Long established British bookshop specializing in occultism, mysticism, comparative religion, parapsychology, esoteric psychology, and related topics, founded by John M. Watkins in 1894. Watkins was a friend of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky and other leading occult figures of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The shop in Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road, London, was a meeting place for such famous and varied individuals as A. E. Waite, William Butler Yeats and Aleister Crowley. Watkins also published texts in the fields of occultism and mysticism. After his death, the business was carried on by his son Geoffrey Watkins (1896–1981).

All through the prewar occult boom of the 1920s and 1930s and the more recent occult explosion of the 1960s, the Watkins Book Shop has been a central focus of occultism, with a strong emphasis on mysticism and Eastern religion. After the death of Watkins, the company went through various changes of title, including Stuart & Watkins (associated with Stuart & Robinson), but retained its essential character, as familiar to British students of occultism and mysticism as the Weiser Bookshop in New York.

In April 1984, the company became firmly linked with the Weiser Bookshop through the formation of Watkins Books Ltd., with directors Donald Weiser and Henry Suzuki of Samuel Weiser, Inc., and Valerie Chris of Robert Chris Bookseller Ltd., with directors Donald Weiser and Henry Suzuki of Samuel Weiser (also in Cecil Court). Formerly a general literary book shop, Robert Chris is now a leading supplier of books on health and alternative medicine. Both Weiser and Watkins remain important book shops but with the growth of the field, the proliferation of alternative bookshops, and the passing of shops like Watkins into the hands of other owners, they have lost their unique place in the occult/alternative religious community.

The Watseka Wonder

A story told in a pamphlet by physician E. W. Stevens, The Watseka Wonder, which details a most intriguing case of continued spirit control. In 1865, at the age of nineteen, a girl named Mary Roff who was mentally ill died in Watseka, Illinois. Thirteen years later, another Watseka girl, Lurancy Vennum, almost a stranger to the Roff family, became similarly afflicted. Stevens diagnosed her case as an obsession. In the hypnotic state, Vennum confirmed the diagnosis.

Stevens suggested that she try to induce a good spirit to control her. She answered that several spirits were about who would be willing, “There is one who was called Mary Roff.” The father of Mary Roff was present, and he approved the idea. “Mary Roff” was asked to control Vennum. Supposedly she did so.

Reportedly, on February 1, 1878, she possessed Lurancy’s body and remained in possession for 16 weeks in an almost unbroken continuity. As soon as she appeared, she took over Vennum’s body and behaved like Mary Roff. She did not know Vennum’s parents, went “home,” and recognized every old object in the Roff house. She continued where she had left off over 13 years before. She exhibited paranormal faculties during this time, gave proofs of clairvoyance, made predictions, had out-of-body experiences in trance, and described her astral journeys on her return to consciousness.

On May 21, 1878, she supposedly left in tears from her Roff parents and all of her friends, fell into trance, and awoke as Lurancy Vennum again. The new Vennum was mentally and physically reestablished. It is believed Vennum had been watched over for a time by “Mary Roff,” who came back occasionally in trance. Three and a half years later, Vennum married and when her first baby came “Mary Roff” put her into trance to save her the pains of childbirth. “Mary Roff” never appeared to anyone at Watseka, except through Vennum’s body. She never materialized independently.

The psychic researcher Richard Hodgson investigated the case on behalf of the American Society for Psychical Research and concluded:

“I have no doubt that the incidents occurred substantially as described in the narrative by Dr. Stevens, that there was only other interpretation of the case—besides the spiritistic—that seems at all plausible, is that which has been put forward as the alternative to the spiritistic theory to account for the trance communications of Mrs. Piper, and similar cases, with a secondary personality with supernormal powers. It would be difficult to disprove this hypothesis in the case of the Watseka Wonder, owing to the comparative meagerness of the record and the probable abundance of suggestion in the environment, and any conclusion that we may reach would probably be determined largely by our convictions concerning other cases. My personal opinion is that the ‘Watseka Wonder’ case belongs in the main manifestations to the spiritistic category.

The evidence obtained by Hodgson was published in the Religious-Philosophical Journal (Chicago, December 20, 1890), and his account was verified by J. Bundy, the Religious-Philosophical Journal’s editor. A detailed report also appeared in The Spiritualist (September & October 1878).

Sources:

Watson, Lyall (1939– )

Zoologist and archaeologist whose book Supernature attempted to bridge the gap between science and the occult. Watson was born April 12, 1939, in Johannesburg, South Africa. He was educated at the University of Witwatersrand (B.S., 1958), the University of Natal (M.S., 1959), and the University of London, England (Ph.D., 1963). Through the 1960s he was director of the Zoological Gardens of Johannesburg, South Africa (1964–65), produced documentary films for the British Broadcasting Corporation, London (1966–67), and was an expedition leader and researcher in Antarctica, the Amazon River area, Seychelles, and Indonesia (1968–72). In 1967 he founded the life science consultancy Biologic of London, and in the 1970s he wrote a number of books. Three further books followed themes first developed in Stevens, Supernature (1974), Gifts of Unknown Things (1976), and Lifetide: The Biology of The Unconscious (1979).

Lifetide had an important effect within the emerging New Age movement. In two pages it told the story of four scientists studying monkeys in islands off the coast of Japan. The scientists left food for the monkeys. In 1953 they observed an older monkey wash the sand and grit from a potato. They then seemed to teach the other monkeys the same procedure. Gradually the practice spread to the other monkeys in the group. Watson stated:
“In the autumn of that year [1958] an unspecified number of monkeys on [the island of] Kosima were washing sweet potatoes in the sea. . . . Let us say, for argument’s sake, that the number of monkeys was ninety-nine and that at eleven o’clock on Tuesday morning one further convert was added to the fold in the usual way. But the addition of the hundredth monkey apparently carried the number across some sort of threshold, pushing it through a kind of critical mass, because by that evening almost everyone was doing it. Not only that, but the habit seems to have jumped natural barriers and to have appeared spontaneously, like glycerine crystals in sealed laboratory jars, in colonies on other islands and on the mainland in a troupe of Takasakiyama.”

What became known as the “hundreth monkey” myth would be seized upon by New Age spokespersons who were seeking to explain to people how relatively small groups would be capable of bringing New Age consciousness to a public generally apathetic to their concerns. It was believed if only a critical number of people accepted the consciousness, it would, as if by magic, explode, spreading suddenly to everyone.

Given the jumps in such an argument, Watson was soon attacked on the factual basis of the story. Psychologist Maureen O’Hara and psychic-critic Ron Amundson both challenged the story and forced Watson to admit that it was in essence fiction. By that time, however, it had become a widely discussed issue in the New Age movement and author Ken Keyes had printed and distributed over 300,000 copies of a book, The Hundreth Monkey (1982).

Sources:

Watson, Thomas (1898–1985)

Thomas Watson, a pioneer spiritual church leader and medium, was raised in New Orleans and attended Xavier University, a school founded to serve the African American community, and Texas Christian University. He became a schoolteacher after graduation. He was in New Orleans at the time Leafy Anderson brought the spiritual movement to the city. He joined Anderson’s Eternal Life Christian Spiritual Association and emerged as a leader. He left the association in 1929, two years after Anderson’s death, and founded an independent congregation, St. Joseph Helping Hand Church in Algiers, a New Orleans suburb.

Over the next five years similar congregations were founded and affiliated with Watson’s work. These were formally organized into the St. Joseph Helping Hand Missionary Association in 1934. Following Anderson’s emphasis, the new association retained a strong attachment to traditional Christian affirmations, unlike other Spiritual churches, which had discarded most Christian distinctions. The next year the association reorganized into the Divine Spiritual Churches of the Southwest. This church adopted a strong hierarchical structure and named Watson as its senior bishop. Bessie S. Johnson was named as his junior bishop. During the late 1930s Watson reconsidered his opinions on women ministers, and in 1940 he demoted Smith to Reverend Mother Superior, a non-ministerial position common in many black churches. The change led to a schism, and those members who supported the women pastors and mediums left.

In 1942 Watson led his church into a merger with the Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ to form the United Spiritual Churches of Christ. Shortly after the merger, the leader of the Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ, William Taylor, died, and Watson was named his successor. However, he immediately ran into conflict with Clarence Cobbs, a prominent minister, who ultimately ran into conflict with Watson and was forced to leave the church. The conflict led to a schism in 1945. Watson departed with his following and organized the United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ. He led the churches until his death on November 8, 1985, when he was succeeded by his son, Bishop Aubrey Watson.

Sources:

Watts, Alan (Wilson) (1915–1973)

British-born American philosopher, teacher of Zen Buddhism, and pioneer popularizer of Eastern philosophy in the United States. Watts was born January 6, 1915, in Chislehurst, Kent, England. He came to the United States in 1938, and he was naturalized in 1943. The same year he moved to the United States he married the daughter of Ruth Fuller Everett (who was involved with the First Zen Institute of America). Even as a youth he had been interested in Eastern religions in general and Zen Buddhism in particular. However, Watts studied for the priesthood and after completing his course at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, he was ordained in the Episcopal Church in 1944. He remained in Evanston, Illinois, and pursued a master of sacred theology degree (1948) at Seabury while serving as a chaplain at Northwestern University (adjacent to the Seabury campus) for six years (1944–50).

In 1950 Watts divorced, resigned from the priesthood, and entered a year of seclusion. In 1951 he moved to California as an instructor at the American Academy of Asian Studies (1951–57). He gained some degree of fame in 1957 with the positive response to his book, The Way of Zen (1957), which became a book introducing Zen to a public eager for Eastern wisdom. Over the next fifteen years he wrote numerous books presenting his personal appropriation of Buddhism. As a lecturer, from 1956 onward he traveled to universities across the continent. He directed the Eastern Wisdom and Modern Life series on station KQED, San Francisco (1959–60). In 1962 some of those who had gathered around him as students founded the Society for Comparative Philosophy as a vehicle for his teaching. He died November 16, 1973.

Sources:
Wayland Smith

A character in German mythological romance, father of Weltich, whom he trained in the art of warfare and sent to the Court of Dietrich in Bern. Wayland Smith gave the sword Mimring to Weltich and told him of a mermaid to whom he was to apply in difficulty.

Wayland Smith is also referred to in the Sigfried story as in company with another metalsmith named Mimi when Sigfried joins the smithy. His workmanship is praised in the Beowulf saga and he is mentioned there and elsewhere as a maker of impregnable armor. He is the supernatural smith of the Teutonic peoples and comparable to the gods Vulcan and Hephaistos in Roman and Greek mythology.

Weatherhead, Leslie (Dixon) (1893–1976)

British Methodist minister interested in aspects of parapsychology. Weatherhead was born on October 14, 1893, in London. He studied at the University of Manchester (M.A., 1926) and Richmond College, and he later received his doctorate at the University of London (1950). He served as a chaplain to British troops during World War I, ministered at the English Church in Madras, India, after the war (1918–22), and served several appointments prior to becoming the pastor of City Temple, the large Methodist church in London, in 1936.

Weatherhead wrote a number of notable books over the years, including a frequently reprinted early text on God and the problem of evil. As an adult, he became interested in psychic phenomena and wrote a series of books that ran from a pioneering text in pastoral psychology to more controversial texts within the Christian community on such topics as reincarnation. He died January 5, 1976.

Sources:

Scottish author who conducted historical surveys of the occult. Webb was born in 1946 in Edinburgh, Scotland. He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge University. He spent some years as a ghostwriter, television producer and trainer, and schoolmaster, but in 1969 became a full-time writer. He was advisory editor of The Occult, a series of thirty-three reprints chosen to illustrate the origins and development of modern occultism, as well as Perspectives in Psychical Research, a series of 34 books (both for Arno Press, New York, 1976) and contributed to Man, Myth and Magic (Marshall Cavendish, 1970), and Encyclopedia of the Unexplained (McGraw-Hill, 1974). Webb’s major contribution, however, came from the special study he conducted of the historical and cultural background of Western occultism, with special reference to its relationship with extremist political movements. This research resulted in three major books: The Occult Underground (1974; British title, The Flight from Reason, 1971), The Occult Establishment (1976) and The Harmonious Circle (1980). Along the way he also edited several volumes, including The Quest Anthology (1976), The Subliminal Consciousness (selections from writings by Frederic W. H. Myers in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, London, 1976), and The Mediums and the Conjurers (anthology of writings by J. N. Maskelyne, G. Smith-Buck, and George Sexton, 1976).

The scholarly surveys by Webb of the ideas and personalities preceding the occult revival of the 1960s and 1970s constitute an overview of the problem of the twentieth century as a battle-ground between reason and unreason. He started his writings with a somewhat skeptical viewpoint, but in the course of time experienced unusual visions and insights, sometimes associated with hallucinations and nervous breakdowns. He died May 9, 1980, in Scotland.

Sources:

Webber, Jack (1907–1940)

Jack Webber was a prominent physical medium who in his few years greatly impressed his fellow Spiritualists with his abilities. Webber lacked formal education and had been a miner in Wales who was brought to Spiritualism by his wife. He attended a home circle and discovered his own mediumistic abilities. He acquired several spirit controls, the most famous being an Irish spirit named Paddy. He began with table tipping and soon afterwards experienced the levitation of objects, including the famous trumpets which spirits reportedly used as a megaphone-like device. He also became a healer. As he developed, those attending his seances reported hearing spirit voices, both coming through the trumpets and independent of them. They also saw objects move and levitate.

Through the 1930s Webber traveled at an increasing pace and during the last two years of the decade was widely heralded in the Spiritualist press for the phenomena he produced. While not formally investigated, he was the object of attention of several skeptical journalists who reported favorably on what they had witnessed. He worked in a darkened room, but without a cabinet. He was frequently tied to his chair with wire. Among his more spectacular feats was the production of ectoplasm in the form of light rods that were used to levitate objects and the movement of objects from distant places ostensibly through solid walls. At one point a recording was made of Paddy and of a second spirit guide singing a duet.

While Webber was touted in the Spiritualist press and many leading Spiritualists from Maurice Barbanell to Harry Edwards voiced their support of his work, skeptics accused him of fraud, and today most, even in the larger psychic community, would deny that the abilities Webber reportedly demonstrated existed. Though never exposed as a fraud, his career has to be seen in the light of the many mediums caught in fraud doing exactly the same acts attributed to Webber. Webber died in 1940 at the age of 33. Within weeks, various mediums, including Bertha Harris and Harold Evans, reported that they had heard from him from the spirit world. Harry Edwards penned his biography.

Sources:

Weeping Statues

Through the 1980s and 1990s, a profusion of reports of statues and icons weeping tears emanated from Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox settings. These reports came from around the world, including Asia and Africa. One of the more... spectacular reports came from an icon at St. George’s Antiochian Orthodox Church in Cicero, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago. In the spring of 1994, tears began to flow from an icon picturing the Virgin Mary and the baby Jesus. The tears originated at the eyes of the Virgin. As word spread concerning the occurrence, thousands of people came to see the phenomenon. Ultimately, Metropolitan Philip, the head of the Antiochian Church, visited and pronounced the phenomenon miraculous.

While the number of reports of weeping statues and icons have multiplied in the last decades of the twentieth century, in part a function of media interest, similar events have been recorded since the sixteenth century. An account has survived from 1527 of a statue that wept just prior to the sacking of Rome. In 1719, a statue of St. Lucy wept in the town of Syracuse on the island of Sicily. Syracuse appears to be the originating point of modern accounts of weeping statues as it was the site in 1953 of a widely reported incident. The eyes of a statue of the Virgin Mary given to a newly wedded couple began to produce a substance which upon analysis proved to be the same as human tears. The story of the statue was widely disseminated through Roman Catholic circles. The incident has been analyzed from both a parapsychological perspective (as a poltergeist phenomenon) and a skeptical (as a hoax) viewpoint.

Possibly the most spectacular modern incident of a weeping statue occurrence is Akita, Japan, where from 1975 to 1981, a statue of the Virgin Mary was seen to weep on more than 100 separate occasions. Sister Agnes, a nun, also experienced the stigmata, three apparitions of the Virgin Mary, and locations from an angelic being. The statue not only wept, but had previously sweated what upon analysis proved to be human sweat, and bled human blood. The incident in Akita demonstrated the close connection between weeping statues and icons and bleeding statues and icons. Some of the reports of weeping icons concern the weeping of blood, the production of a red substance coming from the eyes.

In 1996, an icon on the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem, Israel, began to weep tears of blood, a phenomenon seen by many of both Christian and Muslim persuasion. In this case, the eyes on the icon were also reported to have winked at the people viewing it. One skeptical journalist, Stephanie Nolen, a Canadian and lapsed Catholic, reported seeing both the red tears and the wink.

Investigators of such incidents have generally sought initially to rule out the obvious, hoaxes and natural phenomena (for example, a leak above the statue or icon). Enough hoaxes have been uncovered, even among people with reputations for piety and honesty, that an extended search for mundane explanations and the hesitancy of church officials to promote phenomena such as weeping statues except in the rarest of cases is justified. Once obvious natural causes are ruled out, a search is launched for various mundane explanations such as might be provided by the particular substance from which the weeping object was made. Beyond the natural explanation, parapsychologists have offered psychic explanations and skeptics have reached for any possible explanation, in the end suggesting hoaxing as the most widespread cause. Unfortunately, in most cases, especially from Third World countries, no adequate investigation has been done.

Sources:

Wege—Zur Synthese von Natur und Mensch
(Magazine)

A bimonthly German-language. New Age publication. Each issue included articles, a program of mystical/spiritual activities in the Frankfurt area, and listings of New Age organizations. Last known address: Aviva, Kobachstr. 12, D-6000 Frankfurt 50 FN, Germany.

Anthropologist and chiropractor with interests in parapsychology. Weiant was born on November 30, 1897, at West Havenstraw, New York. He studied at the School of General Studies, Columbia University (B.S., 1937), pursued graduate work in 1957 at the Instituto de Filosofía y Letras, Mexico City, and finished a doctorate at Columbia University (1943). He lectured in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Hunter College, New York (1943–51). He became a chiropractor and was associated with the Chiropractic Institute of New York. He retired as its dean in 1963.

Weiant was interested in clairvoyance, mediumship, reincarnation, and survival theories. He translated the book Lo Sagrado entre los Primitivos y la Parapsicología (The Sacred Among Primitive Peoples, and Parapsychology), by Juan Rogers, and contributed to Tomorrow magazine. He died in October of 1986.

Sources:

Weinberger, Julius (1893–1978)

Radio engineer who wrote on parapsychology. Weinberger was born on July 22, 1893, in New York City and studied at the City College of New York (B.S., 1913). He worked 42 years for the Radio Corporation of America (RCA) in various positions (1916–1958). He wrote numerous articles in his chosen field, but also delved into parapsychology and reflected upon a variety of issues. He died in June of 1978.

Sources:

———. “A Physicist Looks at Spiritual Healing.” Laymen’s Movement Review 1, no. 5 (1958); 2, no. 1 (1959).

Weingarten, Henry

American astrologer, executive secretary of the National Astrological Society (1974–) and editor of NASO Journal. He has lectured extensively on astrology and taught at the NASO School of Astrology in New York.

Sources:

Weiser Bookshop

Occult bookstore in the United States through most of the twentieth century, the New York equivalent of London’s Watkins Book Shop or Atlantis Bookshop, patronized by occultists and students of the occult. Weiser’s was located at 117 4th Ave., then in a large rambling store at 845 Broadway, and in the 1960s it moved to 740 Broadway. Founded by Samuel Weiser, it was taken over by his son Donald in the 1960s. The store has in each of its locations been known for its large antiquarian occult stock as well as a comprehensive selection of new volumes. Its regular catalogs, issued through the 1950s, of new and old occult books have since become useful bibliographical records.

In the 1980s the store moved again, this time to 132 E. 24th St. (between Park Avenue and Lexington), New York, NY 10010. It slowly adapted to New Age emphases and responded to the competition supplied by the emergence of many esoteric bookstores both in New York and around the country. It was one of the more significant retail specialty shops in North America.

In April 1984, Donald Weiser and Henry Suzuki of Samuel Weiser, Inc., became directors (with Valerie Chris, England) of the famous Watkins Book Shop in Cecil Court, Charing Cross Road, London, Samuel Weisers, Inc. is an affiliated publishing company specializing in occult titles. The bookshop is now closed.

Weisman, Kenneth E(arl) (1930—)

Teacher who has been active in the field of parapsychology. Weisman was born on November 16, 1930, in Chicago, Illinois. He served in the United States Army from 1951 to 1954, and he then studied at Bradley University, Peoria, Illinois (B.S. biology, 1958). He began a teaching career in the Peoria, Illinois, public school system.

Weisman conducted experiments among school children to correlate clairvoyant ability with class grades, sex, achievement test ratings and teacher attitude toward pupils.

Sources:

Weiss, Claude J. (1941—)

Claude J. Weiss, a prominent Swiss astrologer, was born on May 6, 1941, in Basel, Switzerland. He attended the Swiss Institute of Technology, where he earned an engineering degree with a specialization in agronomy. He later spent two years in India, and during his stay, in 1967, was introduced to astrology. He studied astrology over the next decade and became a full-time professional in 1977. The following year he created Astrodata, a calculation and interpretation service for astrological delineations that is now the largest in Continental Europe. He continues to serve as its president.

Weiss has emerged as one of the leading European voices calling for the psychological interpretation of astrology, and he has been a particular devotee of transactional analysis and Jungian psychology. He has emphasized the role of free will and individual choice in light of the insights of astrology. He authored a widely used two-volume work on horoscope interpretation and a specialized study of the effects of the planet Pluto.

Through the 1980s and 1990s, Weiss became a dominant voice in the German-speaking astrological community. He is a popular lecturer, has written a number of books, and edits a periodical, Astrologie heute. He has helped organize four world astrological congresses and has served as president of the Swiss Astrological Association. He has also become known as a master of mundane astrology, the astrology that deals with the larger political fates of people and nations. His office is in Wettswil, near Züriich.

Sources:

WEL

Initiationism for Welt-Eis-Lehre (Cosmic Ice Theory), a cult built around the eccentric theories of Austrian engineer Hans Hörbiger, author of Glazial-Kosmogenie (1912). These theories involved a complex system of “cosmic ice” that generated stellar systems in which smaller planets become moons and are captured by larger planets. According to Hörbiger, Earth’s present moon is coated with ice 140 miles thick and is now moving towards Earth with a spiral motion.

After Hörbiger’s death, his theories were further developed by the British mythologist Hans Schindler Bellamy in his book Moons, Myths, and Men (1956). The WEL cult combined such theories with Nazi political philosophy and anti-Semitism. The character of the WEL is indicated by statements such as: “Our Nordic ancestors grew strong in ice and snow; belief in the World Ice is consequently the natural heritage of Nordic Man. . . . Just as it needed a child of Austrian Culture—Hitler!—to put the Jewish politicians in their place, so it needed an Austrian to cleanse the world of Jewish science.”

Sources:

Wellman, Adele

Former executive secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was born in Brooklyn, New York.

Wendigo (or Windigo)

A creature of the forests featured in the mythology of many North American and Canadian native peoples. Algonquin tribes believe that a hunter lost in the bush without food may become a Wendigo, seeking other human beings in order to eat their flesh. Members of the Ojibwa tribe use the term “Windigo” to denote a ferocious ogre who will take away children if they do not behave properly.

A powerful horror story called The Wendigo was written by novelist Algernon Blackwood (1889-1951). It was first published in The Lost Valley and Other Stories, London, 1910. It was probably drawn from legends encountered by the author during his own travels in the Canadian backwoods.

In 1982 John Colombo assembled a comprehensive compilation of accounts (both traditional and modern) on the Wendigo. He observed: “Wendigo has been described as the phantom of hunger which stalks the forests of the north in search of lone Indians, halfbreeds, or white men to consume. It may take the form of a cannibalistic Indian who breathes flames. Or it may assume the guise of a supernatural spirit with a heart of ice that flies through the night skies in search of a victim to satisfy its craving for human flesh. Like the vampire, it feasts on flesh and blood. Like the werewolf, it shape-changes at will.”

Colombo lists some 37 variant forms of the word “Wendigo” or “Wendigo” and states that the first appearance of the word in print appears to be in an account by the French traveler Jacques-Nicolas Bénigne Bouchard de la Potherie in 1722, when it appeared as “Onauquiento.” The word derives from the Algonquian Indian root witiku meaning “evil spirit” or “cannibal.” Legends of the Wendigo are current among the Algoquian tribes in the Northwest Territories of Canada and the northern regions of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta.

The Wendigo is said to inhabit a large territory bounded by the Atlantic Ocean in the east, the Arctic Ocean in the north, and the Rocky Mountains in the west. According to Algonquian belief, a human being may "turn Wendigo" through an act of cannibalism, being in the presence of the demon, or the sorcery of a shaman. Such transformation has much in common with legends of the vampire and werewolf.

Sources:

Wenzl, Aloys (1887– ?)
Philosopher active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on January 25, 1887, in Munich, Germany, and studied at the University of Munich (Ph.D., 1912). He was a lecturer in philosophy and psychology at the University of Munich (1926–38), but was discharged on ideological grounds during the Nazi regime. He returned to his position as professor of philosophy at the University of Munich in 1946. He retired with emeritus status in the early 1960s.

Wenzl took an interest in clairvoyance and psychokinesis, and he attended the International Conference on Philosophy and Parapsychology at St. Paul de Vere, France, held in 1954. He was the author of a number of books, several of which considered parapsychological questions.

Sources:

Werewolf
A human temporarily or permanently transformed into a wolf, from the Anglo-Saxon wer (man) and wulf (wolf). It is a term used in the phenomenon of lycanthropy, which in ancient and medieval times was of very frequent occurrence. It was in Europe, where the wolf was the largest carnivorous animals, that the superstition became prevalent. Similar tales in other countries usually introduced bears, tigers, leopards, or other animals.

Origins
The belief in werewolves may be a relic of early cannibalism. Communities of semicivilized people would begin to shun those who devoured human flesh, ostracizing them and classifying them as wild beasts. The idea that they had something in common with animals would grow, and the concept that they were able to transform themselves into veritable animals would likely arise.

More likely, however, the belief derives from early ritual practices in the Balkan area. For example, the Dacians, an ancient people who had the wolf as their totem animal, annually turned their young men into wolves during a ritual in which they wore wolf skins andimitated the animal. The wolf was much respected in the area as a hunter. The ritual transformation into a wolf survives today in the Greek word lykohika (and its Slavic equivalents), derived from the old Slavic word for wolf, though the term is now applied to a form of vampire. It has been suggested that as the people settled into an agricultural life, the wolf lost its positive associations and became the outlaw animal many still consider it today. Thus the vcholokha became the werewolf. Werewolf itself is an Old English term meaning shape-shifter, probably derived from older Germanic roots.

The oldest account of a man changing into a wolf came from Greek writings. Lycaon (from whom the term lycanthropy is derived) was changed into a wolf by Zeus, whom the unfortunate Lycaon had displeased.

The Nature of the Werewolf
There were two kinds of werewolves: voluntary and involuntary. The voluntary were, as has been said, persons who, because of their taste for human flesh, had withdrawn from association with other people. They possessed a reputation for the magic power to transform themselves into the animal shape at will. This they effected by merely dosage—by taking off a girdle made of human skin, or putting on a belt of wolf skin, obviously a substitute for an entire wolf skin. There were also cases in which they donned the entire skin. In other instances, the body was rubbed with a magic ointment, or water was drunk from a wolf's footprint. The brains of the animal were also eaten. Olaus Magnus (1490–1558) stated that "the werewolves of Livonia drained a cup of beer on initiation, and repeated certain magic words."

In order to throw off the wolf shape, the animal girdle was removed, or else the magician merely muttered a certain formula. In some instances, the transformation was supposed to be the work of Satan.

The superstition regarding werewolves seems to have been exceedingly prevalent in France during the sixteenth century, as is evidenced by numerous trials, in some of which murder and cannibalism took place. Self-hallucination may have accounted for some of these cases, the supposed werewolves admitted that they had transformed themselves and had slain numerous persons, but at the beginning of the seventeenth century such confessions were not believed. Self-hallucination does not cover a number of cases in which werewolves were seen by witnesses, however. In Teutonic and Slavonic countries, men of learning complained that werewolves did more damage than real criminals, and a regular “college” or institution for the practice of the art of animal transformation was attributed to them.

Involuntary werewolves were often said to be persons transformed by the commission of sin, and were dammed to pass a certain number of years in that form. Certain saints were said to metamorphose sinners into wolves. In Armenia it was thought that sinful women were condemned to pass seven years in the form of a wolf. To such a woman a demon appeared, bringing a wolf skin. He commanded her to don it, and from that moment she became a wolf, with all the nature of a wild beast, devouring her own children and those of strangers wandering at night. She healed a man when he was gashed his arms and legs severely. Learning of their mistake and from the testimony of trustworthy witnesses, that such things are not at all doubtful or incredible, since they tell of such transformations taking place twelve days after Christmas in Livonia and the adjacent countries; as they have been proved to be true by the confessions of those who have been imprisoned and tortured for such crimes.

Speaking of lycanthropy, Gaspar Peucer (1525–1602) stated the following:

“As for me I had formerly regarded as ridiculous and fabulous the stories I had often heard concerning the transformation of men into wolves; but I have learnt from reliable sources, and from the testimonies of trustworthy witnesses, that such things are not at all doubtful or incredible, since they tell of such transformations taking place twelve days after Christmas in Livonia and the adjacent countries; as they have been proved to be true by the confessions of those who have been imprisoned and tortured for such crimes.

“Here is the manner in which it is done. Immediately after Christmas day is past, a lame boy goes round the country calling these slaves of the devil, of which there are a great number, and enjoining them to follow him. If they procrastinate or go too slowly, there immediately appears a tall man with a whip whose thongs are made of iron chains, with which he urges them onwards, and sometimes lashes the poor wretches so cruelly, that the marks of the whip remain on their bodies till long afterwards, and cause them the greatest pain. As soon as they have set out on their road, they are all changed into wolves.

“They travel in thousands, having for their conductor the bearer of the whip, after whom they march. When they reach the fields, they rush upon the cattle they find there, tearing and carrying away all they can, and doing much other damage; but they are not permitted to touch or wound persons. When they approach any rivers, their guide separates the waters with his whip, so that they seem to open up and leave a dry space by which to cross. At the end of twelve days the whole hand scattered, and everyone returns to his home, having regained his own proper form. This transformation, they say, comes about in this wise. The victims fall suddenly on the ground as though they were taken with sudden illness, and remain motionless and extended like corpses, deprived of all feeling, for they neither stir, nor move from one place to another, nor are in any wise transformed into wolves, thus resembling carrion, for although they are rolled or shaken, they give no sign of life.”

Jean Bodin (1529–1596) related several cases of lycanthropy and of men changed into beasts, including the following:

“Pierre Mamot, in a little treatise he has written on sorcerers, says that he has observed this changing of men into wolves, he being in Savoy at the time. Henry of Cologne in his treatise de Lamius regards the transformation as beyond doubt. And Ulrich in a little book dedicated to the emperor Sigismund, writes of the dispute before the emperor, and says that it was agreed, both on the ground of reason, and of the experience of innumerable examples, that such transformation was a fact; and he adds that he himself had seen a lycanthrope at Constance, who was accused, convicted, condemned, and finally executed after his confession. And several books published in Germany say that one of the greatest kings of Christendom, who is not long dead, and who had the reputation of being one of the greatest sorcerers in the world, often changed into a wolf.

“I remember that the attorney-general of the King, Bourdin, has narrated to me another which was sent to him from the Low Countries, with the whole trial signed by the judge and the clerks of a wolf, which was struck by an arrow on the thigh, and afterwards found himself in bed, with the arrow (which he had torn out), on regaining his human shape, and the arrow was recognised by him who had fired it—the time and place testified by the confession of the person.
“Garnier, tried and condemned by the parliament of Dole, being in the shape of a werewolf, caught a girl of ten or twelve years in a vineyard of Chastenoy, a quarter of a league from Dole, and having slain her with his teeth and claw-like hands, he ate part of her flesh and carried the rest to his wife. A month later, in the same form, he took another girl, and would have eaten her also, had he not, as he himself confessed, been prevented by three persons who happened to be passing by; and a fortnight after he strangled a boy of ten in the vineyard of Gredisans, and ate his flesh; and in the form of a man and not of a wolf, he killed another boy of twelve or thirteen years in a wood of the village of Porouse with the intention of eating him, but was again prevented. He was condemned to be burnt, and the sentence was executed.

“At the parliament of Bezanoçon, the accused were Pierre Burgot and Michel Verdun, who confessed to having renounced God, and sworn to serve the devil. And Michel Verdun led Burgot to the Bard du Chastel Charlon where everyone carried a candle of green wax which shone with a blue flame. There they danced and offered sacrifices to the devil. Then after being anointed they were turned into wolves, running with incredible swiftness, then they were changed again into men, and suddenly transformed back to wolves, when they enjoyed the company of female wolves as much as they had of that of their wives. They confessed also that Burgot had killed a boy of seven years with his wolf-claws and teeth, intending to eat him, but the peasants gave chase, and prevented him. Burgot and Verdun had eaten four girls between them; and they had caused people to die by the touch of a certain power.”

Some cases of lycanthropy may have been a cover for a perverse appetite for drinking blood or eating human flesh, but it is also possible that there were cases of psychic transformations, in which the astral double of a lycanthrope was projected in the form of a beast, similar to other stories of witches and wizards attacking their victims in an astral form.

Modern attempts to understand the werewolf have opted for a psychological approach, with the exception of Robert Eisler, who has explained it in terms of the cycles of human violence that have been a part of social existence since time began. Richard Noll has gathered a variety of reports of modern werewolves, whom psychologists see as people under the delusion that s/he has been transformed into an animal.

Another aspect of lycanthropy is the Romulus and Remus theme of abandoned children reared by wolves. One classic case of such “feral children,” as they are termed, is that of the two wolf girls of Midnapore, India, who were rescued by the Reverend J. A. L. Singh in 1942. This case is discussed in detail by Charles Maclean in his book The Wolf Children (1978). (See also Vampire)

Werewolf Fiction

In the middle of the nineteenth century, as other forms of modern horror fiction were emerging, three werewolf novels appeared: Hughes the Werewolf, by Sutherland Mnzies (a serial published in installment in the 1850s); The Wolf-Leader (1857); and Wagner the Werewolf, by George W. M. Reynold (1857). The latter is considered the fountainhead of modern werewolf fiction, and it was not until 1895 that another noteworthy werewolf novel was published.

Gustave Le Diable. The Werewolf of Paris was bought by Universal Studios, who wanted to produce a cinematic version. The screenplay changes the location of the movie, which appeared in 1935 as The Werewolf of London. The story was inspired by the true story of Francis Bertrand, a French noncommissioned officer who in 1848 was convicted of breaking into several Paris graveyards, and consuming the flesh of several recently buried bodies. His ghoulish activity was transformed into the story of Bertrand Caullet, the son born as a result of a brief affair between his mother and a priest. He discovered that he was a werewolf when shot with a silver bullet. (The now-standard association of werewolves and silver is derived from a Scottish belief in the efficacy of silver in killing witches.)

The Werewolf of London was followed by its more famous sequel, The Wolf Man, starring Lon Chaney, Jr. Chaney reappeared in several movies with other Universal monsters, but made his next notable appearance in the 1961 remake, The Curse of the Werewolf. The werewolf became a television star as a character in the early 1960s in the vampire television soap opera Dark Shadows.

Since the 1970s the werewolf has become an integral part of a horror genre that has grown spectacularly. While not approaching the popularity of the vampire, new werewolf novels have appeared annually and some, such as Whitney Streiber’s Wolves have become popular movies. Gary Brandner’s The Howling led to no less than five sequels, most of which were made into movies. The shape-shifting theme was also prominent in movies like the Cat People, which features a woman able to transform into a panther.

Sources:

Weschcke, Carl Llewellyn (1930–)

Prominent American astrologer, occultist, publisher, and owner-president of Llewellyn Publications, St. Paul, Minnesota, originally founded as Llewellyn Publishing Company by Llewellyn George in 1905 in Portland, Oregon. Weschcke was born on September 10, 1930, in St. Paul, Minnesota. He was educated at the St. Paul Academy; the Babson College; Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts; and the University of Minnesota.

He purchased the Llewellyn Publishing Company of Los Angeles, California, in 1960 and moved the business to St. Paul, Minnesota. For a number of years the Llewellyn enterprise also included Gnostica, a large retail bookstore housed in a 12,000-square-foot former mortuary in St. Paul. In addition to publishing a number of popular occult books, Llewellyn also issued Gnostica magazine (now superseded by Llewellyn’s New Worlds of Mind and Spirit) and Astrology Now magazine (discontinued). Among the company’s prominent publications are the annual Moon Sign Book (established by Llewellyn George in 1905) and Daily Planetary Guide. It is now one of the largest wholesale dealers in occult books and products in the United States.
Weschcke was editor-in-chief of Gnostica magazine, and his own writings included articles on lunar astrology, gardening, tantra, and witchcraft. He is a practicing witch and has chaired the Council of American Witches. In addition to many appearances on radio and television interview programs, he was responsible for a half-hour commercial television program on Halloween and prepared a videotape on witchcraft for the University of Wisconsin.

Sources:

Westcar Papyrus

India, 2000-1500 B.C.E. devoted chiefly to tales of magic and enchantment. The next, which is complete, belongs to the reign of Nebka, a somewhat earlier king.

The papyrus tells how Kheops—the king whom notices of the Third Dynasty. The next, which is complete, belongs to the reign of Nebka, a somewhat earlier king.

In those days it came to the ears of a great nobleman that his faithless wife was in the habit of meeting her lover by the side of a lake. Being skilled in magic he modelled a crocodile in wax and ordered one of his servants to cast it into the water. It was immediately transformed into a real crocodile and devoured the lover. Seven days later the king was walking by the lake with his friend the nobleman, when at the command of the latter the crocodile came to the shore and laid its victim at their feet. The king shuddered at the sight of the monster but at the touch of its maker it became once more a mere figure of wax. Then the whole astonishing story was told to the king, who thereupon granted the crocodile permission to take away that which was its own. The creature plunged into the depths of the lake and disappeared with the adulterer, while the guilty wife was burnt to death and her ashes were scattered in the stream.

A tale of enchantment follows, the scene of which is laid during the reign of King Sneferu, the predecessor of Kheops. The king was one day taking his pleasure on a lake in a boat rowed by twenty beautiful maidens, when one of the girls dropped a malachite ornament into the water. The king promised to give her another in its stead, but this did not content her, for she wanted her own jewel and no other. A magician was summoned who repeated a spell by the might of which he piled one half of the lake on the top of the other, so that the water, which at first was twelve ells deep in the middle of the lake, now stood twenty-four ells high. The jewel, found lying in the mud in the dry portion of the lake, was restored to its owner; and the magician having once more mumbled his spell the water returned to its former place.

When Kheops had listened for some time with much interest to the accounts of the strange events that had transpired in the days of his predecessors, then stepped forward Prince Horduduf, who is really known to us from the song in the tomb temple of King Antef as renowned for his wisdom. He told the king that all marvels were not things of the past but that even then there was living a magician named Deda, who was one hundred and ten years old, and consumed every day five hundred loaves, a side of beef, and a hundred jars of beer.

“Kheops was so much interested that he sent the prince to escort the magician to his presence. Deda obeyed the royal summons and performed his chief feat before the king. This consisted in decapitating a goose, a duck, and an ox, and charming the heads back again on to the bodies so that the creatures lived and breathed as before. Kheops fell into talk with the magician, who told him that the wife of a priest in Sakhebu was awaiting the birth of three sons, children of the god Ra, who should one day sit on the throne of Egypt. Deda sought to allay the king’s natural distress at this information by prophesying that only after the reigns of his son and grandson should the power fall into the hands of the descendants of the sun-god. But Kheops was not to be consoled; he inquired into the details of the story and announced that he would himself travel to Sakhebu, no doubt with the ultimate intention of finding an opportunity to put out of the way the pretenders to his throne.

“The scene of the sequel is laid in Sakhebu. The birth and infancy of the three children are described in detail, and all sorts of marvelous incidents are represented as influencing their fate. The gods cared for the safety of the little ones. A maid to whom the secret was known being enraged by a severe punishment inflicted upon her, threatened to betray all to Kheops. Her own brother beat her, and when she went down to the water she was carried off by a crocodile. Here the papyrus ceases, but it is possible to a certain extent to restore the conclusion. The names of the three children of Ra show that they stand for the first three kings of the Fifth Dynasty, the family that followed the house of Kheops. The papyrus must therefore have told how the boy granted all the slaves laid for their lives and in due time ascended the throne for which they were destined.” (See also Egypt)

“...The Identity of ‘Jack the Ripper.’” Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 35 (1949).

Sources:
B.C.E devoted chiefly to tales of magic and enchantment. The next, which is complete, belongs to the reign of King Antef as renowned for his wisdom. He told the king that all marvels were not things of the past but that even then there was living a magician named Deda, who was one hundred and ten years old, and consumed every day five hundred loaves, a side of beef, and a hundred jars of beer.

“Kheops was so much interested that he sent the prince to escort the magician to his presence. Deda obeyed the royal summons and performed his chief feat before the king. This consisted in decapitating a goose, a duck, and an ox, and charming the heads back again on to the bodies so that the creatures lived and breathed as before. Kheops fell into talk with the magician, who told him that the wife of a priest in Sakhebu was awaiting the birth of three sons, children of the god Ra, who should one day sit on the throne of Egypt. Deda sought to allay the king’s natural distress at this information by prophesying that only after the reigns of his son and grandson should the power fall into the hands of the descendants of the sun-god. But Kheops was not to be consoled; he inquired into the details of the story and announced that he would himself travel to Sakhebu, no doubt with the ultimate intention of finding an opportunity to put out of the way the pretenders to his throne.

“The scene of the sequel is laid in Sakhebu. The birth and infancy of the three children are described in detail, and all sorts of marvelous incidents are represented as influencing their fate. The gods cared for the safety of the little ones. A maid to whom the secret was known being enraged by a severe punishment inflicted upon her, threatened to betray all to Kheops. Her own brother beat her, and when she went down to the water she was carried off by a crocodile. Here the papyrus ceases, but it is possible to a certain extent to restore the conclusion. The names of the three children of Ra show that they stand for the first three kings of the Fifth Dynasty, the family that followed the house of Kheops. The papyrus must therefore have told how the boy granted all the slaves laid for their lives and in due time ascended the throne for which they were destined.” (See also Egypt)
Westcott, William Wynn (1848–1925)

Prominent British occultist and one of the founders of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. He was born in December 1848 in Leamington, Warwickshire, England. He lost both parents before the age of ten and was adopted by Richard Westcott Martyn, an uncle who was a surgeon by profession. Westcott was educated at the Queen Elizabeth Grammar School at Kingston-upon-Thames, London, and studied medicine at University College, London.

He qualified as a physician in 1871 and became a partner in his uncle’s practice in Somerset. He also joined a Masonic lodge in Crewkerne. After 1879, he moved to Hendon, where he pursued studies in occultism for two years. About 1880, he became a leading member of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (Rosicrucian Society of England), an occult society open only to master masons. A year later he was appointed deputy coroner and later coroner for northeast London, and he wrote a number of articles for the Medical Directory. During this period, his occultism remained a closely guarded secret.

In 1887, he acquired an old manuscript written in code, said to have been bought from a bookstall in Farringdon Road, London. In the pages of the manuscript was a sheet of paper with the name and address of a Fraulein Sprengel, a Rosicrucian adept living in Germany. Westcott deciphered the manuscript, which contained fragments of mystical rituals.

These rituals were expanded by Westcott’s occultist friend S. L. MacGregor Mathers, also a member of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia. Westcott thereupon corresponded with Sprengel, who authorized him to found an English branch of the German occult society Die Goldene Dämmerung. Westcott, Mathers, and W. R. Woodman thereupon founded the Isis-Urania temple of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn in 1888. Westcott’s occult motto in the order was Sapere Aude (Dare to Be Wise).

This is the official story of the foundation of the famous Golden Dawn. However, there is strong reason to suppose that the manuscript may have been the invention of Westcott or his associates and that Sprengel never existed. Correspondence with her has been produced, but many students of occultism doubt the genuineness. For all that, the Golden Dawn attracted some of the most eminent talents of its day, including poet William Butler Yeats, until it eventually degenerated into undignified squabbles, expulsions, resignations, and complex fragmentation.

Westcott had retired from the Golden Dawn by around 1897, possibly because of pressure relating to his official status as a coroner. He continued to be a member of the Rosicrucian Society, and, after the death of Woodman in 1891, he became supreme magus. Through the 1890s he published a number of books and pamphlets. In his later years, he moved to Durban, South Africa, where he became vice president of two Theosophical Society lodges. He died June 30, 1925.

Westcott is not only known for his work with the Golden Dawn, he wrote books on the Kabbalah and translated work of Eliphas Levi.

Sources:

West Indies

The importation of Africans into the Caribbean area as slaves began in the sixteenth century but expanded greatly after 1640 when the islands became a major source of sugar and workers were needed for the plantations. Most of these people came from the various tribes along the coast of West Africa from present-day Senegal to Nigeria. The white planters looked upon Africans with disdain and developed the opinion that they had no religious life, that they were at best bearers of a set of heathenish superstitions. Such was not the case. While a few of the Africans were Muslims, the majority were followers of the West African religious system, which with relatively minor alterations from tribe to tribe pervaded the area from which the slaves were taken.

The West African system acknowledged a supreme divine power but found its more personalized expression in the various deities responsible for the harmonious operation of the natural world. In the West Indies the major deities included Shango, Ogum, and Eshu (in Trinidad) and Legba, Erzulie, and Damballah (in Haiti). The Haitian deities (loas) were of two varieties: those of African origin (Rada) and those of Haitian origin (Petro). Rites were constructed for both.

There was also a belief in fate, which to a large extent determined the course and eventual destiny of the individual. A person’s future could be seen through divinatory practices. Also, by propitiating the messengers of the gods, who carried words of the individual’s fate, that fate could be altered to one more favorable. The religion was led by priests and priestesses (variously termed in the different islands), who performed the rites for the higher deities; medicine men, who dealt with lower evil spirits (the cause of disease and harm to individuals); and sorcerers, who were supposed to attack tribal enemies but sometimes, for a price, attacked individuals with their magical powers. The sorcerer (obeaho) worked clandestinely at night. People wore amulets to protect themselves. The priest supplied the amulets and often worked to counter the effects of the sorcerer.

In Africa, this religion permeated tribal life. Religious practice included obeah (magick), “possession” of certain people by the deities (similar to mediumship), and communication with and guidance from ancestor spirits.

In the New World, such religion was at best distasteful to the European understanding; it was often despised by the ruling elite. However, some of the planters did not hesitate to make use of obeah to manage the workers. To prevent theft of crops, for instance, they sometimes adorned trees around the edge of a banana or orange grove with miniature collins, old bones, bottles of dirty water, and other obeah objects. Then the workers would not enter and steal. As late as 1908, a case of obeah was reported in a Jamaican journal.

*Doubleday, et al. (eds.): The cause celebre at Halfway Tree Court, Jamaica, recently, was the case of Rex V. Charles Donaldson for unlawfully practicing Obah. Robert Robinson, who stated that he was a laborer living at Trench Pen, in the parish of St. Andrew, stated that on Tuesday, the 8th ult., he was sitting down outside the May Pen cemetery on the Spanish Town Road. He was on his way from work, and had a white handkerchief tied around his head. He was feeling sick, and that led him to sit down. While there sitting the prisoner came to him. He did not know the man before, but he began by asking him what was the matter. Witness replied, ‘I am well sick.’ The prisoner said, ‘No, you are not sick; you have two ghosts on you—one creole and one coolie.’ Witness told the prisoner to go away and was left. He next saw prisoner on Wednesday 9th. He came to him at Bumper Hall, where he was working, and he said to him, ‘Man, how you find me here?’ ‘Oh,’ replied the prisoner, ‘if a man is in hell self I can find him; I come for you to give me the job?’ Witness then inquired, ‘What job?’ and accused told him he wanted to ‘take off the two ghosts.’ He would do it for £25, and he ‘killed’ for any sum from £25 to £50. He had worked for all classes—white, black, coolie, Chinese, etc. Witness said he did not give him any ‘good consent’ at the time, but reported the matter after the accused left to Clark and Wright, two witnesses in the case. Clark told him he must not scare the man but go home. On Thursday, the 10th, the defendant came to him at his yard at French Pen. The accused told him he would come back to him to take off the ghost. He also told him to get a bottle of rum and 5s. He (witness) consented to the arrangement. The defendant began by taking off his jacket. He then opened his ‘brief bag’ and took out a piece of chalk. The accused then made three marks on the table and took out a phial and a white stone. The phial contained some stuff which appeared like quicksilver. He arrayed his paraphernalia on the table. They consisted of a large whisky bottle with some yellow stuff, a candle, a pack of cards, a looking-glass, three cigarette pictures, a pocket knife, etc. The accused also took out a whistle which he sounded, and then placed the cards on the table. He then asked for the 5s, which was given to him. He placed the coins on the cards around a lighted candle. The pint of rum which he (witness) had brought was on the table and prisoner poured some of it into a pan. He went outside and sprinkled the rum at the four corners of the house. Accused came back in and said, ‘Papal papal your case is very bad! There are two ghosts outside. The creole is bad, but the coolie is rather worse. But if he is made out of hell I will catch him.’ The prisoner then began to blow his whistle in a very funny way—a way in which he had never heard a whistle blown before. He also began to speak in an unknown tongue and to call up the ghosts.

[The following dialogue is taken from court proceedings regarding the case.]

Mr. Lake—‘Aren’t there a lot of you people who believe that ghosts can harm and molest you?’

Witness—‘No, I am not one.’

Mr. Lake—‘Did you not tell him that a dumby [Jamaican ghost] struck you on your back and you heard voices calling you?’

Witness—‘He told me so.’ [Continuing, witness said he had seen all sorts of ghosts at all different times and of different kinds also.]

Mr. Lake—‘Of all different sexes, man and woman?’

Witness—‘Yes; any man who can see ghosts will know a man ghost from a woman ghost.’

While it empowered those who practiced it, African religion had its paradoxes and contradictions, and as a result it has experienced some changes. For example, it took on an overlay of Christianity of whatever variety was dominant on the plantation. In Haiti, Voudou resulted from obeah’s association with French Catholicism. In Cuba and Puerto Rico, santería blended with Spanish Catholicism. In Brazil, Macumba is a result of its mixing with Portuguese Catholicism. African-based religions gained significant favor in the West Indies because of their role underlying the various rebellions by which the slaves gained their freedom. Today, they survive in competition with the dominant Catholicism or Anglicanism. They are reemerging despite several centuries of negative writing by outsiders.

African-derived Caribbean religion entered the United States at the time of the Haitian slave rebellion in 1801 and in the years to follow. Voudou eventually became established in New Orleans and the surrounding countryside. During the twentieth century, and especially as immigration laws have eased during the last generation, numerous people have moved to America from the Caribbean, carrying their faiths with them.

Sources:

Westlake, Aubrey Thomas (1893–1985)

Prominent British authority on radionics, alternative medical therapies, and holistic health. Born in 1893, in Redhill, Surrey, he was educated at the Quaker Sidcot school, and he trained in medicine at Birmingham and Cambridge universities and St. Bartholomew’s Hospital, London. He entered general practice in Bermondsey, London. In 1938, he and his family moved to the family estate at Fordingbridge, Hampshire, where Westlake continued the private practice of medicine.

He also spent many years investigating a wide range of alternative studies beyond the purely physical parameters of orthodox medical science, such as the Bach flower remedies, medical dowsing, radionics, radionics, the odic force of Baron von Reichenbach, the orgone energy of Wilhelm Reich, Huna, homeopathy, and anthroposophical medicine. In 1956, he formed a study group with several associates, investigating the use of radionics techniques in healing patients at a distance.

The wide range of his inquiries is demonstrated in his important paper ‘Vital Medicatrix Naturae,’ given at the Scientific and Technical Congress of Radionics and Radiesthesia, London, May 16, 1950. He published a number of important articles and a major work, The Pattern of Health (1961).

He was a founding member of the Soil Association, an active member of the Medical Society for the Study of Radionics, an honorary fellow of the Radionic Association, an honorary life vice president of the British Society of Dowsers, and president of the Psionic Medical Society. He died at the age of 92 in Fordingbridge, on October 30, 1985.

Westwood, Horace (1884–1956)

Unitarian minister who wrote on parapsychology. He was born on August 17, 1884, at Wakefield, England. He became an ordained minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1906 and pastored at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan (1906–08). Then in 1910 he joined the Unitarian Church and was pastor successively at the First Unitarian Church, Youngstown, Ohio (1910–12); All Soul’s Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada (1912–19); and First Church, Toledo, Ohio (1919–27). He was minister at large for the Unitarian Church (1927–33) and for the First Unitarian Church, Berkeley, California (1934–45). He studied psychic research for a number of years and described his personal attitudes in his book There Is a Psychic World (1949). He died December 24, 1956.

Sources:

- This Do and Live. N.p., 1938.
Weyer, Johan (also known as John Wier or Wierus) (1515–1588)

Protestant physician and demonologist, born in Basel, Switzerland, who compiled an inventory of devils published in 1568, in which he estimated that the devil's kingdom consisted of an army of 7,405,926 devils and demons, organized in 1,111 divisions of 6,666 each. During the Reformation, this total was raised by the Lutherans, who calculated that the true figure was 2,665,866,746,664 devils.

However, in his major work De Praestigiis Daemonum et Inconstantanabus ass Veneificis (Basel, 1568), Weyer denounced witch hunters for extracting confessions under torture; pointing out that extreme hardships would force even the most innocent to confess themselves guilty. Weyer offered a voice of reason, claiming mental disease rather than demonic possession. Unfortunately his book went unheeded and heavily criticized.

For a summary of Weyer's comprehensive book, see H. C. Lea, Materials Toward a History of Witchcraft. (See also demonology)

Sources:

Weza

Burmeese sorcerers. (See also MYANMAR)

WFLK Fountain of the World

Hindu-based religious community centered in the San Fernando Valley of southern California. The WFLK Fountain of the World was founded by Francis H. Pencovic (1911–58). He grew up in Utah but became known in 1932 under his religious name, Krishna Venta. As Krishna Venta he claimed that he had been sent from heaven to work among the American Indians. He was believed to be the latest in a series of ''saviours'' who had come to assist humankind. The lineage included Adam, Enoch, Methuselah, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Elijah, Jesus, and more recently Abraham Lincoln and Joseph Smith, Jr., (the founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints).

Krishna Venta established his followers on land in Box Canyon in the San Fernando Valley. They lived communally, a practical step in their gaining a unity of mind and spirit, and attempted to put into practice the four cardinal virtues taught by Krishna Venta: Wisdom, Faith, Love, and Knowledge (WFLK), from which the group took its name. The members became well known in the area for their outstanding work in the periodic and dangerous fires that afflict the area.

Wheatley has taken special interest in the philosophy of parapsychology, the question of survival, quantitative research in extrasensory perception, psychokinesis, and epistemological aspects of psi. He worked with Karlis Osis in an exploratory study among college students concerning clairvoyance scores in card reading. He was an associate member of the Parapsychological Association.

Sources:

Whistling

Various superstitions are connected with whistling. It has long been considered unlucky for women to whistle. It was unlucky for sailors to whistle aboard ship, because it was thought that doing so might raise a wind. It was also considered unlucky for miners to whistle in a mine, since this might be followed by an explosion.

A more recent superstition is that whistling in a theater or its dressing rooms may cause a play to fail.
White, Rhea A(melia) (1931– )

Prominent American parapsychologist. Born May 6, 1931, in Utica, New York, she studied at Pennsylvania State University (B.A., 1955). After graduation she spent four years as a research fellow at the Parapsychology Laboratory, Duke University (1958), became a research assistant at the Foundation for Integral Research (1959), and worked as a research student and editorial associate at the American Society for Psychical Research (1959–63).

She was a charter member of the Parapsychological Association and held the offices of secretary (1958, 1962), council member (1958, 1960–63), and president (1984). She was the director of information of the American Society for Psychical Research beginning in 1963. She published a series of bibliographical articles in Advances in Parapsychological Research, and was editor of the Parapsychological Association's Research in Parapsychology from 1981–1983. She also edited Theta for the Psychical Research Foundation from 1981–1986. Her background in library science led to the first of a series of bibliographical publications with her 1973 Parapsychology: Sources of Information.

In 1981 she founded the Parapsychology Sources of Information Center, an organization with bibliographical control over the vast and ever-growing body of parapsychological and related material. The Psi-Line Database System was the first computerized database of the literature on psychical research and parapsychology. The center publishes Parapsychology Abstracts International, providing brief summaries of periodical literature from English, Spanish, Dutch, Portuguese, Italian, German, French, Polish, Japanese, and Russian researchers. The center's other important publications include bibliographies on paranormal topics and reading lists for students, the general public, and specialists. In 1992 White published Parapsychology: New Sources of Information and in 1994, with Michael Murphy, she wrote In the Zone: Transcendent Experience in Sports.

White also has direct involvement in parapsychological research and quite apart from her bibliographical work, she has published on a wide variety of topics. Address: EHE Network, 414 Rockledge Rd., New Bern, NC 28562. Website: http://www.ehe.org.

Sources:

White, Stewart Edward (1873–1946)

Author who published a number of books of “channeled” material. Born March 12, 1873, in Grand Rapids, Michigan, he studied at the University of Michigan (Ph.D., 1895; M.A., 1903). In 1904 he married Elizabeth (Betty) Grant, and they settled in California where he became well known as an author of many books, articles, and short stories dealing with his experiences around the state in mining and lumber camps, and on exploration trips.

In 1922 he and Betty met a couple known in the literature as Joan and Darby. Several years earlier the couple had been playing with a Ouija board and made contact with a spirit entity, “Stephen,” who became the source for a book they published in 1929 as Our Unseen Guest. Joan had become a full trance medium. Betty eventually followed a similar course and also became a medium in contact with a group of entities called simply “the Invisibles.” Betty channeled numerous sessions with them. In 1937, after many years of quietly working with a very small group, Stewart told the story of Betty’s development and repeated the basic teachings of “the Invisibles” in what has become a classic work in the field, The Betty Book. White believed that these messages embodied a valuable philosophy and religious interpretation for daily life. Enough readers agreed and a second “Betty” book was issued in 1939 as Across the Unknown.

Betty died in 1939, and in the months after her death, White received communication he believed to be from her through Joan. These were gathered into a book, The Unobstructed Universe (1940), which proved the most popular volume in the series and remains in print.

The continued response, possibly accelerated by the war, led to a number of further books. The Road I Know (1942) was an anthology of further selections from the material Betty had channeled. Anchors to Windward (1943) was a philosophical treatment of the Betty material. The Stars Are Still There (1946) grew out of specific questions sent to White during the war. With Folded Wings (1947), the last in the Betty book series, was published posthumously.

White died September 18, 1946, at Hillsborough, California. After his death, two manuscripts remained, both reflective of White’s own development as a medium. One, The Job of Loving, was published in 1948; the other, The Gaelic Manuscripts, was never published, though it circulated among White enthusiasts in mimeographed form.

Sources:
- ———. The Road I Know. N.p., 1942.
- ———. The Unobstructed Universe. N.p., 1940.

White Brotherhood

The White Brotherhood, a Bulgarian occult order with roots in Rosicrucianism, was founded in 1900 by Peter Konstantinov Deunov (1864–1944), known more popularly by his spiritual name, Beinsa Douno. Deunov was raised in the Bulgarian Orthodox Church and at one time thought of being a monk. However, he became a school teacher and then traveled to the United States, where he received a seminary degree in religion and one in medicine. Shortly after his return to Bulgaria, he began a period of seclusion during which time, in 1897, he had an initiatory experience that he described as the Spirit of God de-
White Dove’s Message

by a medium now residing in Wichita, Kansas. The name White Dove was given to her as a child by angelic beings she came to know as her playmates. The little angels told her they were from Gabriel, her guardian angel. They also prophesied that she would one day become a messenger of the Spirit and would experience three confirmatory events that would designate the time that she was to start using her “rightful” name. Two of these events occurred in the late 1980s when she received messages from two Native American guides, one an Apache and one a Cheyenne. The third occurred two years later in a vision of the Indian hierarchy that confirmed the time had come. Since that time she has been known as White Dove. An associated near-death experience confirmed that she had a special mission to fulfill.

In 1997, she was given the additional name Zavena during an initiation ceremony where it was revealed that she was a Cosmic Inter-galactic Server. She began using her full name on September 21, 1997. She brings messages from a spectrum of beings including her Native American guide, Silver Eagle, a light being, Firefly, and ascended master Kuthumi. She is also a Reiki Master and teaches Reiki healing.

White Dove’s Message was launched in 1993 as a monthly, but in 1999 became a quarterly publication. At about the same time, White Dove began her Internet presence and Web site www.whitedovemsg.com for interested readers. The Internet site is at http://www.whitedovemsg.com/.

MUCH of the emphasis in White Dove’s communication concerns the handling of the ongoing and even accelerated changes in the lives of people involved in the post-New Age spiritual community.

White Dove’s Message may be contacted at P.O. Box 781792, Wichita, KS 67278-1792.

Sources:

White Dove’s Message is a quarterly magazine that features the channelled messages of Zavena White Dove, the name adopted by a medium now residing in Wichita, Kansas. The name White Dove was given to her as a child by angelic beings she came to know as her playmates. The little angels told her they were from Gabriel, her guardian angel. They also prophesied that she would one day become a messenger of the Spirit and would experience three confirmatory events that would designate the time that she was to start using her “rightful” name. Two of these events occurred in the late 1980s when she received messages from two Native American guides, one an Apache and one a Cheyenne. The third occurred two years later in a vision of the Indian hierarchy that confirmed the time had come. Since that time she has been known as White Dove. An associated near-death experience confirmed that she had a special mission to fulfill.

In 1997, she was given the additional name Zavena during an initiation ceremony where it was revealed that she was a Cosmic Inter-galactic Server. She began using her full name on September 21, 1997. She brings messages from a spectrum of beings including her Native American guide, Silver Eagle, a light being, Firefly, and ascended master Kuthumi. She is also a Reiki Master and teaches Reiki healing.

White Dove’s Message was launched in 1993 as a monthly, but in 1999 became a quarterly publication. At about the same time, White Dove began her Internet presence and Web site www.whitedovemsg.com for interested readers. The Internet site is at http://www.whitedovemsg.com/.

MUCH of the emphasis in White Dove’s communication concerns the handling of the ongoing and even accelerated changes in the lives of people involved in the post-New Age spiritual community.

White Dove’s Message may be contacted at P.O. Box 781792, Wichita, KS 67278-1792.

Sources:

White Eagle Lodge

British Spiritualist organization founded in 1934, arising from the mediumship of Grace Cooke (d. 1979), assisted by her husband Ivan Cooke, and presenting the teachings channeled from her Native American spirit guide, “White Eagle.” These teachings present “a way of life which is gentle and in harmony with the laws of life,” involving the belief that “God, the eternal spirit, is both Father and Mother, and that the Son—the Cosmic Christ—is also the light which shines in every human heart.”

Cooke worked for many years as a medium primarily with the Stead Borderland Library in London. Then in 1939 she was contacted by a member of the Polaire Brotherhood in France, who informed her that Arthur Conan Doyle, an author and Spiritualist, had chosen her as the medium through which he wished to speak from the other side. She was also given a six-pointed star as a symbol for new work.

The lodge teaches that there is a unity that runs through all forms of life, visible and invisible, including the fairy and angelic kingdoms. White Eagle spoke of five Cosmic Laws: (1) reformation—the soul may return to earth many times until it has mastered all the lessons it must learn; (2) cause and effect—the belief in the law of karma (i.e., “as you sow, so will you reap”); (3) opportunity—every experience in life is an opportunity for an individual to become more Godlike and everyone is placed in exactly the right conditions needed “to learn lessons and give service”; (4) correspondence—the belief that “as above, so below.” The microcosm part of the macrocosm. We are cells of the cosmos, just as our bodies, in turn, are made up of cells, with the same laws applying at all levels; (5) equilibrium and balance—the law connected to karma, described as “the law of compensation.” It claims that no action can continue indefinitely, but will travel just as far before a reaction pulls things back to normal. Human joy and sorrow follow this law (i.e., extremes of emotion will eventually cause a reaction that pulls the soul back to normal.

The physical body is considered the outer garment of the soul, which includes subtler bodies of emotions and thoughts, and the spirit that is the heart of the soul and is known as the “Christ Spirit,” or real self. Spiritual healing involves concentrating divine power on the soul of the sick person to dissolve the disharmony causing the sickness. In “absent healing,” six healers sit as a group, sending out “rays of spiritual light.” In lone healing, 36 healers combine meditative healing from their own homes. In contact healing, there is a laying on of hands at special lodges, services. The lodge also propagates “spiritual communion,” a pure form of meditation.

Membership in the lodge is in three stages—ordinary membership progressing to “out brother,” and eventually to “initiatory.” The lodge publishes a bimonthly magazine, Stella Polaris, which includes White Eagle teachings, answers to readers’ questions and general articles on healing and meditation.

The lodge is headquartered at New Lands, Rake, Liss, Hampshire, GU33 7HY, England, and has a major center at St. Mary Abbot’s Pl., Kensington, London, W8 6L5, England. There are also branches throughout the British Isles. The movement spread to the United States in the 1950s and is headquartered at St. John’s Retreat Center, P.O. Box 930, Montgomery, TX 77356. Website: http://www.saintjohn.org/.

Sources:

Whiteman, J(oseph) H(illary) M(ichael) (1906—?)

Mathematician and writer on religion, science, and parapsychology. He was born on November 2, 1906. He attended Highgate School, London; Gonville and Cains College, Cambridge; and the University of Cape Town (Ph.D. and M.Mus.). He joined the faculty of mathematics at the University of Cape Town and remained there for many years (1939–71). He was named emeritus professor of mathematics in 1972. Also an accomplished musician, he published some 100 articles on music in the journal South African Music Teacher, and he also contributed to various symposia on music.

Whiteman experienced out-of-the-body travel, prompting his interest in parapsychology. He has described these experiences in several of his books and articles. From a scientific perspective, he has also argued that the new post-quantum physics will provide a new worldview that has a place for parapsychology and psychic phenomena. He has contributed numerous papers on parapsychology and related subjects to various publications. He received the Valkhoff Medallion from the South African Society for Psychical Research for his contributions to the field.

Sources:

White Order of Thule

The White Order of Thule describes itself as a loose alignment of Aryan minds, hearts, and souls working together for the Cause, that is, the revitalization of the culture-soul of the European people. It is modeled upon the idea of an ancient mystery school that facilitates its members’ acquisition of a higher state of consciousness, though it is not a mystery school itself, merely an esoteric brotherhood. The order emerged in the late 1990s when its leader, Nathan Pett, posted information about the group on the Internet.

Thule is the mythical site of the origin of the Aryan race. It is believed that the Aryans have become disunited and need to be called to a new unity to face the challenges of the future. To accomplish this task, the order has acquired the knowledge of the mystery schools of the Hermetic alchemical traditions that it is now offering to the Aryan people. The practical work of the order includes meditation, the use of imagery, and rituals designed to initiate changes in the inner self leading to an expansion of consciousness. Higher consciousness moves the individual past self-consciousness to the level of intuition where direct knowledge of the answers to life’s questions is perceived and a vision of Truth seen. The teachings do not replace activism in the cause of racial advancement but are a means of empowering the individual engaged in active work.

The order teaches the Hermetic tradition in a planned course of study that begins with Hermetic philosophy and Jungian psychology, especially the concept of archetypes. Specific archetypes will become the focus of attention and the subject of pathworking, the foundation of the order’s esoteric practices. The basic curriculum also includes instruction in Pagan mythology, genealogy, and astrology. The order teaches that the deities of Norse Paganism represent in essence the creative/destructive forces of the cosmos. Students are also advised to supplement their study with additional readings, including the writings of Adolf Hitler, Friedrich Nietzsche, Julius Evola, and Oswald Spengler.

The order may be contacted at Box 1473, Deer Park, WA 99006. It publishes a quarterly periodical, Crossing the Abyss. Its Web presence may be accessed at http://www.thulean.org/. The order came to public attention in August of 1999 when it held a ceremony on Whitey Island, Washington, near the site where Robert Mathews had been killed in a shootout with the FBI. Mathews led The Order, a controversial racist group in the early 1980s tied to a series of violent crimes.

Sources:

White Sands Incident

Title of a book by Daniel Fry published in 1954, claiming that the author saw a flying saucer land at the White Sands Proving Ground in New Mexico and took a trip in it. Fry has importance in UFO history for being among the first to claim to have traveled in a UFO.
White Temple Church

The White Temple Church is the ecclesiastical organization associated with the Brotherhood of the White Temple, an occult school headquartered in Sedalia, Colorado. The church emphasizes the "Original Gnostic Teachings of Jesus," the occult beliefs that members of the brotherhood believe Jesus passed on to humankind. The White Temple Church may be contacted c/o the Brotherhood of the White Temple, P.O. Box 966, Castle Rock, CO 80104.

Whittlesey, John R. B. (1927– )

Data processing analyst who experimented in areas of parapsychology. He was born on July 21, 1927, in Los Angeles, California. He studied at the California Institute of Technology (B.S. physics, 1948; M.S. astronomy, 1950), the University of North Carolina (1951–54), and the Graduate School of Religion, University of Southern California (1960–61). He served with the United States Army (1954–56) and then joined the faculty at the University of California at Los Angeles as a data analyst in 1957.

Whittlesey has taken a special interest in computer statistics and probability as related to ESP and ESP in its relationship to religious and physical experiences. He designed an experiment in the use of the chemical LSD and analyzed data in its relation toextrasensory perception, working with several psychiatrists. He also designed and built an electronic device for experimental testing of precognition, using non-verbal responses from subjects influenced by drugs. He is coauthor of various papers on LSD experiences read before the American Psychiatric Association and the California State Psychological Association.

Sources:

———. "Further Comments on Causality." Journal of Parapsychology 17 (September 1953).

Whole Again Research Guide

Comprehensive annual directory and resource guide (superseding and incorporating Guide to Psi Periodicals), several editions of which appeared in the 1980s. First published 1982, it was edited by Tim Ryan and Rae Jappinen and had nearly 30 contributors, including Elizabeth M. Werner (of Guide to Psi Periodicals and other publications) and Elisabeth Kübler-Ross. The Guide covered alternative technologies and therapies, New Age teachings, psychic studies, spiritual growth, yoga, UFOs, nature religions, environmental issues, minority rights, as well as media—magazines, newspapers, journals, newsletters, sourcebooks, directories, and bibliographies. It was issued by SourceNet in Santa Barbara, California.

Whole Life

New Age networking journal serving New York City and the northeast with news of current events in holistic health, macrobiotics, ecology, spiritual growth, yoga, gurus, and mysticism. It features a national calendar of events and personalities, as well as directory information. Last known address: Whole Life Enterprises, P.O. Box 2058, New York, NY 10159. Whole Life also created Whole Life Times, a similar networking journal serving Southern California. Whole Life Times is currently an independent venture that sponsors annual New Life expositions in several locations on the West Coast from its headquarters at P.O. Box 1187, Malibu, CA 90265. Website: http://www.wholelifetimes.com/.

Whole Life Expo (Fair)

Annual New Age exposition featuring leading spokespeople and organizations in the fields of health, fitness, education, social action, science, the environment, yoga, spiritual growth, and related topics. Address: Whole Life Expo, National Headquarters, 803 Fourth St., Suite 7, San Rafael, CA 94901. Information on upcoming expositions can be found at http://www.wholelifexpos.com/.

Whole Life Times

Whole Life Times is one of the more prominent networking journals to emerge in the 1980s to serve the growing New Age Movement. The possibilities of networking as a means of organizing without the burdensome hierarchies of pyramidal structures was placed before New Agers in 1982 by Jessica Lipnack and Jeffrey Stamps in their best-selling book, Networking: The First Report and Directory. Periodicals supplying addresses, phone numbers, and announcements of coming events and gatherings initially appeared in the major metropolitan complexes. In the Northeast, Whole Life served New York and Boston, but soon developed a section including Los Angeles. Whole Life evolved into two editions, one based in New York and one in Los Angeles. By the end of the decade, these had become independent publications with the Los Angeles edition taking the name Whole Life Times.

Whole Life Times follows a model pioneered by Common Ground, the original networking periodical serving the San Francisco Bay area. It is an oversized magazine built around a set of advertisements organized topically into a directory. Groups and events are arranged under such topics as astrology, beauty and personal care, healing and health centers, psychology and counseling, schools and instruction, and spirit and transformation. Each issue also includes an additional supply of display ads, the advertisements paying the cost of the magazine, which is distributed through health food and metaphysical bookstores without charge. Also included in each issue is a set of feature articles about issues and personalities of interest to the continuing post-New Age community. These range from issues of health and personal spiritual and psychic development to profiles of channelers and psychic counselors. Additional content is supplied with news coverage and columns.

Whole Life Times is the largest circulating of the regional networking periodicals in the United States. It also organizes the Whole Life Expo held annually in the Los Angeles area. Publishing offices of the Whole Life Times may be contacted at P.O. Box 1187, Malibu, CA 90265. Its website is at http://www.wholelifetimes.com/.

Sources:

Whole Life Times. Malibu, Calif., n.d.

Whole Person

The Whole Person—Calendar of Events in Southern California is one of several magazines dedicated to networking within the metaphysical/psychic/spiritual community in the greater Los Angeles area. The Whole Person is devoted entirely to announcements of upcoming events and has no feature articles, news columns, or book reviews. Over half of the content of any issue is given over to display advertisements. It is designed entirely to serve individuals looking for activities to attend of a spiritual and metaphysical nature, from yoga classes to lectures by visiting teachers.
The Whole Person is published monthly and built around two extensive lists of want-ad-type announcements of events. The initial list provides basic information on events (including location, registration, and sponsor) occurring on each day of the month (with three to four pages devoted to each day). A second list provides information on ongoing events, primarily weekly gatherings held by metaphysical or Eastern spirituality groups on a continuing basis. These announcements are solicited monthly and published without cost to the person or group submitting them.

Readers may subscribe to The Whole Person for home delivery, but the overwhelming percentage of copies is distributed monthly to stores in the areas covered by the announcements and given away free. The many advertisements pay the cost of the publication. From a small newsletter in the 1980s, The Whole Person has grown into a large magazine of more than 100 pages per issue. It may be ordered from The Whole Person, P.O. Box 2398, Santa Barbara, CA 93102. It is assembled by Leslie Snyder and a small staff.

Sources:
The Whole Person. Santa Barbara, Calif., n.d.

Whymant, (A.) Neville (John) (1894— ?)

Author and editor who investigated the phenomena of the medium George Valantine. He was born on September 4, 1894, at Rothwell, England, and studied at Oxford University (Ph.D.). After World War I he served as a professor of Oriental literature and philosophy at the Universities of Tokyo and Peking. He became an editor and journalist in 1926 and eventually became editor of The Indian Nation in the 1930s. He was advisor to the embassy of the Republic of China in London from 1947 to 1950.

In addition to various books on China and the Chinese, he published Psychological Research in China (1925), dealing with sand painting and “ghost photographs,” and Psychic Adventures in New York (1928). Whymant was present at séances with the medium George Valantine, who produced messages in ancient Chinese languages. A report of the phenomena was published in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (April 1928).

Sources:

WICA See Witchcraft International Craft Association

WICA Newsletter

Early newsletter serving the Wiccan and neo-pagan community as it emerged as a national network in the 1970s. Its editor, Leo Martello, a former Spiritualist medium, wrote a number of books detailing the practice of contemporary witches. Martello heads Witchcraft International Craft Associates in New York City.

Wicca

The first world religion to originate in England, Wicca represents a new religious expression inspired by pre-Christian ethnic and tribal religions. The word wiccan as a plural for witch was used in Old English; its singular forms were feminine wiccce and masculine form as wicca. Pronounced with hard C’s instead of the former “witch-a,” the term Wicca was adopted by Gerald Gardner and other English Witches in the 1940s to distinguish their life-affirming and fertility-based Pagan religion from Satanism or individual sorcery.

Although Wiccans write prolifically, Wicca has no sacred texts as such to guide belief and practice. Most Wiccans view the Divine as dual (male/female) or plural, accept the idea of reincarnation, and see the natural world as a manifestation of divine force rather than as something created by a transcendent god. Attunement of the self to natural cycles through seasonal rituals is Wicca’s central public religious practice.

Wicca as a religion has no central authority nor organization, although various umbrella groups such as the Covenant of the Goddess in North America and the Pagan Federation in the United Kingdom include many individuals and groups. The primary organization remains the coven, ideally numbering thirteen persons but in actuality often comprised of fewer. Because of Wicca’s rapid growth, however, some adherents now seek more formal organizational plans and credentialing of leaders (priests and priestesses), a trend resisted by those Witches who hold individual and small-group practice and experience to be primary. Wiccans often identify with a particular “tradition”—a school of teaching or an initiatory lineage—but the boundaries between traditions are loosely drawn, and new traditions are constantly being created.

Estimates of the number of Wiccans in North America in 2000 ranged from 300,000 to the low millions. Sociological studies of Wicca show its followers as tending to be younger and better-educated than the population overall.

Wiccan Church of Canada

The Wiccan Church of Canada is one of the pioneering organizations of the modern Witchcraft movement in Canada. It was founded by two Wiccan priests, Tamara James and Richard F. James, who had their initial contacts with Neo-paganism while in California in 1977. They moved to Toronto two years later, where they founded the Wiccan Church of Canada and opened an occult store that catered to Pagans and witches. By 1983 the community had grown to the point that an initial regional Pagan festival could be held. In 1984 the first of several covens formed within the church.

It is the belief of the church that many of the important ultimate questions of life are unanswerable. Humans cannot know about the origin of the universe, the reality of life after death, or the mechanisms of the miraculous. Thus, the religious answers that are given to such questions carry a large element of subjectivity. They must be held with some reserve and must not become the basis of intolerance and judgmental attitudes toward those who believe differently. Morality also falls into the same category. It is a human creation. However, the church believes that society has a right to organize and pass laws that protect individuals from violence and the land from outside forces.

Its ignorance asserted, the church believes that the universe is self-aware, and that elements of that awareness have been differentiated as the deities. The number of deities is unknown. Awareness is genderless and individual deities may be either male or female. There is also an ordering among the deities and it is proper to speak of the greater and lesser deities. The Wiccan church follows primarily a European format with worship centered upon the eight annual festivals common to Pagans and also the small coven gatherings at the new and full moon (esbats). The church also has its own rituals to designate important moments in the life cycle, from the naming ceremony for the new born (wiccaning) to the passing from this incarnation (funeral). It performs both weddings and handappings (for couples that are separating).

All of the priests and priestesses of the church constitute a ruling Priesthood Council. Their job is to train members and any new priests. The church is headquartered at 109 Vaughan Rd., Toronto, ON, Canada M6C 2L9. Most of its several hundred members reside in Ontario. Its webpage may be found at http://www.wcc.on.ca/.
Wickland, Carl August (1861–1945)

Physician, psychiatrist, and Spiritualist who spent more than three decades researching and experimenting with the application of Spiritualist techniques to assist those suffering from mental illnesses. Wickland was born on February 14, 1861, in Leiden, Sweden. He qualified as a physician at Dunham Medical College, Chicago, Illinois, later becoming a medical advisor for the National Psychological Institute, Los Angeles.

He claimed that discernable spirits caused some phases of mental illness in the living, and his book Thirty Years Among the Dead (1924) reports his experiences. Using the services of his wife as a medium, he operated what amounted to a rescue circle dealing with what Spiritualists describe as earth-bound entities who attach themselves to unsuspecting individuals. Their work in diagnosing and treating mental patients believed to be possessed by spirit entities had much in common with that of Titus Bull. Mrs. Wickland died in March 1937; Carl Wickland died November 13, 1945.

Widdershins

Widdershins, a Pagan periodical that serves the northwest Pagan and Wiccan community, is a tabloid newspaper distributed without cost in the states of Washington and Oregon. It is unique, as most Pagan publications have attempted to transform from informal newsletters into newsstand magazines. In contrast, Widdershins has adopted a popular format that has proved successful in the New Age community.

Each issue of Widdershins includes several longer articles of interest to Neo-Pagans, with special attention to themes that are common to all of the variety within the larger world of contemporary Paganism and Witchcraft. The publication also attempts to introduce non-Pagan readers with the essentials of Pagan spirituality and practice, while emphasizing those concerns of common interest with the larger New Age community such as ecology, attention to the changing seasons, and feminism.

Neo-Pagans, still a miniscule minority largely invisible within the larger culture, also have a need for communication among its far-flung groups, the covens and groves, most of whom meet in private homes.

Widdershins carries notices of public Pagan events and of individuals and groups that are open to contact. Advertising carries notices of Pagan business, especially stores that carry Pagan and Wiccan books and supplies (candles, incense, and ritual implements).

Widdershins is published eight times annually, its appearance following the eight major Pagan festivals that are spread evenly throughout the year. It is published by Emerald City/Silver Moon Productions, 12545 Lake City Way NE, Ste. 208, Seattle, WA 98125. While distributed free throughout the Seattle and Portland metropolitan regions, it is also available by subscription for delivery to individual addresses. It maintains a Web presence at http://www.widdershins.org/. As many Pagans still do not feel comfortable with identifying themselves openly, most of the editors and writers for Widdershins are listed by their first names only.

Sources:

Wiesinger, Alois (1885–1955)

Abbot of the Cistercian Order who was active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on June 3, 1885, at Magdalenberg, Upper Austria. Ordained in 1909, he received his doctorate in theology in 1912 at the University of Innsbruck. He taught philosophy for five years (1912–17) and then became abbot of the Cistercian Monastery, Schlierbach, when World War I was beginning. During his lengthy career as abbot, he took a great interest in such parapsychological phenomena as poltergeists and materialization.

In addition to his writings on Christianity, he was editor-publisher of the journal Glaube und Erkenntnis (Journal for Christian Parapsychology) and author of Die Vergorgene Welt (The attitude of the Catholic toward occult phenomena). Neue Wissenschaft (1955).

Wilber, Ken

Psychologist and writer on mysticism and transpersonal consciousness. He was one of the pioneers of transpersonal psychology, and his early volume, The Spectrum of Consciousness (1977), is considered one of its classic statements. For several years, he was editor-in-chief of the journal ReVision, prior to its acquisition by Heldref Publications. Wilber has taken a special interest in the study of new religious movements in the light of transpersonal psychology, arguing for a non-reductionistic approach that is rooted in a transcendental structuralism and takes into account the various stages of human evolution, which culminates in God-realization. Wilber is a Buddhist but hailed the mystic Da Free John as a New Age avatar. In the 1980s he became the general editor of the New Science Library, published by Random House.

Sources:

Wild-Women

In German folklore the Seligen Fräulein were a species of nature spirits. An early account is provided by Thomas Keightley in his book The Fairy Mythology (1850):

---

"The Wilde Frauen or Wild-women of Germany bear a very strong resemblance to the Elle-maids of Scandinavia. Like them they are beautiful, have fine flowing hair, live within hills, and only appear singly or in the society of each other. They partake of the piety of character we find among the German Dwarfs."

"The celebrated Wunderberg, or Underberg, on the great moor near Salzburg, is the chief haunt of the Wild-women. The Wunderberg is said to be quite hollow, and supplied with stately palaces, churches, monasteries, gardens, and springs of gold and silver. Its inhabitants, besides the Wild-women, are little men, who have charge of the treasures it contains, and who at midnight report to Salzburg to perform their devotions in the cathedral; giants, who used to come to the Church of Grödich and exhort the people to lead a godly and pious life; and the great emperor Charles V., with golden crown and sceptre, attended by knights and lords."

"Heightley continues:"

"The inhabitants of the village of Grödich and the peasantry of the neighborhood assert that this hill was an exasperation. About the year 1753, the Wild-women used to come out of the Wunderberg to the boys and girls that were keeping the cattle near the hole within Glamegg, and give them bread to eat."

"The Wild-women used to frequently come to where the people were reaping. They came down eagerly in the morning, and in the evening, when the people left off work, they went back into the Wunderburg without partaking of the supper."

"It once happened near this hill, that a little boy was sitting on a horse which his father had tethered on the headland of the field. Then came the Wild-women out of the hill and wanted to take away the boy by force. But the father, who was well acquainted with the secrets of this hill, and what used to occur there, without any dread hastened up to the women and took the boy from them, with these words: 'What makes you presume to come so often out of the hill, and now to take away my child with you? What do you want to do with him?' The Wild-women answered: 'He will be better with us, and have better care taken of him than at home. We shall be very fond of the boy, and he will meet with no injury.' But the father would not let the boy out of his hands, and the Wild-women went away weeping bitterly.

"One time the Wild-women came out of the Wunderberg, near the place called the Kugelmill, which is prettily situated on the side of this hill, and took away a boy who was keeping cattle. This boy, whom every one knew, was seen about a year after by some wood-cutters, in a green dress, and sitting on a block of this hill. Next day they took his parents with them, intending to search the hill for him, but they all went about it to no purpose, for the boy never appeared any more." (See also Fairies)

Sources:

Will

Will, a basic category in philosophy, emerged in the nineteenth century as a concern of psychical research, as attempts were made to prove that human will was a dynamic energy. The earliest experimental apparatus was constructed by M. E. Savary d'Odiardy. An investigation of the instrument by the Society for Psychical Research, London (Proceedings, vol. 8, p. 249) dismissed his claims.

Another instrument was designed by Sydney Alrutz, of the University of Uppsala, Sweden. He called it a volometer or "will board." It comprised a small board resting on knife-edged pegs. The longer and heavier end was supported by means of a string attached to a letter scale and held the board in horizontal position. In this position the scale registered a pressure of five ounces. If the short end was depressed, the long end rose and the letter scale showed a decrease of weight.

The task put before the subjects of Alrutz's experiment was to fix their attention on the long end and will its depression. In a number of cases, 40–100 grams of pressure was thus obtained. Among those who attempted the experiment were many members of the Sixth Psychological Congress at Geneva in August, 1909.

Theodore Flournoy wrote after his own test:

"I was able to prove conclusively, after three trials, and under conditions precluding all possibility of fraud or illusion, that the will of these ladies, concentrated upon a certain material object, with a desire to produce a movement in it, ended by producing this movement as if by means of a fluid or an invisible force obeying their mental command."

While these results were impressive, the experiment was flawed by severe methodological vagueness. The experiment demonstrated an unusual effect, but said nothing about the agency involved in causing the change. It could just as easily have been a demonstration of the mind-body problem or even a demonstration of the mind-body problem.

Sources:

Son of William the Conqueror, and tyrant of England in the eleventh century. Much disliked, particularly by priests and monks, whom he reduced to extreme poverty, he became the subject of a devilish legend after his welcomed death.

One day when he was out hunting in the year 1100 (the 44th year of his life, the 13th of his reign), he was assassinated by an arrow launched by an unknown assailant. According to the legend, while Rufus was drawing his last breath, the Comte de Comonailles, who had been separated from the hunt, saw a shaggy black goat carrying off a mangled human form, pierced by an arrow. The Comte ordered the goat to halt, asked who he was, and tried to find out where he was going. The goat responded that he was the Devil and was carrying William Rufus off to be judged, condemned for his tyranny, and forced to accompany him (the Devil) to his abode.

Willet, Mrs.

Pseudonym of medium Winifred Margaret Serocold Coombe-Tennant.

Son of William the Conqueror, and tyrant of England in the eleventh century. Much disliked, particularly by priests and monks, whom he reduced to extreme poverty, he became the subject of a devilish legend after his welcomed death.

One day when he was out hunting in the year 1100 (the 44th year of his life, the 13th of his reign), he was assassinated by an arrow launched by an unknown assailant. According to the legend, while Rufus was drawing his last breath, the Comte de Comonailles, who had been separated from the hunt, saw a shaggy black goat carrying off a mangled human form, pierced by an arrow. The Comte ordered the goat to halt, asked who he was, and tried to find out where he was going. The goat responded that he was the Devil and was carrying William Rufus off to be judged, condemned for his tyranny, and forced to accompany him (the Devil) to his abode.

William, Bessie

Late nineteenth-century British clairvoyant, trance and healing medium, late book of this medium powers and included articles by her on the subject of haunted houses in his journal Borderland.

Sources:

1671
British materialization medium, claiming the spirit control "John King," who worked from 1871 on in partnership with fellow medium Frank Herne. They gave public seances at 61 Lamb's Conduit St., in west central London. The first was held under the patronage of the medium Agnes Guppy-Volckman. The famous transportation of Guppy-Volckman occurred at one of these seances.

Williams often sat with W. Stainton Moses, but the results were always very meager. Moses was in doubt about the authenticity of Williams' mediumship and asked his controls for information. They were reluctant to give it. Catherine Berry's book Experiences in Spiritualism (1876) and A. Smellie's Some Reminiscences (1900) contained enthusiastic accounts, but fraud was often suspected and, in at least one case, glaringly proved.

In Paris, at a seance on May 14, 1874, an attempt was made to seize "John King." He eluded capture and left a piece of drapery behind, the further history of which is not known. The medium was found in his seat. The search of his person revealed nothing suspicious.

In 1878, the research committee of the British National Association of Spiritualists constructed a cabinet with an automatic recording apparatus. An observer sat in another cabinet with a lighted lamp. In one sitting with Williams, a spirit form appeared, sometimes ten or twelve feet from the cabinet. These appearances corresponded with fluctuations recorded by the self-registering apparatus. The maximum loss of weight amounted to 100 pounds. There was no weight in the cabinet that could have been fixed on the weighing platform. Frank Podmore suggested that the medium need only have fastened the suspended cabinet to the floor by a gimlet or a piece of string, but that seemed insufficient to explain fully the extreme variations in weight.

However, a few months after this experiment, in a Spiritualist circle in Amsterdam, Williams and his fellow medium A. Rita were exposed. "Charlie," a materialized spirit, was seized and found to be Rita. Many handkerchiefs, a bottle of phosphorized oil, several yards of very dirty white muslin, a false black beard with brown silk ribbon, and other paraphernalia were found on the persons of the two mediums.

The exposure did not stop a subsequent visit to Russia, where Professor Bourlerof and Alexander Aksakof (a strong believer in Spiritualist phenomena) had what they considered convincing experiences. In a note to Bourlerof's account of the visit in Psychische Studien, Aksakof added: "I can testify to having received the confirmation of the appearance of John King from Mr. Crookes in his own house, Mrs. Crookes' hand being on William's shoulder while he was asleep behind the curtain; also that in the house of Mrs. MacDougall Gregory, the curtain behind which Williams was placed was in a niche almost hermetically sealed; and that John King appeared above that table, round which the company were assembled in front of the curtain."

American materialization medium. Florence Marryat, who sat with her in a public seance in New York without being introduced, described in her book There is No Death (1892) the appearance of her daughter (also named Florence), exactly the way she had seen her in Europe under the mediumships of Florence Cook, Arthur Colman, Charles Williams, and William Eglinton. Another familiar apparition was "Joy," Eglinton's spirit control. Altogether 40 different materializations were witnessed that evening.

In 1894, Williams was the guest of the Duchess of Pomar in Paris. Paul Leymarie, the son of the editor of La Revue Spirtiste, slipped behind the curtain during the séance and grasped the spirit. When the lights came up Williams was found in flesh-colored tights and the whole apparatus of her fraudulent spirit puppet show was discovered in the cabinet.

Williamson, Cecil H.

British occultist who claimed the power to conjure spirits by ritual magic. He was a graduate of Malvern College and spent some time as a tobacco planter in Rhodesia. During World War II he was in the British Intelligence Service. An expert on witchcraft, he is proprietor of a museum of magic and witchcraft known as the Witches' House, situated in the small Cornish village of Boscota, England, near Tintagel. The museum was originally based at Bourton-on-the-Water in the Cotswold countryside, but closed about 1966. Williamson was briefly associated with fellow contactee Dick Miller at the

Williamson, George Evans (1887–?)

A businessman active in South African parapsychology. He was born on January 14, 1887, at Malvern, England. He studied at Rugby School (1900–1905) and Cambridge University (M.A., LL.B., 1908). He served in the British Army during World War I (1914–1918) and then became a businessman in England (1918–1939). He moved to South Africa as World War II began and lived there for the rest of his life. He was a founding member and president for some years of the Cape Town Psychic Club and Library, and a fellow of the College of Psychic Science, London.

Sources:

Williamson, George Hunt (1926–1986)

George Hunt Williamson, a metaphysical teacher, flying saucer contactee, and bishop, was born on December 9, 1926, in Chicago, Illinois. As a youth Williamson had a variety of psychic experiences capped by a vivid out-of-body experience in his late teens which aroused his interest in the occult. He attended college and studied anthropology, though he never attained the advanced degrees he later claimed. In 1951 he read The Flying Saucers Are Real by Donald Keyhoe and became interested in UFOs. Thus it was that in 1952, he and his wife, Betty, then living in Prescott, Arizona, met another couple interested in the saucers, Alfred and Betty Bailey. One evening the four experimented with automatic writing and received a message purportedly from an extraterrestrial, Nah-9 of Solar X Group. In subsequent communications, he and other extraterrestrials warned of a nuclear blast about to occur on Earth. The ongoing messages received by the small group later became the basis of a 1954 book, The Saucers Speak!

His involvement in contact with the space entities led Williamson to George Adamski, and he, his wife, and the Baileys began to commute to Southern California to attend Adamski's lectures. Adamski channeled messages from his space contacts, one of which heralded an imminent face-to-face contact. That contact occurred on November 20, 1952, when the Williamsons, the Baileys, Adamski, and two of his associates met at Blythe, California, and headed into the nearby desert. Here Adamski would have his meeting with Orthon, which the rest looked upon from some distance. After Adamski told his story to the press, the Williamsons moved near Adamski's residence at Palomar, but soon parted company over Adamski's public stance against channeling.

Following the publication of The Saucers Speak!, Williamson was briefly associated with fellow contactee Dick Miller at the Williamson, Marianne (1955– )

Marianne Williamson, a popular metaphysical teacher of the channeled text A Course in Miracles (ACIM), was born in Houston, Texas, the daughter of a prominent Jewish lawyer who specialized in immigration law. Her father, Alan Vishnevetzky, had changed the family name when he moved to the United States from his birthplace in Russia. In her youth, she was influenced more by leftist politics than spirituality. She attended Pomona College for two years (1970–72), but found herself rudderless through the next years of her life. In 1977, while living in New York City and trying to develop a singing career, she first encountered A Course in Miracles. Though initially put off by its Christian references, the following year she volunteered at the Foundation for Inner Peace, the corporation set up to publish the books and disseminate the teachings, and assisted in its move to Tiburon, California.

Williamson moved back to Houston in 1979, and she married a businessman. The marriage soon ended in divorce. Her first attempt to appropriate the teachings of the Course led her into a lengthy spiritual crisis which she termed a “dark night of the soul.” She eventually found her way to a psychiatrist who was also a student of the ACIM, and attributes his help in getting her through this difficult period. She finally reached the point where she invited God into her life and in essence began her life anew. In 1983 she moved to Southern California. She took a secretarial job with the Philosophical Research Society in Hollywood, and soon became the weekly lecturer on A Course in Miracles.

Articulate, attractive, and entertaining, Williamson soon outgrew the facilities at the society, and went out on her own. She drew large audiences in both Los Angeles and New York, and discovered that she had a special appeal among gay males who had been affected by the AIDS epidemic. Her recognition of her gay audience led her to found the Center for Living, a combination hospice/cultural center for people with catastrophic illnesses. Centers were opened in both Los Angeles and New York. She spent a considerable amount of her time raising financial resources for the center.

Williamson attained a new level of fame beginning in 1991 when the newsstand publishing magazine Vanity Fair published a feature article on her. Then she officiated at the wedding of Liz Taylor and Larry Fortensky. When her first book, A Return to Love, appeared early in 1992, Oprah Winfrey invited her on the show and endorsed the volume, copies of which she distributed to the audience that day. Williamson was a national celebrity, her fame reaching far beyond that previously attained by ACIM. In the meantime, dissension had emerged at the two centers. She eventually withdrew from an active administrative role and in the mid-1990s moved to Santa Barbara for several years before relocating to New York.

While being attacked in the press for what were considered by some as personality flaws, Williamson continued to write popular spiritual texts including A Woman’s Worth and Illuminata. Still drawing large audiences for her presentations, she remains the single most popular interpreter of A Course in Miracles.

Sources:

Williamson Mill

A famous British haunted house. The story of the mill was reported in an early issue of the Journal of the Society for Psychological Research (vol. 5) in the 1880s. It was owned by a Mr. Proctor, who was quite used to the ghosts. The following extracts give some idea of the manner in which the house was described:

“When two of Mrs. Proctor’s sisters were staying at the Mill on a visit their bed was suddenly violently shaken, the curtains hoisted up all round to their tester, and then as rapidly let down again, and this again in rapid succession. The curtains were taken off the next night, with the result that they both saw a female figure, of mysterious substance and of a greyish-blue hue, come out of the wall at the head of the bed and lean over them. They both saw it distinctly. They saw it come out of and go back again into the wall. . . . Mrs. Davidson’s sister-in-law had a curious experience on one occasion. One evening she was taken off the next night by a male figure, returning to the wall . . .”
putting one of the bedrooms aright, and, looking towards the dressing table, saw what she supposed was a white towel lying on the ground. She went to pick it up, but imagine her surprise when she found that it rose up, and went behind the dressing table over the top, down on the floor across the room, disappearing under the door, and was heard to descend the stairs with a heavy step! The noise which it made in doing so was distinctly heard by Mr. Proctor and others in the house.

The old mill foreman once saw a bald-headed, luminous figure at a window. The body was brilliant, diffusing radiance, then it turned bluish and gradually faded from the top down. One of the little girls living in the house said on one occasion: "There is a lady sitting on the bed in Mamma's bedroom. She has eye holes but no eyes, and she looked so hard at me."

It was the opinion of Andrew Lang that the noises and apparitions at Willington Mill were a stimulus to the novelist Edward Bulwer Lytton in writing his famous supernatural story The Haunted and the Haunters.

Sources:

Willis, F. L. H.

Instructor in medicine at a New York college, who, as a student, was forced out of the Divinity School at Harvard University in 1837, largely because of his developing mediumship. He came from a respected family in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and had a strong physical side. Dr. Willis conducted experiments on the telepathic control of automatic writing.

Willis was known to Epes Sargent, author of The Scientific Basis of Spiritualism (1880), who included in this book extracts from a letter written by Willis in May 1879 regarding his materialization of spirit hands. Willis wrote:

"It is 23 years ago that these materializations of hands occurred... On one occasion a gentleman present drew a knife from his pocket with a long, keen blade, and taking no one into his counsel, watching his opportunity, pierced with a violent blow one of the psychic hands. The medium (Willis) uttered a shriek of pain. The sensation was precisely as if the knife had passed through his hand. The gentleman sprang to his feet exultant, thinking he had made a most triumphant exposure of trickery, and fully expected to find the medium's hand pierced and bleeding. To his utter chagrin and amazement there was no trace of a scratch even upon either hand of the medium; and yet to him the sensation was precisely as if the knife had passed through muscle and tendon, and the sensation of pain and soreness remained for hours."

This account of early materialization of spirit hands, long before the days of Eusapia Palladino and other physical mediums, is of special interest for its claim that violence to pseudo-ectoplasm reacts painfully upon the medium.

Willis described events in his life during a lecture at the Spiritual Institute in London in 1869, published in The Spiritual Magazine (1870, p. 193) and in Human Nature (1869, p. 575).

Sources:

Wilson, Cedric (William) M(alcolm)

(1925– )

Lecturer in pharmacology who has written on parapsychology. He was born on November 23, 1925, in Edinburgh, Scotland. He studied at the University of Edinburgh (B.S., 1947; M.C., Ch.B., 1949; Ph.D., 1954; M.D., 1958). He had a distinguished medical career, and in 1955 he became a lecturer in pharmacology and general therapeutics at the University of Liverpool. In addition to his articles on medical and pharmacological subjects, he has contributed to the Journal of Parapsychology and the International Journal for Parapsychology. Wilson also conducted experiments on the telepathic control of automatic responses and the influence of drugs on such responses.

Sources:

Wilson, Colin (Henry)

(1931– )

Popular British novelist and writer on occultism who attracted worldwide attention with his first book, The Outsider. He was born on June 26, 1931, in Leicester, England. He was educated at the Gateway School, Leicester, and worked at a great variety of jobs before becoming a writer. In 1947 he was employed by a wool company, and he subsequently worked as a laboratory assistant at a secondary technical school (1947–48) and as a tax collector (1947–49). He spent time in Germany and France, and while in Paris he worked on Merlin and Paris Review. Wilson was writer-in-residence at Hollins College, Virginia (1966–67) and now resides in Cornwall, England.

While preparing his first book The Outsider (1956), Wilson researched at public libraries, slept outdoors, and wrote in coffee houses. The book was an instant success, and the term "outsider" passed into common use as a romantic way to denote a type of brilliant misfit capable of surveying life in an original way. Assuming that role himself, Wilson has shown originality in his other writings, and in recent years he has achieved the status of an authority on popular occultism for his many writings and reviews in that subject area. His major study The Occult (1971) is a substantive survey of the emerging occult community at the beginning of the 1970s. He has produced several books annually through the 1980s to the present. He has continued to reflect upon the world of psychic experience, the occult, and alternative spirituality. His novel, The Space Vampires (1975), was turned into a movie.
Sources:

Wilson, Graham (1940– )
New consciousness entrepreneur who organized the international annual Mind-Body-Spirit Festivals held in England in the 1970s. Born in Yorkshire, England, he spent his preschool years on a farm. After World War II his family returned to London, where Wilson attended Wandsworth Grammar School, studying advanced level zoology and botany and investigating the writing of Rudolph Steiner and other occult mystics in his spare time. He was also active in sports and became a London Youth Athletics champion for the half-mile and cross country events at the age of 18. He played rugby and soccer as well as squash, and he took a great interest in the “peak” experiences of athletes.

After a varied business career, Wilson teamed up with Terry Ellis in 1976 to hire an exhibition hall in London and present the first Festival for Mind and Body, drawing upon his own knowledge of mystical and spiritual philosophies and athletic experiences. He put all his own money into the venture, which was presented in April 1977 in London. It was a success and led to successive annual festivals in Britain, Australia, and the United States. He later launched the UK’s first Psychics and Mystics Fayres and the UK’s first holistic health clinic, the London Natural Health Clinic.

In organizing these festivals, Wilson and his associates provided a regular focal point for New Age and mystical activities, and he himself believes that “you can use the best of the commercial world to allow in a spiritual flow in such a way that the final product has quality and integrity.”

Wilson, James (fl. 18th century)
Through the seventeenth century, astrology enjoyed broad support in the West, though it had come under attack by Protestant church leaders and from the same skeptical voices that had taken the lead in denouncing the witchcraft hysteria. In the eighteenth century it suffered greatly from the new scientific worldview and appeared to be on its way to disappearing completely. However, in the early nineteenth century, as part of the general post-scientific occult revival, astrology also experienced a rebirth. At the fountainhead of that revival in the English-speaking world was James Wilson.

Little is known of this astrologer who worked during the early decades of the nineteenth century except that he published what became the seminal work from which modern astrology would develop. The Dictionary of Astrology, a comprehensive new astrology textbook, appeared in 1819. Wilson had made an extensive study of the teachings accumulated by astrologers over the centuries and rejected everything for which he could find no evidence. He paid particular attention to horary astrology, a branch of astrology that assumes that whenever a question is asked, the answer is reflected in the patterns of the planets at that particular moment. The following year Wilson released a new set of astrological tables, the charts of planetary positions needed by the astrologer to construct a horoscope. Later in the decade he would publish a new edition of Prolemy’s Tetrabiblos, the book from which all Western astrology derives.

Wilson’s Dictionary went through several editions and was periodically reprinted throughout the century. It would influence several generations of British astrologers until replaced by the writings of William J. Simmonite and Raphael (Robert Cross Smith). It was regularly quoted by Luke Broughton, the founder of contemporary American astrology.

Sources:

Wilson, John C.
Pseudonym of Felix Morrow, pioneer publisher of occult and metaphysical books under the imprint of University Books, Inc.

Wilson, Percy (1893– ?)
Electronics and acoustics consultant and Spiritualist leader who also wrote on psychical subjects. He was born on March 8, 1893, in Halifax, Yorkshire, England. He attended Oxford (M.A., 1918). He became the technical editor of The Gramophone magazine in 1924 and later head of the Roads Department, Ministry of Transport, London (1938–49). He was also chairman of Psychic Press and a consultant in electronics and acoustics.

He was president of the Spiritualists’ National Union (1950–53), member of the Society for Psychological Research, London, and vice president of the College of Psychic Science, London. He was author of the books Modern Gramophones (1929) and The Gramophone Handbook (1957), and he also published a number of articles on physical and trance mediums, clairvoyance, clairaudience, and healing in the Spiritualist periodicals Two Worlds, Psychic News and Light.

Wilson, Richard (1926– )
Physic professor who was active in the field of parapsychology. He was born on April 29, 1926, in London, England. He studied at Oxford University (M.S., Ph.D.). He began his teaching career as a research lecturer at Christ Church, Oxford (1945–53). He spent two years in the United States before returning to Oxford for two years (1953–55), and then moved to the United States as a professor at Harvard University.

A corresponding member of the Society for Psychical Research, London, Wilson devised a random number selector for extrasensory perception.

Sources:

Winds (Paranormal)
Paranormal breezes, currents of air, and cooling temperatures are frequently reported strange room phenomena, as well as...
as being traditionally associated with the subjective effects of hauntings. It is an open question whether such temperature changes serve a direct purpose or are only by-products.

Such psychic manifestations are a great convenience both for the sitters and the medium, who sometimes report excessive perspiration. One of the other hand, Celestine Sanders, a New York medium, used to feel so unnaturally cold during her séances that she enveloped herself in many coverings and shaws to counteract the effect. It is difficult to allot the parts that the sitters and the medium play in the phenomenon. Sometimes the source seems to be the medium.

The spouting fountain of air that psychic researcher Cesare Lombroso discussed in his account of séances with Eusapia Palladino issued from a depression on the medium’s forehead. Hereward Carrington noticed that after a good séance the phenomena were so strong that after one it was almost impossible to keep the bedroom door open, the cold air blowing through it. Yet the breeze was not generally an after-séance effect. It usually preceded and heralded strong physical phenomena.

The chilly feeling that accompanies apparitions may be the result of a sudden drop in the temperature. All those who saw the apparition of a wooden cross in a certain haunted house felt unnaturally cold.

“Walter,” the spirit control of the medium Mina S. Crandon (“Margery”), said that cold breezes and drops in temperature were the result of some psychic emanation from the sitters’ brains. “Walter” found immense pleasure in using the thermometer as an indicator of the physical conditions confronting him. He said that if he looked at it and it was steady, he used “Margery” alone, and if it was going down, he used the sitters’ brains as well. If he used “Margery” alone no cold breezes or drops in temperature were produced.

Walter’s statement contains nothing new for Spiritualists. A control of the famous medium D. D. Home said more than a half a century earlier: “It is through your brains that the atmosphere we make use of is thrown off.” Lord Adare, in a séance with Home, heard the sound of a great wind. “We also felt the wind strongly,” he wrote “the moaning, rushing sound was the most weird thing I ever heard.”

Prior to the Spiritualist era, the seer Emanuel Swedenborg also encountered the phenomenon. He wrote in his Spiritual Diary:

“A spirit is compared to the wind (John iii, 8); hence it is that spirits have come to me both now, and very frequently before, with wind, which I felt in the face; yea, it also moved the flame of the candle, and likewise papers; the wind was cold, and indeed most frequently when I raised my right arm, which I wondered at, the cause of which I do not yet know.”

The same experience has been recorded with many physical mediums. Sir William Crookes wrote in Researches into the Phenomena of Spiritualism (1874):

“These movements, and indeed, I may say the same of every kind of phenomenon, are generally preceded by a peculiar cold air, sometimes amounting to a decided wind. I have had sheets of paper blown about by it, and a thermometer lowered several degrees. On some occasions I have not detected any actual movement of the air, but the cold has been so intense that I could only compare it to that felt when the hand has been within a few inches of frozen mercury.”

In the experiments at the Milestone Castle with the Marquis of Scroope, the psychic researcher Ernesto Boz- zano recorded:

“The evening of July 7, 1928, the heat was very oppressive. We happened to mention this disadvantage, and immediately blasts of unusually strong, icy air were felt by all us. . . . There was a continual change in the direction from which these air currents came; sometimes they descended from the ceiling, then we felt them in front of us, or at our side, or blowing from behind us; sometimes they were like small whirlwinds. It felt as though several electric fans were working in the centre, outside and above the circle.”

In the next séance, the phenomenon was repeated and perfected:

“Almost immediately we felt strong blasts of icy air which rapidly increased in force, giving one the impression of a powerful supernormal electric fan which periodically wafted its pleasant, cooling currents of air over the sitters. . . . These currents were so strong that our hair waved in the wind, and men’s coats, and the lace on the ladies’ dresses were blown about.”

Bozzano added that not the slightest sound accompanied the production of this phenomenon. The breezes sometimes brought down the temperature of the séance room by as much as 20 degrees.

George Henslow described the sensations of the sitters of T. d’Aute Hooper of Birmingham, England, as of that of “an intensely cold dew or mist, as though a vapour of methylated spirit were being abstracted from the room. While the paper was being produced, “the sitters felt as if they were sitting up to their knees in cold water.”

Measuring Temperature Differences

The psychic researcher Harry Price established a definite connection between the phenomenon of telekinesis and the drop in temperature. In his experiments with the medium Stel-la E., at the National Laboratory of Psychical Research he noticed a maximum drop of 20.5 degrees Fahrenheit. At the close of the séance the temperature was again normal. The medium’s temperature was always higher at the end of the sitting, but she herself always complained of feeling cold. The rapidity of her pulse beats was always accompanied in the trance by a pronounced coldness in the extremities.

In the “Margery” séances, a maximum-and-minimum thermomter was employed to measure the temperature. In one case the initial temperature dropped from 68 to 42, a difference of 26 degrees. After the breezes had been blowing for a while “Margery” often complained of feeling as though cobwebs were on her face.

General experience regarding the nature of the cold breezes was curiously contradicted in an address by the British clairvoyant Robert King (Light, April 25, 1903). He stated that the peculiar cold air of the séance room is not a wind,

“. . . it does not move things. I have watched pieces of paper placed on the table when these cold airs have been playing around. If a wind of that intensity had been blowing, the paper would have been moved, so I rather incline to the opinion that this phenomenon is due to a difference in pressure caused by abstraction of etheric matter from the sitters.”

Sources:

Windsor Castle

One of the largest inhabited castles in the world, Windsor Castle, in Berkshire, England, is one of the royal residences and headquarters of the Order of the Garter. It is frequently cited as a haunted house, filled with numerous notable spec- ters. Queen Elizabeth, Henry VIII, Charles I, and some of the Georges have all been reputed to haunt the castle, and Herne the Hunter is also said to roam the twelve-acre Great Park.

In February 1897, Lieutenant Carr Glynn of the Grenadier Guards was sitting in the library reading in the twilight when he heard the rustle of a silken dress and, looking up, saw the ghost of Queen Elizabeth I glide across the room. He buckled on his sword and reported the matter. The story attracted the attention of the country for some weeks. Sir Richard Holmes and his assistants kept watch for many nights, but the ghost did not reappear.

On another occasion, a housemaid in St. John’s Tower thought she saw a ghost. She was so frightened that she became ill and had to be sent home. In 1908, a sentry discharged five rounds of ball cartridge at a figure that appeared on the terrace, which he declared was a specter. A famous ghost is that of Sir George Villiers, father of the Duke of Buckingham in the reign of James I. The Hunter, who is said to lead a wild hunt in the park, was immortalized in W. Harrison Ainsworth’s novel Winwood Castle (1845).

Today, Windsor Castle is open daily except when used for royal visits. There are historic treasures in the state apartments, including period furniture, fittings, paintings and suits of armor. The castle also houses Queen Mary’s Dolls’ House, which is a popular exhibit.

Wingfield, Kate (d. 1927)

British non-commercial medium, the “Miss A.” of whom psychological researcher F. W. H. Myers wrote enthusiastically in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 8: 498–516; vol. 9: 73–92) and in his book Human Personality and Its Survival of Bodily Death (1903). Wingfield was also the “Miss Rawson” of J. G. Piddington’s report in Proceedings of the SPR (vol. 18) on cross-correspondence with Rosina Thompson. Her identity was eventually revealed by Sir Lawrence J. Jones, president of the society in 1928, in his presidential address in Proceedings (vol. 38). He told the story of a series of sittings that he and his wife had with her in the years 1900 and 1901, when her clairvoyance and automatic writing developed into trance mediumship. He observed many physical phenomena: raps, table tilting, movement of objects (telekinesis) and apports. In one instance, three tiny unset turquoise stones were brought as apports.

But it was the trance-speaking phase of Wingfield’s mediumship that convinced Jones of survival. Deceased relatives proved their identity and on several occasions their living daughter came through as a communicator.

Among the medium’s controls was an entity “Semirus,” who claimed to have been a doctor in ancient Egypt. Once a sitter desired some information from him. “Semirus” did not come. Later in the day he came through in automatic writing and explained that he heard the call, but was unable to come as he was busied. The sitter hurried away and to his relief found his aunt alive. But he suddenly realized that he had given, by mistake, the address of a neighbor’s house to the spirit control. A day or two later, a funeral took place there.

Wingfield’s sittings were primarily rescue circles. The controls aided many spirits by pointing out the errors of their ways. She ceased holding sittings in 1901, as her family objected that controls aided many spirits by pointing out the errors of their ways. She ceased holding sittings in 1901, as her family objected that controls aided many spirits by pointing out the errors of their ways.

Sources:

Wirdig’s Magnetic Sympathy

A theory of magnetic attraction and repugnance formulated by Tenzel Wirdig, professor at Rostock, who published his Fenphen Wirdig. Nova medexa spiritushe in 1873. Wirdig believed that everything in the universe possessed a soul, and that the Earth itself was merely a larger animal. Between the souls of things in accordance with each other there was a “magnetic sympathy” and a perpetual antipathy existed between those of an ungenial nature. To this sympathy and antipathy Wirdig gave the name magnetism. He stated:

“Out of this relationship of sympathy and antipathy arises a constant movement in the whole world, and in all its parts, and an uninterrupted communion between heaven and earth, which produces universal harmony. The stars whose emanations consist merely of fire and spirits, have an undeniable influence on earthly bodies; and their influence on man demonstrates itself by life, movement, and warmth, those things without which he cannot live. The influence of the stars is the strongest at birth. The newborn child inhales this influence, and on whose first breath frequently his whole constitution depends, nay, even his whole life.”

Wisconsin Phalanx

A Spiritualist community, based upon the doctrines of communalist Francois Fourier, founded by Warren Chase in 1844. Chase had settled in Southport, Wisconsin, in 1838, and with his wife and child, he lived there for a time in poverty. At length, however, their circumstances improved and Chase attained to a position of civic honor in Southport. During this time he studied mesmerism and socialism with the aid of a few periodicals such as La Roy Sunderland’s Magnet and the New York Tribune, and he was filled with the idea of founding a community where his ideals of social order and harmony might be carried out.

With the aid of his friends, he formed such a community. Each member had a share of 25 dollars. The chosen settlement—near the town of Ripon—was christened “Ceresco,” in honor of Ceres, the Roman goddess of agriculture. For six years the Wisconsin Phalanx flourished, with Chase acting as its leader and ruling spirit.

But dissension arose, and in 1850 the community was dissolved. When its affairs were closed, a considerable profit fell to its members. In all, it was one of the more successful Spiritualist communes of the time. (See also Apostolic Circle; Mountain Cove Community)

Sources:

Wissenschaftliche Gesellschaft zur Förderung der Parapsychologie

The Wissenschaftliche Gesellschaft zur Förderung der Parapsychologie (Scientific Society for the Advancement of Parapsychology), founded in 1981 by Eberhard Bauer, Walter von Lucadou, and German researchers interested in parapsychology, sponsors and promotes research in universities and similar research institutions. Psychical research had been stamped out in Germany during the Nazi regime and faced a difficult period of recovery after World War II. Several attempts to found parapsychological associations have failed, but this society succeeded in a unique way and through the 1980s was able to secure a membership, among whom were a number of professors in leading German schools. Last known address: Abteilung für Psychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie, Albert-Ludwigs-Universität, Freiburg i. Br., Belforrstrasse 16, 7800 Freiburg i. Br., Germany.

Witch Balls

Decorative items made of glass or metal, used as ornaments and to avert ill fortune or witchcraft. These appear to date from the end of the eighteenth century. One variety favored by antique collectors and occultists is that manufactured in Nailsea, near Bristol, England. These balls are full of swirling colors.
Witchcraft

The word “witchcraft” derives from the Saxon wicca, sometimes translated as “wise person” but more accurately derived from an Indo-European root, “wek,” that produced words in various Western languages related to magic, religion, and divination. Currently, the word is used to designate a variety of very different but vaguely related phenomena including, but not limited to, (1) the magical/religious practitioners in a variety of third world pre-industrial societies; (2) the Satanism described in the anti-witchcraft books beginning in the late fifteenth century in Europe; (3) the Neopagan followers of Wicca, the religion started by Gerald B. Gardner in the 1940s; and (4) individuals (primarily female) who are reputed to have psychic abilities.

Interpretations of Historic Witchcraft

Throughout the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, the figure of the European witch was interpreted and reinterpreted in numerous ways, depending on the orientations of the scholars involved. They described her (typically) as variously an anti-social practitioner of malevolent magic; as a pro-social healer, midwife, and magician condemned by churches and universities; as a victim of mental illness or of accidental poisoning by mind-altering plants; or as a deliberate user of mind-altering plants who sought a shamanic “soul flight.” She was either the follower of a Satanik religion developed in opposition to Christianity, or she was the inheritor of pre-Christian Paganism. She was supported by her neighbors, or she was the unfortunate scapegoat for social tensions, a lonely victim with no family to protect her. These different pictures of the typical witch of the Burning Times or the Great Hunt (both terms for the persecutions that peaked in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries) in turn reflect the sympathies of the writers, whether pro or anti-Catholic, socially rebellious, socially conservative, feminist, or Neopagan. These different perspectives on historical European witchcraft have also influenced what is today called Neopagan Witchcraft, a new religious movement.

Since the mid-1970s, historians have more closely examined the court records of witch trials in various European countries (and in the American colonies). They have studied the verdicts, punishments, social status of accused witches, lists of goods confiscated from the accused, and other evidence. In one notable case, scholarly re-examination of older work revealed a major forgery, a portion of Etienne Leon de Lamothe-Langon’s Histoire de l’Inquisition en France (History of the French Inquisition), written in 1829. Lamothe-Langon’s description of huge 14th-century witch trials with hundreds of executions in the South of France turned out to be complete inventions by the writer—who had also written a profitable series of “gothic” horror novels with titles like The Monastery of the Black Friars.

Today, informed estimates of the total deaths in central and western Europe range from 40,000 to 50,000, much lower than the millions once claimed. Contrary to the picture created by writers such as Lamothe-Langon, the Inquisition (an arm of the Roman Catholic Church created in 1234 to combat heresy) did not execute many witches; secular courts were more likely to condemn accused witches than were church courts. As many or more accused witches were executed in Protestant lands as in Catholic countries, and the witch trials did not peak until 1550-1650, a period that historians describe as “early modern” rather than “medieval.”

During the early Middle Ages, Church writers were more likely to insist that witchcraft was a delusion and that priests should discourage their congregations from believing that anyone could cast spells or fly through the air in the entourage of a Pagan deity. The famous Canon Episcopi, publicized in the tenth century but possibly of earlier date, stated that it was heretical to believe in witchcraft, not to practice it. This ecclesiastical legal document, like others of its kind, urged bishops and priests to combat the practice of sorcery, but also suggested that people who believed that they were witches were deluded by the Devil. Another set of church ordinances from the late eighth century demanded the death penalty not for the witch, but for the person who murdered an alleged witch—again, because believing in witches was a Pagan superstition.

After the Black Death swept Europe in the 1340s, mysteriously killing thousands of people, Europeans were more likely to accept conspiracy theories involving enemies of Christianity, defined variously as heretics, Muslims, Jews or possibly witches. Officers of the Inquisition now began to expand their scope from Christian dissenters and heretics, such as Cathars and Waldensians, to people who supposedly had chosen to follow a diabolical anti-Christian religion (rather than a lingering Paganism). New manuals for witch-hunters appeared, such as the infamous Malleus Maleficarum, or “Hammer of Witches,” a book that although authored by Dominican monks was used and reprinted equally by Protestant witch-hunters in Germany and England. By the sixteenth century, the witches’ sabbat was regarded by authorities as a parody of the Christian Sabbath, the worshipful aspect of which undermined the residence of many of the visages in the word “sabbat,” clearly derived from the Jewish Sabbath, indicates the way in which medieval and early modern Christians tended to blur distinctions between all perceived enemies of Christianity, whether Jews, Muslims, Pagans, or perceived sorcerers and witches.)

The witches themselves told a story—usually after torture—of taking off their clothes and anointing their bodies with a special unguent or ointment. They then strode across a stick, or any similar article, and, muttering a charm, were carried through the air to the place of meeting in an incredible short space of time. Sometimes the stick was to be anointed as well as the witch. They generally left the house by the window or by the chimney, which perhaps suggests survival of the custom of an earth-dwelling people. Sometimes the witch went out by the door, and there found a demon in the shape of a goat, or at times of some other animal, who carried her away on his back, and brought her home again after the meeting was dissolved.

In the confessions extorted from them, the witches bore testimony to the truth of all these details, but those who judged them, and who wrote upon the subject, asserted that they had many other independent proofs in corroboration.

Powers of Witches

In the eyes of the populace, the powers of witches were numerous. The most peculiar of these were: The ability to blight by means of the evil eye, the sale of winds to sailors, power over animals, and the power of witches to transform themselves into animal shapes.

Witches were also believed to possess the power of making themselves invisible, by means of a magic ointment supplied to them by the Devil, and of harming others by thrusting nails into a waxen image representing them.

New research has shown that witch trials were more likely to occur in areas of political instability and religious conflict. Hence both Germany and Switzerland, each a patchwork of small political entities and divided between Catholics and Protestants, witnessed more witch trials than did France or Spain. In late seventeenth-century Spain, after an outbreak of witchcraft accusations in the Basque region (shared with France), a lawyer for the Spanish Inquisition convinced its supreme council not to prosecute. Instead, the council ordered an “Edict of Silence” forbidding further discussion of witchcraft. In that Spanish case and others, local secular authorities went around the Catholic Church and appealed to the king for the right to try witches. The king agreed with their request, and accused witches began to be sentenced until the Inquisition stopped the process on the grounds that this was church business only.
By the eighteenth century, however, fewer educated Europeans believed in spell-casting, witches flying through the sky, or other typical accusations of the Great Hunt. Thinkers of the Enlightenment such as Voltaire (1694–1778) had denounced the witch trials as the product of religious bigotry, whether Catholic or Protestant, supported by superstitious monarchs across Europe. They hoped that new, more rational attitudes would produce societies where such events could not occur.

In America, the Salem witch trials of the 1690s were similarly seen as the product of a repressive Puritan church struggling to hold onto power. Nineteenth-century American historian George Bancroft’s History of the United States used the Salem trials to condemn Puritan “supersition,” as did the poet and editor James Russell Lowell. As part of the nineteenth-century struggle for authority between science and religion, the witchcraft trials were entered into as examples of the excesses of religion. This view tended to overlook the fact that secular courts were as likely or more likely to execute accused witches than were religious courts, producing the slightly skewed stereotype of “medieval” witches being hauled before the “Inquisition.”

The Witch as Romantic Rebel

This anti-clerical view of the medieval and early modern witch as the victim of superstitious churchmen was strengthened by a new nineteenth-century view of the witch as a Romantic rebel or outlaw—an idea which partly underlies the new religion of Neopagan Witchcraft. It connects with the romanticization of medieval life (and of rural nineteenth-century life) by writers such as Sir Walter Scott and Thomas Hardy, both of whom described fictional “cunning women” or solitary rural witches in their novels. A leading proponent of this new Romantic view of witches was the French writer Jules Michelet, a fervent anti-Catholic and anti-monarchist, who produced numerous books of history, natural history, and social reform. Advocating a turn from Christianity to worship of a Great Mother Goddess such as Isis, Michelet held that women were morally superior to men, and that their persecution as witches in former centuries was an attack on the elites on both the rights of women and the working classes. Michelet took the position of the Malalus Maleficiarum that women were innately drawn to witchcraft and made a positive good of it. Medieval witchcraft, he declared in his 1862 book La Sorcière, had been an original version of rural religion led by female priestesses—a view which was to resonate with later maverick writers on witchcraft such as Charles Leland and Margaret Murray. Had the witches worshipped Satan, as their accusers claimed? Indeed they had. Michelet wrote, for “Satan was merely the god of fertility and the patron deity of those persons condemned by kings and bishops and their henchmen. Although he did little actual research for La Sorcière, Michelet succeed in introducing ideas that would be taken up by later generations of non-academic writers and by unconventional academics. One was the idea that witches were healers and midwives persecuted by a male-dominated medical establishment; another was that the persecuted witches represented traces of a secret Pagan religion.

Michelet’s advocacy of a Mother Goddess religion helped reinforce a new current in nineteenth-century scholarship: that witches were healers and midwives persecuted by a male-dominated medical establishment; another was that the persecuted witches represented traces of a secret Pagan religion.

Times, a figure which although wildly inflated continues to be repeated by some persons today.

Witches, Drugs, and Shamans

As the nineteenth century closed, two interpretations of the medieval and early modern witchcraft period were gaining adherents. One interpretation, suggested above, held that the persecuted witches were leaders and followers of an underground pre-Christian religion. The second, somewhat related to the first, was that at least some of the accused practiced an underground form of European shamanism, utilizing an ancient tradition of entheogenic plants such as Amanita mushrooms and members of the solanaceous plant genus such as henbane, mandrake, belladonna, and datura.

During the height of the Great Hunt, the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, some lawyers and physicians had made their own tests of the unguments or “flying ointments” seized from accused witches, attempting to learn their compositions and effects. At the time, these men were advancing a counter-argument to the witch-hunters’ position that the witches worshiped Satan. No, said such men as Andrés Laguna, physician to Pope Julius III, the witches were merely “wretched ones,” deluded by drugs, who firmly believe that they have done in a waking state all of that which they dream while sleeping.

Theologian Nicholas Remy, writing at the height of the trials, in the late 1590s, made numerous references to witches smearing their bodies with oils and ointments, noting, “Now if witches, after being aroused from an ‘iron’ sleep, tell of things they have seen in places so far distant as compared with the short period of their sleep, the only conclusion is that has been some unsubstantial journal like that of the soul.”

In an account published in 1555, Laguna described one of his experiments, using “a jar half filled with a certain green unguent” confiscated from some accused witches, which he believed was prepared with “cold” herbs such as henbane or mandrake. He took the mixture to another city, where he gave it to the wife of the public hangman. This woman suffered from insomnia, lying awake with worry because she thought her husband was unfaithful to her. “On being anointed,” Laguna wrote, “she suddenly slept such a profound sleep, with her eyes open like a rabbit, that I could not imagine how to wake her. By every means possible, with strong ligatures and rubbing her extremities, with effusions of oil of costus-root and official spurge, with fumes and smoke in her nostrils, and finally with cupping glasses, I so hurried her that at the end of thirty-six hours she regained her senses and memory: although the first words she spoke were: ‘Why do you wake me at such an inopportune time? I was surrounded by all the pleasures and delights of the world, my husband casting her eyes on her husband (who was there all stinking of hanged men), she said to him, smiling: ‘Knavish one, know that I have made you a cuckold, and with a lover younger and better than you, and she said many other and very strange things.’”

Such experiments led Laguna and some of his contemporaries, including some clergy, to a conclusion that the theologians and demonologists were wrong: the flights through the air, feasts and orgies, encounters with Satan and other fantastic experiences reported by (or tortured out of) the accused witches were real results of using psychedelic drugs.

These earlier accounts of experiments with witches’ unguments led to new experiments using old recipes in the late nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Karl Kiesewetter, a German scholar of the occult, reported dreams of flying after reproducing some of the old ointments; his later experiments were fatal. The pharmacologist Gustav Schenk wrote in The Book of Poisons that he experienced the sensations of flying through the clouds after breathing the smoke of burning henbane seeds. As interest in entheogenic or psychedelic drugs increased in the 1950s, anthropologists such as Michael Harner returned to the older writings about “flying ointments” in order to suggest that European witches took part in shamanic “soul flights,” projecting their consciousness into other realms of existence even while their physical bodies appeared to sleep. If parallel with the shamanism reported from other cultures around the world, these soul-journeys might be attempted to gain a cure for a sick person, for knowledge or simply for the experience.

Some of the same herbs, such as datura, have been tradition-ally used in India both for religious purposes, pleasure, and as poisons. Likewise, the fly agaric mushroom, Amanita muscaria, has been proposed as the source of soma, the drink of the gods in the ancient Hindu scriptures. Unlike the peyote and ayahuas-cia of the New World, plants such as henbane, datura or fly agaric can be fatally poisonous—they continue to claim victims today. Therefore, if sixteenth-century witches such as Laguna’s indeed were using them, they likely were heirs to an under-ground tradition of safe preparation and use, although we do not know what form such a shamanic tradition might have taken.

Witchcraft as “The Old Religion”

The identity and motives of the witches and their accusers continue to be re-interpreted. In the period from 1890 to 1930, however, the most in-depth examination of the trials actually happened, but produced a genuine new religion. That was the theory that the witches followed an underground pre-Christian religion. Even though most modern scholars reject the notion, it contributed to the birth of today’s fast-growing Neopagan Witchcraft.

Charles Godfrey Leland, an American lawyer, political jour-nalist, and folklorist who lived a number of years in the Italian city of Florence, produced three books in the 1890s arguing that some Italian peasants, through their innate religious conservatism, maintained not only a pre-Christian but a pre-Roman religion, dating to the days of the ancient Etruscan culture. Camouflag:ed with Catholic saints’ names and other details, this hidden “Old Religion” maintained its own deities, creation stories, prayers, and rituals, Leland wrote, describing these surviving bits of Paganism as “something more than a sorcery and something less than a faith.” His most influential book, Aradia: or the Gospel of the Witches, published in 1899, synthesized traditional legends with material gathered for him by a woman known as Maddalena or Margherita (her surname may have been Talenti) and translated from local dialects into standard Italian. Which Leland solicited and wrote moderately well. Aradia, which Leland claimed was originally a Semitic god-dess name, is described as the daughter of Diana, goddess of darkness, and Lucifer, god of light. Aradia comes to earth, and in the style of Michelet, she teaches her ceremonies to outlaws and outcasts, as well as the secrets of poisoning corrupt feudal lords. What remains problematic about Aradia is the source of Leland’s witchcraft gospel. Is it genuine, or did Maddalena herself concoct it to please her wealthy American patron, or did Leland shape it from a body of genuine invocations, stories, and folk practices?

Twenty years after Leland’s work, the English archaeologist Margaret Murray (1862–1965) developed her own version of the “Old Religion” through her reading of witch-trial records from the British Isles and France. A recognized Egyptologist, Murray turned her attention to the witch-cult problem while World War I prevented her from working in Egypt. Her 1921 book The Witch Cult in Western Europe and its two successors laid out an apparently clear picture of the Old Religion. Even though that picture has largely been refuted by more recent historians as Ronald Hutton, Julette Rose, L’Estrange Ewen, and Ronald Hutton, its evocative power threatened to overwhelm the former academically accepted idea of the medieval and early modern witches as victims of big-otry, social stresses, and mob psychology. Many followers of modern Witchcraft continue to accept large portions of Mur- ray’s version of earlier witchcraft.

In essence, her version was this. The “witch cult” was a pre-Christian religion centered on a fertility god (somewhat parallel to the Greek Pan), whom Christian theologians deliberately confused with their Devil in order to persecute the witches. This god was often depicted with horns, and a man portrayed and embodied him during group rituals. (Murray had much less to say about goddesses than did Leland.) Covens of witches, ideally consisting of thirteen persons, grouped together at four major holidays—Candelmas, around 1 February; May Day; Lammas, around 1 August; and All Hallows or Hallowe’en. These large-group meetings, with their feastings and fertility rituals, alternated with smaller meetings (“esbats”) for spell-casting and other local witch business.

In medieval England, Murray claimed, the Old Religion had been protected by the Plantagenet dynasty of kings, beginning with William the Conqueror in 1066. The “old kings” who had to die as sacrificial victims or else find a substi-tute after they had reigned for seven years, or a multiple of seven years. Murray held that the murder in 1170 of the archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas à Becket (later made a saint) supposedly at the orders of King Henry II, his lifelong friend, was actually the substitution of a voluntary victim for the king himself. Murray also maintained that the French mystical war-rior maiden Joan of Arc (1412–1431) was in fact a “witch,” and the “old kings,” among whom she was present at its creation, for no solid evidence exists of a religious continuity with the “Old Religion.” This underground religion, in Murray’s view, permeated medieval society, and its followers left traces in the carvings on Christian churches and in folklore.

Murray’s views were almost immediately attacked by histori-ans who pointed out that she manipulated evidence, lifted quo-tations from witch-trial records out of context, and ignored evi-dence that did not fit her theory. But her picture of the “Old Religion” was embraced by many folklorists, occultists, and all those who wanted to believe that British rural life retained traces of ancient Paganism, even after 1500 years of Christiani-ty.

Neopagan Witchcraft

Neopagan Witchcraft is the only worldwide religion to have begun in England. Its apparent birth date lies between 1939 and 1951, when the Witchcraft Act of 1735 was repealed by Parliament and reports about people claiming to follow the religion of Witchcraft began appearing in British newspapers. Contemporary Witchcraft appears to have multiple parents, and historians of religion continue to debate who exactly was present at its creation, for no solid evidence exists of a religious continuity with pre-Christian Paganism. This new religion of Witchcraft (usually capitalized it differentiate from definitions 1, 2, and 4 above) has grown rapidly in all English-speaking countries and in Western Europe, aided by its compatibility with the feminist and environmental movements. It is often referred to as Wicca, although some Neopagan Witches limit that term to the “tradition” founded by Gerald Gardner (see below), and as “The Craft,” a term borrowed from Freemasonry along with certain aspects of Masonic ritual.

The most public figure associated with the new religion of Witchcraft was Gerald Gardner (1884–1964). Gardner spent most of his adult life in Britain’s Asian colonies serving and managing tea plantations and later working for the colonial customs service in Malaya. He and his wife retired to England in 1936. During his time in Asia, his lifelong interest in magic and the supernatural led him both to the Masonic order and to visits with Buddhists priests, tribal shamans, spiritualists, and any other practitioners he chanced across.

In 1949 Gardner published an adventure novel, High Magic’s Aid, set in the Middle Ages and incorporating mundane and esoteric magic. He claimed that he had met members of a sur-viving witches’ coven shortly before World War II, operating under the cover of the Rosicrucian Theatre at Christchurch, Hampshire, and headed by a wealthy widow. He had been ac-ccepted into the group, which performed a magical ritual dur-ing the summer of 1940 to stop the threatened German invatwo more British Witches of Gardner’s lineage, Ray and Rosemary Buckland, moved to Long Island, New York, in the mid-1960s and many American and Canadian “Gardnervian” Witches trace their initiatory lineage to them.

Meanwhile, modern Pagan religions were being developed independently in the United States and elsewhere during the 1960s, including Feraferia in Los Angeles, The Church of All Worlds in St. Louis, and others. However, as more books about Witchcraft were being published, including an edition of the basic Gardnerian ritual manual, the Book of Shadows, in 1973, followers of these new movements tended to adopt many of the key characteristics of Gardner’s tradition—or else to define themselves in opposition to it. Those saying that they followed some other form of Witchcraft often cast it in ethnic terms such as Italian or Scottish. Other forms of Witchcraft include women-only groups (often called “Dianic” Witchcraft) and male-only groups, including the Radical Faeries.

By the 1980s, most elders and leaders in Witchcraft began to distance themselves from claims of an unbroken pre-Christian religious tradition, saying instead that their practices were inspired by ancient Paganism but adapted to the present times. Whether known as Wicca or Witchcraft, this new religious movement grew steadily from the 1970s to the present, typically among people in their twenties and thirties. The Cold War expansion of the American military provided one means, as Wiccan personnel shuttled between the United States, Europe, and elsewhere. Neopagan Witchcraft is now found throughout the English-speaking world and parts of Europe, particularly Germany, the Netherlands, and Scandinavia.

The historian Ronald Hutton describes these common characteristics of the “protein and eclectic” varieties of Neopagan Witchcraft: “They aim to draw out and enhance divinity within human beings, abolish the traditional Western distinction between religion and magic, [are] a mystery religion or a set of mystery religions [and their essence lies] in the creative performance of ritual.”

Estimates of total membership in North America range into the low millions, but since covens are fluid and ever-changing (and since not all Witches belong to covens), an accurate count is impossible. While Witchcraft has no sacred scriptures, modern Witches have produced dozens of books on the practice of their religion. Notable authors, besides those named, include Stewart and Janet Farrar, Starhawk, Scott Cunningham, Vivi-anne Crowley, Marion Weinstein, Margot Adler, Evan John Jones, and Michael Howard.

In the early 1970s, two organizations, the Church and School of Wicca and the Council of American Witches, began holding conventions for their members and other interested people in American hotels. By 1980, outdoor festivals began at campgrounds across the United States, beginning in the Midwest and spreading to both coasts, the South, and the Rocky Mountains. These provide a venue for the exchange of songs, ritual formats, and the merchandising of clothing, jewelry, and other artifacts of the Pagan lifestyle.

Sources:

Witchcraft Digest: Voice of the Old Religion

A short-lived supplement to the WICA Newsletter. It was edited by Leo Louis Martello and published by Witchcraft International Craft Association in New York City in the 1970s. Only a few issues appeared.

Witchcraft International Craft Association (WICA)

An early neopagan witchcraft organization founded in 1970 as the outward expression of the Sicilian Strege Wiccan tradition in America. WICA is led by Dr. Leo Louis Martello, who was a Spiritualist minister in New York City and was also known as a hypnotist and graphologist. Martello stepped into the spotlight within the Wiccan community through his authorship as a hypnotist and graphologist. Martello stepped into the spotlight within the Wiccan community through his authorship as a hypnotist and graphologist. Martello stepped into the spotlight within the Wiccan community through his authorship as a hypnotist and graphologist.

Witchcraft Anti-Defamation League (WADL)

An early organization in the contemporary neo-pagan witchcraft movement founded by Leo Louis Martello. It was designed “ . . . to educate the public, counteract false accusations, take legal steps, obtain IRS recognition, paid legal holidays (such as Halloween) for members, fight distortion and discrimination, sponsor seminars across the country, hold regular festivals.”

Neopagan witches claim that they are descendants of the pagan religions that held sway in Europe prior to the forced conversion of the population to Christianity. They do not believe in the Devil or practice Satanism. This view was presented in Martello’s book, Witchcraft: The Old Religion.

WADL functioned through the 1970s and was superseded by other similar organizations including the Aquarian Anti-Defamation League (1980s) and the presently existing Witches’ League for Public Awareness.

Witches’ Cradle

During the witchcraft persecutions in Europe, inquisitors were said to have sometimes put an accused witch in a bag, which was then strung up over the limb of a tree and set swinging. When witches learned about this punishment they experimented with it themselves and found that the sensory deprivation or confusion of senses it caused induced hallucinatory experiences. A similar technique has long been used by shamen and dervishes and is sometimes known as “dervish dangling.” It involves being suspended by a rope tied around the waist.

Modern researchers have followed up on this insight and developed, among other devices, the ASCID (Altered States of Consciousness Induction Device). The ASCID was devised by Robert Masters and Jean Houston of the Foundation for Mind Research. This technological-age witches’ cradle is a metal swing in which the subject stands while blindfolded and wearing earplugs. The motion of the swing exaggerates the slightest movement of the occupant. Profoundly altered states of consciousness involving hallucinatory visions and sensations often take place within 20 minutes.
Witte, Alfred (1878–1941)

German astrologer and founder of the Hamburg school of astrological interpretation. Witte was born in Hamburg, Germany, on March 2, 1878. As a young man, he worked for the city of Hamburg and then served in the German army during World War I. By the time the war started, he had become interested in astrology and pursued his speculations while soldiering. He discovered a certain moving point in the zodiac that he found helpful in interpreting charts and he hypothesized the existence of a trans-Neptunian planet which he called Capido. Such a planet would be discovered in 1930 and named Pluto.

After the War, Witte gathered a group of astrologers, especially Friedrich Sieggrün (1877–1951), to assist in developing his insights. The results were an innovative system of astrology that came to be known as Uranian Astrology or the Hamburg School, after Witte's hometown. As the system developed, Witte postulated first three additional planets, named Hades, Zeus, and Kronos, and then four additional imaginary planets. Criticism of the additional planets, unknown to anyone except Witte and his associates, was balanced by the good reports of satisfied clients.

Witte also introduced the idea of midpoints, another imaginary addition to the horoscope. As the name implies, a midpoint is a point halfway between any two planets in the chart. The combined influences of the two planets are evident at the midpoint. This combined influence is activated by planets in the present transiting the midpoint. The two planets and their midpoint together made a planetary picture and the various planetary pictures become an important element in chart interpretation.

The Hamburg School, as the Witte-Sieggrün system of interpretation was called, created a controversy in Germany for its challenge to traditional methods of astrological interpretation. Witte defended the system, for which he claimed outstanding results not provided by more traditional charts in several books, beginning with Regelwerk für Planetenbilder (1928).

Witte's system never gained support outside Germany and did not reemerge from the Nazi suppression of astrology in the 1930s. His system was renewed after World War II by Hermann Lefeldt after the war. Lefeldt published both the original German edition of Witte's book and an English translation. After the rise of Nazism and the resulting suppression of astrology, the system developed, Witte postulated first three additional planets, named Hades, Zeus, and Kronos, and then four additional imaginary planets. Criticism of the additional planets, unknown to anyone except Witte and his associates, was balanced by the good reports of satisfied clients.

Sources:

The Wolf

Among the ancient Romans, there were many tales in which the wolf figured as a good or evil omen. A wolf running to the right with his mouth full was a sign of great joy. If a wolf escaped unhurt after he had entered a Roman camp, it was regarded as a sign of the army's defeat, and the terrible result of the second Punic War was said to have been foretold when a wolf carried off the sword of a sentinel.

Plutarch related the story of a wolf who ate the landmarks of a proposed new settlement in Libya and thus stopped its colonization, but later another wolf, which had stolen a burnt sacrifice, led his pursuers to the place where they later settled. It is said that a wolf ran off with Hiero's sable when he was a schoolboy, and this was regarded as a sign of his future greatness.

The peasants of Sweden used to avoid speaking of a wolf by name but called it "grey one" or "old grey"; speaking its name was seen as unlucky.

The wolf is featured in Roman mythology in the story of Romulus and Remus, and throughout history there have been stories of feral children—orphans reared by wolves. For a modern case, see Charles Maclean, The Wolf Children (1978). As the werewolf the wolf was the most popular animal mentioned in accounts of lycanthropy.

Wolfsohn, Alfred (1896–1962)

German singing teacher who ran a school of psychophysical vocal development in England during the 1940s and 1950s and revived legends of the occult power of sound. During World War II he served in the trenches and suffered a breakdown; he was haunted by the sound of a voice calling for help. When the Nazis came to power, he was deeply impressed by the evil power associated with the voice of Adolf Hitler, which was amplified over street corners and the great square at Nuremberg and moved people to destructive acts of folly, hatred, ambition, and unspeakable cruelty.

Wolfsohn played a significant role in the life of artist Charlotte Salomon, and he features in her posthumous autobiography Leben und Theater (1981). Wolfsohn had been engaged by Salomon's stepmother, opera singer Paula Lindberg. Salomon, a German Jew, was murdered in the Auschwitz extermination camp by the Nazis, but her paintings and prose had been left with a doctor in France before she was arrested. Salomon's book has been compared with The Diary of Anne Frank, and it was the basis of the film Charlotte by Dutch director Frans Weisz.

Before he escaped from Germany to serve with the British forces, Wolfsohn had the idea that it must be possible for the voice to have positive power. He also believed that ordinary men and women had potentialities seldom seen, but when placed under stress, they could achieve feats of physical endurance, run faster, see further, shout louder, or bear pain in a way they had not believed possible. Wolfsohn became a kind of voice doctor, working to restore fine and beautiful tones to singers suffering from fear or overstrain and also developed a kind of psychotherapy around the vocal possibilities of ordinary individuals.

In his studio in London, England, he experimented to prove that the conventional musical classifications of male and female voices from bass to soprano were artificial divisions, and that any normal human male or female could develop the whole range in a single voice and in the process discover heightened consciousness.

Wolfsohn’s work has been described as a spontaneous revival of what is known as surat shabd yoga (the yoga of sound vibration), as taught by the Radhaasamti Sat Sang and other spiritual teachers such as Swami Nadabrahmananda of Swami Sivananda's Divine Life Society. After Wolfsohn's death, some members of his group carried on under his pupil Roy Hart, and a film was made of their remarkable performances. The group tended to concentrate on a new application of extended vocal range in theater rather than in musical sound. Roy Hart also died soon afterward, in 1975, but the members of his group have carried on his work.
The only extant record of the work of Wolfsohn's pupils is the album Vox Humana issued by Folkways Records, New York, in 1956. Former pupils of Wolfsohn who adapted his techniques to theater under Roy Hart as the Roy Hart Theatre Group can be reached at Chateau de Malerargues, Thoiras, Aduze 30140, France. The therapeutic aspect of Wolfsohn's work has been carried on by Derek Gale at the Gale Centre for Creative Therapy.

Wood, C. E. (1854—?)

British materialization medium. She was born in October 1854. In 1873, at the age of 18, she was employed, with Annie Fairlamb, as an official medium by the Newcastle Spiritual Evidences Society. Fairlamb was a year younger. Both mediums appeared to have demonstrated telekinesis. Wood had shown the first signs of psychic power a year before at a meeting of the society to which she had been taken by her father, a mechanic. She studied with the society for three years.

In 1874, partial materializations were obtained. Over the next few years there were some outstanding phenomena reported. For example, T. B. Barkas, a prominent Newcastle investigator, wrote in the Medium and Daybreak (May 4, 1877):

"I have seen, through the mediumship of Miss Wood, in a private house, living forms walk from the curtained recess, which it was utterly impossible for her to simulate. I have seen children, women and men of various ages, walk forth under her mediumship. I have seen a materialised form and the medium at the same time. I have had through her mediumship a child-like form standing beside me for about half an hour together; the child has placed its arms around my neck and permitted me at the same time to place my arm around her neck, and has laid its cheek against mine, breathed upon my face, and, in fact, caressed me precisely as a child would do its parent or guardian. This was not in darkness but in light, and in the presence of professors and fellows of one of the leading universities in the kingdom. I have, under these conditions, and after having handled the psychic form, seen it gradually vanish or dematerialise and become invisible in the middle of the room."

Barkas also remarked that "she is subject to strange controls, which there is some difficulty in banishing." Alfred Smedley, in Some Reminiscences (1900), also reported on séances with Wood. While the medium was enclosed in a white sheet, a "vivacious coloured little sprite about three feet high" not only came out of the cabinet, but "went to my wife who was sitting 4 or 5 feet from the cabinet, took her hand, and as my wife leaned downwards she put her tiny arms round her neck and kissed her. Crossing the room, the medium tacked down to the floor, covered with sealing wax, and sealed. As the medium lay on a mattress on the bare floor, the light was sufficient to see phantom figures of children and adults issuing from the cabinet. The tapes, knots, and seals were found afterward to be untouched.

Morell Theobald (at one time involved in a massive fraudulent mediumship scandal) in his book Spirit Workers in the Home Circle (1887) had some moving if nonevidential observations of Wood. "Pocka," a "vivacious coloured little sprite about three feet high" not only came out of the cabinet, but "went to my wife who was sitting 4 or 5 feet from the cabinet, took her hand, and as my wife leaned downwards she put her tiny arms round her neck and kissed her." Crossing the room, the medium tacked down to the floor, covered with sealing wax, and sealed. As the medium lay on a mattress on the bare floor, the light was sufficient to see phantom figures of children and adults issuing from the cabinet. The tapes, knots, and seals were found afterward to be untouched.

Sources:

Woodhull, Victoria Clafin (1838–1927)

American Spiritualist, social reformer, and feminist. Born September 23, 1838, in Homer, Licking County, Ohio, she traveled with a medicine show when only a child, giving demonstrations of fortune-telling and Spiritualist séances together with her younger sister Tennessee (1846–1923). Victoria married Canning Woodhull, a physician, before she was 16, was divorced in 1864, and later remarried twice.

In 1868 the sisters moved to New York City where they met Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was interested in Spiritualism. Vanderbilt installed them in a stock-brokerage office as Woodhull, Clafin & Company, where the "Lady Brokers" made considerable profits. From this enterprise they founded the journal Woodhull and Clafin's Weekly in 1870. This publication advocated equal rights for women, free love, and other feminist issues.

In 1871, Victoria Woodhull spoke on women's rights before the House Judiciary Committee and became a prominent leader in the cause of women's suffrage. In 1872 she was the first woman to be nominated for the presidency, sponsored by the Equal Rights Party. Although she did not expect to be elected, she and her sister publicized their cause and attracted much attention by attempting to vote.

The February 2, 1872, issue of their Weekly contained a sensational story alleging intimacy between Henry Ward Beecher and the wife of Theodore Tilton. This scandal was reported largely to discredit Beecher's sisters, who had attacked the Weekly's stand on free love. In the event, Beecher went on a trial for adultery, but was exonerated. Interestingly enough the Weekly was the first periodical in the United States to publish the Communist Manifesto.

In 1877, the sisters moved to England, where they continued to publicize women's rights. Victoria Woodhull married a wealthy London banker and became well known for charitable work. With her daughter, Zula Maud Woodhull, Woodhull published Humanitarian magazine from 1892 to 1910. She died in England June 10, 1927.

Sources:

1684
Woodruff, Joseph L(eroy) (1913–1988)

Professor of psychology active in the field of parapsychology. He was born October 8, 1913, in Galesburg, Illinois. He studied at Tarkio College, Missouri (B.A., 1936) and Duke University (M.A., 1939; Ph.D., 1941). While at Duke, Woodruff, in conjunction with Joseph G. Pratt, conducted one of the most famous ESP tests, still generally considered one of the best ever carried out in parapsychology.

In 1946 he began a lengthy tenue teaching psychology at the City College of New York. For some years Woodruff conducted quantitative research in extrasensory perception, with particular reference to the relationship between certain subjective aspects of card-calling and success in calling. In 1959 he became the secretary of the board of trustees of the American Society for Psychical Research. He was also a charter member of the Parapsychological Association. He died July 23, 1988.

Sources:
- Woodruff, Maurice (1916–1973)

Famous clairvoyant whose American television shows attracted a large audience. His syndicated column reached nearly fifty million people and at the height of his career he was receiving 5,000 letters a week from individuals seeking advice. He had a reputation for highly accurate predictions made under any conditions, without special atmosphere or restrictions. He forecast the end of the Vietnam War, the death of President John F. Kennedy, and many other important world events. He died from a heart attack January 28, 1973, while in Singapore.

Daughter of Episcopal minister and psychical researcher Elwood Worcester. She was born July 25, 1896, in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. She attended Bryn Mawr College (1913–17) and Radcliffe College, Cambridge, Massachusetts (B.A., 1921). She worked with James H. Hyslop and Walter Franklin Prince on the study of spontaneous parapsychological phenomena during the 1920s and 1930s and later with Gardner Murphy and J. B. Rhine. She died in August of 1986.

Worcester, Elwood (1862–1940)

Episcopal clergyman, psychical researcher, and founder of the Emmanuel movement, which pioneered medicine and psychotherapy in conjunction with spiritual guidance for individuals with physical, mental, and nervous problems. Through James H. Hyslop he became interested in psychical research, and he was a founder of the Boston Society for Psychical Research, of which he was president from 1925 until his death. Worcester was born on May 16, 1862, in Massillon, Ohio. He studied at Columbia College, New York (B.A., 1886), General Theological Seminary, New York (1887), and Leipzig University (Ph.D., 1889). He was ordained in 1891. He served as rector at St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia (1896–1904) prior to his quarter of a century at Emmanuel Episcopal Church in Boston.
(1904–29). While at Emmanuel he began to work with a group of pioneering psychotherapists, including Joseph H. Pratt, Richard C. Cabot, and Isador H. Ciriat. Out of their collaboration emerged the Emmanuel movement, one of the early spiritual healing movements in mainline Protestantism (later superseded by the Order of St. Luke). In the mid 1920s, Worcester became associated with the group within the American Society for Psychical Research (ASPR) that believed that medium Mina Crandon was a fake. They left the organization and founded the Boston Society for Psychic Research in 1925. Worcester retired a few years later but continued to serve as the society’s president almost until the time it was reincorporated into the ASPR.

Worcester wrote a number of books, including several titles with Samuel McComb, who was for many years the associate rector at Emmanuel. He died July 19, 1940, at Kennebunkport, Maine.

Sources:

———. Life’s Adventure. New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1932.

World Congress of Faiths

Interfaith organization founded in 1936 by British explorer, soldier, and mystic Sir Francis Younghusband (1863–1942). The congress is dedicated to the work of reconciliation between different world faiths and the removal of intolerance and exclusivism, to “… instill a spirit of fellowship among mankind through religion, and… to revitalise all that is highest in man’s spiritual being.”

The congress combines dissemination of knowledge of world religions with the building of friendly relationships between them. It encourages interreligious understanding through personal contacts and frank dialogue and believes that all great religions have much to learn from each other.

The congress arranges lectures, debates, visits to religious centers, “All Faith Services,” and annual conferences. Speakers from different faiths give talks at schools and colleges. A journal, World Faiths Encounter, includes news of activities, book reviews, and articles of religious interest, and a newsletter, One Family, is published regularly. Although there are branches in Kent, Bath, and Bristol, the congress headquarters are located at 2 Market St., Oxford OX1 3EF England. Website: http://www.interfaith-center.org/wcf.

Sources:

World Goodwill

An organization founded in 1932 to apply the teachings of former Theosophist Alice A. Bailey (1880–1949) in the social context, specifically to improve human relations in the world. Bailey founded the Arcane School to propagate theosophical teachings that came through her channelings from the Tibetan Master, World Goodwill extends the work of the Arcane School by mobilizing the constructive power of goodwill in society to dealing with problems throughout the world. The organization supports the work of the United Nations and is recognized as an accredited nongovernmental organization. As such, it provides advice and assistance to individuals and groups concerned with world service projects. One of its activities has been the formation of triangles, a linkage of individuals who employ constructive thought in a daily meditation of groups of three, invoking “the energies of light and goodwill” in a “network of light.” The energies are visualized as circulating through three points of a triangle, connecting with other triangles. This network carries the “great invocation” or universal prayer, forming “a channel for the downpouring of light and love into the body of humanity.”

World Goodwill is associated with Lucis Trust, which is located at 120 Wall St., 24th Fl., New York, NY 10005. It also has subsidiary offices at 3 Whitcomb Ct., Ste. 54, London SW1A 2EF, England, and also in Geneva. Website: http://www.lucistrust.org/.

Sources:

World League of Illuminati

In 1880, Theodor Reuss, a druggist, singer, and student of the esoteric, launched an attempt to reactivate the Illuminati, the order originally founded by Adam Weishaupt (1748–1830) in 1776 and destroyed in 1785. The first lodge was opened in Munich, Germany. The Berlin lodge opened in 1895, and soon afterwards Reuss met an actor named Leopold Engel (1858–1931). They became involved in several activities, including the founding of the German section of the Theosophical Society. Engel was interested in all things psychic, and practiced mesmerism and naturopathic healing. Like Reuss, he also had the idea of reviving the Illuminati and had himself founded the World League of Illuminati in 1893. In 1896 he joined Russ’s Order of Illuminati and in 1899, they formally merged the two organizations.

On March 12, 1901, Reuss, Engel, and a group of their order members met and drafted a document that was backdated to the first day of the new century, January 1, 1900. It reestablished the then-dormant Munich lodge and asserted the order’s authority to found Masonic lodges. Reuss was affirmed as the order’s master. The founding of the new Munich lodge was duly announced as a regular Masonic lodge open to master Masons. Masons objected that it was merely an offshoot of the Illuminati and not Masonic. Reuss simply severed its connection with the Order of Illuminati. As a result, he and Engel quarreled. They patched up their relationship for a while, but in 1902 went their separate ways.

Actually, Reuss was losing his interest in the Illuminati. He renewed a relationship with Karl Kellner and began the process that would lead to the founding of the Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO). In the meantime, Engel reestablished the World League of the Illuminati and issued a new set of regulations at the beginning of 1903. Three years later, he issued a manifesto in the form of a history of the order. He took extra pains to separate his position from that of Reuss, now operating under the OTO banner.

The World League survived through the 1930s and drew on a variety of Masonic and Rosicrucian sources. Engel died on October 8, 1931. He was succeeded by Julius Meyer. Then on September 22, 1934, the League was closed down by the Gestapo, and much of its material confiscated. Work of the order was immediately transferred to the regional groups. As early as 1896, Engel had opened a group in Austria and a Swiss group was founded in 1929. A Polish group opened in 1937, but as with the Austrian group, it was closed after the Nazi takeover of the country. Only the Swiss group under Karl Brodbeck operated through World War II (1939–45).

Meyer was able to revive what was now known as the Illuminaten Orden (IO) after the war. He charged Maximilian Haitz with the task of reassembling the archive that the Gestapo seized, which he was partially able to accomplish. Eduard Korbel revived the IO in Austria. Following Brodbeck's death in 1935, Hermann Joseph Metzger (1919–1990) assumed leadership of the Swiss IO. That same year, P. Kirchvogel passed that office to Metzger.

Metzger had already begun work on a master vision that included the uniting of a various Magical/occult lineages/activities in his person. In 1947 he had taken over a publishing house, Psychosophische Gesellschaft, following the death of its owner. In 1957 he had become a bishop, and then in 1960, the patriarch of the Gnostic Catholic Church, a church that traces its history to the apparition of the Virgin Mary and subsequent consecration to the bishopric of Jules Benoit Doinel (1842–1902). Metzger had also joined the Orden Tempi Orientis, the order cofounded by Reuss and passed to magician Aleister Crowley. In 1965, Crowley’s successor as Outer Head of the Orden, Karl Johannes Gernmer (1883–1962), died. Metzger held an election of the German-speaking leadership and in 1965 proclaimed himself the new Outer Head. The World League was merged into what Metzger called the Ordo Iltinatisorum (OI). The work of the new OI includes 13 degrees that borrow material from all of the different organizations over which Metzger had attained control. The 13th degree was the administrative degree for the international leadership of the World League, Julius Meyer having died in 1953. In 1963 Kirchvogel passed that office to Metzger.

Except for the physical world (the densest), our knowledge of them, so far as it extends, is dependent on clairvoyance. The more exalted the vision of the clairvoyant, the higher the world his or her vision can pierce. Each world has its appropriate inhabitants, clothed in appropriate bodies, and possessing appropriate states of consciousness.

According to theosophical belief, the two highest worlds, the divine and the monadic, are at present incapable of attainment by human powers, and the remaining five are attainable in greater or lesser degree. The monad (soul), for the purpose of gathering experience, finds it necessary to pass downward into the material sphere. When it has taken possession of the spiritual, intuitive, and higher mental worlds, it may be looked on as a soul embodying will, intuition, and intellect, continuing eternally the same entity, never altering except by reason of increasing development, and hence being immortal.

These worlds, however, do not afford sufficient scope to the monad and it presses still further down into matter, through the lower mental, and into the astral and physical worlds. The bodies with which it is there clothed are of the density of this personality suffers death and is renewed at each fresh incarnation, a process generally called reincarnation. At the death of the physical body, the ego has merely cast aside a garment that belongs to the material, the heavenly world. The ego finds itself somewhat strange in this situation, owing to insufficient development, and it again descends into matter as before. This round is completed again and again, and each time the ego returns with a fresh store of experience and knowledge, which strengthens and perfects the mental body.

When at last this process is complete, this body in turn is cast aside and the ego is clothed with its causal body. Again it finds itself strange and the cycle of descent into matter begins again and continues until the causal body has been fully developed. The two remaining worlds are imperfectly known, but the intuitional, as its name indicates, is that where the ego's vision is quickened to see things as they really are, and in the spiritual world the divine and human become united and the divine purpose is fulfilled. (See also Evolution of Life; Logos; Spheres)

World Union Journal

Bimonthly journal of the World Union Community propagating the teachings of Sri Aurobindo and the ideal of human unity. Last known address: World Union International, Pondicherry 2, India 605002.

Worrall, Ambrose Alexander (1899–1972)

Engineer and spiritual healer. He was born on January 18, 1899, at Barrow-in-Furness, Lancashire, England. He studied mechanical engineering. In 1928 he married Olga Nathalie Ripich Worrall. For 30 years (1924–64) he was employed by the Martin Company, Baltimore, Maryland, and worked as a consultant for various firms in the years after his retirement. He and his wife worked quietly as spiritual healers for many years, but their work gained a wider audience beginning in 1945 with the founding of the Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship) in the 1950s. They became leaders in the organization. They also contributed to the annual seminars on spiritual healing held by the Laymen’s Movement, Wainwright House, Rye, New York. Worrall’s interests included clairvoyance, clairaudience, clairsentience, psychokinesis, psychometry, and theories of survival. He lectured widely on ESP and spiritual healing at colleges, churches, and other associations and published several pamphlets on spiritual healing and related subjects. He died on February 2, 1972.
Worrall, Olga Nathalie Ripich (1906–1985)

Spiritual healer and associate director of New Life Clinic, Mount Washington Methodist Church, Baltimore, Maryland. She was born on November 30, 1906, in Cleveland, Ohio. In 1928 she married Ambrose Worrall and the two of them worked together for many years as healers. For many years prior to their marriage she healed the sick through a psychic talent that had manifested itself when she was eight. In addition to human beings, she healed cats, dogs, horses, chickens, and plants. In the 1950s, the Worralls associated with the newly-founded Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship (now the International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship), and for many years they were among the fellowship’s leading speakers and resource people.

Her special gift was of great interest to physicians, some of whom were her patients. One physician who sought her aid was John Cerutti, who had suffered from severe back pain for many years. Cerutti’s experience with the healer was so profound that his wife Edwina, originally a skeptic, was won over and eventually published a book about the healer: Olga Worrall, Mystic with the Healing Hands (1975). Following her husband’s death in 1972, Worrall continued to be active within the new wave of interest in alternative healing and during the 1970s became one of the most famous healers in the United States. In spite of her fame, she continued to focus her healing work in daily prayer sessions and with the New Life Clinic.

Worrall was also interested in the work of parapsychologists and on one occasion noted, “Since I am gifted in psychic abilities such as clairvoyance, etc. and spiritual healing, I am interested in the scientific research approach into parapsychological demonstrations motivated by personal experiences, especially in the areas of proving immortality and spiritual healing.”

Worrall wrote a number of pamphlets explaining her methods of prayer and healing and coauthored several books with her husband. She died January 9, 1985, in Baltimore, Maryland.

Sources:

Wortcunning

Anglo-Saxon term for knowledge of the medical and occult properties of plants. (See also Cunning)

Wraith

The apparition or double of a living person, generally supposed to be an omen of death. The wraith closely resembles its prototype in the flesh, even to details of dress. There are accounts of people seeing their own wraith, and among those who were warned of approaching death in this way are said to be Queen Elizabeth I, the poet Percy Bysshe Shelley, and Catherine of Russia. The latter, seeing her double seated upon the throne, ordered her guards to fire upon it.

But wraiths of others may appear to one or more persons. Lord Balcarres of Scotland saw the wraith of his friend “Bonnie Dundee” at the moment when the latter fell at the Battle of Killiecrankie, and the poet Ben Jonson saw his eldest son’s double when the original was dying of the plague.

The belief in the wraith flourishes in Europe, and in different parts of Britain it goes under different names, such as “waff,” “swarth,” “task,” and “fyre.” Variants are the Irish “fetch,” and the Welsh “Bedrith.”

In Scotland it was believed that the wraith of one about to die might be seen wrapped in a shroud. The higher the shroud reached, the nearer was the approach of death.

Something analogous to wraith-seeing comes within the scope of modern psychological science, and the apparition is explained in various ways, as an astral projection or an emanation from the person of its living prototype.

A well-known case is that of the Birkbeck Ghost, when three children witnessed the apparition of their mother shortly before her death. This instance, reported in Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research (vol. 1, 1882, pp. 121–122), is noteworthy because Mrs. Birkbeck was conscious before she died of having spent the time with her children. (See also J. W. Goe the: Vardoge)

Wrekin Trust

British based New Age organization, “concerned with the spiritual nature of Man and the Universe. It was not affiliated to any particular doctrine or dogma, did not offer any one way to ‘the truth’ and helps people find the disciplines most suited to them. After more than 12 years of pioneering courses and conferences on the holistic world view and introductory approaches to various disciplines, the Trust offered in addition, a curriculum for ongoing spiritual training. The inspiration was derived from the medieval concept of the University, which was concerned to find and orchestrate methods and systems of knowledge leading to union with the One, as the term ‘Univer sus,’ turned to the One, reveals.”

The trust was founded by Sir George Trevelyan in 1971 and was especially concerned with dissolving the barriers between science and religion. The trust had been honored with the Right Livelihood Award, known as the “Alternative Nobel Prize,” given in Stockholm for “Work forming an essential contribution to making life more whole, healing the planet, and uplifting humanity.”

The trust organized important conferences on science and mysticism, with papers from Glen W. Schaefer, Joselyn Godwin, and Pir Vilayat Inayat Khan. Last known address: Runnings Park, Croft Bank, West Malvern, Worcestershire WR14 4BP, England.

Sources:

Wriedt, Etta (ca. 1859–1942)

American professional direct voice medium who charged a nominal fee of one dollar for a successful séance. She never sat in a cabinet, did not pass into trance, and often joined in the conversation of the voices with the visitors.

1688
Admiral Usborne Moore, author of The Voices (1913), heard three voices talking at once, one in each ear, and one through the trumpet. Wriedt only spoke English, but the voices knew no linguistic limitation. On occasion Dutch, French, Spanish, Norwegian, and Arabic were heard.

Wriedt’s spirit control was an entity called “Dr. John Sharp,” who claimed that he was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in the eighteenth century, lived most of his life in the United States as an apothecary farmer, and died in Evansville, Indiana. He took great care of the medium—often at the nervous or psychic expense of the sitters. Moore found the strain on his system so great while sitting with the medium in Detroit that he did not recover his normal health until more than six weeks later.

Wriedt paid five visits to England. She came the first time in 1911, at the age of 31, on the invitation of W. T. Stead, and held sittings at Julia’s Bureau. In 1912 and 1913, the arrangements for her visits were made by Moore, and in 1915 and 1919 she sat chiefly in Rothesay, Scotland.

E. K. Harper, W. T. Stead’s secretary, recorded nearly 200 sittings with Wriedt. She often heard the direct voice in day-light. There were other features to the séance, such as luminous forms gliding about the room in the darkness. Sometimes dogs materialized and barked.

The spirit control “John King” claimed responsibility for the physical phenomena in England. Flowers were taken from vases and placed in the hands of sitters in the dark in different parts of the room. Invisible fingers touched the sitters and rapped by the trumpet to urge a hesitating person to answer promptly when spoken to. Luminous discs were seen to move inside the circle. The sitters were often sprinkled with drops of water, felt wafts of cool air, and saw heavy objects displaced.

From the spirit world, “W. T. Stead,” who died in the Titanic tragedy, frequently communicated and gave many particulars of his passing over. He said that he was struck on the head and drowned.

Wriedt could clairvoyantly read names “written up,” as she put it, in the dark. Once a name met without recognition. Suddenly “[John King’s] voice broke the silence: ‘You had better clear out, my friend, nobody knows you.’” Moore was greeted by the voice of “Grayfeather,” the Native American control of the medium J. B. Jenson of Detroit, who had never manifested before through Wriedt.

The psychical researcher William F. Barrett heard voices simultaneously with Wriedt. “Professor Henry Sidgwick” came through. Barrett stated:

> “Mrs. Wriedt doubtless had heard his name, but he died before she visited England, and I doubt if she, or many others who knew him by name, were aware that he stammered badly. So I asked the voice ‘Are you all right now?’ not referring to his stammering. Immediately the voice replied ‘You mean the impediment in my speech, but I do not stutter now.’ . . . I went to Mrs. Wriedt’s séances in a somewhat skeptical spirit, but I came to the conclusion that she is a genuine and remarkable medium, and has given abundant proof to others besides myself that the voices and the contents of the messages given are wholly beyond the range of trickery or collusion.”

Chedo Miyatovich, a Serbian diplomat and member of several learned societies, sat with Wriedt in the company of a Croatian lawyer friend, H. Hinkovitch, who had just arrived in London. Voices of deceased friends and relatives spoke to them in Serbian, Croatian, and at a later séance in German when Margarete Selenka of Germany was present.

An attempt to discredit Wriedt’s phenomena was made in Christiana in August 1912, by one Professor Birkenhead and state chemist L. Schmelck. They averred that the noises in the trumpet were caused by lycopodium, a mildly inflammable powder used by druggists to coat pills. Other chemists held the report up to ridicule, and it became known that Birkenhead was extremely deaf and could not judge voices at all.

Wriedt died in Detroit, Michigan, September 13, 1942.

Wyllie, Edward (1848–1911)

Spirit photographer. He was psychic from his childhood, which was spent in Calcutta. He served in the Maori War in New Zealand with the rank of captain and settled in California in 1886 as a photographer. Spots and lights threatened to ruin his business until a lady, who had heard of spirit photography, examined his plates and suggested this explanation.

The Pasadena [California] Society for Psychical Research investigated the case on November 27, 1900, in Los Angeles. Their report stated: “As a committee we have no theory, and testify only to that which we do know. Individually we differ as to probable causes, but unanimously agree concerning the palpable facts.” The committee promised $25 to any Los Angeles photographer who by trick or skill could produce similar results under similar conditions.

The early scene of Wyllie’s psychic photography was Sycamore Grove, near Los Angeles. He had to move from there as the psychic “extras” obtained were dissolute-looking men and women. It was suggested as an explanation that about 50 years earlier the place had been the scene of wild orgies. The authorities stamped them out, but the evil influences apparently clung to the place.

Wyllie was accused by P. A. Jensen in The Progressive Thinker of producing his spirit faces by superimposing a prepared negative. The basis of the charge was that a suspicious negative had been found in a house where Wyllie had been. But according to James Coates in Photographing the Invisible (1911), Jensen had not been able to produce a single case where the negative in question had been used.

Another charge was raised by a Dr. Woillard. He said that Wyllie, for a fee, taught him how to take spirit pictures. His method was to hold in the hollow of his arched hand a photo prepared with luminous paint, and to keep it over plates in the darkroom previous to exposure. He said that he found two such miniatures prepared with India ink and luminous paint and also that Wyllie had confessed.

As well as being a spirit photographer, Wyllie was credited with powers of psychometry. He could obtain photographic “extras” through the influence of objects. James Coates sent him locks of his and his wife’s hair. Two human heads were obtained on a photograph and one was recognized as Mrs. Coates’ grandmother. It was as a result of this experiment that Wyllie was invited to England. Coates gave the following summary of his experiments:

> “About 60 percent of the photographs taken exhibited psychic extras, and 25 percent of these were identified as those of departed persons. To all the subjects Mr. Wyllie was a complete stranger, and of the origins of the psychic extras or portraits he could have no knowledge; and except in the cases where flowers—roses and lilies—were produced there was a marked absence of symbolism in the photographs taken.”
Xavier, Francisco Candido (1910– )

Famous Brazilian Spiritist medium. (Spiritism, the Brazilian form of Spiritualism, stems from the teachings of French Spiritist Allan Kardec.) Known throughout Brazil as “Chico Xavier” (pronounced Sheeko Sheaver), he was born April 2, 1910, in the town of Pedro Leopoldo in the central state of Minas Gerais. He was one of a family of nine children. His mother died when he was only five, but Chico saw her materialize after her death, and during his period at primary school three years later, he became accustomed to hearing voices and sensing spirit presences.

He won an honorable mention for an essay contest with an entry that appeared to be dictated to him by a spirit form. On being challenged to produce another “spirit essay,” he went straight to the blackboard and started writing a profound statement on the theme suggested, after which the teacher recommended he stop talking about spirit voices and pray on conventional Catholic lines.

He became a practicing medium in 1927 soon after one of his six sisters was cured of apparent possession through the efforts of a healing medium. The whole Xavier family became Spiritists, and the medium’s wife, Carmen Perácio, founded an evangelical Spiritist center, where Xavier manifested an ability for automatic writing. At one of these sessions, Perácio had a vision of a priestly spirit, “Emmanuel,” who became Xavier’s spirit guide thereafter. Xavier’s mediumship continued in the form of automatic writing from spirit dictation.

Although nearly blind in one eye through most of his life and with only a rudimentary primary education, Xavier produced a prodigious number of books recognizable in the style of hundreds of deceased Brazilian and Portuguese authors whose works he had never had the opportunity to study.

In addition, he visited invalids in the district and undertook voluntary social work at his Pedro Leopoldo Spiritist Center at Uberaba. Hundreds of visitors came to this center for a personal message delivered by Xavier in trance, with instructions on individual problems, whether spiritual or medical. He has written some 130 books, of which over 3,000,000 copies have been sold in 415 editions. Some of these books have been translated into Spanish, French, Japanese, Esperanto, and English.

His book Evolução em dois mundos (Evolution in Two Worlds, 1959) was written in collaboration with Dr. Waldio Vieira, who lived 230 miles away. The chapters were written alternately in uniform style and continuity, and the work took only forty days. It contained scientific concepts beyond the medium’s understanding, suggesting to many that such information does not come from the medium’s subconscious. Brazilian Spiritists follow Allan Kardec in clearly distinguishing between escrita automática (automatic writing involving the medium’s subconscious) and psigrafia (involving a spirit entity).

In spite of the enormous popularity of his prodigious literary output, Xavier never accepted payment for any of his books and even disclaimed personal credit by the phrase “dictated by the spirit of—” on the title page.

He left Brazil only on two occasions. In 1965 and 1966 he made brief trips to Spiritualist centers abroad and a pilgrimage to the tomb of Allan Kardec in Paris, France. He appeared on Brazilian television programs, but remained a modest, sincere individual who devoted his psychic gift to the service of mankind. He was made an honorary citizen of Sao Paulo in 1973, and was similarly honored by other cities and towns in Brazil, including Rio de Janeiro, Uberada, Campinas, and Sao Bernardo. In 1977, the government of Brazil endorsed Xavier’s half century as a medium by issuing a postage stamp in his honor. This official recognition of Spiritism is unique to Brazil; the government has also issued postage stamps honoring Allan Kardec and his teachings.

Sources:

Xenoglossy

Speaking in a language unknown to the speaker in the normal waking state. It is different from what is commonly called glossolalia, or speaking in tongues, a form of vocalized religious experience characteristic of some religious movements, such as Pentecostalism. It has been compared with automatic writing, writing in a language unknown to the writer.

Speaking in an unknown language is perhaps a far more impressive phenomenon than writing in it. Subconscious visual memory may account for occasional reproduction of foreign sentences, but the explanation becomes more difficult if the problem of intonation is added, since it necessitates an auditive memory, the subconscious retention of fragments of strange languages actually heard somewhere at some time.

In medieval times speaking in foreign languages was one of the four principal signs of the presence of a demon. The belief was bound to have its subconscious effect. The Ursuline nuns of Loudon (according to their earliest historian in La Véritable Histoire des Diables de Loudon, par un Témoin, à Poitiers, 1634) spoke Latin, Greek, Turkish, Spanish, and a Native American tongue and confessed to having been obsessed by the devil.

In later religious revivals, the outbreak was a sign of celestial inspiration. The recitals of the refugees from the Cévennes, reported in Le Théâtre Sacré des Cévennes, by M. Misson (London, 1707) contains numerous accounts of the gift among unlettered Camisard (French Protestant) adults and infants, who spoke French in the purest diction (see also Tremblers of the Cévennes). The phenomenon was also noted among the Convulsions of St. Medard in 1730.

It is interesting to note that the psychical researcher F. W. H. Myers did not believe in the phenomenon. He said that he knew of only a few instances when a few words, fragments of a language, came through the medium—some Italian and Hawaiian words in Leonora Piper’s utterances and a few Kaffir and Chinese words through another medium, a Ms. Browne. “We have no modern case, no case later than the half-mythical Miracles of the Cevennes, where such utterance has proved to be other than gibberish.

Apparently Myers ruled out or was unaware of many early cases, among them the testimony of Judge John W. Edmonds. His daughter, Laura Edmonds, was the first modern of modern Spiritualism reported with a gift for xenoglossy. Supposedly, foreign sitters could converse through her with spirits in their native language, even if it was a country as remote as Greece or Poland. Judge Edmonds wrote in a letter dated October 27, 1857:

"One evening when some 12 or 15 persons were in my parlor, Mr. E. D. Green, an artist of this city, was shown in, accompanied by a gentleman whom he introduced as Mr. Evangelides, of Greece. He spoke broken English, but Greek fluently. Eve, central America, and reference was made to many things which had occurred to me there, of which I knew they were as ignorant as they were of Spanish. . . .Laura has spoken to me in Indian, in the Chippewa and Menomonic tongues. I knew the language, because I had been two years in the Indian country."

According to the book Modern American Spiritualism, by Emma Hardinge Britten (1870), in addition to Laura Edmonds, the gift was demonstrated at an early period by Jenny Keyes, who sang in trance in Italian and Spanish, and by a Mrs. Shepherd, Mrs. Gilbert Sweet, a Miss Inman, a Mrs. Tucker, Susan Hoyt, A. D. Ruggles, and several others whose names she was not permitted to make public. They frequently spoke in Spanish, Danish, Italian, Hebrew, Greek, Malay, Chinese, and Indian.

In 1859, 19 people testified in the Banner of Light to 34 cases of persons who occasionally spoke or wrote in tongues. J. J. Mapes and Governor Nathaniel P. Tallmadge bore witness to numerous instances in which uneducated mediums conversed with strangers in the streets in various foreign languages.

A decade later, a Mr. Lowenthal testified in England before the Committee of the London Dialectical Society: "I am frequently made to speak the language of another nation, I believe it to be an Indian language. My mouth utters sounds that I do not understand and which have no meaning to me. I think it is the language of some North American tribe. It is a soliloquy, and I get an impression on the brain, an idea that it means so and so. A voice articulate but not audible conveys a meaning to me. I have been amongst the Indians a great deal, and it sounds to me like their language."

Archdeacon Thomas Collyer wrote of having heard the "Mahedi," a materialized Egyptian in the mediumship of Francis W. Monck (who knew no English), speak in that language under the control of Mrs. A. D. Ruggles. "Samuel." This appears to be the only instance on record where a claimed materialized individual was used as an automatic instrument by another spirit.

The Italian medium Alfredo Pansini, who, with his brother Paolo, was the subject of reported bodily transportation (see teleportation) by mediumistic power, spoke in a sort of hypnotic trance at the age of seven, in French, Latin, and Greek, and recited several cantos of the Divine Comedy. On one occasion, according to accounts, he spoke successively in twelve different languages. Frederick van Eeden recorded in the Proceedings of the Society of Psychical Research (vol. 17, 1901, pp. 59, 75) a Dutch conversation with a deceased friend through the medium Rosina Thompson:

"During a few minutes . . . I felt absolutely as if I were speaking to my friend myself. I spoke Dutch and got immediate and correct answers. The expression of satisfaction and gratification in face and gesture, when we seem to understand one another was too vivid to be acted. Quite unexpected Dutch words were pronounced, details were given which were far from my mind, some of which, as that about my father's uncle in a former sitting, I had never known, and found to be true on inquiry afterwards.

Many German Orientalists testified that when the stigmatic subject Thérèse Neumann relived the Passion of Christ, she spoke in ancient Aramaic. The weakness of the case is that the phrases she used exist in print with translations in modern languages.

The New York Evening Post reported on November 10, 1930, the case of a four-year-old girl at Warsaw. Although the parents of Marie Skotnicki spoke only Polish, she developed the extraordinary habit of talking to herself in a foreign tongue that no one about her could understand but was later established to be pure Gaelic. It is important to add that her great-grandfather came from the Island of Lewis in the Scottish Hebrides.

In The Two Worlds (March 31, 1933), F. H. Wood wrote of the medium Rosemary and "Lady Nona," her ancient Egyptian control: "The fact is now established beyond disproof that over 140 Egyptian word-phrases which were in common use when the great Temple of Luxor in Egypt was built, have been spoken fluently through an English girl who normally knows nothing about the ancient tongue." Howard Hulme of Brighton, Sussex, the translator of the Egyptian phrases, after a preliminary test by mail which resulted in an unexpected but correct Egyptian answer, had also heard Lady Nona speak. After an amazing dialogue in the dead tongue of the pyramid builders, "Nona cleared up many points of pronunciation, gave her own earth name and explained the full meaning of some of her previous language tests."

In the early 1980s, Dr. William H. Kautz also announced a computer-based project at the Research Center for Applied Inuition (of which he is founder and director) involving the preparation of a translation and lexicon of the Rosemary Egyptian language text, to be studied in conjunction with other publications relating to Egyptian language of the Eighteenth Dynasty, and a reconstitution of vocal Egyptian of the same period. The lexicon was to be compared with written Egyptian language and also with the reconstitution of the spoken form.

The medium Etta Wriedt reportedly spoke in many unknown tongues, and no stranger inflection could be imagined than the archaic Chinese that the voice of "Confucius" used in speaking through the medium George Valantine to Neville Whyman, the renowned Oriental scholar. Whyman heard 14 languages spoken in 12 seances, and the strangest of all was the speech that came to him in fluent classical Chinese: "Greetings, O son of learning, and reader of strange books," and gave a complete new reading of poems and of the analogies of Confucius, over which learned scholars have differed for centuries. Whyman's book Psychic Adventures in New York (1931) is among the most convincing twentieth-century records of xenoglossia.

Spirit Languages—The Primeval Tongue

The appearance of xenoglossy is not restricted to languages known to the people present when the words are spoken. On occasion, such vocalizations may turn out to be pure gibberish or possibly attempts at a subconscious creation of a new language. Often they seem to be instances of glossolalia. An example of the latter was reported by William James in an article, "A Case of Psychic Automation . . . " published in the Proceedings of the Society of Psychical Research, vol. 12, 1896. Albert Le Baron (a pseudonym), an American journalist at a Spiritualist camp, spoke automatically in an unknown tongue. Fragments of the discourse were written down by himself, others were spoken into a phonograph in the presence of both James and Richard Hodgson. The following is a specimen: "Te ru-

The medium went on to supply the translation, "The old word! I love the old word of the heavens! The love of the heaven is emperor. The love of the darkness is slavery. The heaven are wise, the heavens are true, the heavens are sure. The love of the earth is past. The King now rules in the heavens."

Some spirit languages were allegedly extremely condensed. Psychical researchers Frank Podmore, for instance, reported that the phrase "Ki-e-lou-cou-ze-za" required no less than 45 words to furnish an adequate translation in English. This relative difference in the number of words spoken and translation is again typical of glossolalia.

A Primeval Language?
The primeval language and the claimed "Martian" languages (see Helene Smith) present the most interesting problems. The primeval or nature language has been described as the inner language of the soul, the universal tongue of men before the Fall, of which Hebrew is a corrupted form. In origin it is the language of the angels, of which the seer Emanuel Swen-denborg writes in his book The True Christian Religion as follows:

"There is a universal language, proper to all angels and spirits, which has nothing in common with any language spoken in the world. Every man, after death, uses this language, for it is implanted in every one from creation; and therefore throughout the whole spiritual world all can understand one another. I have frequently heard this language and, having compared it with languages in the world, have found that it has not the slightest resemblance to any of them; it differs from them in this fundamental respect, that every letter of every word has a particular meaning."

"In his book Heaven and Hell, Swedenborg further states:
"Writing in the inmost heaven consists of various inflected and circumflated forms and the inflections and circumflations are according to the form of heaven. By these the angels express the arcana of their wisdom, many of which cannot be uttered by words; and, what is wonderful, the angels are skilled in such writing without being taught, for it is implanted in them like their speech . . . and therefore this writing is heavenly writing, which is not taught, but inherent, because all extensions of the thoughts and affections of the angels, and thus all communication of their intelligence and wisdom, proceeds according to the manner of heaven, and hence their writing also flows into that form. I have been told that the most ancient people on this earth wrote in the same manner before the invention of letters, and that it was transferred into the letters of the Hebrew language, which at different times were all inflected. Not one of them had the square form in use at this day; and hence it is that the very dots, iotaas and minutest parts of the word contain heavenly arcana and things Divine."

In Dee's notes, the invocation of the spirits was given in the "primeval language." It was accompanied by a word-for-word translation. The properties of this ancient tongue, claimed to be that which Adam employed and the angels speak, are singular, according to Dee: "Every letter signifieth the member of the substance whereof is speaketh: every word signifieth the quiddity of the substance . . . signifying substantially the thing that is spoken of in the center of his Creator, whereby even as the mind of man moveth at an ordered speech, and is easily persuaded in things that are true, so are the creatures of God stirred up in themselves, when they hear the words wherewith they were nursed and brought forth . . . the creatures of God understand you not. You are not of their Cities: you are become enemies, because you are separated from Him that governeth the City, by ignorance. . . . Men in his Creation, being made innocent was also authorised and made partaker of the Power and Spirit of God, whereby he did know all things under his Creation, and spoke of them properly, naming them as they were."

In plain language, this apparently means that the original speech bore an organic relation to the outer world, that each name expressed the properties of the thing spoken of, and that the utterances of that name had a compelling power over that creature. This has analogous in the mystical traditions of the Hebrew shempharash, the secret name of God, and the mystical traditions connected with Hindu mantras.

In his book The Seeress of Prevorst (1845), Justinus Kernera writes:

"In her sleep-walking state, Mrs. H. frequently spoke in a language unknown to us, which seemed to bear some resem-bance to the Eastern tongues. She said that this language was the one which Jacob spoke, and that it was natural to her and to all men. It was very sonorous, and as she was perfectly consistent in her use of it, those who were much about her gradually grew to understand it. She said, by it only could she fully express her innermost feelings; and that, when she had to express these in German, she was obliged first to translate them from this language. It was not from her head, but from her epigastric region that it proceeded. She knew nothing of it when she was awake. The names of things in this language, she told us, expressed their propensiies and qualities. Philologists discovered in it a resemblance to the Coptic, Arabic, and Hebrew; for example, the word 'Elshchadai,' which she often used for God, signifies, in Hebrew, the self-sufficient, or all-powerful. The word 'dalmachai' appears to be Arabic, and 'Bianachi' signifies in Hebrew: I am sighing, or in sighs.

"Here follow a few of the words of this inner language, and their interpretations: 'Handacadi,' physician: 'alentana,' lady;
'chlamn, glass; 'schmado, moon; 'nohin, no; 'nochiancie,' nightingale; 'banna fina,' many coloured flowers; 'moy,' how;
'toi, what; 'optini poga,' thou must sleep; 'mo li arato,' I rest, etc.

"The written characters of this language were always con-Neters with numbers. She said that words with numbers had a much deeper and more comprehensive significiation than without. She often said, in her sleep-walking state, that the ghosts spoke this language; for although spirits could read the thoughts, the soul, to which this language belonged, took it with it when it went above; because the soul formed an ethereal body for the spirit."

Further on Kernera adds:

"With respect to the inner language, the Seherin [Seeress] said, that one word of it frequently expressed more than whole lines of ordinary language; and that, after death, in one single symbol or character of it, man would read his whole life. It is constantly observed that persons in a sleep-walking state, and those who are deep in the inner-life, find it impossible to express a few years later ordinary language. Another somnam-bulae used often to say to me, when she could not express herself
'Can no one speak to me in the language of nature?' \[1693\]
“The Seherin observed by Mayers said, that to man, in the magnetic state, all nature was disclosed, spiritual and material; but that there were certain things which could not be well expressed in words, and thus arose apparent inconsistencies and errors. In the archives of animal magnetism, an example is given of this peculiar speech; the resemblance of which to the eastern languages doubtless arises from its being a remnant of the early language of mankind. Thus, sleep-walkers cannot easily recall the names of persons and things, and they cast away all conventionalities of speech. Mayers’ Seherin says, that as the eyes and ears of man are deteriorated by the fall, so he has lost in a great degree the language of his sensations; but it still exists in us, and would be found, more or less, if sought for. Every sensation or perception has its proper figure or sign and this we can no longer express.

In order to describe these perceptions, Mrs. H. constructed figures which she called her ‘sun sphere,’ her ‘life sphere’ and so forth.

Many instances proved how perfect her memory for this inner language was. On bringing her the lithograph of what she had written a year before, she objected that there was a dot too much over one of the signs; and on referring to the copy which I had by me, I found she was right. She had no copy herself.

Heinrich Werner in his book Die Schutzgeist oder Merkwürdige Blüte Zaubererseins in die Geisterwelt (1839), gave a dissertation on the inner language, traces of which he found in the babbling of children, and stated that in rare states of exaltation the inner spirit can recover the lost vocabulary.

With the advent of modern Spiritualism, the idea of the primordial tongue faded out. Nor did spirit languages hold out long. Camilla Crosland was one of the last of its recorders in Britain. In her book Light in the Valley (1857) she writes: ‘‘Three years ago a young lady, a medium whom I shall designate The Rose was taught by spirits, directly communicating with her, three spirit languages; that is to say, she was taught the meaning of certain characters and inflections, which are quite distinct, so far as I have been able to ascertain, from any known languages ancient or modern. . . . Introduces last autumn to another medium, a young lady whom we have been instructed to call Comfort, The Rose discovered that her new acquaintance wrote by spirit power the first-taught of these mystic languages. . . . Subsequently five other mediums, all personally known to me, have developed as writers of the first spirit language; and one of them, an author of repute and M.A. of the University of Oxford, has also on two or three occasions written in the second of the spirit languages, the characters of which seem mainly composed of dots.’’

The universal language of Swedenborg, according to Crossland, developed dialects. Unfortunately the sample of spirit writing in Light in the Valley is the plainest scribble and no evidence whatever was introduced to show how the identity, if any, was established among the strange ornaments of spiral and shell forms, with dots and scroll-like ciphers adorning the spirit drawing illustrations.

Writing in Tongues

Writing xenoglossic script is a comparatively frequent phenomenon. According to Richard Hodgson, ‘‘the chief difficulty, apparently, in getting another language written by the hand is that strange words tend to be used phonetically unless they are thought out slowly letter by letter. The medium William Eglinton, caught in fraudulent activity on several occasions, produced messages in a séance with the statesman Gladstone in Spanish, French, and Greek in direct writing. He did not know Spanish or Greek. An apparition at a séance held by Elizabéth d’Esperance, calling herself ‘Nepentes,’ wrote in classic Greek in Professor L.’s notebook, ‘I am Nepentes, thy friend. Whosoever is oppressed by the soul is oppressed, call on me, Nepentes, and I will speedily come to assuage thy trouble.’’

According to Charles Richet, Mrs. X. (Laura Finch), a young woman of thirty, ‘wrote long sentences in Greek, with some errors, that clearly showed mental vision of one or more Greek books. After much research . . . I was able to discover the book from which Mrs. X. had drawn most of the long Greek sentences that she had written in my presence. The book is not to be found in Paris except in the National Library—the Greco-French and Franco-Greek dictionary by Byzantios and Coromelas. As it is a dictionary of modern Greek, it is not in use in any school.’’

Richet further stated that Mrs. X. wrote some twenty lines of Greek with about 8 percent of small errors, that she was looking into space as if she were copying from the text of a language unknown to her of which she saw the characters without knowing their meaning, and that Mrs. X. knew no Greek at all and could not understand the sentences that appeared before her mental vision.

Several other examples of this phenomenon are to be found in Florizel von Reuter’s books, Psychic Experiences of a Museum (1928) and The Consulting Angel (1930). The Chinese cross-correspondences of Mina Crandon (known as ‘‘Margery’’ in the literature) furnish especially striking instances.

Recent Research

The emergence of the charismatik movement in the 1970s led to a revival of claims that the glossolalia commonly experienced in Pentecostal services was in fact xenoglossy. To bolster this argument anecdotal accounts of xenoglossy in church services and on the mission field were reprinted. However, rather thorough research largely laid these claims to rest.

The most impressive reported incidents of xenoglossy were collected in Unlearned Language: New Studies in Xenoglossy, by psychical researcher Ian Stevenson, more known for his research on cases of reincarnation. Additionally, through the 1970s and into the 1980s, he supposedly recorded some cases of speaking an unlearned language that he had witnessed. He also noted that the publication of his first book on the subject brought numerous reports that, while interesting, were poorly documented.

Sources:

Kautz, William H. ‘‘The Rosemary Case of Alleged Egyptian Xenoglossy.’’ Theta 10, 2 (summer 1982).

Xibalba

The Hades of the Kiche (or Quiché) Indians of Central America. (See Mexico and Central America)

Xylomancy

Divination by means of wood, practiced particularly in Slovenia. It was the art of reading omens from the position of small pieces of dry wood found in one’s path. Presages of future events were also drawn from the arrangement of logs in the fireplace and from the manner in which they burned.
Yadachi
A Mongolian weather changer. (See also Siberia)

Yadageri
The science of inducing rain and snow by means of enchantment. (See also Siberia)

Yaksha (or Jak)
A kind of Hindu supernatural being, usually inoffensive, but sometimes troublesome. Yakshas seem to have been somewhat analogous to the fairies of other countries.

According to W. Crooke, author of Religion and Folklore of Northern India (1926), "The yaksha is the modern representative of the yaksha, who in better times was the attendant of Kuvera, the god of wealth, in which duty he was assisted by the Guhyaka. The character of the yaksha is not very certain. He was called Punay-janas, 'the good people,' but he sometimes appears as an imp of evil. In the folk-tales, it must be admitted, the yakshas have an equivocal reputation. In one story the female, or yakshini, bewilders travellers at night, makes horns grow on their foreheads, and finally devours them; in another the yakshas have, like the Chua vel, feet turned the wrong way and squinting eyes; in a third they separate the hero from the heroine because he failed to make due offerings to them on his wedding day. On the other hand, in a fourth tale the yakshini is described as possessed of heavenly beauty; she appears again when a sacrifice is made in a cemetery to get her into the hero's power, as a heavenly maiden beautifully adorned, seated in a chariot of gold surrounded by lovely girls; and lastly, a Brahman meets some Buddhist ascetics, performs the Upasana vow, and would have become a god, had it not been that a wicked man compelled him by force to take food in the evening, and so he was reborn as a Gubyaka.

"In the modern folk-lore of Kashmir, the yaksha has turned into the yak or yach, a humorous, though powerful, sprite in the shape of a civet cat of a dark colour, with a white cap on his head. This small cap is one of the marks of the Irish fairies, and the Incubones of Italy wear caps, 'the symbols of their hidden, secret natures.' The feet of the yak are so small as to be almost invisible, and it squeaks in a feline way. It can assume any shape, and if its white cap can be secured, it becomes the servant of the possessor, and the white cap makes him invisible.

"In the Vishnu Purana we read that Vishnu created the yakshas as beings emaciated with hunger, of hideous aspect, and with big beards, and that from their habit of crying for food they were so named. By the Buddhists they were regarded as benignant spirits. One of them acts as sort of chorus in the Meghaduta or 'Cloud of Messenger' of Kalidasa. Yet we read of the Yaka Alawaka, who, according to the Buddhist legend, used to live in a Banyan tree, and slay any one who approached it; while in Ceylon they are represented as demons whom Buddha destroyed. In later Hinduism they are generally of fair repute, and one of them was appointed by Indra to be the attendant of the Jain Saint Mahavira."

Sources:

Yantra
Hindu mystical diagram, often inscribed on copper. Divine energy is invoked into the yantra by special prayers. The yantra is clearly a precursor of the magic diagrams of Western occultists, although in India it was used in a religious rather than an occult context.

Yarker, John (1833–1913)
British Freemason and occultist, active in Manchester, England. He was initiated as a Mason at the age of 21 in the Lodge of Integrity, Manchester, October 25, 1854, becoming master of this lodge in 1857. He became the first worshipful master of the Fidelity Lodge of Mark Masters. At the age of 23, he was installed a Knight Templar in the Jerusalem Conclave on July 11, 1856. There followed various Masonic honors, and in 1864 he was appointed Masonic Grand Constable of England. He also traveled extensively, visiting the United States, the West Indies, and Cuba. At a time of Masonic renaissance, he revived many rites and promoted a number of rites on his own, probably more for vanity than profit. These included the Rites of Sat B'Hai, Swedish, Mizraim, and the Ancient and Primitive Rite. The latter was later associated with magicians Theodor Reuss and Aleister Crowley.

Yarker was thus associated with the fringe Masonic secret orders that preceded the establishment of the OTO and the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. The OTO originated in a charter from Yarker to the German occultists Joshua Klein, Franz Hartmann, and Theodore Reuss, licensing them to set up in Berlin a Grand Lodge of the Masonic rite of Mizraim and Memphis. By 1904, occultist Karl Kellner was also involved. The August Order of Light, developed by Maurice Portman, was passed to Yarker circa 1890, who amalgamated it with rituals from his Sat B'Hai Rite.

Yarker published a number of Masonic works and also an abridged translation of Louis-Alphonse Cahagnet’s Magie Magnétique under the title Magnetic Magic (1898). His most well-known work is The Arcane Schools; A Review of Their Origin and Antiquity; with a General History of Freemasonry (1909). He also edited a periodical, The Kneph (1881–95), concerned with Masonic matters. He died on March 30, 1913.

Yasodhara Ashram
A spiritual retreat and study center founded in Canada in 1962 by German-born Swami Sivananda Radha, a disciple of the late Swami Sivananda Saraswati of Rishikesh, Himalayas.
India. The Yasodhara Ashram is situated in a picturesque rural location and includes residential buildings, a guest lodge, prayer rooms, bookstore, office, and a Temple of Divine Light. In addition to the ashram residents, facilities are offered for temporary residents to follow teaching programs in courses and workshops dealing with Eastern spiritual teachings and Western techniques for self-development. A yoga teachers course is also conducted. The ashram publishes the journal Ascent four times a year and issues tape and disc recordings concerned with meditation, mantras and kundalini yoga. Address: Yasodhara Ashram, Box 9, Kootenay Bay, British Columbia, Canada VOB 1X0. Website: http://www.yasodhara.org.

Yauhahu

A spirit believed to cause diseases among Indians of British Guiana.

Yeats, William Butler (1865–1939)

Famous Irish poet, playwright, and mystic. He was born at Sandymount, near Dublin, Ireland, on June 13, 1865. His father John Yeats was a talented portrait painter. William’s brother Jack Butler Yeats was also an artist, and his sisters Elizabeth and Lily assisted in the establishment of the Dun Emer (later Cuala) Press.

Much of Yeat’s childhood was spent in London, where he attended the Godolphin School, Hammersmith, but he also spent time in Dublin and County Sligo, in Western Ireland. At the age of fifteen, he attended Erasmus Smith School, Dublin, then studied art for three years, turning to literature at the age of 21. His first book, a play titled Mosada, was published in 1886. It was followed by two books of poems, The Wanderings of Oisin (1889) and The Wind Among the Reeds (1899). In 1888, he edited a collection titled Fairy and Folk Tales of the Irish Peasantry, which included some of his fairy verse. He became one of the leading figures in the Irish literary renaissance.

In London he was a founder of the Rhymer’s Club and friend of Ernest Rhys, Ernest Dowson, Lionel Johnson, William Morris, W. E. Henley, and Arthur Symons. In Ireland, he was associated with J. M. Synge, “AE” (George W. Russell), Douglas Hyde, George Moore, and Lady Gregory. He helped to establish the Irish Literary Theatre in 1899 (later the Abbey Theatre). His poems and plays have become world famous. He was a member of the Irish Senate from 1922 to 1928 and received the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1923.

His interest in the writings of Theosophists led to the formation of the Hermetic Society, Dublin, and he presided over its first meeting on June 16, 1885. While in London at the end of 1888, he joined the Esoteric Section of the Theosophical Society. In 1890, he joined the pioneering magical society, the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, taking the magical motto “Demon Est Deus Inversus,” (DEDI) and continued to be associated with the Golden Dawn over some thirty years. In April 1900, he clashed with Aleister Crowley, also an order member, in a leadership crisis.

Yeats’ book Ideas of Good and Evil (1903) contains studies of the mystical element in Blake and Shelley and another essay is titled “The Body of the Father Christian Rosencrus.” Another essay titled “Magic” commences: “I believe in the practice and philosophy of what we have agreed to call magic, and what I must call the evocation of spirits, though I do not know what they are, in the power of creating magic illusions, in the visions of truth in the depths of the minds when the eyes are closed.”

After his declaration, he related how once an acquaintance of his, gathering together a small party in a darkened room, held a mace over “a tablet of many coloured squares,” at the time repeating “a form of words,” and immediately Yeats found that his “imagination began to move itself and to bring before me vivid images. . . .” It was S. L. MacGregor Mathers of the Golden Dawn, states Yeats, “who convinced me that images well up before the mind’s eye from a deeper source than conscious or subconscious memory.”

In a lecture on “Psychic Phenomena” before the Dublin Society for Psychical Research (reported in the Dublin Daily Express, November 1913), he spoke of most amazing experiences during his investigation, which lasted for many years, and declared that so far as he was concerned, the controversy about the meaning of psychic phenomena was closed. But he was not “converted,” in the true sense of the word, since he was a born believer, and he had never seriously doubted the existence of the soul or of God.

Yeats and Spiritualism

Lecturing on “Ghosts and Dreams” before the London Spiritualist Alliance in April 1914, he gave another clear account of his beliefs and experiences. In his book Per Amores Silentes Lunae (1918), he spoke of a poet and mystic in dealing with some of the deeper issues of Spiritualism.

In 1917, he married Georgia Hyde Lees and discovered that his wife was a medium and capable of automatic writing. In 1934, Yeats wrote a one-act play, “The Words Upon the Window-Pane” built around a Spiritualist séance at which the spirit of Jonathan Swift communicated.

He showed considerable courage in making known some of his occult beliefs, although he did not publicize his Golden Dawn connections.

His mystical inclinations, stimulated by the Hindu religious philosophy of the Theosophical Society that had also attracted fellow poet “AE,” continued to develop. When in his sixties, he became friendly with the Hindu monk Swami Shri Purohit and wrote introductions to the Swami’s autobiography An Indian Monk (Macmillan, London, 1932) and his translation of the book by the Swami’s guru titled The Holy Mountain (Faber, London, 1934). In 1935, the Swami published a translation of the Bhasawal-Gita under the title The Geeta: The Gospel of the Lord Shri Krishnu (Faber, London), which he dedicated “To my friend William Butler Yeats” on the poet’s seventieth birthday. In the same year, the Swami also published a translation of the Mandukya Upanishad, for which Yeats provided a perceptive introduction. He had planned to travel to India to assist the Swami in translating the ten principal Upanishads, but eventually the work was completed by the two friends at Majoara in 1936.

Yeats died January 28, 1939, in the town of Roquebrune, overlooking Monaco, and was buried in the cemetery there until nine years later, when his remains were transferred to the churchyard of Drumcliffe, near Sligo.

Sources:

Yeats-Brown, Francis (Charles Clayton) (1886–1944)

British soldier, author, and early popularizer of yoga in Western countries. He was born at Genoa, Italy, August 15, 1886, the son of the British consul-general in that city. He was educated at Harrow-on-the-Hill and Sandhurst, England. He was second lieutenant in the King’s Royal Rifle Corps at Bareilly, India, in 1906; posted to 17th Cavalry, Indian Army in 1907; and adjutant in 1913. He served in France with 5th Lancers and in Mesopotamia with the Royal Flying Corps (DFC). He was imprisoned in Turkey in November 1915 but escaped in 1918. He retired on pension in 1925. From 1926 to 1929 he was editor of the British journal The Spectator.

He published several books, the most famous of which was Bengal Lancer (1950), based on his nineteen years in India and his intense interest in yoga. The book became a best-seller and was translated into Italian, Spanish, German, Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, and Romanian. It attracted worldwide interest in the subject of yoga. A film version of the book under the title “Lives of a Bengal Lancer” was produced in 1953, starring Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, and Richard Cromwell.

Yeats-Brown also published Yoga Explained (1957), a pioneering yoga text. In spite of his great interest in yoga philosophy he remained a Christian throughout his life. His other books include Caught by the Turks (1919), Golden Horn (1932), Escape: A Book of Escapes of All Kinds (1933), Dogs of War (1934), Lancer at Large (1937), European Jungle (1939), Indian Pagodant (1942), and Martial India (1945).

During the 1930s, Yeats-Brown was a news correspondent in Germany and expressed admiration for Hitler, whom he compared with Gandhi and T. E. Lawrence. It seems likely that this unfortunate judgment stemmed from Yeats-Brown’s enthusiasm for German physical fitness and military precision and that he never really understood the real implications of Nazi philosophy and ambitions.

From 1945 to 1944 Yeats-Brown served in the British Army, touring the Indian and Burmese war fronts.

He died in London, December 19, 1944.

Yerger, Eloise Barrangon (1915– )

American writer who also conducted parapsychology experiments to investigate teacher-pupil attitudes and clairvoyance test results among students in fifth, sixth, and seventh-grade levels. She was born on January 16, 1915, at Northampton, Massachusetts. She studied at Smith College (B.A.) and in 1935 became a freelance writer. She was a member of the Parapsychological Association and the American Society for Psychical Research.

Yes! Bookshop

A New Age bookstore founded in Washington, D.C., in 1972 by Cris Popenhoe. The bookshop covers every aspect of New Age concern, spiritual development, and positive occult teachings. Popenhoe is convinced of the basic New Age belief that positive social and political change is desirable and such change necessitates individual transformation. She published an excellent annotated bibliography (which doubled as a bookshop catalog): Books for Inner Development (1976), revised as Inner Development: the Yes! Bookshop Guide (1979), with eleven supplements in the early 1980s. In 1977 she also did a similar work on healing books, entitled simply Wellness.

Sources:

Yeti

Also known as the “abominable snowman,” the yeti is the mysterious humanoid creature reported by Western sources as early as 1832 as living in the Himalayan Mountains. It became well known following several expeditions to the area in the 1950s. In 1960 Sir Edmund Hillary, who conquered Everest, called further attention to the yeti in his attempts to debunk them. The Soviet Ministry of Culture established a group of “cryptozoologists” to locate the yeti, according to a report of January 9, 1988, by Tass, the Soviet press agency. The agency stated that nearly one hundred sightings had been collated by Zhanna Koffman of Moscow.

Sources:

Yezidis

A dualistic religious group operating among the Kurds in northern Iraq and the neighboring lands of Syria, Turkey, and Iran. Their religion probably goes back to the Manicheans but has borrowed heavily from the Shiite Muslims. The Yezidis call themselves the Dawasin or Dasnaye. The term Yezidi was originally probably a name of derision. It refers to a Caliph Yezid who in 680 C.E. ordered the death of al-Husayn, the grandson of the Prophet Mohammed. The Shiites hold al-Husayn in special reverence, for they claim to derive their authority from him. Others have suggested that the word is derived from the Persian word zaed (for angel, deity), and would mean “worshippers of God.” They are also derogatorily referred to by their neighbors as “devil-worshippers.” The Yezidi community is centered upon the tomb of Shaykh Adi ibn Musafir at Llish in the district of Mosul.

The Yezidi faith is quite eclectic, drawing upon Christian (baptism, breaking of bread, drinking of wine), Jewish (dietary restrictions), Muslim (fasts, circumcision, pilgrimages), Sufi (reverence for Shaykhs, secrecy, ecstatic experiences), and Sabeans (reincarnation) traditions. They believe that they were children of the seed of Adam (but not of Eve). Thus, they believe themselves different from the rest of humanity, who are derived from both Adam and Eve. They try to remain separate and no outsider may join them. One must be born a Yezidi.

A dominant symbol among them is the peacock, a symbol of the seven angels who cooperated in the creation of the world. The peacock angel is their euphemism for evil. Thus they are more properly seen as dualists rather than devil worshippers. The Yezidis also consider Christ an angel in human form, and Mohammed as a prophet with Abraham and others.

Sources:

Nau, Abbé F. “Recueil de textes et de documents sur les Yézidis.” ROC 2, no. 10 (1913–17).

tion, and inaction. The balance of yin and yang in the individual, nature, and the cosmos is symbolized by a circle separated by an “S” shape, one half of the circle dark and the other light. This has something in common with the ancient Greek alchemical symbol of a serpent or dragon eating its tail, known as Ouroboros.

The yin-yang symbol represents unity and duality, a universal dual monism. It is also inherent in the ancient Chinese system of divination of the I Ching (Book of Changes). It is basic to the teachings of Taoism, as embodied in the classic work Tao-te-Ching (Book of the Right Way) of the philosopher Lao Tzu.

In modern times, the yin and yang principles are a vital part of the revived system of diet known as macrobiotics, where mental and physical balance are developed by the correct proportions of yin and yang foods, properly prepared. (See also China; Tao)

Sources:

Y-Kim (or I Ching), Book of

A Chinese mystical book attributed to the Emperor Fo-Hi and ascribed to the year 3468 B.C.E. It consists of ten chapters and was stated by Éliphas Lévi in his History of Magic to be a complement and an appendix to the Kabalistic Zohar, the record of the utterances of Rabbi Simeon Ben Jochai. The Zohar, according to Lévi, explains universal equilibrium, and the Y-King is the hieroglyphic and ciphered demonstration thereof. The key to the Y-King is the pentacle known as the Trigrams of Fo-Hi. In the Yoy-Ky of Leon-Tao-Yuen, composed in the Som Dynasty (about eleventh century), it was recounted that the Emperor Fo-Hi was one day seated on the banks of a river, deep in meditation, when to him there appeared an animal having the parts of both a horse and a dragon. Its back was covered with scales, on each of which shone the mystic Trigrammic symbol. The animal initiated the just and righteous Fo-Hi into universal science. Numbering its scales, he combined the Trigrams in such a manner that there arose in his mind a synthesis of sciences compared and united with one another through the harmonies of nature. From this synthesis sprang the tables of the Y-King. According to Éliphas Lévi, the numbers of Fo-Hi are identical with those of the Kabala, and his pentacle is similar to that of Solomon. His tables are in correspondence with the subject matter of the Sephirot Yesirah and the Zohar. The whole is a commentary upon the Absolute that is concealed from the profane, concluded Lévi.

Since Lévi’s time, much scholarship has been expended on the symbolism and mystical significance of this important work under its more generally expressed title of I Ching.

Sources:

Yoga

General term for various spiritual disciplines in Hinduism. The word “yoga” implies “yoking” (as with oxen to the ox-cart) or “union,” expressing the linking of man with divine reality. This union is a transcendental experience beyond the plane of words and ideas and has to be achieved by release from the limiting fields of physical, emotional, mental, and intellectual experience. This requires purification at all levels and according to Hindu belief might take many lifetimes, but sincere exertions in one birth should bear fruit in the next.

Yoga’s widespread introduction to the West is thought to have begun with Swami Vivekananda’s yoga presentation at the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, 1893. Influential twentieth-century yogis since then have included Ramana Maharshi, Indra Devi, Selvarajan Yesudian, Swami Sivananda, Sri Yoganandra, and Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, of the Transcendental Meditation movement. In the 1960s and 1970s, Richard Hittleman and Lilias Folan (of Lilias, Yoga, and You) brought yoga to the American mainstream through television. Yoga’s popularity is also due to endorsements from celebrities such as Sting and Madonna. Yoga’s allure as a stress reliever has also helped the practice to gain popularity with Americans who try to regain control over their hectic lifestyles. It is estimated that more than two million people throughout the world practice some discipline of yoga.

The existence of many spiritual disciplines and practices in India allowed for a multitude of forms and beliefs. Most religious systems are aligned to one or more forms of yoga, though most commonly they will emphasize one of the traditional spiritual paths. Some would judge the adoption of a particular spiritual path to be linked to age, occupation, personality, or a particular interest in life.

The six principle branches of yoga are:

Bhakti Yoga

Bhakti yoga is the path of love and devotion. An individual with an emotional temperament can transform those emotions, to be absorbed in spiritual service instead of being attached to physical or sensory gratification. Love can be centered on a familiar form of God, a great saint, or some great task in life. In bhakti yoga, the whole universe, whether animate or inanimate, is seen as permeated by divinity. Bhakti (meaning loving devotion) is the practice of self-surrender for the purpose of identifying with the source of love, the higher self.

The Hare Krishna, which became notable in the West in the last generation, follow a form of Hinduism that emphasizes this type of yoga.

Hatha Yoga

Hatha yoga is known as the path of inner power. It is the science of physical exercises most familiar to Westerners. In hatha yoga the mind, body, and spirit are linked, and the purification of the body is intended to enhance mental and spiritual development, balance, and harmony. Good physical health, however, is an essential prerequisite to the strenuous disciplines of this yoga system.

Hatha yoga consists of a number of asanas, or physical postures, that develop flexibility in associated muscle groups throughout the body, and favorably affect the tone of veins and arteries. They are also believed to improve the function of the ductless glands through persistent gentle pressure. In Patanjali’s system, asana was chiefly directed to the achievement of a firm cross-legged sitting position for meditation. Other yoga authorities, however, have elaborated the stages of Patanjali yoga to meet the requirements of different temperaments, so that they may be harmonized.

The asanas differ from Western gymnastics in that they feature static postures instead of active movements, though some asanas are linked sequentially. There are theoretically some 8,400,000 asanas, of which 84 are said to be the best and 32 the most useful for good health. These are named after animals, geometric structures, mountains, or plants. An asana is considered to be mastered when the yogi can maintain the position without strain for three hours. Asanas may be supplemented by special symbolic gestures and positions called mudras.

Various cleansing techniques, called kriyas, of the nasal passages, throat, stomach, and bowels can be practiced in conjunction with asanas. Pranayama, breathing exercises, are also employed to arouse kundalini or vital energy. Some systems focus upon the arousal of kundalini as the central spiritual discipline.
Hatha yoga had largely died out in India but was revived in the nineteenth century in Maharashtra, western India, from whence it radiated out into the world during the twentieth century.

Jnana or Sankya Yoga
Jnana yoga is the path of knowledge, science, and wisdom. This begins with five distinctions that may be evolved from careful observation; study and experiment; combining knowledge with the ability to reflect, meditate, and develop intuition. It is the way of transcendent knowledge, and is geared for those prone to intellectual curiosity, reason, and analysis.

Karma Yoga
Karma yoga is the science of karma or selfless action. Karma yoga teaches the student that all actions have inescapable consequences, some producing immediate results, others delayed results, and some bearing fruit in future lives. Emphasis is placed on altruistic actions that purify the individual soul and release it from petty desires. In karma yoga, actions are spiritualized by dedicating them to selfless service and divine will. Karma yoga calls for union with God through right action, and service for service sake, without regard for accomplishment or glory or attribution.

Mantra Yoga
Mantra yoga is the path of sacred sound. It is the science of sound vibration, prayer, and hermetic utterance. According to Hindu mystical belief, the world evolved from the essence of sound, through the diversity and intricacy of vibration and utterance.

Raja Yoga
Raja Yoga is the path of stillness, whose goal is to quiet the mind through meditation to create a state of focused, unbroken concentration. It is also known as the path of spiritual science, particularly suitable for those of a more abstract or metaphysical temperament. This path combines religious study with refinement of all levels of the individual, culminating in transcendental awareness. Raja yoga is the summation of all other yogas. Ancient textbooks of hatha yoga emphasize that it should only be practiced in conjunction with raja yoga.

Other yoga paths are usually derivatives of the principle six. They include:

Asparsa Yoga
This is the yoga of non-contact. A form of jnana yoga, asparsa seeks reintegration through non-touching, avoiding all forms of contact with others.

Astanga Yoga
Astanga yoga is often known as the path of Patanjali. The sage Patanjali (ca. 200 B.C.E.) taught a comprehensive yoga system that became a spiritual school unto itself. According to Patanjali, in order to experience true reality one must transcend the body and mind. In his Yoga Sutras he outlined the following special stages:

- Yama and niyama—ethical restraints and moral observations.
- asana—physical postures.
- pranayama—breathing exercises. This uses various cleansing techniques of the nasal passages, throat, stomach, and bowels; it is used to enhance the pranayama.
- pratyahara—sense withdrawal.
- dharana—concentration.
- dhyana—meditation.
- samma-th—superconsciousness.

Japa Yoga
A branch of mantra yoga, japa (meaning recitation) yoga emphasizes repetition of prayers, hymns and sacred syllables.

Kundalini Yoga
Utilizing hatha yoga and mantra yoga techniques to arouse kundalini, or divine creative energy. This path focuses on the arousal of kundalini as the central focus of spiritual exercise. Whether kundalini rising occurs because of the exercises or on its own accord remains a matter of debate.

Kriya Yoga
Based on teachings of Paramhansa Yogananda, author of Autobiography of a Yogi. Kriya yoga stresses the path to Eternal Tranquility, emphasizing the stillness of sensory input.

Laya Yoga
Laya yoga is the yoga of absorption. It underscores absorption in meditation, merging the mind and breath in the divine. In this practice the yogi immerses himself in the universe, becoming a part of the universal body.

Siddha Yoga
This path is based on the teachings of Swami Muktananda. Siddha (meaning guru) yoga emphasizes the intervention and guidance of a teacher to raise kundalini.

Tantric Yoga
A derivative of karma and bhakti yogas, tantric yoga is associated with arousal of sexual energy and its conversion into kundalini, or creative energy. It is the human reflection of the divine union between the male (shiva) and female (shakti) as aspects of the divine. It is concerned with techniques and disciplines intended to transform the sexual act into a kundalini-raising experience.

Tantric yoga has often been implicated as an arena for sexual abuses in the West. Less-than-enlightened yogis have been entangled in clandestine affairs with students, later forced to step down from the position of spiritual leader.

Yantra Yoga
Yantra yoga is a form of jnana yoga, in which meditation is accomplished through contemplation of a geometric figure. No single pathway of yoga is regarded as an alternative to another, and many of the paths intertwine and intersect, as a means of purifying and harmonizing individual temperaments. An intellectual person might profitably concentrate on bhakti yoga or karma yoga; an emotional temperament might benefit from jnana yoga and hatha yoga. Likewise, the practice of hatha yoga without proper actions, devotion, and ethical codes might be harmful or result simply in gymnastics without spiritual development.

Sources:
Yoga International

Yoga International

Quarterly magazine devoted to yoga, meditation, philosophy, psychology, and holistic living. Formerly called Dawn, Yoga International is the official organ of the Himalayan International Institute of Yoga Science and Philosophy. Address: R.R. 1, Box 400, Honesdale, PA 18431.

Yoga Journal

Monthly journal of California Yoga Teachers Association, dealing with various aspects of (primarily hatha) yoga, nutrition, and health. Lists annually an international directory of yoga teachers and centers. Address: P.O. Box 469088, Escondido, CA 92046-9088. Website: http://www.yogajournal.com/.
Sources:

Yoga Life (Magazine)

Illustrated magazine and organ of the International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers, with articles on hatha yoga, meditation, and related topics. It includes information on branch activities of the affiliated centers. It is issued from the group’s headquarters at 673 8th Ave., Val Morin, Quebec, Canada J0T 2R0. Website: http://www.sivananda.org/.
Sources:

Yoga-Mimamsa Journal

Indian journal founded in 1935 devoted to the serious study of hatha yoga and pranayama, with papers describing medical and scientific researches as well as popular aspects. Edited by Swami Kaivalyanadhamma, a noted authority on yoga. The journal commenced publication in 1935 and describes activities at the Kaivalyanadha SMYM Samiti, India. It is issued from the Yoga-Mimamsa Office, 117 Va VAN, Lonavla 410 403, India.

Yogananda, Paramahansa (1893–1952)

An early Indian spiritual teacher who visited and taught in Western countries and who founded the Self-Realization Fellowship. Yogananda was born Mukunda Lal Ghosh in Gorakpur, near Calcutta, on January 5, 1893. He manifested psychic powers as a child. As a youth he was fascinated by the holy men of India and visited many of them. Shortly after graduating from high school, he was initiated by Swami Yukteswar in the spiritual lineage of Swami Babaji, a legendary Himalayan master. He graduated from college in 1914. While in college he took the vows of a sannyasin, to live the renounced life, and was given his religious name, Yogananda, meaning the bliss (ananda) of yoga.
Yukteswar encouraged Yogananda to come to the West, and he traveled to Boston in 1920, ostensibly to speak at a conference, where he taught a system of yoga deriving basically from the classic text Yoga Sutras of Patañjali. He also developed his own variety of kriya yoga, involving withdrawal of life energy from outward affairs to inner spiritual centers (basically a form of kundalini yoga).
Yogananda remained in the United States after the 1920 conference and several years later founded the Yogoda Satsang, which was incorporated in 1933 as the Self-Realization Fellowship. He wrote books and a correspondence course that attracted a number of pupils to him. He laid great emphasis on the reconciliation of Hinduism with Christian teachings and established the “Church of All Religions.”
Yogananda passed into mahasamadhi (the great sleep of death) in 1952, but his body is said to have remained free from decay for 20 years afterward. Among his last accomplishments was the writing of his Autobiography of a Yogi (1946), which was widely influential in attracting Americans to Eastern religion. He was also the teacher of Donald Walters, founder of the Ananda Church of Self-Realization, and Roy Eugene Davis, now head of the Church of the Christian Spiritual Alliance.
Sources:

Yoga Research Foundation, Inc.

Founded in 1962 as the Sanatan Dharma Mandir in Puerto Rico by Swami Jyotirmayananda. The headquarters moved to suburban Miami in 1969 as the International Yoga Society. It adopted its present name in the 1980s. Swami Jyotirmayananda is a disciple of Swami Sivananda Saraswati. He has been assisted by Swami Lalitananda (Leonora Rego), vice president of the foundation.
The foundation publishes books, cassettes, and study courses on yoga and Hindu philosophy, and a monthly magazine called International Yoga Guide. Swami Jyotirmayananda is an authority on the little-known Hindu scripture Yoga-Vasishtha Maharanyasa, upon which he comments regularly in the magazine. He has lectured widely, participated in Spanish/English radio programs, and appeared on television.

Branches of the Yoga Research Foundation exist throughout the world. Swami Jyotirmayananda's ashram in Loni, near New Delhi, India, publishes the Hindi Journal Yogajali, as well as numerous Hindi translations of Swami Jyotirmayananda's books. Ashram members assist those in need through a medical clinic, and also further the education of children through the Bal Divya Jyoti Public School.

Devotees of Swami Jyotirmayananda have turned his ancestral home of Ananda Bhavan in Dumanri (Bihar, India) into a spiritual center. The project provides the village of Dumanri Buzurg with a school for children, library, satsang hall, and technical workshop. Women are taught hygiene, nutrition, and home economics. The project is designed to affect the economic, ethical, cultural, and spiritual life of the village.

The foundation is an international organization, dedicated to "elevating the consciousness, alleviating suffering and enriching the lives of all humanity" through integral yoga (Sivananda's system integrating hatha yoga with the four major traditional yogas: raja, bhakki, karma, and jnana), providing "a basis for upgrading the cultural growth of humanity while bringing about a worldwide level of social and religious harmony." Regular classes teaching yoga, Vedanta, and Indian philosophy are conducted from the center. A Yoga Research Foundation catalog of books and cassettes, and subscriptions to the International Yoga Guide can be obtained by writing to 6111 SW 74th Ave., South Miami, FL 33143. Website: http://www.yrf.org/

Sources:

Yoga Society of San Francisco
Organization founded in 1972 by Shri Brahmnananda Saraswati that offers classes in yoga, meditation, massage therapy, and teacher training courses. Its headquarters are located at 2872 Folsom St., San Francisco, CA 94110. Website: http://www.artnetwork.com/healing/yoga/

Sources:

Yoga Today (Magazine)

"Yolande"
The spirit of a young Arabian girl of 15, materialized through the mediumship of Elizabeth d’Esperance (1885–1919). Yolande appeared to manifest as an independent entity and was photographed, like the equally famous “Katie King” of the medium Florence Cook.

’You’ and ESP (Newsletter)
Monthly newsletter issued by the Temple of the Inner Flame, headed by Carol Ann Larios, concerned with such psychic activities as Fingertip Vision (also known as eyeless sight) and alternative medical treatments. Last known address: 3529 Niagara Falls Blvd., North Tonawanda, NY 14120

Youngusband, Sir Francis (Edward) (1863–1942)
British explorer, soldier, author, and mystic. Born at Murree, India, May 31, 1863, he was educated at Clifton and Sandhurst, England. He joined the British army in 1882.
From 1886 to 1887 he traveled across central Asia from Peking to Yarkand and on to India, crossing the Karakoram Range by the Muztagh Pass. He discovered the Aghil Mountains and showed that the Great Karakoram was the water divide between India and Turkistan. On later explorations beyond the Karakoram he was able to trace the river Shaksam to its junction with the Yarkand, and explored the Pamirs. During his period in the 1st Dragoon Guards, Youngusband held the rank of captain.
In 1890 he transferred to the Indian political department and served in northwest frontier stations. He visited South Africa in 1896. He was a special correspondent for The Times newspaper, London, in the Chitral Expedition in 1895 and a political agent in Haraoet and Tonk in 1898. While residing in India, he was the British Commissioner to Tibet (1902–04). He led the British mission to Lhasa, culminating in the Anglo-Tibetan Treaty of September 7, 1904. For this he was honored by the decoration of Knight Commander of the Indian Empire. He was one of the first modern British explorers to investigate the almost legendary territory of Tibet and enter the mysterious city of Lhasa, long fabled by Theosophists and others as the center of mysterious adepts and Masters. While he discovered no secret occult forces, he did develop a sympathetic consideration of Eastern religions and an appreciation of their spirituality.
In 1905 he returned to England, where he became Rede lecturer at Cambridge University before traveling to Kashmir as Resident. He was honored as Knight Commander of the Star of India in 1917. After his retirement in 1919, he became chairman of the Royal Geographical Society, who had awarded him their gold medal in 1891. He also formed and was chairman of the Mount Everest Committee.
Youngusband typified the best of the old-style British patriots of the British Empire period. He was an excellent and courageous soldier and explorer, yet deeply sympathetic to the aspirations and spiritual ideals of other peoples. He recognized the need for self-government in India. His book Modern Mystics (1953; reissued University Books, 1970) expressed his sympathy with the spirituality of different religions and his belief in an underlying unity. In 1956 he founded the World Congress of Faiths. His books include: But in Our Lives (1926), The Heart of Nature (1921), India and Tibet (1910), Within (1912), The World Congress of Faith (1938), and World Fellowship of Faiths (1955). He died at Lytchett Minster, near Poole, Britain, on July 31, 1942.

Sources:

Your Astrology (Journal)
Quarterly journal that includes monthly and daily guides for all signs, with articles on astrology for lay readers. Last known address: Charlton Publications, Inc., Charlton Building, Derby, CT 06418.
Yowie

Australian equivalent of the yeti, or "Abominable Snowman." The first account of the yowie appeared in 1835 when a Mr. Holman said of his trip to the subcontinent, "The natives are greatly terrified by the sight of a person in a mask calling him 'devil' or Yah-hoo, which signifies evil spirit." By 1840, Australian scientists were debating whether or not the yahoo was an imaginary being or a real, but rare, species. By the 1880s European settlers began to report seeing something that resembled a huge monkey or baboon. Through the first half of the twentieth century occasional reports appeared, almost all from New South Wales and Queensland. Along the way, 'yahoo' became 'yowie.'

A new set of reports arose in the 1970s following the sighting of some large (too large to be a human), humanlike tracks by an Australian Air Force surveying team on Sentinel Mountain. In the late 1970s Rex Gilroy founded the Yowie Research Center and now claims over 3,000 sightings.

The yowie has been integrated into the field of cryptozoology, but remains one of the more doubtful creatures under consideration. Australia has no naturally occurring primates other than humans. The major champion of the yowie's existence is Graham C. Joyner, who has argued that it is a bear-like marsupial.

Sources:

“Yram” (1884–1917)

Pseudonym of Dr. Marcel Louis Forhan, pioneer French experimenter and writer on astral projection, i.e., out-of-the-body travel. Forhan was born on November 17, 1884, at Corbey, France. About 1911 he became a member of the Theosophical Society and investigated psychic phenomena and hypnotism.

About this time he had his first experience of astral projection and developed an awareness of higher worlds. It is claimed that he was able to travel astrally from China, where he lived for some years, to France, where he had friends and relatives. His experience of invisible worlds is related in his book L’Evolution dans les mondes supérieurs. He died in China on October 1, 1917.

Sources:
Z

Zabulon

Name of a demon said to have possessed a lay sister among the community of nuns at Loudun, France, in 1635.

Zacaire, Denis (b. 1510)

This French alchemist is chiefly remembered for his book, Opuscule Tres-Excellent de la Philosophie naturelle des Metaux (published 1567). This includes a preface written by Zacaire in his lifetime, giving some account of his life.

As a young man Zacaire studied at Bordeaux under an alchemist and subsequently at Toulouse, intending to become a lawyer. He soon became more interested in alchemy than in legal affairs. In 1555, on his father’s death, he came into possession of some money. He thereupon decided to try and multiply it by artificial means. Associating himself with an abbé who was considered a great adept in gold-making, Zacaire had soon disposed of the bulk of his patrimony, but far from the charlatan’s futile experiments disillusioning him, they encouraged him.

In 1559, he went to Paris, where he made the acquaintance of many renowned alchemists. From one of them, he learned the precious secret, and thereupon he hastened to the court of Antoine d’Albert, the king of Navarre, offering to make gold if the requisite materials were supplied.

The king was deeply interested and promised a reward of no less than four thousand crowns in the event of the researches proving fruitful, but unfortunately Zacaire’s vaunted skill failed him, and he retired discomfited to Toulouse. Here he became friendly with a certain priest, who advised him strongly to resume his quest and study natural science instead. Zacaire went off to Paris once more, intending to act in accordance with his counsel. But after a little while, he was deep in the study of astrology again, running experiments and studying closely the writings of Raymond Lully and Arnold de Villanova.

According to his own account, on Easter day of 1560, he succeeded in converting a large quantity of quicksilver into gold. Then, some time after this alleged triumph, he left France to travel in Switzerland and lived for a while at Lausanne. Later on he wandered to Germany, and there he died.

There is a story that he married before setting out to travel through Germany, but on reaching Cologne, he was murdered in his sleep by his servant, who escaped with his wife and his store of transmuting powder. The story of Zacaire’s life was told in verse by De Delle, court poet of Emperor Rudolph II (1552–1622), who took a great interest in alchemy, chemistry, and astrology.

Zacaire’s Opuscule was published originally at Antwerp and repeatedly reprinted. It won the honor of being translated into Latin.

Sources:

Zacornu

A tree in the Islamic hell that has for fruit the heads of devils.

Zadkiel

Pseudonym of Richard James Morrison (1795–1874), one of the pioneer British astrologers of the nineteenth century. He was born in London, England, on June 15, 1795. He joined the navy when only eleven and eventually rose to the rank of lieutenant by the time of his retirement in 1817. He developed an interest in astrology in the 1820s and became a friend of Robert Cross Smith (“Raphael”) who published Raphael’s Astronomical Ephemeris. Morrison modeled his own successful Zadkiel’s Almanac, began in 1836, on Smith’s work. Morrison calculated horoscopes for the Prince Consort and the Princess Royal that were gratefully accepted, but Queen Victoria later expressed concern about predictions for the Prince Consort, possibly because they were so accurate as to cause some discouragement.

Morrison’s name made reference to one of the angels in the Jewish rabbinical legend of the celestial hierarchies. He was the ruler of Jupiter. Through him pass grace, goodness, mercy, piety, and munificence, and he bestows clemency, benevolence, and justice on all.

Sources:

Zaebos

Said to be grand count of the infernal regions. He appears in the shape of a handsome soldier mounted on a crocodile. His head is adorned with a ducal coronet. He is of a gentle disposition.

Zagam

Said to be grand king and president of the infernal regions. He appears as a bull with the wings of a griffin. He changes water into wine, blood into oil, the fool into a wise man, lead into silver, and copper into gold. Thirty legions obey him.

Zahuris (or Zahories)

French people who had traveled in Spain frequently had curious tales to tell concerning the Zahuris—people who were so keen-sighted that they could see streams of water and veins of metal hidden in the earth and could indicate the whereabouts of buried treasure and the bodies of murdered persons.

Explanations were offered on natural lines. It was said that these men knew where water was to be found by the vapors arising...
ing at such spots, and that they were able to trace mines of gold, silver, and copper by the particular herbs growing in their neighborhood. But to the Spaniards, such explanations were unsatisfactory; they persisted in believing that the Zahuris were gifted with supernatural faculties, that they were in rapport with demons, and that, if they wished, they could, without any physical aid, read thoughts and discover secrets that were as a sealed book to the grosser senses of ordinary mortals. The Zahuris were said to have red eyes, and in order to be a Zahuri it was necessary to have been born on a Good Friday.

Zain, C. C.

Pseudonym of Elbert Benjamine (1882–1951), astrologer and occultist. He was born December 12, 1882, in Iowa. As a young man he became associated with an occult organization, the Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor, which presented itself as the outer court of the Brotherhood of Light, a group of spiritual masters equivalent to the Great White Brotherhood. In 1907 Benjamine became one of the Hermetic Brotherhood’s three leaders. He was asked by the other two leaders to write a series of lessons in occult wisdom. He began to write in 1914. The lessons, published under the pen name C. C. Zain, appeared in 21 volumes, dealing with one major area of occult knowledge.

While Benjamine was writing, the Hermetic Brotherhood was discontinued, and in 1932 Benjamine founded the Church of Light as a new outer court for the Brotherhood of Light. Benjamine died November 18, 1951, and was succeeded by Edward Doane as president of the church.

Sources:

Zancig, Julius (1857–1929) and Agnes

Famous Danish thought-reading couple, whose mentalist demonstrations at the London Alhambra in Britain fooled many people, caused much public excitement, and led to a minor scientific controversy. Mrs. Zancig could correctly name any article, number, or word at which her husband cast a glance. The Daily Mail arranged a series of tests in their offices on November 30, 1906, and published the conclusion that the performance was the result of true telepathy. The Daily Chronicle differed and considered a clever code system sufficient explanation. The questions and answers were registered by a phonograph record. Nothing was discovered.

The psychical researcher W. W. Baggally conducted some experiments. He concluded that although the alleged transmission of thought might possibly depend on a code or codes that he was unable to unravel, the performance was of such a nature that it was worthy of serious scientific examination.

The Society for Psychological Research, London, investigated on January 18, 1897. The result was not published. However, it appeared sufficiently favorable for some of the members present to subsequently form an official committee to carry on further tests. The report stated: “While we are of opinion that the records of experiments in telepathy made by the SPR and others raise a presumption for the existence of such a faculty at least strong enough to entitle it to serious scientific attention, the most hopeful results hitherto obtained have not in any way comparable as regards accuracy and precision with those produced by Mr. and Madame Zancig. . . . Those who have only witnessed the public theatre performances, clever and perplexing as these are, will not appreciate how hard it is to offer any plausible explanation of their modus operandi.”

The Zancigs claimed telepathy as an explanation, and Mrs. Zancig had well-developed clairvoyant faculties. At the Spiritualist British College of Psychic Science, London, she successfully passed book-reading tests.

Magician Will Goldston was among the first to publicize the Zancigs’ method of operation. His book Sensational Tales of Mystery Men (1929) spoke of their mentalism from the inside knowledge of a practitioner of stage magic:

“The pair worked on a very complicated and intricate code. There was never any question of thought transference in the act. By framing his question in a certain manner Julius was able to convey to his wife exactly what sort of object or design had been handed to him. Long and continual practice had brought their scheme as near perfection as is humanly possible. On several occasions confederates were placed in the audience and at such times the effects seemed nothing short of miraculous. All their various tests were cunningly faked and their methods were so thorough that detection was an absolute impossibility to the layman.”

In his book Rudi Schneider (1930), the psychical researcher Harry Price expanded upon Goldston’s observations: “The Zancig’s performance took years of study to perfect, and several hours practice daily were needed to keep the performers in good form. I have the Zancig’s codes in my library and know the hard work that both Mr. Julius Zancig and his wife put into their ‘act,’ a matter which I have discussed with Mr. Zancig himself.”

Just when the Zancigs were at the pinnacle of their career Agnes died in 1916. Julius tried to continue the act with several other people, but never to the same effect.

“Zanoni”

Title of an occult novel by Bulwer Lytton. (See also Fiction, English Occult)

Zapan

Term used in Zen Buddhism to indicate the sitting position for meditation, which usually takes place in the Zen-dos or meditation hall in Zen monasteries. The meditation position is known as dhyanasana. It resembles the “lotus” position of hatha yoga known as padmasana, but the hands have a precise positioning integral to the very different method and goal of Zen meditation.

ZCIA Journal

Former periodical concerned with past and present writings of Zen masters on the subject of Zen Buddhism. Some of the contents include material not previously translated into Western languages. It was published three times a year by the Zen Center of Los Angeles and has in recent years been superseded by a new periodical, The Ten Directions.

Zedekias (fl. ninth century C.E.)

Said to have been a Jewish physician of the ninth century who was in great favor with the Emperor Charles the Bald. Zedekias had a reputation as a Kabbalist and wizard and was said to have eaten a whole load of hay, together with the driver and horses, in the presence of the emperor’s court. On another occasion he supposedly flew around in the air.
Zedekias was mentioned by the Abbé de Montfaucon de Villars in his book Comte de Gabalis (1670). According to de Villars, Zedekias was anxious to show the world that elementary spirits really existed and advised the sylphs to show themselves in the air to everyone:

"These beings were seen in the air in human form, sometimes in battle array marching in good order, halting under armed, or unoccupied beneficent and firm tents. Sometimes on wonderfully constructed aerial ships, whose flying squadrons roved at the will of the Zephyrs. What happened? . . . The people straightway believed that sorcerers had taken possession of the Air for the purpose of raising tempests and bringing hail upon their crops. . . . The Emperors believed it as well; and this ridiculous chimera went so far that the wise Charlemagne, and after him Louis the Debonnaire, imposed grievous penalties upon all these supposed Tyrants of the Air. You may see in the beginning of this first chapter of the Capitularies of these two Emperors."

Zeinebouch

A dark god, monarch of the empire of the dead among the ancient Germans.

Zeitoun

Zeitoun, a suburb of Cairo, Egypt, was the site from 1968 to 1971 of some of the most spectacular sets of apparitions of the Virgin Mary. She was seen not just by a few children as in most of the reported apparitions in the last two centuries, but by thousands of Christians, Jews, and Muslims alike. However, it is also claimed that the sightings appeared at a Coptic church, rather than a Roman Catholic one, and that very little interest in the apparitions has been demonstrated by Catholic authorities.

The apparitions began on the evening of April 2, 1968. Two men, both Muslims, working in a garage across from the Coptic Church of St. Mary in Zeitoun, saw what they first thought was a nun standing on top of the central dome of the church's roof. Their initial thought was that she was about to commit suicide by leaping off the dome. One went to get the priest and one an emergency squad. Others began to gather, attracted by the confusion. The woman on the dome rose to her feet and was revealed as being enwrapped in brilliant light. A woman in the crowd shouted that it was the Virgin. Several objects that appeared to be luminous birds fluttered around the lady. One of the workmen who had originally seen the figure had a wounded hand and was scheduled for surgery the next morning. When he reported to the hospital, the doctors discovered his hand had been healed.

The object on the church roof, soon believed by many to be the Virgin, faded from sight after a while. It would be another week before it reappeared. After that, the appearances varied. For periods they would occur every night. Sometimes they would be brief, and on occasion last as long as six or seven hours. Most of the time she was alone. On occasion she had a child in her arms or appeared with figures believed to be St. Joseph and Jesus as a lad of 12. As many as 250,000 people crowded the streets around the church and witnessed the Virgin's appearances. Eventually, a number of pictures of the phenomena were taken. The last apparition occurred on May 29, 1971, at which pictures were taken.

The Coptic Church has made much of the apparitions and as a result many Westerners tend to treat Zen as a kind of Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed. Zen (or Ch'an)

Zen (or Ch'an)

One of the few traditional forms of instant enlightenment in Oriental religions. However, Zen normally demands a long preliminary period of monastic life and spiritual discipline culminating in the somewhat surrealistic techniques that give instant satori, or enlightenment. Zen is a special branch of Mahayana Buddhist school (which dominates Buddhism in China, Korea, and Japan), dating from 520 C.E. when Bodhi-Dharma (d. 534 C.E.) went from India to China with a mission later codified in the maxims: "a special transmission outside the scriptures; no dependence upon words and letters; direct pointing at the soul of man; seeing into one's nature; and the attainment of Buddhahood." Zen was later divided into two main schools, called Rinzai and Soto in Japan.

Rinzai Zen depends very much upon sudden or startling paradoxes, embodied in koans, mystical riddles such as "Empty-handed I come, carrying a spade." Modern interest in Zen often misunderstands the nature of such riddles, where the verbal factor is merely a trigger to intensify stress in the pupil, and as a result many Westerners tend to treat Zen as a kind of intellectual exercise. In practice, however, such paradoxes were the culmination of a more formal monastic training emphasizing traditional spiritual values. The disciple would be fully extended on all levels of his nature—physically, in the everyday hard work of the monastery; mentally, in the assimilation of spiritual teaching; and emotionally, in the sudden clash of unconventional techniques used in Zen.

The koans merely accentuated an intolerable pressure at all levels, culminating in the sudden flash of enlightenment by transcendence on a higher, spiritual plane. (See also ZCLA Journal; Zazen; Zen Studies Society)

Sources:

Zener Cards

A pack of twenty-five cards bearing simple symbols in groups of five of a kind: star, circle, square, cross, and waves, used in parapsychology in testing extrasensory faculty under laboratory conditions. The use of the Zener card pack dates from the work of J. B. Rhine in the Department of Psychology at Duke University, North Carolina, from 1927 onward, first reported in Rhine's Extrasensory Perception, published 1954 by the Boston Society for Psychic Research.

Prior to the work of Rhine, ordinary playing cards had been used in testing telepathy, notably by Margaret Verrall between 1890 and 1895. Significant tests were carried out in Britain by Ina Jephson and other members of the Society for Psychological Research beginning in 1924.

The Zener card pack was devised by Karl Zener (1903–1963) of the psychology faculty at Duke University as a means of avoiding preferences for individual playing cards during tests and in order to facilitate evaluation of test scores. Having concluded that parapsychology as pursued by Rhine was a threat to the psychology department, Zener later turned against Rhine and joined with some colleagues in an attempt to have him removed from his faculty position.

Two problems developed with the Zener cards. First, while they were designed to be more emotionally neutral than traditional playing cards, in fact, they used some highly charged emotional symbols, such as the star, a prominent symbol in many religions. Second, in the early printings, the ink bled through and the symbol was clearly visible on the back of the card. This later problem was immediately corrected when discovered.

Sources:

Zen Studies Society

American lay organization for the study of traditional Zen meditation inspired by the presence of D. T. Suzuki in New York City in 1956. Upon the death of its founder Clifton Cane in 1962, it became inactive for a few years but was reactivated when some of the students met Eido Tai Shimano, a Zen master who agreed to move to New York and lead the work. Emphasis in the reorganized society shifted from study to practice, and branches soon developed in Philadelphia and Washington, D.C.

Associated with the society is the Dai Bosatsu Zendo Kongo-ji, in the Catskill Mountains, that is open to lay people for full-time Zen practice with daily meditation, study, work, and community life. The society publishes The Newsletter of the Zen Studies Society, a semi-annual newsletter and writings of Shimano. The society can be contacted at HCR 1 Box 171, Livingston Manor, NY 12758-9402. Website: http://www.zenstudies.org/.

Sources:

Zepar

Said to be the grand duke of the infernal empire, possibly identical with Vepar, or Separ. Nevertheless, under the name of Zepar he had the form of a warrior. He cast men into evil passions. Twenty-eight legions obeyed him.

Zetetic Scholar

A journal of academic research into occultism, cryptozoology, and related fields founded by Marcello Truzzi of the Department of Sociology at Eastern Michigan University. Originally titled Explorations, the title was changed after the second volume to avoid confusion with the Explorations Institute in Berkeley, California. “Zetetic” derives from the Greek philosophical school of Pyrrho (365–275 B.C.E.) and indicates extreme skepticism. Zetetic Journal circulated to serious academicians researching occultism and to organizations and individuals in the field. It contained critical notes and news of current events and personalities in occultism, a who’s who in occult research, and valuable lists of books and articles in the fields of occultism and parapsychology. The Zetetic was given to the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of the Claims of the Paranormal. However, in 1977 Truzzi had a disagreement with the committee leadership over their handling of a research project in which false data was published in an attempt to refute astrology.

Truzzi disassociated himself from the committee and announced publication of Zetetic Scholar as an independent scientific review. The first issue appeared in 1978. In the meantime, beginning with the Fall/Winter issue, the committee continued its journal under a new name, The Skeptical Inquirer. Truzzi continued the Zetetic Scholar through the 1980s, some 15 issues appearing. The Skeptical Inquirer continues as the organ of the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal.
Zhong Gong

Zhong Gong, founded in China in 1988, is one of the most popular of the qigong groups operating in the Peoples Republic of China through the 1990s. By the end of the decade it was estimated to have 20 million followers. However, in 1999, in the wake of the crackdown on the Falun Gong group, it was also singled out for repressive measures. The Chinese government declared that the meditation-exercise sect was an “evil cult.”

Zhong Gong, the China Health Care and Wisdom Enhancement Gong, was founded by Zhang Hongbao (b. 1955) during the heyday of government support for qigong. In spite of its operating apart from the officially sanctioned National Qigong Association, Zhong Gong spread widely across the country. It was also favorably mentioned in the official press. Its training school in Shaanxi Province had over 2,000 students. Reportedly, the country’s president, Jiang Zemin, had sought out a Zhong Gong Master to treat his arthritis and back pain.

Through the 1990s, the group had some minor run-ins with authorities and became known as an independent organization apart from government control, though no ideological elements appeared to contradict government authority (as with Falun Gong). However, in December of 1999, police closed the Zhong Gong training facility in Shaanxi. Then in January of 2000, the leader of the group in Zhejiang Province was sentenced to two years for the Chinese equivalent of practicing medicine without a license, a charge potentially placing all qigong groups at risk. The government has charged that following qigong has been accompanied with admonitions to stop seeing medical doctors.

In the wake of the move against Zhong Gong, the government announced broad changes in regulations dealing with qigong groups specifying how they must be organized and what teachings they may espouse. The ongoing issues concerning Zhong Gong and other qigong groups are being covered in the press and monitored by various human rights groups.

Sources:

Ziazaa

A mysterious fabled black and white stone. It was said to render its possessor litigious and cause terrible visions.

Zierold, Maria Reyes

A Mexican sensitive who was the subject of experiments by Gustav Pagenstecher (1855–1942) from about 1919 onward. Zierold was a housewife whom Pagenstecher treated for insomnia by means of hypnosis. To his surprise, Zierold manifested psychometric ability while in hypnotic trance.

A medical committee in Mexico City also examined Zierold’s abilities and reported that the phenomena seemed genuinely paranormal. In 1921 Walter Franklin Prince, then principal research officer of the American Society for Psychical Research, visited Mexico to observe Pagenstecher’s experiments and to conduct his own. He reached similar conclusions.

Sources:
Pagenstecher, Gustav. Die Geheimnisse der Psychometrie oder Hellsehen in die Vergangenheit (Secrets of Psychometry or Clairvoyance into the Past), N.p., 1928.

Zikr

A Sufi term meaning “remembrance,” indicating the constant awareness of divine consciousness in humanity. In Sufism, the act of reciting the name of God is called zikr. It is a practice that aims to align the heart with the divine and to cultivate a state of connection with the divine. Zikr is often accompanied by rhythmic chanting and sometimes physical movement, such as walking or dancing, to facilitate the deepening of the spiritual experience. The practice of zikr is not only limited to the Sufi tradition but is also found in other spiritual traditions as a means of achieving a state of meditation and inner peace. The significance of zikr lies in its ability to enhance concentration, cultivate a sense of community, and foster a deeper understanding of the divine. It is a practice that is accessible to anyone seeking to connect with the divine or to deepen their spiritual practice. The specific techniques and forms of zikr can vary widely depending on the tradition and the individual practitioner, offering a rich and diverse tapestry of spiritual expression.
Zikr takes the form of a specific ritual to bring individuals into a higher state of consciousness. The practice of zikr varies considerably from group to group, but its most famous form, as practiced by some Turkish Sufis, involves circular movements of the group members who came to be known as whirling dervishes.

Zitko, John Howard (1911– )

John Howard Zitko, New Age lecturer and founder of the World University, a center for alternative education, was born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on October 26, 1911. He attended the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee and the University of California in Los Angeles, and received a Doctor of Divinity degree from Golden State University.

Zitko was cofounder of the Lemurian Fellowship established in Chicago, Illinois, in 1936 and edited its early book, The Earth Dweller Returns (1940), reputedly a sequel to the nineteenth-century channeled text, A Dweller on Two Planets (1899), by Phyllos the Tibetan (through Frederick William Oliver). The movement of the fellowship to rural California in 1941 encouraged Zitko’s move to the West Coast. He served as the minister of the Temple of the Jeweled Cross in Hollywood for four years (1942–46). During this time he conceived of the idea of a World University, and on December 21, 1946, founded the World University Roundtable as a parent corporation to develop the idea and raise funds. He later served a brief tenure as pastor of the Church of the Abundant Life in Huntington Park, California (1956–59).

Over the years the concept of the World University was undergirded with the idea of promoting world peace through world education. Finally, in 1967, the World University was founded in Tucson, Arizona, to offer nontraditional, experiential, and tutorial learning with an emphasis on world order studies, environmental concerns, and human potential knowledge. It is headquartered from its campus, now located in Ben- son, Arizona, but functions primarily through its many small affiliated schools located around the world. It has pulled together a faculty of independent scholars who are intellectually aligned with the nontraditional curriculum supported by the university. Among its American affiliates is the Aum Esoteric Study Center headed by Robert Hieromonous in Baltimore, Maryland.

Though concentrating on the university’s development, through the years Zitko has remained active with the Lemurian Fellowship and in 1981 was named its vice president. His 1947 book, Streamers of Light from the New World, had heralded many New Age themes, and as the New Age Movement emerged, he authored several books that embodied the alternative perspective on education and life represented by the university: New Age Tantra Yoga (1974) and World University Insights with the Future in Mind (1980). These books resonated with the movement of the 1980s and Zitko became a popular New Age lecturer and teacher.

Sources:

Zizaa

A fabulous precious stone, said to produce marvelous dreams for those who looked at it before sleeping. An illustration of it appears in Hortus Sanitatis by Johannis de Cuba, Strasbourg (ca. 1483).

Zizis

The name that modern Jews give to their phylacteries.

Zlokobinca

Among the Slavs, name for a witch, meaning “evil dealer.”

Zoaphite

According to the seventeenth-century traveler Jan Struys, a zoaphite was a species of cucumber that fed on neighboring plants. Its fruit had the form of a lamb, with the head, feet, and tail of that animal distinctly apparent, and it is thus called, in the language of the country, Canaver, or Conaver, signifying a lamb. Struys described this plant in his book Drie aenmerkelikhe en seer vampioedige (1676), translated as The Voyages and Travels of Jan Struys (1684).

Its skin was covered with a white down. The ancient Tartars thought a great deal of it and most of them kept it carefully in their houses, where Jan Struys says he saw it several times.

It grew on a stalk about three feet in height, to which it was attached by a sort of tendril. On this tendril it could move about and turn and bend toward the herbs on which it fed, and with-out which it soon dried up and withered. Wolves loved it, devouring it with avidity, because, reportedly, it tasted like the flesh of a lamb. The author added that he had been assured that it had bones, flesh, and blood, thus being known in its native country as zoaphite, or animal plant.

Zodiac

The zodiac, literally the circle of animals, is constituted by the 12 stellar constellations through which the Sun appears to pass in its annual movement through the heavens. The 12 constellations form a belt across the night sky some 8 to 9 degrees on either side of the solar orbit. The Moon and the planets of this solar system also move within that belt. The path of the Sun is called the ecliptic as eclipses occur when the Moon’s orbit crosses the Sun’s path.

The idea of a zodiac is relatively complex, and long-term observation of planetary motion is quite possible without it. The idea of naming the various constellations in the sky for gods and animals is ancient; the singling out of the 12 constellations that constitute the zodiac goes back at least to the second millennium B.C.E. in ancient Mesopotamia. The zodiac as it appears in modern astrology was certainly in use by the sixth century B.C.E. Each culture gave the constellations of the zodiac different names, the modern Western zodiac being derived from the Greeks. The designation of 12 constellations, a worldwide phenomenon, relates to the division of the year by the Moon’s 12 complete orbits through the zodiac in each solar year.

In modern astrology, two different zodiacs are popularly recognized. The sidereal zodiac reflects the actual location of the constellations in the night sky. Practitioners of Vedic astrology use this zodiac. The position of the constellations relative to the beginning of the years shifts slightly each year due to the phenomenon known as the procession of the equinoxes. Most Western astrologers use the tropical zodiac as defined by Ptolemy in the second century C.E. According to Ptolemy, the astrological year would begin each spring equinox and it would assume that the sun was at 0 degrees Aries. Due to the progression of the equinoxes, the sun at the spring equinox is close to 0 degrees Pisces. Much of the symbolism of the signs of the zodiac in Western astrology is tied to the seasons of the year. That symbolism would be lost with the acceptance of the sidereal zodiac.

The 12 signs of the zodiac are: Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, and Pisces. (See also Astralological Houses; Astralological Planets; Astralological Signs; Astrology)
The Zoist (Journal)

The journal of medical mesmerists in Britain during the mid-nineteenth century. It was under the direction of Dr. John Elliotson and was published from 1843 to 1856. The popular side of mesmerism was represented by The Phreno-Magnet, another periodical started at the same time and edited by Spencer T. Hall.

“Zolar”

Pseudonym of successful astrologer Bruce King.

Zöllner, Johann C. F. (1834–1882)

Professor of physics and astronomy at the University of Leipzig, remembered most for his speculative work, The Nature of the Comets, which attracted the attention of the intellectual world in view of the many original ideas he advanced. He also engaged in psychical research beginning with an investigation of the phenomena of the medium Henry Slade. His subsequent book, Transcendental Physics (1880), rendered his name famous in the annals of psychical research and subjected him to persecution, contempt, and ridicule from the scientific fraternity. He is considered a somewhat naive investigator unable to detect the fraud perpetrated on him by a series of physical mediums.

His experiments began in December 1877. He was assisted by William Edward Weber, a professor of physics; W. Scheibner, a professor of mathematics; and Gustave Theodore Fechner, a professor of physics who, to quote Zöllner’s words, became “perfectly convinced of the reality of the observed facts, altogether excluding imposture or prestidigitation.” Professor Fichte, of Stuttgart, and Professor Ulrici, of Halle, also endeavored to detect the phenomena of the medium. He is considered a somewhat naive investigator unable to detect the fraud perpetrated on him by a series of physical mediums.

The evidential value of the investigation was somewhat weakened by Zöllner’s insistence on the theory of fourth dimension as an explanation. Of the theory itself, the astronomer G. V. Schiaparelli wrote in a letter to Camille Flammarion: “It is the most ingenious and probable that can be imagined. According to this theory, medumistic phenomena would lose their mystic or mystifying character and would pass into the domain of ordinary physics and physiology. They would lead to a very considerable extension of the sciences, an extension such that their author would deserve to be placed side by side with Galileo and Newton. Unfortunately, these experiments of Zollner were made with a medium of poor reputation.”

Zöllner, after his sittings with Slade, had further interesting experiences with Elizabeth d’Esperance. In March 1886, Baron von Hoffmann engaged the medium William Eglington to give twenty-five sittings to Zöllner. He was very satisfied with the result and intended to write another book on his experiences. He died before he could do it.

The report of the skeptical Seybert Commission quoted testimonies from Scheibner, Fechner, and some others that Zöllner, at the time of his experiments, was of unsound mind. As he filled his chair up to the moment of his sudden death, this charge cannot be seriously supported. In his book Birth and Death as a Change of Form of Perception (1886), Baron Lazar De Baczolay Hellenbach wrote that Zöllner “was in his last days deeply wounded and embittered by the treatment of his colleagues, whose assaults he took too much to heart. Zöllner, however, was in perfect possession of his intellect till his last breath.”

When the report of the Seybert Commission was made public, anti-Spiritualists, like popular atheist writer Joseph McCabe, seized upon the remarks about Zöllner and wrote of him as “eldey and purblind.” Dr. Isaac Kaufmann Funk, the New York publisher and psychical investigator, wrote to Leipzig and received from Dr. Karl Bücher, the Rector Magnificus of the University of Leipzig, a letter, dated November 7, 1905, that “information received from Zöllner’s colleagues states that during his entire studies at the university here, until his death, he was of sound mind; moreover, in the best of health. The cause of his death was a hemorrhage of the brain on the morning of April 20, 1882 while he was at breakfast with his mother, and from which he died shortly after.”

Sources:

Zombies

In Haitian voudou superstition, a zombie is a dead body reanimated by magic to act as a soulless robot. In recent years stories of zombies have spread throughout Western countries in Hollywood horror films about the walking dead. According to the folk tradition, the houngans, or voodoo priests, are said to dig up corpses and reanimate them by magic rituals. Another way of creating a zombie is to feed the victim’s preparation that stupefies the soul, leaving the body a living corpse.

To cure a zombie, it is said one should give it saltwater to drink. Special burial techniques are sometimes used to prevent corpses from being used as zombies. The corpse may be buried face down and its mouth filled with earth; sometimes the lips are sewn together, presumably to prevent the soul from leaving by the mouth. A somewhat naive custom is to strew handfuls of sesame seed on the grave (a common practice in eastern Europe to entertain vampires), so that the spirit of the deceased will always be occupied in counting the seeds.

Firsthand accounts of zombies have continued into the late twentieth century. Author Alfred Métraux stated that six months after the death of a friend he saw that friend as a zombie at the house of a houngan. Harvard ethnobiologist Wade Davis, who visited Haiti in 1982, succeeded in penetrating the secret societies and understanding and documenting the voodoo culture. He has suggested that certain powerful drugs might be capable of influencing centers in the brain concerned with conscious control. A person given such drugs would appear dead, would be buried alive, and revived several days later. They would then be given hallucinogens and forced into a new life as an unpaid laborer.

Davis’ theories were recently validated by an expedition to Haiti that was the subject of a remarkable BBC television program presented by John Tusa in 1984. In interviews with houngans, the secret of creating zombies was disclosed. A poisonous substance from the puffer fish (Tetraodon hystrix) is carefully prepared by the houngan and administered to the victim, who thereafter appears dead and is buried. He is exhumed by the houngan and used as a zombie. The poison stupefies certain brain centers.

The poison was analyzed by Leon Roizy, professor of neurobiology at Columbia University, and identified as tetrodotoxin, found in the puffer fish, the exquisitely dangerous gourmet dish of Japanese Fugu, requiring skillful preparation by experienced chefs in order to avoid poisoning the diner.

When eaten sliced raw (sashimi), the flesh is relatively safe, but among eaters of the partly cooked dish known as chiri, which includes toxic cooked livers, there are over a hundred deaths annually.

Sources:

Zoomancy

A system of divination based on the appearances and behavior of animals.

Zorab, George A(vetoom) M(arterus)

(1898–1990)

Author and parapsychologist. He was born on January 11, 1898, at Surabaya, Java. His family sent him to the Netherlands for his education. He encountered Spiritualism when only twelve years old and was interested in psychic phenomena from then on. He was also grateful to Spiritualists for relieving him of his fear of death. He became an active Spiritualist as a young man and edited several Spiritualist periodicals. He joined the Studievereniging voor Psychical Research (Dutch Society for Psychical Research) and beginning in 1932, he experimented in parapsychology with a concentration on spontaneous paranormal phenomena and quantitative experiments in extrasensory perception with psychotics. In 1938 he joined the Society for Psychical Research, London. He published his first book in 1940, by which time he had concluded that the spirit hypothesis was only weakly supported and the evidence for survival questionable.

After the war Zorab emerged as an active parapsychologist. He chaired the International Committee for the Study of Spontaneous Paranormal Phenomena, The Hague; was a secretary for the First International Conference on Parapsychological Studies in Utrecht, the Netherlands, in 1953; and participated in the Conference on Spontaneous Paranormal Phenomena at Cambridge, England, in 1955, and the International Conference on Psychology and Parapsychology at Royaumont, France, in 1956.

He was named honorary secretary of the Dutch Society for Psychical Research (1945–57) and directed the Parapsychology Foundation’s European Research Center at St. Paul de Vence, France. In 1964 he was selected to become a member of the Council of the Parapsychology Association, a position which he refused. He did accept, however, the Perrott-Warwick Studentship in Psychical Research for 1968/1969. He was the European review editor of the Indian Journal of Parapsychology, contributed many articles to Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie and other parapsychological journals, and wrote a number of books. Zorab remained active in the field of parapsychology until 1987, due to failing health. He died July 4, 1990.

Sources:

———. De Jacht op het Spiritistisch Bewijs (In Quest of Proof for Survival). The Hague: Boucher, 1940.

———. Prognosie, Het Raadslid der Toekomst (Precognition, the Riddle of the Future). N.p., 1953.

Zos Kia Cultus

The system of magic developed by occult artist Austin Osmond Spare, involving a complete symbolism of form, sound, desire, and will, deriving from sexual energy. Zos was not only Spare’s magic name but also a symbol of the body as a whole, which could project desires and modify the world of matter. The primary practitioner of the system in the United States is Michael Bertiaux, head of the Monastery of the Seven Rays.

Sources:

Zschokke, (Johannes) Heinrich (Daniel)

(1771–1848)

German-Swiss writer, actor, and pastor, born at Magdeburg, March 22, 1771. He was educated at Frankfurt-on-Oder, where he studied theology, philosophy, and jurisprudence. He encountered difficulties with authorities on account of his pronounced political opinions, but eventually concentrated on writing plays and Gothic romances influenced by Sir Walter Scott. His romance Abbeilinon, de grosse Bauhut was produced in 1794 and had an enormous success, being dramatized the following year. It was adapted by the English writer Matthew Gregory Lewis as The Bravo of Venice in 1804 and greatly influenced themes in Gothic romance. Zschokke died at Aarau June 27, 1848.

Zuccarini, Amedee (ca. 1907)

Italian, non-professional medium of Bologna who exhibited the ability to perform levitation, which was studied in great detail by Dr. L. Patrizi, professor of physiology at the University of Modena, and Professor Creste Murani of the Milan Polytechnic. (Annuaire des Sciences Psychiques, vol. 17, pp. 528–549). For an English language account, see Annals of Psychical Science (vol. 6, no. 34, 1907, pp. 303–306). Flashlight photographs showed him up in the air without support. Zuccarini had two trance personalities, a deceased brother and a doctor who had died in 1600.
Zügun, Eleonore (1914–)

A Romanian peasant girl, born in 1914 at Talpa, Romania, the subject of poltergeist persecution and the phenomena of stigmata. Her experiences filled her neighbors with dread. When the phenomena appeared, about 1925, the peasants attributed them to Dracu, the devil, an idea the girl accepted. She was incarcerated in an asylum.

The Countess Wassilko-Serecki and her friends heard of the strange case, rescued the girl, and took her to Vienna. The countess published an article and a book about the young girl. The British psychical researcher Harry Price visited Vienna in May 1926 and reported on the phenomena surrounding Zügun in the Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (August 1926). He found the phenomena genuine. On Price’s invitation, the countess and her protégée then came to London for an investigation at the National Laboratory of Psychological Research. The case was reported in the NLPR Proceedings (vol. 1, part 1, January 1927) and widely discussed in the press.

Capt. Seton-Karr testified on October 19, 1926: “I was present on October 5, when the so-called stigmatic markings appeared on the face, arms and forehead of Eleonore Zügun under conditions which absolutely precluded the possibility of Eleonore producing them by scratching or other normal means. The marks were photographed in my presence.”

The report of the National Laboratory of Psychological Research, after describing various telekinetic and appport phenomena, concluded on the stigmata as follows:

“(a) Stigmatic markings appeared spontaneously in various parts of Eleonore’s body;

(b) That Eleonore was not consciously responsible for the production of the marks;

(c) That under scientific test conditions movements of small objects without physical contact undoubtedly took place. The experimenters, unless they are bereft of all human perceptions, cannot possibly come to any other conclusions.

“What has happened to Eleonore is apparently this: During her early childhood when the so-called ‘poltergeist’ phenomena became first apparent, the simple peasants threatened her so often with Dracu (the Devil) and what he would do to her that her subconscious mind became obsessed with the idea of whippings, bitings, etc., which the ignorant peasants said would be her lot at the hands—or teeth—of Dracu. Remove the Dracu complex and the girl would probably be troubled no further with stigmatic markings.

“If we have discovered the cause of the ‘stigmata’ I am afraid we cannot lay claim to having unraveled the mystery of the telekinetic movements of the coins, etc. We have merely proved that they happen.”

Toward the end of her fourteenth year, at the approach of the menses, Zügun completely lost her psychic powers.

Sources:

———. Der Spuk von Talpa. München, 1926.

Zwaan Rays

An hypothesized energy field demonstrated by N. Zwaan, Dutch delegate to the International Spiritualist Federation Congress in London in 1948. The Zwaan Rays were supposed to be capable of stimulating the psychic senses into activity. Subsequently the Spirit Electronic Communication Society was founded in Manchester, England, on September 10, 1949, and an apparatus was developed that claimed to improve the Zwaan effect. (See also Ashkir-Jobson Trianion)

Sources:

Internet Resources

This section, organized by subject, contains information on organizations specializing in occultism, parapsychology, New Age, Theosophy, holistic healing, etc. Every effort has been made to provide the most current sites available. All sites were active at the time this edition went to press.

ACUPRESSURE

Acupressure.org
http://www.acupressure.org/

British Columbia Acupressure Therapist's Association http://www.islandnet.com/~bcata/

ACUPUNCTURE

Acupuncture Canada
http://www.acupuncture.ca/

Acupuncture.com
http://www.Acupuncture.com/

American Association of Oriental Medicine
http://www.aacom.org/

The British Medical Acupuncture Society
http://www.medical-acupuncture.co.uk

National Certification Commission for Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine http://www.nccaom.org/

ADAMSKI FOUNDATION

GAF International/Adamski Foundation
http://www.gafintl-adamski.com/html/GAFPg1.htm

THE AETHERIUS SOCIETY

The Aetherius Society
http://www.aetherius.org/

ALCHEMY

Alchemy Lab
http://www.alchemylab.com/

The Alchemy Web Site and Virtual Library
http://www.levity.com/alchemy/

The Hermetic Alchemical Order of the QBLH
http://www.qblh.org/

Hermetic Alchemy
http://www.mension.com/piskealm.htm

Mentionization Complimentation http://www.mension.com/~math

White Order of Thule
http://www.thulean.org/

AMERICAN MUSEUM OF MAGIC

American Museum of Magic http://www.marshallmi.org/tours/virtual/magic.html

AMERICAN SOCIETY FOR PSYCHICAL RESEARCH

American Society for Psychical Research
http://www.aspr.com/

AMULETS

Arabic Folk Medicine and Magic: 20th Century Amulets from the Kelsey Museum of Archaeology http://www.st.umich.edu/CHICO/Archives/amulets/home.html

ANCIENT ASTRONAUT SOCIETY

Ancient Astronaut Society (German)
http://www.aetherius.org/

ANCIENT MYSTERIES

Ancient Mysteries
http://www.ancientweb.com/

Atlantis Rising Online
http://atlantisrising.com/

Mysterious Places
http://www.mysteriousplaces.com/

ANCIENT MYSTICAL ORDER ROSEA CRUCIS (AMORC)

Ancient Mystical Order Rosae Crucis
http://www.amor.org/

Rosicrucian Park
http://www.rosicrucian.org/

ANCIENT WISDOM

Lemurian Fellowship
http://www.lemurian.org/

Universal Life–The Inner Religion
http://www.universelles-leben.org/

ANGELS

Angel Therapy
http://www.angeltherapy.com/

ANTHROPOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Anthroposophic Press
http://www.anthroposophy.org/

Anthroposophical Society in America
http://www.anthroposophy.org/

AROMATHERAPY

Aromatherapy
http://www.naturalland.com/pev/ar/arom.htm

Aromatherapy Center Home Page
http://www.madison-avenue.com/aroma/aroma01.htm

International Federation of Aromatherapists

National Association for Holistic Aromatherapy http://www.naha.org/

ARTHURIAN STUDIES

Arthuriana
http://dc.smu.edu/Arthuriana/

Arthurian Legends
http://www.nca.uiuc.edu/Edu/RSE/RSEblue/arthur/artids.html

Arthurian Resources
http://www.users.globalnet.co.uk/~tomgreen/Arthuriana.htm

The Camelot Project
http://www.kingarththur.co.uk/

The Cardiff Arthurian Society
http://www.cf.ac.uk/uwcc/archi/howshall/arthurmi/

The Oxford Arthurian Society
http://users.ox.ac.uk/~arthsoc/

Pendragon Society
http://www.pendragon.mcmail.com/index.htm

ASTROLOGY

American Federation of Astrologers
http://www.astrologers.com/

Astro Communications Services
http://www.astrocom.com/

The Astrological Journal
http://www.astrologer.com/äänet/journal.html

Astrological Magazine

Astrotalk
http://www.astrologysoftware.com/

Free Online Chart Calculation
http://alabe.com/freechart/
Internet Resources

Henge of Keltria
http://www.keltria.org/

The Insular Order of Druids http://www.insular-demon.co.uk/druids.htm

Introduction to Druids
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/2519/
druids.html

The Order of Bard, Ovates and Druids http://www.druindry.org/index.shtml

ECKANKAR
http://www.eckankar.org/

ECKANKAR in Norweg og Danmark
http://www.eckankar.no/

Eckankar in Australia

ECKANKAR Nederland
http://www.eckankar.nl/

ECKANKAR Oesterich
http://members.eunet.at/eckankar/

ECKANKAR in Ontario
http://www.eckankar-ont.org/

ELECTRONIC VOICE PHENOMENON (EVP)
Alphaland Biographies
http://www.alphaland.com/biogs.htm

The American Association of Electronic Voice Phenomena
http://www.hibrichan.com/evpfiles/
AARP.html

Electronic Voice Phenomenon Internet Center http://www.hibrichan.com/evpfiles/
evp.html

International Ghost Hunters Society
http://www.ghostweb.com/evp.html

Reincarnation Electronic Voice Phenomenon http://home.earthlink.net/~iwonder/evp.htm

World ITC
http://www.worlditc.org/

Verein für Tonbandstimmenforschung (VTF) e.V.
http://www.vtf.de/

EXORCISM
Exorcism-links
http://alapadre.net/exorcism.html

New Definitions for Exorcisms in the Catholic Church text/national4.html

A Simple Exorcism for Priests and Laity http://www.truecatholic.org/exorcismsimple.htm

FAIRIES

The Cottingley Fairies
http://www.blup.edu/~dsimanek/cooper.htm

Fairy Encyclopedia
http://www2.cybercities.com/c/cattis/

Fairy Legends (Cornish)
http://www.gandolf.com/cornwall/fairies/index.shtml

Guide to Irish Fairies http://www.irelandseye.com/animation/intro.html

FALSE MEMORY SYNDROME

False Memory Syndrome Foundation
http://www.fmsfonline.org/

FENG SHUI

American Feng Shui Institute
http://www.amfengshui.com/

Feng Shui Institute of America
http://www.windwater.com/

Feng Shui Institute of New Zealand
http://www.fengshui.co.nz/

Feng Shui Society (England)
http://www.fengshuisociety.org.uk/

FOLKLORE AND MYTHS

American Folklore Society
http://afsnet.org/

Baltic Institute of Folklore http://haldjas.folklore.ee/BIF/bhome.htm

Lilith Myth
http://cat.sas.upenn.edu/~humm/
Topics/Lilith/

FORTEAN PHENOMENA

Forteant Times
http://www.forteanetimes.com/

International Fortean Organization
http://research.sumh.edu/~frizzell/info

GOEMANCY

Geomancy-Online
http://www.3dglobe.com/on/

Geopathic Information Site Project
http://www.geo.org/

Labyrinthina
http://www.menet.com/~labyrinthina/index.htm

Mid-Atlantic Geomancy
http://www.geomancy.org/

GHOSTS

The Anomalist
http://www.anomalist.com/
Fate Magazine
http://www.fatemag.com/

Ghost Research Society
http://www.ghostresearch.org

GLOSSOLALIA

Glossolalia and 1 Corinthians 14 (Lecture) http://www.apologetique.org/en/ritules/neomontanism/

BDG_glossolalia_en.htm

Speaking in Tongues (Religious View) http://www.religioustolerance.org/tongues.htm

GOLDEN DAWN

Alchemy: The Black Art
http://www.members.aol.com/frateral/alchemy.html

Builders of Adytum
http://www.bota.org

Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn http://www.hermeticgoldendawn.org/
index.shtml

Hermetic Order of the Morning Star
International

London Lodge of the Oxford Golden Dawn
Occult Society
http://www.lawright.com/logdos/

The Order of the Thelemic Golden Dawn http://www.tgd.org/

Ra-Hoor-Khuit Network
http://www.rahoorkhuit.net/

Sovereign and Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem (International) http://www.osmnh.org/index.html

GNOMES

Encyclopedia Mythica
http://www.pantheon.org/

Gnome Encyclopedia
http://www2.cybercities.com/c/cattis/
Gnomes
http://users.electrol.com/michaelymricky/index.html

GNOSTIC STUDIES

Gnostic Alchemical Church of Typhon-Christ
http://www.groocities.com/Area51/
Stargate/7770/.

Gnostic Network
http://trufax.org/menu/gnostic.html

Gnostic Order of Christ
http://www.gnostic.net/

The Gnostic Society
http://home.sol.no/~noetic/hotlist/gnosis.htm

Immaculate Heart Servants of Mary http://www.Gnostic.net/ibm/

The Path of Gnostic Light http://www.mnsi.net/~miskoivc/pglvx.htm

GRAPHOLOGY

The British Academy of Graphology http://www.graphology.co.uk/

The British Institute of Graphologists http://www.britishgraphology.org/

GRIMOIRES

The Grimoires Page
http://www.magitech.com/~grimoires/

HAUNTINGS

H.O.P.E.
http://www.haunt.net/

L.I.F.E. Foundation
http://www paranormalhelp.com/
paranormalhelp/story.htm

Stories of Ghosts and Hauntings http://theshadowlands.net/ghost/

HINDUISM

Hinduism Today Online
http://www.hinduism-today.com/

HOLISTIC

Alphabiotics
http://www.alphabiotics.com/

HOMEOPATHY

British Institute of Homeopathy (Canada)
http://www.homeopathy.com/

Homeopathy: Modern Medicine
http://www.indiaspace.com/homeopathy Institute for Traditional Medicine
http://www.itmonline.org/
National Center for Homeopathy http://www.health.y.net/nch

HYPNOTISM
Alchemy Institute of Healing http://www.alchemynstitute.com/Holistic World: Hypnotism
http://www.holisticworld.com/
Health_and_Wellness/
Hynpoforum
http://www.hynpoforum.com/
Hynotherapy
http://www.hynotherapy.com/

I CHING
Bio-Ching
http://www.teleport.com/~bioching/
Mensionization Complimentation
http://www.mension.com/#ching

KABBALAH
Hermetic Kabbalah
http://www.digital-brilliance.com/kah/Kabbalah Home Page
http://kabbalahweb.org/
Mensionization Complimentation
http://www.mension.com/#kah
The Online Qahalah
http://www.brokentoy.com/qahalah/Soul Songs
http://www.soulcongs.com/

KUNDALINI
3HO Organization
http://www.3ho.org/
International Kundalini Yoga Teachers Association http://www.kundaliniyoga.com/
Kundalini Resource Center
http://krc.kundalini/index1.html
SpiritWeb
http://www.spiritweb.org/Spirit/kundalini.html

LOCH NESS MONSTER
Legend of Nessie
http://www.myspace.co.uk/nessie/
Loch Ness Exhibition
http://www.lochness.co.uk/centre/index.html
Loch Ness Fan Club
http://www.lochness.co.uk/fan_club/index.html
Loch Ness Information
http://www.ochave.co.uk/
Loch Ness Investigation http://www.dickraynor.co.uk/
Loch Ness Mystery
http://ourworld.compuserve.com/hompages/lesj/ness.htm
Loch Ness Politics
http://parascopc.com/articles/slip/ls26_1.htm
Nessie on the Net: Official Website http://www.lochness.co.uk/

MAGICAL ORDERS
Servants of the Light
http://servantsofthelight.org/
Servants of the Star and the Snake http://www.wild.as/sw/index.html

MEGALITHS
Andy Burnham’s Page
http://easyweb.easynet.co.uk/~aburnham/
The Center for Archaeoastronomy http://www.wam.umd.edu/~tlaloc/archastro/fan/index.html
Gungywamp Society
http://www.goudsward.com/gungywamp/Megalithic Pages
http://members.aol.com/janbly/index.htm

METAPHYSICAL STUDIES
The Australian College of Metaphysical Studies Banren Books & Sound
http://www.banren.com/
College of Metaphysical Studies
http://www.cms.edu/faq.html
The Institute for Advanced Metaphysical Studies http://www.psychistudy.com/home.html
International Association of Metaphysicians http://www.iammcrm.com/

MOUNT SHASTA
The Official Website of Mount Shasta http://www.mtshasta.com/homepage.html

MYSTICISM
D.O.M.E., the Inner Guide Meditation Center
http://www.dome-igm.com/
Kabbalah and Jewish Mysticism
http://www.jewishfaqs.org/kabbalah.htm
The Mysticism Resources Page
http://www.clas.ufl.edu/users/gtghursby/mys/Mysticism in World Religions http://www.digiserve.com/mystic/templ temple_of_the_holy_grail http://www.hometemple.org/

NEAR-DEATH STUDIES
International Association for Near-Death Studies
http://www.iands.org/

NECROMANCY
Necromancy Institute
http://www.dignomicon.org/

NEW AGE
Affiliated New Thought Network
http://www.newthought.org/Altered States of Consciousness http://www.bsz.org/
Association for Holotropic Breathwork International http://www.breathwork.com/Association for the Alignment of Past Life Experience http://www.aapple.com/Astral Projection Home Page
http://www.tanega.com/astral/index.html
Bodhi Tree
http://www.bodhtree.com/

OUIJA BOARDS
Online Ouija Board
http://www.math.uh.edu/~black/cgi-bin/spirit.cgi Museum of Talking Boards
http://members.tripod.com/~Ouija_/index.html

PAGANISM
American Vinland Association
http://www.freyasfolk.org/
Angelicaxissce Ealdriht Webpage
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Delphi/5909/
Ar nDraiocht Fein
http://www.adl.org/homepage.shtml
Artemesian Order
http://www.artemesian.org/sanct.html
Asatru Alliance
http://eagle.webpipe.net
Asatru Folk Assembly
http://www.runestone.org/
The Baltic Romuva
http://www.romuva.lt/
The Dracula Society
http://www.uct.org/~blackie/the_dracula_soc.html

Highgate Vampire Society
http://home.wxs.nl/~intravamp/hvsoc.html

London Vampire Group
http://www.vcm-europe.demon.co.uk/welcome/vlg/vlg.htm

Lord Ruthven Assembly
http://ebhs.english.vt.edu/LRA/

New Jersey Association of Real Vampires

Temple of the Vampire
http://p1.netcom.com/~temple/home.html

Transylvanian Society of Dracula (Canadian Chapter)
http://www.chebacto.ns.ca/Recreation/TSIDtsdhompg.html

Vampire Directory
http://www.sanguinarius.org/cgi-bin/links/pages/

VOUDOU
Caribbean Religion Center
http://www.nando.net/prod/caribe/caribbean.religions.html

The Temple of Yehwe
http://www.vodoun.org/

Voudou (Voodoo) Encyclopedia
http://www.arcana.com/vodoo/

African Dahomean Voudou
http://www.manimwata.com/index.html

World History Archives

WEREWOLVES
Legend of the Werewolf (Lycanthropy)
http://www.crystalinks.com/werewolves.html

Lycanthrope Resources by and for Lycanthropes http://www.lycanthrope.org:4242/

Werewolf Terms
http://www.geocities.com/RainForest/Vines/1801/glossary.htm

WICCAN (WITCHCRAFT, WHITE MAGIC... )
Alliance of Solitary Practitioners
http://www.wicca.org/ASP/

The Aquarian Tabernacle Church
http://www.AquaTabCh.org

Burning Times
http://www.amasterpiece.com/BurningTimes/

The Burning Times by Catala
http://www.silvermoon.net/catala/burning-times.htm

Covenant of the Goddess
http://www.cog.org/

Modern Witchcraft
http://www.bloomington.in.us/~pen/mwcraft.html

Religious Rights
http://www.landmarknet/wicca/rights.htm

Sword of Dyrnwyn
http://www.ryshytieg.com

The Total Wiccan Resources
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Delphi/5452/

Trinity Magick
http://www.vermontel.net/~trinity/trinity/

Wiccan Church of Canada
http://www.wccc.on.ca

Wiccan Magic
http://www.wiccamagic.com/

WiccaNet
http://www.wiccanet.com/

Wiccan/Pagan Resources

The Wicca Pages Times
http://www.twpt.com/home.htm

The Witches’ League for Public Awareness http://www.celticcrow.com/

The Witches’ Voice
http://www.witchvox.com/

YETI
Ancient Myths
http://www.otherplane.com/am/amyeti.htm

Yeti
http://www.server.com/shadows/yeti.htm

Yeti Information
http://home.starpac.ca/~yeti/yeti%20info.html

YOGA
Ananda Ashram
http://www.anandaashram.org/

Ananda Church of Self-Realization
http://www.ananda.org/

American Yoga Association
http://members.aol.com/anyogaasr/

Bhavanayoga Centers
http://www.dyc.org/

Himalayan International Institute of Yoga Science and Philosophy of the U.S.A
http://www.himalayaintstitute.org

The Institute for Consciousness Research http://www.snt.net/icr/icr.html

Integral Yoga International
http://www.yogaville.org/

International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers
http://www.sivananda.org/

International Society for Krishna Consciousness
http://www.iskcon.com/

Online Yoga Resource
http://www.santoshia.com/

Overview of Different Yoga Paths
http://www.spiritweb.org/Spirit/Yoga.html

Self-Realization Fellowship
http://www.yogananda-srf.org/

Self-Realization Mediation Healing Centres
http://www.selfrealizationcentres.org

Sivananda Yoga “Om” Page
http://www.sivananda.org/

Vendanta Society of Southern California
http://www.vendanta.org/

Yasodhara Ashram
http://www.yasodhara.org/

Yoga Research and Education Center
http://www.yrec.org

Yogananda Self-Realization Fellowship
http://www.yogananda-srf.org/

ZEN BUDDHISM
Zen Buddhism Virtual Library
General Bibliography

---. Rahu Pimma [and] Yama Kalaya. Delhi, India, ca. 1957.

1721

Abelson, Joshua.

Abercromby, John.

---. Cross-cultural Study of Mysticism as the Context for a Phenomenological Study: Arching Backward, and, a New Concept in Diagnosis and Treatment. San Francisco: Physico-Clinical, 1922.

---. Q.B.L. or the Bride’s Reception. N.P.: The Author, 1922.

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed. General Bibliography

Bohn, Erich. Der Fall Rotha. Breslau, 1901. General Bibliography

Bodin, Jean. De la démonomania des sorciers. Paris, 1580. General Bibliography

General Bibliography

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

Brother Francis [Ralph F. Raymond]. The Universal Link Concept. Los Angeles: Universal Link Heart Center, 1968.
Brown, John P.
Brown, Rosemary.
——. Suggestion and Mental Analysis. New York: Doran, 1922.
——. Scientific Mental Healing. Boston,Little, Brown, 1911.
General Bibliography

Cirlot, J. E. ———.

Churchward, James. ———.

Ch'u, Yuan. ———.

———. ———.

———. ———.

Cirlot, J. E. ———.

———. ———.

Clark, Jerome. ———.

———. ———.

Crowley, Aleister; De Atri Mago; San Francisco: Level Press, [1974].
Curtis, James T. and John P. Wilson. "Sensatio... philosophy.

Dalby, Richard.

Da Love-Ananda.

Dallas, Helen A. Arrows the Barrier. N.p., 1913.

———. Of Times and Seasons, Their Mystery. London, 1651.

General Bibliography

Denis, Leon. d' Apres la Mort. N.p., n.d.

General Bibliography

---. _Red Dust and the Morrow_. N.p., 1922.

Dunninger, Joseph. _Inside the Medium's Cabinet_. New York: David Kemp, 1924.

Dyke, (Marie-François) Hector. _Atmanash spirite et magnetique illustre pour 1893_. N.p., 1893.

---. _Le Magnetisme considéré comme agent lumineux_. N.p., 1896.

---. _Le magnetisme des animaux_; _Zootheraphie_ (Polarité des animaux morts et vivants; Zootheraphie, Biotheraphie, etc.). N.p., 1896.

---. _Le Magnetisme humain considér as agent physique_. N.p., 1890.

---. _Le massage et le magnetisme menaces par les medecins; le proces Mourant a Angers; necessite d’un amendement a la loi du 30 Nov. 1892, sur l’exercice de la medecine_. N.p., 1897.

---. _Le Massage et le magnetisme sous l’empire de la loi du 30 Nov. 1892, sur l’exercice de la medecine; Règlement statutaire de l’Ecole pratique de Magnetisme et de Massage; statuts du syndicat des Masseurs et Magnetiseurs de Paris_. N.p., 1894.

---. _Lus physiques du magnetisme_; _Polarité humaine; Travé expérimental et thérapeutique de magnetisme_. N.p., 1886.

---. _Magnetisme personnel; Education de la Pensee—Developpement de la Volonte—Pourvue heureux, fort, bien portant et reussit en tout_. N.p., 1905.

---. _Pour combattre la sauvage, les houillonneur, l’atite, etc. . . . par le magnetisme_. N.p., 1906.

---. _Pour combattre les maladies par l’application del’aimant_. N.p., 1906.

Dyrovil, Henri, ed. _Cours de magnetisme personnel_. N.p., 1933.

---. _La Magie divine_. N.p., 1930.

---. _Mystères inatins_. N.p., 1929.

---. _1er Congres international de Psychologie expérimentale_. N.p., 1910.

---. _2e Congres international de Psychologie expérimentale, La Science secrete_. N.p., 1923.

---. _Prose Works_. Boston: Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, 1925.

Edelein, Emma Jeanette Levy. Asclepius: a Collection and Interpretation of the Testimo-

———. The Desert Makers: A Study of the Cre-

Eden, Jerome, trans. Memoir of F. A. Meoner, Doctor of Medicine, on His Discoveries, 1799.

ploring the Boundaries of Human Capabil-

Edmond, Simeon. ESP: Extrasensory Percep-

———. Hypnosis: Key to Psychic Powers. Lon-

———. Hypnosis and Psychic Phenomena. Holhollywood, Calif.: Wilshire, n.d.

———. Hypnotism and the Supernormal. Holy-———. Strangest of All. Secaucus, N.J.: Cit-ffrey Bles, 1974.

Ehrenwald, Jan. The Evidence for Spirit Heal-

———. A Guide to the Understanding and Prac-———. Spiritual Healing. London: Herbert Jenkins, 1960.

———. Thirty Years a Spiritual Healer. Lon-

———. The Truth about Spiritual Healing. Lon-

Eells, Charles P. Life and Times of Apollonius of Tyana, Rendered into English from the Greek of Philostratus the Elder. Stanford, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1923.

Eglington, John. A Memoir of AE. George Wil-

———. The ESP Experience: A Psychiatric Vali-

———. New Dimensions of Deep Analysis: A Study of Telepathy in Interpersonal Relation-Eikerenkoetter, Frederick. Reverend Ike’s Secrets of Health, Happiness, and Prosperity—hold, 1977.

———. "Psychic Photography and Thoughtography." In Psychic Exploration: A Challenge for Science, edited by Edgar D. Mitchell and John White. New York: Put-am, 1974.

———. "Some Investigations of Claims of PK Effects on Metal: The Denver Experi-

———. The World of Ted Serios: "Thoughto-

Eiser, Robert. Man into Wolf: An Anthropological Interpretation of Sudoio, Masochism, and Lycanthropy. Santa Barbara, Calif.: Ross Erickson, 1974.

Eiser, Robert. The Royal Art of Astrology. London: Herbert Joseph, 1946.

Eitel, E. J. Feng-shui: The Rudiments of Natural Science in China. Bristol, England: Penta———. [through Mark L. Prophet and Elizathed Claire Prophet]. Morya the Despoothing Master Speaks to His Chela on the Quest for the Holy Graal. Los Angeles: Summit Uni-

———. Forgerons et Alchimistes. Flammarion, 1956. Translated as The Forge and the Cru-

———. Le Yoga: Immortalité et liberté. 1954. Translated as Yuga: Immortality and Free-———. "1907 to 1937: Journey East, Journey West." In Autobiography. Vol. 1. San Fran-———. Occultism, Witchcraft and Cultural Fashions: Essays in Comparative Religion. Chica-———. Rites and Symbols of Initiation: The Mys-

Empson, R. H. The Cult of the Peacock Angel. N.Y., 1928.

Enniato, Mihály. Asans, or, The Year of Prodigies and Wonders; Being a Collection of Several Signs That Have Been Seen in the Heavens, in the Earth, and in the Waters, Together with Many Remarkable Accidents and Judgments . . . Within the Space of One Year Last Past. London, 1661.

Ernaca, Giovanni B. I fatti spiritici e le ipotesi offerte da Spiritistic facts and hasty hypotheses. Padua, Italy, 1892.

Evans, Frederick W. Shakars and Shakareins. New York, 1859.

Fairbanks, K. "Le Cas Spirite de Dickens." Arch. de Psychol. T.I. (June 1892).

Falconer, Marco T. An Introduction to Modern Spiritualism. [Venice], 1895.

———. Monochordum Mundi Symphoniacum. Frankfurt, 1622.
Fornell, Earl. The Unhappy Medium: Spiritualism and the Life of Margaret Fox. Austin, Tex., 1964.

Gardner, Marshall B. A Journey to the Earth’s Interior: or, Have the Poles Really Been Discovered? Aurora, Ill.: The Author, 1913.

General Bibliography

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

Gibson, Walter B. The Georgia Magnet: St. Louis, 1922.

Gilbert, Mostyn. “J. Fraser Nicol: An Appreciation of His Dedication to Psychical Research.” Journal of the Society for Psychical Research 56, no. 818 (January 1900).

General Bibliography

---
Gladstone Cambrensis, Containing the Topography of Ireland, and The History of the Conquest of Ireland. Translated by R. C. Hoare. London: Bohn's Antiquarian Library, 1847.

Grierson, Francis [Jesse Shepard]. The Celtic Temperament and Other Essays. London: John Lane, 1913.

Grierson, Francis [Jesse Shepard]. The Celtic Temperament and Other Essays. London: John Lane, 1913.

Grierson, Francis [Jesse Shepard]. The Celtic Temperament and Other Essays. London: John Lane, 1913.

Grierson, Francis [Jesse Shepard]. The Celtic Temperament and Other Essays. London: John Lane, 1913.

Gruber, Karl. Okkultismus und Biologie. Munich, 1925.

—. Penseé D’Ostrea-Tombe. 1858.

Guppy, Samuel. Mary Jane; or, Spiritualism chemically explained, with Spirit Drawings. London, 1863.

—. A Lamp to the Feet. N.p., 1928.

—. Locusts and Wild Honey. N.p., 1928.

—. Thou Saith Belphag. N.p., 1928.

———. "Teleplasmic Phenomena in Winnipeg." Psychical Research 8, no. 5 (1929); 8, no. 4 (January 1930); 9, no. 2 (July 1930).

--- From Agnosticism to Belief. London: Methuen, 1924.

--- Creative Conflict. Boulder Creek, Calif.: University of the Trees, 1980.

--- Personal Investigations, in India, of Theosophical Phenomena.” Proceedings of the Society for Psychological Research 3 (1885); Journal of the Society for Psychological Research 1–2 (1884–1886).

———. "Physical Phenomena: Fraud or Frontier?" Tomorrow (autumn 1960).

Kane, Margaret Fox. The Love-Life of Dr. Kane. New York, 1863.

Etymelles (French epigrams). N.p., 1890.

King Solomon: A Mystic Drama. N.p., 1912.

Etymelles (French epigrams). N.p., 1890.

King Solomon: A Mystic Drama. N.p., 1912.

Haven and Hell.” Translated by Anna Blackwell. 1878.

———. “Reply to Dr. Erich Martin (The Psyche of Precious Stones).” N.P., 1954.

Kohler, Kaufmann. Heaven and Hell in Comparative Literature. Folcroft, Pa., 1925.

Kramer, Samuel N. From the Tablets of Sumer. Falcon’s Wing, 1956.

—. Rosicrucian Principles for the Home and Business. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of AMORC, 1929.

—. Rosicrucian Questions and Answers with Complete History. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of AMORC, 1929.

—. Rosicrucian Questions and Answers. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1969.

—. Self Mastery and Fate with the Cycles of Life. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of AMORC, 1929.

Lewis, Ralph M. Behold the Sign. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1944.

—. The Conscious Interlude. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1957.

—. The Sanctuary of the Self. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1948.

—. Yesterday Has Much to Tell. San Jose, Calif.: Supreme Grand Lodge of the AMORC, 1973.

—. Psychopathologie de la vision. N.p., 1942.

—. Uncle Tom’s Story of His Life. N.p., 1877.

—. Raymond Revised. N.p., 1922.

———. The World of Souls. N.p., 1924.

General Bibliography

Marryat, Florence. The Voice of Lazarus. New Realities 7, no. 6 (July/August 1987).

General Bibliography

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

Meng-Koehler, Heinrich O. “Parapsychology, Psychohydrogen, and Aerztliche Fortbildung” (Parapsychology, Mental Hygiene and Medical Training). Hippokrates (1954).

Mullins, John. The Devouring Rod and Its Results in Discovery of Springs. N.p., 1880.
———. “Professor Rhine’s Views on Psychokinesis.” Mind (July 1950).
———. Triumphs and Defeats in the Study of Mediumship.” Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 52 (October 1957).

Napier, James. Folklore, or Superstitious Beliefs in the West of Scotland, within this Century. Paisley, Scotland, 1879.

Price, Henry H.
———. “Psychometric Experiments with Maria Reyes de Z.” Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 16 (January 1922).
———. “Psychometrical Experiments with Senora Maria Reyes de Z.” ASPR Journal 16 (January 1922).
———. Regeneration and the Duncan Mediumship Council at the Rooms of the National Laboratory of Psychical Research, London, 1931.
———. Rudi Schneider; A Scientific Examination of his Mediumship. London: Methuen, 1930.
———. The Haunting of Cashen’s Gap.

— Raja Yoga, or Mental Development. Chi-cago: Yogi Publication, 1905.

— The Living Dead. N.P., 1927.

— Told In The After Life. N.P., 1925.

— The Deaverport Brothers. Boston, 1869.

General Bibliography

— L’Exteriorisation de la Sensibilité. N.p., 1895.

— Les effleurees odique; l’encomtement; Les frontières de la science. N.p., 1902.

General Bibliography

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

——. The Glory of Sannyasa. Pomfret Center, Conn.: Integral Yoga Institute, 1975.
——. “Parapsychologie.” Ärzliche Praxis 5, no. 48 (1951).
Schittigor, Gertrude. ESP in Relation to Religion; Parapsychology and the Sciences. N.p., 1924.
——. “Separating the Sheep from the Goats.” Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research (1945).
General Bibliography

———. Spirit Possession in Native America. Southwestern Journal of Anthropology 2, no. 3 (1946).

———. “An Interest Inventory Relation to ESP Scores.” Journal of Parapsychology 10 (1945).

———. “A Review of Recent Criticisms of ESP Research.” Journal of Parapsychology 2, no. 3 (1956).

———. An Interest Inventory Relation to ESP Scores. Journal of Parapsychology vol. 10 (1946).

———. “The Question of Lights Supposed to Have Been Observed near the Poles of a Magnet.” Proceedings of the Society for Psychological Research 44, 152 (1958).

Sunderland, La Roy. “An Appeal on the Subject of Slavery.” Zion’s Watchman (December 5, 1834).
Suster, Gerald. Superet Light Doctrine Ministry. 1922.
Swetnam, Sir Frank A. Malay Sketches. London: John Lane, 1895.
Symmes, Antonius, ed. The Symmex’ Theory of Concentric Spheres: Demonstrating that the Earth is Hollow, Habitable Within, and Widely Open about the Poles. Louisville, Ky.: Bradley and Gilbert, 1878.

Table Turning and Table Talking Considered in Connection with the Doctrines of Reason and Common Sense. Bath, U.K. S. Gibbs, 1853.

Table Turning by Animal Magnetism Demonstrated. London, 1853.

— The Tibetan Lama Hoax.” Tomorrow 9, 2 (spring 1958).

Van de Castle, Robert L. “Development and Validation of a Perceptual Maturity Scale Using Figure Preferences.” Journal of Consultative Psychology 29 (1965).

Meaning and Purpose. London: Jonathan Cape, 1944.

Warcollier, René. Fifty Years of Telepathy. Tomorrow (summer 1961).

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

General Bibliography

1825
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Publisher</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Wollgast, Siegfried</td>
<td>Der deutsche Pantheismus im 16. Jahrhundert</td>
<td>Berlin: Deutscher Verlag der Wissenschaften, 1972</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woodhouse, Barbara</td>
<td>Talking to Animals</td>
<td>Croxley Green, England: Campions, 1970.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woodhull, Victoria, and</td>
<td>The Human Body the Temple of God</td>
<td>London, 1890.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Sancti and Sakti</td>
<td>Madras, India: Ganesh, 1918.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Subject and Experimenter Attitudes in Relation to ESP Scoring:</td>
<td>Journal of the American Society for Psychical Research 44 (1950).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Life’s Adventure: New York: Charles Scribner’s Sons, 1932</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Body, Mind and Spirit: Boston: Marshall Jones, 1931</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Esp, and Samuel McComb: Size of Stimulation Phenomena.</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>How to Start a Healing Service: Chicago: Inner Creations, 1947</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Hope’s Truthful: New York: Henry Holt, 1918</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>The Perelandra Garden Workbook: N.p., 1987.</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Assaying Your Path to Success: Philadelphia: David McKay, 1938.</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>Psychological Library, n.d.</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>The World of the Spirit: New York: Philosophical Library, n.d.*</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>An Investigator’s Experience of Materialization Phenomena: Psychic Science (October 1926).</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1826 ———. Is the R. R. et A. C. to Remain a Magical Order? Privately printed, 1901.

Zingaropoli, F. Casa Infestate degli Spiriti. Naples, 1907.

———. Magnetiseurs en Wundergeneresy (Magnetism and Miracle Healers). N.p., 1952.

———. Procope, Het Rautdel der Toekomst (Precognition, the Riddle of the Future). N.p., 1953.

General Index
astrology, 109
Barrett, Francis, 158
familiars, 342
geomancy, 628
Germany, 631
magic, 957, 958
magical numbers, 961
Vaughan, Thomas, 1630
Ahazu-Demon, 18
Ahmad ibn Sirin, 18
Also, Wayne Sulo, 18, 326
Ahrimanes, 18
AIC, See American Institutes for Research
Aiuromancy, 18
Ainsaru, 18
Ainsworth, Harrison, 48, 1325, 1677
Airaudi, Oberto, 18–19, 374
Akasha (or Soniferous Ether), 19
Akashic Records, 19
Cosmic Picture Gallery, 341
psychometry, 1259
Akathaso, 19
Akhu ben Joseph, 19
Akita, 19–20, 1656
Aksakof, Alexander N., 20
apports, 79
automatic writing, 130
control, 430
d‘Esperance, Elizabeth, 404, 406
double, 439, 441
ectoplasm, 472
Eglinton, William, 480
Fox sisters, 591
Germany, 632
Guzyk, Jan, 679
identity, 776
Karelec, Allan, 851
mediums, 1013
Palladino, Enasapia, 1171
plastics, 1222
poltergeists, 1226
Psychose Studien, 1255
Rasputin, Gregory Emfimovitch, 1290
reincarnation, 1301
Russia, 1333
Slade, Henry, 1415
Spiritualism—Germany, 1468
teleosmatie, 1544
transfiguration, 1585
Williams, Charles, 1672
Zeitschrift für Parapsychologie, 1705
AL, 20
Alain of Lille, 21
Alamut, 21
Alary, François, 21
Alastor, 21, 86–87
Albertus Magnus (Albert of Cologne), 21
Albigenses, 21–22
Albigerius, 22
Albunazar (or Abu-Maaschar), 22
Alkahibius, See Abdelazys
Alchemists
Abraham the Jew, 4–5
Agrippa von Nettesheim, Henry
Cornelius, 17
Alain of Lille, 21
Albertus Magnus, 21
Anonymous Adept, 59
Arnaldus de Villanova, 87
Ayton, W. A., 135–136
Bacstrom, Sigismund, 142
Beausoleil, Jean du Chatelet, Baron de, 165
Bérigard of Pisa, 173
Bracesco, Giovanni, 209
Bradgadin, Mark Antony, 210
Busardier, 230
Charnock, Thomas, 273
Dalton, Thomas, 230
Damian, Master John, the French
Leich, 375, 835
De Lisle, 393–394
De Rupecissa, Johannes (or Jean de Roquetailleade), 402–403
De Villanova, Arnold, 410
Elixir of Life, 492–493
Fabre, Pierre Jean, 535
Ferrarius (or Efferariaus or Eufarius), 556
Fioravanti, Leonardi, 563
Fitzlar, Martin von, 570
Flamell, Nicholas, 570–571
Fludd (or Flud), Robert, 575
Fontaine, Jean de la (or John Fontaine), 577
Gauthier, Jean, 623
Geber, 624
Glauber, Johann Rudolph, 644
Gustenhover, 678
Helveticus, John Friedrich, 719–720
Heym, Gerard, 724
Isaac of Holland, 809
Jean de Meung (or Meun), 828
Khunrath, Heinrich, 858
Knorr von Rosenroth, Christian, 870
Lascaris, 894–895
Lully, Raymond (or Ramon Lull), 942
Maier, Michael, 969
Meister (or Mesiun Lorenz), 1021
Moriens (or Morienus), 1053
Norton, Thomas, 1125–1126
Oberc, Jacques Hermann, 1130
Philalethes (or Philalethia), 1204
Rhasis (or Rhazes), 1308
Ripley, George, 1313
Seton (or Sethen), Alexander, 1389–1390
Trévian, Bernard of, 1587–1588
Trithemius (Johann), 1589
Valentine, Basil, 1617
Van Helmont, Jean Baptiste, 1625
Vaughan, Thomas, 1630
Zacaire, Denis, 1703
Alchemists, 22–25
de Rais, Gilles, 639
in early U.S., 38–39
elixir of life, 492–493
Emerald Table of Hermes, 500
Germany, 631
history of, 22–23
homunculus, 741
Jacobi’s Ladder, 820 mercury, 1024
modern, 24–25
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page Dimensions: 698.5x940.5</th>
<th>General Index</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1831</td>
<td>Encyclopedia of Occultism &amp; Parapsychology 5th Ed. General Index</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ouroboros, 1159</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saint Germain, Comte de, 1339</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scotland, 1368</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>secret tradition, 1381</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smaragdine Table, 1420</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. John's Crystal Gold, 1496</td>
<td>theory and philosophy of, 23–24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>transmutation of the body, 1585</td>
<td>in twentieth century, 25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alchindus (or Alkindi), 26</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alfridarya, 28</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpert, Richard, 28</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpert, Richard, 32–33</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpir, Frank, 32</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpir, Frank, 32–33</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlantis, 114</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Age, 1106</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpert, Richard, 32</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpha Waves, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpha Waves, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpha Magazine, 33</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alphabet</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medieval magic, 1008</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Runs, 1331</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alphabiotics, 33</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alphitomancy, 34</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpil, 34</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alra, 34</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alrume, 34</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alrutz, Sydney</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mesmer, Franz Anton, 1028</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scandinavia, 1354</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>volometer, 1640</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>will, 1671</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alrhy (or Alro), 34</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Altered States of Consciousness</td>
<td>Induction Device (ASCD), 1682</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alternative Perceptions (Periodical), 34</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alternative Medicine Exhibition, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Althotas, 35, 237</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alu-Demou, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amadeus, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amadou, Robert, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amaiznom (or Amaymon), 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amalgamated Flying Saucer Clubs of America, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amandinus, 36</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amarrinth, 36</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Amazing Randi, The,&quot; 36</td>
<td>See also Randi, James</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>psychic surgery, 1255</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Randi, James, 1281–1282</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andulucias, 36</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>America, United States of, 36–39</td>
<td>All Hallow's Eve, 30–38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alan Soul's Day, 1033</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allat (or Ellat), 249</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allende, Carlos</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berlitz, Charles, 174</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Allevine, John,&quot; 29</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bond, Frederick Bligh, 201–202</td>
<td>Glaubon Scriptus, 643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alfridarya, 28</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alis de Tézieux, 27</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allopecy, 32</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Almogamenses, 32</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Almuter, 32</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alocer, 32</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alomancy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alper, Frank, 32–33</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alpi, 34</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>America, United States of, 36–39</td>
<td>All Hallow's Eve, 30–38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All面积约, 30</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allison, Dorothy, 31</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allison, Lydia Winterhalter, 31–32</td>
<td>Boston Society for Psychic Research, 207</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amalgamated Flying Saucer Clubs of America, 35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Astrological Society, 40–41</td>
<td>American Astrology (Magazine), 41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Astrology Association, 40</td>
<td>American Association of Astrologists, 40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Association—Electronic Voice Phenomena, 40</td>
<td>American Association for Medico-Physical Research, 5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Association of Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine, 7</td>
<td>American Association of Meta-Science, 40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Society for Psychical Research, 42</td>
<td>American Parapsychological Research Foundation, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Psychical Institute and Laboratory, 42, 251</td>
<td>American Psychological Society, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Society for Psychical Research (ASPR), 42–43</td>
<td>Academia De Estudio Psychicos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cesare Lombroso, 46</td>
<td>American Society of Dowsers, 1273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amencan Vinland Association, 43</td>
<td>American Meditation Institute for Yoga Science and Philosophy, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Vinland Association, 43</td>
<td>American Museum of Magic, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Zen College, 44</td>
<td>American National Institute for Psychical Research, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amiante, 44</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anamnesis, 44</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American UFO Society, 45–46</td>
<td>See also Fetishism Abraxas, 5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Antibates, 62</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cambodia, 244</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Celn, 260</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Central America, 1033</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chips of Gallows, 283</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>chrysolite (or chrisoletus), 287</td>
<td>chrysoprase, 287–288</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>emeralds, 500</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>garlic, 920</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lee penny, 902</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Limachie, 923</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mexico, 1033</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>salagrama, 1341</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>saphir (or cribrizas), 1345</td>
<td>American Society for Psychical Research, 1279</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sapphire, 1345</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>spells, 143–145</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>talisman vs., 1526</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West Indies, 1662</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amy, 46</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anachitis, 46</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anahata Nada (Magazine), 46</td>
<td>American Society for Psychical Research (ASPR), 42–43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Society for Psychical Research (ASPR), 42–43</td>
<td>Academia De Estudio Psychicos</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cesare Lombroso, 46</td>
<td>American Society of Dowsers, 1273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anamnesis, 44</td>
<td>American National Institute for Psychical Research, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Parapsychological Research Foundation, 42</td>
<td>American Psychological Society, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Society of Dowsers, 1273</td>
<td>American Medical Association, 43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Society of Psychical Research (ASPR), 42–43</td>
<td>American National Institute for Psychical Research, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anamnesis, 44</td>
<td>American Psychological Society, 42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ananda Ashram, 46</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
General Index

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

Ananda Church of Self-Realization, 46–47
Ananda Marga Yoga Society, 47, 1346
Ananda Metteya, 48
Ananda World Brotherhood. See Ananda Church of Self-Realization
Anandamayi Ma, Sri, 47–48
Anandamurti, Shri, 48
Anantishta, 48
Anarazel, 48
Anathema, 48
Ancient and Mystical Order of Seekers, 48
Angels, 49
Angel’s Hair, 51
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Angels, 51
Angel Therapy, 52
Angel of North America, 52
Androdamas, 52
Anaphite, 53
Alpiel, 53
Adhab-Algal, 54
Alisar, 54
Andres, Lynn W., 54
Andrews, Mary, 54
Andrews, Margaret, 54
Andrews, Rodger I(van), 54
Anderson, Margaret, 54
Anderson, Margaret, 54
Anderson, Leafy
Andrae, Johann Valentin, 55
Andreasson, Betty, 55
Anderson, Rodger I(van), 55–56
Andres, Lynn W., 55
Andreas, Mary, 55
Androdamas, 55
Android, 55
Annapurna, 55
Angel of North America, 55
Angel Therapy, 55
Angels, 55–56
Adhab-Algal, 11
Alpiel, 12
Angel Therapy, 12
Anpiel, 13
Apollyon, 13
Arariel, 13
Azael, 13
Acheron, 13
Biblical angels, 13
Cacodemons, 13
Hermetic angels, 13 contemporary interest in, 54 developing notions about, 52–53 and giants, 53–54
Gnome of Honorius, 669
Guirghim, Arthur, 675
Introspection, 675
Mesopotamia, 986
Mesopotamian magic, 1008
Metratton, 1031
Michael, 1035
odor of sanctity, 1138
Ramer, Andrew, 1279
Raphael, 1285
realms of, in Jewish thought, 53
Reschith Hajalaim, 1305
Sabbathi, 1337
Shaddai, 1394
Angel’s Hair, 54
Angles of Mons, 54–55, 1615
Angelseaxisce Ealdriht, 54
Angellucci, Orfeo, 55, 325–326
Anger, Kenneth, 56
Angleri, 56
Anosophia, 56
Anosch, Allan, 56
Anstatt, Li(aura) Jean, 56
Anuvadela, 56
Animal Magnetism, 56–57
Germany, 652
Jung-Stilling, Johann Heinrich, 842
levitation, 910
Mesmer, Franz Anton, 1027, 1028
metals (in animal magnetism), 1030
rapport, 1285–1286
Scoresby, William, 1364
Spain, 1450
table-turning, 1521
tellurism, 1545
thought-reading, 1566
trance, 1382
United States, 1475
visions, 1637
Animals, 57–58. See also specific animals almonogoneses, 32
Anpsi, 59
apparitions, 63, 64, 65
ass, 95–96
badger, 142
bat, 160–161 bird voices, 187
birds, 187
Black Hen, Fast of the, 189
Borak (or Al Borak), 206
butter, witches’, 231
Cambodia, 244
“Caquet Bombe” (Song), 248
Cashen’s Gap, 252 cats, elfin, 255
cattle mutilations, 255–256
Centre de Cryptozoologie, 263
chupacabras, 287–288
cock, 305–306
crow, 360–361
cryptozoology, 362–363
divination using, 264, 532–533,
697, 721, 728, 855, 1397
double, 441
dreams of, 452–453 earthquake prediction, 465–466
eel, 477
Egypt, 481
fascination, 547
Fung Hwang, 613
goat, 648
Gruber, Karl, 672
haunting, 702
horse-chasing, 747–748
human animals, 806–807
International Society of Cryptozoology, 802
Jadian, 820
Japan, 824–825
Jersey Devil, 830
Kauks, 852
Lycanthropes, 946–947
Mackenzie, William, 952
materializations, 996–997
moles, 1044–1045 psi-trailing, 1247
red pigs, 1295
scapulomancy, 1354
screech owl, 1372
second sight, 1379
snake handling, 1425
telepathy, 1538
Teutons, 1553
totemism, 1577
wolf, 1683
Zerod, 1706
zoomancy, 1710
Animism, 58, 63
Ankh, 58
Annels des Sciences Psychiques, 58, 1342
Anoii dello Spirittismo (Annals of Spirituality), 58
Anneberg (or Annabergius), 58
Annius de Viterbo, 58
Annoyn (or Announ), 58–59
Anomalous animal phenomena, 802
Anomalous Cognition Section, 803
University of Amsterdam, 59
Anomalous Thoughts (Newsletter), 59
Anomaly, 59
Anomaly Research Bulletin, 59
Anonymous Adept, 59
Ampel, 59
Anpsi, 59
Anselm de Parma, 59–60
Anson, Jay, 60
Anuerver (or Fragarach), 60
Anthony, St., 60
Anthropological Research Foundation, 60
Anthropology of Consciousness
(Publication), 60
Anthropomancy, 60
Anthroposophia Pacifica (Newsletter), 60
Anthroposophic Press, 60
Anthroposophical Society, 60
Kohlsko Effect, 672–673
Steiner, Rudolf, 672
Theosophical Society, 1558–1559
Anthroposophical Society in America, 61
Anthroposophical Society in Great Britain, 61
Antichrist, 61–62
Annuin de Viterbo, 58
Gallagher, Christina, 617
Grosseteste, Robert, 671
Antipathy, 62
Antiphates, 62
Antirachites (or Anrachas or Anrachax), 62
Anshirah, 62
Aparantomancy, 62
Apes, Book of Overthrowing of (Book), 62
Apocalypse. See End of the World
Apollo, 63
Abaris, 2
aleuromancy, 27
Greece, 663
Apollo of Tyana, 62–63
Artephius, 89
clairvoyance, 299
disappearances, 426
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ashrams</th>
<th>Encyclopedia of Occultism &amp; Parapsychology • 5th Ed.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ananda Ashram, 46</td>
<td>Bonati (or Bonatus), Guido, 201</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atmaniketan Ashram, 114–115</td>
<td>Bradley, Donald A., 209</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bawa Muhairaddeen Fellowship, The, 162</td>
<td>Brahe, Tycho, 211</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lotus Ashram, 937</td>
<td>Broughton, Luke Dennis, 221–222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atmaṇikelan Ashram, 114–115</td>
<td>Burgoyne, Thomas H., 229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ashtabula Poltergeist, 94</td>
<td>Campion, Nicolas, 245</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ashram, 94, 325–326</td>
<td>Cardan, Jerome, 249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asiah, 94</td>
<td>Carter, Charles Ernest Owen, 251–252</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asipu, 94, 1384</td>
<td>Chaney, William Henry, 269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asmodeus, 94–95</td>
<td>Cheiro (Count Louis Hamon), 274</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Akkin, 19</td>
<td>Chow, Barbara Hand, 304</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amoymon, 45</td>
<td>Culpepper, Nicolas, 366–367</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asparsha yoga, 1699</td>
<td>Cunningham, Donna, 368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aspidomancy, 95</td>
<td>Dalton, Joseph Grimnell, 374</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ass, 95–96</td>
<td>De, John, 388–391</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assagioli, Roberto, 96</td>
<td>De Wohl, Louis, 414</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assagol, Roberto, 96</td>
<td>Doane, Doris Chase, 435</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assagioli, Roberto, 96</td>
<td>Dobyns, Zipporah, 45–436</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assagioli, Roberto, 96</td>
<td>Eaks, Duane L., 465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aspr. See American Society for Psychical Research</td>
<td>Elbert, Reinhold, 466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ASPR Newsletter, 95</td>
<td>Fagan, Cyril, 533–536</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ass, 95–96</td>
<td>Forrest, Stephen, 579</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ASSAP News, 98</td>
<td>Gadbury, John, 615</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assagioli, Roberto, 96</td>
<td>Galeotti, Marzio (or Martius), 616</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ASSAP Newsletter, 95</td>
<td>Gauquelin, Françoise Schneider, 622–623</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assagioli, Roberto, 96</td>
<td>George, Demetra, 629</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>George, Llewellyn, 629</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Goodavage, Joseph F., 653–654</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Goodman, Linda, 654</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Grant, Ernest A., 659–660</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assagioli, Roberto, 96</td>
<td>Guillaume de Carpentras, 674</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Hand, Robert S., 688–689</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Hazelrigg, John, 708–709</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assassins, 96–97</td>
<td>Heindel, Max, 716–717</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ainsarii, 18</td>
<td>Heydon, John, 722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alamut, 21</td>
<td>Hone, Margaret, 741–742</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Huchner, Louise, 752</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Jayne, Charles, 827</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Johnsdot, L. Edward, 833</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Kepler, Johann, 856</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>King, Bruce, 859</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Koch, Walter A., 870–871</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness</td>
<td>Kräft, Karl Ernst, 875</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astalgamancy, 100</td>
<td>Lamb, John, 887</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Body, 100–101. See also Dream Body</td>
<td>Lanz von Liebenfels, Jorg, 891</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Lee, Dal, 901</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Leek, Syl, 902–903</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Leo, Alan, 906</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Levi, William Grant II, 918</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Lilly, William, 923</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Mexico, 1032</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Michelsen, Neil Franklin, 1035–1036</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Moore, Marcia, 1052</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Mora, Jean-Baptiste, 1053–1054</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Napper (or Napier), Richard, 1088</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Napper (or Napier), Richard, 1142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Omarr, Sydney, 1143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Peter of Abano (Petrus de Abano), 1202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Pico della Mirandola, Giovanni, 1210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Placidus de Titis (or Titus), 1217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Pottenger, Marthá, 1231–1232</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Qingley, Joan, 1268–1269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G., 242</td>
<td>Raman, Bangalore Venkata, 1278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Astral Projection, 101. See also Out-of-the-Body Travel</td>
<td>Rao, Bangalore Suryanarain, 1284</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Sasportas, Howard, 1346–1347
Scott, Michael, 1372
Sibley, Ebenezer, 1405
Sibley, Manoah, 1406
Smith, Robert Cross, 1424
Star, Ely, 1485
Sullivan, Erin, 1508–1509
Tyl, Noel, 1599
Van Bruselen, Peter, 1624
Volguine, Alexandre, 1640
Wagner, Edward A., 1643
Weingarten, Henry, 1656
Weiss, Claude J., 1657
Weschcke, Carl Llewellyn, 1660–1661
Wilson, James, 1675
Witte, Alfred, 1683
Zain, C. C., 1704
Astrologers’ Guild of America, Inc., 102
Astrology (Journal), 102
Astrological Association, 102–103
Astrological Houses, 103–104
Astrological Journal, 104
Astrological Lodge of London, 104
Astrological Magazine, 104
Astrological Planets, 104–106
Astrological Registration and Communication (ARC), 106
Astrological Signs, 106–107
Astrological Society, 108
Astrology, 108–109
Abour-Ryan, 4
Afridiva, 28
American Academy of Astrologians, 40
American Astrological Society, 40–41
American Federation of Astrologers, 41
Arabs, 83
Association for Astrological Networking, 97
Babylonia, 139
Bhrigu-Samhita, 181
Cambodia, 244
China, 281–282
Chinese Astrology, 282–283
Chiron, 284
Cosmobiology, 341
Egypt, 491
end of the world, 503
Gaquelin, Michel, 623
Guillaume de Carpentras, 674
gypsies, 681
Hall, Manly Palmer, 685
Heliosentric Astrologers of North America, 717
history of, 108–109
Horoscope Guide, 747
Horoscope (Magazine), 746–747
Horoscope Yearbook, 747
International Astrologue, The, 798
Jachowski, Jan, 817
Katia Lima, 852
Katia Tujo, 852
Malaysia, 971
March, Marion, 978
modern astrology, 109
moon, 1051
Morrison, Richard James, 1055–1056
Myanmar, 1077
nativities, 108
John Nelson’s contributions to, 1100
Ptolemy, Claudius, 1261
Quincunx, 1269
Regan, 1296
Rudhyar, Dane, 1330
secret tradition, 1381
“Seer” (Software), 1383
Simmonite, William Joseph, 1410
Society of the Mercuri, 1024
Uranian Astrology, 1614
Vedic Astrology, 1631–1632
Zodiac, 1708
Astrology: A Comprehensive Bibliography, 110
Astrology Guide, 110
Astrology Now, 110
Astrology Quarterly, 110
Astromancy, 110
Astronomical Communications, 110–111
Astronomical Talisman, 1526
Astrotalk (Newsletter), 111
Astrotherapy, 111–112
Asylum (William Buehler Seabrook), 1373
Athame, 112
Athanor, 112
Atkinson, William Walker, 1277
Atlanta Astrologer (Newsletter), 113
Atlanteans, The, See Friends of Running Park
Atlanta, 113–114
Alper, Frank, 32–33
Central America, 1035
psychometry, 1259
Atlanta Book Shop, 114
Atlanta (Magazine), 114
Atlanta Rising (Magazine), 114
Atmadhyana, 114
Atman, 114
Atmaniketan Ashram, 114–115
Atreya, Bhakhan Lal, 115
Attunement, 115
Atwater, Phyllis M. H., 115
Atwood, Mary Ann, 115–116
alchemy, 25
Sinnett, A. P., 1411
Atziluth, 116
Aubert, George, 116
automatism, 132
music (paranormal), 1075
Aubourg, Michel, 116
Aubrey, John, 116
Draudism, 456
Stakeley, William, 1503
Augury
Mexico, 1032–1033
Rome (Ancient), 1321
August Order of Light, 116
August Spirits, Shelf of the, 116
AUM (or OM), 116
Logos, 951
mantra, 976–977
AUM, See Association for the Understanding of Man
AUM Magazine. See Anahata Nada
Auras, 117–118
Bagnall, (Reginald) Oscar (Garside), 143
International Kirlian Research Association, 800
Kilner, Walter John, 859
Kirlian Aura, 864–865
od, 1137
Reichenbach, Baron Karl von, 1298
somatography, 1436
Aura-electronics (i.e., Kirigraph), 1633
Aurobindo, Sri, 118–119
Atmaniketan Ashram, 114–115
Auroville, 119
Collaboration (magazine), 309
Divine Life Society, 429
Esalen Institute, 514
India, 785
Paran Yoga Journal, 1262
Rama, Swami, 1277
Shivapuri Baba, 1402–1403
Thompson, William Irwin, 1563–1564
World Union Journal, 1687
Auroville, 119
Aurum Solis (Order of the Sacred Word), 119
Auras-Auset Society, 119–120
Austatikco-Pauligaur, 120
Austin Seth Center (ASC), 120
Australian Society for Psychical Research, 120
Australia, 120–124
Australian Satanic Council, 124
Australian Society for Psychical Research, 124
Australasian UFO Bulletin, 124
Australia, 124–125
Austromancy, 125
Auto-oxidation, 567–568
Autography, 125
Automatic Drawing and Painting, 125–127
Duguid, David, 459
Gill, Madge, 639
Sardou, Victorien, 128–129
Smith, Helene, 1425
Automatic Speaking, 127–128
Automatic Writing, 127–131
Arrila, Pepito, 88
automatic literature, 130–131
Barker, Elsa, 157
communicators’ identities, 129–130
Cummins, Geraldine, 367–368
Cummins v. Bond, 643
Gastonbury Scripts, 643
Gurney, Edmund, 677
hieroglyphs, 725
James, T. P., 821
from living communicators, 128–129
Montgomery, Ruth, 1050
Moses, William Stainton, 1058–1059
“My Boss, the Origin,” 1154–1155
ouija board, 1158
Owen, George Vale, 1162
General Index

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Page Numbers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Baltazo</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baltus, Jean François</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balzac, Louis</td>
<td>1612</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bender, Peter</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cain, John</td>
<td>241</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manning, Matthew</td>
<td>975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raudive voices</td>
<td>1291</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bangs Sisters, Lizzie and May</td>
<td>150–151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chemical phenomena in séances</td>
<td>275–276</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Direct drawing and painting</td>
<td>418–419</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Direct writing</td>
<td>424</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magicians</td>
<td>904</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Martin, William S</td>
<td>493–498</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Movement, paranormal</td>
<td>1062</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Séances</td>
<td>1373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gett Light</td>
<td>(periodical)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Banneux</td>
<td>74, 151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Banshee</td>
<td>151–152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apparitions</td>
<td>685</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hag of the Dribble</td>
<td>808</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>O’Donnell, Elliott</td>
<td>638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Banyaya, Thomas</td>
<td>320</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Banyen Books &amp; Sound</td>
<td>153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bapak</td>
<td>153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baphomet</td>
<td>153–154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>592</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Templars</td>
<td>1345</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baptism of the Devil</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baptism of the Holy Spirit</td>
<td>1376</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baptism of the Line</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baquet</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bar-Lgura</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baraduc, Hypolite</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baranell Report, The</td>
<td>155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbara Brennan School of Healing</td>
<td>155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barab, André</td>
<td>102, 156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baro, Franz</td>
<td>156–157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barbot (or Barghast)</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baring-Gould, S</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bridge of Souls</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mermaids and mermen</td>
<td>1025</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barkas, Thomas</td>
<td>597</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>e’Esperance, Elizabeth</td>
<td>404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Magicians</td>
<td>903</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marshall, Mary</td>
<td>982</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Plastics</td>
<td>1222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wood, C. E.</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balkel, Kathleen</td>
<td>156–157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barker, Esa</td>
<td>131, 157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barker, Gray</td>
<td>157, 661</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bender, Albert K</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Men in Black</td>
<td>1025</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saucer and Unexplained Events</td>
<td>Research Society, 1350–1351</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barker, Lady Mary Anne</td>
<td>13, 14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barley loaves</td>
<td>(alphimancy)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barlow, Fred</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnard, Nicholas</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barnum Etel</td>
<td>157–158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barou</td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barrett, Francis</td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bardon, Franz</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black magic</td>
<td>189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grimoires</td>
<td>669</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mercurius, Society of the</td>
<td>1024</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sapphire</td>
<td>1345</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barrett, Sir William Fletcher</td>
<td>158–159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Society for Psychical Research</td>
<td>42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Animals</td>
<td>57</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apparitions</td>
<td>69</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Autoscopy</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Besterman, Theodore</td>
<td>178</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Book tests</td>
<td>205</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clairvoyance</td>
<td>299</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Direct writing</td>
<td>423</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Divining rod</td>
<td>432</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dowden, Hester</td>
<td>442</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Godigher Circle</td>
<td>652</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hope, William</td>
<td>743</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identity</td>
<td>777</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poltergeists</td>
<td>1226</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Psychical research</td>
<td>1248–1249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raps</td>
<td>1288</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rayleigh, Lord</td>
<td>1292</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reichenbach</td>
<td>1415</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Society for Psychical Research</td>
<td>1428</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spirituality—Great Britain</td>
<td>1470</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sudre, René</td>
<td>1507</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telepathy</td>
<td>1537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thought-Transference</td>
<td>1566–1567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thoughtforms</td>
<td>1564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wallace, Alfred Russel</td>
<td>1648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wriedt, Etta</td>
<td>1689</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Bartholomew,&quot;</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bartlett, John Allen</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Alleyne, John, &quot;</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Automatic drawing and painting</td>
<td>129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bond, Frederick Bligh</td>
<td>201–202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baru</td>
<td>159, 1384</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bashir, Mir</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Basil (Astrologer)</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Basil (Herb)</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Basilidians</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Basilisk (or Cockatrice)</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bassantin (or Bassantoun)</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bastian, Harry</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Direct voice</td>
<td>419</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hellenbach, Baron Lazare De</td>
<td>718</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bacozy</td>
<td>160–161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Bataille, Dr. ,&quot;</td>
<td>161, 161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>See also Vaughan, Diana</td>
<td>1205</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Batchelor, Kenneth J.</td>
<td>161, 1205</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bathym</td>
<td>161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Batom, The Devil's</td>
<td>161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bauer, Eberhard</td>
<td>161–162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Germany</td>
<td>635, 1468</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wissenschaftliche Fesselschaft zur Förderung der Parapsychologie</td>
<td>1677</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bauer, Georg</td>
<td>17, 162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baustus</td>
<td>249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bave</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bawa Muhiayadeen Fellowship, The</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baxter, Robert</td>
<td>1566, 1576</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bayless, Raymond</td>
<td>151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raudive, Konstantin</td>
<td>1290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telephone calls from dead</td>
<td>1531</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bayside</td>
<td>74, 162–165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beacon (journal)</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beads of Truth (Magazine)</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beams</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bearded Demon</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bester, Charles Albert</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beatles</td>
<td>164</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maharishi Mahehs Yogi</td>
<td>967</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transcendental meditation</td>
<td>1583</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beattie, John</td>
<td>164–144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beaumont, Duke of</td>
<td>644</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beaumont, John</td>
<td>164</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beauchain, Bobby</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beausoleil, Jean de Chatelot, Baron de</td>
<td>165, 599</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bebelings Bells (Book)</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beel</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Becher, Henry Ward</td>
<td>1287, 1684</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boteh</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Antichrist</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grandier, Urbain</td>
<td>659</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bees</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beggah, Harold</td>
<td>55, 1651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Believe It (Newsletter)</td>
<td>165–166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belin, Dom Jean Albert</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bell, Psychic Research Foundation</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bell, Art</td>
<td>217, 876</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bell, Fred</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belli Paaro</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bellou, Jeanne</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bellis, Beelings</td>
<td>163</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belmex Faces</td>
<td>166–167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belocouss</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beloff, John</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belomancy</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belphegor</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bender, Albert K.</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bender, Gray</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Men in Black</td>
<td>1023</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bender, Hans</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crosset, Gerard</td>
<td>353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Germany</td>
<td>652–653</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haraldsson, Erikheinz</td>
<td>691</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jürgenzo, Friedrich</td>
<td>843</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Krafft, Karl Ernst</td>
<td>875</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raudive, Konstantin</td>
<td>1290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raudive voices</td>
<td>1291</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Great Britain</td>
<td>1470</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Germany</td>
<td>1468</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Germany</td>
<td>1468</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Germany</td>
<td>1486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Great Britain</td>
<td>1470</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Germany</td>
<td>1491</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Bernard, Pierre (Arnold), 174–175
Bernard, Theos, 175
Coons, Peter, 356
OoM the Omnificent, 1144
Bernard, Theos, 175
Bernhardt, Sarah, 1346
Bernstein, Morey, 176
hypothesis, 768–769
reincarnation, 1302–1303
trance personalities, 1582
Berosus, 176
Berrie, Edward, 176
Berry, Catherine, 176
apports, 80
automatic drawing and painting, 126
electric phenomena, 489
Guppy-Volckman, Agnes, 676
levitation, 913
mediums, 1015
teleportation, 1542
Williams, Charles, 1672
Berry, George, 176–177
Bertrands, Michael, 467, 1710
Bertrand, Alexandre, 1287, 1582
Beryl, 177, 1144
Besant, Annie, 177
Arundale, George Sydney, 90–91
Ascended Masters, 92
Bailey, Alice A., 144
Blavatsky, Helena Petrovna, 195, 196
Brandlach, Charles, 290
chromotherapy, 286–287
Cooper, Irving Steiger, 336–337
Cooper-Oakley, Isabel, 357
Judge, William Q., 841
Koilon, 872
Krishnamurti, Jiddu, 878
Leadbeater, C. W., 899
Mahatma letters, 968
Olcott, Henry Steel, 1141
Order of the Star in the East, 1150, 1151
Stokes, Henry Newlin, 1498
TheosophicalHistory, 1507
Theosophical Society, 1558
theosophy, 1569
Tingley, Katherine, 1574
Waite, Arthur Edward, 1643
Beshara (Community), 177–178
Besinnet, Ada M., 178
direct writing, 424
light, 922
luminous phenomena, 945
teleportation, 1543–1544
Bessems, Joseph François Antoine Albert, 178
Besterman, Theodore (Deodatus Nathaniel), 178
Academia De Estudo Psychicos
“Cesare Lombroso,” 6
animals, 57
Barrett, Sir William Fletcher, 159
Bozzano, Ernesto, 208
Centurione Scotto, Marquis Carlo, 264
de, John, 391
diving rod, 432
Ignath, Luiza Linczegh, 779
Mirabelli, (Carmine) Carlos, 1041
Pap, Lajos, 1176
Schneider Brothers, Willi, 1358
Silbert, Maria, 1409
Bethurum, Truman, 178–179, 325–326,
Betty Book series, 1665
“Betty Book, The,” 179
Beyond (Magazine), 179
Beyond Reality (Magazine), 179
Bezoar, 179
Bhanga, Vlastimil, 179
Bhagavat Gita, 179–180
Bhaktee, 180
Bhaktivedanta Institute of Religion and Culture, 180–181
Bhaktivedanta, Swami Prabhupada, 180
Bharati, Aghananda, 181
Bhiru-Samitha, 181
Bianchi, P. Benigno, 182, 276, 1472
Biss, Clifford, 49, 1612
Bible, Hebrew/Christian
Allegro, John, 29
angels, 32
Antichrist, 61
apparitions, 65
aura, 117
demonology, 396
devil, 499
divination by, 183, 302–303
del of the world, 502–503
Endor, Witch of, 503–504
Gehenna, 624
General Convention of the New Jerusalem in the United States of America, 627
Gnosticism, 647
Michael, 1035
Occultism in the, 182–183
Solomon, 1433–1434
speaking in tongues, 1576
teleportation, 1542
Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, 1586
Tree of Life, 1586
Turin Shroud, 1592
urim and thummim, 1615
witch of Endor, 503
Bible, Kosmon, 1129
Bible of the Devil, 183
Bibliomancy, 183. See also Stichomancy rhopsodomancy, 1308
stichomancy, 1494
Bier, Ambrose, 426, 558
Bierman, Dick J.
Anomalous Cognition Section,
University of Amsterdam, 59
Research Institute for Psi and Psychics, 1305
Tijdschrift voor Parapsychologie,
1572–1573
Biffant, 183
Bifrons, 183
Bigfoot
Michigan Canadian Bigfoot
Information Center, 1036
monsters, 1049
Sasquatch, 1347
Bigfoot Research Project, 183–184
Bigois (or Bigotis), 184
BILK Newsletter, 184
Billot, G. P., 184
apports, 76
control, 330
levitation, 910
perfumes, 1198
spheres, 1456
Spiritualism—France, 1467
trance, 1582
Bilocation, 184
Bisah, 184
Binet, Alfred, 128, 597
Binski, Sigurd R(obert), 184
Bio-thing, 184
Bio-introscopy, 185
Biocommunication, 184
Bioenergetics, 1212
Biofeedback, 33,
Bioenergetics, 1212
Biomate,
Biolater,
Bioinformation,
Biofeedback, 33,
Bioenergetics, 1212
Bilocation,
Bjelfvenstam, Nils Erik, 188
Black Box, 188–189
oscillocast, 1156
Radionic Association, 1273
radionics, 186
Black Hen, Fast of the, 189
Black Magic, 189–190
"Black Pullet, The," 191–192
German, 630–631
grimoires, 669
Law of Hammurabi, 688
La Voisin, 896–897
magical vestments and
apparitions, 962
obsession and possession, 1130
Black Mass, 190–191
Church of Satan, 291
Mass of St. Secaire, 986
Satanic Society, 1349
Black Pullet, The, 191–192, 670
Black Sabbath (rock group), 1317
Blackmore, Susan J., 191
out-of-the-body-travel, 1161
Blackwell, Anna, 192
Book of Spirits, 203
Kardes, Allan, 851
Blackwood, Algernon (Henry), 192
fiction, English occult, 559
Waite, Arthur Edward, 1643
Wendigo, 1657
Blake, Elizabeth, 192
direct voice, 420–421
trumpet, 1590
Blake, William, 192–193
drawing and painting, 125
automatic writing, 131
Druidianism, 456–457
hell, 718
Rossetti, Dante Gabriel, 1328
visions, 1657
Blanchflower,
Blatchford, Robert (Peel Glavine),
Blatchford, Emma Hardinge, 899
Lemuria, 905
MacNell, Reginald Willoughby, 951
Mahatma letters, 968
Masters, 986
Mathers, S. L. MacGregor,
999–1000
Mead, F. R. S., 1006
Morya, Master, 1057
movement, paranormal, 1062
New Age, 1106
noetics, 1124
Olcott, Henry Steel, 1141
Old, Walter G., 1142
Order of the Star in the East, 1150
Piper, Leonora E., 1215
Priye, James Morgan, Jr., 1245
Quest Society, 1268
Rakoci, 1276
raps, 1288
Regardie, Francis Israel, 1296
Roeich, Helena, 1317
Roeich, Nicholas Konstantin, 1318
Roscrucians, 1327–1328
Russia, 1334
Saint Germain, Comte de,
1339–1340
Simmet, A. P., 1411
Slade, Henry, 1414–1415
Society for Psychical Research,
1428–1429
Stokes, Henry Newlin, 1498
Symonds, John, 1519
Theosophical Society, 1557, 1558–1559
theosophy, 1559, 1560
Theosophical Society, 1572
Tingley, Katherine, 1574
universities, 1612, 1613
Waite, Arthur Edward, 1643
Bleeding Statues, 19–20, 196–197
Bleek, John (Eaton Calthorpe), 198
Bleek, Lephas, 926
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bloxham, Arnall, 198–199
death, 386
reincarnation, 1303
Blue Star Gazette, 199
“Bluebeard.” See de Rais, Gilles
Bodhi Tree Book Review, 199
Bo and Peep.
“Blood, Liquefaction of,” 1369
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Bo and Peep.
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Blewett, Duncan Bassett,
“Blood stopping,” 1369
Bligh, Captain, 202
Bleksley, Arthur Edward Herbert,
Bleeding Statues, 19–20,
Blindfolding a Corpse,
Centurione Scotto, Marquis Carlo, 264 communication (between living and dead), 315
De Boni, Gastone, 387
evil spirits, 527
haunting, 705
identity, 777
Institut Métapsychique
International, 796
Italy, 814
monitorion, 1047
movement, paranormal, 1066
Palladino, Eusapia, 1173
Podmore, Frank, 1224
polvegiesta, 1225
premonitions, 1237
psychic touches, 1578
Reuter, Florizel von, 1306
Shirley, Ralph, 1402
Spiritualism—Italy, 1472–1473
Shirley, Richard, 1419
Valiantine, George, 1619
winds (paranormal), 1676
Bracesco, Giovanni, 209
Brackett, E. A., 389
Sawyer, Carrie M., 1351
Bradlaugh, Charles, 209
Bessant, Annie, 177
Bradeley, Donald A., 209
Fagan, Cyril, 535–536
Llewellyn, George, 629
Bradley, H(erbert) Dennis, 209–210
animals, 57–58
Bailey, Charles, 146
Centurione Scotto, Marquis Carlo, 264
“Cristo d’Angelo,” 352
Deane, Ada Emma, 383
direct voice, 419, 420–421
Dowden, Hester, 442
“King, John,” 862
Leonard, Gladys Osborne, 906–907
magicians, 964
mediums, 1016
Munnings, Frederick T., 1070
Murphy-Lydi, Mary, 1071
music (paranormal), 1075
Ridley, Hazel, 1312
Society for Psychical Research, 1429
Survival League, The, 1512
Swaffer, Hannen, 1513
transfiguration, 1584
Valiantine, George, 1617–1619
Bradley, Marion Zimmer, 210
Bragadin, Mark Antony, 210
Brahma, The, 210–211
Braithwaite, 785
Braid, James, 211
Esdaile, James, 515
hypnosis, 765
Bremen, Franz Anton, 1028
communication (between living
and dead), 317
dermography, 402
electric phenomena, 489
Firmian, Mr. and Mrs. A. H., 568
Fowler, Edward, 587
France, 595–596
haunting, 705, 704
inspirational speakers, 795
London Dialectical Society, 933
Massey, Gerald, 986
materializations, 991
music (paranormal), 1075
New Zealand, 1117–1118, 1119
Oben, Ernest W., 1129
psychic touches, 1578
seances, 1574
Spiritualism, 1466
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
Spiritualism—United States, 1475
Spiritualists’ National Union, 1478
Two Worlds, 1599
Wallis, E. W., 1648
xenoglossy, 1692
Britten Memorial Institute and Library, 219
Britten Memorial Museum, 90, 219
Bro, Harmon Hartzell, 219
Bro, (Charlie) Dunbar, 219, 368
Broceliande, 220
Brocken, 220
Brooke-Williams, (John) William, 220, 569
Broffiero, Angelo, 222
Brooks, Nona Lovell, 220–221
Univ, 220
Broom, 221
Broomstick, 221
Brotherhood of the Ram, 221
Brotherhood of the Trowel, 221
Brotherhood of the White Temple, 221
Borestation, 222
Brown, Courtneay, 222
Brown, Edward H., 1285, 1327
Brown, Harry, 915
Brown, John Mason, 37, 223
Browning, Elizabeth Barrett
Browning, Robert, 224
Browning, Robert, 224
Browning, Robert, 224

Bruck, H(enry) Addington (Bayley), 224
Bruning, J(oseph) H(erbert), 224
Brunner, Antonio, 225
Bruhns, Henri J. F. W., 225, 300–301
Brullant, 225
Bruno, Jean, 225
Brunton, Paul, 225
Phillimore, Mercy, 1205
Ramana Maharshi, Sri, 1278
Bucke, R(ichard) M(aurice), 224
Buckley, James Lord, 224
Budapest, Zsuzsanna E., 224
Buckland, Raymond (Brian), 225
Buchanan, Joseph Rhodes, 225–226
a. 118
Denton, William, 399
pathetism, 1190
psychometry, 1257, 1258, 1259
Spiritualism—United States, 1475
Bucke, R(ichard) M(aurice), 224
cosmic consciousness, 348–341, 341
luminous phenomena, 943
Morrow, Felix, 1056
Buckland, Raymond (Brian), 226
Dunwich, Gerina, 461
Gardner, G. B., 619–620
witchcraft, 1081
Buckley, James Lord, 226
Budapest, Zsuzsanna E., 226
Buddhism
Bodhisattva, 199
China, 292
Huining, 753–754
Hunt, Ernest, 755
Hyuington, 771
Japan, 824
Kagyu Dharma, 847
karma, 851–852
Kukai, 880
Kwan Um School of Zen, 884
lora, 932
Luk, Charles (Lu K’uan Yü), 942
Myanmar, 1076
Olcott, Henry Steel, 1141
qi, 1267
qi gong, 1267, 1268
reincarnation, 1300
Rinpoyje, 1313
Sapphire, 1345
sex magic, 1392
Tibet, 1570–1571, 1571
Trungapa Rinpoeche, Chogyam, 1590
Tulku, 1591–1592
Zazen, 1704
Zen, 1703–1706
Budge, E. A. Wallis
alchemy, 22
Egypt, 481–482, 483
Buer, 227
Buffum, C. T., 329–330
BUFORA. See British UFO Research Association
Bugnet, Edouard, 227
double, 439
spirit photography, 1461

Builders of the Adytum, 227–228
Builders of the Nation of God, 10
Bull, Titus, 228
obsession and possession, 1134, 1135
Wickland, Carl August, 1670
Bullard, Thomas E., 3, 1607–1608
Bullets
Anomalies Research Bulletin, 59
APRO Bulletin, 81
Australian UFO Bulletin, 124
FRNM Bulletin, 610
Leading Edge: A Bulletin of Social Transformation, 899
New Sense (Bulletin), 1114
Parapsychology Bulletin, 1185
PPGC Bulletin, 1233
Psi News, 1246
Res diaries Bulletin, 1305
Today’s Astrologer (Periodical), 1375
UFO Magazine New Bulletin, 1602
Bune, 228
Bunyip, 228
Bureau for the Investigation of Paranormal Photographs, 229
Burgot, Pierre, 229
Burgoyne, Thomas H., 229
Church of Light, 289
Davidson, Peter, 379
Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor, 722–723
Theon, Max, 1556–1557
Burial Practices
Book of the Dead, 204
with feet to the east, 229
Burial with Feet to the East, 229
Burials, Living, 539
Burland, Cottie A(rthur), 226
Burma. See Myanmar
Burney, Edmund, 129, 1078
Burns, James, 229–230
Fletcher, John William, 572–573
Human Nature (journal), 754
Medium and Daybreak, 1016
Morse, J. J., 1666
Progressive Library & Spiritual Institution, 1245
Spiritual Institution, 1463
Wallis, E. W., 1648
Burns, Robert, 1366
Burt, Sir Cyril (Lodowic), 230
Busardier, 230
Butcher, Samuel Henry, 230
Butler, Walter (Ernest), 230
Butler, William E.
Ashcroft-Nowicki, Delores, 93
Knight, Gareth, 867
Servants of the Light, 1388
Bunter, Wittches, 231
Butts, Jane. See Roberts, Jane
Byrne, Peter, 183–184, 1049

C
C.O.G., 233
Caacrinolaas, 233
Cabinet, 233
materializations, 987
séances, 1574
Cabiri (or Cabeiri), 235–235, 634
Cacodaemons, 235
Ahrimans, 18
jinn, 831
Caedmonite, 235
Caddy, Eileen and Peter, 235, 1564
Cadoret, Remi Jere, 236
Caduceus, 236
Cagliostro, 236–240
elixir of life, 492
France, 595–594
Freemasonry, 605–606
Hugo, Victor, 753 illuminati, 780
Saint German, Comte de, 1359
Cahagnet, Louis-Alphonse classic, 299
France, 594, 595–596
hypnotism, 767
Magenta, A., 965
reincarnation, 1251
reincarnation, 1301
Spiritualism, 1466
Spiritualism—France, 1467
trance, 1582
Yarker, John, 1695
Cabiers Astrologues (Periodical), 241
Cahn, Harold Ar(chambo), 241
Cailleach (or Harvest Old Wife), 15–16, 241
Cam, John, 241
Canumarath (or Kaid-mords), 241
Cales, Divination By, 353
Cala, Carlo, 241
Calatian Clan, 241
Calef, Robert, 38, 999
Callen, 158
California Directory of Psi Services, 224
California Institute of Transpersonal Psychology Newsletter, 242
California Parapsychology Foundation, 242
California Society for Psychical Studies, 242
California Sun, 242
Callaway, Hugh G., 242
Fox, Oliver, 588
France, 597
out-of-body-travel, 1160
Shirley, Ralph, 1402
Society of Metaphysicists, 1451
Calmecac, 242
Calmet, Dom Antoine Augustin, 242–243
apparitions, 65
Greece, 665
“Magia Posthuma,” 956
pacts with the Devil, 1160
vampire, 1621–1622
Calundronius, 243
Calvin, John, 631
Cambions, 243
Cambodia, 243–244, 305
Cambridge Buddhist Association, 244
Cambridge Company, The, 245
Camp Meetings, 245
Campagni, Roberto, 80, 245, 296
Campbell, Joseph, 245
Campion, Nicolas, 245
Camus, Philippe (or Felipe), 246

1842
Church of Christ, Scientist, 288
Affiliated New Thought Network, 13
Eddy, Mary Baker, 473–474
Gestefeld, Ursula Newell, 634
Gnosticism, 645
mind cure, 1039
Quitmy, Phineas P., 1269
Church of Satan, 289–291
devil worship, 412
Gidney, William "Starets," 638
LaVey, Anton, 896
Satanic Bible, 1347
Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilm Rite, 1555
Church of the Final Judgment, See Process Church of the Final Judgment and Foundation Faith of God Churches
Agasha Temple of Wisdom, 16
Amanda Church of Self-Realization, 46–47
Aquarian Foundation, 82
Aquarian Tabernacle Church, 82
Christian Spiritual Alliance, Church of the, 285
Church of all Worlds, 667
Church of Christ, Scientist, 288
Church of Cosmic Science, 289
Church of Divine Man, 289
Church of Eddy, Mary Baker, 473–474
Church of Fire Walking, 1265
Science, Church of, 1562–1564
Spiritual Churches, 1462–1463
Spiritual Israel Church and Its Army, 1477
Spiritual Science Mother Church, 1479–1480
Spiritualist Episcopal Church, 1478
Stella Maris Gnostic Church, 1492
Summit Lighthouse (See Church Universal and Triumphant)
Super Light Doctrine Church, 1511
Temple Church (London), 1548
Temple of Set, 1548
Temple of Universal Law, 1549
Thee Satanic Church, 1555
Thee Satanic Church of the Nethilm Rite, 1555
Unification Church, 1608–1609
Union Esperitista Cristiana de Filipinas, Inc., 1609
United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ, 1609
United Spiritual Church of England, 1610
United States, 1476
Universal Church of Christ, 1610
Universal Church of the Master, 1610
Universal Hagar's Spiritual Church, 1611
Universal Harmony Foundation, 1611
White Temple Church, 1668
Wiccan Church, 1669
Churches’ Fellowship of Psychical and Spiritual Studies, 1669
Churchill, Winston
Harris, Bertha, 693
Randies, Jenny, 1283
Wheatley, Dennis, 1664
Churchward, James, 293
Buckland, Raymond B(rian), 226
Lemuria, 905
Churchyard, 293–294
Chwcelos, Nick, 1154
Cicero
Agrippa von Nettesheim, Henry Cornelius, 17 beams, 163
Rome (Ancient), 1322
CIEEPP, See Comité Illusionniste D’Expertise et D’Expérimentation des Phénomènes Paranormaux “Cigan.” See Gypsy
Circe, 663, 664
Circle 77, 296
Circle, Magic, See Magic Circle
Circle Network News (Periodical), 294
Circle of Atonement, 294
Circle of Inner Truth, 295
Circle of Power Spiritual Foundation, 295
Circle of Sex, The (Gavin Arthur), 89
Circle Sanctuary, 296
Circles, 5, 295
Circles Effect Research Unit (CERES), The, 296
Circles, Spiritualist, 296
Circles, The (Periodical), 296
Cities
Fimia, 562
Shambhala, 1595
subterraneum, 1504–1505
Citizens Against UFO Secrecy (CAUS), 297
Clifford Sisters, Victoria and Tennessee Celeste, 297
Clairaudience, 297
inner voice, 791
lucidity, 941
Stokes, Doris, 1497–1498
voices (paranormal), 1639
Clairvoyance, 297–301
See also Divination
animal magnetism, 57
apparitions, 63, 64, 66
lucidity, 941
phone-voance, 1207–1208
Sanderson, C. B., 1343
Sargent, Epes, 1346
Schneider, Gertrude Raffel, 1356
Scoresby, William, 1364
Seer, 1385
Targ, Russell, 1532
telepathy, 1540
voices (paranormal), 1639
worlds, planes, or spheres, 1687
Yerger, Eloise Barrangon, 1697
Clairvoyants
Didier Brothers, Alexis & Adolph, 413–416
Fancher, Mollie, 544
Fletcher, John William, 572–573
Fowler, Lottie, 587
Garrett, Eileen J., 621
Hansen, Erik Jan, 690
Hauffe, Frau Frederica, 698–699
Ighnath, Luiza Linczezh, 779
Kahn, Ludwig, 847
King, Robert, 863
Kraus, Joseph, 877
Le Normand, Marie-Anne
Adelaide, 906
Lees, Robert James, 903
Marion, Frederick, 979–980
Osmont, Anie, 1157
Osweski, Stephan, 1535
Slate, John, 1416
Woodruff, Maurice, 1685
Clan Morna, 301
Clancarty, Earl of, 301
Claregate College, 301
Clarke, Arthur C., 302 fire walking, 566
Hasted, John B., 697
1846
Clavel, F. T. B., 302, 309
Claymont Society for Continuous Education, 302
Clear Light (Magazine), 302
Cledonism (or Cledonisantia), 302
Cledomancy, 302–303
Clements, Samuel Langhorne (“Mark Twain”), 303, 1597–1598
Clement IV, Pope, 141–142
Clement, Jean, 1577–1578
Clement V, Pope Boniface VIII, 203
Gauthier of Bruges, 625
Templars, 1545
Cleromancy, 305
Clifford, Francis Fabian, 303
Close Encounters of the Third Kind, 303, 1620
Closed Deck, 303
Clothing, Release or Movement of, 1001
Cloud Busting, 303–304
Clove Foot, 304
Cloveleaf Connections, 304
Clow, Barbara Hand, 304
contortions, 327
Marciniak, Barbara, 978–979
Pleitades, 1222–1223
Cluver, R. (Robin) Swinburne, 304–305
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rosae Crucis, 48
Krumm-Heller, Arnoldo, 879
Raphael, Paschal Beverly, 1283
Rosricurians, 1327
Coates, James, 305
automatic writing, 128
Boyle, Charles, 146
Bangs sisters, Lizzie and May, 151
double, 440
psychophone, 1280
thoughtforms, 1565
Willie, Edward, 1689
Cobbs, Clarence
Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ, 1031
United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ, 1699
Watson, Thomas, 1654
Cochrane, David, 305
Cochrane, Robert, 1619–1620, 1681
Cock, 305–306
Cock Lane Ghost, 306
Cockatrice, 306
Cocks
alectromancy, 26–27
“Caquet Bomber” (Song), 248
Codex Pseudepigraphus Verteris Testamenti (Johann Albert Fabricius), 35
Collin Nails, 306
Collin, Walter H., 1248, 1256
Cog, See Covenant of the Goddess
Coghi, Giulio, 306
Coincidence, 306–307
Colburn, Nettie. See Maynard, Henrietta Sturdevant
Colby, George P., 252–253, 307
Colby, Luther, 307, 321
Coleman, Loren, 307
Coleman-Smith, Pamela
tarot, 1533
Tarot Network News, 1534
Waité, Arthur Edward, 1644
Colderidge, Samuel Taylor, 308 dreams, 450
fiction, English occult, 557
Scott, Michael, 1372
Colin, Maurice, 308
Collaboration (Magazine), 309
College of Buddhist Studies, 309
College of Psychic Science, Great Britain, 1471
College of Psychic Studies, 309
College of the Thelemic Temple of Thelema, 309
College of Universal Wisdom, 309, 1241
Collegia Artificum, 309
Colley, Thomas, 310
Crewe Circle, 352
direct voice, 419, 420
direct writing, 422–423
Eglinton, William, 477–478
Henslow, George, 721
Hope, William, 742
magicism, 964
Maskelyne, John Nevil, 985
materializations, 990, 999–994
mediums, 1015
Monck, Rev. Francis Ward, 1046
raps, 1287–1288
Stead, William T., 1490
xenoglossy, 1692
Collins, Doris, 127, 310
Collins, Mabel (Mrs. Keningale Cook), 310
Harris, Melvin, 694
Hilarion, Master, 726
Jack the Ripper, 818
Collins, Wilkie, 557–558
Colloquy of the Ancients, 311
Collyer, R. H., 1028, 1208
Colman, Arthur, 311
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
teleportation, 1543
Williams, Mrs. M. A., 1672
Colombo, John Robert, 1104–1105
Colombia, John Robert, 311, 1157
Colophon, oracle of, 1147
Color
China, 281
chromotherapy, 286–287
Feng-shui, 555
Rafé, W. G., 1274
table-turning, 1522
Colton, Ann Rees, 311
Columbus, Christopher, 1024
Colville, Wilbur Juvenal, 311–312
Colville, William Juvenal, 793
Combustion, Spontaneous Human, 1480–1481
Comets, 284, 312
Comité Illusionniste D’Expertise et D’Experimentalisation des Phenomenes Paranormaux (CIEEEP), 312 Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal (CISCOP), 312–313 formation of, 39
Gardner, Martin, 620
Gauquelin, Michel, 623
Geller, Uri, 625
Randi, James, 1281–1282
Common Ground (Journal), 313
Common Ground (San Francisco), 313–314
Common Ground (Vancouver), 314
Commonwealth of Independent States. See Russia Communication
after death, 386
Astronomical Communications, 110–111
Autoscope, 312
death, telephone calls from, 1541–1542
Direct Voice, 419–421
Julia’s Bureau, 841–842
between living and dead, 314–318
Mahatma letters, 966
mediums, 1016
networking, 1104
ouija board, 1138
planchette, 1218
prayer, 1234–1235
psychomanteum, 1257
psychophone, 1260
Reflectograph, 1296
SPIRICOM, 1457
typtology, 1599
Communigraph, 318
Communion, 318–319
Communities
Beshara, 177–178
Beshara (Community), 177–178
Community of Sensation, 319
Danishur, 374–375
Emissaries of Divine Light, 500
Findhorn Community, 561–562
Free Daist Communion, 604
Friends of the Wisdom Religion, 609
Gandalf’s Garden, 617
Hopedale Community, 743
Kripalu Center for Yoga and Health, 877
Krisha Venta, 878
Linlisterne, 923
Modern Times, The Socialist Community of, 1044
Mountain Cave Community, The, 1060
Ray-Yoga Math and Retreat, 1276
Shakers, 1394
Spiritualist Community, The, 1478
Stelle Group, 1492
University of the Trees, 1613
WFLK Fountain of the World, 1664
Community of Sensation, 319
materializations, 989
Scoresby, William, 1364
Community of the Beloved Disciple, 320
Comparative Psychophysiological Study of Living Adepts Project (COMPSLA), 320
Compass Brothers, 320
COMPSLA. See Comparative Psychophysiological Study of Living Adepts Project
Compton, Elizabeth J., 320–321
materializations, 993
Olcott, Henry Steel, 1141
transfiguration, 1585
Cranon, Mina Stinson ("Margery"), 349–351
American Society for Psychical Research, 42
apports, 77
Besterman, Theodore, 178
Bird, J. Malcolm, 186–187
Bond, Frederick Blairh, 202
Boston Society for Psychical Research, 207
Carrington, Hereward, 251
control, 329
cross-correspondence, 358
Dingwall, E. J., 417
direct voice, 419, 420
Driesch, Hans, 454
ectoplasm, 470, 473
Feilding, Everard, 552
Glastonbury Scripts, 643
Heudini, Harry, 748
light, 922
luminous phenomena, 945
magicians, 964
"Margery," 979
materializations, 991, 997
matter passing through matter, 1002
McDouall, William, 1005
movement, paranormal, 1063
Murphy, Gardner, 1071
music (paranormal), 1074
perfumes, 1198
Prince, Walter Franklin, 1240
psychical research, 1249
raps, 1288–1289
Scientific American, 1361
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1471
Spiritualism—United States, 1476
Thorogood, Brackett K., 1564
Tillyard, R. J., 1573
trumpet, 1500
Valiantine, George, 1619
"Walter," 1649
winds (paranormal), 1676
Worcester, Ewdow, 1686
xenoglossy, 1694
Crawford, F. Marion
fiction, English occult, 558
Jacob of Simla, 819
Crawford, William Jackson, 351–352
cautlevier, 247–248
Crandon, Mina Stinson, 349
ectoplasm, 470–471, 472
electric phenomena, 488
fraud, 602
Godigher Circle, 652
hypnotism, 768
levitation, 916
movement, paranormal, 1065
psychic force, 1252, 1253
raps, 1288
Creatures
Chupacabras, 287–288
Eel, 477
Sasquatch, 1547
Springheeled Jack, 1482
Yeti, 1697
Yowie, 1702
Zeroid, 1706
Crehore, John Davenport, 352
Creme, Benjamin, 352
Ascended Masters, 92
bleeding statues, 197
Order of the Star in the East, 1131
Crewe Circle, 352
Walker, William, 1646
Cridge, Anna Denton, 399
Crime and Criminals, See also Fraud
Jack the Ripper, 818
Manson, Charles M., 976
Cromnia, 1137
Satanic Ritual Abuse, 1347
"Cristo d'Angelo," 352–353
apports, 78, 80
teleportation, 1544
Collantine, Eugene, 1618
Critoamy, 333

CRL. See Consciousness Research Labraor
Crosset, Gerard, 353 applied psi, 76
chair test, 267
clavoyance, 201
Hoebens, Piet Heijn, 730
Holland, 733
Medhurst, R. G., 1007
Studienvereniging voor Psychical Research, 1505
Crolius, Oswaldus, 353–354
Cromtech Temple, 354
Cromniaomy, 354
Crookall, Robert, 354 astral projection, 101
death, 386
double, 441
out-of-the-body-travel, 1160
Crookes, Sir Walter, 910–912
Crookes, Sir William, 354–356
Aksakof, Alexander N., 20
Bang sisters, Lizzie and May, 150 book tests, 205
communication (between living and dead), 315, 316
Cook, Florence Eliza, 332–334
Cox, Edward William, 348
direct writing, 422
direct speaking (between living and dead), 315, 316
Cox, Esther
direct writing, 424
epiphany, 495
telepathy (between living and dead), 315, 316
Cox, Sergeant E. W.
mach, 601
matter passing through matter, 1002
Morse, J. J., 1056
Moses, William Stainton, 1058
movement, paranormal, 1064
Proceedings of the Psychological Society of Great Britain, 1242
Psychological Society, The, 1256
Slade, Henry, 1415
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1470
thought-reading, 1566
Cox, William Edward, 348
matter passing through matter, 1003
movement, paranormal, 1067
Cox, William Sebron, 349
Craddock, Frederick G. Foster, 349
Colman, Arthur, 311
control, 329–330
matter passing through matter, 1001–1002
teleportation, 1543
Cramp-Rings, Hallowing, 349
Marshall, Mary, 982
materializations, 987, 989, 991–992, 995, 998
matter passing through matter, 1000, 1001
Moses, William Stainton, 1058
movement, paranormal, 1062, 1065, 1066
music (paranormal), 1075
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1078–1079
psychic force, 1251
psychic immunity to fire, 564
psychical research, 1247, 1248
raps, 1287
Ralegh, Lord, 1292
Richet, Charles, 1510
Rosher, Grace, 1324
séances, 1374
Shawers, Mary, 1404
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1470
Stewart, Balfour, 1495
Strutt, John William (3rd Baron)
telepathy, 1538
tree ghosts, 1586
Varley, Cromwell Fleetwood, 1628
winds (paranormal), 1676
Crop Circles, 357, 509
Crop Watcher, The (Periodical), 357
Cross, 360–361
cross-correspondence, 358–359
Glastonbury Scripts, 643
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
Saltier, Helen Woolgar de
Gaudrion Verrall, 1341
Saltier, William H(enry), 1342
telepathy, 1538
thought-transference, 1567
Van Eeden, Frederik, 1625
Verrall, Arthur Woolgar, 1633
Wingfield, Kate, 1677
Cross-Reference, 360, 1133–1134
cross, 359–360
crow, 360–361
crowell, Eugene voice, 419–420 writing, 424
materializations, 991
movement, paranormal, 1065
psychometry, 1258
raps, 1287
crowley, Aleister, 361
A.:A.:., I achad, Frater, 6
al, 20
anger, Kenneth, 56
antichrist, 62
atlantis book shop, 114
automatic writing, 131
baphomet, 154
Bardon, Franz, 156
Bennett, Charles Henry, 169
berridge, Edward, 176
black magic, 189
book of shadows, 203
book of Thoth, 204–205
ceremonial magic, 266
chaos magic, 271
Chibbett, Harold, 276
Church of the Eternal Source, 291 college of thelema/temple of thelema, 309
collins, Mabel (Mrs. Keningale Cook), 310
doine, Jules-Benoit, 437
ecclesia gnostica alba, 467
Eckartshausen, Karl von, 468
east, 469
egypt, 483
english qabala, 509
Enochian calls, 511–512
equinox, 513
Equinox, 513
Farr, Florence, 545–546
Fellowship of Ma-Ion, 553
fiction, English occult, 559
Frater-Saturninus, 600
Fuller, J. F. C., 611–612
Fuller, Jean Overton, 612
gematria, 627
germer, Karl Johannes, 633
Gnostic Catholic Church, 646
Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of
thelema, 651
Grant, Kenneth, 660
grimoires, 669
hell-fire club, 719
hermetic alchemical order of qblh, 722
Holy Order of RaaHoorKhuit, 737
honunculus, 741
Hubbard, L. Ron, 751
Huxley, Aldous, 758
Jack the Ripper, 818
Jones, Charles Stanisfeld, 835 justice, Michael, 843
Ka, 846
Kellner, Karl, 854
King, Francis, 860
Knight, Richard Payne, 868
Krumm-Heller, Arnoldo, 879
Lawrence museum of magic and witchcraft, 897
magic, 959
maithuna, 969–970
matthers, Moina, 999 matthers, S. L. MacGregor, 1000 mysteria mystica maxima, 1090 neuberg, Victor, 1104 new Isis lodge, 1112
norton, Rosalind, 1125
order of the thelemic golden dawn, 1151
ordo templi orientis (grant), 1152
Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO),
1152–1153
Ordo Templi Orientis (roanneke, Virginia), 1155
parsons, Jack, 1187, 1188
path of gnostic light, 1190
regardie, Francis Israel, 1296
reuss, theodor, 1306
rock music, 1317
servants of the star and the snake, 1388
sex magic, 1392
society ordo templi orientis, 1452
spare, Austin Osman, 1451
symonds, John, 1510
tantric yoga, 1530
tarot, 1533
templars, 1547
Thee Templar ov Psychick Youth, 1555
waite, Arthur Edward, 1643
Watts Book Shop, 1653
Watts, Geoffrey, 1652
world league of illuminati, 1687
Yarker, John, 1695
Yeats, William Butler, 1696
Crucifixion, Gnostic Conception of,
361–362
Crumbaugh, James Charles, 362
cryptesthesia, 362, 1029
cryptesthesia, 1310
Cromponmesia, 362, 1303
cryptozoology, 261, 362–363, 1048
cryptology (Journal), 363
crypts, Subterranean, 1505–1506
Crystal Gazing (or Crystallomancy), 363–364
apparitions, 66
ciarvoyance, 297–298
Dee, John, 388–389
divination, 428
gastroscopy, 622
rapping, 1286
scrying, 1372
speculari, 1453
vision, 1836
Crystal Healing, 364
Crystal Skull, 365
Crystal Well: A Journal of the Old
Religion, 366
crystal Well (Journal), 365–366 crystalization of the God Flame (Magazine), 364 crystals, 365
alper, Frank, 32–33
oD, 1137
crystaphile, 366
CSA. See Christian Spiritual Alliance, Church of the csar. See Center for scientific Anomalies Research
CSICOP. See Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal
Church of thelema, 366
Cuadernos de Parapsicologia Journal, Committee for
the Paranormal
Church of thelema/Temple of Ecclesia Gnostica Alba, 467
Crystaphile, 366
Cuadernos de Parapsicologia Journal, Committee for the Paranormal
Church of thelema/Temple of Ecclesia Gnostica Alba, 467
Crystaphile, 366
Cuadernos de Parapsicologia Journal, Committee for the Paranormal
Church of thelema/Temple of Ecclesia Gnostica Alba, 467
Crystaphile, 366
Cummins, Geraldine Dorothy, 367–368
automatic writing, 128, 130, 131
Cosme-Terranent, Winifred
Margaret Serocold, 336
Dowden, Hester, 442, 443
Edinburgh College of
Parapsychology, 475
Fawcett, Colonel Percy Harrison, 551
genius, 628
group soul, 671
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
reincarnation, 1301
Cunning, 368
Cunningham, Donna, 368, 856
Cunningham, Scott, 368–369
Alliance of Solitary Practitioners, 30
witchcraft, 1681
Curie, Pierre, 1253
Curnow, W. Leslie, 331, 1611
Dance, Laura A(bbott), 373–374, 1602
Dale, Lily, 423, 1611
Dallas, Helen Alexandra, 374
Dalton, Joseph Grinnell, 374
Dalton, Thomas, 374
alchemy, 22
Burgoyne, Thomas H., 229
Damen, Edward
Brown, Courtney, 222
government-sponsored research
on parapsychology, 656
Daman, Master John, the French
Leich, 375, 1368
Damiani, G., 79, 991
Danaans, The, 375
Caer, 236
D’Anania (or D’Agnyan), Giovanni lorenzo, 375
Dance
levitation, 917
obession and possession,
1130–1131
Rome (Ancient), 1320
sounds, 1441
Dance of the Deer Foundation, The, 375 d’Angelo, Cristo, 329
Danielou, Alain, 1149, 1388
Daniken, Erich von, 272
Dante, 203, 1372
Daphnomancy,
375
D’Aquit, Mordecai, 127
D’Arc, Jeanne, 297
Dark, The, 376
Dark They Were And Golden Eyed,
376
D’Arcy, Curé, 376, 594
Darwin, Charles, 1221, 1647
Das Gupta, Narendra Kumar, 376
D’Aspillette, Marie, 376
Dass, Baba Ram, 33
Davenport Brothers, Ira Erastus and William Henry, 376–378
Davenport, Dr., 233
direct voice, 421
Fay, Annie Eva, 551
Fay, William M., 552
Ferguson, Rev. Jesse Babcock, 555
Flammarion, Camille, 571
France, 597
fraud, 601–602
Holland, 732
“King, John,” 861
“King, Katie,” 863
magicians, 963
Mapes, James Jay, 977
Maskelyne, John Nevil, 985
materializations, 989, 990
matter passing through matter, 1001
mediums, 1011
movement, paranormal, 1062
plastics, 1222
psychic force, 1252–1253
séances, 1373
Sexton, George, 1392–1393
Spiritualism—France, 1467
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
Spiritualism—United States, 1475, 1476
teleportation, 1542
Davey, S. J.
magicians, 963
slate writing, 1417
Davey, S. T., 378
Eglinton, William, 480
Hodgson, Richard, 729
Keeler, Pierre L. O. A., 853
mediums, 1011
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1470
David, King
Grail word, 659
Ka, 846
David, King (Scotland), 970
David-Neel, Alexandra, 379
Bardon, Franz, 156
levitation, 916–917
Morrow, Felix, 1056
 Tibet, 1571
tulpa, 1592
turno, 1599
Davidson, Peter, 379
Burgoyne, Thomas H., 229
Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor,
729–721
Davies, Lady Eleanor, 379–380
Davies, Andrew Jackson, 380–381
astronomical communications, 110
automatic speaking, 127
automatic writing, 128, 131
Berridge, Edward, 176
British Spiritualists’ Lyceum Union, 218
channeling, 269
Chase, Warren, 274
Church of the New Jerusalem, 292
clarvoyance, 299
death, 385
diakka, 414
double, 441
Evans, W. H., 524
evil spirits, 527
fraud, 692
Harris, Thomas Lake, 694
Hieroglyphs, 725
hypnosis, 767
Kislo, Alfred, 865
Mesmer, Franz Anton, 1028
Mueller, William H., 1070
new motor, 1113
obession and possession, 1131
Owen, Robert, 1163
Phipps, Eliakim, 1293
planetary travels, 1219
Poughkeepsie Seer, The, 1232
reincarnation, 1301
Spear, John Murray, 1452
Spirit Messenger, 1460
Spiritual Telegraph, 1480
Spiritualism—United States, 1475
Summerland, 1509
Universoelum, 1610
Davis, Courtney, 381–382
Dawn (Magazine). See Yoga
International
Dawn Horse Communion. See Free
Dast Communion
Dawson-Scott, Catharine Amy, 382
Day of the Dead, 382
De Biragues, Flamino, 387
De Boni, Gastone, 387
Archivo di Documentazione
Storica Della Ricerca Psichica, 85
Italy, 814
De Boutevaut Matrin, 387
De Boville (or Bovillus or Bovelles), Charles, 378–388
pendulums, 1193
Pessomancy (or Psephomancy), 1202
phyllorhodomancy, 1209
physiognomy, 1209–1210
poppy seeds, 1230
prenestine lots, 1238 prophecy, 1245
psychomancy, 1257
pyromancy, 1266
pyroscopy, 1266
rhabdomancy, 1308
rhapsodromancy, 1308
Rome (Ancient), 1321
runes, 1331
sand, 1341
scapulomancy, 1354
sciometry, 1364
Scotland, 1369
scrying, 1372
See also: 1372
she-goat, 1397
sideromancy, 1407
Solomon, Mirror of, 1434–1435
sorîlege, 1438–1439 spal bone, 1451
specter, 1453
spodomancy, 1480
stichomancy, 1494
stichometry, 1497
stolosomancy, 1499
sycomancy, 1519
tarot (or tarots), 1532–1534
tasseography, 1535
by tea leaves, 1536
tephromancy, 1550
Teutons, 1533–1534
theomancy, 1556
tyromancy (or tiromancy), 1599
in United States, 39
Urim and Thummim, 1615
sylomancy, 1694
zoonancy, 1710
Divine, Father Major Jealous, 429
Divine Life Society, 429–430
Divine Name, The, 430
Divine World, 430
Diviners
Ariolists, 87
Mullins, John, 1069
Sethos, 1389
Tunisa, 1592
Divining Rod, 430–433
communication between living and dead, 315
Jachowski, Jan, 817
rhapsodomancy, 1308
table-turning, 1523
Division of Personality Studies, 1523
University of Virginia, 433
Divs, 434, 624
Dixon, Jean, 434
astrology, 109
Montgomery, Ruth, 1050
prophecy, 1244
Russia, 1334
Secrets of Fatima, 1380
Djemshedd, The Cup of, 434–435
Djunal Khul, Master, 435
Aquarian Foundation, 82
Ascended Masters, 92
Bailey, Alice A., 144
Koot Hoomi, Master (Kuthumi), 875–874
Masters, 988
Tibetan, 1572
Tibetan Foundation, 1572
Doane, Doris Chase, 435
D’Owenic, Michael. See Williamson, George Hunt
Dobronravov, S. N., 185, 1334
Dobyns, Zipparoth, 435–436
Kepler College of Astrological Arts and Sciences, 856
Pottinger, Maritha, 1231
“Doctor.” 436
Dodds, Eric Robertson, 436
Dorotna, Oracle of, 663, 1146–1147
Dogen, 436
Dogon People, 437
Dogs
animals, 57
Gaelon, 675
Guinefort, St., 675 howling of, 817
second sight, 1379
Doinel, Jules-Benoit, 436
Ecclesia Gnostica Alba, 467
Gnostic Catholic Church, 646
Metzger, Herman Joseph, 1092
World League of Illuminati, 1687
Donmeyer, Frederick (Charles), 437
Don Juan, 253, 437
Donahue, Phil, 964
Donn, 438
Donnars, Jacques, 438
Donnelly, Ignatius, 438
Atlantis, 113
comets, 312
pyramids, 1266
Ragnarok, 1274
DOP. See Dermo-Optical Perception
Dorcas, Maurice, 221, 438
Doten, Elizabeth, 438
Double, 438–441. See also Dream Body: Ethereal double
apparitions, 66
astral body, 100 fetch, 556–557
Ka, 815
out-of-the-body-travel, 1160
reincarnation, 1301
second sight, 1379
Vardogt, 1627
Wraith, 1688
Double Blind, 442
Double Triangle, 960
Doubt (Magazine), 442
Douce, Joseph, 442
D’Ourches, Comte, 442, 1467
Dow, Freeman B., 1283, 1327
Dowden, Hester (Mrs. Travers-Smith), 442–443
Bond, Frederick Bligh, 201–202
communication (between living and dead), 316
control, 329, 330, 331
Edinburgh College of Parapsychology, 475
Glastonbury Scripts, 543
identity, 777
luminous phenomena, 943
mediums, 1015
ouija board, 1158
psychometry, 1257
Dowding, Hugh Caswall Tremenheere, 443
Dowling, Lady Muriel, 443
Dowling, Levi H., 443–444, 1610
Dowsing, 444
Aaron’s Rod, 1
American Society of Dowsers, 445
Canadian Society of Questers, 446
divination, 428–433
ephemeron, 443
Geller, Uri, 625–626
Irish Society of Diviners, 808
magnetometer, 966
Marion, Frederick, 980
Radiesthesia, 1272–1273
Reese, Bert, 1296
Rhabdic Force, 1308
Russia, 1334–1335
Tomp, S. W., 1389
Doyle, Sir Arthur Conan, 445–446
Bailey, Charles, 145
Besterman, Theodore, 178
Bird, J. Malcolm, 180–187
Bozanno, Ernesto, 208
Brittain, Annie, 218
British Memorial Institute and Library, 219
Centralino Scotto, Marquis Carlo, 264
clairvoyance, 300
coincidence, 306
control, 329
Coke, Grace, 335
Cottingley fairies, 342–344
Curnow, W. Leslie, 365
Davenport Brothers, 378
Deane, Ada Emma, 383
Dickens, Charles, 415
Dingwall, E. J., 418
direct voice, 420
ectoplasm, 470, 471
England, 509
fairies, 537
fiction, English occult, 558
Fodor, Nandor, 576
Ford, Arthur (Augustus), 577
fraud, 602
Glastonbury Scripts, 643
Hall, Trevor H., 685
Harris, Bertha, 693
Hog, William, 743
Houdini, Harry, 748
International Spiritualists Federation, 803
Jastrow, Joseph, 297
Johnson, Mrs. Roberts, 834
Jonson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B., 834
“King, John,” 862
Lord, Maud E., 936
magicians, 964
Marriott, William S., 981
Mary Celests, 985
mediums, 1013, 1016
Munnings, Frederick T., 1069
Phillimore, William, 1207
Piddington, J. G., 1210
Powell, Ellis T., 1232
psychic museums, 1253
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Entry</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1249</td>
<td>psychical research</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1249</td>
<td>psychometry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1249</td>
<td>Randies, Jenny</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1249</td>
<td>Reese, Bert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1249</td>
<td>reincarnation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1301</td>
<td>rescue circles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1283</td>
<td>Society for Psychical Research</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1258</td>
<td>Society for the Study of Supernormal Pictures, The</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1465</td>
<td>Spiritualism, 1465, 1466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1471</td>
<td>Spiritualism—Great Britain</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1513</td>
<td>Swaffer, Hannen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1339</td>
<td>telepathy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1619</td>
<td>Valentine, George</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1666</td>
<td>White Eagle Lodge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1283</td>
<td>Randies, Jenny</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1296</td>
<td>Reese, Bert</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1301</td>
<td>reincarnation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1305</td>
<td>rescue circles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1283</td>
<td>Drown, Ruth B.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1454</td>
<td>Abrams, Albert, 5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1680</td>
<td>Leary, Timothy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1140</td>
<td>mushrooms, 1073</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1140</td>
<td>witches ointment, 1140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>637</td>
<td>Druidism, 456–457</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>116</td>
<td>Aubrey, John, 116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>447</td>
<td>Birg, 187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>260</td>
<td>Dalsan, 373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>721</td>
<td>Henge of Kehtria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1144</td>
<td>IMBAS, 780</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1122</td>
<td>nightmares, 1122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1503</td>
<td>Shelta Thari, 1398</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1575</td>
<td>Toland, John, 1575</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1563</td>
<td>Wales, 1645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>893</td>
<td>Drum, Magic</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>457–458</td>
<td>Drummer of Tedworth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>642</td>
<td>Glanvill, Joseph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>694</td>
<td>polyergusit, 1225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1368</td>
<td>ras, 1286</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>557–558</td>
<td>Du Maurier, Daphne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>462</td>
<td>Du Potet de Sennevoy, Baron</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Durville, Hector</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Durville, Henri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Elliotson, John</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>453</td>
<td>France, 594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>839–839</td>
<td>Journal du Magnetisme et du Psychisme Experimental</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>959</td>
<td>magic, 959</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>963</td>
<td>Maginot, Adèle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>462</td>
<td>Du Prel, Baron Carl</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>632</td>
<td>Germany, 652</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1171</td>
<td>Palladino, Eusapia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Du-Sith, 463</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>648</td>
<td>Dual Personality, 458</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1388</td>
<td>Duly, William Ralph</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1388</td>
<td>Ducaise, (Court) (John, 458–459</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>460</td>
<td>Duguid, David, 459–460</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>275</td>
<td>automatic speaking, 127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>275</td>
<td>chemical phenomena in séances, 275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>418</td>
<td>direct drawing and painting, 418, 419</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>420</td>
<td>direct voice, 419</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>608</td>
<td>French, Mrs. E. J.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>834</td>
<td>Johnson, Mrs. Roberts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1011</td>
<td>mediums, 1011</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1679</td>
<td>Myers, Frederick William Henry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1198</td>
<td>perfumes, 1198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1223–1224</td>
<td>Podmore, Frank</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1469</td>
<td>Spiriutalism—Great Britain</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>175, 460</td>
<td>Dukes, Sir Paul</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>597</td>
<td>Dumas, Alexandre</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1522</td>
<td>table-turning, 1522</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>460</td>
<td>Dumas, Andre Adolphe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>460</td>
<td>Duncan, Helen Victoria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>475</td>
<td>Edinburgh College of Parapsychology</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>567</td>
<td>fortunate-telling, 582</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>599</td>
<td>Fraser, David (Fraser)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>693</td>
<td>Harris, Alec</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>984</td>
<td>magicians, 984</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1297</td>
<td>materializations, 998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1297</td>
<td>regurgitation, 1297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1471</td>
<td>Spiritualism—Great Britain</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>461</td>
<td>dreams, 451, 452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1144</td>
<td>oneiromancy, 1144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1573</td>
<td>time, 1573</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>461–462</td>
<td>Dunwich, Gerina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>108, 462</td>
<td>Dupuis, Charles Francois</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Durand, 463</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Durville, Gaston</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Durville, Henri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Durville, Marie-François (Hector)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>De Potet de Sennevoy, Baron</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>446</td>
<td>Durville, Gaetan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Durville, Henri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>489</td>
<td>electric phenomena, 489</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1641</td>
<td>Duvalier, Jean-Claude</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>463</td>
<td>Dyer, Walter (William)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Dyer, Wayne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>464</td>
<td>Dyer, Wayne, 13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>464</td>
<td>Dykshoorn, Marinus Bernardus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>464–466</td>
<td>Dynamograph, 464</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>465</td>
<td>E. F. Benson Society, The</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>108</td>
<td>Eakins, Duane L.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>465</td>
<td>EBS Magazine, 465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>465</td>
<td>Earth Laid upon a Corpse, 465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>466</td>
<td>Earth Religion News Magazine, 466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>466</td>
<td>Earth spirits</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>468</td>
<td>Ebert, Reinhold</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>466</td>
<td>Eks, Duane L.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1063</td>
<td>Ehrlich, Alfred</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>466</td>
<td>Ehli (or Ilhli), 466</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1334</td>
<td>Ehon, Martin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>467</td>
<td>Ecclesia Gnosiatica Alba, 467</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>467</td>
<td>Ech-uisque, 467</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>467</td>
<td>ECKANKAR, 467–468</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1272</td>
<td>Radhausoami Satsang, 1272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1449</td>
<td>Soul Travel, 1449</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1599</td>
<td>Twitchell, Paul</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1599</td>
<td>Eckartshausen, Karl von</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1381</td>
<td>Ecstatic Theosophist, 1381</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>468</td>
<td>Edclesia Catolica Criatiana, 468</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>468</td>
<td>Ecosomatic Experiences, 468</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Enchiridion of Pope Leo III, The, 502, 592
End of the World, 502–503
Adelphi Organization, 10
Annaus de Viterbo, 58
Endless Cord, Tying Knots in, 502
Endor, Witch of, 503–504
Energy
bioplasma, 186

Eis, 269
Elberfeld Horses, 486–487
animals, 57
Gruber, Karl, 672
telepathy, 1538
Elder Tree, 487
Eldred, Charles, 487–488, 998
Eleazar of Garniza, 488
Electric Girls, 488–489
Electric Phenomena, 488–489
Electrobiology, 489
Electromagnetism, 165
Electronic Medicine. See Radionics
Electronic Video Phenomenon, 489
Electronic Voice Phenomenon (EVP), 489
communication between living and dead, 314
Jürgenson, Friedrich, 842–843
Raudive, Konstantin, 1279
voices (paranormal), 1639
Electronics, 489. See also Radionics
Electropsychometer. See E-Meter
Electrum, 489
Elementals, 489. See also Nature Spirits
Elementary Spirits, 490–491
Enochian calls, 511
Rosicrucians, 1327
Eliezar, 489
Eleazar, 491
Eliad, Mircea, 491
Eis, 492
Eliot, George, 205
Elixir of Life, 492–493
soma, 1455
transmutation of the body, 1385
Elixir (universal balm), 1610
Elizabeth I (England)
astrology, 109
Bacon, Francis, 141
Windsor Castle, 1676
wrath, 1688
Elkins, Donald T., 493, 927–928
Ellide, 493
Elliotson, John, 493–494
De Potet de Semnevoy, Baron, 462
Dickens, Charles, 415
Esdaile, James, 515
Home, Daniel Dunglas, 739
hypnotism, 765
Mesmer, Franz Anton, 1028
metals in animal magnetism, 1030
O’Key sisters, Jane and Elizabeth, 1140
phreno-mesmerism, 1208
Spiritual Atheism, 1462
Spiritualism, 1465
Thackeray, William Makepeace, 1554
Zazel, 1709
Elliot, G(áme) Maurice, 494, 1323–1324
Ellis, Havelock, 89, 186
Elyn Tree, 494
“Elfo de Enfer,” 494
Elohim Journal (Magazine), 494
Elonization of the Human Body, 494–495
Elves, 299
Elvis, 496
Elymas the Sorcerer, 502
Emanations, 503–504
aural, 117–118
Buchanan, Joseph Rhodes, 225–226
Reichenbach, Baron Karl von, 1298
Emants, Marcellus, 499
Emerald, 500
Emerald Table (of Hermes), The, 500
Emerson, Ralph Waldo, 1115
E-Meter, 500
Emissaries of Divine Light, 500
Emma, 500–501
Emmanuel, 501
Emmerich, (Anne) Catherine, 501
automatic speaking, 127
Germany, 652
levitation, 909
veronica, 1633
Encausse, Gérard, 502
Davidson, Peter, 379
direct writing, 424
Dömel, Jules-Benoit, 437
Gnostic Catholic Church, 646
Krumm-Heller, Arnoldo, 879
l’Ovrdé Kabbalistique de la Rose Croix, 936
magic, 959
Miller, Charles Victor, 1037
Papus, 1176
Saint-Martin, Louis Claude de, 1340–1341
tarot, 1533

Enchantment
Agaberte, 15–16
Armida, 87
Brusin, 217
Fairy Stroke, 538
Greece, 604
Medea, 1007
Merlin, 1024
Yadageri, 1695

Eschatology, 502
Triad Group, 1588
UFO abduction, 2
von Däniken, Erich, 1640
Eye-Biters, 533
Eyeless Sight, 533–534
Kuda Bux, 879–880
Kuleshova, Rosa, 881
parapptic vision, 1187
Romanus, Jules, 1520
Russia, 1534
transposition of the senses, 1585
Eyes
  dreaming, 451
  materializations, 991
  oculomancy, 1137
  onyx, 1144
REM, 1304
Eysenck, Hans Juregen, 534

F
F, Marion Crawford Memorial Society, 555
Fabre, Pierre Jean, 555
Faculty of Astrological Studies, 10, 535
Faculty X, 535
Fagail, 535
Fagan, Cyril, 209, 535–536
Fahler, Jarl Ingmar, 536–537
Fairfield, Edward, 536
Fairfield, Francis Gerry
  aura, 118
  movement, paranormal, 1066
Fairies, 536–537
Cottingley Fairies, 342–344
Evans-Wentz, Walter Y(eeling), 524–525
Fagail, 535
Gruagach, 672
Harris, Thomas Lake, 695
hobgoblins, 728–729
Kobolds, 870
Leanan Sidhe, 899
Melusina, 1022
Fairlamb, Annie
  See Mellon, Annie
  Fairlamb
Fairlamb, Annie
  See Mellon, Annie
  Fairlamb
Fairy Investigation Society, 538
Fair Myths, The (Thomas Keightley), 1070–1071
Fairy Stroke, 538
Faith Healing, 558
Faithist Journal. See The Searcher
Fakirs, 538–539
Falcomer, Marco Tullio, 559
  Bailey, Charles, 145
  Italy, 813
Lombroso, Cesare, 932
Falconet, Noel, 559
Falk, Samuel Jacob Chayyim, 539–540
Falls, 540
False Memory Syndrome, 540–541, 1548
False Memory Syndrome Foundation, 541–542
Fahm Gong, 542–549
Qi, 1267
Qigong, 1268
Zhong Gong, 1707
Falwell, Jerry, 1307
Familiars, 542–543
Agathion, 16
Agrippa von Nettesheim, Henry
  Cornelius, 17
  Orton, 1155
Family, The, 543–544
Fancher, Mollie, 544
mediums, 1013
Fantasmagoriana, 544
Faul, Kurt, 544
Farabi. See Alfarabi
Faraday, Michael, 544–545
  Chevreul, Michel Eugene, 276
  Crosland, Camilla, 358
  Home, Daniel Dunglas, 739
  psychical research, 1247
  table-turning, 1521
Farakou Data Base, 545
Farmer, John S., 205, 1002
Farr, Florence, 545–546
  Horniman, Annie, 746
  magic, 959
Farrar, Janet, 546, 1681
Farrar, Stewart, 546, 1681
Farrow, Mia, 1295, 1583
Fascination, 547–548
Fascinum, 548
Fasse, Paul M., 1629
Fat of the Sorcerers, 548
Fate, 1662
FAFE (Magazine), 548–549
Father Divine, See Divine, Father
  Major Jealous
Father’s House, 549
Fatima, 549–550
  apparitions of the Virgin Mary, 74
  Secrets of Fatima, 1379–1380
Faullkner, William, 1286
Faust, 550, 631, 632
  Faust (Johann Wolfgang von Goethe), 649–650
Fawcett, Colonel Percy Harrison, 551
  Fay, Annie Eva, 551
  Crookes, Sir William, 355
  Fay, William M., 552
  materializations, 989, 993, 995
  seances, 1573
  Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
  Fay, Mrs. H. B., 552
  Fay, William M., 377–378, 552
  Fchner, Gustav Theodore
  Gaia hypothesis, 615
  Reichenbach, Baron Karl von, 1298
  Seybert Commission, 1393
  Zollner, Johann C. F., 1709
  “Feda.”, 552, 862
Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), 1363
Federation of Spiritual Churches and Associations, 552
Feedback, 184–185, 552
Feet, Divination by, 252
Feudling, (Francis) (Henry) Everard, 552 bleeding states, 197
  Carrington, Hereward, 251
  Palladino, Eusapia, 1172, 1173
  Perovsky-Petrov-Solovovo, Count, 1199
Tomczyk, Stanislawa, 1576
Felix Morrow
Wilson, John C., 1675
Fellowship for Readers of The URANTIA Book, 552–553
Fellowship of Isis, 553, 1315
Fellowship of Ma-Ion, 6, 553
Fellowship of the Inner Light, 553–554
Fellowship of Universal Guidance, 554 Fellowships
  Centre House, 263
  Cliches’ Fellowship of Psychical and Spiritual Studies, The, 288
  Circle Sanctuary, 296
  First Church of Satan, 568
  Lotus Ashram, 937
  Morse Fellowship, 1057
Fendeurs, 554
Feng-shui, 554–555, 628
Fennel, 555
Feda, Jose M(aria), 555
Feraferia, 555
Féré, Charles
  aura, 118
  autokospy, 132
  psychic force, 1252
Ferguson, Rev. Jesse Babcock, 555
  Davenport Brothers, 377, 378
  materializations, 989
  mediums, 1015
  movement, paranormal, 1064
  teleportation, 1452
Ferguson, Marilyn, 555–556
Aquarian Conspiracy, The (Book), 81
Leading Edge: A Bulletin of Social Transformation, 899
New Sense, 1114
Fern, 556
Fernández, José (Salvador), 556
Argentina, 85
Instituto Argentino de Parapsicología, 796
Ferrarius (or Efferariaus or Eufarius), 556
Festivals
  All Hallow’s Eve, 29–30
  ass, 95
  Germany, 630
  Greece, 663, 664–665
  gypsies, 680
  Japan, 823
  Kumbha Mela, 881
  Mind-Body-Spirit Festival, 1038
  Psychics & Mystics Fayre, 1254
  Rome (Ancient), 1321
  Sabbath, 1357
  Trivah, 1589
  witchcraft, 1681
Fetch, 556–557
apparitions, 66
witchcraft, 1688
Fetishism, 557.
  See also Amulets
  Mexico, 1035
  Siberia, 1405
Fey, 557
Fiction, English Occult, 557–560
Fields Within Fields (Journal), 560
Fifth Epochal Fellowship, 560
Figuier, Louis (Guillaume), 560
  alchemy, 24–25
  Athotus, 35
vitality, 1638
Ford, Arthur Augustus, 577–578
Cartheuser, William, 252
Clairaudience, 297
control, 328
Houdini, Harry, 748
International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, 802–803
Mitchell, Edgar D., 1043
Montgomery, Ruth, 1050
Moon, Sun Myung, 1051–1052
Pike, James A., 1213
posthumous letters, 1251
Spiritualism—United States, 1476–1477
Forehead Wrinkles, 581
divination by, 1031
reading character by, 1031
Foretelling future
aeromancy, 12
Almogamines, 32
prevision, 1238
second sight, 1378
Forman, Simon, 578
Formative Causation, 579, 1054
Forrest, Stephen, 579
Fort, Charles (Hoy), 580
angel's hair, 34
Book of the Damned, 203–204
cattle mutilations, 256
Center for Scientific Anomalies Research, 261
Chaos: The Review of the Damned, 272 coincidence, 306
Devil’s Jelly, 411
disappearances, 425, 426
Doubt magazine, 442
ET, 519
falls, 540
Fortean News, The, 580
Fortean Society, 580
Fortean Times, 580
INFO (journal), 789
International Fortean Organization, 799
Journal of Scientific Exploration, 839
Keel, John A., 832
metempsychosis, 1030
naphology, 1088
Paran Journal, 1264
Sanderson, Ivan Tereence, 1343
Society for the Investigation of the Unexplained, 1430 Strange Magazine, 1500
vestigia, 1654
Fortean News, The (Journal), 580
Fortean phenomena, 1305
Falls, 540
naphology, 1088
Fortean Society, 580
ET, 519
unidentified flying objects and the occult, 1605
Fortean Times (Journal), 580
Forteana (Periodical), 581
Fortuny, Pascal, 581
psychometry, 1258
Revue Spirit, 1308
Fortune, Dion, 581
Ashcroft-Nowicki, Delores, 93
Brodie-Innes, John William, 220
Glastonbury, 643
Isle of Avalon Foundation, 810
London Group, 934
New Dimensions, 1111
Norton, Rosalind, 1125
Servants of the Light, 1388
Stella Matutina (Order of the Morning Star), 1492
Fortune-Telling, 581–582
Aeromancy, 12
Elisha, 485
La Voisin, 896–897
Le Normand, Marie-Anne
Adelaide, 906
tassography, 1535
by tea leaves, 1536
Forum Newsletter (Association for Death Education and Counseling), 582
Forwald, Haakon Gabriel, 583
Scandinavia, 1534
Sweden, 1515
Foster, Charles H., 582–583
Chambers, Robert, 268
dermography, 402
identity, 777
levitation, 914
materializations, 991
pellet reading, 1193
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
Spiritualism—United States, 1475
Foster, Esther Bond, 583
Foundation Church of the Divine Truth, 583–584
Foundation Church of the New Birth, 584
Foundation Faith of God, 584
Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man (FRNM). See Rhine Research Center Foundations
American Parapsychological Research Foundation, 42
Anthropological Research Foundation, 60
Archaeus Project, 85
Belk Psychic Research Foundation, 166
Borderland Sciences Research Foundation, 206
California Parapsychology Foundation, 242
Circle of Power Spiritual Foundation, 295
Course in Miracles, Foundation for, 584–585
Dance of the Deer Foundation, 518
ESP Research Associates Foundation, 517
Essene Foundation, The, 517
False Memory Syndrome Foundation, 541–542
George Adamski Foundation, 629
Gurdjieff Foundation of California, 677
Inner Circle Kethra E’Da Foundation, 791
Inner Light Foundation, 791
Inner Peace, Foundation for, 585
Isle of Avalon Foundation, 810
Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.  General Index

Joseph Plan Foundation, 838
Koessler Foundation, 871–872
Kundalini Research Foundation, Ltd. (KRF), 883
Lama Foundation, 887
Light of Divine Truth Foundation, 922
Mankind Research Foundation, Ltd. (KRF), 883
Lama Foundation, 974
Mark Probert Memorial Foundation, 980
MetaScience Foundation, 1030
Mind-Being Research Foundation, for, 585
Mind Research, Foundation for, 585–586, 986
New Age World Religious and Scientific Research Foundation, 1108
Ojai Foundation, 1140
Parapsychology Foundation, 1185
Psychical Research Foundation, Inc., 1250
Reincarnation and Spiritual Research, Foundation for, 586
Research on the Nature of Man, Foundation for, 1309
SRU, 1483
Stuart Research Foundation, 1512
Synchronicity Foundation, 1520
3HO Foundation, 1569
Tibetan Foundation, 1572
TOM Religious Foundation, 1576
Universal Harmony Foundation, 1611
Yoga Research Foundation, Inc., 1700–1701
Founding Church of Scientology. See Scientology, Church of Fountain of the World Fellowship. See WFLK Fountain of the World
Fountain Spirits, 586
Fourth Dimension, 586
Fourth Way, 586–587
Gurdjieff, George Ivanowitch, 676
Gurdjieff Studies Group, 677
Institute for the Development of the Harmonious Human Being, 794
Institute Magazine, 794
International Academy for Continuous Education, 797
Fowler, Edward P., 587, 1117
Fowler, Lottie, 587
France French Spiritualism, 597
Hellenbach, Baron Lazar De Bazozlay, 718
materializations, 987
Moses, William Stanton, 1058
Spiritualism—France, 1467
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
teleportation, 1542
Fowler, Raymond, 3, 50
Fox, George, 587
movement, paranormal, 1061
time, 1573
voices (paranormal), 1639
Fox, Leah, 316
Fox, Marietta Newton, 587–588
Fox, Oliver, 588, 732. See also Callaway, Hugh G.
Fox, Selena, 588
Circle Network News, 294
Circle Sanctuary, 296
Fox Sisters, Kate (Catherine) and Margaretta, 588–591
Aksakof, Alexander N., 20
automatic writing, 130
Benedict, Mrs., 168
Buchanan, Joseph Rhodes, 226
Chambers, Robert, 228 communication (between living and dead), 229
Crookes, Sir William, 355
Davenport Brothers, 377
direct writing, 422
Esclimos, 516
Fish, Ann Leah, 569
Foster, Charles H., 583
Greeley, Horace, 666 hands of spirits, 689 healing, psychic, 710
Holland, 752
Home, Daniel Dunglas, 740
Hydesville, 758
Kane, Elisha Kent, 849
luminous phenomena, 944
magicians, 962–963
Maps, James Jay, 977
materializations, 987, 996
mediums, 1011, 1013, 1015, 1016
movement, paranormal, 1065
New York Circle, 1117
raps, 1286, 1287
Rayleigh, Lord, 1292
Rochester Rappings, 1316
Seybert Commission, 1393
Society for Psychical Research, 1428
Spiritualism, 1464
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
Spiritualism—United States, 1471–1476
Splitfoot, 1480
Strutt, John William, 1502
table-turning, 1521
Tallmadge, Nathaniel Pitcher, 1528
Thackeray, William Makepeace, 1554
Underhill, Leah, 1603
Varley, Cromwell Fleetwood, 1628
Fragarach (The Answerer), 591

Freemasonry, 606
Mesmer, Franz Anton, 1026, 1027
“Old Moore,” 1142
trance personalities, 1582
Franklyn, Julian, 599
Fraser-Harris, David (Fraser), 599
Fraternitas L. V. X. Occulta, 599
Fraternitas Rosae Crucis, 599–600
Fraternitas Saturni, 600, 1350
Fraternity of the Inner Light. See
Society of the Inner Light
Framingham, 804
Abbott, David P., 2
apports, 76
Aristaeus, 87
Bacon, Francis, 1700–1701
Bans sisters, 150–151
Beare, Charles Albert, 163
Burri, Joseph-Francois, 206–207
Boursnell, Richard, 208
Cagliostro, 238–240
Carrington, Hereward, 251
Cook, Florence, 354–355
Cradock, Frederick G. Foster, 349
Davenport Brothers, 377
Davey, S. T., 378
De La Warr, George, 393
Dene, Ada Emma, 383
Dingwall, E. J., 418
direct drawing and painting, 419
direct writing, 423
double, 439
Drowne, B. R., 455
Duncan, Helen Victoria, 460–461
ectoplasm, 470
Eglin, William, 479
Eldred, Charles, 487–488
evolution of the human body, 495
evidence, 525–526
Foster, Charles H., 582–583
Geley, Gustav, 625
Gordon, Henry C., 655
Guzek, Jan, 679
Hodgson, Richard, 729–730
Horos, Theodore and Laura, 746
Jonson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B., 837
Laslo, Laslo, 895
magicians, 962
Mahatma letters, 968
Marriott, William S., 981
Martinez, Louis, 984
materializations, 987
McDougall, William, 1005
mediums, 1012
Mellon, Anne Fairlamb, 1021
Melzer, Heinrich, 1092
metal bending, 1092, 1030
Miller, Charles Victor, 1037
Mirabelli, (Carmine) Carlos, 1041
Monck, Rev. Francis Ward, 1046
Morgawr, 1053
Moses, William Stanton, 1058
movement, paranormal, 1061
Mumler, William H., 1070
Munnings, Frederick T., 1070–1071
nephography, 1100
new motor, 1113
Nielsen, Einer, 1121
occult, 1136
Olcott, Henry Steel, 1141
Otani, Soji, 1158
Palladino, Eusapia, 1171–1173
parapsychology, 1182–1183
Patterson, Mrs. S. E., 1191
Perovsky-Petrovo-Solovovo, Count, 1199
Pike, James A., 1213
plastics, 1221
Randi, James, 1281–1282
raps, 1296
regurgitation, 1297
Rita, A., 1313–1314
Rothe, Frau Anna, 1328–1329
Samorin, S. F., 1342
Schneider Brothers, Willi, 1357
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert von, 1360
Scott, Christopher O. D., 1371
scéance, 1373
Serios, Ted, 1387
Seybert Commission, 1395
Showers, Mary, 1403–1404
Slade, Henry, 1415, 1416
slate writing, 1416–1417
Soal, S. G., 1426
Star, Elly, 1485 star-tabling, 1522
teleportation, 1542
Tenaheff, Wilhelm Heinrich Carl, 1550
Theosophical Society, 1558
thesepurgy, 1559
thought-transference, 1567
trance, 1579, 1581
Trevison, Bernard of, 1587–1588
trumpet, 1590
United States, 1473–1476, 1477
Valantine, George, 1619
Williams, Charles, 1672
Wood, C. E., 1684
Wylie, Edward, 1689
Zöllner, Johann C. F., 1709
Frazer, Sir James George
apparitions, 63
magic, 957–958
Free Daist Communion, 604, 835–836
Free Spirit: Resources for Personal and Social Transformation (Directory), 607 Freeman, John Albert, 604
Freemasonry, 604–607
Adaptive Masonry, 11
African Architects, Order of, 15
Cagliostro, 238
Clavel, F. T. B., 302
devil-worship, 413
Germany, 631–632
Gnosticism, 643
Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of the, 651
Gormogons vs., 655
Grand Lodge of England, 659
Harodim, 693
Jacob’s Ladder, 820
Jogand-Pagès, Gabriel, 832
Lost Word of Kabalism, 937
Mackey, Albert Gallatin, 952
Mopose, Order of the, 1092
Rosen, Samuel Paul, 1323
Saint Germain, Comte de, 1359
secret tradition, 1381
Vaughan, Diana, 1629
Waite, Arthur Edward, 1643
Freer, Ada Goodrich, 250–251
Frei, Gebhard, 607, 1518
Freie Interessengemeinschaft für Grenz- und Genetewissenschaften und Ufologie-Studien, 607–608
French, Mrs. E. J., 418, 608
French, Emily S., 608
direct voice, 421
Randall, Edward Caleb, 1281
rescue circles, 1505
Frew, Signe, 608
Barbault, André, 155 bio-rhythm, 186
Charcot, Jean Martin, 272
dreams, 452
dual personality, 458
Janet, Pierre, 822
Jung, Carl Gustav, 842
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1078
Reich, Wilhelm, 1297
symbolism, 1519
Fria Rush, 608
Frck, Harvey Lee, 608–609
Fricker, Edward G., 609
Friendly Contacts Associates, 609
Friends in New Directions. See The Institute for Consciousness Research Friends of the Garden Central Seed Centre, 609, 617
Friends of Running Park, 609
Friends of the Wisdom Religion, 609
Friendship Centre, The, 610
FRNM, See Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man
FRNM Bulletin, 610
Fromczek, Janusz, 610
Frontiers of Science Newsletter, 610
Frost, Gavin, 610
Frost, Yvonne, 610–611
Fry, Daniel, 611
contactees, 325–326
Understanding Magazine, 1603
Fu-Manchu, 1650
Fukurai, Tomohichi, 611
Japan, 825
spirit photography, 1461
thoughtforms, 1565
thought photography, 1566
Fuller, Curtis, 611
FATE (Magazine), 548–549
Palmer, Raymond Alfred, 611, 1174
Serios, Ted, 1387
Fuller, Jean (Violet) Overton, 611, 612
Fuller, John (Violet) (Charles), 611–612
A.:A.: 1
Fuller, Jean (Violet) Overton, 612
UFO abduction, 2
Fuller, Willard, 612
dentistry, psychic, 399
healing by faith, 712
Lively Stones World Healing Fellowship, Inc., 927
Fumigation (in Exorcism), 612–613
Fund for UFO Research, 3, 615
Fung Hwang, 615
Funk, Dr. Isaac Kaufmann, 613
Bangs Sisters, Lizzie and May, 150
direct voice, 421
Fox Sisters, Kate, 591
French, Emily S., 608
identity, 777
Zollner, Johann C. F., 1709
Furies, The, 664
Furley, Horace Howard
Mansfield, J. V., 976
Patterson, Mrs. S. E., 1191
Seybert Commission, 1395
Fund, Phyllis
Rand, William, 1280–1281
Reiki, 1299
Takata, Hawayo, 1526
G
Gabalis, Comte de, 1009
Gabriel (angel), 52, 53, 206
Gadbury, John, 615, 1188
Gagates, 615
Gala, 615
Gala Hypothesis, 615
Gallaghe, Robert (Carroll), 616
Galleto, Marzio (or Martinus), 616
Galigai, Leonora, 616
Galileos, 1042
Gallagher, Christina, 616–617
Gallagher, Danny, 617, 1392
Gandall’s Garden, 617
Gandillon Family (Pierre, Georges Antoinette, Perrenette), 617
Ganguy, Sachindra Nath, 617–618
Ganzfeld Setting, 618, 1386
Garabandal, 74, 618–619
Garatronicus, 619
“Garden of Pomegranates,” 619
Gardner, F(rederick) L(eigh), 1386
Gardnerian Revival, 1646
Gardnerian, John, 1116
Gastronomics, 619
“The Garden of Pomegranates,” 619
Garrison, (Magazine), 548–549
Freedom from Exorcism, 619–620
Aradia, 83
athame, 112
Book of Shadows, 203
Buckland, Raymond Brian, 226
Druidism, 457
equinox, 513
Esbat, 515
Farrar, Janet, 546
Farrar, Stewart, 546
flagellation, 570
fortune-telling, 582
Fox, Selena, 588
Gardnerian Revival, 1646
Italy, 813
Lawrence Museum of Magic and Witchcraft, 897
Leek, Sybil, 903
Museum of Magic and Witchcraft, 1073
New Reformed Orthodox Order of the Golden Dawn, 1113
New Wiccan Church, 1116
Krumm-Heller, Arnoldo, 879
Metzger, Herman Joseph, 1032
New Isis Lodge, 1112
Ordo Templi Orientis (Grant), 1152
Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO), 1153
Ordo Templi Orientis (Roanoke, Virginia), 1153
sex magic, 1392
Society Ordo Templi Orientis, 1154
World League of Illuminati, 1687
Gervais, Bishop, 633
GESP (General Extrasensory Perception), 637
Gestefeld, Ursula Newell, 634
Ghadiali, Dinshah Pestanj, 634
Gersh, Indira, 1118–1119
Gilbert, Robert Andrew, 919
Gilbert, Mostyn, 638
Gilhool, Elsa, 1705
Gichtel, John Georg, 216
Gibson, Edmund Paul, 1064
Gibran, Kahlil, 683
Gidney, William "Starets,", 638
Gidney, Gabrielle, 638
Gidlow, Elsa, 1705
Gifford, Ellen Hovde, 638
Gilbert, Mostyn, 638
Gilbert, Robert (Atnaress), 638, 1643
Gill, Madge, 639
Gillespie, William Hewitt, 641
Gimingham, 641–642
Girard, Jean-Baptiste, 642
Gjaldali, Dinshah Pestanj, 286
Gladen, The Root of, 642
Gladstone, William Ewart, 642
Eglinton, William, 479–480
Tweedale, Violet, 1598
Victoria, Queen, 1634
Glamourie, 642
Glanvil, Joseph, 642
drummer of Tedworth, 457–458
fiction, English occult, 557
Greatrakes, Valentine, 662
gypsies, 680–681
levitation, 912
poltergeists, 1226
raps, 1286
Glas Ghasem, 642
Gaskin, G(erald) M(arcus), 286, 642
Gastonbury, 643, 658
Gastonbury Scripts, 643
Gastonbury Zodiac, 643–644
Glauber, Johann Rudolph, 644
Glaumer, Adam, 1378, 1569
Glosopetra (or Gulosus), 644
Glossolalia, 644. See also Tongues, Speaking in Glottologues, 644
Gloucester, Duchess of (Eleanor Cobham), 644
The Gnome Club of Great Britain. See Gnomes Anonymous
Gnomes. See Gnomes Anonymous
Gnomes Anonymous
Gnomes. See Elementary spirits
Gnomes Anonymous, 644
Gnomes International, 644
Gnosis, 644–645
Gnosis Association for Multidisciplinary Research on the Hypothesis of Survival, 645
Gnostic Alchemical Church of Typhon-Christ, 645–646
Gnostic Association of Cultural and Anthropological Studies, 646
Gnostic Catholic Church, 646
Gnostic Order of Christ, 647–648
Gnostic Society, 1245
Gnosteca (Journal), 645
Gnosticism, 647
Abrazas, 5
ackhney, 631
Basilidians, 160
Brotherhood of the White Temple, 221
Carpocratians, 250
Crucifixion, Gnostic Conception of, 361–362
demonology, 396
freemasonry, 604
Germany, 631–682
Gnostic Alchemical Church of Typhon—Christ, 645
Guirrham, Arthur, 675
Hyle, 760
Immaculate Heart Servants of Mary, 780–781
Kabala (or Kabalah) or Cabalah or Cabala, 845–846
Kostka, Jean, 874
Mahatma letters, 968
Mead, G. R. S., 1006
metempsychosis, 1030–1031
Ophites, 1145
Path of Gnostic Light, 1190–1191
reincarnation, 1300
Rosicrucians, 1327
Spells, 1454
Stella Maris Gnostic Church, 1492 universities, 1612
Goat, 648
Gobelin, 648
Barghest (or Barghest), 156
Cambridge, 244
Ech-ique, 647
spunkie, the, 1483
Goddess
Adonaii, 11
Albigenses, 21
Kabala, 845, 846
in occult perspective, 648
theaosophy, 1559
Timaeus of Locri, 1573
God-Patient Chiropractor system, 115
Goddesses
Allat (or Ellat), 29
Gaia, 615
Hecate, 716
Hel (or Hela), 717
Isan Nuis (Periodical), 809–810
kundalini, 654
Godfrey, N. S., 1521
Godfrey (or Gaufredi), 649
Golds
Abrazas (or Abrazacs), 5
Adonaii, 11
Greece, 663
Hades, 683
Hermes Trismegistus, 721–722
Imhotep, 780
oracles, 1146–1148
teraphim, 1550–1551
Zerenechos, 1705
Gods
Book of Remembrance, See Akashic Records
Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von, 649–650
automatic writing, 128
double, 440, 441
dreams, 450
Faust, 550
Germany, 632
Lewis, Matthew Gregory, 919
Steiner, Rudolf, 1491
Vardog, 1627
visions, 1637
Goldberg, Bruce, 650
Golden Age, 650
Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of the, 650–651
A.: A.:, 1
ceremonial magic, 266
gematria, 627
Gilbert, R. A., 658
grimoires, 669
Imatatina, Stella, 1492
Mathers, Moinga, 999
Mathers, S. L. MacGregor, 999, 999–1000
Order of the Cubic Stone, 1150
Ordo Rosae Rubeae et Aureae Crucis, 1151
Oxford Golden Dawn Occult Society, 1163
1866
Buddhism, 824
divination, 824 fire, 825
magic, 824
necromancy, 1098
possession by divinities, 823–824 psychical research and parapsychology, 825
religion, 825
Shelf of the August Spirits, 116
Shintoism, 823

Japanese Society for Parapsychology, 826, 1158
Japhet, Celina
Kardec, Allan, 851
reincarnation, 1301
Jaquin, Noel, 826
direct voice, 419
Valantine, George, 1619
Jarnan, Archibald Seymour, 826
Jarrioc, Jean, 826–827
Jasper, 827
Jasson, Mary, 828
Jaye, Charles, 827
Jean, 827
Jean d’Arras, 828
Jean de Metang (or Melun), 828
Jeanne D’Arc, St. (St. Joan of Arc), 828–829
France, 592
port with the Devil, 1167
visions, 1657
voices (paranormal), 1639
witchcraft, 1680
Jehovah’s Witnesses, 829–830, 1391
Jenken, H. D.
elongation of the human body, 493
materializations, 992
séances, 1374–1375
Jennings, Hargrave
Phrygian Cap, 1209
Rosicrucians, 1325
Temple Church, 1548
Jensen, Wiers, 830
Scandinavia, 1354
Vardegr, 1627
Jephson, Ina, 830, 1706
Jersey Devil, 830
Jesodoth, 830
Jespun, Moriz K.
Ancient Astronaut Society, 49
Philadelphia Experiment, 1024
unidentified flying objects and the occult, 1065
Jesus Christ
Abraxas, 5
Adalbert, 8
Aethierus Society, 12
Albigenses, 21
Antichrist, 61
ass that carried, 93–96
bleeding statues, 196–197
Book of the Penitence of Adam, 8
channeling, 270
crucifixion (Gnostic conception of), 362
Gallagher, Christina, 616
granny-wells, 659
Greater World Christian Spiritualist Association, 662
Jesus, Master vs., 830–831
Kowalska, Maria Faustina, 875
Lemurian Fellowship, 905
New Christian Church of Full Endeavor, 1109–1110 Order of the Cross, 1149 pictures on cloth, 6 resurrection, 1305
Santa Maria, 1344
Schuman, Helen, 1360–1361
secret words, 1382
spirit possession, 1130
stigmata, 1494–1495
Turin Shroud, 1592–1594
Veronica, 1633
WFLK Fountain of the World, 1664
Jesus, Master, 830–831
Aethierus Society, 12
Center of Universal Truth, 262–263
Jet, 615, 831
Jettatura, 831
Jinn, 831
Jinnistan, 831
Jinns
genus, 628
Malaysia, 971
unidentified flying objects and the occult, 1606
Jnana or Sankya Yoga, 1699
Jnana or Sankya Yoga, 1699
Joan of Arc, St. See Jeanne D’Arc, St.
Jobson, George
Ashkar-Jobson Trianion, 93
Jobson, Mary
Y-Kim, 1698
Jochai, Simon Ben
Ka, 846
Jogand-Pagés, Gabriel, 832
"Bataille, Dr.", 161
devil worship, 413
Freemasonry, 606
Kostka, Jean, 874
Mackey, Albert Gallatin, 952
Margiotta, Domenica, 979
Palladium, Order of, 1173–1174
Rosen, Samuel Paul, 1925
Taxil, Leo, 1355
Vaughan, Diana, 1629
Walder, Phileas, 1644
Johannine Daist Communion, See Free Daist Communion
Johannes, 832–833
John, Bubba Free. See Jones, Franklin Albert
John, Archduke, 160
John (Daman), Master, the French
Leich, 833
"John King," 834. See also "King, John"
John of Portugal, 834
John Paul II, Pope
Knock, 869
Secrets of Fatima, 1380
Turin Shroud, 1593
John XXII, Pope, 4, 834–835
Johndro, L. Edward, 833
Johnson, Alice, 834
cross-correspondence, 358
Fleming, Alice Kipling, 572
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
Baugley, James, G., 1210
Johnson, Douglas, 12, 834
Johnson, J. B., 329–330
Johnson, Mrs. Roberts, 420, 834
Johnson, Raynor C(arey), 834
Johnson, Samuel, 1378
Joire, Paul, 835
aura, 118
biometer of Baraduc, 185
Boirac, Emile, 201
Community of Sensation, 319
exteriorization of motricity, 531
exteriorization of sensitivity, 531, 532
Fluid Motor, 575
France, 597
Holland, 733
hypnotism, 767
levitation, 913
lycanthropy, 947
Roberts, Etta, 1314
Rochas d’Aign, Eugene Auguste-Albert de, 1316
Spiritualism—France, 1467
Shenometer, 1494
Jolter Family (Stauss Poltergeist), 1488
Jones, Charles Stansfeld, 835
Achad, Frater, 6
Crowley, Aleister, 361
English Qabalah, 509
Fellowship of Ma-Ion, 553
Regardie, Francis Israel, 1296
Jones, David, 865, 1304
Jones, Franklin Albert, 835–836
Jones, Jim, 836
Peoples Temple, 1195
Jones, Marc Edmund, 836, 1338
Jonson, Ben, 1688
Jonson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B., 349, 837, 995
Jonson, Olof, 837
Johnson, Samuel, 1633
Joseph of Arimathea
Glastonbury, 643
Grail, Holy, 658
secret words, 1382
Joseph Plan Foundation, 838
Joseph of Arimathea
Glastonbury, 643
Grail, Holy, 658
secret words, 1382
Joseph Plan Foundation, 838
Josephus
Baars, 137
Essenes, 518
exorcism, 528
paradise, 1179
Jouret, Luc, 838
Di Mambro, Joseph, 416, 417
Solar Temple, 1432–1433
Journal du Magnetisme et du Psychisme Experimental, 838–839
Journal of Automatic Writing, 839
Journal of Borderland Research, 839

1877
Keely, John (Ernst) Worrell, 853–854
Keely Motor, 854
new motor, 1113
orgone, 1154
Spear, John Murray, 1452
Keely ... von, 632,
866
Klinschor (or Klingsor), 866
General Index Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed.
1880
Keel, Karl
Keller, Karl Kellar, Harry
Keel, M.
Keevan of the Curling Locks,
854 Kelpie, The,
855
Keevan, 854
Keeling, Robert, 96
Keeve, Edward,
855
Keeve, 854
Kelley, Edward
Kelley, Edward
Keller, Karl
Kellar, Harry
Keevan of the Curling Locks,
854
Kelpie, The,
855
Keevan, 854
Keely Motor,
854
new motor, 1113
orgone, 1154
Spear, John Murray, 1452
Keely ... von, 632,
866
Klinschor (or Klingsor), 866
General Index Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed.
1880 null
Deoca (or The Woman of the South), 399
Dermot of the Love-spot (Dermot O’Dyna), 402
Diancecht, 414
Diotel Perceval, 416
Dithorba, 426
Du-Sith, 463
Eglantine of Artoys, Sir, 477
Elide, 493
“Espanladian,” 516–517
Elihim, 520–521
Flying Dutchman, 576
Fragarach (The Answerer), 591
Gauthier of Bruges, 623
Glastonbury, 643
Golem, 652
Gram, 659
Green Man, The, 667
Holy Grail, 683
Jersey Devil, 684
Lemuria, 830
Lemuria, 951
Melusina, 1022
mermaids and mermen, 1024–1026
Morgan le Fey, 1052
“Robert the Devil,” 1315
Recall, 1315–1316
Saba, 1337
St. Winifred’s Well, 1503–1504
Shamballah, 1395
Springheeled Jack, 1482
Stonehenge, 1499
Tannhäuser, 1529
Tibet, 1570
trophonios, 1590
Wandering Jew, The, 1649–1650
Lehman, Alfred, 903
magic, 958
telepathy, 1537
Lehrstuhl für Psychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie, Psychologisches Institut der Universität Freiburg. See Abteilung für Psychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie des Psychologischen Instituts der Universität Freiburg i. Br.
Leippya, 903
Leland, Charles Godfrey, 904
Aradia, 83
Book of Shadows, 203
gypsies, 681
Italy, 812
Sheela Thari, 1398
Slavs, 1417
witchcraft, 1679
Lemegoton
Amaimon, 35
grimoires, 669, 670
Grimoireum Verum, 670
Lemuria, 904–905
Atlantis, 115
Churchward, James, 295
Móo, Queen, 1050
psychometry, 1259
Sedona, 1382
Shasta, Mount, 1396
Lemurian Fellowship, 905
Lennon, John, 1283
Leo
astrological houses, 103
astrological signs, 107
astrology, 108
Leo, Alan, 906
Astrological Lodge of London, 104
Astrological Society, 108
Bailey, E. H., 146
Carter, Charles Ernest Owen, 251–252
Old, Walter G., 1142
Society for Astrological Research, 1427–1428
Leo III, Pope
agla, 16
Euchologiun of Opio Leo III, 502
Leo XIII, Pope
Jogand-Pagès, Gabriel, 852
Medjugorje, 1017
Pontina, 1299
Leonard, Gladys Osborne, 906–907
Allison, Lydia W., 31–32
Bird, J. Malcolm, 186–187
Bitchford, Robert (Peel Glanville), 194
book tests, 205
Carington, W. Whatelly, 249–250
control, 399–390
direct voice, 421
double, 441
Driesch, Hans, 454
healing, psychic, 710
Jacks, L. P., 817
“King, John,” 862
Lodge, Sir Oliver, 930
materializations, 993
McKenzie, James Hewat, 1005
mediums, 1014, 1015
movement, paranormal, 1064
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
newspaper tests, 1114
Peters, Alfred Vont, 1202–1203
psychic force, 1252
Richmond, Kenneth Forbes, 1312
Richmond, Zoe Blantane Russell, 1312
Swauffer, Hannen, 1513
Thomas, Charles Drayton, 1561
Thomas, John Frederick, 1561
Valantine, George, 1617–1618
Leroy, Olivier-Gilbert, 907, 909
Lescorier, Marie, 907
LeShan, Lawrence (L.), 908
Lesh, Desmond (Peter Arthur), 908
Adamski, George, 9
Ancient Astronaut Society, 49
Ireland, 908
Morrow, Felix, 1056
Scoriton Affair, 1364–1365
Trench, William Brinsley Le Poer, 1587
Lesser Key. See Lemegoton
Lessing, Walter and Jessica, 1035
Leventhal, Herbert, 908
Lévi, Éliphas, 908
Al, 29
Alhottas, 35
Ararita, 84
Aziluth, 116
Bardon, Franz, 156
ceremonial magic, 265
Crollius, Oswaldus, 355–354
de Rais, Gilles, 639
elementary spirits, 490
elixir of life, 492–493
equilibrium (in occultism), 512
“Esmerilla,” 521
France, 591–592
gematria, 626
Great Arcanum, 85 goblins, 660, 670
Hoene-Wronski, Jozef Maria, 730 incommunicable axiom, 782
insufflation, 796–797
Italy, 811
inyns, 814–815
Jack the Ripper, 818
l’Ordre Kabbalistique de la Rosecroix, 936
Lynton, Bulver, 949
Mackenzie, Kenneth R. H., 952
magic, 958, 959
magical vestments and appurtenances, 961 medicine, occult, 1007–1008 Medieval magic, 1009
 necromancy, 1096–1097
Norton, Rosalind, 1125
Randolph, Paschal Beverly, 1283
Sanders, Alex, 1343
Shiley, Ebenezer, 1405
tarot, 1533
vril, 1642
Waine, Arthur Edward, 1643
Walder, Phileas, 1644
Y-Kim, 1698
Levitation, 909–917
fakirs, 559
Gordon, Henry C., 655
Indian rope trick, 788
Lindsay, The Master of, 925
St. Joseph of Copertino, 1496
Tallmadge, Nathaniel Pitcher, 1528
Tibet, 1571
Zaccarini, Amedee, 1710
“Levitation,” 918
Levy, Arthur
ectoplasm, 472
movement, paranormal, 1064
Palladino, Eusapia, 1171
Levy, Walter J., Jr., 918
fraud, 603
Schmidt, Helmut, 921
Levi, William Grant II, 918
Llewellyn, George, 629
Lewis, A. S., 1196
Levi, Arthur (Harvey) Spencer, 918–919
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rosae Crucis, 48, 49
Krumm-Heller, Arnoldo, 879
Lemuria, 905
Lewis, Ralph M., 919
Reuss, Theodor, 1306
Rosicrucian Digest, 1524
Rosicruccians, 1327
Shasta, Mount, 1396
Lewis, Matthew Gregory, 919
Obeah, 1129
Arama Magazine, 84
Astrological Magazine, 104
Astrology Guide, 110
Astrology Now, 110
Atlantis, 114
Atlantis Rising, 114
Awakener, The, 134
Back to Godhead, 141
Beyond, 179
Beyond Reality, 179
Biosophia, 186
Body, Mind & Spirit Magazine, 200
Borderland, 206
Borderline Magazine, 206
Clear Light, 302
Goldennet, 309
Common Ground (San Francisco), 313–314
Common Ground (Vancouver), 314
Cooperator, The, 337
Cryolitization of the God Flame, 364
Doubt, 442
Eat Magazine, 465
Earth Religion News, 505
Ear Magazine, 508
Doubt, 584
Crystallization of the God Flame, 649
Elohim Journal, 494
ESP Magazine, 517
Exploring the Supernatural, 530–533
FÄTE, 548–549
Harbiner of Light, The, 591
Hindu Spiritual Magazine, 728
Horoscope, 746–747
Horoscope Guide, 747
Immortality, 781
Immortality and Survival, 781
Insight, 792
Institute Magazine, 794
International UFO Reporter, 803
International Yoga Guide, 803
Kindred Spirit, 816
Llewellyn’s New Times, 845
Magical Union of Cologne, 948
Magical Writings, 1463
Magical Quarterly Magazine, The, 1479
Magician Outlook, 1478
Spotlight, The, 1481
Strange Magazine, 1500
Two Worlds, 1599
UFO Magazine, 1601–1602
UFO Magazine New Bulletin, 1602
Understanding Magazine, 1603
Univerrohan, 1610
Universe, The, 1613
Vampire Quarterly, 1623
Vision Magazine, 1636
Visions, 1638
Vitality, 1638
Wegweg Zur Synthese von Natur und Mensch, 1656
White Dove’s Message, 1666
Whole Person, The, 1668–1669
Yoga International, 1700
Yoga Life, 1700
Yoga Today, 1701
Zeitschrift für Metapsychische Forschung, 1705
Magi, 30, 955–956
Magi (Three Kings), 681
“Magia Posthuma” (of C. F. de Schertze), 956
Magic, 956–959
aetiologists, 13
Africa, 13
American Museum of Magic, 42
amulets, 46
Arhat, 84
Babylonia, 138–139
bitumen, 188
Black Magic, 189–190
Cambodia, 243–244
Central America, 1033
ceremonial magic, 265–266
Chaos Magick, 271
China, 278
circles, 295
cock, 303–306
conjuring tricks/stage magic, 959 dynamics of, 958 early history, 956–957
Egypt, 480–481, 483
England, 505, 507–509
English Qabalah, 509–510
European settlers of U.S., 38 force, magic, 958
Germany, 650
Gnostic Association of Cultural and Anthropological Studies, 646
Gnosticism, 647
Greece, 663
Hand of Glory, 689
Haraldus, Gustav Friedrich, 696
Incommunicable Axiom, The, 782
Jadoo, 820
Japan, 824
Ju-Ju, 841
Kabala, 846
lamps, magic, 888
Lapland, 891–892
later history, 958–959
magical vestments and appurtenances, 961–962
magicians, 958
Malaysia, 971
Medieval magic, 957, 958, 1008–1009
Myanmar, 1077–1078
Native Americans, 36
Ordo Stellarum et Serpente, 1152
Polsnjes, 1227–1229
revivals of, modern, 959
Roman (Ancient), 1321
Satanic Society, 1348
Scotland, 1367–1370
secret tradition, 1381
Semites, 1385
Solomon, Mirror of, 1434–1455
spirits, 1453–1454
Teutons, 1552–1547
Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth, 1555 theories about nature of, 957–958
Timaeus of Locri, 1573
voudou, 1641
West Indies, 1662–1663
Zos Kiats Cultus, 1710
Magic Circle, 962
Magic Circle (Organization), The, 962
Magic Darts, 962
Magic Instructions
Grimoire of Honorius, The, 669
Grimoires, 669–670
Grimorium Verum, The (Book), 670
Magic Square, 965
Magic Swords
Anguvadel, 56
Answerer (or Fragarach), 60
Durandal, 463
Magic Words
Abraadabra, 4
Agla, 16
Al, 20
Boh (or Boo), 201
Hocus Pocus, 729
Horse-whispering, 747–748
Horsemans Word, 747
Magical Blend Magazine, 960
Magical Child, 6
Magical Diagnoms, 960
Magical Metathesis, 1343
Magical Numbers, 960–961
Magical Union of Cologne, 961
Magical Vestments and Appurtenances, 961–962
Magical Writings, 616
Magicians, 958, 962–965
Abaris, 2
Abbott, David P., 2
Abraham the Jew, 4–5
Agrippa von Nettesheim, Henry
Cornelius, 17
Akhnim, 19
Alchindus (or Alkindi), 26
Alexander of Tralles, 27
“Amazing Randi, The,” 36
Anesthesia, 48
Apollonius of Tyana, 62–63
Arnulfus, 88
Baim, 144
Barrett, Francis, 158
Christopher, Milbourne, 285–286
Conjurors, 323
Desmond, Gerald, 403
Danecheht, 414
Elihuys the Sorcerer, 496
Falk, Samuel Jacob Chayyim, 539–540
1886

General Index
Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.
Faust, 550
Forman, Simon, 578
Gonne, Edith Maud, 653
gypsies, 680
Horniman, Annie, 746
Houdini, Harry, 748
Huns, 755
Jean, 827
John of Nottingham, 346
Keel, John A., 582
Knight, Gareth, 867
Kreun, 977
Kada Bux, 879–880
Mags, 967
Mananan, 973
Marrinott, William S., 980–981
Marsi, The, 982
Maskelyne, John Nevil, 985
Myanmar, 1077
Noualli, 1127
Pronyssia, 1227
Randi, James, 1228
Regardie, Israel, 1307
Sabellicu, Georgius, 1337–1338
Regardie, Israel, 1337–1338
Randi, James, 1348–1349
Marsella, 1372
Shiels, Tony ("Doc"), 1395
Sibley, Ebenezer, 1405
Tadibe, 1524
Thn, 1707
Thn, 1707
Thn, 1707
Thirman, 1707
Thirman, 1707
Maginot, Adèle, 965–966
Cahagnet, Louis-Alphonse, 240
Emma, 299
trance, 1582
Magnetic Phenomena, 966, 1510
siderite, 1466
Würdig's Magnetic Sympathy, 1677
Magneto-meter, 966
Magnar, 966
Magoon, 966
Maggi, 966
Maggiure, Father Joseph, 966–967
Magus, 967
"Magus," 967, 995
Maharaj Ji, Guru, 967
Africa, 15
Guru, 678
Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, 967–968
Africa, 15
breathing, 213
Guru, 678
Invitation, 915
School of Economic Science, 1539
Siddhis, 1406
Spiritual Regeneration Movement Foundation, 1479
Student's International Meditation Society, 1502
TM, 1574
transcendental meditation, 1583–1584
yoga, 1698
Mahatma Letters, 968
Eglinton, William, 479
Theosophical Society, 1557, 1558
Theosophy, 1560
Mahatmas
adepts, 11
Masters, 986
theosophy, 1560
Mahavira, 968–969, 1189
Maier, Michael, 969
Albertus Magnus, 21
alchemy, 22
Germany, 631
magic, 959
Maimonides, Rabbi Moses, 969
Maison des Spirites, 969, 1034
Maithuna, 969–970
Maitland, Edward, 970
Hermetic Society (London), 723
Kingsford, Anna Bonus, 804
reincarnation, 1301
Mak, A(rie), 970
Malachite, 970
Malachy Prophecies, 970
Malaysia, 971
Mallebranche, 972
Malleus Maleficarum, 972–973
Germany, 631
Kramer, Heinrich, 875–876
Satanic Society, 1348–1349
witchcraft, 1678, 1679
Malory, Sir Thomas
fiction, English occult, 557
odor of sanctity, 1138
Malphas, 973
Malwood, Katherine E.
Glastonbury, 643
Glastonbury zodiac, 644
Mamalei, 973
Mama, 973
Mananan, 973
Mannes. Plane
Mananan, 973
Manan, 974
Mangen, Gordon Lavelle, 974
Manichaeism
Gnosticism, 647
Guirdham, Arthur, 675
Mankind Research Foundation, 974
Manning, Akie Gwyn
ESP Laboratory of Texas, 516
gorkeydobbers, 671
Manning, Matthew, 974–975
automatic drawing and painting, 127 dentistry, psychic, 399
Gregory, Anita, 668
Kivota, Masaki, 865
Owen, Alan Robert George, 1102
Mango, Peter. See Metzger, Herman
Joseph
Mansfield, J. V., 975–976
Mansfield, Jayne, 290
Manson, Charles M., 976, 1323
Mantra (or Mantram), 976–977
AUM, 116
Gayatri Mantra, 624
Mantra Yoga, 2, 1699
Manu, 977
Mapes, James Jay, 977
Home, Daniel Dunglas, 738
materializations, 990
movement, paranormal, 1065
Spiritualism—United States, 1474
xenoglossy, 1692
Maple, Eric (William), 977
Marabini, Enrico, 978
Maranos, 978
Marcellinus, Ammianus
electromancy, 26–27
table-turning, 1721
Marcellus Empiricus, 978
March, Marion, 856, 978
Marciniak, Barbara, 978–979
contactees, 327
Freie Interessengemeinschaft für
Grenz-und
Geisteswissenschaften Ufologie-reinarnationen, 607
Pleiaides, 1222–1223
Marconi, Guglielmo, 1599
Margaretomania, 979
"Margar"—979. See also Crandon, Mina
Stinson
American Society for Psychical
Research, 42
Bird, J. Malcolm, 186–187
Bond, Frederick Bligh, 202
matter passing through matter,
1062–1063
Scientific American, 1361–1362
Thorogood, Bracket K., 1564
Tillyard, R. J., 1573
Margiotta, Domenico, 979
Glasgow, 799
Marie Antoinette
Cagliostro, 239
Saint Germain, Comte de, 1339
Marie of Agreda (or Maria de Jesus), 979
Marion, Frederick, 877, 979–980
Mark Probert Memorial Foundation, 980
Marlowe, Christopher, 537
Marryott, William S., 980–981, 1199
Master of Alchemy, The (Eugenia Philotheles), 25
Maryst, Florence, 981
control, 330
ectoplasm, 472
Eglinton, William, 478
el elongation of the human body,
495
Fay, Mrs. H. B., 552
Fowler, Lottie, 587
Husk, Cecil, 757
"King, Katie," 862
materializations, 990, 992–993, 995
matter passing through matter, 1002
movement, paranormal, 1064
perfumes, 1198
revision, 1238
Showers, Mary, 1403
General Index

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

spirit children, 1458
trance, 1581
Williams, Mrs. M. A., 1672
Marryat, Frederick, 1376
Mars
astrophological planets, 105 face on, 981–982
Mars of, 1526–1527
“Mars effect,” 622, 623
Mars, Louis, 982
Marsh, Maurice Clement, 982
Marsh, Stuart, 1087
Berry, Catherine, 176
Crookes, Sir William, 354
direct drawing and painting, 418
direct writing, 423
Houghton, Georgina, 748–749
direct writing, 422
Moses, William Stainton, 1058
psychical research, 1248
Psychological Society, The, 1256
Maslow, Abraham, 515
Masleh, 515
Maskelyne, John Nevil, 1376
Marylebone Spiritualist Association, 934–935
Maryland Center for Investigation of Unconventional Phenomena, 985
Martin, Stuart, 984
Martin, Dorothy R(andalph), 984
Martin, Louis, 984
Martins, John, 1150–1151
Martius, John, 1150–1151
Martius Institute of Spiritual Science, 984–985
Martiny, Marcel, 985
Mary Celeste, 426, 985
Maryland Center for Investigation of Unconventional Phenomena, 985
Marylebone Spiritualist Association, Ltd. See Spiritualist Association of Great Britain Maskelyne, John Neivil, 985
apparitions, 69–70
magicians, 984–964, 964 mediums, 1011
Monck, Rev. Francis Ward, 1046
Palladino, Eugenia, 1171
Webb, James, 1055
Masleh, 986
Maslow, Abraham, 515
Masonry. See also Freemasonry developive Masonry, 11 African Architects, 15
devil worship, 413
Mopses, Order of the, 1052
Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm, 1082
Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO), 1152
Palladium, Order of, 1173
Rosen, Samuel Paul, 1325
Sat B’Hai, 1550
secret tradition, 1381
World League of Illuminati, 1686
Massaro, Gaston, 845, 951
Mass of St. Secaire, 986
Mass Suicide/Murder, 416–417
Massage, 1401
Masse, Françoise, 986
Massey, C. C.
direct writing, 422
Masters, Anthony, 986
Master of ettyn, 582–583
Masters, 986
adepts, 11
Athotans, 35
Great White Brotherhood, 663
Hilarion, Master, 726
Jesus, Master, 830–831
Koo Houmi, Master (Kuthumi), 837–843
Order of the Star in the East, 1150–1151
Rakoczii, The Master Prince, 1276
Masters, Robert E. L., 986
Foundation for Mind Research, 385–386
Houston, Jean, 749
psychenautics, 1247
sensory deprivation, 1386 witches’ cradle, 1682
Mastiphil, 987
Material for Thought (Journal), 987
Materialization, 987–998
Andrews, Mary, 51
animals, 57–58, 996–997
apports, 76–81, 997–998
Cook, Florence Eliza, 332–335
Cook, Kate Selina, 335
Corrales, Ophelia, 339
Cradock, Frederick G. Foster, 349 dissolution of phantoms, 992–993 early explanations, 990
Eglinton, William, 478
Fairchild, Helen, 536 famous phantoms, 991–992
Fay, Mrs. H. B., 552
Guzik, Jan, 679
Hollos, Mary J. (Mrs. Hollis-Billing), 733–734
Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, 735 interdependence of phantom mediums, 989–990
Mellon, Annie Fairlamb, 1021
Miller, Charles Victor, 1037
Mirabelli, Carlos, 1041
modern views of, 998
Morselli, Enrico, 1057
Murphy-Lydi, Mary, 1071
origin of, 987–988 phantom eyehands, 991
psychical researchers, 988
Regurgitation, 1297
Richet, Charles, 1510–1511
Roberts, Eta, 1311
Sambor, S. F., 1342
Sawyer, Carrie M., 1351
Schnieder Brothers, Willi, 1357
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert von, 1359–1360
sanuces, 1374
sensation, community of, 319
Seybert Commission, 1393
souveniers from, 995–996
Spiritualism—phenomena, 1474
telematic, 1544
from thoughtforms, 988–989
transfiguration, 1354
Williams, Charles, 1672
Williams, Mrs. M. A., 1672
Willis, F. L. H., 1674
Wood, C. E., 1684
“Volcanic”, 993
Mather, Increase and Cotton, 38–39, 998–999 hollow earth, 734
Ireland, 807
stimoking stones and images, 1501
Mathers, Moina, 746, 999
Mathers, S(amuel) L(iddell) MacGregor, 999–1000
A.: A.: A.:, 1
Ayton, William Alexander, 136
Bennett, Charles Henry Allan, 169
Bergson, Henri, 172–173
Berridge, Edward, 176
Book of the Sacred Magic of Abra-Melin, 204 Brodie-Innes, J. W., 220
ceremonial magic, 296
Crowley, Aleister, 361
Farr, Florence, 543–546
Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of the, 639–651
grimoires, 669–670
Hermetic Society (London), 723
Heym, Gerard, 724
Horrman, Annie, 476
Horos, Theodore and Laura, 476
Kingsford, Anna Bonus, 864
Knorr von Rosenroth, Christian, 870
magic, 959
Mathers, Moina, 999
Ordo Rosae Rubeae et Aureae Crucis, 1151
Rosicrucians, 1327
Secret Chiefs, 1379
Stella Matutina (Order of the Morning Star), 1492
tarot, 1533
Westcott, William Wynn, 1662
Woodman, William Robert, 1685
Yeats, William Butler, 1696
Mathur, Raghuvansh Bhaadur, 1000
“Matikion,” 1000
Matter Passing through Matter, 1000–1003
apports, 77
tying, 1001 release/movement of clothing, 1001
Matutina, Stella
London Group, 954
Regardie, Francis Israel, 1296
Max, Peter
Satchidananda, Swami, 1350
Vishnu Devananda, Swami, 1636
Maxwell, Joseph, 1003
double, 439
emanations, 497–498
France, 597
light, 921
mediums, 1012, 1013, 1015
Miller, Charles Victor, 1037–1038 move, paranormal, 1062, 1066
Palladino, Eusapia, 1172
performances, 1198
psychic force, 1251–1252
psychical research, 1248
raps, 1288
séances, 1374
Spiritualism—France, 1467
table-turning, 1522
transfiguration, 1584
May, Edwin
American Institutes for Research, 41 government-sponsored research on parapsychology, 656
Maya, 1005
Mayavi-rupa, 1005
Maynard, Henrietta Sturdevant, 1003
McMahan, Elizabeth Anne, 1007
McMullen, Stephen A., 1006
McMurtry, Grady
Einquos, 515
Gnostic Catholic Church, 646
Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO), 1155
McNallen, Stephen A., 1006
Asatru, 91
Asatru Folk Assembly, 92
Mead, (George) (Riobert) S(tow), 1006
Horniman, Annie, 746
inx, 814–815
Leadbeater, C. W., 899
levitation, 915
Morrow, Felix, 1056
Quest Society, 1268
Thesopical History, 1357
Theosophical Society, 1558
Meat, Divination by, 353
Medde1lande Frane Sallskapet fur Parapsykologisk, 1007
Medea, 1007
Medhurst, R. G., 1007
materializations, 998
Soal, S. G., 1426
Medicine
Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine, 6 acupuncture, 7
acupuncturists, 8
Adamantius, 8
China, 281
clearvoyance, 298–299
Egypt, 481
garlic, 620
insufflation, 796–797
National Council for Geocosmic Research, 1009–1010
occult, 1007–1008
somatography, 1436
Tibet, 1572
Westlake, Aubrey T., 1663
Medicine men
Africa, 14–15
Native Americans, 36
Shaman, 1395
taboo, 1524
Medicine wheel, 51
Medieval Magic, 1008–1009
Mediation, 1009–1010
American Meditation Institute for Yoga Science and Philosophy, 42
Arsana Workshops, 84
Joy Touch, 840
occult, 1136
qi, 1287
Rama, Swami, 1277
third eye, 1561
transcendental meditation, 1583–1584
Upanishads, 1614
zen, 1704
Zong Gong, 1707
Medium, 1010–1016. See also Séance
Airaud, Oberto, 18
Andrews, Mary, 31
Aubert, George, 116
automatic speaking, 127
Bailey, Charles, 145–146
Bans Sisters, Lizzie and May, 150–151
Barclay, Kathleen, 156–157
Bartlett, John Allen, 159
Bastian, Harry, 160
Beadley, Mrs., 168
Beraud, Marthe, 171
Berry, Catherine, 176
Besinnet, Ada M., 178
Blake, Elizabeth, 192
Bradley, H(erbert) Dennis, 209–210
Brédy, C., 214
Brittain, Annie, 218
Britten, Emma Harding, 218–219
Brown, Rosemary, 223
Buckley, James Lord, 227
Caramicci, Francesco, 248
Carey, Ken, 249
Carheuser, William, 252
Castleivitch, Countess, 254
Centurione Scotto, Marquis Carlo, 264
channeling, 269–271
Childs, Edward, 278
Colby, George P., 292, 307
Collins, Doris, 310
Colman, Arthur, 311
Compton, Elizabeth J., 320–321
Conant, Mrs. J. H., 321
Conklin, J. B., 323
Cook, Florence Eliza, 332–335
Cook, Kate Selina, 335
Cooper, Grace, 335
Coombe-Tennant, Winifred
Margaret Sercoold ("Mrs. Willet"), 333–336
Cooper, Blanche, 356
Cooper, Margaret S., 357
Corrales, Ophelia, 359
Cradock, Frederick G. Foster, 349
Crandon, Mina Stinson ("Margery"), 349–351
Cummins, Geraldine Dorothy, 367–368
Dahl, Ingeborg (Mrs. Koebner), 372 Davenport Brothers, Ira Erastus and William Henry, 376–378
Davis, Andrew Jackson, 380–381
Delphic Circle, 394
D'Esperance, Elizabeth, 404–406
Dowden, Hester (Mrs. Travers-Smith), 442–443
Duguid, David, 459–460
Duncan, Helen Victoria, 460–461
Eddy Brothers, Horatio and William, 474
Eglinton, William, 477–480
Erto, Pasquale, 514
Eva C., 521–522
Evans, Fred P., 532
Evans, W. H., 542
Everett, Mrs. Thomas, 525
Exteriorization of Motricity, 531

1889
Exteriorization of Sensitivity, 531–532
Fay, Annie Eva, 551
Fay, William M., 552
Firman, Mr. and Mrs. A. H., 568
Fletcher, John William, 572–573
Flint, Leslie, 573
Flower, Amanda Cameron, 574
Ford, Arthur A, 577–578
Fortuny, Pascal, 581
Foster, Charles H., 582–583
Fowler, Edward P., 587
French, Mrs. E. J., 608
Fronczek, Janusz, 610
Garrett, Eileen J., 621
Gazzera, Linda, 624
Gill, Madge, 659
Glotologues, 644
Gordon, Henry C., 655
Great Britain, 1469, 1472
guide, 674
Guppy, Mary Jane, 675–676
Guppy-Volkman, Agnes, 676
Hardy, Mary M., 692
Harris, Alec, 693
Harris, Bertha, 695–694
Harris, Susannah, 694
Harris, Thomas Lake, 694–695
Haxby, W., 707–708
Hayden, Maria B., 708
Herbert, Benson, 721
Herne, Frank, 723
Higgins, Gordon, 726
Hollis, Mary J. (Mrs. Hollis-Billing), 733–734
Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, 735
Horne, Daniel Dunglas, 737–740
Hooper, T. d’Aute, 742
Houghton, Georgina, 748–749
Husk, Cecil, 757–758
Igrath, Lujza Lineczegh, 779
Indridason, Indridi, 788
inspirational speakers, 793
Institute for Spiritualist Mediums, 793–794
Johnson, Douglas, 834
Johnson, Mrs. Roberts, 854
Jonson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B., 837
Judd, Pearl, 840–841
Kaiser, A. W., 848
Keeler, Pierre L. O. A., 853
Koons, Jonathan, 873
Leonard, Gladys Osborne, 906–907
Linton, Charles, 925
Lord, Jenny, 935–936
Lord, Maud E., 936
Lynn, Thomas, 948
Magaini, Adéle, 965–966
Mansfield, J. V., 975–976
'Margery,' 979
Marshall, Mary, 982
Martinez, Louis, 984
materializations, 989–990
Mellon, Annie Fairlamb (Mrs. J. B.), 1021
Melzer, Heinrich, 1022
Miller, Charles Victor, 1037–1038
Mirabelli, Carlos, 1040–1041
Monck, Rev. Francis Ward, 1045–1046
Morris, L. A. Meurig, 1054
Moses, William Stanton, 1057–1059
Moyes, Winifred, 1068
Murphy-Lydy, Mary, 1071
Myers, John, 1079
Newton, J. R., 1117
Nielsen, Éiner, 1121
Nixon, Queenie, 1123
Oates, Janet W., 1129
obsession and possession, 1133
Palladino, Eusapia, 1170–1173
Pansini brothers, 1175
Pap, Lajos, 1175–1176
Paton, Mrs., 1191
Patterson, Mrs. S. E., 1191
Perriman, Florence, 1199
Peters, Alfred Voat, 1202–1203
Phoenix, William, 1207
Piper, Leonora E., 1214–1217
Politii, Auguste, 1225
Powell, Evan, 1232–1233
Powell, W. H., 1235
Pruden, Laura A., 1245
Rambouillet, Maud Elizabeth Furse (Lady Gorell), 1271
Rasmussen, Anna, 1289
Reese, Bert, 1295–1296
Rhinehart, Keith Milton, 1272
Richmond, Thomas, 1312
Ridley, Hazel (Hurd), 1312
Rita, A., 1313–1314
Roberts, Estelle, 1314
Roberts, Etta, 1314
Rollins, Erastus, 1315
Rothe, Frau Anna, 1328–1329
Ruggles, A. D., 1331
Sambor, S. F., 1342
Sanders, Cestus G., 1343
Sardou, Victorien, 1346
Sawyer, Carrie M., 1351
Schneider, Willi und Rudi, 1357–1359
Sensitive, 1386
Sheppard, Jesse Francis Grierson, 1399
Showers, Mary, 1403–1404
Silburt, Maria, 1409
Slade, Henry, 1414–1416
Sloan, John C., 1419
Smith, Hélène, 1421–1423
Sordi, Signora Lucia, 1437
Soule, Minnie Meserve, 1439
Spain, 1450
Spiritualism—phenomena, 1473
Spriggs, George, 1481
Squire, J. R. M., 1483
Stanislawki, P., 1484
Stella G., 1491
Swain, Marcia M., 1513
Tamlin, Sarah, 1529
Thayer, M. B., 1554–1555
Thompson, Rosina, 1563
Tingley, Katherine, 1574
Tomczyk, Stanislawki (Mrs. everard Feiling), 1575–1576
trance, 1579
trance personalities, 1582–1583
transfiguration, 1584–1585
Twigg, Ena, 1598
United States, 1474
Valantine, George, 1617–1619
Van Praagh, James, 1620–1627
Vay, Baroness Adelma, 1630–1631
Vollhardt, Maria (Frau Rudloff), 1640
Wallis, E. W., 1648
Watson, Thomas, 1654
Webber, Jack, 1655
Williams, Bessie, 1671
Williams, Charles, 1672
Williams, Mrs. M. A., 1672
Willis, F. L. H., 1674
Wingfield, Kate, 1677
Wood, C. E., 1684
Wriedt, Eta, 1688–1689
Xavier, Francisco Candido, 1691
Zuccharini, Amedee, 1710
Medium and Daybreak, The (Journal), 1016
Mediums, false
Eldred, Charles, 487–488
Laslzo, Laslzo, 895
Munnings, Frederick T(ansdey), 1070–1071
Roy, William, 1299–1330
Medjugorje, 1016–1019
Meich, Paul Everett, 1019
Meeker, Lloyd Arthur
attunement, 115
Emmisaries of Divine Light, 500
Meerloo, Joost (Abraham) M(aurits), 1019
Meier Baba, 1019–1020
Meier, C(arl) A(fred), 1020
Meier, Eduard Albert "Billy," 1020
Bell, Fred, 166
contactees, 327
Freie Interessengemeinschaft für Grenz-und Geisteswissenschaften Ufologie-Studien, 607
Mariniak, Barbara, 978–979
Oncé, Oumec, 1143
Pleiadés, 1222
Meister (or Mesna Lorenz), 22, 1021
Mellon, Annie Fairlamb (Mrs. J. B. Mellon), 1021
ectoplasm, 472
fraud, 601–602
materializations, 989, 993
mediums, 1015
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
plastics, 1222
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407
Spiritualism—Germany, 1468
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
trance, 1579, 1581
Wood, C. E., 1684
Melton, John Gordon, 1021
Academy of Religion and Psychological Research, 6
Institute for the Study of American Religion, 794
International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, 802–803
Transylvanian Society of Dracula, 1585
Melusina, 1022, 1025
Miracles, 1041–1042
Abu Yazid al-Bestami, 5
Akita, 20
Akiru, 538
Gonzalez-Quevado, Oscar, 653
Guru, 678
Jacob, Mr. ("Jacob of Simla"), 819
Liquafaction of Blood, 926
Lourdes, 938–939
occult, 1136
Satanic Society, 1348
Schlatter, Francis, 1356
statues, moving, 1486–1488
Theosophical Society, 1557, 1558
Miracles of Medal, 1042–1043
Mirages, 548
Mirrors, Divination Using, 255
Mishlove, Jeffrey
applied psi, 75
Ryerson, Kevin, 1336
Mishna, The, 1043
Miss Lucy Westerna Society of the Undead, The, 1043
"Miss X," 564, 1043. See also Goodrich-Freer, Ada
Mitchell, Edgar D., 1043
ESP Research Associates
Foundation, 517
Geller, Uri, 627
Institute of Noetic Sciences, 795
Jonsson, Olof, 837
noetics, 1124
Mitchell, T(homas) Walker, 1044
Mithraic Mysteries, 1081–1082
Mithraism, 680
Modern Times, The Socialist Community of, 1044
Moghrebi, 1044
Mohammed ibn-Ahmad ibn-Mohammed ibn-Rushd, Abul-Walid
Averroes, 134
Mohanes, 1044
Molescopy, 1044
Moles (animal), 1044–1045
Moles (birthmarks), 1045
Moll, Albert
Elferfield horses, 486
Vollhardt, Maria, 1640
Molybdiancy, 1045
Mompessons, John, 1045
Monaciello, The, 1045
Monad, 1045
reincarnation, 1300
worlds, planes, or spheres, 1687
Monck, Rev. Francis Ward, 1045–1046
Colley, Thomas, 310
direct voice, 419
direct writing, 422–424
magicians, 964
Maskelyne, John Neivl, 985
materializations, 990, 994
music (paranormal), 1073
plastics, 1222
raps, 1287–1288
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
teleportation, 1542
trance, 1581
Wallace, Alfred Russel, 1648
xenoglossy, 1692
Mondale, Walter, 1269
Monen, 1046
Money (In Occult Tradition), 1046–1047
Mongoose, Talking, 252
Monition, 1047
Monitions of Approach, 1047, 1557
Monkeys, 1653–1654
Monkmeyer, Joseph, 1096
Monsters, 1045–1049. See also Vampire
Addna of the Lake, 10
Aerial Phenomenon Clipping and Information Center, 12
Basilisk (or Cockatrice), 160
Bunyip, 228
Calatin Clan, 241
Cockatrice, 306
Dragon, 448
Golem, 652
Koschei the Deathless, 874
Lamia, 888
Loch Ness Monster, 928–929
Morag (or Morag), 1035
Moragwyr, 1053
Sasquatch, 1347
Montgomery, Ruth (Schick), 1050
Ashtar, 94
automatic writing, 131
channeling, 270
Dixon, Jean, 434
Extraterrestrial Earth Mission, 553
Ford, Arthur Augustus, 578
inspirational speakers, 793
Kirkwood, Annie, 804
Parrish-Harra, Carol W., 1187
prophecy, 1244
walk-ins, 1466–1467
Monuments
Avebury, 133
Stonehenge, 1499
Moo, Queen, 1050
Moody, Dwight, 1307
Moody, Raymond Avery, Jr., 1050
Brinkley, Danion, 217
death, 586
In Light Times, 790
out-of-the-body-travel, 1161
psychomanteum, 1257
Moon, 1051
astrological planets, 104, 105
Scotland, 1368
talisman of, 1526
vedic astrology, 1631–1632
zodiac, 1708
Moon, Sun Myung, 1051–1052,
1608–1609
Moonsign Book, 1052
Moore, James
apparitions, 68
Gardjieff Studies Group, 677
Moore, Marcia, 1052
Moore, William Osborne
Bangs Sisters, Lizzie and May, 150
Besmir, Ada M., 178
Boursnell, Richard, 208
direct drawing and painting, 418–419
direct voice, 419
direct writing, 424
Jonson, Mr. and Mrs. J. B., 837
Kaiser, A. W., 848
Keeler, Pierre L. O. A., 853
magicians, 964
materializations, 995
mediums, 1015
movement, paranormal, 1065
Philadelphia Experiment, 1203, 1204
psychic force, 1252
rescue circles, 1305
Wriedt, Eita, 1689
Moses, Order of the, 632, 1052
Morag. See Mhorag
Morgan, Annie Owen. See "King, Katie"
Morgan, Augustus de
Hayden, Maria B., 708
Howitt, William, 750
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407
Morgan, Henry Owen
"King, John," 861, 862
Koons, Jonathan, 873
Morgan le Fay, 1052
Morgawr, 1053
Morien (or Morienus), 1053
Morin, Jean-Baptiste, 1053–1054
Mormons. See Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints
Moroni, Angel, 82
Morphogenetic Fields, 1054
Morris, Louis (Annetta) Meurig, 1054
automatic speaking, 127
control, 330
inspirational speakers, 793
Sleeping Preacher, The, 1419
Morrison Pratt Institute, 1234
Morrison Pratt Institute Association, 1055
Morrison, Robert Lyle, 1055
Koestler, Arthur, 871
Koestler Parapsychology Unit, 872
Morris, William
fiction, English occult, 558
Yeats, William Butler, 1068
Morison, Richard James, 1055–1056
Bailey, E. H., 146
Zadkiel, 1703
Morrow, Felix, 1056, 1613
Morse Fellowship, 1057
Morse, Florence
automatic speaking, 127
Morse, J. J., 1056–1057
Borderland (magazine), 206
control, 330
Mogers, 1048–1049
Crookes, Sir William, 354
elongation of the human body, 495 evil spirits, 527
inspirational speakers, 793
Kitson, Alfred, 865
Lyceum Banner, The 947
mediums, 1011
raps, 1287
Spiritual Review, 1479
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1470
Morshead, F. J., 1057
apports, 80
aura, 118
Bozzano, Ernesto, 208
ectoplasm, 470
fraud, 601–602
Italy, 813
levitation, 914
materializations, 989
movement, paranormal, 1066
Paladino, Eusapia, 1171, 1172, 1173
plastics, 1221
Spiritualism—Italy, 1472
trance, 1581
Morte d’Arthur, 217
Monya, Master, 1057
Aquarian Foundation, 82
Ascended Masters, 92
Bridge to Spiritual Freedom, 215–216
Djidal Khul, Master, 435
Koot Hoomi, Master (Kuthumi),
873–874
Masters, 986
Roerich, Helena, 1317
Moses, William Stanton, 1057–1059
apparitions, 69
apports, 78
automatic writing, 128, 129, 150, 131
Beattie, John, 163–164
book tests, 205
British National Association of Spiritualists, 217
Buguet, Edouard, 227
Cabinet, 233
Chart, C. T. K., 272
clairvoyance, 298
control, 329
Cook, Kate Selina, 335
Dee, John, 391
dermography, 402
direct voice, 419
direct writing, 422, 423, 424
"Doctor," 436
double, 439, 441
Fowler, Lottie, 587
healing, psychic, 710
Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, 735
Home, Daniel Dunglas, 740
Hudson, Frederick A., 751
identity, 777, 777
"Imperator," 782
levitation, 912
Light (Journal), 922
luminous phenomena, 943, 944
"Magus," 967
materializations, 991, 992, 995
matter passing through matter, 1000–1001
mediums, 1011–1012, 1013, 1014, 1015
"Mentor," 1024
Monck, Rev. Francis Ward, 1046
movement, paranormal,
1062–1063, 1064
music (paranormal), 1074
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
obsession and possession, 1113–1114
Parkes, F. M., 1187
perfumes, 1197–1198
"Philosophus," 1206
"Preceptor," 1235
"Prudens," 1245
psychic force, 1252
psychic immunity to fire, 564
psychic touches, 1578
psychical research, 1248
psychography, 1255
Psychological Society, The, 1256
raps, 1287, 1288
"Rector," 1294–1295
reincarnation, 1301
seances, 1374
Society for Psychical Research, 1428 sounds (in psychical research), 1440 spirit photography, 1461
"Spirit Teachings" (Book), 1462
Spiritualism, 1463
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
Spiritualism—Italy, 1473
"The Prophet," 1244
"Theologius," 1556
"Theosophus," 1557
trance, 1579
trance personalities, 1582
"Vates," 1629
William, Charles, 1672
Moss, Thelma, 834, 1059
Moss-Woman, The, 1060
Mothman, 1060
Motley Crue, 1317
Motor automatism, 315
Mott, George Edward, 1060
Mount Shasta. See Shasta, Mount Mountain Cove Community, The,
1060
Apostolic Circle, 63
Harris, Thomas Lake, 694
Mountain Path, The (Journal), 1060
Mourning Star (Magazine), 1060–1061
Movement (Paranormal), 1061–1067
Movement. (Paranormal)
Charismatic Movement, 272–273 force used in, 1065–1066 house shaking, 1061
modern experiments, 1067 objects, movement of, 1061–1062
Scientific American (Journal), 1065 scientific verification, 1063
Sufism, 1508
theories of, 1065–1067 vanishing objects, 1064–1065
Movies
Close Encounters of the Third Kind (Movie), 303
Golem, 562
Heller-Skelf, 976
Rosemary’s Baby, 1323
Moving Statues, 148–149
Movyes, Winifred, 1063
Greater World, 661
Greater World Christian
Spiritualist Association, 661
inspirational speakers, 793
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1471
MUFOB (Metempirical UFO Bulletin).
See Magonia
MUFOON. See Mutual UFO Network
Muhammad, Mirza
Bah, 137
Baha’i faith, 143
Muktananda, Swami, 1068
Free Daist Communion, 604
Guru, 678
Kundalini, 882
yoga, 1699
Mutchuye, S., 725, 1068
Muldoon, Sylvan Joseph, 1068
Carrington, Hereward, 251
double, 440
dream body, 448
dreaming true, 449
dress, phantom, 454
everiorization of sensitivitiy, 532
haunting, 705
lucid dreaming, 940
materializations, 994
out-of-the-body-travel, 1160, 1161
sleep, 1418
somnambulism, 1457
vitality, 1638
Mullford, Prentice, 1069
Theosophist, 1069–1070
Muller, Auguste, 1069, 1582
Muller, E. K.
electric phenomena, 488
emotions, 498
Germer, Franz Anton, 1028
Muller, Karl Eugen, 1069, 1518
Mullin, Albert Alkins, 1069
Mullins, John, 1069
Mumbo-Jumbo, 1070
Munder, William H., 1070
Buguet, Edouard, 227
double, 439
fraud, 692
spirit photography, 1460–1461
Spiritualism—United States, 1475
Mundle, Clement Williams Kennedy,
1070
Munnings, Frederick Tansley,
1070–1071
Murphy, Bridey
Bernstein, Morey, 176
reincarnation, 1502–1503
Murphy, Gardner, 1071
Allison, Lydia W., 32
American Society for Psychological
Research, 42–43
Dale, Laura Abbott, 373
Estabrooks, George Hohan, 518
Garett, Eileen J., 621
Hodgson, Richard, 730
Jastrow, Joseph, 827
General Index

Krippner, Stanley Curtis, 877
parapsychology, 1182
Piper, Leonora E., 1217
Prasad, Kali, 1233
Prince, Walter Franklin, 1240
psychical research, 1249
Scientific American, 1362
Tanagros, Angelos, 1529
thought-transference, 1567
Ullman, Mantague, 1602
Valiantine, George, 1617
Worcester, Constance Rulison, 1650
Worchester, Constance Rulison, 1685
Murphy-Lydy, Mary, 1071
Murray, Margaret A(lice), 1894
Muscle Reading, 1071
Musès, Charles A(rthur), 1073
Museums
American Museum of Magic, 42
Britten Memorial Museum, 219
Lawrence Museum of Magic and Witchcraft, 897
Museum of Magic and Witchcraft, 1073
Psychic Museums, 1253
Mushrooms, 1073
Allegro, John, 29
soma, 1455
Wasson, R. Gordon, 1652
witchcraft, 1680
Music backward masking, 141 flute charming, 575
nada, 1087
Nadabrahmananda Saraswati, 1087 occult meanings of, 1371 rock, 1316–1317
Rome (Ancient), 1320
sounds, 1440
Music (Paranormal), 1073–1076
Musical Mediums
Aubert, George, 116
Shepard, Jesse Francis Grierson, 1073
Musso, Juan Ricardo, 1076
Argentia, 86
Instituto Argentino de Parapsicologia, 796
Mutual UFO Network, 12, 1076
Myanmar, 1076–1078
Myers, A(thur) (thomas), 939, 1078
Mrs. Frederic William Henry, 1078–1079
Aksakof, Alexander N., 20
apparitions, 69–71
automaton drawing and painting, 126 automated writing, 128, 129, 130, 131
automatism, 131, 132
census of hallucinations, 261
crystallography, 298
communication (between living and dead), 316
Cook, Kate Selma, 335
cross-correspondence, 358
crystal gazing (or crystalomancy), 363
Cummins, Geraldine Dorothy, 368
direct writing, 422
dodds, Eric Robertson, 436
double, 439
eastray, 468
Eglington, William, 480
Fleming, Alice Kipling, 572
fraud, 602
genius, 628
Goodrich-Freer, Ada, 654
group soul, 671
guiding spirits, 674
Gurney, Edmund, 677
hallucination, 680–687
haunting, 702, 705
healing, psychic, 709
Holland, 732
"Imperator," 782
Johnson, Alice, 834
Lodge, Sir Oliver, 930
Lourdes, 939
mediums, 1012, 1013
Mellon, Annie Fairlamb, 1021
Mesmer, Franz Anton, 1028
metherial, 1051
Morrow, Felix, 1056
Moses, William Stanton, 1058, 1059
movement, paranormal, 1066
music (paranormal), 1074
Myers, A. T., 1078
Palladino, Eusapia, 1171, 1172
personality, 1200–1201
Phimn, 1207
Piper, Leonora E., 1215, 1216
Podmore, Frank, 1223
possession, 1230 prayer, 1235
psychic force, 1252
psychical research, 1248, 1249
psychurgic diathesis, 1260
Reichenbach, Baron Karl von, 1298
reincarnation, 1301
retrocognition, 1305
Richter, Charles, 1310
Sidgwick, Eleanor Mildred
Mallour, 1407
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407
Simnett, A. P., 1411
sleep, 1418
Smith, Susy, 1424
Society for Psychical Research, 1428
sounds (in psychical research), 1440
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1470–1471
subconscious, 1504
subliminal self, 1504
suggestion, 1508
Summerland, 1509
Supernormal, 1511
symbolism, 1519
telepathy, 1522
telepathy, 1523–1524
telepathy, 1577, 1593, 1540
telepathy, 1544
telepathy, 1544–1545
Thompson, Rosina, 1563
thought-transference, 1566–1567
trance, 1584
trance personalities, 1583
Van Eeden, Frederik, 1625
Verrall, Margaret de Gandrion
Merrifield, 1635
Webb, James, 1653
Wingfield, Kate, 1677
Wood, C. E., 1684
xenomancy, 1692
Myers, John, 529–530, 1079
Myomancy, 1079–1080
Mystica Mystica Aeterna, 1080
Mystica Mystica Maxima, 1080, 1306
Mysteries, 1080–1082
ancient mysteries, 49
Devil’s Jaw, 411
Greece, 664–665
Mysterious places
Atlantis, 113–114
Bermuda Triangle, 174
Center for Archaeoastronomy, 261
Devil’s Bridge, 411
Devil’s Triangle, 411
Lemuria, 904–905
Nazca “Spaceport,” 1093
Shasta, Mount, 1396
Mystical diagrams
Mandala, 973
Yantra, 1695
Mystical Night (of the Sufis), 1082
Mystical Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm, 1082
Mysticism, 1082–1085
akashic records, 19
Allen, James, 28
Celestial Light, 258
Cosmic Consciousness, 340–341
Eckartshausen, Karl Von, 468
Evans-Wentz, W(alter) Y(eiling), 411
Germans, 631–632
Hal, 685
Hermeticism, 722
House of Wisdom, 749
Huna, 755
ignis fatuus, 779
Mantra (or Mantram), 976–977
“The Matrix,” 1000
Rapport, 1295–1296
Sufism, 1508
theosophy, 1559
transcendental meditation, 1583–1584
Trevelyon, Sir George, 1587
Tuno, 1592
Mystics
Abu Yazid al-Bestami, 5
Anandamayi Ma, Sri, 47-48
Aurobindo, Sri, 118-119
Boehme, Jakob, 200
Chidananda, Swami, 1094
De Villars, l’Abbe de Montfaucon,
410-411
Elixir of Life, 492-493
Fox, George, 587
Gichneu, John Georg, 637
Gurdjieff, Georgi Ivanovitch, 676
Guyon, Madame, 678-679
Ha-Levi, Judah ben Samuel, 685
Harding, Douglas E., 691
Harris, Thomas Lake, 694-695
Kabir, 847
Knorr von Rosenroth, Christian, 870
Law, William, 897
Lutoslawski, Wincenty, 946
Meher Baba, 1019-1020
Mordred, Prentice, 1069
Obercict, Jacques Hermann, 1130
Pasqually, Martines de, 1187
Ramakrishna, Swami, 1189-1190
Rahu, 1274
Rahula, 1274
Scotland, 1367
Siddhas, 1406
Sirens, 1411
1069
1163 1657-1658
wolf, 1683
N
NAA. See National Astrological Association
Nachtwacht, 1087
Nada, 1087
Nadarabrahmananda Saraswati, Swami, 1087
Swananda, Swami, 1143
Wolfsohn, Alfred, 1083
Nadddeo, Alighiero, 1087
Nagao, Ikuko, 1073
Nakaidokilini, 1087-1088
Names
divination by, 1144
Medieval magic, 1008
Napellus, 1088
Naphology, 1088
Napier, James tree, 487
onion, 1144
Napoleon, 649
Josephine
Hollis, Mary J., 733-734
Le Normand, Marie-Anne
Adelaide, 906
Napper (or Napier), Richard, 1088
Narsingdas Academy of Yoga and
Parapsychology, 618
Nash, Carroll B. (blue), 1088
Nash, Catherine Stiller (Mrs. Carroll
B. Nash), 1088
Nasse, Thomas, 557
NASO. See National Astrological Society
NASSAC

General Index

Abraax, 5
Agathodaimon, 16
Amphiratus, 45
Asal, 91
Asclepius, 93
Balor, 149-150
Bave, 162
Briccius, 19
Carr, 236
Campbell, Joseph, 245
Cargo Cults, 249
Chihuhu Mythos, 366
Dermot of the Love-spot (Dermot O’Dyna), 402
Eber Don, 466
Germans, 630
Girfanguagap, 641
Giovan Bach, 679
Jinn, 831
Kali Yuga, 848
Keen, John the Curling Locks, 854
Kian, 858
Lokaloko, 932
Medca, 1007
Nillhem, 1122
Rahula, 1274
Scotland, 1367
National Laboratory of Psychical
Research (NLPR), 1091
Great Britain, 1471
Marion, Frederick, 980
movement, paranormal, 1063
poltergeists, 1226
Proceedings of, 1242
Schneider Brothers, Willi, 1357,
1358-1359
winds (paranormal), 1676
Zügun, Eleonore, 1711
National New Age Yellow Pages
DIRECTORY), 1091
National Psychic Science Association,
1091
National Psychological Institute, Inc., 92
National Research Council of the National Academy of Science, 656
National Spiritual Aid Association,
1091 National Spiritual Alliance of the United States of America, 1091
National Spiritual Science Center, 1092
National Spiritualist Association of Churches (NSAC), 39, 1092
General Assembly of Spiritualists,
627
Morris Pratt Institute, 1055
Richmond, Cora L. V., 1311-1312
United States, 1476
Worlds Beyond (Fund), 1687
Native Americans, 36-38
Alternate Perceptions, 34
Andrews, Lynn W., 51
controls, 350
Deganawidah, 391-392
divination, 427-428
guide, 674
Ghaskik, 849
Midlisiwim, 1056
Nakaidokilini, 1087-1088
Potawatomi Prophet, 1231
Shaman, 1395
Smohalla, 1424-1425
Tavibo, 1535
Tenskwatawa, 1550
totemism, 1577
visions, 1637
Natsaw, 1092
Natural astrology, 108
Natural Health (Periodical), 1092 Nature
animism, 58
formative causation theory of, 579
Yin and Yang, 1697-1698
Nature Spirits (or Elementals),
1092-1093
Fairies, 536-537
Slavs, 1417
Teutons, 1553
Naval, Divination by, 1143
Nayler, James, 1093
Naza “Spaceport,” 1093
NCGR. See National Council for Geocosmic Research
Ndembo (or Kita), 1093-1094
Nganga, 1191
Vanga, 1625
Near-Death Experience Project, 1094

1895
Lemuria, 905
“Oahspe,” 1129
transfiguration, 1585
Universal Faithists of Kosmon, 1610
Newcomb, Simon, 1110
NewHorizonNewEarth (online newsletter), 1111
Newhouse, Flower, 1112
The News (Journal), See Fortean Times
Newsletter of the Parapsychology Foundation, 1114

Newsletters
Agondonter (Newsletter), 17
Anomalous Thoughts, 59
Aquarapophant Pacifica, 60
Artific, 90
ASAP Newsletter, 95
ASSAP News, 96
Astralk, 111
Atlanta Astrologist, 113
Believe II, 165–166
BILK Newsletter, 184
California Institute of Transpersonal Psychology Newsletter, 242
Caula Pavonis, 256
Civile Network News (Periodical), 294
Computer UFO Newsletter, 321
Cosmic Voice, 341
FOG Newsletter, 577
Frontiers of Science Newsletter, 610
Genesis Update, 628
Grapevine, 660
Gray Barker’s Newsletter, 661
Inner Forum Newsletter, 791
Interpler, The, 791
Insight Northwest, 792
International Plant Consciousness Research Newsletter, 800–801
Interspace Link Confidential Newsletter, 804
Irdis, 808
Leading Edge: A Bulletin of Social Transformation, 999
Lago, 951
Newsletter, 1103
New Dimensions (Florida), 1111
New Frontiers Center Newsletter, 1111
New Horizons Newsletter, 1112
New Sense, 1114
NewHorizonNewEarth (online newsletter), 1111
Newsletter of the Parapsychology Foundation, 1114
Open Mind, The, 1145
Page Research Library Newsletter, 1168

Parapsychology, 1185
PARINFO, 1186
Probing the Unexplained, 1241
Prosperity Paths, 1244
Pyramid Guide, 1265
SAFE Newsletter, 1358
Sangha Newsletter, 1344
Skeptic, The, 1414
Spokeman, 1480
UFO Investigator, 1601
UFO Research Newsletter, 1602
Unknown Worlds, 1613

WIGA Newsletter, 1669
You’ and ESP', 1701
Newspaper Tests, 1114–1115
Newpapers
British Spiritual Telegraph (Newspaper), 218
Cosmos (Newspaper), 342
Heliy Report, The, 716
National Enquirer, 1090
Pioneer of Progress, The, 1214
Rebus (Newspaper), 1292
Newton, Florence, kiss, bewitchment by, 865
Newton, Sir Isaac
alchemy, 22
emotions, 496–497
miracles, 1042
telepathy, 1357
Notes, 111–111

Noetics, 1124
Nolan, Finsbarr, 1124–1125, 1392
North American UFO Federation, 1125
North Door, 1125
Northern UFO News (Periodical), 1125
Norton, Rosalind, 1125
Norton, Thomas, 1125–1126

alchemy, 22
Dalton, Thomas, 374
Nostradamus, The (Journal), 1126
Nostradamus, 1126
Cannon, Dolores, 247
de Wohl, Louis, 214
divination by, 428
Kraft, Karl Ernst, 875
Nostradamian, 1126
prophecy, 1244
Shipton, Mother, 1401
Novelli, 1127

Nouveau (Journal), 1127
Novomestsky, Abram
bio-introscopy, 185
Russia, 1354
NROOGD. See New Reformed Orthodox Order of the Golden Dawn
NSAC. See National Spiritualist Association of Churches
Nuan, 1127

Numbers
divination by, 87, 1127
Feng-shui, 555
“Golden Key,” 651–652
Magic Square, 965
magical numbers, 960–961
Medhurst, R. G., 1007

Numerology, 1127
Al, 29
English Qabala, 645
Gematria, 626–627

Numeromancy, 1127

Oates, Ernest Walter, 1129
British Memorial Institute and Library, 219
Duncan, Helen Victoria, 461
Harris, Bertha, 495
International Spiritualists Federation, 803
Morris, L. A. Meurig, 1054
Two Worlds, 1599
OBE (or OOBE or OOB). See Out-of-the-Body Travel
Obeah, 1129–1130, ... 1144
Oom the Omnipotent, 1144
Oomamcy, 1144
General Index Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology  5th Ed.
1898
General Index
Macumba, [104x661] exorcism, 1135
Society of the Mercurii, occultism, 1136
Meyrink, Gustav, 1034
Machen, Arthur (Llewellyn), 951
Gnosticism, 647
Watseka Wonder, 1653
Arizona Sky Watcher
Masters, 986
Masters, Maureen, 1654
Webb, James, 1655
Occultists
Adach, Frater, 6
Arthur, Gavin, 89–90
Bennett, Charles Henry Allan, 169–170
Blavatsky, Helena Petrovna, 194–196
Castaneda, Carlos, 253
Encausse, Gérard, 502
Gardner, F(Jeremiah) L(eigh), 619
Gurdjieff, Georgei Ivanovitch, 676
Hockley, Frederick, 729
Houghton, Michael, 749
Jones, Charles Stansfeld, 835
Juste, Michael, 845
Lancelin, Charles, 889
Leadbeater, Charles Webster, 899
Lévi, Éliphas, 908
List, Guido von, 926
Lutoslawski, Wincenty, 946
Mackenzie, Kenneth R. H., 952
Sinnett, A. P., 1411
Theon, Max, 1536–1557
Weschcke, Carl Llewellyn, 1660–1661
Westcott, William Wynn, 1662
Williamson, Cecil H., 1672
O Scholarzic, Norbert
Klusi, Frank, 867
materializations, 996, 997
O Scholarzic, Julian, 1137
apports, 77
Crocke, Sir William, 356
double, 439
ectoplasm, 472
electric phenomena, 488
fraud, 692
Guyk, Jan, 679
healing, psychic, 709
hypnotism, 768
levitation, 914
luminous phenomena, 945
materializations, 991
mediums, 1012
movement, paranormal, 1062, 1063, 1065, 1066
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
Palladino, Eusapia, 1171, 1172
plastics, 1221
Poland, 1224
premonitions, 1237
rappor, 1286
thoughtforms, 1565
Tomczyk, Stanislawa, 1575
Oculomancy, 1137
Od (Odic Force) (or Odyle), 1137
emanations, 497, 498
movement, paranormal, 1065
gorone, 1154
Reichenbach, Baron Karl von, 1298
O’Donnell, Elliott, 702, 1138
Oodor of Sanctity, 1138, 1197
Oodor Shuiko, 825
Odyssey, 165
Oenomancy, 1138
Oestreich, Traugott Konstantin, 1139
exorcism, 530
Germany, 632
Spiritualism—Germany, 1468
Offerings
Anathema, 48
Rome (Ancient), 1321–1322
Scotland, 1369
Office of Paranormal Investigations, 1139
Official UFO (Magazine), 1139
Ohuna, Toranosuke
Japan, 825
Japanese Society for Parapsychology, 826
O’Hara, Maureen, 1654
Ohio Sky Watcher (Periodical), 1139
Ointment, Witches’, 550, 1139–1140
Ojai Foundation, 1140
O’Key Sisters, Jane and Elizabeth, 1140
Elliotson, John, 493
metals in animal magnetism, 1030
Spiritualism, 1465
Oki, Masahiro, 1140
Oki Yoga, 1140
Olcott, Henry Steel, 1141
apports, 79
Besant, Annie, 177
Blavatsky, Helena Petrovna, 194–195
Compton, Elizabeth J., 320–321
Courmes, Dominique Albert, 346
Crookes, Sir William, 356
direct writing, 424
Eddy brothers, 474
Eglinton, William, 479
Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, 735
Judge, William Q., 841
Leadbeater, C. W., 899
Mahatma letters, 908
Sinnett, A. P., 1411
Slade, Henry, 1414–1415
Thayer, Mary Baker, 1555
Theosophical Society, 1557–1558
theosophy, 1559, 1560
Tingley, Katherine, 1574
transfiguration, 1585
Old Hat Used for Raising the Devil, 1136
“Old Moore,” 109, 1142
Old Religion, The, 1142
“Old Scratch,” 1142
Old, Walter G(orn), 1142
Astrological Society, 108
Leo, Alan, 906
Society for Astrological Research, 1427–1428
Oliveto Cita, 1142–1143
OM (or AUM), 977, 1143
Omn, Sydney, 1143
astrology, 189
Bordersine Magazine, 206
Llewellyn, George, 629
Omega New Age Directory, 1143
Omen, 1143
Cambridge, 244 maggie, 966
Malaysia, 971
portsents, 1250
quinting, 1483
wolf, 1683
wrath, 1688
O’nez, Reginald, O.P. (Order of Dominicans), 1143
Omphalomanacy, 1143
On Death and Dying (Elisabeth Kübler-Ross), 1534
Onec, Omne, 1143–1144
Oneiromancy, 1144
Onimancy (or Onomancy), 1144
Onton, 334, 1144
Onions, Oliver, 559
Onomancy (or Onomamancy), 1144
Onychamancy, 1144
Oom, 1144
Oom the Omnipotent, 1144
Oomamcy, 1144
Ooscopy and Oomantia, 1145
Opal, 1145
Open Deck, 1145
Open Letter (Newsletter). See Network News
Open Mind Magazine, 717
Henge of Keltria, 721
General Index
Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology  5th Ed. General Index
1899
[104x459]Orbas, [104x449]Orchis, Root of,
[104x677]Oracles,
[104x687]Ophites, 647–648
''Ophiel,'' 109,
Open Mind, The
Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology
Hermetic Alchemical Order of
New Reformed Orthodox Order
Holy Order of RaHoorKhuit,
Holy Order of MANS,
Gnostic Order of Christ,
Cross, Order of the,
Bards, Ovates & Druids, Order of,
August Order of Light,
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Ancient and Mystical Order of African Architects, Order of,
Trophonius, Oracle of, 663
Lapland, 893
Baia,
Amphiaraus, oracle of, 1147
American, 1148
New Templars, Order of,
Mopses, Order of the,
Immaculate Heart Servants of Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of Artemisian Order,
Jupiter Trophonius, oracle of,
Huaca,
Egyptian, 1147–1148
divination, 427
Delphi,
Delos, oracle of, 1147
Colophon, oracle of, 1147
Branchus, oracle of, 1147
Trophonius, Oracle of, 663
Lapland, 893
Pelagis, Zeus, Oracle of, 663
Trophonies, Oracle of, 663
Oiram, Arthur T(albot), 1148
Orbas, 1148
Orchis, Root of, 1148
Orders
African Architects, Order of, 15
Ancient and Mystical Order of Seekers, 48
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rosicrucians, 48–49
Artemisian Order, 89
August Order of Light, 116
Aurum Solis (Order of the Sacred Word), 119
Bardic, Ovates & Druids, Order of, 1148
Black Ram, Order of the, 1149
Cross, Order of the, 1149
Cubic Stone, Order of the, 1150
Eastern Star, Order of the, 11
Elec Cohens, Order of, 1148–1149
Gnostic Order of Christ, 647–648
Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of the, 650–651
Hermetic Alchemical Order of QBLH, 722
Holy Order of MANS, 736–737
Holy Order of RaHoorKhuit, 737
Immaculate Heart Servants of Mary, 780–781
Mopses, Order of the, 1052
Mystical Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm, 1082
Napunsasak in the West, Order of, 1149
New Reformed Orthodox Order of the Golden Dawn, 1113–1114
New Templars, Order of, 1149
Ordo Rosae Rubeae et Aureae Crucis (Order of Rose of Ruby and Cross of Gold), 1151
Ordo Stellae et Serpente, 1152
Ordo Templi Orientis, 1152
Ordo Templi Orientis (Roanoke, Virginia), 1153
Ordre Kabbalistique de la Rosecroix, 1153
Palladium, Order of, 1173–1174
Sacred Word, Order of the, 1150
Silver Star, Order of the, 1150
Solar Temple, 1432–1433
Sovereign and Military Order of the Temple of Jerusalem, 1447–1449
Star in the East, Order of the, 1150–1151
Star, Order of the, 1150, 1151
Stella Matutina (Order of the Morning Star), 1492
Templars, 1545–1547
Thelemic Golden Dawn, Order of the, 1151
White Brotherhood, 1665–1666
White Order of Thule, 1667
White Rose, Order of the, 1151
Ordo Rosae Rubeae et Aureae Crucis (Order of Rose of Ruby and Cross of Gold), 1151
Ordo Stellae et Serpente, 1152
Ordo Templi Orientis (Grant), 1152
Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO), 1152–1153
Germar, Karl Johannes, 633
Gnostic Catholic Church, 646
Grant, Kenneth, 660
Hubbard, L. Ron, 751
Kellner, Karl, 854–855
Metzger, Herman Joseph, 1032
Mysteria Mystica Aeterna, 1080
Mystica Mystica Maxima, 1090
sex magic, 1392
Theosophical Society, 1558–1559
Yarker, John, 1695
Ordo Templi Orientis (Roanoke, Virginia), 1153
Ordre Kabbalistique de la Rosecroix, 1153
Orenda, 1153
Oresme, Nicole, 1153
Organisation pour la Recherche en Psychotronic, 1154
Organization of Awareness (Canada), 1154
Organization of Awareness (Federal Way), 1154
Organization of Awareness (Olympia), 1154
Organizations
Academy of Parapsychology and Medicine, 6
Advanced Spiritual Church Healing Center, 12
American Academy of Astrologers, 41
American Academy of Gnostics, 40
Ancient and Mystical Order of Seekers, 48
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rosicrucians, 48–49
Arcane School, 84–85
As You Like It Library, 112
Astrologers’ Guild of America, Inc., 102
Astrological Lodge of London, 104
Austin Seth Center, 120
Australian Satanic Council, 124
Bach Centre, 140
Beshara (Community), 177–178
Bigfoot Research Project, 183–184
Biosophysical Institute, 186
Borderline Science Investigation Group, 206
British Spiritualists’ Lyceum Union, 218
Brotherhood of the White Temple, 221
Center for Archaeoastronomy, 261
Centre for Crop Circles Studies, 263
Centro di Ricerca Psichica del Convivio, 264
Centro Italiano de Parapsicologia, 264
Centro Studi Parapsicologici, 264
Children of Light, 277
Children of the Night, 278
Church of Christ, Scientist, 288
Circles Effect Research Unit, The, 296
Citizens Against UFO Secrecy, 297
Cloverleaf Connections, 304
Contact International, 328
Council on Spiritual Practices, 345
Count Dracula Fan Club, 345
Count Ken Fan Club, The, 346
Covenant of the Goddess, 347
Dicker, The, 415
ESP Laboratory of Texas, 516
Exceptional Human Experience Network, Inc., 528
Extraterrestrial Earth Mission, 532–533
Father’s House, 549
Fellowship of Isis, 553
Fellowship of Ma-Ion, 553
Fifth Epochal Fellowship, 560
Foundation Church of the Divine Truth, 583–584
Foundation Church of the New Jerusalem, 627
Gnomes Anonymous, 644
Gnostic Alchemical Church of Typhon—Christ, 645–646
Gnostic Order of Christ, 647–648
Golden Path, The, 652
Ground Saucer Watch (Organization), 671
Heliocentric Astrologers of North America, 717
Henge of Keltivia, 721
General Index

Holonomics Group, The 736
Initiates of Thanateros, 789–790
International Cooperation Council, 799
International Group of Theosophists, 799
J. Allan Hynek Center for UFO Studies, 817
Lagmann (Center), 887
Lia Light, 920
Lily Dale (Spiritualist Assembly), 923
Lively Stones World Healing Fellowship, Inc., 927
Martinus Institute of Spiritual Science, 984–985
Miss Lucy Westenra Society of the Undead, The, 1043
National Council for Geocosmic Research, 1089–1090
National Federation of Spiritual Healers, 1090
National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena, 1090–1091
National Investigations Committee on UFOs, 1091
National Spiritual Alliance of the United States of America, 1091
New Age Teachings, 1108
New York Circle, 1117
North American UFO Federation, 1125
Organisation pour la Recherche en Psychotronique, 1154
Para Committee, 1178
Parapsychologischen Arbeitsgruppe Basel, 1181
Parapsychology Research Group, Inc., 1185
Professional Psychics United, 1242
Psychic Detective Bureau, 1251
Psychic Esperanto League (Palka Esperantista Ligo), 1251
ReCreation, 1294
Religious Experience Research Centre, 1303–1304
Research Institute for Psi and Psychics, 1305
Research Institute for Supersensonic Healing Energies, 1305
Rosicrucian Anthroposophical League, 1324
Rosicrucian Fellowship, 1324
Sasquatch Investigations of Mid-America, 1347
Satanic Society, 1348
Saucer and Unexplained Celestial Events Research Society, 1350–1351
Scandinavian UFO Information, 1354
School of Economic Science, 1359
School of Universal Philosophy and Healing, 1359
Seekers, The, 1383
Self-Realization Fellowship, 1383–1384
Servants of Awareness, 1388
Servants of the Star and the Snake, 1388
Shrine of Sothys, 1404
Shrine of the Eternal Breath of Tao/Universal Society of the Integral Way, 1404
Space and Unexplained Celestial Events Research Society, 1448
Specialist Knowledge Services, 1452
Spiritual Advisory Council, 1462
Spiritual Institution, 1463
Spiritualists' National Union, 1478–1479
Studievereniging voor Psychical Research, 1502–1503
Supreme Council of the Independent Associated Spiritualists, 1511
Survival Joint Research Committee Trust, 1512
Survival League, The, 1512
Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth, 1555
3D Nibiruan Council, 1569
Totemism, 1577
Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma (TREAT), 1586
Triad Group, 1588
Trilite Seminars, 1588
Triskaidekaphobia Illuminatus Society, 1589
Union Spiritue Francaise, 1609
United Lodge of Theosophists, 1609
White Eagle Lodge, 1666–1667
White Temple Church, 1668
Wiccan Church of Canada, 1669
Witches Anti-Defamation League, 1682
World Congress of Faiths, 1686
World Goodwill, 1686
Wrekin Trust, 1688
Zen Studies Society, 1706
Orgone, 1154
acupuncture, 7
Grad, Bernard, 657
Reich, Wilhelm, 1297
Reichenbach, Baron Karl von, 1298
Origen, 1145, 1300
Origen, The, 1154–1155
Oriental Mythology, The (Book), 1155
Oris, 1155
Orihernomancy, 1155
Orphic Magic, 664
Orton, 1155–1156
Ort, Felix, 1156
Osborn, Arthur Walter, 1156
Osborn, Edward Collet, 1156
Osborne, Arthur Walter, 1278
Osbourne, Ozy, 1317
Oscilloclast, 1156. See also Black Boxes Auburn, Albert, 5
radionics, 1273
Osis, Karlis, 1156–1157
American Society for Psychical Research, 43
double, 441
Foundation for Reincarnation and Spiritual Research, 586
Mitchell, Edgar D., 1043
out-of-the-body-travel, 1161
Smith, Barbara Gosline, 1421
Swann, Ingo, 1513
Turner, Malcolm Elijah, 1594
Ullman, Mantague, 1602
Wheatley, J. M. O., 1664
Osmond, Humphrey (Fortescue), 731
Ossowiecki, Stephan, 1157–1158
aura, 117
cairvoyance, 298
Dingwall, E. J., 417
emotions, 497
Poland, 1224
psychometry, 1259
Richet, Charles, 1310
Oz, Eugen, 1158
automatic drawing and painting, 126
automatic speaking, 127
automatic writing, 131
De Brath, Stanley, 388
doubt, 441
Driesch, Hans, 454
Fortunato, Pascal, 581
France, 597
Guzyk, Jan, 679
hypnotism, 768
Institut Métapsychique International, 796
metagnomy, 1029
Meyer, Jean, 1034
movement, paranormal, 1067
Recueil Métapsychique, 1308
Schneider Brothers, Willi, 1358
Spiritualism—France, 1467
Szaszlasa P., 1484
Warcollier, René, 1650
Otami, Soji, 1158
Japan, 825
Japanese Society for Parapsychology, 826
Kyota, Masuaki, 865
OTO. See Ordo Templi Orientis
Ouija Board, 1158
Additor, 10
raps, 1289
seances, 1374
“Oosnekhat, The,” 1159
Our Lady of Endor Coven, 1159
Ouroboros (or Uroboros), 1159
Oursler, Will (William Charles), 1159
Ousby, William Joseph, 1159
Ouspensky, Peter Demianovitch, 1160
Bapak, 153
Dicker, 415
Fourth Way, 587
Gurdjieff, George Ivanovitch, 671
Nicoll, Maurice, 1121
Rajneesh, Bhagwan Shree, 1275
Russia, 1334
School of Economic Science, 1359
Walker, Kenneth Macfarlane, 1645
Out-of-the-Body Travel, 1160–1161
astral body, 100
astral projection, 101
Blackmore, Susan J., 1161

1900 dreaming, 451
ecsomatic experiences, 468
Hambaruan, 688
hypnogogic illusions, 1161
International Institute of Projectioidy and Conscientiology, 800
Lancelin, Charles, 889
Monroe, Robert Allen, 1047
Van Eeden, Frederik, 1625
Varley, Cromwell Fleetwood, 1628
visions, 1657
vitality, 1658
Owen, Alan Robert George, 1162
New Horizons, 1111
Owen, Iris M., 1162
Owen, Robert George, 1162
Owen, Robert, 1163
Owen, Robert Dale, 1163
Owen, Robert Dale—1163
Owen, Robert Dale, 1163
Owen, Robert, 1165–1167
Owen, Robert Dale, 1163
animals, 57
Chambers, Robert, 268
communication (between living
and dead), 316
direct writing, 422
Fox Sisters, Kate, 588
Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, 735
"King, Katie," 863
materializations, 987, 993
Modern Times, The Socialist
Community of, 1044
Moses, William Stanton, 1058
movement, paranormal, 1064
Owen, Robert, 1163
raps, 1287
Slater, Thomas, 1416
Owens, Ted, 1163
Owls, 1372
Oxford Golden Dawn Occult Society, 1163
Oxley, William biological phenomena, 185
materializations, 993
Monck, Rev. Francis Ward, 1046
plastics, 1222
Oz Factor, 1164
Ozanne, Charles Eugene, 1163–1164
Psychical Research Foundation,
1250
Rhine, J. B., 1309
Roll, William George, Jr., 1319
P
Paar, Jack, 1022
Pacific Neuropsychiatric Institute, 1165
Neppe, Vernon M., 1103
Pack, John Le(e), 1165
Paids with the Devil, 1165–1167
fascination, 547
Godie, Isobel, 657
Gonne, Edith Maud, 653
Grand Geome, 659
Satanic Society, 1348
Thomas Aquinas, 1562
Padmasambhava, Guru
Tarthang, Tulku, 1535
Tibet, 1570–1571
Paddock, Sid, 1167
Pagan Alliance, 1167–1168
Paganism
Adler, Margot, 11
Alliance of Solitary Practitioners, 11
American Vinland Association, 43
Angelecasae Ealdriht, 54
Aquarian Tabernacle Church, 82
Covenant of Unitarian Universalist
Pagans, 347–348
Judith, Anodea, 841
Knight, Richard, 868
obsession and possession, 1135
Ring of Thoth, 1313
Waldershams, 1670
Page Research Library Newsletter, 1168
Pagenstecher, Gustav, 1168
psychometry, 1258, 1259
Zierold, Maria Reyes, 1707
Pagnini, Evelyn, 1535
Paigoels, The, 1168
Painting, Automatic. See Automatic
Drawing and Painting
Painting, Direct. See Direct Drawing and Painting
Palingenesis, 1168–1170
Palfisy, Bernard
automatic drawing and painting, 126
dreams, 450
Palladianism, 1629
Palladino, Enaspea, 1170–1173
Aksakof, Alexander N., 20
apports, 80
astronomical communications, 111
aura, 118
Baggally, William Wortley, 142
Bianchi, P. Benigno, 182
Bottazzi, Filippo, 207–208
Bozzano, Ernesto, 209
Brofferio, Angelo, 229
Carrington, Hereward, 251
Cvidia, Ercole, 276
Cotton, Angelielle, 342
Crookes, Sir William, 356
De Fonteny, Guillaume, 391
de Vese, Count Cesar Baud, 408 Desoray, Max., 406
direct writing, 422
dream, 441
dream body, 448
Du Prorl, Baron Carl, 462
ectoplasm, 470, 471, 472
electric phenomena, 1064
elopement of the human body, 495
Emants, Marcellus, 499
Ermacora, Giovanni Battista, 514
exteriorization of motricity, 551
Fielding, (Francis) (Henry)
Everard, 552
Flammarion, Camille, 571
fraud, 601–602
Gazzera, Linda, 624
Hodgson, Richard, 729
Holland, 733
identity, 777
Imoda, Enrico, 781–782
Institut Général Psychologique, 795
Italy, 813
Jastrow, Joseph, 827
"King, John," 862
levitation, 914
light, 921
Lodge, Sir Oliver, 929–930
Lombroso, Cesare, 992
materializations, 987, 988, 991, 998
matter passing through matter, 1000, 1001
Maxwell, Joseph, 1003
mediums, 1012, 1013, 1014, 1015
Morselli, Enrico, 1057
movement, paranormal, 1064, 1065, 1064, 1066
music (paranormal), 1075
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
Groszicz, Julian, 1137
perfumes, 1198
Perovsky-Petrov-Solovovo, Count,
1199
Piper, Leonora E., 1215
plastics, 1221
Poland, 1224
psychic force, 1252
psychical research, 1248, 1249
raps, 1288–1290
Rayleigh, Lord, 1292
reincarnation, 1301
Richet, Charles, 1310
Rochas d’Aiglun, Eugene Auguste-
Albert de, 1316
Schreneck-Notzing, Baron Albert
von, 1359
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407
Society for Psychological Research, 1429
Spiritualism—Great Britain,
1470–1471
Spiritualism—Italy, 1472
Strutt, John William (3rd Baron Rayleigh), 1502
Switzerland, 1518
table-turning, 1522
trance, 1580–1581
trance personalities, 1583
Willis, F. E. H., 1674
winds (paranormal), 1676
Palladium, Order of, 1173–1174
Palmer, Raymond Alfred, 1174
Fate (Magazine), 548–549
Search Magazine, 1378
Shaver, Richard S., 1396
Subterranean Cities, 1504
Palmistry, 1174–1175
Abyakoon, Cyrus D. F., 2
Bashir, Mir, 159
Cheirological Society of Great Britain (Dukes), 274–275
Chirognomy, 283
Dermatoglyphics, 401
gypsies, 681
Pazzoni Brothers, 1175
teleportation, 1543
xenoglossy, 1692

1901
Central Psi Research Institute, 263
evidence, 525–526
France, 597–598
Germany, 632–633
Holland, 732–733
India, 787
Ireland, 808
Italy, 813–814
Jacobi, Jolande Zekacs (Mrs. Andrew Jacobi), 819
Jafé, Aniela, 83
Japan, 825
Laboratoire Universitaire de Parapsychologie et d’Hygiène Mental, 885 metapsychics, 1030
miracles, 1042
Randall, John L., 1281
reincarnation, 1303
Russia, 1354
Scotland, 1370
Switzerland, 1518
telepathy, 1540–1541
in United States, 39
Parapsychology Abstracts International. See Exceptional Human Experience (Abstracts)
Parapsychology Association of Riverside, 1185
Parapsychology Bulletin, 1185
Parapsychology Foundation, 1185
founding of, 39
Garwood, Eileen J., 621
Parapsychology: The Indian Journal of Parapsychological Research, 1186
Parapsychology Laboratories
Abteilung für Psychologie und Grenzgebiete der Psychologie des Psychologischen Instituts der Universität Freiburg, 5
McDonnell Laboratory for Psychic Research, 1004
Parapsychology Laboratory (Duke University), 1005, 1157, 1185, 1308–1309
Parapsychology Laboratory (Netherlands), 1185
Parapsychology (Newsletter), 1185
Parapsychology Now (Journal), 1185
Parapsychology Research Group, Inc., 1185
Parapsychology Review, 1185–1186
Parapsychology Sources of Information Center. See Exceptional Human Experience Network, Inc.
Parascience Proceedings, 1186
Parascience Research Journal, 1186
Paraskeva, Saint, 1186
Penfield, Wilder, 850
Pentacle (or Pantacle or Pentagram), 298
Pentacostal Christianity
healing by faith, 712
obsession and possession, 1135
speaking in tongues, 1576–1577
Pentecost Miracles (with D. D. Home), 1194–1195
Pepper, S., 329–330, 613, 1195
Percival, 1196
Percival, F. W., 1058
Percival, Harold Waldwin, 1196
Perelandra, 1196
“Perfect Sermon,” 1196
Perfumes, 1138, 1197–1198
Periodicals
Age of Progress, The, 16
Alternate Perceptions, 34
Association pour la Recherche d’Information sur l’Esoterisme, 99
Awareness, 134
Banner of Light, 151
Biological Review, 185
Blätter Aus Vorwort, 194
Blue Star Gazette, 199
Caballers Astrologiques, 241
Canadian UFO Report, 246
Ceramologist, The, 266
Christian Spiritualist, The, 285
Circle Network News, 294
Circulator, The, 296
Cosmology Newslink, 342
Crop Watcher, The, 357
Fasting Saucer Review, 576
Flying Saucers International, 576
Folklore Frontiers, 577
Fortean, 581
Gnosis, 644–645
Golden Age (Periodical), 650
Green Egg, 667
Informations de Parapsycologie, 789
Isan News, 809–810
Kandalam Quarterly, 883
Light Messenger, The, 922
Light Times, 790
Messenger, The, 1029
Midwest Psychic News, 1036
Moonsign Book, 1052
Natural Health, 1092
Neometa physical Digest, 1100
Network News, 1104
New Consciousness Sourcebook, 1110–1111
New Dimensions (England), 1111
New Perspectives, 1113
New Thought, 1116
New Thought, The, 1116
Northern UFO News, 1125
Odyssey, 165
Ohio Sky Watcher, 1139
Parascience Proceedings, 1186
Parascience Research Journal, 1186
Pathways, 1191
Pathways Research, 1191
Path of Gnostic Light, 1190–1191
Path, The, 1189–1190
reincarnation, 1301
Sanyojanas, 1345
Tao, 1531
Patheticism, 1190
Pathways, 1191
“Patience Worth,” 1191
Hamilton, T. Glen, 688
Neilhardt, John G., 1099
Prince, Walter Franklin, 1240
Paton, Mrs., 80, 1191
Patterson, Mrs. S. E., 1191, 1393
Pausanias
oracle of Amphiparus, 1147 oracle of Jupiter Trophonius, 1147
Pauwel, Louis, 272
Peale, Norman Vincent
Belk Psychiatric Research Foundation, 166
mind cure, 1039
PEAR. See Princeton Engineering Anomalies Research Pearce, Hubert E., Jr.
psychophysics, 1181–1182
Pratt, J. G., 1234
Pearls, 979, 1192
Pederson-Krag, Geraldine Huanaarya, 1192
Pebbles, (James Martin), 226, 1192
Pegomancy, 1192
Pele dan, Joseph
l’Ordre de la Rose Croix
Catholicque, du Temple et du Graal, 936
l’Ordre Kabbalistique de la Rose Croix, 936
“Pelham, George,” 1193
communication (between the living and the dead), 317, 318
“Phinuit,” 1207
Piper, Leonora E., 1214
trance personalities, 1583
Pellet Reading (or Billet Reading), 298, 1193
Pellevosen, 1193
Pencovic, Francis Heindswater, 298
Penfield, Wilder, 850
Pentacle (or Pentacle or Pentagram), 1194
Al, 20
magical diagrams, 960
microcosm vs., 1036
Y-Kim, 1698
Peale, Norman Vincent
mind cure, 1039
Pears, 979, 1192
Pederson-Krag, Geraldine Huanaarya, 1192
Pebbles, (James Martin), 226, 1192
Pegomancy, 1192
Pele dan, Joseph
l’Ordre de la Rose Croix
Catholicque, du Temple et du Graal, 936
l’Ordre Kabbalistique de la Rose Croix, 936
“Pelham, George,” 1193
communication (between the living and the dead), 317, 318
“Phinuit,” 1207
Piper, Leonora E., 1214
trance personalities, 1583
Pellet Reading (or Billet Reading), 298, 1193
Pellevosen, 1193
Pencovic, Francis Heindswater, 1193
Krisha Venta, 878
WFLK Fountain of the World, 1064
Penfield, 817, 1193
Penellum, Terence Michael, 1194
Penfield, Wilder, 850
Penn and Teller, 965
Penn, William, 1326
Pentacle (or Pentacle or Pentagram), 1194
Al, 20
magical diagrams, 960
microcosm vs., 1036
Y-Kim, 1698
Pentacostal Christianity
healing by faith, 712
obsession and possession, 1135
speaking in tongues, 1576–1577
Pentecost Miracles (with D. D. Home), 1194–1195
Pepper, S., 329–330, 613, 1195
Percival, 1196
Percival, F. W., 1058
Percival, Harold Waldwin, 1196
Perelandra, 1196
“Perfect Sermon,” 1196
Perfumes, 1138, 1197–1198
Periodicals
Age of Progress, The, 16
Alternate Perceptions, 34
Association pour la Recherche d’Information sur l’Esoterisme, 99
Awareness, 134
Banner of Light, 151
Biological Review, 185
Blätter Aus Vorwort, 194
Blue Star Gazette, 199
Caballers Astrologiques, 241
Canadian UFO Report, 246
Ceramologist, The, 266
Christian Spiritualist, The, 285
Circle Network News, 294
Circulator, The, 296
Cosmology Newslink, 342
Crop Watcher, The, 357
Fasting Saucer Review, 576
Flying Saucers International, 576
Folklore Frontiers, 577
Fortean, 581
Gnosis, 644–645
Golden Age (Periodical), 650
Green Egg, 667
Informations de Parapsycologie, 789
Isan News, 809–810
Kandalam Quarterly, 883
Light Messenger, The, 922
Light Times, 790
Messenger, The, 1029
Midwest Psychic News, 1036
Moonsign Book, 1052
Natural Health, 1092
Neometa physical Digest, 1100
Network News, 1104
New Consciousness Sourcebook, 1110–1111
New Dimensions (England), 1111
New Perspectives, 1113
New Thought, 1116
New Thought, The, 1116
Northern UFO News, 1125
Odyssey, 165
Ohio Sky Watcher, 1139
Parascience Proceedings, 1186
Parascience Research Journal, 1186
Pathways, 1191
Phenomena News, 1203
Psyche, 1247
Res Bureaux Bulletin, 1305
Review of Indian Spiritualism, 1306
General Index

control, 329–330, 331–332
Delphic Circle, 394
Julia’s Bureau, 841
Lodge, Sir Oliver, 930
materializations, 993
Phantasmaria, 1203
Phantoms of the Living (E. Gurney, F. W. H. Myers, F. Podmore), 67–68, 69, 70, 71, 72
Phantom Ships. See Sea Phantoms and Superstitions Phantoms
Barghest (or Barghest), 156
materializations, 989–990, 991–993
Rome (Ancient), 1321
Tulpa, 1592
Phelps, Elakim, 1203
Davis, Andrew Jackson, 381
fraud, 602
haunting, 704
Hieroglyphs, 725
levitation, 910
plastics, 1222
poltergeists, 1225–1226
raps, 1286
Phenomena
Crop Circles, 357
death, 385–386
elongation of the human body, 494–495
luminous, 945–945
magnetic phenomena, 966
materialization, 987–998
Metempsychosis, 1030
Micro-PK, 1036
objective phenomena, 1130
Oz Factor, 1164
parapsychic phenomena, 1181 precipitation of matter, 1236 psi, 1246
psychokinesis, 1256
Spiritualism, 1473–1474
Spontaneous, 1481
Subjective, 1504
telekinesis, 1536–1537
telepathy, 1537–1541
telephone calls, 1541–1542
telethetiasia, 1544–1545
temperature changes, 1545
transposition of the senses, 1585
weeping statues, 1653–1656
PhenomeNews (Periodical), 1203
Philadelphia Experiment, The,
1203–1204
Philalethes, Eunigenis, 1204. See also Vaughan, Thomas
alchemy, 23
elixir of life, 492
Rosicrucians, 1326
St. John’s Crystal Gold, 1496
Vaughan, Thomas, 1630
Philalethes (or Philaletha), Eirenaeus, 959, 1204
“Philip,” 1204–1205
channeling, 270
circles, Spiritualist, 296
color, 329–330
“King, John,” 862
obession and possession, 1135
Owen, Iris M., 1162
trance personalities, 1583
Philip IV (France), 1307
Templars, 1545
Philippines, 925–926
Philips, James B., 1205
Philimore, Mercy, 331, 1205
Phillips, Peter
Kayota, Masakazi, 865–866
McDonnell Laboratory for Psychic Research, 1004
Philosophers
Alphonse the Jew, 4–5
Acontius, Jacobus, 6
Albertus Magnus (Albert of Cologne), 21
Alkindis (or Alkindis), 26
Apollonius of Tyana, 62–63
Artephius, 89
Aurobindo, Sri, 118–119
Averbouw, 153
Aveccenna, 154
Bacon, Roger, 141–142
Bergson, Henri, 172–173
Bray, Charles, 212
D’Escapagnet, Jean, 404
Du Pré, Baron Carl, 462
Gibran, Khalil, 637
Hartmann, Carl Robert Eduard von, 696
Kant, Immanuel, 849
Krishnamurti, Jiddu, 878
Krohn, Sven I., 878
Lane, David Christopher, 890
Lang, Andrew, 890
Maimonides, Rabbi Moses, 969
Mullford, Prentice, 1069
Musix, C. A., 1072
Newbold, William Romaine, 1108
Oki, Masahiro, 1140
Peter of Abano (Petrus de Abano), 1202
Royce, Josiah, 1330
Saint-Martin, Louis Claude de, 1340–1341
Schiller, F. C. S., 1355
Solomon Ibn Gabirol, 1435
Valentine, Basil, 1617
Watts, Alan, 1654
Weizel, Aloys, 1658
Philosophers’ Stone, 1205–1206
Albertus Magnus, 21
alchemy, 23, 25
Alaric, 85
Barnaud, Nicholas, 157
elixir of life, 492
Glauber, Johann Rudolph, 644
mercury, 1024
Trévisan, Bernard of, 1587
Philosophical Research Society, 1206
“Philosophus,” 1206
Philostratus
Apollonius of Tyana, 62, 63
Athanas, 112
Secret Fire, 1379
“Phintius,” 1206–1207
“Pelham, George,” 1193
Piper, Leonora E., 1214–1215
Phonex: New Directions in the Study of Man (Journal), 1207
Phoenix, William, 1207
Phone-voyance, 300, 1207–1208
Photography. See also Spirit
Photography; Thought Photography
Barlow, Fred, 157
Beattie, John, 163–164
Buguet, Édouard, 227
Cottingley Fairies, 342–344
Deane, Ada Emma, 383
Extra, 552
Kirlian photography, 864–865
Face on Mars, 981–982
Serios, Ted, 1387
Photography, 1460–1461
Phoulka (or Puca), 1208
Pheno-Magnet and Mirror of Nature, The (Journal), 1208
Phreno-mesmerism (or Phreno-Phreno-Magnet and Mirror of Nature, The Journal), 1208
Phrygian Cap,
Phrenology,
Phreno-Magnet and Mirror of Nature, The 1208–1209
Phrenology,
Phrygian Cap,
Phrenology, 1208–1209
Phrygian Cap,
Phrenology, 1208–1209
Phrygian mysteries of Attis and Cybele, 1081
Phyllorhodomancy,
1209 Physical Body
etheric double, 520
monad, 1045
out-of-the-body-travel, 1160
theosophy, 1560, 1561
transfiguration, 1584–1585
White Eagle Lodge, 1667
worlds, planes, or spheres, 1687
Physical World, 1209
Physicians
Abraams, Albert, 5
Alexander of Tralles, 27
Assafly, Alain Jean Joseph, 96
Jarricot, Jean, 826–827
Jung-Stillig, Johann Heinrich, 842
Kapners, Jan, 850
Kubler-Ross, Elisabeth, 879
Laidlaw, Robert W(ordsworth), 886–887
Larcher, Hubert, 893–894
Lefebure, Francis, 903
Lhérimte, Jacques Jean, 920
Physiognomy, 1031,
1209–1210, 1213
Pia, Secundo, 1258
Pickering, Edward Charles, 1210
Pico della Mirandola, Giovanni, 1210
Pictures
Acheropite, 6
Belmez Faces, 166–167
Piddington, [John (George), 1210 cirrhovance, 300
cross-correspondence, 358
Hodgson, Richard, 730
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407–1408
Wingfield, Kate, 1677
Piddington, Sydney and Lesley, 1211,
1566
Pienna, Domenick Cuthbert, 1211
Pierart, Z. J., 1211
reincarnation, 1301
Spiritualism—France, 1467
vampire, 1622
Pierrakos, Eva, 153,
1211–1212
Pierrakos, John C., 1212
Barbara Brennan School of Healing, 155
Pierrakos, Eva, 1212
Pike, Albert, 1212–1213
devil worship, 413
Freemasonry, 606–607
Mackey, Albert Gallatin, 952
Walder, Phileas, 1644
Pike, James A(lfbert), 1213
Ford, Arthur Augustus, 578
Spiritualism—United States,
1476–1477
Pilgrim’s Guide to Planet Earth: A
New Age Traveler’s Handbook &
Spiritual Directory, 1213
Pincock, Hugh, 1213–1214, 1452
Pinto, 1214
Pio, Padre (da Pietralcini), 1214
Conyers, Georgia, 332
dernography, 402
stigmata, 1494–1495
Pioneers of Progress, The (Newspaper), 1214
Pioneers in Space (George Adamski), 9
Piper, Leonora E(velina Simonds), 1214–1217
automatic writing, 128, 130
communication (between living and dead), 315, 316–317, 318
control, 328–329, 330
cross-correspondence, 358
death, 386
dreams, 451
fraud, 601
“George Pelham,” 1193
Gurney, Edmund, 677
Hodgson, Richard, 729–730
hypnotism, 768
Hyslop, James Hervey, 770
identity, 777
“Imperator,” 782
influence, 789
James, William, 822
Johnson, Alice, 834
Lang, Andrew, 890
Leaf, Walter, 899
Lodge, Sir Oliver, 930
luminous phenomena, 943
mediums, 1011, 1012, 1014, 1015
Myers, A. T., 1078
Myers, Frederick William Henry,
1079
“Pelham, George,” 1193
perfumes, 1198
“Phinuit,” 1206–1207
Piddington, J. G., 1210
possession, 1251
psychic force, 1252
psychical research, 1249
psychometry, 1258
“Rector,” 1295
Richet, Charles, 1310
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407
Smee, Mrs., 1420
Society for Psychical Research, 1428
spirit hypothesis, 1458
Spiritualism—Great Britain,
1470–1471
Spiritualism—United States,
1476–1477
survival, 1160–1161
telepathy, 1539
Thompson, Rosina, 1563
time, 1573
trance, 1579, 1580, 1581
trance personalities, 1582–1583
Verrall, Margaret de Gaudrion
Merrifield, 1633
xenoglossy, 1691–1692
Pisces
astrological houses, 104
astrological signs, 107
Pius XII, Pope
apparitions of the Virgin Mary, 73
of Fatima, 1579–1580
Pixies, 671
PK, 1217.
See Psychokinesis
PKMB, 1217
Plata, Lotte (Mme. von Strahl), 1217, 1258
Placement Test, 1217
Placidus of Titius (or Titus), 1217
Planchette, 1218
ouija board, 1158
raps, 1289
seances, 1374
Planes. See Worlds, Planes, or Spheres
Planetary Light Association, 1219
Planetary Logos, 1219
Planetary Spirits, 1219
Planetary Travels, 1219–1220
Planets
Albambaz or (Abu-Maaschar), 22
alfridarya, 28
Asteroid, 104–106
ceremonial magic, 265
imaginary, 890–891
Kepler, Johann, 856
Mars, face on, 981–982
od, 1137
planetary travels, 1219–1220
Quinconx, 1269
Umno Hoax, 1603
vedic astrology, 1053–1063
Velkovskiy, Immanuel, 1632
Witte, Alfred, 1683
Plants
amulets, 45
Baars, 137
basil, 160
Darwin, Charles, 1281
divination using, 207, 375, 1209
emanations, 498–499
ESP in, 140–141
evergreens, 525
ginseng, 641–642 hazel tree, 709 heliotrope, 717
holly, 734
Kolisko effect, 872 mandrake, 974
mushrooms, 1073
napellus, 1088
orchis, root of, 1148
palingenesy, 1168–1170
psychic aspects of, 1220–1221
Sheffidake, Rupert, 1397
sorrel leaf, 1438
St. John’s Wort, 1496
totemism, 1577
vervain, 1634
Wortcunning, 1688
zoaphite, 1708
thoughtforms, 1565
Worcester, Constance Rulison, 1685
Zierold, Maria Reyes, 1707
Princeton Engineering Anomalies Research (PEAR), 1241
Printz, Thomas. See Morya, Master
Private UFO Investigations (Group), 1241
Probe—The Unknown (Magazine), 1241
Probe (Woonsocket) (Magazine), 1241
Progressive Utilization Theory (Prout), 1242
Progressive Thinker, The Progressive Library & Spiritual Institution,
Progressive Psychics United, 1242
Procurement spells, 1454
Proclus
Neoplatonism, 1102
Rakoci, 1276
Procter & Gamble Logo, 1242
Procurement spells, 1454
Professional Psychics United, 1242
Progoff, Ira, 1056
Progressive Library & Spiritual Institution,
Progressive Thinker, The (Newspaper),
Progressive Utilization Theory (Prout), 47, 1346
Projects
.Alpha, 1067, 1282
Ball-of-Light International Data Exchange, 149
Blue Book, 12, 1604
Comparative Psychophysiological Study of Living Adept Project, 320
Grudge, 1604
Loch Ness & Morar Project, 929
Near-Death Experience Project, 1094
Project Starlight International, 1243
Project VISIT—Vehicle Internal Systems Investigative Team, 1243
Shroud of Turin Research Project, 1401–1405
Sign, 1604
Skynet (Project), 1414
STAR GATE, 41, 636
Starlight International, 1243
ULTRA, 655
VISIT—Vehicle Internal Systems Investigative Team, 1243
Prophecy, 1243–1244
Angel of North America, 52
clairvoyance, 297
Greece, 663
gypsies, 681
Malachy Prophecies, 970
Myanmar, 1077
nichus, 1119
Sibyline Books, 1406
Teutons, 1553–1554
Prophecy, Mark
Ascended Masters, 92
Bridge to Spiritual Freedom, 216
Church Universal and Eternal, 293
Morya, Master, 1057
"Prophecy, The," 1244
Propaganda and Propagettes
Alexanderines Paphlagonian, 27
Alroy (or Alroy), David, 34
baks, 146–147
Banyanya, Thomas, 152
Deganawidah, 391–392
Dixon, Jean, 454
Lady of Lawyers, 886
Nostradamus, 1126
Potawatomi Prophet, 1231
Scallion, Gordon Michael, 1351
Shipton, Mother, 1401–1402
Sibyl, 1406
Slocum, John, 1419–1420
Southcott, Joanna, 1445–1447
Tavibo, 1553
Tenskwatawa, 1550
Veleda, 1632
Prophecy, The (Newsletter), 1244
Prosperos, The, 1244–1245, 1646
Protection Against Fascination, 547–548
Protective Spells, 1453–1454
Protestant Reformation
Germany, 631
Scotland, 1366
Prout. See Progressive Utilization Theory (Prout)
Proxy Sitting, 1245
Pruden, Laura A., 1245
direct writing, 423
slate writing, 1417
"Prudens," 1245
Pryce, James Morgan, Jr., 1245
Pseudoptepigrapha, 111
Psi, 1246
Anpsi, 59
applied psi, 75–76
In-Psiler, The (Newsletter), 791
INPSITE (Psychical Research Database), 791
paragnost, 1180
psychonautics, 1247
Randall, John L., 1281
random event generator, 1281
Psi Center. See Exceptional Human Experience Network, Inc.
Psi-Conducive, 1246
"psi enhancement" paradigm, 1536
Psi-Forum (Journal), 1246
Psi-Hitting, 1246
Psi-Inhibiting, 1246
Psi-line Database System, 1246, 1665
Psi Magazine, 1246
Psi-Mediated Instrumental Response, 1246
Psi-Missing, 1246
Psi Network, 1246
Psi News, 1246
Psi Patterns (Journal), 1246
Psi Phenomena
Ocellari Americana magazine, 1136
Office of Paranormal Investigations, 1139
psionics, 1246
Taetsch, Robert Leonard, 1524
Psi Research (Journal), 1246
Psi Science Institute of Japan, 1247 Psi-Tel, 1246
Psi-Trailng, 1247
Psi-conductive, 76
Psi-dynamics, 1273
Psi-Technique, 1247
Psychiactrists
Cannon, Alexander, 246–247
Karagulla, Shafica, 850
Kat, Willem, 852
Laidlaw, Robert W(ordsworth), 886–887
Lombroso, Cesare, 932
Psic, 1247
Psychiactrists
Cannon, Alexander, 246–247
Karagulla, Shafica, 850
Kat, Willem, 852
Laidlaw, Robert W(ordsworth), 886–887
Lombroso, Cesare, 932
Psiic, 1247
Psiconics, 1246
applied psi, 76
Psi-dynamics, 1273
Psi-Technique, 1247
Psychiactrists
Cannon, Alexander, 246–247
Karagulla, Shafica, 850
Kat, Willem, 852
Laidlaw, Robert W(ordsworth), 886–887
Lombroso, Cesare, 932
Physic, 1251–1253
against fascination, 548
psionics, 1246
Psi Psionics, 1246
Psychiactrists
Cannon, Alexander, 246–247
Karagulla, Shafica, 850
Kat, Willem, 852
Laidlaw, Robert W(ordsworth), 886–887
Lombroso, Cesare, 932
Physic, 1251–1253
against fascination, 548
telekinesis, 1536–1537
Physic Immunity to Fire, 504
Psi-phenomena, 1246
Psychiactrists
Cannon, Alexander, 246–247
Karagulla, Shafica, 850
Kat, Willem, 852
Laidlaw, Robert W(ordsworth), 886–887
Lombroso, Cesare, 932
Physic, 1251–1253
against fascination, 548
telekinesis, 1536–1537
Physic Imrnunity to Fire, 504
Psi-phenomena, 1246
Physic Immunity to Fire, 504
Physic Institute of America, 1251
Physic Institute of America Special Interest Group, 1254
Physic Science, 1254
Psi-phenomena, 1246
Physic Science International Special Interest Group, 1254
Physic Science (Journal), 1254
Physic Sports, 1571
Physic Surgery, 1254–1255
Physic Telephone, 1255
Physic Yellow Pages, The, 1255
Physi Phenomena chemical phenomena (in séances), 275
dreams, 450–451
emanations, 496–499
Epworth Phenomena, 512
hypnotism, 767–768
metal bending, 1029–1030
naphology, 1088
pellet reading (or billet reading), 1193
personation, 1201–1202
psychohragic diathesis, 1260
table-turning (or table-tipping), 1521–1523
United States, 1475
Versailles Adventure, 1634
Vril, 1642
Psychical Research, 1247–1250. See also specific topics
Academia de Estudio Psichicos
“Cesare Lombroso,” 6
American Institute of Religion and Psychical Research, 6 Anytime of Religion and Parapsychology, 41 aparitions, 68, 66
Applied Psi, 75–76
Argentina, 85–86
Australia, 124
book tests, 205–206
Broeken Tryst, 220
Callaway, Hugh G., 242
Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal, 312–313
dowsing, 452
evidence, 525–526
Farajou Data Base, 545
France, 597
Germany, 632–633
government-sponsored, 655–656
Greene, 666
Grévillé, T. N. E., 669
Grünewald, Fritz, 672
hallucination, 680–687
Hamilton, T. Glen, 688
Haunt Hunters, 701
Haunting Society of Psychical Research, 707
Hollande, 723–723
Identity of spirits, 776–778 immortality, 781
India, 787
INPSITE (Psychical Research Database), 791
Institut Général Psychologique, 795
Institute of Psychophysical Research, 795
International Association for Religion and Parapsychology, 798
International Congress of Psychical Research, 798
International Institute for Psychical Investigation, 799–800
International Journal of Parapsychology, 800
International Society of Information Science, 802
Ireland, 808
Italy, 813–814
Japan, 825
Jarricot, Jean, 826–827
Leitch, Francis, 903
McDougall, William, 1005
metapsychics, 1030
Meyer, Jean, 1034
New Zealand, 1119
objective phenomena, 1130
obsession and possession, 1133
Pacific Neuropsychiatrioc Institute, 1165
Parapsychology Research Laboratory, Duke, 1240–1250
Poland, 1224
potteregists, 1225, 1226–1227
possession, 1231
santophone, 1232
Rocco, 1344–1345
Scandinavia, 1354
Society for Psychical Research, 1428–1429
Spain, 1450
spirit hypothesis, 1458–1459
Sweden, 1514
Switzerland, 1518
United States, 1476
views of obsession, 1132–1134
Psychical Research Foundation, Inc., 1250
out-of-the-body-travel, 1161
Ozanne, Charles E., 1164
Rhine, J. B., 1309
Theta, 1561
Psychical Researchers
Abbott, David P. 2
Allford, Alan F., 28
Allison, Lydia W., 31–32
Anweber, Phyllis M. H., 115
Balfour, Arthur James, 147
Balfour, Gerald William, 147
Baraduc, Hyppolite, 154
Barrett, Sir William Fletcher, 158–159
Batchelor, Kenneth J., 161
Besterman, Theodore, 178
Bird, J. Malcolm, 186–187
Boirac, Emile, 201
Bottazzi, Filippo, 207–208
Buzanno, Ernesto, 208–209
Brown, William, 223
Burn, Sir Cyril, 230
Carrington, W. Whiteley, 249–250
Carrington, Hereward, 250–251
Coleman, Loren, 307
Colley, Thomas, 310
Cox, Edward William, 348
Cox, William Edward, 348
Crawford, William Jackson, 351–352
Crookes, Sir William, 354–356
Cutten, John H., 370
De Brath, Stanley, 388
De Fontenay, Guillaume, 391
De Vesme, Count Cesar Baudi, 408
Delanne, Gabriel, 392–393
Droogwall, E. J., 417–418
Dodds, Eric Robertson, 436
Driesch, Hans, 454
Endless Cord, Tying Knots in, 502
Fielding, Everard, 552
Firebrace, Roy Charles, 566–567
Flammarion, Camille, 571–572
Flournoy, Theodore, 573–574
Fodor, Nandor, 576–577
Garland, Hamlin, 620
Geley, Gustave, 624–625
Gibson, Edmund P., 637
Gilbert, Mostyn, 638
Goodrich-Freer, Ada, 654
Gruber, Karl, 672
Gurney, Edmund, 677
Hall, James A., 685
Hall, Prescott F., 685
Hall, Trevor H., 696
Hankey, Muriel W. Arnold, 689
Hansel, C. E. M., 690
Hansen, F. C. C., 690
Harr, Melvin, 694
Hastad, John B., 697
Hastings, Arthur Claude, 697
Haynes, René, 708
Heard, Gerald, 714–715
Hellenbach, Baron Lazar De Baczolay, 718
Hellström, Eva Backström, 719
Hibbert, Benson, 721
Hettenger, J., 724
Heymans, Gerardus, 724–725
Hevwood, Rosalind, 725
Hill, J. Arthur, 726
Hodgson, Richard, 729–730
Hoebens, Piet Hein, 730
Hobenwarter, Peter, 731
“Holland, Mrs.,” 733
Hollener, Eugene M., 733
Holms, A. Campbell, 735–736
Holzer, Hans W., 737
Hollin, Harry, 745
Houston, Jean, 749
Huby, Pamela M. Clark, 751
Hudson, Thomson Jay, 752
Humpfiener, Winfried G., 755
Hyslop, George Hall, 770
Hyslop, James Hervey, 770
Imoda, Enrico, 781–782
Inman, Walter, 809
Lombroso, Cesare, 932
marksitization, 988
Maxwell, Joseph, 1003
McKenzie, James Hewart, 1005
Medhurst, R. G., 1007
Mitchell, T. W., 1044
Murray, Gilbert, 1071–1072
Musso, J. Ricardo, 1076
Myers, Frederic William Henry, 1078–1079
Naddoo, Alighiero, 1087
Newbold, William Romaine, 1108
Ochorowicz, Julian, 1137
Owen, Iris M., 1162
Pagenstecher, Gustav, 1168
Petrovsky-Petrov-Solovovo, Count, 1199
Pincock, Hugh, 1213–1214
Podmore, Frank, 1223–1224
Price, Harry, 1259
Prince, Morton, 1240
Prince, Walter Franklin, 1240
Randall, Edward Caleb, 1281
Richet, Charles, 1310–1311
Rochas d’Aiglun, Lt.-Col. Eugene Auguste-Albert de, 1316
Rodhe, Gosta, 1317
Sargent, Epes, 1346
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert von, 1359–1360
Sidgwick, Eleanor Mildred
Balfour, 1407
Tabori, Paul, 1524
Thomas, Jane Frederick, 1561
Thury, Marc, 1570
Tillyard, R. J., 1573
Tischner, Rudolf, 1574
Tubby, Gertrude Ogden, 1591
Underwood, Peter, 1603–1604
Van Busseghach, J. G., 1624
Van Eeden, Frederik, 1625
Veeral, Margaret de Gaudrion, 1633
Walther, Gerda, 1649
Worcester, Elwood, 1685–1686
Psychics
Allison, Dorothy, 31
Browne, Sylvia, 223
Campagni, Roberto, 245
Cayce, Edgar, 257
Collins, Doris, 310
DeLouise, Joseph, 394
Dykshoorn, Marinus Bernardus, 463–464
Fleming, Alice Kipling, 572
Gill, Madge, 639
Huebner, Louise, 752
Hughes, Irene (Finger), 753
Hurkos, Peter, 756–757
Hus, Cecil, 757–758
International Psychiatric Register, 801
Jaegers, Beverley, 820
Johnson, Mary, 831–832
Jonsson, Olaf, 837
Kiyota, Masutaki, 865–866
Kulagina, Nina S., 881
Kuleshova, Rosa, 881
Logan, Daniel, 931
Lyttonel, Edith, 948
Manning, Matthew, 974–975
McMenagie, Joseph, 1006
Owens, Ted, 1163
Renier, Noreen, 1304–1305
Robbins, Shaw, 1514
Roberts, Jane, 1315
Stokes, Doris, 1497–1498
Van Gelder Kunz, Dora, 1625
Vaughan, Alan, 1629
Psychics & Mystics Fayne, 1254
Psychische Studien (Journal), 1255
Psycho-graphology, 1355
Psycho-Therapeutic Society, The, 1261
Psycho, 1255
Psychoenergetic (Journal), 1255
Psychognosis, 666
Psychograph, 1255
Psychography, 1255
Psychokinesis (PK), 1256
Anomalous Cognition Section, University of Amsterdam, 59
Biological Phenomena, 185
Holleran, Eugene M(artin), 733
Kulagina, Nina S., 881
Macro-PK, 954
marital arts, 983
metal bending, 1030
micro-PK, 1036
movement, paranormal, 1061
parapsychology, 1182
placement test, 1217
retropsychokinesis, 1305–1306
Russia, 1354
telephone calls from dead, 1541–1542
Psychological Society, The, 1256
Psychologists
Abrams, Stephen Irwin, 5
Adcock, C. J., 10
Cassoli, Piero, 233
Jacobi, Jolande Szekacs (Mrs. Andrew Jacobi), 819
Jaffe, Amiela, 83
Janet, Pierre, 822
Jastrow, Joseph, 827
Jung, Carl Gustav, 842
Kauf, Shrikishna Vasudeo, 848
Kripalu Center for Yoga and Health, 877
Kuppuswami, B., 883
Lawton, George, 897
LeCron, Leslie M., 901
Psychology, 1256
Psychomancy, 1257
Psychometria, 1050, 1257
Psychometry, 1257–1260
apparitions, 71
automatic writing, 129
Buchanan, Joseph Rhodes, 225–226
lucidity, 941
object reading, 1130
Ossoirwici, Stephan, 1157
Pagenstecher, Gustav, 1168
Plat, Lotte, 1217
Reese, Bert, 1295–1296
Psychophone, 1260
Psychophysical Research Laboratories, 1260
Psychophysical Systems, 86
Psychopism, 1260
Psychorchanic Diathesis, 1260
Psychosynthesis
Assagioli, Roberto, 96
Sasportas, Howard, 1346
Psychosynthesis Institute, 1261
Psychotherapy
Astrotherapy, 111–112
Daim, Wilfried, 373
Jacobi, Jolande Szekacs (Mrs. Andrew Jacobi), 819
UFO abduction, 3
Psychotronics and Folk Medicine
Psychotronics and Folk Medicine, 1261
Psychotropic research, 798
Pyllie, 1261
P’taah, 861
Prolemu, Claudius, 1261
Al-Bruni, 188
Placidus de Titius, 1217
zodiac, 1708
Publications
Anthropology of Consciousness, 60
Flying Saucer Chronicle, 576
FRNM Bulletin, 610
Himalayan News, 728
Horoscope Yearbook, 747
International Astrologer, The, 798
Kosmon University, 1074
Lyceum Banner, The, 947
Middelde Van Soldkapet for Parapsychology, 1007
Publications
Anthroposophic Press, 60
Human Potential Resources, Inc., 754
I.AM America, 773
Inner-Space Interpreters, 791
International Association for Psychotronic Research, 798
University Books, Inc., 1613
Putharich, Andrijia (Henry Karl), 1261–1262
Purification
Adhab-Algal, 11
Gehenna, 624
Purna Yoga (Journal), 1262
Purohit, Swami Shri, 1262–1263
Ireland, 807
Yeats, William Butler, 1696
Purrah, The, 1263–1264
Purse, Jach, 270
Purser (Journal), 1264
Purucker, Hobart Lorentz Gottfried de, 1264, 1574
Puthoff, Harold E., 1264
government-sponsored research on parapsychology, 655–656
Parapsychology Research Group, 1185
SRI International, 1483
Swann, Ingo, 1513–1514
Targ, Russell, 1532
Tart, Charles T., 1534
Pyramid Church of Truth and Light, 1265
Pyramid Guide (Newsletter), 1265
Pyramids and Pyramidsology, 1265–1266
Egypt, 483
Orion Mystery, The, 1155
Pyromancy, 1266
lychnomancy, 948
pyroscopy, 1266
scapulomancy, 1354
General Index
General Index

Annales des Sciences Psychiques, 58
apparitions, 68, 69
Arriola, Pepito, 88
automatic writing, 129
Beraud, Marthe, 171
Besterman, Theodore, 178
clarovoyance, 298, 299
Crandon, Mina Stinson, 330
cryptesthesia, 362
crystal gazing (or crystalloamancy), 363
De Braithe, Stanley, 388
de Vesme, Count Cesar Baudi, 408
death, 385
Delphic Circle, 394
direct writing, 422
dreams, 450
ectoplasmatism, 469, 470
Eglington, William, 480
emanations, 497, 498
Eva C., 521–522, 522
Faraday, Michael, 544
Fortuny, Pascal, 581
France, 597
Gazzera, Linda, 624
Guzyk, Jan, 679
hallucination, 687
haunting, 704
Hasby, W., 708
hyperesthesia, 760
hypnotism, 765
identity, 776
Imoda, Enrico, 781–782
Institut Metapsychique International, 796
Italy, 813–814
Kahn, Ludwig, 847
Klaski, Franek, 867
levitation, 914
Lodge, Sir Oliver, 929
luminous phenomena, 945
Lutoslawski, Wincenty, 946
materializations, 988, 991, 992, 995, 996
mediums, 1012–1013
Mesmer, Franz Anton, 1028
metapsychics, 1090
Miller, Charles Victor, 1037
miracles, 1042
monition, 1047
movement, paranormal, 1063, 1065
music (paranormal), 1075
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1078, 1079
Ossowiecki, Stephan, 1157
Palladino, Eusapia, 1172–1173
pantomnesia, 1175
personation, 1201
Poland, 1224
premonitions, 1236–1237
psychic touches, 1257–1258
psychical research, 1248, 1249
psychology, 1256
psychometry, 1258
raps, 1266
reincarnation, 1301
Rothe, Frau Anna, 1328
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407
sixth sense, 1413–1414
Slade, Henry, 1415–1416
somnambulism, 1436
Spiritualism—France, 1467
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1470–1471
thought-transference, 1567
Tomczyk, Stanislawa, 1575
trance, 1580
xenoglossy, 1694
Richmond, A. B.
Bangs Sisters, Lizzie and May, 150–151
Keeler, Pierre L. O. A., 853
Seybert Commission, 1393–1394
Richmond, Cora Linn (victoria) (Tappan), 1311–1312
Colville, Wilbur Juvenal, 311
double, 441
inspirational speakers, 799
Maps, James Jay, 977
mediums, 1011
National Spiritualist Association of Churches, 1092
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
Spiritualism—United States, 1475
Richmond, Kenneth Forbes, 1312
Richmond, Thomas, 1312
Richmond, Zoe Blanche Russell, 1312
Rig Veda, 1455–1456
Riggs, Bobby, 186
Rinaldo des Trois-Echelles du Mayne, 1312
Ring Experiments, 1001–1003
Ring, Kenneth
death, 386
International Association for Near-Death Studies, 798
unidentified flying objects and the occult, 1607
Ring of Thoth, 1313
Ringger, Peter, 1313, 1518
Rings, Divination by, 371
Rimpoche, 1313
Rinza Zen, 1705–1706
Ripley, George, 1313
alchemy, 22
Norton, Thomas, 1125–1126
RISHE. See Research Institute for Supersensonic Healing Energies
Risht, 11
“Rita,” 1313
Rita, A., 1313–1314
Holland, 732
Williams, Charles, 1672
Rites
baptism of the devil, 154 baptism of the line, 154
Elessis, Rites of, 1
Ritual Abuse, 1347–1348
Ritual Magic. See also Ceremonial Magic
Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO), 1152–1153
Ordo Templi Orientis (Roanoke, Virginia), 1153
Servants of the Light, 1388
Williamson, Cecil H., 1672
Rituals
ancient mysteries, 49
Arbanel, 84
Cramp-Rings, Hallowing, 349
Egregore, 480
Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of the, 651
grimoires, 669–670
Ordo Stellae et Serpente, 1152
Santo Daime, 1344
Rivers, Olivia Burnett (Mrs. Doris Wilmer Rivers), 1314
Rivista Di Studi Psichici (Journal), 1314
Robbins, Shawn, 1314
Robert of Lincoln. See Grosseteste, Robert
“Robert the Devil,” 246, 1315
Roberts, Estelle, 1314
Barbanell, Maurice, 154–155
Barbanell Report, 155
Claudaraeus, 299
control, 329–330
Dowding, Lady Muriel, 443
Fawcett, Colonel Percy Harrison, 551
identity, 778
inspirational speakers, 793
King, Cecil, 860
Spiritualism, 1466
Roberts, Etta, 1314
materializations, 989
matter passing through matter, 1001
séances, 1373
Roberts, Jane, 1315
Austen Seth Center, 120
channeling, 279
inspirational speakers, 793
Marciak, Barbara, 978
New Age, 1106
“Seth,” 1309
Roberts, Oral, 1307
Robertson, Olivia, 1315
Rocal, 1315–1316
Rochas d’Aiglun, Lt.-Col. Eugene Auguste-Albert de, 1316
automatic writing, 129
automatism, 132
Bailey, Charles Victor, 145
Boirac, Emile, 201
Chiara, Ercole, 276
double, 439
ectoplasm, 470
emanations, 498
exteriorization of motricity, 531
exteriorization of sensitivity, 531–532
France, 597
gypsies, 680
hypnotism, 768
levitation, 909, 914, 916
lycanthropy, 947
materializations, 992
Maxwell, Joseph, 1003
Miller, Charles Victor, 1037
Palladino, Eusapia, 1172
Politi, Auguste, 1225
prevision, 1238
psychic force, 1252, 1253
reincarnation, 1302
Spiritualism—France, 1467
General Index

SAC. See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness
SAC. See Spiritual Advisory Council
Sacha Runa, 1338
Sacred sites oracles, 1146–1148
power spots, 1233
Shasta, Mount, 1396
Sacred Sounds, 116
Sacrifices
Adramelech, 11 to genius, 628
Rome (Ancient), 1320
taigheirm, 1525
Sadat, Anwar, 1596
Sadler, William S., 1615
SAFE Newsletter, 1338
Saga UFO Report (Magazine), 1338
Sagan, Carl, 1632
Saga UFO Report
SAFE Newsletter,
Sadler, William S., 1615
Sadat, Anwar, 1596
Saint-Jacques, R. P. de,
Sahu, 86
Sahagun, Bernardino de, 672–673,
Saints
Man of the Sun, 816
Marian apparitions, 1497
mystic, 1083–1084
Order of Elect Cohens, 1149
Pasqually, Martines de, 1189
secret tradition, 1381
Saint Germain, Comte de,
Althotas, 35
Aquarian Foundation, 82
Ascended Masters, 92
Cagliostro, 237–238
France, 593
magic, 958
Rakoczi, 1276
Shasta, Mount, 1396
St. Leon: A Tale of the Sixteenth Century, 1496–1497
Saint-Jacques, R. P. de,
Saint-Martin, Louis Claude de,
Encausse, Gèrard, 502
Patok, 1276
St. Louis de France, 602
Ireland, 807
witchcraft, 1681
Sambor, S. F., 1342
direct writing, 422, 423
matter passing through matter, 1002
Perovsky-Petrovo-Solovovo, Count, 1199
Samothracian mystery, 664
Sanders, Alexander, 1342–1343
Farrar, Janet, 546
Farrar, Stewart, 546
Gardner, G. B., 620
Ireland, 807
witchcraft, 1681
Sanders, C. B., 1345, 1581
Sanders, Celestine G., 1343, 1676
Sanders, Pete, 849
Sanders, Ivan T(ereence), 1343, 1430
Sandwich, The Earl of (Edward George Henry Montague), 710, 1343
Sogho Newsletter, 1344
Santa Daima, 1344
Santa Maria (California), 1344
Santeria
Church of the Lakumi Babalu Ave, 292
West Indies, 1663
Santo Daima, 153
Santoliquido, Rocco, 679, 1344–1345
Sanvojanas, 1345
Saphy (or Grigris), 1345
Sapphire, 1345
"Saracen." See Gypsies
Saraswati, Swami Nabadrakhmananda
Divine Life Society, 430
music (paranormal), 1076
Saraswati, Swami Sivananda
Radha, Swami Sivananda, 1271
Yoga Research Foundation, 1700
Sarcognomy, 1345
Sattar, John, 1345
Sardou, Victorien, 1345–1346
amazon drawing and painting, 126
automatic writing, 128
France, 597
planetary travels, 1219
Sargent, Epcal
Davenport Brothers, 377
Eglington, William, 478
Foster, Charles H., 583
materializations, 990, 990
matter passing through matter, 1002
plastics, 1221
Powell, W. H., 1233
Spiritualism—United States, 1474–1476
Willis, F. L. H., 1674
Sarkar, Prohab Ranjan, 1346
Ananda Marga Yoga Society, 47
Anandamurti, Shri, 48
Sasagawa, Sister Agnes Akitu, 19
bleeding statues, 197
Sasportsas, Howard, 112, 1346–1347
Sasquatch, 1036, 1347
Sasquatch Investigations of Mid-America, 1347
Sat B'lai, 1350
Sat May., See Radhaasami Satsang
Satan. See also Lucifer
Bachelors, 140
devil, 409–410
Lucifer, 941
Scandinavia, 1352
Temple of Set, 1548
Satanic Bible, 1347, 1349
Satanic Groups
Brotherhood of the Ram, 221
Godie, Isobel, 657
Order of the Black Ram, 1149
Our Lady of Endor Coven, 1159
Stella Tenebrarum, 1492
Thee Satanic Church, 1355
Satanic Ritual Abuse, 1347–1348alse memory syndrome, 540–541
UFO abduction, 5
Satanic Society, 1348
Satanism, 1348–1349
Australian Satanic Council, 124
Black Mass, 190–191
Church of Satan, 290–291
devil worship, 412–413
Gidney, William "Starets," 638
Hell-Fire Club, 718–719
Mather, Increase and Cotton, 999
Our Lady of Endor Coven, 1159
pacts with the devil, 1167
Ramirez, Richard, 1279
Remy, Nicolas, 1304
Rosemary's Baby, 1323
Sabbats, 1337
in United States, 39
wafer, 1643
Wicca, 1669
witchcraft, 1679
Satchidananda, Swami, 1350
Integral Yoga International, 797
Sivananda, Swami, 1415
Saturn
astrological planets, 105
talisman of, 1527
Saturn-Gnosis, 1350
Satya Sai Baba, 1350
Africa, 15
Meher, Baba, 1019
Saucer and Unexplained Celestial
Events Research Society, 1350–1351
Saucer News, 9, 1350–1351
Savage, Emily Jane.
Saturn-Gnosis, 1350–1351
Savage, Minot Judson, 68, 1351
Saviours of Louis XVII, 1635
Sawyer, Carrie M., 1351
Gibier, Paul, 636
matter passing through matter, 1001
Sax Rohmer. See Ward, Arthur Henry (Sarsfield)
Scallion, Gordon Michael, 1351
SCANATE, 655
Scandinavia, 1352–1354
parapsychology, 1354
psychical research, 1354
spiritualism, 1355–1354
witchcraft, 1352–1353
Scandinavian UFO Information, 1354
Scapulomancy, 1354
Searles, Felicia
movement, paranormal, 1061
sketograph, 1414
Schaefer, Hans, 1354
Scevis, Giovanni, 1354–1355
Scheler, Wallace B., 1355
Schermann, Raphael, 1029, 1355
Schiaparelli, G. V.
Scherer, Wallace B., 1355
Schneider, Willi, 1357–1359
Driesch, Hans, 454
Feilding, (Francis) (Henry)
Everard, 352
levitation, 914
movement, paranormal, 1065, 1067
Oesterreich, Traugott Konstantin, 1139
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert
von, 1360
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert
von, 1367–1368
Seybert Commission, 1393
School of Economic Science, 1359
School of Natural Science. See The Great School of Natural Science
School of Truth (Africa), 15 School of Universal Philosophy and Healing, 1359
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert
von, 1559–1360
Besterman, Theodore, 178
Bisson, Juliette, 188
breathing, 213
centurione scotto, marquis carlo, 264
clavoyance, 298
dress, phantom, 454
driesch, hans, 454
ectoplasm, 470, 471
Eva C., 521–522
Germany, 632
Gruber, Karl, 672
Guszyk, Jan, 679
Klönkwöstrom, Graf Carl von, 866
Laslo, Laszlo, 895
levitation, 914, 916
Meyrink, Gustav, 1034
Nielsen, Einer, 1121
Oesterreich, Traugott Konstantin,
1139
Ossowiecki, Stephan, 1158
Poland, 1224
Reese, Bert, 1295–1296
Reuter, Florizel von, 1306
Schneider Brothers, Willi and
Rudi, 1357–1358
Reuter, Florizel von, 1306
Schneider Brothers, Willi and
Rudi, 1357–1358
Sordi, Signora Lucia, 1437
Stanco, P., 1484
Trenczyk, Stanisława, 1575
Walther, Gerda, 1649
Schucman, Helen, 1360–1361
Circle of Atonement, 294
Community of the Beloved Disciple, 320
A Course in Miracles, 346
Foundation for A Course in
Miracles, 584
Foundation for Inner Peace, 585
fraser-harris, david (fraser), 599
fraud, 601–602
Gregory, Anita, 668
Institut Métaphysique
International, 796
magicians, 964
Ody, Eugène, 1158
Price, Harry, 1239
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert
von, 1360
trance, 1381
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert
von, 1367–1368
science applications international corporation (SAIC), 656
Science of Being, 1634
Scorsese, William, 1364
Scorpion Affair, 1364–1365
Scorpio
astrological houses, 103–104
astrological signs, 107
Scotland, 1365–1370. See also Celts
alchemy, 1368
All Hallows’ Eve, 29
Bram Stoker, 1371
cock, 305
democracy, 1370
haunted houses, 700
James IV, 392
Kelpie, 855
laws against witchcraft, 1366–1367 magic and demology, 1367–1368 magic and religion in the Scottish Highlands, 1368–1370
necromancy, 1098
parapsychology, 1370
second sight, 1378
supernatural in Scottish fiction, 1378
witchcraft, 1365–1367
wraith, 1688
Scott, Christopher (avile)
O’Donoghue, 402
Scott, Sir Walter
Banshee, 1351–1352
Brig of Dread, 216
Demonology and Witchcraft (by Sir
Walter Scott (book), 397–398 exteroration of sensitivity, 532
Galeotti, Marzio, 616 ghost seers, 635
gypsies, 680–681
Lee penny, 902
Lewis, Matthew Gregory, 919
opal, 1145
Scotland, 1370
Scott, Michael, 392
Weir, Thomas, 1367–1368
witchcraft, 1679
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Scott, Christopher S. O'D.</td>
<td>1371</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sheldrake, Rupert</td>
<td>1397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Formative Causation</td>
<td>579</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>morphogenetic fields</td>
<td>1054</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Purce, Jill</td>
<td>1262</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Randall, John L.</td>
<td>1281</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tarnas, Richard Theodore</td>
<td>1532</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shelley, Mary</td>
<td>652</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shelley, Percy Bysshe</td>
<td>1325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. Irvyne; or the Rosicrucian</td>
<td>1496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>wraith</td>
<td>1688</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sheka Thari</td>
<td>1398–1399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shemhamphorash</td>
<td>1399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shepard, Jesse Francis Grierson</td>
<td>1399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shephard, George</td>
<td>116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>automatic speaking</td>
<td>127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown, Rosemary</td>
<td>223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>music (paranormal)</td>
<td>1075</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shepard, Leslie</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bram Stoker Club</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bram Stoker Society</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morrow, Felix</td>
<td>1656</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sherman, Harold (Morrow)</td>
<td>1400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belk Psychic Research Foundation</td>
<td>166</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ESP Research Associates Foundation</td>
<td>517</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Swann, Ingo</td>
<td>1514</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shermer, Michael</td>
<td>1400–1401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sherwood, Carlton (Montgomery)</td>
<td>1400–1401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shibata Shigeki</td>
<td>1401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ShIELDERS</td>
<td>1401–1402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shingles, Tony</td>
<td>1401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morgov, 1053</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shintoism</td>
<td>825</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ship of the Dead</td>
<td>1401  See also Tempyon-teloris (Ship of the Dead)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shipton, Mother</td>
<td>503</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shipton, Mother</td>
<td>1401–1402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shiro, Anandamurti</td>
<td>1401–1402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shobha Man Subrata</td>
<td>1401–1402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Probhat Ranjam</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shirley, Ralph</td>
<td>1402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callaway, Hugh G.</td>
<td>242</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ovada Review</td>
<td>1157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Waite, Arthur Edward</td>
<td>1643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>World War II occult phenomena</td>
<td>1651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shivapuri Baba (Sri Govinanda Bharati)</td>
<td>1402–1403</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Showers, Mary</td>
<td>1403–1404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baggally, William Wortley</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cook, Florence Eliza</td>
<td>334–335</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cox, Edward</td>
<td>348</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crookes, Sir William</td>
<td>356</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ectoplasm</td>
<td>472</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>materializations</td>
<td>987, 990</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>perfumes</td>
<td>1198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Great Britain</td>
<td>1469</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>trance</td>
<td>1581</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shrine of Sothis</td>
<td>1404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shrine of the Eternal Breath of Tao Universal Society of the Integral Way</td>
<td>1404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shroud of Turin Research Project</td>
<td>1404–1405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S.I.</td>
<td>1337</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siberia</td>
<td>1405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sibley, Ebenezer</td>
<td>1405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barrett, Francis</td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sibley, Manoah</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sibley, Manoah</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sibley, Ebenezer</td>
<td>1405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sibyl</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sideline Books</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siddha Yoga</td>
<td>1068, 1699</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siddhis</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siddhis, 1406</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sideral zodiac</td>
<td>1631, 1708</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidevalu (Journal)</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidevitan</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sideromancy</td>
<td>1407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidgwick, Eleanor Mildred Balfour</td>
<td>1407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>apparitions</td>
<td>69</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cross-correspondence</td>
<td>358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eglington, William</td>
<td>480</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>haunting</td>
<td>704–705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hodgson, Richard</td>
<td>730</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Imperator,” 792</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Johnson, Alice</td>
<td>834</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murray, George Gilbert Aime</td>
<td>1071</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Myers, Frederick William Henry</td>
<td>1079</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piddington, J. G.</td>
<td>1210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>psychical research</td>
<td>1248, 1249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidgwick, Henry</td>
<td>1407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Society for Psychical Research</td>
<td>1428</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>spirit photography</td>
<td>1461</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>survival</td>
<td>1511–1512</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>telepathy</td>
<td>1537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>thought-transference</td>
<td>1567</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sidgwick, Henry</td>
<td>1407–1408</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balfour, Arthur James</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>census of hallucinations</td>
<td>261</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mellon, Annie Fairlamb</td>
<td>1021</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Myers, Frederick William Henry</td>
<td>1078</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>psychical research</td>
<td>1248, 1249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rayleigh, Lord</td>
<td>1202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sinnett, A. P.</td>
<td>1411</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Slade, Henry</td>
<td>1415</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Society for Psychical Research</td>
<td>1428</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spiritualism—Great Britain</td>
<td>1470</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>telepathy</td>
<td>1537</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>trance personalities</td>
<td>1583</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wood, C. E.</td>
<td>1684</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Siegert, Friedrich</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uranian astrology</td>
<td>1614</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Witte, Alfred</td>
<td>1683</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sierr, Ralph U(son)</td>
<td>1408</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sight</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ethereal vision</td>
<td>520</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>eyeless sight</td>
<td>533–534</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>against fascination</td>
<td>548</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nictalopes</td>
<td>1121</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>paroptic vision</td>
<td>1187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>second sight</td>
<td>1578–1579</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vision (ocular and inner)</td>
<td>1636</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zahuris (or Zahories)</td>
<td>1703–1704</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sigl, 1408</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sign of Solomon</td>
<td>960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Signs</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>omens</td>
<td>1145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>paranormal</td>
<td>1408</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sigil</td>
<td>1408</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silberhartz, Allen</td>
<td>216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silbert, Maria</td>
<td>1409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>apports</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>chemical phenomena in séances</td>
<td>275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hohenwarter, Peter</td>
<td>731</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>luminous phenomena</td>
<td>945</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McKenzie, James Hewat</td>
<td>1005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>movement, paranormal</td>
<td>1064, 1065, 1067</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Giese, Rehn, Traugott Konstantin</td>
<td>1139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert von</td>
<td>1360</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silva, Edvaldo Oliveira</td>
<td>212–213, 1409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Silver Birch,”</td>
<td>155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Silvester II, Pope</td>
<td>1409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simontonie, William Joseph</td>
<td>1410, 1675</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simon Magus, 1410</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SIMS, See Student's International Mediation Society</td>
<td>1071</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sim</td>
<td>648</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>sex magic</td>
<td>1392</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>tumah</td>
<td>1592</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sinclair, May</td>
<td>558</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sinclair, Upton (Beall)</td>
<td>1410–1411</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sindonology, 1411, 1593</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singh, Baba Jaimal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Radhasoami Satsang, 1272</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ruhani Satsang, 1351</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singh, Karan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kundalini, 665, 882</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wallace, 1306–1307</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singh, Kirpal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ECKANKAR</td>
<td>467, 468</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Radhasoami Satsang, 1272</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Twitchell, John Paul</td>
<td>1598</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Singh, Savan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Radhasoami Satsang, 1272</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ruhani Satsang, 1351</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sinnett, Alfred (Percy)</td>
<td>1411</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ascended Masters, 92</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blavatsky, Helena Petrovna</td>
<td>194–195</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>King, Robert</td>
<td>863</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Koot Hoomi, Master</td>
<td>873–874</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahatma letters</td>
<td>968</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Olof, Henry Steel</td>
<td>1141</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>psychometry</td>
<td>1259</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>theosophy</td>
<td>1559</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>thoughtforms</td>
<td>1564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sirens, 1411</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sirius Mystery, The</td>
<td>1411–1412</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sisters of the Amber, 1412, 1479</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sitchin, Zecharia</td>
<td>1412</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alford, Alan F.</td>
<td>28</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atlantis Rising</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mars, face on</td>
<td>981</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>von Daniken, Erich</td>
<td>1641</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SITU, See Society for the Investigation of the Unexplained</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sivananda Radha, Swami</td>
<td>Ascend, 93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sivananda, Swami, 1413</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sivananda, Swami, 1412–1413</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Yoga Association, 43</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
General Index

Chidananda, Swami, 277

Divine Life Society, 429, 430

Integral Yoga International, 797

Jyotir Maya Nanda, Swami, 845

Nadabrahmananda Saraswati, Swami, 1087

Raj-Yoga Math and Retreat, 1276

Satchidananda, Swami, 1350

True World Order, 1590

Vishnu Devananda, Swami, 1695–1696

Wolfsohn, Alfred, 1683

Divine Life Society, 429, 430

Integral Yoga International, 797

Jyotir Maya Nanda, Swami, 1350

True World Order, 1590

Vishnu Devananda, Swami, 1695–1696

Wolfsohn, Alfred, 1683

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology 5th Ed.

1920

Skeptic, The

Sixth Sense, 1311,

Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers.

General Index

Skeptic, The

Sixth Sense, 1311,

Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers.

General Index

Skeptic, The

Sixth Sense, 1311,

Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers.

General Index

Skeptic, The

Sixth Sense, 1311,

Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Centers.

General Index

Skeptic, The

Sixth Sense, 1311,
Association for the Anthropological Study of Consciousness (See Society for the Anthropology of Consciousness)
Association for the Development of Human Potential, 98
Association for the Scientific Study of Anomalous Phenomena, 98
Association for the Understanding of Man, 98
Association for Transpersonal Psychology, 98
Association Internationale de Recherche Psychotomique (International Association for Psychotronic Research), 99
Association of Progressive Spiritualists of Great Britain, 99
Association of Sananda and Sanat Kumara, 99
Association pour la Recherche de l’Esotericisme, 100
Astrological Association, 102–103
Astrological Research, Society for, 1427–1428
Astrological Society, 108
Aurum Solis (Order of the Sacred Word), 119
Ausar Auset Society, 119–120
Australian Society for Psychical Research, 120
Australian Society for Psychological Research, 124
Boston Society for Psychical Research, 207
Bram Stoker Club, 212
Bram Stoker Society, The, 212
British National Association of Spiritualists, 217–218
British UFO Research Association, 218
British Vampyre Society, 218
Brotherhood of the Trowel, 221
California Society for Psychological Studies, 242
Cambridge Buddhist Association, 244
Canadian Society of Questers, 246
Cheirolological Society of Great Britain (Dukes), 274–275
Christian Fellowship Organization, 285
Claymont Society for Continuous Education, 302
Collegium artificum, 309
Congregational Witchcraft Association, 323
Congress of Astrological Organizations, 323
Count Dracula Society, 345
Cromlech Temple, 354
Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge, Society for the, 1430
Dracula Society, The, 447–448
Expanding Horizons (Organization), 530
F. Marion Crawford Memorial Society, 535
Fairy Investigation Society, 538
Federation of Spiritual Churches and Associations, 552
Fendeurs, 554
Flat Earth Research Society International, 572
Fortean Society, 580
Forum Newsletter (Association for Death Education and Counseling), 582
Friends of Runnings Park, 609
Ghost Research Society, 635
Gnosis Association for Multidisciplinary Research on the Hypothesis of Survival, 645
Gnostic Association of Cultural and Anthropological Studies, 646
Greater World Christian Spiritualist Association, 661–662
Ground Sauer Watch (Organization), 671
Harmonial Society, 693
Hawaiian Society for Psychical Research, 712
Healing Our World (Organization), 714
Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor, 722–723
Hermetic Society (Dublin), 723
Hermetic Society (London), 723
Independent Spiritualist Association of the United States of America, 784
Interkosmic Association of Spiritual Awareness, 797 Interdisciplinary Studies, Society for, 1428
International Association for Near-Death Studies, 798
International Association for Psychotronic Research, 798
International Association for Psychotrophic Research, 798
International Association for Religion and Parapsychology, 798
International Association of Metaphysicists, 798
International Association of Parapsychologists, 798
International Flat Earth Society, 799
International Fortean Organization, 799
International Frankenstein Society, 799
International Kirlian Research Association, 800
International Organization of Awareness, 800
International Self-Realization Healing Association, 801
International Society for Krishna Consciousness, 801–802
International Society for the Investigation of Ghosts, 802
International Society for the Study of Subtle Energies and Energy Medicine, 802
International Society of Cryptozoology, 802
International Society of Life Information Science, 802
Interplanetary Space Travel Research Association, 803
Investigation of the Unexplained, Society for the, 1430
Japanese Society for Parapsychology, 826
Katean Secret Society, 852
Kundalini Research Association International, 883
Little World (Society), 927
London Dialectical Society, 932–934
Lorian Association, 937
Lucidity Association, 941
Magic Circle, (Organization), The, 962
Magical Union of Cologne, 961
Mazdaan Temple Association, 1084
Metaphysicists, Society of, 1431
Mind Development and Control Association, 1090
Miss Lucy Westenra Society of the Undead, The, 1043
Morris Pratt Institute Association, 1055
National Astrological Association, 1089
National Astrological Society, 1089
National Colored Spiritualist Association of Churches, 1089
National Psychic Science Association, 1091
National Spiritual Aid Association, 1091
National Spiritualist Association of Churches, 1092
Nederlandse Vereniging voor Parapsychologie, 1099
New Atlantean Research Society, 1108
Noah’s Ark Society for Physical Mediumship, 1123–1124
Occidental Society of Metemperic Analysis, 1135
Ordo Templo Orientis, 1152–1153
Organization of Awareness (Canada), 1154
Organization of Awareness (Federal Way), 1154
Organization of Awareness (Olympia), 1154
Oxford Golden Dawn Occult Society, 1163
Parapsychological Association, 1181
Parapsychological Research Society (Turkey), 1181
Parapsychological Studies, Society for (Taiwan), 1428
Parapsychology Association of Riverside, 1185
Philosophical Research Society, 1206
Planetary Light Association, 1219
Proceedings of, 1241
Proceedings of the Old American Society for Psychical Research, 1242
General Index

Encyclopedia of Occultism & Parapsychology • 5th Ed.

Proceedings of the Parapsychological Association, 1242
Proceedings of the Psychological Society of Great Britain, 1242
Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research, 1242
Psychic Research, Society for (Australia), 1429
Psychic Research, Society for (California), 1242
Psychical Research, Society for (Germany), 1430
Psychical Research, Society for (U.S.), 1589
Psychico-Therapeutic Society, The, 1261
Psychological Society, The, 1256
Quaestor (Organization), 1268
Quincey P. Morris Dracula Society, The, 1269
Radionic Association, 1273
Research on Parapsychological Phenomena, Society for (Germany), 1430
Roosevelt Spiritual Memorial Benevolent Association, 1322
Sat B'Hai, 1350
Satanic Society, 1348
Saucer and Unexplained Celestial Events Research Society, 1350–1351
Scientific Exploration, Society for, 1430
Scottish Society for Psychical Research, 1372
Servants of the Star and the Snake, 1388
Shrine of the Eternal Breath of Tao/Universal Society of the Integral Way, 1404
Sacred Espanola de Parapsychologia, 1426–1427
Societa Italiana di Parapsicologia, 1427
Societas Rosicruciana in Civitatibus Foederatis, 1427
Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, 1427
Societas Rosicruciana in California, 1430
Society for Astrological Research, 1427–1428
Society for Interdisciplinary Studies, 1428
Society for Parapsychological Studies (Taiwan), 1428
Society for Psychic Research (Australia), 1429
Society for Psychic Research (California), 1430
Society for Psychical Research, London, 1427
Society of Harmony, 1427
Society of Knowledge, 1427
Society of Metaphysicians, 1431
Society of Mediums, 1432–1433
Society of Research on Parapsychological Phenomena (Germany), 1430
Society for the Study of Supernormal Pictures, The, 1430–1431 Societies and Organizations, 1430
Societies of the Inner Light, 1431
Society Ordos Tempi Orienti, 1432
Socrates channeling, 270
gods, 270
guiding spirits, 674
trace personalities, 1582
Solar Systems (in Theosophy), 1432
Solar Temple, 1432–1433
Di Mambro, Joseph, 416–417
Templars, 1547
Solomon, 1433–1434
Ar Nutoria, 89
Grail sword, 659
grimoires, 669, 670
Ka, 846
Key of Solomon the King, 857
Khnurrath, Heinrich, 858
Vassago, 1628–1629
Y-Kim, 1698
Solomon Ibn Gabriol, 1435
Solomon, Mirror of, 1434–1435
Solovovo, Count. See Perovsky-Petrovov-Solovovo, Count
Solovoff, Vsevolod
Blavatsky, Helena Petrovna, 195
“King, John,” 861–862
Olcott, Henry Steel, 1141
1923 communication between living and dead, 315–316
Dakka, 414
divination by, 1257
evil spirits, 526–527
familiar spirits, 542–543
fountain spirits, 586
ghost, 635
goblin, 648
Guecuba, 674
gympies, 680
humanoid, 701–706
Jinn, 851
Kaboutermannakens, 847
Kelpie, The, 855
“King John,” 861–862
Knockers, 870
Kommasso, 883
Medieval magic, 1008, 1009
Monaciello, The, 1100
Myanmar, 1076–1077
nature spirits (or elementals), 1093
Oberon, 1130
obscenity and possession by, 1130–1135
Orton, 1155–1156
phouka (or puca), 1208
Paciong, 1225
Rome (Ancient), 1320
Scotland, 1370
Seven Stanes of Heaven, 1391
Sierra, 1405
Tadebons, 1524
telepathy, 1540
Tonga, 1576
Toolemak, 1577
trance personalities, 1582–1583
tree ghosts, 1586
Vampire, 1620–1625
Vassago, 1628–1629
Wild-women, 1670–1671
“Worth, Patience,” 1191
Yathuba, 1696
“Yonale,” 1701
Spiritual Advisory Council (SAC), 1462
Spiritual Age, The (Periodical), 1462
Spiritual Athenaeum, 1462
Spiritual Body, 1338
Spiritual Churches, 1462–1463
Spiritual Clarion, The (Periodical), 1463
Spiritual Community Guide, See New Consciousness Sourcebook
Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship, See International Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship Spiritual Gazette (Periodical), 1463
Spiritual Healing
Cain, John, 241
France, 594
Madonna Ministry, 954
Sandwich, Earl of, 1343
séances, 1576
Spiritual Herald, The (Journal), 1463
Spiritual India and Kundalini (Magazine), 1463
Spiritual Institution, 1463
Spiritual Israel Church and Its Army, 1477
Spiritual Magazine, The, 1479
Spiritual Messenger, The (Journal), 1479

Spiritualism (Journal), 1479
Spiritual Photographer, The (Periodical), 1479
Spiritual Quarterly Magazine, The, 1479
Spiritual Regeneration Movement of America, 1479
Spiritual Research Society, 1479
Spiritual Review (Journal), 1479
Spiritual Science Mother Church, 1479–1480
Spiritual Scientist, The (Journal), 1480
Spiritual Telegraph (Periodical), 1480
Spiritual Time, The (Periodical), 1480
Spiritualism, 1463–1466. See Also Spiritism

Akerlow, Alexander N., 20
animal magnetism, 57
apparitions, 66
apports, 76
Argentina, 85–86
Association of Progressive Spiritualists of Great Britain, 99
Australia, 121–123
Austria, 124
automatic writing, 128
Chain, Forming a, 267
Chase, Warren, 274
communication between living and dead, 314
controls, 328
Davis, Andrew Jackson, 380–381
France, 594–595, 596–597, 1467–1468
Germany, 632, 1468
Gnosticism, 645
Great Britain, 1469–1472
Greece, 666
Harris, Thomas Lake, 695
Hartmann, (Carl Robert) Eduard von, 696
Hartmann, Franz, 696
Heat and Light (Journal), 715
Holland, 732
Home, Daniel Dunglas, 737–740
Hospedale Community, 743
Hudson, Thomson Jay, 1467–1468
Hull, Moses, 754
Human Nature (Journal), 754
Hurey, George Willie, 757
Hydeville, 758–759
hypnotism, 767
Independent Spiritualist Association of the United States of America, 784
International Spiritualist Alliance, 803
International Spiritualist Congress, 803
International Spiritualist Federation (Fédération Spirite Internationale), 803
Italy, 813, 1472–1473
Jehovah’s Witnesses, 829–830
Kardec, Allan, 850–851
King, Cecil (Harmsworth), 860
Kitson, Alfred, 865
Lawton, George, 897
Leaves, Horace, 890
levitation, 910
Lily Dale (Spiritualist Assembly), 923
Spiritualistic Blätter (Periodical), 1478

Spiritualists
Agpa, Tony, 17
Aksakoff, Alexander N., 20
Apostolic Circle, 63
Bradlaugh, Charles, 209
Buckley, James Lord, 227
Burns, James, 229–230
Christian Spiritualists, 285
Delanoe, Gabriel, 392–393
Edmonds, John Worth, 475–476
Falcomer, Marco Tulio, 539
Fitzsimons, Frederick William, 570
Gow, David, 657
Goldentubbe, Baron Ludwig von, 675
Haas, George Christian (to), 685
Haines, Frederick Henry, 685
Hare, Robert, 692–693
Harris, Alec, 693
Harris, Bertha, 693–694
Henslow, George, 721
Howitt, William, 750
Humphreys, Eliza M. Y. (Mrs. W. Desmond), 755
Hunt, Harry Ernest, 755
“King, John,” 834
Koons, Jonathan, 873
Link, The, 925
Lotus Ashram, 937
Marryat, Florence, 981
Martin, Stuart, 984
McKenzie, James Hewat, 1005
M’Indoe, John B., 1039
Moses, William Stainton, 1058
Oaten, Ernest W., 1129
Powell, Ellis T., 1232
Randall, Edward Caleb, 1281
Richardson, Cora Linn (Victoria) (Tappan), 1311–1312
“Rita,” 1313
Roberts, Estelle, 1314
Tallmadge, Nathaniel Pitcher, 1528
Theobald, Morell, 1555–1556
Tweedale, Violet, 1598
Varley, Cromwell Fleetwood, 1627–1628
Vay, Baroness Adelma, 1630–1631
Webber, Jack, 1655
Wickland, Carl August, 1670
Woodhull, Victoria Claflin, 1684
Zarah, George A., 1710
Spiritualists National Union (SNU), 1484
Spirituelles Adressbuch (Directory), 1480
Splitfoot, 1480
Spodomancy, 1480
Spokesman (Newsletter), 1480
Spontaneous Phenomena, 1481
Spontaneous Phenomena, 1481
Spontaneous Phenomena, 1481
Spotlight, The (Magazine), 1481
SPP, Society for Psychical Research, 1481
Sprengel, Anna, 1481
Sprengel, Jakob, 1481
Sprengel, Anna, 1481
St. Clair, David, 1488–1489
St. John’s Crystal Gold, 1496
St. John’s Wort, 1496
St. Leon: A Tale of the Sixteenth Century, 1496–1497
Stafford-Clark, David, 1483
Stanford, Ray
Association for the Understanding of Man, 98
Secrets of Fatima, 1380
Stanford Research Institute. See SRI International.
Stanford, Rex Gable, 1483–1484
Association for the Understanding of Man, 98
psi-mediated instrumental response, 1246
Stanford, Thomas Welton
Bailey, Charles, 145
psychic museums, 1253
Stamatowa P., 1484
ectoplasm, 470, 471
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert von, 1360
Stapleton, Ruth Carter, 712, 1484–1485
Star, Ely, 1485
Star-See-sna Temple of Ascension Mastery, 1485
“Starbaby” Scandal, 623
Stargate, 1006, 1485
Starhawk, 1486
reclaiming, 1292–1293
witchcraft, 1681
Starr, Jess, 97
Stars
ed, 1137
Pleiades, 1222–1223
States of Consciousness. See also Dreaming
Alpert, Richard, 33
alpha waves, 33
Christos, 286
cosmic consciousness, 340–341
General Index

Ecstasy Journal of Divine Experience, 469
Grof, Stanislav, 670–671
hypnotism, 761–769
kundalini, 881
noetics, 1124
out-of-the-body travel, 1160–1161
possession, 1230–1231
Princeton Engineering Anomalies Research, 1241
sleep, 1418
subpersonal self, 1504
trance, 1579–1582
Zikr, 1707–1708
Statistical Evaluation of ESP Experiments, 669 Statues
bleeding, 196–197
milk-drinking, 1036–1037
moving, 1486–1488
talking, 674
weeping, 1655–1656
Stauss Poltergeist, 1226, 1488
Stead, Estelle W., 206
Stead, William Thomas, 206
Statues
bleeding, 196–197
milk-drinking, 1036–1037
moving, 1486–1488
talking, 674
weeping, 1655–1656
Stauss Poltergeist, 1226, 1488
Stead, Estelle W., 206
Stead, William Thomas, 206
Stead, William Thomas, 1489–1490
automatic writing, 128–129, 131
Borderland (magazine), 296
communication (between living and dead), 317
Corrals, Ophelia, 339
dean, 386
Dowden, Hester, 442
Tillyard, R. J., 1573
Dracula Society, The, 447–448
drop-in communicator, 454
Foundation for Reincarnation and Spiritual Research, 586
India, 787
Kiyota, Masuaki, 865–866
reincarnation, 1303
Drexler, 1933
Stevens, Christopher, 454
Tabori, Paul
Stevens, Wendelle
Hermann, William J., 721
Meier, Edward Albert "Billy," 1020
Onec, Omnece, 1143
Stevens, William Oliver, 1493
Stevenson, lan, 1493
Atreya, Bhikhan Lal, 115
Chari, C. K. K., 272
death, 386
Department of Personality Studies, University of Virginia, 400, 433
drop-in communicator, 454
Foundation for Reincarnation and Spiritual Research, 586
India, 787
Kiyota, Masuaki, 865–866
parapsychology, 1183
reincarnation, 1303
Stevenson, Robert Louis
dreams, 450
dual personality, 458
fiction, English occult, 558
monsters, 1048
personality, 1200
Scotland, 1370
Stewart, Balfour, 1493
Crookes, Sir William, 355
psychical research, 1248
Society for Psychical Research, 1428
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1470
survival, 1512
Stewart, Gary
Ancient and Mystical Order of the Rosae Crucis, 49
Rosicrucian Digest, 1324
Stewart, Kenneth Malcolm, 1493
Stewart, W(illiam) C(larence), 1494
Stenometer, 1494
Stichomancy, 1494
Stigmata, 1494–1495
Akita, 19
animals, 57
dermography, 401
Germany, 632
Ziegler, Eleonore, 1711
Stiles, Joseph D., 131, 1496
Sting, 1698
Stobart, Mrs. St. Clair (Mrs. Stobart Greenhalgh), 1478, 1497
Stoichomancy, 1497
Stoker, Bram (Abraham), 1497. See also Bram Stoker Club; Bram Stoker Society
Count Dracula Fan Club, 345
Dracula, 447
Dracula Society, The, 447–448
fiction, English occult, 558
Vambéry, Arminius, 1620
vampire, 1622
Stokes, Doris, 1497–1498
Collins, Doris, 310
Spittle, 1466
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1471
Stokes, Henry Newlin, 1498
Stolismancy, 1499
Stomach, Seeing with the, 1499
Stonehenge, 1233, 1499 Stones
actites, 13
agapis, 16
agate, 16
alexandrite, 26
amandinite, 36 aminate, 44
amulets, 45
anachitis, 46
anacanthicus, 46
androdamals, 51
antiphates, 62
antracites (or Antrachas or Anthras), 62 balasian, 147
beloculus, 167
beryl, 177
bezoar, 179
cactomite, 235
calhundrionus, 243
carbbuncle, 248–249
celontitis (celontes), 260 cepigmoides, 264
cermeos (or cerclactus), 264 chelidonius, 275
chintamani, 283
chrysosile (or chrisolevus), 287
chrysoprase, 287–288
demonius, 395
devil’s pillar, 411
divination by, 926–927
draconautes, 446
Elf Arrows (or Elf Bolts), 491 eemanations, 496
emerald, 500
fingitas, 562
galacitates (galaricides), 616 garatronius, 619
garnet, 620
glosopetra (or gulosus), 644
hamon, 688
Hope Diamond, 743–744
telepathy, 1539
Thouless, Robert Henry, 1568
Tillyard, R. J., 1573
Survival Joint Research Committee
Trust, 1512
Survival League, The, 1512
Survival Research Foundation, 1512
Sutherland, Donald, 1283
Su phen, Dick, 1826, 1646
Suzuki, D. T., 1056, 1706
Suzuki, Henry, 1653, 1657
Suzuki, Shunryu, 244
Swaffer, Hannen, 1512–1513
Swaine, Marcia M., 1305
Swaggert, Jimmy, 1307
Swain, Marcia M., 1305
Swallowing Objects (Arrows, Sticks), 37
Swami, Ingo, 1513–1514
Swam, Ingo, 1513–1514
double, 441
government-sponsored research
on parapsychology, 655–656
Parapsychology Research Group, 1185
Schneider, Gertrude Raffel, 1536
SRU International, 1483
Swann, William Francis (Gray), 1514
Swastika, 1514–1515
Swan, 1515
Sweden, 1515
Swedenborg, Emanuel, 1515–1517
Aksakof, Alexander N., 20
angels, 53
apparitions, 65–66
Christian, Paul, 284
Church of the New Jerusalem, 292 classroom, 299
communication (between living
and dead), 315–316
contactees, 325
control, 330
Correspondences, Doctrine of, 339–340
Davis, Andrew Jackson, 380
direct writing, 422
double, 441
ectoplasm, 470
Edmonds, John Worth, 475
Evans, Warren Fel, 524
Falk, Samuel Jacob Chayyim, 593–540
Foster, Charles H., 582
General Church of the New Jerusalem, 627
General Convention of the New Jerusalem in the United States of America, 627
hell, 718
Hindmarsh, Robert, 728
hypnotism, 763
Kant, Immanuel, 849
Lord’s New Church Which is Nova Hierosolyma, 930–937
perfumes, 1198
planetary travels, 1219
possession, 1231
Russia, 1333
Saint-Martin, Louis Claude de, 1515
secret tradition, 1381
Sibley, Ebenezer, 1405
Sibley, Manoah, 1406
spirit intervention, 1459
Spiritualism—United States, 1474
Swedenborg Society, 1517
thought-transference, 1566
trance, 1581
trance personalities, 1582
visions, 1637
winds (paranormal), 1676
xenoglossy, 1693
Swedenborg Foundation Newsletter.
See Logos
Swedenborg Society, 1517
Switzerland, 1517–1518
cock, 305–306
witchcraft, 1678
Sword of Dymryn, 1519
Symbols
Caduceus, 236
Horbehutet, 745
hot cross buns, 748
Iao (or I-ha-ho), 774
iyms, 814–815
Jacob’s Ladder, 820
nif, 1122
Ouroboros (or Uroboros), 1159
pantacle (or pantacle or pentagram), 1194
Procter & Gamble logo, 1242
swastika, 1514–1515
Symmes, John, 1519
Symonds, John Cleves, 660, 1519
Sympathetic Magic
Myanmar, 1077
Semites, 1386
Sympathy, 57, 1519
Synchronicity, 1519–1520
Synchronicity Foundation, 1520
Synchronicity Research Unit. See SRU
Syngue, J. M., 1696
Syria, 28
Szekely, Edmond Bordeaux, 517, 1520
T
Table-turning (or Table-tipping), 1521–1523
communication between living
and dead, 315
and dowsing, 1523
Faraday, Michael, 544
Great Britain, 1469
historical background, 1521–1522 mechanics of, 1522–1523
raps, 1289
Tables, Trick, 1491
Taboo (or Tabu or Tapu), 1523–1524 spells, 1454
totemism, 1577
Talbot, Paul, 1524
Tactile Sensations, 1577–1579
Tadehitoio, 1524
Tadibbe, 1524
Taezsch, Robert Leonard, 1524
Tai Chi Ch’uan, 1524–1525
Taigheirm, 1525
Takata, Hawayo, 1525–1526
Rand, William, 1280
Reiki, 1299
“Tales of Terror” (Ballads), 1526
Talismans, 1526–1527
Anamisapta, 48
Gnostics, 467
Grail, Holy, 658
magic square, 965
tephillin, 1350
Talking Mongoose, 252, 1528
Talking Statues
Akita, 19
Guillaume de Paris, 674
Tallmadge, Nathaniel Pitcher, 1528
automatic writing, 131
Society for the Diffusion of Spiritual Knowledge, 1430
Spiritualism—United States, 1474
xenoglossy, 1692
Talmud, The, 1528–1529
Alpiel, 34
Arael, 85
Arrael, 84
automatic writing, 131
Golem, 652
Kabala, 486
Shenhamphorash, 1599
Tsitsith, 1591
Tamlin, Sarah, 1016, 1529
Tanagras, Angelos, 1529
Tanhäuser, 1529
Tantra, 1529–1530, 1685
Tantric Yoga, 1530, 1699
Bernard, Pierre, 174–175
ghouls, 636
Mathuama, 969–970
sex magic, 1392
Tao, 1531
Tao Te Ching (Lao Tzu), 1531
T’ai Chi Ch’uan, 1531
yin and yang, 1698
Taoism, 1531
Feng-shui, 554–555
qi, 1267
qigong, 1267, 1268
sex magic, 1392
yin and yang, 1698
Targ, Russell, 1532
government-sponsored research
on parapsychology, 655–656
Harary, Keith, 691
Parapsychology Research Group, 1185
SRU International, 1483
Swann, Ingo, 1513
Tart, Charles T., 1534
Target, 1532
Tarnas, Richard Theodore, 1532
Tarot Network News, 1534

1928
Stukeley, William, 1503
Tolkien, J. R. R., 1592
Tolstoy, Leo, 1639
TOM Religious Foundation, 1576
Tombazi, N. A., 1049
Tomczyk, Stanislawa (Mrs. Everard Feilding), 1575–1576
apports, 77
control, 330
de Vesme, Count Cesar Baudi, 408
dev, 439
electric phenomena, 488
Feilding, (Francis) (Henry) Everard, 552
hypnotism, 768
magnetic phenomena, 966
movement, paranormal, 1062, 1063, 1066
Ochnerowicz, Julien, 1137
Poland, 1224
Schrenck-Notzing, Baron Albert von, 1360
thoughtforms, 1565
Tomga, 1576
Tongues, Speaking in, 272–273, 1576–1577
Tongmak, 1577
Topical zodiac, 1631
TOPY. See Thee Temple ov Psychick Youth
Toronto Society for Psychical Research
obession and possession, 1135
“Philip.” 1204–1205
Torres, Katherine, 262
Torres, Peñy, 270
Totemism, 1524, 1577
Touche, Psychick, 1577–1579
Tours, Ghost, 636
Tower of Babel, The (Johann Valentin Andrae), 50
Tower of London, 1579
Trailleces, 1686
Trance, 1579–1583
animal magnetism, 1582
automatic speaking, 127
automatic writing, 127–128
Dahl, Ingeborg (Mrs. Koerber), 372
Geley, Gustav, 624
Innen Circle Kethra E’Da Foundation, 791
mesmerism, 1582
objective aspects of, 1580–1581
O’Key sisters, Jane and Elizabeth, 1140
Outsy, W. J., 1159
Sanders, Celestine G., 1343
subjective aspects of, 1579 surgical procedures, 1581–1580 subjective transference, 1566
Trance Personalities, 1561, 1582–1583
Transcendental Meditation, 1583–1584
Maraharsi Mahesh Yogi, 967–968
School of Economic Science, 1539
TM, 1574
Transfiguration, 1584–1585
Transformations
animal, 1553
Brocken Tryst, 220
Lycanthropy, 946–947
spells, 1454
Transition, 1585
Transmigration of Souls. See Metempsychosis (or Transmigration of Souls)
Transmutation of Metals, 1625
Transmutation of the Body, 1585
Transportation, 1585
Guppy-Volkman, Agnes, 676
transvection, 1585
Transposition of the Senses, 1585
animal magnetism, 57
Msesmer, Franz Anton, 1027
Transylvanian Society of Dracula, 1585–1586
Traveling Clairvoyance, 298, 299–300
TREAT. See Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma (TREAT), 1586
tree ghosts, 1586
Tree of Life, The, and The Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, 8, 1152, 1586 Trees
Adam Kadmon, 8
akathaso, 19
Alp, 34
ash tree, 94
elder tree, 487
elm tree, 494
Japan, 487
laural, 896 oak, 1129
oak-apples, 1129
Rome (Ancient), 1321
sallow, 1341
Seik Kasso, 1383
tree ghosts, 1586
Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, 1586
Tree of Life, 1586
willow tree, 1674
Zacorun, 1703
Troilids of the Cevennes, 1566, 1586–1588
Trench, (William) Brinsley Le Poer, 1586–1587
Trent, A. G., 621, 1587–1588
Trent, A. G., 621
Turin Shroud, 6, 1587–1588
Clancarty, Earl of, 301
Contact International, 328
Trent, A. G., 621, 1587
Trevelyan, Sir George (Lowthian), 1587
Findhorn Community, 562
Wrenk Instr, 1688
Tréviran, Bernard of, 1587–1588
alchemy, 22
D’Espagnet, Jean, 404
elixir of life, 492
Triad Group, 1588
Triad Society, 1588
Triangle, 960
Triangles (Network), 1588
Trianion, Ashkar-Jobson
communication (between living and dead), 314
communigraph, 318
Trilite Seminars, 1588
Trintzius, Rene, 1588–1589
Triskaidekahophobia Illuminatus Society, 1589
Trismegistus, Hermes
alchemy, 22
emanations, 496
Emerald Table of Hermes, 500
Smaragdine Table, 1420
Trithemius (Johann), 1589
elixir of life, 499
Germany, 631
Trivah, 1589
Trollope, Anthony, 641
Trollope, Thomas Adolphus, 1589
Brewster, Sir David, 214
Home, Daniel Dunglas, 738
Tromp, S(o)ko(o) W(a)le, 1589
Tron, Giorgio, 1590
Tromhorns, 1590
Tropical zodiac, 1708
Trowbridge, W. R. H., 240
Trudeau, Pierre, 81
True Black Magic, Book of the, 1590
True World Order (TWO), 1590, 1636
Trumpet, 1071, 1590
Trungpa Rinpoche, Chogyam, 1590–1591
Sangha Newsletter, 1344
Tulku, 1592
Truth Journal, 1591
Truzzi, Marcello, 1591
Center for Scientific Anomalies Research, 261
Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal, 312, 313
Institute for Anomalous Criminology, 793
Zetetic Scholar, 1706
Tsitsith, The, 1591
Tubby, Gertrude Ogden, 1591
Tulku, 1591–1592
Tartabull Tulku, 1593
Trungpa Rinpoche, Chogyam, 1590
Tulpa, 1592
Tunah, 1592
Tunio, 1592
Tunisa, 1592
Turin Shroud, 6, 1592–1594 authenticity of, 1593–1594 description, 1593
history of, 1592–1593
Shroud of Turin Research Project, 1404–1405
sindonology, 1411
Turner, Ann, 1594
Turner, M(alcold) E(lilah), 1594
Turning, Art of, 681
Turlock, Stephen, 1594
Turquiose, 1594–1595
Turrell, Thelma B., 326, 327
Turrey, Vincent Newton, 1595
Clairaudience, 227
clavory, 299–300, 300
Community of Sensation, 319
faires, 537
mediums, 1013
phone-voyance, 1207
prevision, 1238
thoughtforms, 1564
Tutankhamen Curse, 1595–1596
excavators, 1595–1596 history of Tutankhamen, 1595
legend of the curse, 1596
Tuttle, ... Air Force, 656, 1604–1605
U.S. Army, 656

General Index

1932

UFO Investigator (Newsletter), 1601
UFO Magazine, 1601–1602
UFO Magazine New Bulletin, 1602
UFO Nachrichten (Journal), 1602
UFO Newscipping Service, 1602
UFO Nyl (Journal), 1602
UFO Québec (Periodical), 1602
UFO Répertoire (Journal), 1602
UFO Research Newsletter, 1602
UFOCAT, 1601
UFObs, See Unidentified Flying Objects
Uggla, Eric
Scandinavia, 1354

Uland, Ludvig, 1602
UHSC. See Universal Hagar’s Spiritual Church
Ulman, Montague, 1602
Ulman, Paul, 1598–1599
ECK, 467
ECKANKAR, 458, 467
Lane, David, 890
Radhasoami Satsang, 1272
“Rebazar Tarzs,” 1292 soul travel, 1440
Steiger, Brad, 1490
TWO. See True World Order
Two Worlds (Magazine), 1599
Tyl, Noel, 856, 1599
Tylor, E. B. apparitions, 64–65
vampire, 1622
Tylor, Edward, 1131
Tyndall, John, 1408
Typology, 1286, 1599
Tyromancy (or Tyromancy), 1599
Tyrrell, (George) N. (ugent) M. (erle), 1599
apparitions, 72
evidence, 526
parapsychology, 1182

U
Übersinnliche Welt, Die (Journal), 1601
Udumbara (Center), 1601
UFO Examiner, The (Journal), 1601
UFOIN, See UFO Information Network
UFO Information Network (UFOIN), 1601
UFO Information Retrieval Center, 1601
UFO Investigator (Newsletter), 1601
UFO Magazine, 1601–1602
UFO Magazine New Bulletin, 1602
UFO Nachrichten (Journal), 1602
UFO Newscipping Service, 1602
UFO Nyl (Journal), 1602
UFO Quebec (Periodical), 1602
UFO Reporter (Journal), 1602
UFO Research Newsletter, 1602
UFOCAT, 1601
UFObs, See Unidentified Flying Objects
Ugla, Eric
Scandinavia, 1354

Skynet project, 1414
Sprinkle, Ronald Leo, 1482–1483
Texas Monthly UFO Report, 1554
Treatment and Research of Experienced Anomalous Trauma (TREAT), 1586
Trench, (William) Brinsley Le Poer, 1587
UFOCAT, 1601
in United States, 39
Vallee, Jacques Francis, 1620
Unification Church, 1051–1052,
1608–1609
Union Esperantista Cristiana da Filipinas, Inc., 1609
Union Spiritique Francaise (Journal), 1609
Union Spiritist, 1609
United Lodge of Theosophists, 1609
United Metropolitan Spiritual Churches of Christ, 1609
United Spiritualist Church, 1610
United States. See America, United States of Unity-in-Diversity World Council, 1610
Univercohem, 380
Universe (Journal), 1610
Universe (Magazine), 1610
Universal Balm, 1610
Universal Christ Church, 1610
Universal Church of the Master, 1610
Universal Fathists of Kosmon, 1610–1611
Universal Hagar’s Spiritual Church, 1611
Universal Harmony Foundation, 1611
Universal Life—The Inner Religion, 1611
Universal Religion of America, 1612
Universal Society of the Integral Way/Shrine of the Eternal Breath of Tao, 1612
Universal Spiritualist Association, 1612
Universe Quarterly (Journal), 1612
Universities (Occult), 1612–1613
University Books, Inc., 1613
University of London Council for Psychical Investigation, 1613
University of the Trees, 727, 1613
Unknown, The (Magazine), 1613
Unknown World, The (Journal), 1613
Unknown Worlds (Newsletter), 1613
Upanishads, 1613–1614
Chaos Magick, 271
“Oupnekhat,” 1159
Vedanta, 1631
Vedanta Societies, 1631
Uphoff, Walter, 865, 1614
Upright Man, The, 1614
Ura, 1614
Urania
astrological planets, 105
Gaia, 615
Urban, Hubert Josef, 1615
Urm and Hummim, 1615
Urso, 1615
U.S. Air Force, 656, 1604–1605
U.S. Army, 656
U.S. Department of Defense, 656
U.S. Navy, 656
U.S. Psychotronics Association, 1601
USSR. See Russia
Utcai, Mikao, 1615–1616
Rand, William, 1280
Reiki, 1299
Uttra, Michael
American Institutes for Research, 41 government-sponsored research on parapsychology, 656

V
Valentine, Basil, 651, 1617
Valentine, George, 1617–1619
Bradley, H. Dennis, 209–210
Centurione Scotto, Marquis Carlo, 264
control, 329–330
“Cristo d’Angelo,” 352
cross-correspondence, 358
direct voice, 419, 420–421
Dowden, Hester, 442
ectoplasm, 471
mediums, 1016
planetary travels, 1220
plastics, 1221
portrayal, 1544
Whyman, Neville, 1669
xenoglossy, 1692
Valle, Jessica
Velikovsky, Immanuel, 1619
Van Gelder Kunz, Dora, 850, 1625
Van Helmont, Jean Baptiste, 1625
alchemy, 22, 24
Barrett, Francis, 158
emotions, 496
hypnotism, 762
magic, 959
napellus, 1088
Van Peursen, C(ornelis) A(nthonie), 1626
Van Praagh, James, 1183–1184
Van Praagh, Thomas, 1629
Van Tassel, George W., 1627
Ashar, 94
College of Universal Wisdom, 309
contactees, 324, 326, 327
Grand Rock Space Convention, 636
Integratron, 797
"Proceedings of the College of Universal Wisdom," 1241
unidentified flying objects and the occult, 1607
Van Vuurde, Wilhelm, 1627
Vandermeulen Spirit Indicator, 1624–1625
Vango, 1625
Vardey, 1627
Varley, Cromwell Fleetwood, 1627–1628
Cook, Florence Eliza, 333–334
Holland, 732
London Dialectical Society, 933
psychic force, 1252
raps, 1289
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
Varma, Devendra P., 1628
Vassiliev, Leonid Leonidovich, 1628
Gregory, Anita, 668
Kulagina, Nina S., 881
Russia, 1334
Vassago, 1628–1629
Vasse, Paul Marie, 1629
"Vates," 1629
Vaughan, Alan, 1629
Vaughan, Diana, 1629
devil worship, 413
ectoplasm, 470
England, 508
Lamps, Magic, 888
Philalethes, Eirenaeus, 1204
Philalethes, Eriugena, 1204
St. John’s Crystal Gold, 1496
Vaughan, Diana, 1629
Vaudeville, 1630
Vay, Baronsse Adelma, 1630–1631
Austria, 125
Hellenbach, Baron Lazur De
Baczoyal, 718
xenoglossy
Abu Yazid al-Bestami, 5
Ramakrishna, Sri, 1277–1278
Veanda Societies, 1631
Veanda, Swam, 1614
Vedas, 1631
Vedic Astrology, 1631–1632, 1708
Vehm-Gerichte, 1632
Veleda, 1632
turquoise, 1594
Veltse, 1633
Vennum, Laranzy
obession and possession, 1134
Watersea Wonder, 1653
Venus
astrological planets, 105
Onec, Omnes, 1143–1144
Garison of, 1297
Venzano, Giuseppe
mediums, 1013
thought-transference, 1567
Verdelet, 1633
Verdun, Michel, 229, 1633
Vérité, La (Journal), 1635
Vergoghen, 1633
Veroica, 6, 1633
Verrall, Arthur Woolgar, 1633
Verrall, Helen, 1210
Verrall, Margaret de Gaudrion, 1633
Gombo-Tennent, Winifred
Margaret Serocold, 336
cross-correspondence, 358
crystal gazing (or crystallomancy), 363–364
Gurney, Edmund, 677
Lodge, Sir Oliver, 930
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079
Piddington, J. G., 1210
Piper, Leonora E., 1216
Salter, Helen Woolgar de Gaudrion Verrall, 1541
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407–1408
Thompson, Rosina, 1563
thought-transference, 1567
trance personalities, 1583
Verrall, Arthur Woolgar, 1633
Zener cards, 1706
Versailles Adventure, 1634
Vesuvius, 1634
Vestina, Cesare Baudoi De
Vestigia (Organization), 1634
Vett, Carl Christian, 1634
"Veneri, Etheric Force"
Welles, John (Ernst) Worrell, 853–854

Margiotta, domenica, 979
Vaughan, Thomas, 1630
devil worship, 413
ectoplasm, 470
England, 508
Lamps, Magic, 888
Philalethes, Eirenaeus, 1204
Philalethes, Eriugena, 1204
St. John’s Crystal Gold, 1496
Vaughan, Diana, 1629

General Index
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>General Index</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Encyclopedia of Occultism &amp; Parapsychology • 5th Ed. General Index</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Page(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Walpole, Horace</td>
<td>557, 1339</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walsch, Neal Donald</td>
<td>1294, 1648–1649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walter, William Grey</td>
<td>1649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walters, J. Donald</td>
<td>46–47, 1700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walther, Gerda</td>
<td>1649</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wondering Jew, The</td>
<td>1649–1650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wang, Chung Yu</td>
<td>1650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Warpage, Kenneth</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wayland Smith,</td>
<td>1655</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>weather</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cloud busting</td>
<td>303–304</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yadachi</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weatherhead, Dixon</td>
<td>393, 1655</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Webb, James (C. N.)</td>
<td>641, 1655</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Webber, Jack</td>
<td>1655</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wedgewood, Hensleigh</td>
<td>1046</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weekman, Michael</td>
<td>1316</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weeping Icons of the Virgin Mary</td>
<td>979</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weeping Statues</td>
<td>19–20, 1655–1656</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wege—Zur Synthese von Natur und Menschen (Magazine)</td>
<td>1656</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weintj, Clarence (Wolser)</td>
<td>1656</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weibergius, Julius</td>
<td>1656</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weir, Thomas</td>
<td>1367–1368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Watkins Book Shop</td>
<td>1653</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weisser, Donald</td>
<td>1653</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weisser, Samuel</td>
<td>1533</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weisser Bookshop</td>
<td>1653</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weisman, Kenneth</td>
<td>1657</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weisen, Claude J.</td>
<td>1657</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VEL 1657</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wellman, Adele</td>
<td>1657</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wells, Alice</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wellge Adamki</td>
<td>629</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wells, H. G.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fiction, English occult</td>
<td>558–559</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thompson, William Irwin</td>
<td>1565–1564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wendigo (or Windigo)</td>
<td>1657–1658</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wenzl, Aloys</td>
<td>1658</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Werede, Thorsten</td>
<td>1658</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dall, Ingelburg</td>
<td>372</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jensen, Wiers</td>
<td>830</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scandinavia</td>
<td>1354</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Werewolf, 1658–1660</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Biscleveveret</td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burgot, Pierre</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cambodia, 244</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gandillon Family</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pierre, Georges</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Antoine, Perrenette</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garnier, Gilles</td>
<td>621</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Verdun, Michel</td>
<td>1633</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Werner, Elizabeth M.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guide to Psi Periodicals</td>
<td>674</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Guide to Psi Tape Recordings</td>
<td>674</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whole Again Research Guide</td>
<td>1668</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weschcke, Carl Llewellyn, 1660–1661</td>
<td>FATE (Magazine), 549</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gnostica, 645</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Llewellyn Publications, 629, 927</td>
<td>Llewellyn’s New Times (magazine), 927</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wesley, John</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>England, 507</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hindmarsh, Robert</td>
<td>728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wesley, Samuel</td>
<td>512</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West, Donald (James)</td>
<td>1661</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fisk, G. W.</td>
<td>569</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>parapsychology, 1182</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West Indies</td>
<td>1662–1663</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Westcar Papyrus,</td>
<td>481, 1661</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Westcott, William Wynn</td>
<td>1662</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gematria, 627</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Golden Dawn, Hermetic Order of the, 650–651</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hermetic Society (London), 723</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mackenzie, Kenneth R. H., 952</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mathers, S. L. MacGregor, 999</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ordo Rosae Rubae et Aureae Crucis, 1151</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rosicrucians, 1327</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Secret Chiefs, 1379</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, 1427</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Waite, Arthur Edward</td>
<td>1643</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Woodward, William Robert</td>
<td>1685</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White, Arthur (Thomas)</td>
<td>1663</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Westmoreland, William</td>
<td>642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Westwood, Horace</td>
<td>1663</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weyer, Johan</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baalberith, 137</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baalzephon, 137</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caacrinolaas, 233</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weyer, Johan (also known as John Wier or Wierus), 1664</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abigor, 4</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agares, 16</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alastor, 21</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aloer, 32</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ambuchias, 36</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anselm de Parma, 59–60</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aristeus, 87</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balan, 147</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boshyn, 161</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bifrons, 183</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bitur, 188</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bodin, Jean</td>
<td>199</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buer, 227</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bune, 228</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caacrinolaas, 233</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>demonography, 395, 397</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faust, 550</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>infernal court, 789</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Malphas, 973</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>obsession and possession, 1133</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>witchcraft persecution, 631</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zapan, 1704</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weza, 1664</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WFLK Foundation of the World, 1193</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wheatley, Dennis (Yates), 1664</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>devil worship, 412</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fiction, English occult, 559</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wheatley, James (Melville) Otwen, 1664</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whistling, 1664</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Brotherhood, 407, 1665–1666</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Dove’s Message (Magazine), 1666</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Eagle Lodge, 1471, 1666–1667</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White, Elizabeth “Betty,” The Betty Book,” 179 table-turning, 1223</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White, James W.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seventh Day Adventism, 1391</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seybert Commission, 1393</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Magic, 1909</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Order of Thule, 1667</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White, Rhea Al(melia), 1665</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Society for Psychical Research, 43</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anderson, Margaret, 49</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anderson, Rodger L., 49–50</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
exceptional human experience (EHE), 528
Exceptional Human Experience Network, 528
White Sands Incident, 1667
White, Stewart Edward, 1665
"The Betty Book," 179
Kimmell, Susan C(randall), 859
White Temple Church, 1668
Whiteman, Joseph (Ilary) Michael, 1675
Whitman, Walt, 226
Wiccan Church of Canada, 1668
WICA Newsletter, 1670
Wickland, Carl August, 1670
Wicca, 1669
Whiston, John, 1672
Wilkins, John, 1672
Wilde, Oscar, 558
Wilkinson, J. Garth
automatic writing, 131
London Dialectical Society, 933
raps, 1287
Wilkinson, William, 125, 126
Will, 1671
Willett, Mrs., 147, 358, 1671
William Rufus (William II of England), 1671
Williams, Bessie, 1671
clairvoyance, 295, 300
control, 330
levitation, 914
psychometry, 1258
spirit children, 1458
trance, 1581
Williams, Charles, 1672
Aksakof, Alexander N., 20
automatic writing, 128
Berry, Catherine, 176
Cook, Florence Eliza, 333
ectoplasm, 472
Guppy-Volkman, Agnes, 676
Herne, Frank, 725
"King, John," 861–862
"King, Katie," 863
luminous phenomena, 944
materializations, 987
matter passing through matter, 1002
mediums, 1015
Moses, William Stanton, 1058
Rita, A., 1313–1314
Spiritualism—France, 1467
Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1469
teleportation, 1342
Tweedale, Violet, 1598
Williams, Mrs. M. A., 1672
Williams, Mrs. M. A., 1672
Williamson, George Hunt, 1672
Museum of Magic and Witchcraft, 1073
Williamson, George Evans, 1672
Williamson, George Hunt, 1672–1673
Ancient Astronaut Society, 49
Association of Sananda and Sanat Kumara, 99
Williamson, Marianne, 1673
A Course in Miracles, 346
Bridging Heaven and Earth, 216
In Light Times, 790
Willington Mill, 1673–1674
Wills, Frederick L. H., 1674
automatism, 132
materializations, 990
voices, 1374
Willow Tree, 1674
Wilson, Cedric William (Malcorn), 751, 1674
Wilson, Colin (Henry), 1674
faculty, 535
Neuromomicon, 1098
Wilson, Graham, 1675
Mind-Body-Spirit Festival, 1038
Psychics and Mystics Fayre, 1254
Wilson, Ian
Bloxham, Arnall, 199
Tunis Shroud, 1505
Wilson, James, 1424, 1675
Wilson, John C., 1675
Wilson, Percy, 1675
Wilson, Richard, 1675
Winds (Paranormal), 1675–1676
Windsor Castle, 1676–1677
Winifry, Oprah, 1673
Wingfield, Kate, 331, 1677
Wirdg’s Magnetic Sympathy, 1677
Wisconsin Plankans, 1677
Wisdom Literature, 722
Wissenschaftliche Gesselschaft zur Förderung der Parapsychologie, 1677
Witchcraft, 1678–1681
African, 13
Avadna, 83
Book of Shadows, 203
Celts, 260
circles, 295
devon, Witchcraft in, 413
drugs, 1679–1680
England, 505–506
European settlers of U.S., 38
France, 592–593
Gardner, Gerald B(rosseau), 619–620
Germany, 630–631
Glamourie, 642
Haining, Peter, 685 historic, interpretations of, 1678
Hopkins, Matthew, 745
India, 785–787
invisibility, 804–805
Ireland, 806–807
Italy, 812–813
Leland, Charles Godfrey, 904
levitation, 910
magic, 937
Malaysia, 971
Malleus Maleficarum, 972–973
Mather, Increase and Cotton, 999
Murray, Margaret Alice (Alice), 1072
Neopagan, 1680–1681
New Reformed Orthodox Order of the Golden Dawn, 1113–1114
Obeah, 1129–1130
obsession and possession, 1131
“Old Religion,” The, 1142, 1680
powers of witches, 1678–1679
Reclaiming, 1292–1294
Remy, Nicolas, 1304
romantic rebels, witches as, 1679
Rome (Ancient), 1322
Sabbats, 1337
Satanic Society, 1348–1349
Scandinavia, 1352–1353
Scotland, 1365–1367
shamans, 1679
Slavs, 1417–1418
Spain, 1448–1449
Sweden, 1515
Switzerland, 1517
Teutons, 1553
Theosophical Society, 1558–1559
Thomas Aquinas, 1562
in United States, 175, 1696–1697

General Index

Wizards

Witte, Alfred,
Witchfinders, 13–14, 14–15

Witches

Witches' Cradle, 1386,
Witches Anti-Defamation League

See also Witchcraft

Africa, 15
Benin, 166
Benenmiren, 169
broomsticks, 221

Chou-hani, 284
Covenant of the Goddess, 347
D’Abadie, Jeanette, 371
D’Aspilette, Marie, 376
Dunwich, Gerina, 461–462

Endor, Witch of, 503–504
Good, Sarah, 653

Gowdie, Isobel, 657
Habondia (or Habundia), 683
Hereburge, 721
hex (or hexerai), 724
hexenhaus, 724
Heyd, 724
Hmana Zena, 728
Huebner, Louise, 752

Krstaca, 878
Lancashire Witches, 889
Leek, Sybil, 902–903
Lees, Marcie, 907
Macinon, 952
Nurse, Rebecca, 1127 ointment, 1139–1140
psychical research, 1247
rapport, 1285

Red Cap (of Witches), 1295
Remy, Nicolas, 1304
Sanders, Alex(ander), 1342–1343
Semites, 1384–1385

Striporda, 1501
Sukias, 1508
Transvection, 1585
Turner, Ann, 1594

Verdelet, 1633
Viedna, 1635
Vjestica, 1639

witchcraft, 1679
Zlokobinca, 1708
Witches Anti-Defamation League
(WADL), 1682

Witches’ Cradle, 1386, 1682
Witches’ Mark, 1365
Witchfinders, 13–14, 14–15

Witte, Alfred, 1683
cosmobiology, 341

Ebertine, Reinhold, 466
Uranian astrology, 1614

Wizards

Kale Thaungto, 848
Natsaw, 1092
Polynesia, 1227
Scotland, 1368
Semites, 1385

Slavs, 1417

South America, 1442–1443
Thau Weza, 1554
Wolf, The, 1683
Wolfsen, Alfred, 1076, 1688–1684
Wollstonecraft, Mary, 557

Wood, C. E., 1684
ectoplasma, 472

fraud, 601–602
mediums, 1015
Mellon, Annie Fairlamb, 1021

movement, paranormal, 1063
Myers, Frederick William Henry, 1079

Podmore, Frank, 1223–1224
Sidgwick, Henry, 1407

Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1409
Wood, Divination by, 1694
Wood, Mrs. C. E., 330

Woodhull and Claffin’s Weekly, 1684

Woodhull, Victoria Claffin, 1684
Woodman, William Robert, 1685
Mathers, S. L. MacGregor, 999
Rosicrucians, 1237
Secret Chiefs, 1379

Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, 1427
Westcott, William Wynn, 1602

Woodrofe, Sir John, 1685

Avalon, Arthur, 133
tantric yoga, 1530
Woodruff, Joseph L(eroy), 1127

Woodroffe, Sir John,
Woolley, V. J.
Woodruff, Maurice, 1685

Woodsey, V. J.
thought-transference, 1507

Vallantine, George, 1618

Worchester, Constance Rulison, 1685
Worchester, Elwood, 1685–1686

Allison, Lydia W., 31–32
Boston Society for Psychic
Research, 207
Church of Christ, Scientist, 288
Prince, Walter Franklin, 1240
psychical research, 1249

Scientific American, 1362

Words
divination by, 302, 1494
Kabala, 846

Shemhampasharash, 1399

Vril, 1642

Workshops
Acupressure Workshop, 7
Arcana Workshops, 84

World Congress of Faiths, 1686
World Goodwill, 1686

World League of Illuminati,
1686–1687

World Union Journal, 1687

Worlds Beyond (Fund), 1687

Worlds, Planes, or Spheres
Ioka, 932
metherethial, 1031
in theosophy, 1687

Worrall, Ambrose Alexander, 1687
Laidlaw, Robert W., 886–887
Worrall, Olga Nathalie Ripich, 1688
Laidlaw, Robert W., 886–887
Worrall, Ambrose Alexander, 1687
Wortcunning, 1688

Wraith, 1688
apparitions, 66
Banshee, 151–152

Fitch, 556–557
Wrekin Trust, 1587, 1688

Wriedt, Etta, 1688–1689

Baggally, William Wortley, 142
De Crespiginy, Rose Champion, 388
direct voice, 419, 420–421

Fitzsimmons, Frederick William, 570
Julia’s Bureau, 841

King, John,” 802
materializations, 996

mediums, 1015
movement, paranormal, 1061
psychic force, 1252

Stead, William T., 1489, 1490

xenoglossy, 1692

Wright, Michaela Small, 1196
Wright, Thomas

Baphomet, 153

Kyeter, Dame Alice, 884

Mellens Malefachram, 972–973

Writing
automatic writing, 127–131

Spiegelschrift, 1457

Wynne, Capt. Charles

luminous phenomena, 945

X

Xavier, Francisco Candido, 1691
glossolalia, 644

primeval language, 1693–1694
Ruggles, A. D., 1331

Shakers, 1394

speaking in tongues, 1576

spirit languages, 1692–1693

writing in tongues, 1694

Xenophan, 665
Xibalba, 1694

Xray Clairvoyance, 298

Xylomancy, 1694

Y

Y-Kim (or I Ching) Book of, 1698

Yadachi, 1695

Yadageri, 1399
Yahweh, 11

Yauhahu,

Yasodhara Ashram, 1413,

Yarker, John,

Yarbro, Chelsea Quinn

Yeats-Brown, Francis (Charles Clayton), 175, 1696–1697
“Zolar,” 109, 1709
Zöllner, Johann C. F., 1709
  apports, 77
  astronomical communications, 111
  e’Esperance, Elizabeth, 405
  Eglinton, William, 479, 480
  endless, cord, tying knots in, 502
  Fourth Dimension, 586
  Germany, 632
  Lombroso, Cesare, 932
  matter passing through matter, 1001
  movement, paranormal, 1063, 1064
  plastics, 1221
  psychical research, 1247
  Seybert Commission, 1393
  Slade, Henry, 1415, 1416

  Spiritualism—Germany, 1468
  Zombies, 1641, 1709–1710
  Zoomancy, 1710
  Zorab, George A(veoom) M(arterus), 1710
  Holland, 733
  Studievereniging voor Psychical Research, 1502–1503
  Zoraster
  Alastor, 21
  elementary spirits, 490 magi, 955
  magic, 956
  Zos Kia Cultus, 1710
  Zschokke, Heinrich, 298
  Zschokke, (Johannes) Heinrich (Daniel), 632, 1710
  Zuccarini, Amedee, 1710
  levitation, 913
  Spiritualism—Italy, 1472
  Zügun, Eleonore, 1711
  dermatography, 402
  movement, paranormal, 1064
  poltergeists, 1226
  Price, Harry, 1239
  Spiritualism—Great Britain, 1471
  Stigmata Research in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Century, 1495
  Tillyard, R. J., 1573
  Zulu Tribes, 13–14
  Zwaan Rays, 1711
  Zwann, N., 1711
  Zwing, James Randall, 1281–1282